Forwarding my thoughts on this:

I just wanted to register my utmost support for this beautiful & appropriate infill project. I do want to make note about the absurdity of residents citing the building's scale as not fitting with the neighborhood given that the neighborhood is quite literally filled with historic properties of similar to greater scale than this proposal:

I urge the Council to fully support this new infill over the spurious and quite frankly borne entirely out of self interest for “free” parking by incumbent property owners nearby. (I’ll note that I have observed dozens of empty street parking spaces within walking distance to Hackett during peak parking times as is)

Long has the Upper East Side not pulled its weight in new infill housing and avoiding a looming housing affordability crisis; blocking this large number of units in such a quality development over such spurious objections would be a bad look for the city and quite frankly not a decision showing good morality or quality governance.

Best,
