[1] [2] Although once furiously debated, it is now well-established that erotic dancing of the sort practiced at the Island Bar enjoys constitutional protection as expressive conduct. See City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 1385, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000); Miller v. Civil City of South Bend, 904 F.2d 1081, 1087 (7th Cir.1990), rev'd sub nom. on other grounds, Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991). Of course, no one argues that erotic dancing at the Island Bar represents high artistic expression, but "[n]ude barroom dancing, though lacking in artistic value, and expressing ideas and emotions different from those of more mainstream dances, communicates them, to some degree, nonetheless." Miller, 904 F.2d at 1087. The Supreme Court has agreed, explaining that "nude dancing of the type at issue here is expressive conduct, although ... it falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1391 (addressing nude barroom dancing); see also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 ("[N]ude dancing of the kind sought to be performed here is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so."). Moreover, "[s]exual expression which is indecent but not obscene is protected by the First Amendment." Sable Communications of California, Inc. v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 126, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989). Entertainment may not be prohibited "solely because it displays the nude human figure. '[N]udity alone' does not place otherwise protected material outside the mantle of the First Amendment." Schad v. Borough of Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) (citations omitted).

While the parties agree that nude dancing receives First Amendment protection, this case presents three disputed issues on appeal. The first question is whether the operating restrictions in Sections X and VIII(A) are unconstitutional content-based regulations of expression or legitimate time, place or manner restrictions. The second question is whether Section VIII(A) is overbroad. The third question is whether the licensing provisions in Sections XI and XIII are unconstitutional prior restraints on expression. We review de novo the district court grant of summary judgment. See Matney v. County of Kenosha, 86 F.3d 692, 695 (7th Cir.1996).

A. Operating Regulations for Sexually Oriented Businesses

[3] The plaintiffs challenge the Section X hours-of-operation restriction and the Section VIII(A) ban on live nudity and 840 sexually explicit gestures as content-based regulations of protected expression. They argue that these provisions of the Ordinance are content-based on their face because they explicitly target adult entertainment. The Ordinance applies only to sexually oriented businesses, which are defined by the Ordinance with reference to the expressive activity performed inside. In response, Cumberland admits that the Ordinance applies only to adult-entertainment establishments. Nonetheless, Cumberland insists that the Ordinance is a content-neutral regulation of nudity viable under the secondary-effects theory of Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504, and City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265.

[4] [5] [6] The Supreme Court has long held that regulations designed to restrain speech on the basis of its content are subject to strict scrutiny and are presumptively invalid under the First Amendment. See R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 382, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 368–69, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 (1931). Content-based regulations "by their terms distinguish favored speech from disfavored speech on the basis of the ideas or views expressed." Turner Broadcasting Sys., Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 643, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994). Since "it is the content of the speech that determines whether it is within or without the [regulation]," they single out certain viewpoints or subject matter for differential treatment.

Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 462, 100 S.Ct. 2286, 65 L.Ed.2d 263 (1980); see also City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, 429, 113 S.Ct. 1505, 123 L.Ed.2d 99 (1993). These regulations draw strict scrutiny because their purpose is typically related to the suppression of free expression and thus contrary to the First Amendment imperative against government discrimination based on viewpoint or subject matter. See Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989). Owing to the profound national commitment to robust, open debate, "[t]he First Amendment generally prevents government from proscribing speech, or even expressive conduct, because of disapproval of the ideas expressed." R.A.V., 505 U.S. at 382, 112 S.Ct. 2538 (internal citations omitted). The government cannot favor one viewpoint over another, see City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 804, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984), nor can the government suppress an entire category of speech, even if the regulation is viewpoint-neutral within that category of speech, because the First Amendment bars "prohibition of public discussion of an entire topic." See Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Serv. Comm'n, 447 U.S. 530, 537, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980).

[7] [8] In contrast, content-neutral regulations are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech and do not raise the specter of government discrimination. See Virginia State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976). These regulations do not refer to expressive content and do not single out a particular viewpoint or category of speech for different treatment. Instead, all speech is treated similarly in an effort to advance significant government interests unrelated to content. A general ban on speech in the vicinity of a school is content-neutral, see Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 119–20, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972), whereas an analogous ban on speech containing an exemption for speech relating to labor disputes is content-based. See Police Dep't of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972). The former regulation requires no consideration of content before applying the ban, while the latter regulation requires consideration 841 whether the speech in question refers to a labor dispute before it is possible to determine if the regulation applies. When the government treats all expression equally without regard to the ideas or messages conveyed, courts can be more certain that the government intends to serve important interests unrelated to suppression of speech and is not acting with censorial purpose. In that vein, the government may institute reasonable time, place or manner regulations that apply to all speech alike, such as restrictions on sound amplification at an outdoor bandshell, see Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), or a prohibition on targeted residential picketing. See Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 488, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988). Such regulations control the surrounding circumstances of speech without obstructing discussion of a particular viewpoint or subject matter.

[9] [10] However, the First Amendment tolerates greater interference with expressive conduct, provided that this interference results as an unintended byproduct from content-neutral regulation of a general class of conduct. In most cases, the government may regulate conduct without regard to the First Amendment because most conduct carries no expressive meaning of First Amendment significance. See Graff v. City of Chicago, 9 F.3d 1309, 1315–16 (7th Cir.1993). However, broad regulations of conduct implicate First Amendment concerns when they apply to specific instances of expressive conduct. For example, in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 382, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), the Court considered whether a ban on destroying draft cards violated the First Amendment, given that draft-card burning represented a powerful symbol of political protest at the time. The government argued that the ban was necessary for the administration of the Selective Service program, and as the Court explained, the statute "plainly does not abridge free speech on its face.... [It] on its face deals with conduct having no connection with speech." Id. at 375, 88 S.Ct. 1673. The effect on expression was merely incidental to the content-neutral ban on the general class of conduct because the ban applied to draft-card destruction of all forms, not only to draft-card burning intended as expression. Although it recognized the symbolic conduct of draft-card burning as First Amendment expression, the Court applied intermediate scrutiny because the restraint on expression was only an "incidental burden" generated by the government's content-neutral attempt at furthering significant governmental interests unrelated to the suppression of speech. See O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 382, 88 S.Ct. 1673; see also Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1391; Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S.

288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). As a result, the government "generally has a freer hand" with respect to expressive conduct than with respect to verbal expression. Johnson, 491 U.S. at 406, 109 S.Ct. 2533. When the government enacts a content-neutral regulation on a class of conduct, citing the harmful secondary effects related to that conduct, i.e., the subsidiary effects or "noncommunicative impact" of the speech, courts presume that the government did not intend to censor speech, even if the regulation incidentally burdens particular instances of expressive conduct. See Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1392.

[11] As such, a general prohibition on all public nudity receives intermediate scrutiny, rather than strict scrutiny, when the government offers as its legislative justification the suppression of public nudity's negative secondary effects. See id. In Barnes, the Court upheld as content-neutral an Indiana public-indecency statute prohibiting nudity in public places because the statute was directed at preventing prostitution, sexual assaults and other criminal activity associated with adult entertainment—government interests "not at 842 all inherently related to expression." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 585, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring). [2] In Erie, the Court sustained an ordinance nearly identical to the Barnes statute banning all public nudity because the government's predominant purpose again was to combat the harmful secondary effects of public nudity. See Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1392. In both cases, plaintiffs challenged these facially content-neutral proscriptions on conduct because the broad prohibitions incidentally illegalized some expression as well, namely nude dancing. The Court upheld both regulations because each was nondiscriminatory on its face with respect to content and each cited as its legislative justification the abatement of public nudity's noxious secondary effects. See id. at 1391–93; Barnes, 501 U.S. at 585, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring). As the Court explained, "there is nothing objectionable about a city passing a general ordinance to ban public nudity (even though such a ban may place incidental burdens on some protected speech)." Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1394. In neither case did the regulation outlaw nude dancing specifically or refer to expressive content; the restriction on nude dancing resulted incidentally from the general, content-neutral prohibition on all public nudity.

2 A divided Court issued four separate opinions in Barnes, but under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977), Justice Souter's concurrence is the controlling opinion on this issue, as the most narrow opinion joining the judgment of the Court. See DiMa Corp. v. Town of Hallie, 185 F.3d 823, 830 (7th Cir.1999); see also Tunick v. Safir, 209 F.3d 67, 83 (2d Cir.2000) (collecting cases in agreement from other circuits).

Cumberland argues that the Ordinance is constitutional under Barnes and Erie because the Ordinance is justified without reference to communicative content and supported by a legislative record of pernicious secondary effects. The nominal purpose of the Cumberland Ordinance was addressing secondary effects allegedly affiliated with nude dancing, including "prostitution and sexual liaisons of a casual nature," "sexually transmitted diseases" and "urban blight and downgrading the qualify of life in the adjacent area." Cumberland mustered extensive efforts to construct a legislative record substantiating their concerns, and the Ordinance offers the city council's research as legislative findings and articulates the abatement of secondary effects as its purpose. Moreover, as the Court commended in Erie, Cumberland referenced the evidentiary foundation set forth in previous Supreme Court decisions regarding the baneful secondary effects of adult entertainment. Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1395; cf. Renton, 475 U.S. at 50–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. But see Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1403–05 (Souter, J., dissenting in part) (arguing that the government must demonstrate a particularized factual basis for finding evidence from previous cases to be relevant). Cumberland argues that its significant government interest in stemming harmful secondary effects justifies all the Ordinance regulations of adult entertainment, including the ban on nudity and certain sexually explicit movements.

However, in patent contrast to the regulations in Barnes and Erie, the Ordinance is not a content-neutral prohibition on a general class of conduct. Like the Barnes and Erie regulation, the Cumberland Ordinance bans nudity. But unlike the Barnes and Erie regulation, the Ordinance bans it with reference to certain expressive content. We can see this by examining the Ordinance definitions for various types of sexually oriented businesses to which the Ordinance arrogates within its Section VIII(A) ban on live nudity and sexually explicit movements, Section X operating restrictions and Section XI and XIII licensing provisions. Specifically, the plaintiffs challenge Section II(3) and II(7), which define "adult cabaret" and "adult theater" respectively and apply to the Island Bar. Both these sections cover a commercial establishment that "regularly features ... live performances which are 843 characterized by the exposure of 'specified anatomical areas' or 'specified sexual activities.' " This definition is the predominant one in the Ordinance for defining sexually oriented businesses, appearing within the definitions for adult arcade, adult motel, adult motion picture theater, adult mini-motion picture theater and adult bookstore, novelty store or video store, in addition to those for adult theater and adult cabaret. [3]

[3] The definition for "adult cabaret" has an additional clause that again refers to content. This prong of the definition apprehends within its ambit a commercial establishment that "regularly features films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides or other photographic reproductions which are characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' "

The definitions of "nudity," "semi-nude," "specified anatomical areas" and "specified sexual activities" are uncontroversial, and the parties do not contend otherwise.

This definition on its face targets erotic expression. According to Webster's Third New International Dictionary, the word "performance" in this context means "a public presentation or exhibition ... <the play ran for 285 [performances]> <the orchestra gave a benefit [performance]>" or "something resembling a dramatic representation." Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary 1678 (1986). This term undeniably denotes communicative content and applies explicitly to expression, not mere conduct. The qualifier "characterized by the exposure of 'specified anatomical areas' or 'specified sexual activities' " then indicates the type of content that expression must convey to fall inside the Ordinance's reach. "Characterize" means "to describe the essential character or quality of" or "to be a distinguishing characteristic." Id. at 376. The Ordinance therefore discriminates against establishments that regularly feature certain expressive conduct distinguished by sexual content. Cumberland modeled its definition on the discriminatory ordinances in Renton and Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), which defined the regulated adult material in those cases as "distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas.' " Indeed, following the Supreme Court's lead, we already have held that a substantially similar definition specifically singled out adult entertainment for different treatment. See Entertainment Concepts, Inc. v. Maciejewski, 631 F.2d 497, 504 (7th Cir.1980); see also Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435, 438–39 (6th Cir.1998); International Eateries of America, Inc. v. Broward County, 941 F.2d 1157, 1160–61 (11th Cir.1991).

As a result, we regard the Ordinance as content-based. The Ordinance applies only to certain establishments characterized by their presentation of live performances with particular erotic content, and it is the presentation of expressive content that determines whether particular establishments are within or without the regulation. In City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. at 429, 113 S.Ct. 1505, the Court explained that a ban on newsracks containing commercial handbills was content-based because "whether any particular newsrack falls within the ban is determined by the content of the publication resting inside that newsrack. Thus, by any commonsense understanding of the term, the ban in this case is 'content based.' " By the same token, the Cumberland Ordinance is content-based on its face because whether an establishment falls within the Ordinance's sweep is determined by the content of expression inside it. Cf. Berg v. Health & Hosp. Corp., 865 F.2d 797, 802 (7th Cir.1989) (finding an ordinance content-neutral because "it makes no distinction between types of films or entertainment."). As we explained in DiMa Corp. v. Town of Hallie, 185 F.3d 823, 828 (7th Cir.1999), an ordinance that regulates only adult-entertainment businesses "singles out adult-oriented establishments for different treatment 844 based on the content of the materials they sell or display." See also National Amusements, Inc. v. Town of Dedham, 43 F.3d 731, 738 (1st Cir.1995) (stating that facial discrimination is "a telltale harbinger of content-based regulation"). The Ordinance restrictions on nude dancing are not incidental byproducts from the content-neutral regulation of a larger, inclusive class of nonexpressive conduct. Unlike the statute in O'Brien, for example, which "plainly does not abridge free speech on its face," 391 U.S. at 374, 88 S.Ct. 1673, the Ordinance by its plain terms specifically targets erotic expression.

This quality sharply distinguishes the Ordinance from the regulations examined in Erie, Barnes and other cases elaborating the permissibility of incidental burdens from the regulation of general conduct. Those cases analyzed content-neutral regulations of conduct and depended on the consequent presumption of government nondiscrimination. The government could lawfully prohibit an entire class of conduct, so long as it did not define the regulated conduct with reference to expressive content. See Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065; O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 382, 88 S.Ct. 1673; see also Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 707, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 92 L.Ed.2d 568 (1986) (distinguishing regulations of general applicability from regulations that inevitably single out those engaged in First Amendment protected activities for the imposition of its burden). Thus, for example, an ordinance forbidding all camping and sleeping in downtown Washington, D.C., withstood a constitutional challenge because it was content-neutral on its face, even though its application to certain demonstrators who intended to stay overnight in Lafayette Park effectively squelched their protest. See Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065.

[12] Similarly, the public-indecency regulation in Barnes and Erie does not articulate its prohibitions with any reference to expressive content. It prohibits public nudity "across the board" in a facially content-neutral manner, Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, and "does not target nudity that contains an erotic message; rather, it bans all public nudity, regardless of whether that nudity is accompanied by expressive activity." Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1391. The regulation applied to nude dancing only because it was a form of public nudity, even though the unintended effect of this application was the restriction of adult entertainment. However, neither Erie nor Barnes applied a secondary-effects rationale to a discriminatory regulation that expressly targets nude dancing or adult entertainment for prohibition. See International Eateries, 941 F.2d at 1161 (refusing to apply Barnes to an ordinance that singles out nude dancing for regulation); see also R.A.V., 505 U.S. at 394, 112 S.Ct. 2538 (questioning whether "an ordinance that completely proscribes, rather than merely regulates, a specified category of speech can ever be considered to be directed only to the secondary effects of such speech."). As the Supreme Court has explained, the mere assertion of a content-neutral purpose does not "save a law which, on its face, discriminates based on content." Turner Broadcasting, 512 U.S. at 642–43, 114 S.Ct. 2445. A secondary-effects rationale by itself does not bestow upon the government free license to suppress specific content or a specific message because such a regime would permit the government to single out a message expressly, formulate a regulation that prohibits it, then draw content-neutral treatment nonetheless simply by producing a secondary-effects rationale as pretextual justification. See Madsen v. Women's Health Ctr., Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 794, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593 (1994) (Scalia, J., dissenting in part) ("The vice of content-based legislation—what renders it deserving of the high standard of strict scrutiny —is not that it is always used for invidious, thought-control purposes, but that it lends itself to use for those purposes."). As a result, we have never applied Barnes or Erie to cases in which the government regulation by its 845 plain language targets adult entertainment, even when justified by secondary-effects theories. See DiMa, 185 F.3d 823; North Ave. Novelties, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 88 F.3d 441 (7th Cir.1996); Matney, 86 F.3d 692.

[13] [14] Nevertheless, the fact that the Ordinance definition is content-based on its face does not necessarily dictate that the Ordinance is analyzed as content-based and subjected to strict scrutiny. See DiMa, 185 F.3d at 828; Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 439. Some time, place or manner regulations are treated as content-neutral, even though they are content-based on their faces. Courts at times have referred to these regulations as content-neutral, since they are treated as such in certain contexts. See, e.g., 11126 Baltimore Blvd., Inc. v. Prince George's County, Md., 58 F.3d 988, 995 (4th Cir.1995). But these courts often called them content-neutral without explaining that the regulations are in fact content-based and only analyzed as content-neutral when certain preconditions are met. See DiMa, 185 F.3d at 828 (explaining that the Supreme Court held this type of content-based regulation is to be "treated like content-neutral time, place, and manner regulations, not that it was content-neutral."); Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 439. At least in the domain of adult entertainment, discriminatory time, place or manner restrictions can be upheld as content-neutral restrictions on adult entertainment if they (1) are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest in curbing adverse secondary effects; and (3) still leave open ample alternative channels for communication. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925; Young, 427 U.S. at 61, 96 S.Ct. 2440; DiMa, 185 F.3d at 828. This standard strikes a healthy balance between the citizenry's First Amendment interests and the government's legitimate interests unrelated to suppression of speech. The government may further substantial state interests by directing speech through certain avenues rather than others, but only if the government's means preserve legitimate opportunity for continued speech. Even when actuated by a secondary-effects motive, the government may not "deprive the public of its ability to 'satisfy its appetite for sexually explicit fare.' " Matney, 86 F.3d at 697–98 (quoting Berg, 865 F.2d at 803).

Content-discriminatory time, place or manner regulations received intermediate scrutiny in Renton and Young because the government did not censor expression and instead advanced zoning schemes supported by secondary-effects rationales. Renton, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925; Young, 427 U.S. at 72–73, 96 S.Ct. 2440. Although neither addressed nude dancing, both ordinances targeted adult-film entertainment on the basis of content. With language similar to the Cumberland Ordinance, those ordinances defined the regulated adult material as that "distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas.' " Discriminatory on their faces, the ordinances did not ban adult entertainment; instead, the ordinances imposed on adult bookstores and theaters geographic-zoning restrictions that fell comfortably within the rubric of a time, place or manner regulation. Inside the appropriate zones, sexually oriented establishments were permitted to purvey adult entertainment "essentially unrestrained." Young, 427 U.S. at 62, 96 S.Ct. 2440; see also North Ave. Novelties, 88 F.3d at 444. The Renton ordinance isolated adult entertainment in concentrated regions to protect residential and commercial centers, and the Young ordinance dispersed adult establishments to diffuse their secondary effects. Neither ordinance stifled or significantly burdened the availability of adult entertainment. The Court noted in Young, "The situation would be quite different if the ordinance had the effect of suppressing, or greatly restricting access to, lawful speech. Here, 846 however, ... '[the] burden on First Amendment rights is slight.' " Young, 427 U.S. at 71 n. 35, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (citation omitted).

Applying Renton and Young to a Chicago zoning ordinance that limited the location of "adult uses," we explained that a content-discriminatory regulation of time, place or manner is constitutional only if it preserves " 'reasonable opportunity' to disseminate the speech at issue." North Avenue Novelties, 88 F.3d at 445. The key inquiry focuses upon "the ability of producers as a group to provide sexually explicit expression, as well as on the ability of the public as a whole to receive it." Id. at 444. We upheld the Chicago ordinance because it "does not prohibit sexually explicit expression, but merely requires that such expression take place only in specified areas, and only in a non-concentrated manner." Id.; see also Matney, 86 F.3d at 698 (upholding an open-booth requirement for adult-entertainment viewing booths because it in no sense purported to ban or even limit adult entertainment); Berg, 865 F.2d at 802 (same). Thus, only the provisions of the Ordinance that regulate the time, place or manner of adult entertainment without removing alternative channels of communication are reasonable under the First Amendment.

[15] Under this standard, we uphold the Section X limitations on the hours of operation for sexually oriented businesses. Section X is a classic time, place or manner restriction, limiting the business hours for sexually oriented businesses to between 10 a.m. and midnight, Monday through Saturday. In DiMa, we found an ordinance that restricted the operating hours of adult-oriented establishments to be content-based, but analyzed and upheld it under content-neutral analysis consistent with Renton and Young. DiMa, 185 F.3d at 831; see also Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358, 1365 (11th Cir.1999); Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 439–41; Mitchell v. Commission on Adult Entertainment Establishments, 10 F.3d 123 (3d Cir.1993). Combating harmful secondary effects of adult entertainment is a significant government interest unrelated to speech content, and Cumberland satisfactorily established a secondary-effects justification for its time, place or manner regulation. See DiMa, 185 F.3d at 830. Whereas the municipality in DiMa did nothing more than cite the experiences of another Wisconsin town, Cumberland collected and reviewed a host of studies on secondary effects and the need for constrained operating hours. Cumberland's legislative research indicated that the hours-of-operation constraint enabled local law enforcement to concentrate its limited resources for those business hours. Although Section X provides fewer hours of operation than the ordinance in DiMa, we find that the restriction is not "substantially broader than necessary," even if more restrictive than absolutely necessary or justified. Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

[16] Section VIII(A) presents a more difficult question. Section VIII(A) proscribes "appear[ing] in a state of nudity or depict[ing] specified sexual activities" in a sexually oriented business. Cumberland bases Section VIII(A) on the significant government interest in fighting injurious secondary effects and justifies it by citing the history of crime at the Island Bar and research on secondary effects from studies and other cases. Section VIII(A) is cleverly styled as a mere time, place or manner restriction because it forbids certain expressive activity only within sexually oriented businesses but not elsewhere. Yet the operation of Section VIII(A) is clear. In practice, it effectively bans commercial nude dancing. Section II of the Ordinance defines a sexually oriented business as one that regularly features live performances characterized by the exposure of specified anatomical areas or specified sexual activities. But such performances by Ordinance definition always contain nudity (by virtue of exposed specified anatomical areas) or depictions of specified sexual activities, 847 both of which Section VIII(A) bans within those sexually oriented establishments. Thus, Section II defines sexually oriented businesses with reference to the presentation of live adult entertainment, then Section VIII(A) stifles that presentation by forbidding nudity and sexual depictions within those sexually oriented businesses. To wit, the Island Bar is a sexually oriented business because it presents nudity, and as a result, the Ordinance bans nudity within the Island Bar, the sole supplier of nude dancing in Cumberland. Paradoxically, only by refraining from protected speech can a venue, its operator and its performers avoid the Section VIII(A) restrictions. For this reason, Section VIII(A) is not a mere time, place or manner restriction.

Nonetheless, the Supreme Court held in Erie and Barnes that limiting erotic dancing to semi-nudity represents a de minimis restriction that does not unconstitutionally abridge expression. Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1397; Barnes, 501 U.S. at 571, 111 S.Ct. 2456. As the Court explained in Barnes, "the requirement that the dancers don pasties and G-strings does not deprive the dance of whatever erotic message it conveys; it simply makes the message slightly less graphic." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 571, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Similarly in Erie, the Court reiterated that "[t]he requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message." Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1397. Insofar as it prohibits full nudity and requires dancers to wear pasties and G-strings while performing, Section VIII(A) does not offend the First Amendment. Cf. Dodger's Bar & Grill, Inc. v. Johnson County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 5 32 F.3d 1436, 1443 (10th Cir.1994) (upholding similar nudity restrictions under the Twenty–First Amendment). The Ordinance, however, goes several steps further. Section VIII(A) outlaws the performance of a strikingly wide array of sexually explicit dance movements, or what the Ordinance misdenominates as "specified sexual activities," including "the fondling or erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttocks, anus, or female breasts."

By restricting the particular movements and gestures of the erotic dancer, in addition to prohibiting full nudity, Section VIII(A) of the Ordinance unconstitutionally burdens protected expression. The dominant theme of nude dance is "an emotional one; it is one of eroticism and sensuality." Miller, 904 F.2d at 1086–87. Section VIII(A) deprives the performer of a repertoire of expressive elements with which to craft an erotic, sensual performance and thereby interferes substantially with the dancer's ability to communicate her erotic message. It interdicts the two key tools of expression in this context that imbue erotic dance with its sexual and erotic character —sexually explicit dance movements and nudity. Unlike a simple prohibition on full nudity, Section VIII(A) does much more than inhibit "that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped." Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1393. Section VIII(A) constrains the precise movements that the dancer can express while performing. The dancer may use non-sexually explicit elements and semi-nudity to convey a certain degree of sensuality, but putting taste aside, more explicit and erotic content is commonly available on primetime television without being fairly regarded as adult entertainment. The Court has declared that the government cannot "ban all adult theaters— much less all live entertainment or all nude dancing." Schad, 452 U.S. at 71, 101 S.Ct. 2176. We ourselves explained in DiMa, "Because this speech is not obscene, government may not simply proscribe it." DiMa, 185 F.3d at 827. Cumberland cannot avoid this dictate by regulating nude dancing with such stringent restrictions that the dance no longer conveys eroticism nor resembles adult entertainment. The portion of Section VIII(A) that bars the "depiction of specified sexual activities" is unconstitutional 848 because it prevents erotic dancers from practicing their protected form of expression.

[17] None of the Supreme Court's precedent permits a government regulation expressly directed at adult entertainment and imposing such a restriction on non-obscene adult entertainment. Analyzed under strict scrutiny, as befits a content-based regulation, this portion of Section VIII(A) violates the First Amendment. To survive strict scrutiny, the provision must be necessary to serve a compelling state interest and be narrowly drawn to achieve that end. See Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of the N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 118, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991). This provision fails because it is not necessary to serve Cumberland's significant interest in arresting secondary effects. Cumberland can employ a variety of less speech-restrictive and more direct means to fight prostitution, illicit sex, sexually transmitted disease and urban blight. See Leverett v. City of Pinellas Park, 775 F.2d 1536, 1540 (11th Cir.1985). We uphold the portion of Section VIII(A) that bans full nudity within sexually oriented businesses but strike the portion of Section VIII(A) that bans the performance of specified sexually explicit movements within sexually oriented businesses.

B. Section VIII(A) and Overbreadth

[18] [19] [20] Having found part of Section VIII(A) to be a constitutional time, place or manner restriction, we now reach the plaintiffs' claim that Section VIII(A) is overbroad. The overbreadth doctrine prevents the government from casting a net so wide that its regulation impermissibly burdens speech. To avoid chilling the speech of third parties who may be unwilling or unlikely to raise a challenge in their own stead, the overbreadth doctrine in certain circumstances permits litigants already before the court to challenge a regulation on its face and raise the rights of third parties whose protected expression is prohibited or substantially burdened by the regulation. See Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). A facial overbreadth challenge is successful when it establishes "a realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the Court." City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). The Supreme Court has cautioned that overbreadth is "manifestly, strong medicine," Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, and has invalidated regulations only when a limiting construction is not readily available and the unconstitutional applications of the regulation are real and substantial in relation to the regulation's plainly legitimate sweep. See, e.g., Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101 (1992); Board of Airport Comm'rs of Los Angeles v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 482 U.S. 569, 107 S.Ct. 2568, 96 L.Ed.2d 500 (1987); Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, 472 U.S. 491, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 86 L.Ed.2d 394 (1985); Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 100 S.Ct. 826, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980).

Cumberland claims that Barnes and Erie shield the Ordinance from an overbreadth challenge, but the Supreme Court did not reach the issue of overbreadth in either case. In Barnes, a state court decision provided a limiting construction that saved the public-nudity statute from overbreadth. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 565 n. 1, 111 S.Ct. 2456. However, speaking for the Court, Justice Souter questioned skeptically whether the secondary-effects rationale from that case would protect against an overbreadth challenge if the statute "bar[red] expressive nudity in classes of productions that could not readily be analogized to the adult films at issue in Renton." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 585 n. 2, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring). He doubted that the statute could be applied 849 to "a production of 'Hair' or 'Equus' ... in the absence of evidence that expressive nudity outside the context of Renton-type adult entertainment was correlated with such secondary effects." Id. In Erie, the Court again did not reach the overbreadth question presented by the parties. The Court simply reversed the Pennsylvania Supreme Court on other grounds and remanded without addressing overbreadth. See Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1398, see also Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1406 n. 5 (Souter, J., dissenting in part) (noting that the lower court on remand could dispose of the case on overbreadth grounds, which the Court did not address). Thus, Barnes and Erie are unhelpful with respect to overbreadth.

We already have found that the Section VIII(A) ban on full nudity is a permissible restriction of erotic dancing at the Island Bar, but the plaintiffs argue on behalf of third parties who wish to engage in protected speech yet are deterred by what the plaintiffs regard as the Ordinance's real and substantial threat of overbreadth. In this context, the overbreadth doctrine guards against the suppression of protected speech unconnected to the negative secondary effects cited as legislative justification. See Tunick v. Safir, 209 F.3d 67, 83 (2d Cir.2000); Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129, 135 (6th Cir.1994). When the government restricts speech not associated with harmful secondary effects, then the government cannot be fairly said to be regulating with those secondary effects in mind and the regulation extends beyond its legitimate reach. Cumberland has made no finding of harmful secondary effects resulting from venues outside of adult entertainment, so the overbreadth doctrine would invalidate Section VIII(A) if it stifles substantial expressive conduct unassociated with the pernicious secondary effects advanced as the Ordinance's purpose. The plaintiffs argue that Section VIII(A) unconstitutionally forbids the regular showing of live performances featuring live nudity or depiction of sexual activity, but which sit outside the domain of adult entertainment and are uncorrelated with harmful secondary effects. Specifically, the plaintiffs explain that the definitions for adult theater and adult cabaret would cover venues that present theatrical and artistic performances which feature nudity or sexual content, but also contain serious artistic, social or political value.

The plain language of the Ordinance determines whether Section VIII(A) is overbroad. The Section II definitions for adult theater and adult cabaret cover a commercial establishment that "regularly features ... persons who appear in a state of nudity or semi-nude." This definition lends itself to expansive interpretation. "Regularly" means "in a regular, orderly, lawful, or methodical way," and "regular" means "returning, recurring or received at stated, fixed or uniform intervals <in the [regular] course of events>." Webster's, at 1913. "Features" means "to give special prominence to ... <the theater was featuring a murder-mystery film>." Id. at 832. The definition for adult theater and adult cabaret might include within the Ordinance's province any venue that presents at orderly intervals, as a matter of normal course, performances that prominently include nudity or semi-nudity. So construed, this definition would include a theater or playhouse that shows on a regular basis an interpretation of Hair, a presentation characterized by much nudity but which the Court has indicated constitutes protected speech. See Barnes, 501 U.S. at 585 n. 2, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring); Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 558, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975). The text does not limit its regulation to adult entertainment because an array of "regularly feature[d]" artistic and theatrical expression includes live nudity or semi-nudity without necessarily becoming content readily analogous to the adult entertainment regulated in Renton and Young. Unlike statutes upheld against overbreadth challenges in other cases, the Ordinance contains no explicit exception for expression that contains nudity or sexual depiction but also possesses 850 serious artistic, social or political value. See, e.g., Tunick, 209 F.3d at 71 (exception for "performances or exhibitions that [take] place indoors before audiences"); J & B Entertainment, Inc. v. City of Jackson, 152 F.3d 362, 365 (5th Cir.1998) (exception for persons "engaged in expressing a matter of serious literary, artistic, scientific or political value"); Farkas v. Miller, 151 F.3d 900, 905 (8th Cir.1998) (exception for venues "primarily devoted to the arts or theatrical performances"). Nor has the Ordinance been narrowed by state courts, as was the statute in Barnes, to exclude protected expression.

[21] Nonetheless, a facial overbreadth challenge fails when the regulation's plain language is readily susceptible to a narrowing construction that would make it constitutional. See American Booksellers, 484 U.S. at 397, 108 S.Ct. 636. "Regularly features" lends itself to the definition described above—giving special prominence at uniform, orderly intervals as a matter of normal course. However, the Ordinance does not specify how long a venue must regularly feature such content before it qualifies as a sexually oriented business. For example, a local theater might offer nightly showings of Hair for only a month, and it is unclear whether this regularity suffices to qualify the theater as an adult theater or cabaret. The local theater probably would not resemble an adult-entertainment establishment in the sense contemplated by Renton and Young, provided that it also regularly showcased other plays and performances, not all of which contain nudity, semi-nudity or sexual content. In this context, a narrowing construction that comports with the Ordinance's express intent is readily available: giving special prominence at uniform, orderly intervals on a permanent basis. "Regularly features" can be interpreted to mean "always features." Under this interpretation, a venue falls within the definitions for adult theater and adult cabaret only if it features nudity, semi-nudity or specified sexual content as the permanent focus of its business and gives special prominence to such content on a permanent basis. [4] This construction limits the Ordinance to adult-entertainment establishments, which always feature nudity, semi-nudity and specified sexual content, and excludes theatrical venues that present shows like Hair or Equus for long stretches but not on a permanent basis. It is conceivable, though unlikely, that a theater might make the presentation of artistic performances featuring nudity its abiding focus. But even so, the Ordinance's unconstitutional applications would not be real and substantial in relation to its plainly legitimate sweep. See Brockett, 472 U.S. at 503, 105 S.Ct. 2794. At worst, the Ordinance might require theatrical dancers to don pasties and G-strings while performing, and those performers can bring as-applied challenges to the Ordinance at that time, assuming Cumberland enforces it against them. In a facial challenge like this one, there must be a realistic danger that the Ordinance will significantly compromise the First Amendment rights of parties not before the Court. See Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118. The plaintiffs suggest scenarios 851 to which the Ordinance might apply on its face and would unconstitutionally restrict protected expression, but the Ordinance is readily susceptible to a narrowing construction that saves the potentially unconstitutional applications from dwarfing the Ordinance's legitimate reach. We reject the plaintiffs' overbreadth claims and reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment in the plaintiffs' favor on those claims.

4 In practice, the Ordinance defines adult cabaret and adult theater as establishments that regularly feature semi-nudity or depictions of specified sexual activities. Under the Ordinance, it is legally impossible to feature nudity regularly. Any establishment that regularly features full nudity qualifies as a sexually oriented business under the Ordinance. As a sexually oriented business, the venue is then prohibited by Section VIII(A) from presenting nudity even once. At that point, the venue could not be characterized as regularly featuring nudity and thus would no longer be classified as a sexually oriented business. As such, it would be free to show nudity so long as it did not again "regularly feature" it. The point is that the Section VIII(A) prohibition on nudity in establishments that regularly feature nudity is a legal nullity unless Cumberland or courts define a time period during which the venue will be classified as a sexually oriented business, by virtue of its regular featuring of nudity in the past, even after Section VIII(A) prevents further presentation of nudity within.

C. Licensing Provisions

[22] The plaintiffs argue that Sections XI and XIII impose prior restraints on expression, in the form of licensing, disclosure and qualification requirements, that are not narrowly tailored to Cumberland's significant government interests in stemming detrimental secondary effects. The plaintiffs do not challenge the procedural adequacy of the licensing schemes contained in Sections XI and XIII of the Ordinance. See, e.g., FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 228, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (requiring constrained discretion by the licensor, a limited time frame within which the licensor must decide and opportunity for prompt judicial review).

[23] [24] Any system of prior restraint comes "bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity." Southeastern Promotions, 420 U.S. at 558, 95 S.Ct. 1239 (quoting Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963)). The proponent of a prior restraint " 'carries a heavy burden of showing justification for the imposition of such a restraint.' " New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713, 714, 91 S.Ct. 2140, 29 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971) (quoting Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415, 419, 91 S.Ct. 1575, 29 L.Ed.2d 1 (1971)). However, prior restraints are not per se unconstitutional because "the state may sometimes curtail speech when necessary to advance a significant and legitimate state interest." Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 804, 104 S.Ct. 2118. Indeed, we already have decided that a licensing requirement for adult-entertainment establishments is not unconstitutional per se as a prior restraint, if it otherwise conforms to the constitutional requirements of Young. See Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203, 1213 (7th Cir.1980).

[25] Licensing, though functioning as a prior restraint, is constitutionally legitimate when it complies with the standard for time, place or manner requirements. See, e.g., Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 575–76, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941). Time, place or manner restrictions that regulate the conditions under which expression may take place are permissible so long as the regulation is narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest unrelated to the suppression of free expression and leaves alternative channels for communication. See DiMa, 185 F.3d at 828. In Genusa v. City of Peoria, we held that a city government could require municipal licensing for adult bookstores based on a secondary-effects rationale from Young. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1215. We upheld required disclosure of certain information, such as the license applicant's name, address and proposed place of business, because this information was "legitimately related to the state interest that underlies the zoning provisions." Id. at 1216; see also TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 24 F.3d 705, 710 (5th Cir.1994) (requiring a "relevant correlation" or "substantial relation" between the information required and the government interest). We also upheld the requirement that licensees openly display their adult-use license because this was rationally related to policing for licensing compliance and had "no discernible impact on protected freedoms." Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1221.

Similarly here, we uphold the Ordinance inspection requirements and certain portions of Section XI requiring applicant disclosures. Section V of the Ordinance imposes interior-configuration requirements, which the plaintiffs appear not to challenge 852 and analogs of which we have approved before as reasonable time, place or manner regulations. See Matney, 86 F.3d at 698; Berg, 865 F.2d at 803. Section XIII(C)(6) forbids licensing when the premises of the business have not been approved as in compliance with applicable laws and ordinances, including those configuration requirements. This provision enables the city to enforce compliance with the special health and safety requirements for sexually oriented businesses. To the degree that the Ordinance requires compliance with other extant health and safety laws applicable to all Cumberland businesses, Section XIII(C)(6) is redundant and constitutionally inoffensive. Cf. Arcara, 478 U.S. at 707, 106 S.Ct. 3172 (permitting closure of an adult bookstore for violating health laws applicable to all businesses). In contrast to the City of Peoria in Genusa, Cumberland collected an adequate body of research to justify its interior-configuration requirements and substantiate a connection between these regulatory requirements and the city's legitimate interest in arresting secondary effects.

[26] We also uphold the Section XI required disclosures of the following: the applicant's name; proof of the applicant's age; the type of license for which the applicant is applying; the proposed location, address and descriptions of the business premises; identifying personal data. All this information allows Cumberland to regulate the time, place or manner of adult entertainment without censoring expression. This data enables Cumberland to administer licenses and monitor compliance with its zoning requirements, which the plaintiffs do not challenge. Likewise, requiring proof of employee age legitimately relates to the government's interest in preventing underage performers from engaging in adult entertainment. In addition, we uphold the Ordinance requirement of a revenue-neutral license application fee to defray the costs of administration. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1213. [5] Yet we invalidate the required production of a residential address, recent color photograph, Social Security number, fingerprints, tax-identification number and driver's license information. This information is redundant and unnecessary for Cumberland's stated purposes. Its required disclosure serves "no purpose other than harassment," Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1217, because it is not narrowly tailored to the government's interests in the time, place or manner of adult entertainment.

5 Section XI(3)-(5) requires disclosure of information relating to the applicant's cohabitants, and Section XIII(C)(2) and XIII(C)(4)-(5) disqualify applicants based on that information. The plaintiffs do not challenge these provisions on appeal, and the district court correctly held that they lack third-party standing to challenge these provisions on behalf of their cohabitants. See Schultz, 26 F.Supp.2d at 1149 n. 2. Similarly, the plaintiffs do not have standing to challenge Ordinance provisions relating to corporate shareholders because the Island Bar is a sole proprietorship.

[27] The First Amendment also does not allow licensing provisions based on criminal history that "totally prohibit certain classes of persons" from First Amendment expression. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1218. We struck provisions of the Peoria licensing scheme in Genusa that disqualified applicants who previously had a liquor-license revocation, felony conviction or a specified sex-related conviction. Id. at 1218. These provisions were absolute prohibitions on speech, and the city failed to demonstrate that its goals "[could not] be effectuated by means that impact less drastically on protected freedoms." Id. at 1219. The disqualification provisions were content-based prohibitions of expression that do not fall within Barnes and Erie and fail to provide alternative channels for communication under Renton and Young. As we explained in Genusa, "We know of no doctrine that permits the state to deny to a person First Amendment liberties other than the right to vote solely because that person was once convicted of a crime or other offense." Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1219 n. 40.

853 [28] Accordingly, the Ordinance disqualification provisions in Section XIII for operator and employee licensing are unconstitutional as well. Sections XIII(A)(3) and (C)(5) disqualify any applicant who has been convicted of a "specified criminal activity," defined as any of the vice offenses listed in Section II(23). [6] Sections XIII(A)(5) and (C)(4) disqualify any applicant who recently had been denied or revoked a license by the city. Section XIII(C)(2) disqualifies any applicant who is overdue in payment of city taxes, fees, fines, or penalties in relation to any business. Like the disqualification provisions struck as unconstitutional in Genusa, these license ineligibility provisions absolutely disentitle classes of speakers from a category of expression. They produce a complete ban on certain expression for a disqualified group of applicants who, by definition, wish to speak, and such a drastic measure cannot be justified here as narrowly tailored to resist noisome secondary effects. Indeed, Cumberland neither conducted nor cited any study establishing its basic premise that ownership or performance by those convicted of specified criminal activity or misconduct is more likely to lead to secondary effects than ownership or performance by anyone else.

6 Section II(23)(a) defines "specified criminal activity" as > prostitution or promotion of prostitution; dissemination of obscenity; sale, distribution or display of harmful material to a minor; sexual performance by a child; possession or distribution of child pornography; public lewdness; indecent exposure; indecency with a child; engaging in organized criminal activity; sexual assault; molestation of a child; gambling; or distribution of a controlled substance; or any similar offenses to those described above under the criminal or penal code of other states or countries.

The government may regulate the conditions under which operators and performers may stage adult entertainment, and in accordance, it may withhold or revoke a license pending compliance with legitimate time, place or manner requirements. Yet the government may not categorically disenfranchise a class from protected expression in this licensing context, at least on the factual record Cumberland has compiled, because it thereby fails to provide the alternative channels for communication required by Renton and Young for those speakers. Consequently, the Section XI(E)(3)-(5) required disclosures of the applicant's criminal and past licensing histories are unnecessary because, absent any disqualification ground on those bases, such disclosures are unjustified by a government interest here.

D. Severability

[29] [30] The severability clause in Section XXII of the Ordinance provides that "[i]n the event that any section, subsection, clause, phrase or portion of this ordinance is for any reason held illegal, invalid or unconstitutional ... such holding shall not affect the validity of the remainder of this ordinance." However, the severability clause can save the constitutionally viable remainder only if the invalidated elements were not "an integral part of the statutory enactment viewed in its entirety." Zbaraz v. Hartigan, 763 F.2d 1532, 1545 (7th Cir.1985) (internal quotation and citation omitted). We have found unconstitutional as they apply to adult theaters and adult cabarets, the Section VIII(A) ban on certain sexually explicit movements, several Section XI disclosure requirements and all the Section XIII licensing disqualification provisions. This leaves several discrete sections that stand on their own: the Section VIII(A) ban on nudity within sexually oriented businesses, the Section X hours-of-operation provision and a licensing system that requires disclosure of applicant age and business data relating to the time, place or manner of the sexually oriented business's operation. In deference to the Ordinance's robust severability clause, we think that the unconstitutional provisions of the Ordinance may be severed workably 854 from the rest. We therefore permanently enjoin only the stricken sections and permit the operation of those sections either upheld or unchallenged.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the following provisions of the Ordinance violate the First Amendment: the Section VIII(A) ban on sexually explicit movements within sexually oriented businesses; Section XI(C) (fingerprinting requirement); Section XI(E)(3)-(5), (8)-(10), Section XI(F)

(3)-(4), (6)-(7), and Section XI(G) (certain disclosure requirements); Section XIII(A)(3), (5) and Section XIII(C)(2), (4)-(5) (certain disqualification provisions); and Section XIII(B) (ineligibility for license renewal on the basis of specified criminal activity). The following provisions of the Ordinance are constitutional and severed from the invalidated provisions: the Section VIII(A) prohibition on nudity within sexually oriented businesses; and the remaining licensing provisions in Sections XI and XIII. We offer no opinion regarding other provisions of the Ordinance that the plaintiffs did not challenge. We AFFIRM in part and REVERSE in part the judgment of the district court.

All Citations

228 F.3d 831

86 F.3d 692
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Phil MATNEY and Satellite News and Video, Inc., Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
COUNTY OF KENOSHA, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 95–2590.
|
Argued Feb. 14, 1996.
|
Decided June 13, 1996.

Adult video store and patron of store brought action challenging constitutionality of county ordinance which required that all coin-operated booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, John W. Reynolds, 887 F.Supp. 1235, granted summary in favor of county. Plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeals, Flaum, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance was valid time, place, and manner restriction; thus (2) any "chill" on viewers' rights to receive protected sexually explicit speech was constitutionally tolerable; and (3) ordinance did not place impermissible content-based financial burden on affected establishments.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (14)

[1] Federal Courts
Summary judgment

Court of Appeals reviews district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 56(c), 28 U.S.C.A.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Civil Procedure
Burden of proof

Although court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of party opposing motion for summary judgment, that party may not simply rest on its pleadings or on mere conclusory allegations to avoid summary judgment; rather nonmoving party must come forward with evidence to show existence of each element of its case on which it will bear burden at trial. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 56(c), 28 U.S.C.A.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Civil Procedure
Lack of cause of action or defense

If no reasonable jury could find in favor of party opposing motion for summary judgment, it must be granted. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 56(c), 28 U.S.C.A.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness

Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Constitutional Law
Existence of other channels of expression

Government may impose reasonable restrictions on time, place, or manner of protected speech, provided restrictions are justified without reference to content of regulated speech, are narrowly tailored to serve significant governmental interest, and leave open ample alternative channels for communication of information. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Regulation that serves purposes unrelated to content of expression is deemed "content neutral," even if it has incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Booths
Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated video booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times was "content neutral," for purpose of First Amendment challenge, as regulation was established for purpose unrelated to content of expression, namely preserving health, preventing spread of sexually transmitted diseases, preventing unsanitary, unsafe, and unhealthy conditions, and there was no evidence that county disagreed with content of videos shown. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Booths
Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated video booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times served legitimate government interest, for purposes of First Amendment challenge, of fighting spread of communicable and sexually transmitted diseases and maintaining safe and sanitary conditions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

In order for regulation placing time, place, or manner restriction on free speech activity to be narrowly tailored, means chosen must not be substantially broader than necessary to achieve government's interest; however, government need not choose least restrictive means. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Motion Pictures and Videos
Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated movie booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times was not substantially broader than necessary to achieve government's interest in preventing spread of sexually transmitted diseases and acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), and preventing unsanitary, unsafe, or unhealthy conditions, for purpose of First Amendment challenge, as evidence of semen and used condoms in booths at such establishments showed relation between regulation and objective, and less restrictive "one person one booth" policy would not achieve same results. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Motion Pictures and Videos
Constitutional Law
Booths
Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated movie booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times satisfied time, place, and manner requirement of availability of ample alternative channels of communication, for purpose of First Amendment challenge, as regulation did not in any way limit availability of video booths as means of viewing sexually explicit material and there remained plenty of ways, other than through private viewing booths, that sexually explicit material could be disseminated and received. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

There is no constitutional privacy right to view sexually explicit movies in public place in seclusion.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Booths

Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated video booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times constituted valid time, place, and manner restriction, and thus any "chill" on viewers' rights to receive protected sexually explicit speech was constitutionally tolerable. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Regulation which imposes financial burden on speakers because of content of their speech must be narrowly tailored to achieve compelling state interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Booths

Health
Adult establishments

County regulation requiring that all coin-operated video booths used in "adult-oriented establishments" have at least one side open to public lighted aisle to permit unobstructed view of occupants at all times did not impermissibly impose substantial content based financial burden on adult oriented establishments; because regulation was not content based, fact that it may have incidental financial effect on adult entertainment speakers and not on others was of no consequence. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Kenosha County, Wis., Regulation No. HD–1.01–1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

693 Michael Null, Reed Lee, Deidre Baumann (argued), Null & Associates, Chicago, IL, for plaintiffs-appellants.

694 Raymond J. Pollen (argued), Michele M. Ford, Crivello, Carlson, Mentkowski & Steeves, Milwaukee, WI, for defendant-appellee.

Before COFFEY, FLAUM, and RIPPLE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

FLAUM, Circuit Judge.

Plaintiffs Satellite News and Video, Inc. ("Satellite") and Phil Matney brought suit in district court, seeking to have a Kenosha County, Wisconsin "open-booth" ordinance declared unconstitutional and to obtain an injunction prohibiting its enforcement. The ordinance requires that movie-viewing booths at "adult entertainment" establishments, such as the one owned by Satellite and patronized by Matney, be totally accessible from a public area and have at least one side totally open to a lighted public aisle. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Kenosha County ("County") and the plaintiffs appeal. We affirm.

I.

Satellite owns and operates an "adult entertainment" business in Kenosha County, Wisconsin, which displays sexually explicit but non-obscene films and videotapes in small, single-person viewing booths. Each booth is equipped with a monitor connected to several videotape players. By depositing a token in a device located within each booth, patrons of Satellite can activate the monitors and choose one of the several videotapes or films offered. The video booths are specifically designed and built so that persons standing outside the booths cannot determine the content or the specific nature of the film being viewed. Phil Matney is a resident of Kenosha County and a patron of Satellite. Matney does not wish to have the content of the videos he views and listens to revealed to persons passing by the booths.

In 1992, the Kenosha County Board of Health issued regulation HD–1.01–1, which establishes standards for the construction and maintenance of booths, rooms, or cubicles available for the private viewing of "adult entertainment" at "adult-oriented" establishments. The stated purpose of the regulation is to preserve health, prevent the spread of AIDS and other communicable or sexually transmitted diseases, and prevent unsanitary, unsafe and unhealthy conditions. Specifically, the regulation states:

> (1) PURPOSE. It is a lawful purpose of the Kenosha County Board of Health to enact rules and regulations as are necessary for the preservation of health and to prevent the spread of AIDS and other communicable or sexually transmitted diseases in Kenosha County. It has been found by localities throughout the State of Wisconsin, particularly Milwaukee, Racine, Waukesha, Delafield, and Kenosha, as well as communities around the country, that many adult-oriented establishments install movie viewing booths with doors in which patrons view adult-oriented videotapes, movies, films and other forms of adult entertainment, and that such booths have been and are being used by patrons to engage in sexual acts resulting in unsanitary, unhealthy and unsafe conditions in said booths and establishments. This regulation establishes standards for booth construction and maintenance in order to prevent the spread of AIDS and other communicable or sexually transmitted diseases.

The Board considered evidence from the sheriff's departments in Kenosha County and other communities in reaching its conclusion that activity occurring in booths at adult oriented establishments leads to unhealthy and unsanitary conditions and to the transmission of AIDS and other sexually transmitted and communicable diseases.

Under the regulation, adult entertainment viewing booths must be "totally accessible to and from aisles and public areas ... and shall be unobstructed by any door, lock, curtain, blind, or other control-type devices." HD–1.10–1(3)(a). Further, each booth "shall be separated from adjacent booths ... by a wall" and "shall have at least one side totally open to a public lighted aisle so that there is an unobstructed view at all times of anyone occupying the same." HD–1.10–1(3)(b). The regulation also speaks to the lighting in and around the booths as well as to the color, texture, and material of booth walls and 695 floors. In addition, the regulation provides that only one individual occupy a booth at any time and that no occupant shall "engage in any type of sexual activity, cause any bodily discharge or litter while in the booth." HD–1.10–1(3)(c). The regulation does not attempt to restrict or control in any way the content of the adult videos shown.

Satellite received several citations for violating HD–1.10–1 and the County has threatened to continue enforcing the regulation, thereby prompting the instant litigation. Satellite and Matney's complaint alleged that the open booth regulation violates their First Amendment rights because it 1) impermissibly chills their "expressive privacy rights" by revealing the content of the protected expression they wish to disseminate and receive and 2) because it imposes a content-based financial burden on Satellite's protected expression. The plaintiffs also alleged that the regulation is not reasonably related to a legitimate government interest. The County moved for summary judgment and the district court granted its motion, finding that the proper question was whether the ordinance was a valid time, place, and manner restriction, which the court answered in the affirmative. The court also concluded that there is no "expressive privacy right" to view adult entertainment at public establishments in seclusion and anonymity and, additionally, that the regulation did not impose a constitutionally impermissible financial burden on Satellite.

II.

[1] [2] [3] Satellite and Matney contend on appeal that the district court erred in granting the County summary judgment on their First Amendment claims. [1] We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Hedberg v. Indiana Bell Telephone Co., Inc., 47 F.3d 928, 931 (7th Cir.1995). Summary judgment should be granted when the pleadings and supplemental materials present no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). Although we draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the party opposing a motion for summary judgment, this party may not simply rest on its pleadings or on mere conclusory allegations to avoid summary judgment; rather the non-moving party must come forward with evidence to show the existence of each element of its case on which it will bear the burden at trial. Hedberg, 47 F.3d at 931; Midwest Imports, Ltd. v. Coval, 71 F.3d 1311, 1317 (7th Cir.1995). If no reasonable jury could find in favor of the party opposing the motion, it must be granted. Hedberg, 47 F.3d at 931.

1 We note that the County also argued that we and the district court lacked jurisdiction under Rooker–Feldman and also that we should abstain under the Younger and Pullman abstention doctrines. These claims are either without merit or have been waived, and as such will not be addressed.

A.

The district court was correct in noting that the proper constitutional measure of an "open-booth" regulation is whether the regulation constitutes a valid time, place, or manner restriction. See Berg v. Health and Hosp. Corp. of Marion County, Ind., 865 F.2d 797 (7th Cir.1989). In Berg, we confronted similar challenges to an ordinance analogous to the Kenosha County regulation at issue here and concluded that the ordinance was a constitutional manner restriction. Id. at 802–03. In fact, courts around the nation have consistently upheld open booth regulations and ordinances in the face of First Amendment challenges, finding them to be valid time, place, and manner restrictions. See Wall Distributors, Inc. v. City of Newport News, 782 F.2d 1165 (4th Cir.1986); Ellwest Stereo Theatres, Inc. v. Wenner, 681 F.2d 1243 (9th Cir.1982); Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 898 F.2d 612 (8th Cir.1990); Bamon Corp. v. City of Dayton, 923 F.2d 470 (6th Cir.1991); Suburban Video, Inc. v. City of Delafield, 694 F.Supp. 585 (E.D.Wis.1988); Broadway Books, Inc. v. Roberts, 642 F.Supp. 486 (E.D.Tenn.1986); Libra Books, Inc. v. City of Milwaukee, 818 F.Supp. 263 (E.D.Wis.1993). Today we add another case to this already long line of authority.

696 [4] In Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), the Supreme Court set forth the appropriate standard for reviewing limitations on the time, place, or manner of speech. It held that the government may impose reasonable restrictions on the time, place, or manner of protected speech, provided the restrictions: 1) are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; 2) are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and 3) leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information. Id. at 791, 109 S.Ct. at 2753–54 (quoting Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984)); see also Bamon, 923 F.2d at 473; Doe, 898 F.2d at 616–17. Thus, we analyze the Kenosha ordinance using the Ward factors.

[5] The plaintiffs concede, with good reason, that the Kenosha County open booth regulation is content neutral. As the Ward Court explained, "[t]he principal inquiry in determining content neutrality, in speech cases generally and in time, place, or manner cases in particular, is whether the government has adopted a regulation of speech because of disagreement with the message it conveys." Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. at 2754

(emphasis added). The controlling consideration is the government's purpose in enacting the regulation. Id. "A regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others." Id.

[6] In this case, the plain language of the regulation makes clear that it was passed for the purposes of preserving health, preventing the spread of AIDS and other communicable or sexually transmitted diseases, and preventing unsanitary, unsafe, and unhealthy conditions. Nothing in the words of the ordinance or in the County Board minutes suggests that the Board disagreed with the content or the message of the films and videos shown. The regulation is aimed at the "secondary effects" of private viewing booths—the possible spread of AIDS and other diseases and the creation of unsanitary, unhealthy conditions—not at the content of the films viewed in the booths. See Berg, 865 F.2d at 803; Bamon, 923 F.2d at 473; Doe, 898 F.2d at 617.

[7] [8] The plaintiffs additionally admit that the open booth regulation serves a legitimate government interest. It cannot be doubted that fighting the spread of communicable and sexually transmitted diseases and maintaining safe and sanitary conditions constitute significant government interests, nor is there any question that the regulation at issue furthers those interests. See Berg, 865 F.2d at 803; Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1246; Doe, 898 F.2d at 617; Wall, 782 F.2d at 1169. Plaintiffs do contend, however, that the Kenosha regulation is not narrowly tailored to serve those interests. According to Ward, a requirement is narrowly tailored "so long as the ... regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. at 2758; see also Graff v. City of Chicago, 9 F.3d 1309, 1321 (7th Cir.1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1085, 114 S.Ct. 1837, 128 L.Ed.2d 464 (1994). The Court further explained that provided "the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest, [ ] the regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative." Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. at 2758. Ward thus expressly rejected the argument that the government must choose the "least restrictive means" or the "least restrictive alternative" in order to meet the definition of narrowly tailored. Id. at 798–99, 109 S.Ct. at 2757 ("Lest any confusion on the point remain, we reaffirm today that a regulation of the time, place, or manner of protected speech must be narrowly tailored to serve the government's legitimate, content-neutral interests but that it need not be the least restrictive or least intrusive means of doing so.").

[9] Although the plaintiffs acknowledge in their brief that the County need not employ the "least restrictive means" to achieve its stated purpose, they nonetheless argue that the Kenosha regulation is not narrowly 697 tailored precisely because they believe there are less speech-infringing possibilities. This, of course, is not the correct inquiry under Ward. We are satisfied that Kenosha's goals of preventing the spread of certain diseases and maintaining sanitary and safe conditions at adult entertainment establishments "would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." See Berg, 865 F.2d at 804.[2] Other courts have unanimously agreed. See Doe, 898 F.2d at 619 (8th Cir.1990); Bamon, 923 F.2d at 474 (6th Cir.1991); Libra Books, 818 F.Supp. at 267 (E.D.Wis.1993); Wall, 782 F.2d at 1170 (4th Cir.1986) (ordinance narrowly tailored under stricter "least restrictive means" test). Moreover, the alleged less restrictive alternative proposed by the plaintiffs—a strictly enforced one-person-per-booth rule-may prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases at Satellite,[3] but as the district court pointed out, the Kenosha regulation is aimed at preventing the spread of disease at all Kenosha establishments, not just Satellite. And the County had substantial evidence that condoms and semen were found in single-person booths at various establishments in Kenosha. In addition, evidence from other localities, which Kenosha was entitled to rely upon, see Berg, 865 F.2d at 803, demonstrated similar conditions. Furthermore, a one-person-per-booth policy would not be as effective as an open booth rule in preventing unsanitary and unhealthy conditions, as it would not effectively control solitary sexual activity. See Libra, 818 F.Supp. at 267 ("the ordinance is designed not just to eliminate sexual activity among customers, but also to alleviate the unsanitary conditions caused by sexual activity and 'bodily discharge' in general") (emphasis in original). Thus, we agree with the district court's conclusion that the open booth regulation is not "substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest."

2 In Berg, which was decided prior to the issuance of Ward, we applied the stricter "least restrictive means" test, yet still found the ordinance to be narrowly tailored. Id. at 803–04, 109 S.Ct. at 2761. Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish Berg by arguing that they, unlike the plaintiffs in Berg, have suggested less restrictive alternatives. However, as already mentioned, this is not dispositive under Ward and, further, in Berg we stated not only that "Berg identified no less restrictive alternatives," but also that we did not think any existed. Id.

3 Satellite argues that at its facility it is physically impossible for more than one person to occupy a booth at any one time or for any patron to have interaction with patrons in neighboring booths. Further, it alleges that it strictly enforces this one-person-per-booth policy. Satellite therefore claims that sexual activity does not occur in its booths and that the transmission of AIDS and other diseases is effectively prevented with far less intrusion on First Amendment rights. Satellite contends that its claim is supported by the fact that health officials have inspected Satellite on several occasions and have never found semen residue or condoms in its booths.

[10] Moving on to the final Ward factor, we have previously held that open booth regulations leave open ample alternative channels of communication. Berg, 865 F.2d at 803. Similar to the ordinance in Berg and others that have been upheld, nothing in the Kenosha regulation limits the availability of individual booths as an avenue for watching adult entertainment, nor does it attempt to regulate in any manner the content of the films or videos displayed in the booths. Id.; Bamon, 923 F.2d at 474 (ample alternatives requirement "easily satisfied" by open booth ordinance); Doe, 898 F.2d at 620 (burden of showing ample alternatives "is easily met"). Persons in Kenosha County can watch the same sexually explicit material in the same single-person booths, just as they previously have, there will simply be no door on the booth. And in Berg, we concluded that "[p]lainly, for First Amendment purposes, an open booth is the equivalent to a closed booth, so far as viewing materials is concerned." 865 F.2d at 803.

In addition, there remain plenty of ways, other than through private viewing booths, that sexually explicit material can be disseminated and received. For example, Satellite could offer videos in a larger theater-type area, rather than in "private viewing" booths, rooms, or cubicles. See Libra, 818 F.Supp. at 267. And of course, patrons can always view adult entertainment supplied by Satellite in the privacy of their residences. In sum, the regulation in no way denies the viewing public access to the adult movie market, nor does it deprive the public of its 698 ability to "satisfy its appetite for sexually explicit fare." Berg, 865 F.2d at 803 (quoting Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 62, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2448, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976)); Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1245. On the contrary, under the regulation, Satellite can provide, except in totally closed booths, whatever protected videos or films it wishes, whenever and wherever it desires. The open booth regulation "in no sense purports to ban or even limit the number of forums for the public exhibition of erotic films. Erotic films continue to be fully available for public consumption, albeit not in enclosed booths." Wall, 782 F.2d at 1168 n. 5; see also Doe, 898 F.2d at 620. [4] The Kenosha County open booth provision leaves open ample means of communication and we thus conclude as a matter of law that it is a constitutional time, place, and manner restriction.

4 Satellite and Matney apparently recognize that the Kenosha ordinance does not on its face limit the use of single-person booths for viewing adult entertainment. They argue, however, that there are not ample alternative channels of communication because the open booth regulation will chill the use of viewing booths and will in effect foreclose such booths as a means of disseminating sexually explicit materials. First, as will be discussed, infra Section B, plaintiffs "chilling effect" argument is not supported by the record. In addition, even if single-person viewing booths are effectively foreclosed to some extent, there are still ample alternative avenues of communication. Generally, time, place, and manner restrictions limit or foreclose some avenue of communication; the question is whether there are other adequate means of dissemination. Here there clearly are. Thus, plaintiffs "chilling effect" argument does not persuade us to change our conclusion that the Kenosha regulation leaves open ample alternatives channels of communication.

B.

Plaintiffs also argue on appeal that the Kenosha regulation violates the First Amendment because it impermissibly chills their "expressive privacy right," i.e., their right to watch the films and videos in anonymity. They contend that if the doors are removed from viewing booths, persons will not be able to watch films without disclosing the content or specific nature of the videos to people standing in the required public aisles. This disclosure, plaintiffs maintain, will likely subject the viewers to embarrassment and humiliation. As a result, plaintiffs claim viewers will be chilled from receiving the protected expression, and the ability of adult entertainment establishments to disseminate the expression will be seriously burdened. Plaintiffs' argument fails for several reasons.

[11] Every court that has addressed a privacy claim in this situation has concluded that patrons of public adult entertainment establishments do not have a general privacy right, whether within the penumbra of the First, Fourth, or Fourteenth Amendments, to watch sexually explicit movies in seclusion and anonymity. See Berg, 865 F.2d at 801 n. 4; Doe, 898 F.2d at 615–16 n. 11; Bamon, 923 F.2d at 474; Broadway Books, 642 F.Supp. at 492; Suburban Video, 694 F.Supp. at 591. Courts have stated that to recognize such a right "would be tantamount to finding that the patrons have some kind of right to masturbate ... in the seclusion of these booths." Broadway Books, 642 F.Supp. at 492; see also Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1248 ("We decline to hold that the 'right' to unobserved masturbation in a public theater is 'fundamental' or 'implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.' "). We agree that there is no constitutional privacy right to view sexually explicit movies in a public place in seclusion. See Berg, 865 F.2d at 801 n. 4.

However, Satellite and Matney are not arguing that there is a general privacy right in the sense of a right to be behind closed doors or in seclusion or in a private place; rather they appear to be claiming that the First Amendment affords them a right to privacy in one's choice or selection of speech because of the chilling effect that will occur if the choices are publicized. In other words, they seek to avoid making public the connection between the individual patrons and the content of the materials they each choose to view. They believe the First Amendment offers this protection because without it, patrons will forego their right to receive the protected speech. Plaintiffs' basic contention is that "where a regulation's inevitable effect is to chill persons from engaging in or disseminating protected speech, even where the purpose of a regulation is unrelated to the 699 content of speech, the regulation is unconstitutional and must be invalidated."

[12] This is simply not an accurate statement of First Amendment law. The Constitution does not afford a right to totally unrestricted, unchilled speech. Rather, the First Amendment affords the right to receive and disseminate protected speech, subject to valid time, place, and manner restrictions. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. at 2753–54. Almost all time, place, and manner restrictions chill or restrict protected speech to a certain extent; however, this chill or limitation is often acceptable under the First Amendment. We have determined as a matter of law that the Kenosha regulation is a valid manner restriction, and thus any chill on viewers' rights to receive the protected sexually explicit speech is constitutionally tolerable. [5]

5 In support of its proposition that a regulation is invalid anytime it chills First Amendment rights, the plaintiffs cite NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449, 78 S.Ct. 1163, 2 L.Ed.2d 1488 (1958) and Bates v. City of Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516, 80 S.Ct. 412, 4 L.Ed.2d 480 (1960). In those cases the Court struck down ordinances that required the NAACP to disclose its membership lists because of the chilling effect the ordinances would have on the members' right to associate. However, plaintiffs read these cases much too broadly; the cases do not hold that any chill on First Amendment rights will invalidate a regulation. Rather, in both cases the Court engaged in a balancing type test and in the end determined that the government's interest was not strong enough or related enough to justify the substantial infringement on association rights. See NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. at 463–67, 78 S.Ct. at 1172–74; Bates, 361 U.S. at 524–27, 80 S.Ct. at 417–19. On the contrary, in the instant case, we have concluded, using the appropriate time, place, and manner analysis, that the Kenosha ordinance is a justified government action.

In addition, even if the plaintiffs "chilling effect" argument were viable, nothing in the regulation forces the booths to be arranged in a manner that reveals the content or nature of the film being displayed. The regulation requires only that each booth "have at least one side totally open to a public lighted aisle so there is an unobstructed view at all times of anyone occupying the same." Under the regulation, only the person, not the video screen, must be visible. Satellite presented no evidence that it was impossible to arrange the booths so that the screen itself was not visible, but the person inside was. See Suburban Video, 694 F.Supp. at 591. Therefore, the regulation does not have the inevitable effect of discouraging patrons from receiving protected speech; any First Amendment chilling effect can be avoided by rearranging or reconstructing the viewing booths. Beyond that, plaintiffs have presented no evidence demonstrating that viewers are in fact foregoing or would forego their right to watch sexually explicit films and videos because of the open booth policy.

C.

Finally, Satellite maintains that the open booth regulation is unconstitutional because it imposes a substantial, content-based financial burden on its protected expression. Satellite alleged that the regulation would deprive it of income it would normally receive from patrons since, without doors on the booths, persons would be able to view the films from the public aisles without having to pay.

[13] The Supreme Court has held that if a law or regulation imposes a financial burden on speakers because of the content of their speech, it must be narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling state interest. See Simon and Schuster, Inc. v. Members of the New York Crime Victims Board, 502 U.S. 105, 115–18, 112 S.Ct. 501, 508–09, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991) (holding unconstitutional "Son of Sam law," which required forfeiture of income derived from reenactment of crime by way of movie, book, article, etc.); Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975) (holding unconstitutional ordinance making it unlawful for drive-in theater to exhibit films showing nudity). Satellite likens the Kenosha County regulation to the laws at issue in Simon and Schuster and Erznoznik and further argues that similar to those laws, the regulation fails to meet strict scrutiny.

[14] Satellite's argument fails for several fundamental reasons. First and foremost, as discussed above, the Kenosha regulation is not content-based. It was not passed "because of a disagreement with the message" 700 conveyed. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. at 2754. It was enacted for legitimate health and safety reasons. The fact that it may have an incidental financial effect on adult entertainment speakers and not on others is of no consequence. Id. Further, this argument suffers from the same infirmities as plaintiffs' chilling effect argument. The regulation does not compel the result that non-paying patrons will be able to view the films in the booths—only the person must be visible under the regulation. And again, Satellite offered no evidence to support its claim that it will suffer a serious financial burden due to the regulation. Therefore, we find that the district court was correct in granting summary judgment in favor of Kenosha County on this claim.

III.

In sum, we find that Kenosha County's open booth regulation is a valid time, place, and manner restriction, and as such does not violate the First Amendment. Further, we find that Satellite and Matney's claims that the regulation violates their "expressive privacy rights" and is an impermissible content-based financial restriction are without support in fact or law. We thus AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of Kenosha County.

All Citations

86 F.3d 692

865 F.2d 797
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Stanley BERG and Berg Investments, Inc., an Indiana Corporation d/b/a The Body Works, PFW, Inc., an Indiana Corporation, Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
The HEALTH AND HOSPITAL CORPORATION OF MARION COUNTY, INDIANA, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 87-2493.
|
Argued Feb. 24, 1988.
|
Decided Jan. 20, 1989.

Business offering customers private viewings of motion pictures, which was cited for violating ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)," sought injunction against enforcement of ordinance and declaratory judgment that portions of ordinance were unconstitutional. Other adult entertainment establishments were allowed to intervene as plaintiffs. On cross motions for summary judgment, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, 667 F.Supp. 639, S. Hugh Dillin, J., upheld the ordinance, and adult entertainment businesses appealed. The Court of Appeals, Manion, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance designed to decrease spread of AIDS by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was not unconstitutional prior restraint, and mere fact that agency had authority to close business because it violated ordinance did not transform ordinance into prior restraint on expressive activities; (2) the ordinance constituted valid time, place, and manner restriction; and (3) the ordinance was not unconstitutionally overbroad or vague.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (8)

[1] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was not prior restraint of speech prohibited by First Amendment; the ordinance did not ban viewing any forms of entertainment or grant officials discretion to suppress any speech based upon content, but merely regulated environment in which viewing of entertainment occurred, and the ordinance did not require obtaining of license or permit before exhibiting any particular form of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was not an impermissible prior restraint of speech on theory that ordinance would have chilling effect on those wishing to view entertainment behind closed doors. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures would not be found impermissible prior restraint of speech based on business owner's claim that ordinance infringed upon his privacy rights because it could require removal of his office door; that asserted interest was distinct privacy interest from that of patrons, and regulations specifically made ordinance inapplicable to private offices, thus mooting the privacy claim. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Mere fact that agency had authority to close business because it violated ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures did not transform ordinance into unconstitutional prior restraint on expressive activities; ordinance's application did not depend on advance determination that particular entertainment was permissible, and business owners remained free to carry on their businesses with open booths. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Proper standard for determining constitutionality of ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was whether ordinance constituted valid time, place, and manner restriction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was valid state police power regulation of time, manner, or place of expressive activity; the ordinance was content neutral, the open booth requirement left ample alternative channels of communication, and the ordinance was narrowly tailored in that it responded precisely to the substantive problem, which was legitimate concern of discouraging multiple anonymous sexual encounters facilitating spread of AIDS. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

21 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Physical Layout and Staging Requirements

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was not unconstitutionally overbroad when read with implementing regulations; together, the ordinance and regulations limited open booth provision's application to private or individual entertainment enclosures in which entertainment was sold as part of business on commercial premises, and the ordinance was precisely aimed at matters within agency's power to regulate and achieved its end without encroaching on First Amendment rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Health
Validity

Ordinance designed to decrease spread of "acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS)" by regulating doors on individual entertainment enclosures was not unconstitutionally vague on theory the ordinance did not clearly define particular premises to which it applied; the ordinance and regulations together were plainly directed at establishments which provided individual booths where high-risk sexual activity might occur and to businesses that offered as part of their business entertainment to be viewed within enclosure; persons of ordinary intelligence were capable of identifying those establishments subject to the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

799 Richard Kammen, McClure McClure & Kammen, Indianapolis, Ind., for plaintiffs-appellants.

Richard M. Knoth, Squire Sanders & Dempsey, Cleveland, Ohio, for defendant-appellee.

Before BAUER, Chief Judge, KANNE and MANION, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MANION, Circuit Judge.

Plaintiffs[1] filed suit seeking a judgment declaring unconstitutional the "open booth" ordinance enacted by The Health and Hospital Corporation of Marion County, Indiana (HHC). On cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court upheld the ordinance. Berg v. Health and Hospital Corporation of Marion County, 667 F.Supp. 639 (S.D.Ind.1987). We affirm.

1 For the sake of clarity and simplicity we will refer to all plaintiffs and plaintiffs-appellants as "Berg."

I.

HHC is an independent governmental body created pursuant to Ind.Code § 16-12-21-1 et seq. It is governed by a board of trustees and is responsible for protecting, promoting, and improving public health. The Board of Trustees (Board) is empowered to enact ordinances to promote public health in Marion County, Indiana. To combat the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) in Marion County, HHC's Board of Trustees adopted General Ordinance No. 5-1985(A) (open booth ordinance) in February 1986. The ordinance is designed to eliminate structures which promote anonymous sexual activity and hence to curtail such activity, in the hope that this will help prevent or slow the spread of AIDS.

At a public hearing regarding the ordinance, HHC heard testimony from several persons who viewed the ordinance as a positive step toward containing the spread of AIDS.[2] At the hearing, a professor of microbiology and immunology at the Indiana University School of Medicine, the State Health Commissioner for the Indiana State Board of Health, and the acting chief of HHC's Bureau of Disease Prevention/Health Promotion all testified in favor of the ordinance. Among other things, they testified concerning the fatal nature of AIDS, the rapid increase in the number of persons afflicted with the disease both nationwide and in Marion County, and the great risk of persons becoming infected with the disease by engaging in high-risk sexual activity[3] with multiple partners.

2 The substance of the testimony, given at a hearing before HHC concerning the adoption of the ordinance, was before the district court in the form of affidavits (in opposition to Berg's motion for summary judgment) by persons who recounted the testimony they had given. Additional background information came from the "legislative finding" by HHC (Appendix A) regarding the ordinance.

3 High-risk sexual activity is defined in § 7-402(b) of the ordinance as fellatio and anal intercourse.

Indiana's State Health Commissioner, Dr. Woodrow A. Myers, Jr., also testified before the Board and explained that the State Board of Health's statewide AIDS prevention plan had recommended to each local health officer that, among other things, they identify those businesses or establishments operated wholly or in part to provide opportunities for high-risk sexual behavior and to eliminate the dangers these establishments presented to their communities. Dr. Myers further testified that because high-risk sexual activity was thought to be the primary factor in the transmission of AIDS, those establishments where such high-risk sexual activity occurred were places where the likelihood of the disease's transmission was at its highest.

800 HHC also heard testimony from an officer of the Indianapolis Police Department, Lieutenant Rogers. Rogers was assigned to the police department's sex offenses branch and, before that, to the vice branch. Rogers informed the Board that high-risk sexual activity regularly occurred in certain Marion County establishments. In some places, booths are available where patrons may watch entertainment behind closed doors. Typically, the booths have apertures which allow participants on either side of the wall to engage in sexual activity with one another. According to Rogers, hundreds of arrests have been made in such places over the last few years, usually for public indecency. Undercover police officers have reported observing sexual activity occurring in these areas. Rogers concluded that the booths facilitated anonymous sexual activity.

This appeal involves those parts of the ordinance designed to curtail anonymous high-risk sexual activities and, thus, the spread of AIDS, by regulating the design and structure of commercial premises. Section 19-309, for example, provides that no commercial building shall be designed for or used to promote high-risk sexual conduct. Section 19-311 establishes minimum standards for the design and maintenance of commercial buildings. Section 19-311(a) prohibits partitions in buildings which have apertures designed to encourage sexual activity between persons on either side of the partition. Section 19-311(b) provides that "booths, stalls, or partitioned portions of a room, or individual rooms, used for the viewing of motion pictures or other forms of entertainment" are required to have "at least one side open to an adjacent public room so that the area inside is visible to persons in the adjacent public room." Section 19-311(c) provides that no commercial buildings or structures shall be constructed so that private rooms or accommodations can be offered to customers if the building is in violation of § 19-309 and is not a validly operating hotel, motel, apartment complex or condominium. Section 19-310 provides that "the health officer shall be guided" by regulations adopted by HHC's Board and "by the most recent instructions, opinions and guidelines of the Center for Disease Control of the United States Department of Health and Human Services which relate to the spread of infectious diseases...." (The ordinance's relevant provisions are set forth in Appendix A.)

The Board subsequently adopted several health officer regulations to help administer and enforce § 19-311(b). These regulations limit the applicability of the "open booth" provisions to enclosures offered to the public for a fee "as part of a business operated on the premises which offers as part of its business the entertainment to be viewed within the enclosure...." Section 19-311(b)(1). The regulations also excluded private offices used by the owners and employees of the business. The regulations further define the terms "doors, curtains or portal partitions" and the term "open to an adjacent public room" as those terms are used in § 19-311(b). (These regulations are set forth in Appendix B.)

In March 1986, HHC cited PFW, Inc. (PFW) for violating § 19-311(a) and (b). PFW, joined by Stanley Berg and Stanley Berg Investments, Inc., which describes itself as a business offering its customers "private relaxation and entertainment" rooms, filed suit seeking a declaratory judgment and an injunction against the enforcement of the ordinance. The district court permitted Draix, Inc., Annex Adult Books, Inc., Shadeland Avenue Adult Bookstore, and Keystone Avenue Adult Books to intervene in the action as plaintiffs. All of the intervenors are Marion County businesses that were notified by HHC that they were in violation of the "open booth" provisions of § 19-311(b). They alleged that they would buy, make available or otherwise deal with constitutionally protected materials in Marion County. The intervenors further alleged that the ordinance will prevent them from doing so in the future.

Berg moved for summary judgment, contending that the ordinance violated his rights under the First Amendment. Although broadly contending that §§ 19-101.1, 19-309, 19-310, 19-311(b) and (c), and the 801 regulations governing 19-311(b), violated the First Amendment, Berg declared that the "gravamen" of his complaint was the "open booth" provision of § 19-311(b). Berg argued that § 19-311(b) was an unconstitutional prior restraint on expressive activities in violation of the First Amendment. Alternatively, he argued that, if the ordinance did not constitute a prior restraint, it nevertheless was not a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction. Berg further argued that the ordinance was unconstitutionally overbroad and vague. HHC filed a cross-motion for summary judgment, seeking to have the ordinance declared constitutional.

The district court rejected Berg's claims and upheld the ordinance as a valid time, place, and manner restriction. The court further rejected Berg's overbreadth and vagueness arguments. Berg appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of HHC.

II.

A. Prior Restraint

As in the district court, Berg's appeal focuses on the "open booth" provision of § 19-311(b). He first argues that the district court erred in holding the "open booth" ordinance was not a prior restraint of speech prohibited by the First Amendment. According to Berg, the "open booth" provision constitutes a prior restraint because it "effectively bans" the showing of movies or other forms of entertainment in a commercial building with a door where the public is charged a fee for access, because it substantially restricts the availability of constitutionally protected material, and because the ordinance purports to give HHC the authority to close businesses who fail to comply with § 19-311(b).

[1] The ordinance manifestly is not a prior restraint. "Governmental action constitutes a prior restraint when it is directed to suppressing speech because of its content before the speech is communicated." United States v. Kaun, 827 F.2d 1144, 1150 (7th Cir.1987) (quoting In re G. & A. Books, Inc., 770 F.2d 288, 296 (2d Cir.1985), cert. denied, sub nom. M.J.M. Exhibitors, Inc. v. Stern, 475 U.S. 1015, 106 S.Ct. 1195, 89 L.Ed.2d 310 (1986)). The Supreme Court has struck down regulations as unconstitutional prior restraints on speech where "public officials [have] the power to deny use of a forum in advance of actual expression." See Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 553, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1244, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975). The Marion County ordinance simply does not ban the viewing of any forms of entertainment or grant officials the discretion to suppress any speech based upon its content. Berg is in no way restrained in his ability to sell books, movies, or other forms of entertainment so long as he complies with the ordinance. As the district court noted, "[t]he ordinance does not ban the viewing of films or other entertainment, but merely regulates the environment in which the viewing occurs." Berg, 667 F.Supp. at 642. See also Broadway Books, Inc. v. Roberts, 642 F.Supp. 486, 490 n. 2 (E.D.Tenn.1986) (open booth ordinance held not to constitute a prior restraint). The ordinance also does not require a person to obtain a license or a permit before exhibiting any particular form of speech.

[2] [3] [4] Berg's prior restraint argument centers on HHC's ability to close an operation for failure to comply with the "open booth" provision.[4] The Supreme Court's 802 reasoning in Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 92 L.Ed.2d 568 (1986), however, forecloses this argument. In Arcara, the owners of a bookstore argued that a New York statute authorizing the closure of a building determined to be a public nuisance violated their First Amendment rights. In the course of rejecting the plaintiffs' claims that the closure of the bookstore was entitled to First Amendment protection even though it violated the state statute, the Court specifically rejected the position that such a closure would constitute a prior restraint. The Court explained:

> The closure order sought in this case differs from a prior restraint in two significant respects. First, the order would impose no restraint at all on the dissemination of particular materials, since respondent is free to carry on his bookselling business at another location, even if such locations are difficult to find. Second, the closure order sought would not be imposed on the basis of an advance determination that the distribution of particular materials is prohibited-indeed, the imposition or the closure order has nothing to do with any expressive conduct at all.
> 478 U.S. at 705-06 n. 2, 106 S.Ct. at 3177 n. 2 (emphasis added). Thus, the mere fact that HHC has the authority to close a business because it violates the ordinance does not transform the ordinance into a prior restraint on expressive activities. The ordinance's application does not depend on an advance determination that the particular entertainment is permissible, and Berg

4 In further support of the argument that the ordinance constitutes an impermissible prior restraint, Berg asserts that the ordinance will have a "chilling effect" on those wishing to view entertainment behind closed doors. In other words, Berg contends that some people will choose not to watch certain entertainment at all rather than to do so in public-or at least without a door. This privacy-based argument is without merit. Cf. Ellwest Stereo Theatres, Inc. v. Wenner, 681 F.2d 1243, 1248 (9th Cir.1982). Beyond that, there is no evidence that such a "chilling effect" will result. Compare Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 693 F.Supp. 774, 778 (D.Minn.1988) (affidavits submitted asserting that removal of doors would have such a "chilling effect"). In an affidavit attached to the complaint, Berg asserted only that the ordinance infringed upon his privacy rights because it could require the removal of his office door. This, however, is a distinct privacy interest from his patrons'. Moreover, the regulations specifically provide that the ordinance is inapplicable to private offices, thus making moot Berg's privacy claim.

remains free to carry on his business (albeit with open booths).

B. Time, Place, And Manner Restriction

[5] We conclude, as have several other courts confronted with similar ordinances, that the proper constitutional measure here is whether the ordinance constitutes a valid time, place, and manner restriction. See Wall Distributors, Inc. v. City of Newport News, 782 F.2d 1165 (4th Cir.1986); Ellwest Stereo Theatres, Inc. v. Wenner, 681 F.2d 1243 (9th Cir.1982); Suburban Video, Inc. v. City of Delafield, 694 F.Supp.585 (E.D.Wis.1988); Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 693 F.Supp. 774 (D.Minn.1988); Broadway Books, Inc. v. Roberts, 642 F.Supp. 486. We will assume-because it is not an issue in this case-that the material viewed in the booths is protected by the First Amendment. "To sustain a time, place, and manner restriction on First Amendment activities, the government must show that the restriction (1) is content-neutral, (2) serves a legitimate governmental objective, (3) leaves open ample alternative channels of communication, and (4) is narrowly tailored to serve the governmental objective." City of Watseka v. Illinois Public Action Council, 796 F.2d 1547, 1552 (7th Cir.1986), aff'd, 479 U.S. 1048, 107 S.Ct. 919, 93 L.Ed.2d 972 (1987).

[6] Under the time, place, and manner analysis, other courts have consistently upheld "open booth" ordinances as valid exercises of state police power. See Wall Distributors, Inc., supra; Ellwest, supra; Suburban Video, supra; Doe v. City of Minneapolis, supra; Broadway Books, supra. Likewise, we find no constitutional infirmity in Ordinance 5-1985(A).

There can be no doubt that the first two elements of the time, place, and manner test are met. The ordinance is clearly content-neutral; it makes no distinction between types of films or entertainment. Thus, it "would apply to a showing of 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm' as well as any other film or performance. The ordinance regulates only the non-communicative aspects relating to the environment in which such material may be disseminated or received, and thereby 'imposes only an incidental burden' on plaintiffs' first amendment rights." Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 693 F.Supp. at 780 (construing an ordinance patterned on the Marion County ordinance at issue in this case). Indeed, the ordinance by its terms applies to all 803 such enclosed booths, regardless of the type of film shown. Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1245 n. 2. The ordinance is not directed at the content of the films or the type of entertainment which might be viewed in the booths; rather, it is directed at the booth's "secondary effects," namely the possible spread of AIDS through the anonymous sexual activity which may occur there. City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 929, 89 L.Ed.2d29 (1986). See also Wall Distributors, Inc., 782 F.2d at 1169.

The ordinance also serves a legitimate governmental objective. HHC has the responsibility "[t]o protect, promote or improve public health" and to "control disease" within Marion County. Ind.Code § 16-12-21-28 3(i). Ordinance 5-1985(A) is clearly consistent with that mandate. Further, combating the spread of a deadly disease which has no known cure doubtless constitutes a legitimate governmental objective. Cf. City of Watseka, 796 F.2d at 1554 (protecting peace and quiet and preventing crime an "obvious" legitimate governmental objective).

Moreover, the "open booth" ordinance leaves ample alternative channels of communication.[5] Here we consider "methods of communication" and ask "whether those methods not prohibited by the challenged regulation" (viewing the films, etc., with an open door) "are equivalent to the prohibited methods" (viewing the films, etc., behind a closed door). Wisconsin Action Coalition v. City of Kenosha, 767 F.2d 1248, 1254 n. 3 (7th Cir.1985). There is absolutely nothing in the ordinance limiting the availability of films or other entertainment. The ordinance does not bar people from watching films or entertainment in individual enclosures. The viewing public is in no way "denied access to the market ... or ... unable to satisfy its appetite for sexually explicit fare." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 62, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2448, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976). Persons who wish to watch entertainment in individual enclosures may continue to do so; their access to such films and other entertainment is not substantially impaired by the removal of doors on the booths. Plainly, for First Amendment purposes, an open booth is the equivalent to a closed booth, so far as viewing materials is concerned.

5 As we have explained elsewhere, the "ample alternative channels" factor of the time, place, and manner analysis differs from the "less restrictive alternatives" prong of the "narrowly tailored interest" factor. Wisconsin Action Coalition v. City of Kenosha, 767 F.2d 1248, 1254 n. 3 (7th Cir.1985).

Lastly, the ordinance is narrowly tailored to serve the governmental objective. City of Watseka, 796 F.2d at 1552. Whether an enactment is narrowly tailored really involves two separate inquiries. First, there must be a significant relationship between the ordinance and the governmental interest. Id. at 1554; City of Kenosha, 767 F.2d at 1257. Second, less restrictive alternatives must be inadequate to protect the governmental interest. City of Watseka, 796 F.2d at 1554.

Berg contends there is no connection between the ordinance and the served interest. He argues that HHC has not established that anyone has contracted AIDS from a commercial enterprise such as those in the instant suit or, for that matter, in Marion County. The proof Berg would require-specifically identifying such a commercial enterprise as the place where one contracted AIDS-is probably not possible in such exact terms, or if possible, would be exceedingly difficult to establish; however, it is also not necessary. HHC was entitled to rely on the experiences of other communities and it need only demonstrate that the evidence relied upon was "reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem" that it was addressing. City of Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. at 931; Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 693 F.Supp. at 781; Broadway Books, 642 F.Supp. at 491. Thus, it was entirely proper to rely on the more general information which HHC considered.

When HHC adopted Ordinance 5-1985(A), it had information concerning the incidence of AIDS in Marion County, its rapid increase in other cities, its incurable, fatal nature, its transmission via multiple, 804 anonymous sexual encounters, and about the casual sexual activity, including anal intercourse, observed in the types of local establishments sought to be regulated. Further, HHC heard testimony from a health professional who testified that the ordinance was an important step in the prevention of unsafe sexual practices and, thus, in the spread of AIDS. This information establishes a significant relationship between the ordinance and HHC's legitimate interest in fighting the spread of AIDS.

But to be narrowly tailored there also must be no less restrictive alternative which could serve the governmental interest. City of Watseka, 796 F.2d at 1554. This requirement is easily met here, as the ordinance "responds precisely to the substantive problem which legitimately concerns" HHC. Id. at 1553 (quoting Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 810, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2131, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984)). As the Fourth Circuit observed in regard to a similar enactment:

> [t]he open booth regulation appears to be the least burdensome means of controlling offensive and illegal activity within booths that can be imagined. The regulation in no way limits the time of operation, number of booths, or content of exhibitions. We conclude that the regulation is ... narrowly tailored to serve the specific interest advanced by the City....

Wall Distributors, Inc., 782 F.2d at 1170.[6] Moreover, we decline to engage in speculation as to other possible alternatives which HHC might have employed to fight the spread of AIDS. In both City of Watseka and City of Kenosha, where we did consider alternatives to the challenged enactments, there already existed less restrictive alternatives which could adequately protect the articulated interests at issue. There is nothing similar found in the record here. This case is also unlike Doe v. City of Minneapolis, supra, where the ordinance's challengers proffered specific alternatives to the open booth ordinance (a one-person-one-booth restriction, or the removal of the bottom 24 inches of the door as opposed to the entire door). Berg identified no less restrictive alternatives, nor do we think any exist.

6 The Fourth Circuit's reasoning was in connection with the final factor of the time, place, and manner analysis as articulated in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), namely, that the restriction on First Amendment interests be no greater than is essential to achieve the interest advanced by the government. Wall Distributors, Inc., 782 F.2d at 1170. This is completely consistent with our "less restrictive alternative" factor. City of Watseka, 796 F.2d at 1554 (citing U.S. v. O'Brien).

III.

Berg also contends that the ordinance is unconstitutionally overbroad and vague. We disagree.

[7] The ordinance is overbroad, Berg argues, because it could be applied to rooms where activities such as watching movies or plays or reading books and magazines take place as opposed to high-risk sexual activity. An overbroad enactment "sweeps within its prohibitions [that which] may not be punished under the First and Fourteenth Amendments." Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 115, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 2302, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972). An ordinance or statute may be invalidated on its face only if the overbreadth is substantial. Board of Airport Commissioners v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 482 U.S. 569, 107 S.Ct. 2568, 2571, 96 L.Ed.2d 500 (1987); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 615, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2917, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973); United States v. Rodgers, 755 F.2d 533, 542 (7th Cir.1985), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 907, 105 S.Ct. 3532, 87 L.Ed.2d 656 (1985). "[T]he overbreadth of a statute must not only be real, but substantial as well, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 615, 93 S.Ct. at 2918. "[T]here must be a realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the Court for it to be facially challenged on overbreadth grounds." 805 Members of the City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2126, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). See also Board of Airport Commissioners v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 482 U.S. 569, 107 S.Ct. at 2571 (quoting Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 503, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 2801, 86 L.Ed.2d 394 (1985)). However, even where an ordinance "appears overbroad because of its ambiguity [it] should not be struck down if it is subject to a reasonable limiting instruction." U.S. v. Rodgers, 755 F.2d at 542.

The ordinance by itself or through its regulations specifically excludes its application to private business offices or to hotels and motels. As the district court found, the regulation and the ordinance when read together limit the "open booth" provision's application to private or individual enclosures in which entertainment is sold as part of a business on commercial premises. This is sufficiently tailored to fend off an overbreadth challenge. Moreover, as we elsewhere have stated, the ordinance is precisely aimed at matters within HHC's power to regulate, and it achieves its end without encroaching on First Amendment rights. Broadway Books, Inc., 642 F.Supp. at 490 n. 2.

[8] Nor is the ordinance unconstitutionally vague. Essentially Berg argues that the ordinance does not clearly define the particular premises to which it applies, leaving this determination to the individual discretion of enforcement officers. "[A]n enactment is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined." Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. at 108, 92 S.Ct. at 2298. Laws must "give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly." Id.; Baer v. City of Wauwatosa, 716 F.2d 1117, 1124 (7th Cir.1983). But enactments need not provide "meticulous specifics" or mathematical precision; they are permitted "flexibility and reasonable breadth." Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. at 110, 92 S.Ct. at 2300. When evaluating a facial challenge to an ordinance, we must consider any limiting construction that an enforcement agency proffers. Village of Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494 n. 5, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 1191 n. 5, 71 L.Ed.2d 362 (1982).

Read as a whole, the ordinance and its regulations plainly are directed at those establishments which provide individual booths where high-risk sexual activity may occur and to businesses that offer as part of their business the entertainment to be viewed within the enclosure. And, although the term "entertainment" is arguably general, when read in the particular context of this ordinance, it cannot be said that it is beyond the grasp of persons of ordinary intelligence. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. at 108, 92 S.Ct. at 2298; Broadway Books, Inc., 642 F.Supp. at 490 n. 2. In sum, we believe that persons of ordinary intelligence are capable of identifying those establishments subject to the ordinance.

IV.

HHC's "open booth" ordinance is a valid and constitutional regulation serving a legitimate governmental interest, and it is neither so vague nor overbroad as to be unconstitutional. For the foregoing reasons, the district court is in all respects

AFFIRMED.

APPENDIX A

Legislative Finding

Sec. 19-101.1. It is hereby further found that there exist within Marion County, Indiana, commercial premises, commercial structures or parts thereof, which by reason of the design, and intended use of such premises or structures or parts thereof are conducive to the spread of communicable disease found to be of danger to persons frequenting such premises, structures, or parts thereof, and to the public health, safety and welfare. The health, safety and welfare of all persons in Marion County must be protected by the establishment of standards for such premises, structures, or parts thereof, to eliminate the possibility of infection of contagious disease. Of specific danger is the sexually transmissible disease of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, which is currently found to be irreversible and uniformly fatal. 806 The incidence of this disease is found to occur in discernible population groups, and the risk factors for obtaining or spreading the disease are associated with high-risk sexual conduct with multiple partners. The commercial premises, structures, or parts thereof, which place persons at risk of infection from this disease due to their design or intended use for high-risk sexual conduct, are necessarily subject to regulation and minimal standards for the prevention of the spread of this disease and for the protection of the public health, safety and welfare.

Sec. 19-309. No commercial building, structure, premises or subdivision, partition, portion or part thereof or facilities therein, shall be so constructed, used, or operated for the purpose of sexual activities, in which facilities high-risk sexual conduct takes place. No commercial building, structure, premises or subdivision, partition, or portion shall be designed for or used to promote high-risk sexual conduct.

Sec. 19-310. In exercising powers conferred by this, or any other, section of the Code relating to communicable disease, the health officer shall be guided by the most recent instructions, opinions and guidelines of the Center for Disease Control of the United States Department of Health and Human Services which relate to the spread of infectious diseases and any regulations which may be adopted by this Board which relate to controlling the spread of infectious diseases.

Sec. 19-311. Minimum standards for prevention of certain communicable diseases in commercial premises.

No person shall occupy any commercial building, structure, premises, or portion or part thereof, which does not comply with the following requirements:

(a.) For the prevention of the spread of sexually transmitted disease, no partitions between subdivisions of a room, portion or part of a building, structure or premises may have an aperture which is designed or otherwise constructed to encourage sexual activity between persons on either side of the partition.

(b.) No booths, stalls, or partitioned portions of a room, or individual rooms, used for the viewing of motion pictures or other forms of entertainment, shall have doors, curtains or portal partitions, but all such booths, stalls, partitioned portions of a room, or individual rooms so used shall have at least one side open to an adjacent public room so that the area inside is visible to persons in the adjacent public room. All such described areas shall be lighted in such a manner that the persons in the areas used for viewing motion pictures or other forms of entertainment are visible from the adjacent public rooms, but such lighting shall not be of such intensity as to prevent the viewing of the motion pictures or other offered entertainment.

(c.) No commercial building, structure or premises shall be so constructed that private rooms or accommodations can be offered to patrons of that business operated therein if:

(1.) The building, structure or premises is in violation of Sec. 19-309, above; and

(2.) The building, structure or premises is not a validly operating hotel, motel, apartment complex or condominium.

APPENDIX B

SECTION 19-311(b):

(1) The words “booth, stalls, partitioned portions of a room or individual rooms” mean such enclosures as are specifically offered to the public or members of that establishment for hire or for a fee as part of a business operated on the premises which offers as part of its business the entertainment to be viewed within the enclosure; which shall include, without limitation, such enclosures wherein the entertainment is dispensed for a fee, but a fee is not charged for mere access to the enclosure.

(2) The words "booths, stalls, partitioned portions of a room or individual rooms" do not mean such enclosures that are private offices used by the owners, managers or persons employed on the premises for attending to the tasks of their employment, which enclosures are not held out to the public 807 or members of the establishment for hire or for a fee or for the purpose of viewing entertainment for a fee, and are not open to any persons other than employees.

(3) The words "doors, curtains or portal partitions" mean full, complete, nontransparent closure devices through which one cannot see or view the activity taking place within the enclosure.

(4) The words "open to an adjacent public room so that the area inside is visible to persons in the adjacent public room" shall mean either the absence of any "door, curtain or portal partition" or a door or other device which is made of clear, transparent material such as glass, plexiglass or other such material meeting building code and safety standards, extending from the floor to the top of the door frame, exclusive of the door or device framing itself, so that the activity inside the enclosure may be viewed or seen by persons outside the enclosure.

All Citations

865 F.2d 797

End of Document

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Follow by White River Amusement Pub, Inc. v. Town of Hartford, 2nd Cir.(Vt.), March 28, 2007

185 F.3d 823
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

DIMA CORPORATION, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
TOWN OF HALLIE, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 98-3997.
|
Argued April 15, 1999.
|
Decided July 26, 1999.
|
Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing
En Banc Denied Aug. 24, 1999.

Operator of adult bookstore brought § 1983 action, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief as to ordinance restricting the hours of operation of adult establishments. Summary judgment for town was granted by the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, Barbara B. Crabb, J., and bookstore operator appealed. The Court of Appeals, Manion, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance was not content neutral, but because that content was sexually explicit, ordinance was constitutional so long as it satisfied the requirements of a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction; (2) the actual motives of those who enacted ordinance were irrelevant; and (3) town minimally met its burden of making a record to justify its ordinance's limitation on hours of operation.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (16)

[1] Constitutional Law
First Amendment

The Fourteenth Amendment incorporated the free speech provision of the First Amendment, and so it prohibits state governments from abridging these freedoms as well. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 1, 14.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

A corporation may assert a First Amendment challenge. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

The threshold question in a First Amendment free speech case is whether the challenged law is content-based, that is, whether the law regulates speech based on the ideas or messages it expresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law
Strict or Exacting Scrutiny;Compelling Interest Test

Content-based regulations are presumptively invalid, but government is given much more leeway when its content-neutral regulations happen to limit some speech, and such regulation is subject only to intermediate scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Government may impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on speech if they are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
"Fighting Words"
Constitutional Law
Defamation
Constitutional Law
Obscenity in General
Constitutional Law
Pornography

Within constitutional limits, government may proscribe obscenity, child pornography, defamation, and so-called "fighting words," but even within these traditional categorical exceptions, the First Amendment does not permit government to discriminate only against speech that contains some other message of which the government disapproves. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Government may not simply proscribe sexually explicit, nonobscene, materials, but these materials are entitled to less First Amendment protection than nonsexually-explicit materials. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Content Neutrality
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Ordinance which singled out adult-oriented establishments for different treatment was not content neutral, but because that content was sexually explicit, strict scrutiny did not apply, and ordinance was constitutional so long as it satisfied the requirements of a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness
Constitutional Law
Narrow Tailoring Requirement; Relationship to Governmental Interest
Constitutional Law
Existence of Other Channels of Expression

Time, place, and manner restrictions are "reasonable," that is, do not violate the First Amendment, if they: (1) are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest; and (3) leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Bookstores
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

The actual motives of those who enacted ordinance regulating hours of operation of adult bookstores were irrelevant to First Amendment analysis of whether the restrictions were justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; issue was not whether the motives of the town board could be justified as content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions, but rather whether the ordinance itself could be so justified. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Secondary Effects

Combating potential undesirable "secondary effects" of adult-oriented establishments, including the spread of crime and sexually transmitted diseases, a decline in property value, or an increase in public sexual acts, is a significant government interest, which may support content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

In response to a First Amendment challenge to time, place, and manner restrictions on speech, a municipality bears the burden of showing that there is evidence that supports its proffered justification, but this burden is not overwhelming, as the First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Bookstores

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Conclusory assertions regarding goals and effect of ordinance restricting hours of operation of adult bookstores were insufficient by themselves to survive a First Amendment challenge because they were not evidence; town had to offer some record support for the existence of secondary effects of operation of such bookstores, and for the ordinance's amelioration thereof. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Civil Rights
Trial in General

A municipality may make a record for summary judgment or at trial with evidence of secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments that it may not have had when it enacted its ordinance imposing time, place and manner restrictions on such establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Bookstores

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Town minimally met its burden of making a record to justify its ordinance's limitation on hours of operation of adult bookstores, by relying on the factual record supporting the experience of the municipality from which it copied its ordinance, as reported in a district court opinion; fairly meager record supporting town's justification of combating crime was sufficient where First Amendment challenge was limited to the ordinance's regulation of hours of operation, and where bookstore operator had not created a record to show what sort of impact this limitation would have on its business. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Bookstores

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Evidence which merely contradicted other evidence that town board could have reasonably relied upon in enacting ordinance restricting hours of operation of adult bookstores was irrelevant to the question of whether there was some evidence that did support the board's conclusions that the ordinance would combat crime, which was all that was required to uphold it against First Amendment challenge. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

826 Randall D.B. Tigue (argued), Randall Tigue Law Office, Minneapolis, MN, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Joel L. Aberg (argued), Weld, Riley, Prenn & Ricci, Eau Claire, WI, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before CUDAHY, COFFEY, and MANION, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MANION, Circuit Judge.

In the Town of Hallie, Wisconsin, DiMa Corporation operates an adult bookstore, which is currently open 24 hours per day. After Hallie adopted an ordinance limiting the hours such bookstores may be open, DiMa filed this suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against enforcing the ordinance, claiming that the ordinance violates DiMa's free speech rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The district court granted summary judgment for Hallie. Because we conclude that the record sufficiently supports Hallie's claim that the ordinance is a reasonable attempt to control undesirable "secondary effects" rather than an attempt to regulate speech because of its objectionable content, we affirm the district court.

Background

Hallie is a small town in rural Wisconsin between Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls. DiMa operates the "Pure Pleasure" bookstore in Hallie. Pure Pleasure sells sexually explicit, nonobscene books and magazines, and it has private booths in which a patron can watch sexually explicit, non-obscene video tapes. [1] Since it opened, Pure Pleasure has operated 24 hours per day. In March 1998, Hallie adopted Ordinance No. 98-1, which regulates "adult-oriented establishments," including "adult bookstores." DiMa does not dispute that Pure Pleasure falls within the ordinance's definition of these terms. The ordinance regulates adult-oriented establishments in various ways but in this suit DiMa challenges only one of them: the hours of operation limits contained in Section 1.06. Under that section, an adult-oriented establishment may not be open between 2:00 A.M. and 8:00 A.M. Monday through Friday, between 3:00 A.M. and 8:00 A.M. on Saturday, and between 3:00 A.M. and noon on Sunday. The ordinance thus requires adult bookstores to be closed about one-quarter of the hours during a week. (These are the same hours of operation limits that Wisconsin has placed on establishments that serve alcohol. See Wisc. Stat. §§ 125.32(3) & 125.68(4).) Section 1.06 has not yet been enforced: the parties stipulated to an injunction of it while the matter was pending in the district court, and the district court continued that injunction pending the outcome of this appeal.

1 There has been no judicial finding, nor even the allegation, that these materials are obscene. Hallie decided to regulate these materials as not obscene and the parties have so treated them in this litigation. We therefore do the same.

Analysis

[1] [2] [3] [4] [5] The First Amendment provides in part that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." Section One of the Fourteenth Amendment incorporated this provision and so it prohibits state government from abridging these freedoms as well. See, e.g., Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138 (1925); 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 489 n. 1, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 1501 n. 1, 134 L.Ed.2d 711 (1996). [2] Because the 827 ordinance has not yet been applied to Pure Pleasure, we are confronted with a facial challenge to the statute, rather than a challenge to the way the statute has been applied to Pure Pleasure. The threshold question in a First Amendment free speech case is whether the challenged law is content-based, that is, whether the law regulates speech based on the ideas or messages it expresses. "Content-based regulations are presumptively invalid." R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 382, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992). On the other hand, government is given much more leeway when its content-neutral regulations happen to limit some speech. See United States v. Wilson, 154 F.3d 658, 663 (7th Cir.1998) ("If a statute is content-based, it must survive strict scrutiny to be constitutional. If a statute is content-neutral, it is subject only to intermediate scrutiny."). Therefore, government may impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions if they are "justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech." Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct.

2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (internal quotation marks omitted).

2 Although DiMa is a corporation rather than a natural person, it may assert a First Amendment challenge. First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 776, 98 S.Ct. 1407, 55 L.Ed.2d 707 (1978) ("The proper question therefore is not whether corporations 'have' First Amendment rights and, if so, whether they are coextensive with those of natural persons. Instead, the question must be whether [the legislation in question] abridges expression that the First Amendment was meant to protect."); see also Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U.S. 578, 592, 17 S.Ct. 198, 41 L.Ed. 560 (1896) ("It is now settled that corporations are persons, within the meaning of [the Fourteenth Amendment's protections].").

[6] [7] There are some categorical exceptions to this general analysis, however; government has more freedom to regulate certain kinds of speech, even though it does so based on the content of the speech. Within constitutional limits, government may proscribe obscenity, see Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 23, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973); child pornography, see Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 111, 110 S.Ct. 1691, 109 L.Ed.2d 98 (1990); defamation, see New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 268, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964); and so-called "fighting words," see Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 571-72, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942).[3] The Supreme Court applies yet a different kind of analysis to the category of speech at issue here: sexually explicit, non-obscene materials. Because this speech is not obscene, government may not simply proscribe it. See Schad v. Borough of Mt. Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) ("[A]n entertainment program [may not] be prohibited solely because it displays the nude human figure."). But because these materials border on the obscene, they are entitled to less First Amendment protection than non-sexually-explicit materials. See Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70-71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality) ("Even though the First Amendment protects communication in this area from total suppression, we hold that the State may legitimately use the content of these materials as the basis for placing them in a different classification from other motion pictures."). So in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the Court held that "at least with respect to businesses that purvey sexually explicit materials, zoning ordinances designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects of such businesses are to be reviewed under the standards applicable to 'content-neutral' time, place, and manner regulations." (Footnote omitted.)

3 But even within these traditional categorical exceptions, the First Amendment does not permit government to discriminate only against speech that contains some other message of which the government disapproves. R.A.V., 505 U.S. at 385, 112 S.Ct. 2538 ("The proposition that a particular instance of speech can be proscribable on the basis of one feature (e.g., obscenity) but not on the basis of another (e.g., opposition to the city government) is commonplace and has found application in many contexts.").

[8] As the Sixth Circuit recently noted, the Court's analysis has caused some confusion 828 among courts and litigants, and that confusion is evident in this case. See Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435, 440 (6th Cir.1998). The Court held that regulation of sexually explicit material would be treated like content-neutral time, place, and manner regulations, not that it was content-neutral. Thus when courts and litigants fall into the shorthand of simply referring to regulations like the one here as "content-neutral," they can find themselves arguing about irrelevancies. Here, DiMa, with ample citation to cases, argues that the ordinance is not content-neutral, while Hallie argues that it is. DiMa is obviously correct: the ordinance singles out adult-oriented establishments for different treatment based on the content of the materials they sell or display. Richland Bookmart, Inc., 137 F.3d at 438-39. But because that content is sexually explicit materials, DiMa's conclusion that strict scrutiny applies here does not follow. Rather, Hallie's ordinance is constitutional so long as it satisfies the requirements of a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction.

[9] Time, place, and manner restrictions are "reasonable," that is, do not violate the First Amendment, if they: (1) are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest; and (3) leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746; see also United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88

S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968) (stating test with slightly different language). Hallie asserts that the third prong is satisfied because the ordinance permits Pure Pleasure to be open for significant periods of time, about three-quarters of the hours during a week, and DiMa does not challenge this assertion. DiMa also does not contend that the second prong is not satisfied: it neither challenges Hallie's proffered interests as being not significant nor does it claim that it should be required to close for some fewer number of hours. Our analysis, then, focuses only on the first prong. DiMa levels a number of attacks at the ordinance, arguing that it is not justified as anything other than a regulation of sexually explicit material of which the Hallie city officials disapprove.

[10] We can reject DiMa's first argument rather easily. DiMa claims that at least some of the Hallie Township Board members had an improper motive when they voted for the ordinance: rather than acting to combat crime, deter sexually transmitted diseases, and the other "legitimate" goals that the ordinance's preamble asserts, at least some of the Board members voted for the ordinance because of local opposition to the "vice" of sexually explicit materials. The record shows that DiMa is correct. Some members of the Board desired to close down Pure Pleasure altogether because of numerous complaints from Hallie residents who objected to having an adult bookstore in their town. Recognizing that the Constitution did not permit proscribing sexually explicit materials, at least some of the Board members seemed willing to enact the ordinance because it was the most that they could do consistent with the Constitution. But attacking the ordinance because it was enacted by persons with "impure hearts" gets DiMa nowhere. The actual motives of those who enacted the ordinance are irrelevant to our First Amendment analysis. "It is a familiar principle of constitutional law that this Court will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive." O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 383, 88 S.Ct. 1673; Renton, 475 U.S. at 47-48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting O'Brien). Similarly, in a case applying the First Amendment's free-exercise clause, Justice Scalia, joined by the Chief Justice, rejected the idea that the motives of those who enacted the law were relevant to whether it was constitutional:

> [The language of the First Amendment] does not put us into the business of 829 invalidating laws by reason of the evil motives of their authors. Had the Hialeah City Council set out resolutely to suppress the practices of Santeria, but ineptly adopted ordinances that failed to do so, I do not see how those laws could be said to "prohibi[t] the free exercise" of religion. Nor, in my view, does it matter that a legislature consists entirely of the pure-hearted, if the law it enacts in fact singles out a religious practice for special burdens.

Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, 508 U.S. 520, 558-59, 113 S.Ct. 2217, 124 L.Ed.2d 472 (1993) (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment).[4] It would indeed be an exercise in futility if we struck down the ordinance because of the improper motives of some Board members, and the Board was then able to immediately reenact the same ordinance but with the members all being careful to avoid stating their illegitimate motives. See O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 384, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (declining to void otherwise constitutional statute "which could be reenacted in its exact form if the same or another legislator made a 'wiser' speech about it."). Thus, in analyzing whether Hallie's ordinance violates the First Amendment, we do not ask whether the motives of the Board can be justified as content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions, but rather whether the ordinance itself can be so justified. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925.

4 Justice Kennedy, who wrote the opinion for the majority, believed that the motives of the city council were relevant, and applied an analysis adopted from cases applying the Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause. Hialeah, 508 U.S. at 540-42, 113 S.Ct. 2217. But this part of his opinion was joined only by Justice Stevens.

[11] [12] [13] The justification advanced by Hallie is combating potential undesirable "secondary effects" of adult-oriented establishments. This is a significant government interest. Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. Those undesirable secondary effects could include the spread of crime and sexually transmitted diseases, a decline in property value, or an increase in public sexual acts. Although the ordinance's preamble cites numerous secondary effects that it was meant to combat, on appeal, as it did in the court below, Hallie focuses on the Board's conclusion that one of the secondary effects of the adult-oriented businesses was increased crime and the ordinance was reasonably necessary to combat it. In response to a First Amendment challenge, the municipality bears the burden of showing that there is evidence that supports its proffered justification. See J & B Entertainment, Inc. v. City of Jackson, 152 F.3d 362, 370-71 (5th Cir.1998) (city bears burden both of production and persuasion). This burden is not overwhelming. "The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925. The district court correctly concluded that Hallie's ordinance does not itself contain any evidence to support its proffered justification; its conclusory assertions regarding its goals and its effect are insufficient by themselves to survive a First Amendment challenge because they are not "evidence" as the Court required in Renton. The Third Circuit succinctly stated the appropriate burden in this kind of case: "[O]ur First Amendment jurisprudence requires that the [municipality] identify the justifying secondary effects with some particularity, that [it] offer some record support for the existence of those effects and for the Ordinance's amelioration thereof, and that the plaintiffs be afforded some opportunity to offer evidence in support of the allegations of their complaint." Phillips v. Borough of Keyport, 107 F.3d 164, 175 (3d Cir.1997) (en banc).

[14] We also agree with the district court that a municipality may make a record 830 for summary judgment or at trial with evidence that it may not have had when it enacted its ordinance. D. Ct. Op. at 11-12. The Court in Renton did not address this issue because in that case, the city council had created an extensive record prior to enacting its ordinance. 475 U.S. at 44, 106 S.Ct. 925. The Court's most relevant guidance on this issue comes from Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991). In that case, the Court addressed a First Amendment challenge to enforcing a statute banning public nudity by prohibiting totally nude dancing in establishments providing "adult entertainment." The Chief Justice, writing the plurality opinion but joined only by two other Justices, held that such nude dancing was "expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it only as marginally so." Id. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456. The plurality opinion affirmed the state's enforcement of its public nudity statute as a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction, without analyzing whether the enforcement combated undesirable secondary effects of the nude dancing; the plurality considered moral disapproval of nudity to be a sufficient justification. Justice Scalia concurred in the judgment, but concluded that because the law at issue was a general one regulating conduct not specifically directed at expression, it should not be subject to any level of First Amendment scrutiny. Id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Justice Souter concurred in the judgment and provided the fifth vote needed to overcome the views of the four dissenting Justices. Justice Souter, like the plurality, affirmed the statute as a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction, but unlike the plurality did so based on the proffered justification of combating the undesirable secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments. Id. at 582-83, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Justice Souter's reasoning, then, appears to be the Court's holding because his was the narrowest reasoning supporting the judgment. [5] Justice Souter accepted the state's justification and its evidence, which it proffered during the litigation, although there was no evidence that the state had been motivated by combating secondary effects when it enacted the statute or that it had had any of the evidence before it. Id. Moreover, Justice Souter accepted the experiences of other cities as reported in judicial opinions as being evidence upon which the legislature could have reasonably relied. Id. at 583-86, 111 S.Ct. 2456. The Renton Court had similarly accepted the city's reliance on the experience of Seattle, as expressed in the detailed findings of fact summarized by the Washington Supreme Court in a prior case. 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (citing Northend Cinema, Inc. v. Seattle, 90 Wash.2d 709, 585 P.2d 1153, 1159 (Wash.1978)).

5 "When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as the position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds." Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977) (internal quotation marks omitted). Three other circuits have also concluded that Justice Souter's concurrence is the Court's holding. See J & B Entertainment, 152 F.3d at 370; Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129, 134 (6th Cir.1994); International Eateries of America, Inc. v. Broward County, 941 F.2d 1157, 1161 (11th Cir.1991).

[15] Under these standards, we conclude that Hallie has met its burden of making a record to justify its ordinance's limitation on hours of operation, but we agree with the district court that it has only minimally done so. See D. Ct. Op. at 10. Hallie relies primarily on the experience of West Allis, Wisconsin, and Hallie's ordinance was essentially copied from the one enacted by West Allis. (West Allis is next to Milwaukee and is thus geographically far removed from Hallie.) Hallie relies on the factual record supporting West Allis's experience as reported in Tee & Bee, Inc. v. City of West Allis, 936 F.Supp. 1479 (E.D.Wis.1996), in which the 831 district court upheld West Allis's ordinance against a First Amendment challenge. Before enacting its ordinance, West Allis had done considerable analysis of studies from other cities, which its ordinance specifically cited. 936 F.Supp. at 1483 & 1485 n. 3. We agree with DiMa that it is unusual for Hallie in this court to rely principally on a district court opinion. In Barnes, Justice Souter relied on findings reported in Supreme Court decisions and appellate decisions from the circuit in which the municipality was located. 501 U.S. at 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Although Tee & Bee's discussion of the evidence relied on by West Allis is some record support justifying Hallie's similar ordinance, it is not compelling evidence.[6] Likewise, although the Hallie corporate counsel examined the First Amendment issue, the record does not reflect that he conducted any extensive analysis of the experiences of other municipalities, as was done in other cases. Cf. Renton, 475 U.S. at 44, 106 S.Ct. 925 (describing extensive studies and hearings conducted by Planning Committee); Tee & Bee, 936 F.Supp. at 1483 (committee studied issue for 12 months). Thus, we have a fairly meager record to support Hallie's justification of combating crime. But it is enough of a record in this case because DiMa's First Amendment challenge is limited to the ordinance's hours of operation regulation, and we have no reason to believe that this is a significant impairment of Pure Pleasure's business. DiMa has not created a record to show what sort of impact this limitation would have on its business. That is, we don't know how much revenue Pure Pleasure takes in during the hours that are subject to the regulations or whether, when the hours of operation regulation is enforced, these revenues will be lost rather than merely shifted to other hours when Pure Pleasure is open. Nor do we know how Pure Pleasure's profits would be affected, considering that presumably limiting the hours of operation would reduce its operating expenses. So we caution other municipalities not to read our decision today too broadly. We would expect a municipality defending a more substantial set of regulations to create a more substantial record in support of summary judgment. Cf. Tee & Bee, 936 F.Supp. at 1486 ("The record is replete with information showing that the City determined it necessary to provide for the licensing and regulation of adult-oriented businesses in order to combat the secondary effects of such facilities in the surrounding community.").

6 We do not want our reasoning to be construed as a slight of the district court's opinion in Tee & Bee. The court's opinion was thorough and well reasoned. In referring to Tee & Bee as not compelling evidence supporting Hallie's ordinance, we mean that as a district court opinion, to this court Tee & Bee is persuasive but not binding precedent.

[16] We must address one more aspect of DiMa's argument before closing. In the court below, DiMa submitted expert testimony and a study done in Phoenix to show there is no relation between an adult-oriented business' hours of operation and crime. It also proffered various evidence showing that there was in fact no correlation between Pure Pleasure being open 24 hours a day and crime in Hallie. The district court properly rejected this evidence because it merely contradicts other evidence that the Hallie Board could have reasonably relied upon. It is therefore irrelevant to the question of whether there is some evidence that does support the Board's conclusions. DiMa's contradictory evidence would be highly probative if our task were to discover the objective truth about the effect of Pure Pleasure's operating in Hallie. But our task under the First Amendment is far different. The Hallie Board has the job of sorting through the available evidence and making a political judgment about what regulations best serve Hallie's interest. We are not here to judge how well the Board did its job; our task is to determine whether the law it enacted violates the Constitution. It does not.

832 The judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

185 F.3d 823

End of Document

926 F.Supp.2d 1039
United States District Court,
S.D. Indiana,
Indianapolis Division.

ANNEX BOOKS, INC., New Flicks, Inc. d/b/a New Flicks, Lafayette Video & News, Inc. d/b/a Lafayette Video & News, Keystone Video & Newsstand, Inc d/b/a Keystone Video, Southern Nights, Inc., Plaintiffs,
v.
CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, Defendant.

No. 1:03–cv–00918–SEB–TAB.
|
Feb. 25, 2013.

Synopsis

Background: Owners of adult entertainment establishments brought action challenging constitutionality of city's adult entertainment business ordinance. Bench trial was held.

[Holding:] The District Court, Sarah Evans Barker, J., held that city adequately established that public benefits justified ordinance without unjustified, substantial decrease in freedom of speech.

Judgment for city.

West Headnotes (4)

[1] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Law regulating sexually oriented businesses satisfies intermediate scrutiny test under First Amendment so long as it is designed to serve substantial governmental interest and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

In reviewing ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, laws are designed to serve substantial government interest when municipality can demonstrate connection between speech regulated by ordinance and secondary effects that motivated ordinance's adoption. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

First Amendment does not require city, before enacting ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, to conduct new secondary effects studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to problem that city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation

Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City adequately established that public benefits flowing from city's adult entertainment business ordinance, which required establishments without on-premises viewing to close from midnight to 10:00 a.m. Monday through Saturday and all day on Sunday, justified ordinance without unjustified, substantial decrease in freedom of speech, where city presented evidence that adult businesses without on-premises viewing caused secondary effects similar to those caused by adult businesses offering such activities, that approximately 20% of all violent/person crimes during pre-enforcement period occurred at adult bookstore addresses, even though bookstores represented only 3% of addresses within 500 foot circles, that overall violent/person crime decreased at adult bookstores while ordinance was in force, that pre-enforcement declines in sales were in number of cases greater than declines in sales during enforcement period, and that closure did not prevent any patron from accessing speech during enforcement period. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1040 J. Michael Murray, Lorraine R. Baumgardner, Steven D. Shafron, Berkman Gordon Murray & Devan, Cleveland, OH, Richard Kammen, Gilroy, Kammen & Hill, Indianapolis, IN, for Plaintiffs.

Alexander Phillip Will, Richard G. McDermott, Office of Corporation Counsel, Indianapolis, IN, Bryan A. Dykes, Scott D. Bergthold, Stephen S. Duggins, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, PLLC, Chattanooga, TN, for Defendant.

ORDER UPHOLDING CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CHAPTER 807 OF THE REVISED CODE OF THE CONSOLIDATED CITY AND COUNTY OF INDIANAPOLIS

SARAH EVANS BARKER, District Judge.

This matter was tried to the Court on October 17–19, 2012, presenting the constitutional issues arising under the First and Fourteenth Amendments relating to Chapter 807 of the Revised Code of the Consolidated City and County of Indianapolis ("City–County Code"), which ordinance governs the licensing and regulation of adult entertainment establishments. Plaintiffs, Annex Books, Inc., New Flicks, Inc. d/b/a New Flicks, Lafayette Video & News, Inc., d/b/a Lafayette Video & News, Keystone Video & Newsstand, Inc., d/b/a Keystone Video, and Southern Nights, Inc., are adult bookstores within the meaning 1041 of Ordinance 87,2003 ("the Ordinance"). [1]

1 During the period of time when the Ordinance was not being enforced, Plaintiff New Flicks ceased its business operations and has not reopened. Thus, the parties have agreed that any injunctive relief is moot as to New Flicks.

This is not our first encounter with these issues. Indeed, this litigation has a long history before our court as well as the Court of Appeals. When this cause of action was originally filed, Plaintiffs sought declaratory and injunctive relief prohibiting the enforcement of Chapter 807, as amended, which they contended violated their rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. On November 3, 2003, after a hearing, the Court preliminarily enjoined enforcement of the Ordinance pending "further order of the Court or a final resolution of the merits of the case." Docket No. 51, at 9. Defendant, the City of Indianapolis ("the City"), subsequently agreed to refrain from enforcing the Ordinance until a final decision on the merits was rendered. On April 1, 2005, the Court entered final judgment in favor of the City holding that enforcement of Chapter 807 did not violate Plaintiffs' constitutional rights.

Plaintiffs appealed that ruling and, on September 3, 2009, the Seventh Circuit affirmed the Court's judgment regarding the licensing procedure set out in the Ordinance, but reversed and remanded the case for an evidentiary hearing on the First Amendment issues. The mandate from the Seventh Circuit was issued on November 3, 2009. On remand, Plaintiffs requested and were granted leave to file a second amended complaint to include a claim for damages. On November 6, 2009, Plaintiffs also filed a motion for preliminary injunction requesting that the Court enjoin the City from enforcing Chapter 807 until a final decision could be reached on the merits. On December 2, 2009, 673 F.Supp.2d 750 (S.D.Ind.2009), after a hearing during which both sides presented evidence and argument, the Court granted Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief, enjoining the City from enforcing Chapter 807 until further order of the Court. That decision was affirmed by the Seventh Circuit on October 1, 2010, 624 F.3d 368 (7th Cir.2010).

The trial having now been completed, during which the Court received and considered documentary and testimonial evidence as well as heard the parties' oral arguments, we now hold that the Ordinance is valid under the First Amendment and may be enforced according to its terms.

Ordinance 87,2003 was approved by the City–County Council on October 6, 2003, and signed into law on October 14, 2003. Chapter 807 of the City–County Code regulates adult entertainment establishments, and, under the definitions set out in § 807–103, each of the plaintiffs qualifies as an "adult bookstore." Specifically, the Ordinance defines an adult bookstore as "an establishment having at least twenty-five percent (25%) of its (1) retail floor space used for the display of adult products; or (2) stock in trade consisting of adult products; or (3) weekly revenue derived from adult products."

Among other things, the Ordinance requires that Plaintiffs be licensed and that they close their store operations between midnight and 10 a.m. six days a week and remain closed all day on Sundays. The Ordinance also requires businesses with video booths to comply with section 807–301(h), which includes booth configuration, employee monitoring, and minimum lighting requirements. [2] Each of the Plaintiffs 1042 offers adult oriented videos for sale, rental or display, as well as magazines and other materials. Annex Books is the only plaintiff that offers coin operated machines allowing its patrons to view sexually oriented videos in booths on the store's premises. The Ordinance was in effect between June 1, 2005 and December 2, 2009, prior to our issuance of the preliminary injunction.

2 Plaintiffs are not challenging the provisions addressing booth configuration, employee monitoring, and lighting requirements.

[1] [2] [3] Because the Ordinance is directed toward regulating secondary effects, it need survive only intermediate scrutiny. See City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (Kennedy, J. concurring). A law satisfies the intermediate scrutiny test so long as it is "designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and [does] not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728. "Laws are designed to serve a substantial government interest when the 'municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance.' " Andy's Restaurant & Lounge, Inc. v. City of Gary, 466 F.3d 550, 555 (7th Cir.2006) (quoting R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford, 361 F.3d 402, 408 (7th Cir.2004)). To assess the sufficiency of this connection, courts must "examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 50–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). "The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925.

In its decision remanding the case for an evidentiary hearing on the substantive First Amendment issues, the Seventh Circuit held that in order for the revised Ordinance to pass constitutional muster, the City must present evidence that adult book or video stores without live entertainment or private booths, open after midnight, or on Sunday, cause adverse secondary effects sufficiently severe to justify the curtailment of speech which results from the City's post–2003 system of regulation. See Annex Books, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, Ind., 581 F.3d 460, 465–67 (7th Cir.2009) ("Annex Books I "). Thus, the City must establish: first, that adult entertainment businesses lacking facilities for on-premise viewing create the same secondary effects as establishments providing those services, and second, that the revised Ordinance requiring Plaintiffs to close from midnight to 10:00 a.m. Monday through Saturday and all day on Sunday "has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Id. at 465 (quoting Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring)).

[4] In determining whether the City has met its burden as elucidated by the Seventh Circuit in Annex Books I, we again rely heavily on the parties' respective analyses of the crime statistics in Indianapolis before and after enforcement of the revised Ordinance. [3] We relied on a 1043 portion of these same statistics in our December 2, 2009 Order granting Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction. However, we made clear in that ruling that the evidence and argument presented by the parties was only preliminary and that the statistical evidence would need further development at the full evidentiary hearing. Having now had the opportunity to review and evaluate the fully developed evidence, including the proffered statistical analyses, we hold for the reasons detailed below that the City has succeeded in making the necessary showing detailed in Annex Books I to satisfy the Constitutional requirements.

3 Much of the other evidence in the record before us, including a number of studies on which the City relied to justify the adoption of revised Chapter 807 and which it continues to cite in this litigation in support of the revised ordinance, was criticized by the Seventh Circuit in Annex Books I. Judge Easterbrook, writing for the panel, highlighted various deficiencies in those studies. He noted, for example, that none of the studies specifically dealt with the type of ordinance at issue here, to wit, an hours of operation restriction, nor did any of the studies assess the effects of stores that sell as little as 25% adult products, such as the businesses covered under the City's revised ordinance. Moreover, many of the studies concerned adult businesses that offer on-premise viewing booths, live shows, or both, while only one of the Plaintiffs in this lawsuit, to wit, Annex Books, offers such entertainment. Accordingly, the weight we accord these studies is greatly diminished in the Court's current analysis.

First, consistent with the first prong of the test elucidated in Annex Books I, we find that the City has presented sufficient evidence to establish a reasonable basis for its legislative finding that adult businesses without on-premises viewing cause secondary effects similar to those caused by adult businesses offering such activities. As noted above, in reaching this conclusion, we rely heavily on the comparative crime statistics in Indianapolis before and after the Ordinance went into effect. Both parties' experts testified regarding the advantages associated with the use of before and after studies in which crime data in the vicinity of a sexually oriented business is collected for a time period before and after some change in its operation as a method of assessing secondary effects. In such a study, the sexually oriented business serves as its own control, eliminating many of the challenges associated with finding an area sufficiently similar to the area surrounding the sexually oriented business on characteristics known to be associated with crime to act as a control.

Here, the City studied Uniform Crime Reporting Part I crimes ("UCR Part I crimes")[4] that occurred within 500 feet of Plaintiffs' businesses during the pre-enforcement and enforcement periods.[5] This data, collected in a 2009 study ("the 2009 data"),[6] is the same data analyzed in our December 2, 2009 Order granting Plaintiffs' 1044 request for a preliminary injunction. In that Order, while noting the early juncture at which we were making our decision, we held that the City had failed to meet its burden as explicated in Annex Books I because, although there was statistical evidence from that 2009 study showing that violent/person crime (as opposed to property crime) had decreased while the Ordinance was in effect, the actual numbers were too small to be considered statistically significant so as to justify the reduction in speech effected by the Ordinance. However, having now had the benefit of further development and explanation of the data by the parties' experts at the evidentiary hearing, we understand the data more fully. The expert testimony proffered at the hearing highlighted the importance of shifting our focus from simply the raw numbers of crimes to include an analysis of the underlying nature of those crimes as a way of putting the numbers in context.

4 The FBI has administered the Uniform Crime Reporting Program since 1930. There are eight crimes classified as Part I crimes within the UCR system, including the violent/person crimes of murder and nonnegligent manslaughter, forcible rape, robbery, and aggravated assault, and the property crimes of burglary, larceny-theft, and motor vehicle theft. Arson was subsequently added as the eighth Part I offense category.

5 The pre-enforcement period ran from April 2002 through May 2005 (38 months) and the enforcement period was June 2005 through March 2008 (34 months). At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. Linz opined that the four month difference between the two time periods would likely affect no more than a few crimes and the record supports this opinion. See Exh. P at 2, 12 (showing that only two crimes occurred at Plaintiffs' addresses between April and July 2008, neither of which occurred during the hours regulated by the Ordinance). Accordingly, this discrepancy is not material to our analysis.

6 Plaintiff Southern Nights was included in all of the parties' original filings and remains listed on the Court's docket as a plaintiff in this litigation. However, it is not included in the 2009 data.

At the evidentiary hearing, the City provided substantially more detail underlying the 2009 data. Specifically, the City reviewed the police reports to identify the type of Part I crime reflected in the 2009 data as well as the specific address(es) at which each crime occurred. On this basis, the City ranked the addresses within each 500 foot circle surrounding Plaintiffs' bookstores [7] according to the number of crimes that occurred at each of the addresses within that area. The evidence shows that, in the pre-enforcement period, a total of 107 violent/person crimes occurred at all addresses within the 500–foot circles surrounding Plaintiffs' locations, 21 of which occurred at the five adult bookstore addresses (the four plaintiffs and another adult bookstore, Video Gallery). Thus, approximately 20% of all violent/person crimes during the pre-enforcement period occurred at the adult bookstore addresses, even though the five adult bookstores represent only 3% of the 152 total addresses within the 500 foot circles that had at least one UCR Part I crime during the period. Of those 21 violent/person crimes, 18 were armed robberies, and those 18 armed robberies at the adult bookstore addresses account for 46% of the total number (39) of armed robberies that occurred during the pre-enforcement period in all of the 500–foot circles. See Exh. M–4; Exh. M–5; and Exh. M–6.

[7] According to Dr. McCleary's testimony, the 500 foot circumference (which is tantamount to an average city block) is a commonly used distance in secondary effects studies for both practical and empirical reasons.

Both parties' experts have endorsed and employed the use of this hotspot analysis, to wit, the ranking of addresses in a particular area based on crimes occurring at them. They agree that this is a recognized method of assessing secondary effects. Here, during the pre-enforcement period, Lafayette Video & News was ranked first in its buffer area for both total UCR crimes as well as armed robberies. In its area, New Flicks Video was third for total UCR crimes and first in armed robberies. Keystone Video & Newsstand was second in its circle behind the CVS Pharmacy in both total UCR crimes and armed robberies. Plaintiff Annex Books and another adult store, Video Galley, are located within the same 500–foot circle, and within that area, Annex Books and Video Gallery were third and fifth, respectively, in total UCR crimes and ranked first and second in armed robberies. See Exh. M–6. These rankings are consistent with Dr. McCleary's conclusion that adult bookstores are hotspots for serious crime, including armed robberies. See Exh. V at 2 (McCleary 2004 expert report: "The adverse secondary effects of [sexually oriented 1045 businesses] ordinarily involve robbery,....").

The evidence also established that, during the period of time when the Ordinance was being enforced, overall violent/person crime, including the number of armed robberies, decreased at the adult bookstores, with the greatest decreases in total UCR Part I crimes (over 50%) coming during the regulated hours. See Exh. M–4; Exh. M–5; Exh. M–6. Specifically, total UCR Part I crimes at Plaintiffs' and Video Gallery's addresses decreased during the overnight hours (midnight to 10 a.m.) from 12 crimes pre-enforcement to 5 crimes during the enforcement period and, on Sundays, from 8 crimes pre-enforcement to 3 crimes after. Exh. M–4. Total armed robberies committed at the adult bookstores during the regulated hours (overnight hours and Sundays combined) decreased from 8 during the period before the Ordinance was enforced to 0 during enforcement. See Exh. M–5. During the period of enforcement, violent/person crime as a whole decreased approximately 44% during the overnight hours within the 500 foot circles surrounding the bookstores, while violent/person crime in the balance of the IPD District rose almost 12% during that same time period. See Exh. 7A.

To support their claims, Plaintiffs focus on the fact that, within the 500–feet circles surrounding Plaintiffs' premises, property crime and total UCR Part I crime rates as well as violent/person crime on Sundays all increased during the enforcement period. Specifically, property crime increased by: 16% overall; 32% during the overnight hours; and 20% on Sundays. Exh. 7. Overall UCR Part I crimes also increased in those areas by: 9% overall; 12% during the overnight hours; and 37% on Sundays. Id. Finally, Plaintiffs highlight that, although the violent/person crime rate decreased significantly in the 500–foot circles both overall as well as specifically during the overnight hours as described above, it increased from 8 to 19 crimes (138%) on Sundays during the enforcement period in the 500–foot circles surrounding Plaintiffs' locations. Id. Based on the overall testimony and evidence presented at trial, however, we are not persuaded that this excerpted data support a reliable conclusion.

The trial testimony establishes that focusing on violent/person crime both in the 500–foot circles surrounding Plaintiffs' bookstores, and even more narrowly, on violent/person crime occurring at the Plaintiffs' specific addresses, as opposed to total crime or property crime in this context is, for a number of reasons, more reasonable. First, one of the main challenges related to the assessment of secondary effects identified by the experts is the difficulty associated with accurately determining the time and exact location at which individual crimes occur in order to collect reliable data. Many property crimes, for example, cannot be reported in detail because the details are unknown (e.g. often property crimes like break-ins occur when the victim is away from his or her home or vehicle so the victim is unable to pinpoint with precision when the crime occurred). In contrast, because violent/person crimes involve a witness, usually the victim, the details of such crimes are generally more accurately reported, including the specific act that occurred as well as the time and location of the crime. Moreover, the City's expert, Dr. Richard McCleary, testified that relying on property crime rates in assessing secondary effects can be problematic because the property crime category is overwhelmed with larceny, and yet there are very few larcenies 1046 involved in secondary effects. [8] Dr. McCleary also testified that property crimes occur much more frequently than violent/person crime; thus, fluctuations in property crime can have a disproportionate effect on the total crime rate as well.

[8] Consistent with Dr. McCleary's opinion, the evidence shows that a significant percentage of the property crimes reflected in the 2009 data consist of shoplifting and larcenies occurring at Menards. See Exh. M–6.

Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Daniel Linz, among other witnesses, testified that there can be inaccuracies in coding crimes to particular locations when, as is true here, the 500–foot area around a sexually oriented business includes a large retail establishment or a strip mall or shopping center. Some large businesses have multiple addresses, which can lead to police reporting errors. Retail establishments located within strip malls and shopping centers may also affect the reliability of the data because it is common for the strip mall or shopping center to have a single address while the individual establishments and stores have suite numbers. If a police officer does not know the respective suite number of a particular establishment or store, the officer may assign a crime incident to an address belonging to the entire shopping center rather than the particular store at which the crime actually occurred, which clearly might skew the data. Dr. Linz further testified that large parking lots that adjoin such businesses might also affect data, especially property crime numbers because property crimes happen with increased frequency at such locations. Another reliability issue noted by the experts arises when, as the experts testified here, a significant number of crimes are coded to intersections rather than specific addresses because in those cases, the exact location of the crime is not always discernible. The data collecting difficulties referenced here, while carefully considered by us, have not undermined our overall conclusion, however.

We found the testimony of both parties' experts who opined that one way to minimize such potential reliability issues is to review the underlying police reports, rather than relying merely on the machine-readable data, helpful and enlightening. In his testimony, Dr. Linz agreed that such an approach yields a more accurate assessment of the actual relationship between the adult bookstores and the offenses that occurred within the 500 foot circles. [9] In both his expert report and in his testimony, Dr. McCleary explained that he had identified numerous reliability issues associated with much of the machine-readable data he had received from Indianapolis, making it difficult to render opinions based on that data. However, he testified that manually reading a small sample of the police reports underlying the machine-readable data is a feasible way to collect reliable information. Both Lynn Phelps, the City's UCR coding specialist, and Jean Ritsema, the City's crime data facilitator, also testified regarding various difficulties inherent in crime-data collection and emphasized the importance of reading the underlying police reports in order to obtain reliable information about crime in Indianapolis.

[9] Dr. Linz himself used this method in his studies in Seattle, Richmond, and Rancho Cordova, California.

As noted previously, the City used this method endorsed by the experts, namely, conducting a review of the underlying police reports, in order to create the detailed exhibits it submitted during the evidentiary hearing, which distinguished between the crimes committed at the bookstore addresses and the other addresses within the 500–foot circles and ranked those addresses 1047 within the 500–foot circles by number of crimes. The data contained in the supplemental exhibits presented by the City comprises the only evidence reflecting the underlying police reports. This more detailed and nuanced data shows that, during the period of time when the Ordinance was being enforced, the greatest decreases in total UCR Part I crimes (over 50%) occurred during the regulated hours, and overall violent/person crime, including the number of armed robberies, also decreased at the adult bookstores during the enforcement period. Moreover, although it is true as Plaintiffs point out that violent/person crime on Sundays increased significantly during the enforcement period in the 500–foot circles surrounding the adult bookstores, when the focus is turned specifically on the adult bookstore addresses, the data reveals that total UCR Part I crime decreased by over 50% (from 8 incidents pre-enforcement to 3 after) on Sundays at the adult bookstores themselves, and violent/person crime incidents at the adult bookstores on Sundays decreased from 3 incidents to 0. See Exh. M–4; Exh. M–5.

As a final matter, the evidence establishes that violent/person crimes occur less frequently and are generally more serious than property crimes. For example, though armed robbery is a very rare crime relative to other offenses, it is extremely dangerous, sometimes even resulting in homicide.[10] Thus, while these raw numbers as such appear small, the City nevertheless has a clear and significant interest in reducing incidences of serious crimes such as armed robbery. The testimony established that, merely because the numbers are small, they are not necessarily insignificant. For example, Dr. McCleary testified that statistically speaking a randomly chosen hypothetical person in Indianapolis would have to wait 245 years before being a victim of an armed robbery. He further testified that, if an address or intersection in Indianapolis were chosen at random, one would have to wait approximately 99.1 years before an armed robbery occurred there. However, during the approximately six year period on which the summary of 2009 data is based, 26 armed robberies at the five adult bookstores (four Plaintiffs and Video Gallery) occurred. Thus, because armed robberies on the whole occur so infrequently, it is clear that the numbers attributable to the adult bookstores are in fact quite significant. This conclusion is consistent with Dr. McCleary's view that these locations, even those without live entertainment are hotspots for armed robbery.[11]

10 In 1997, before the adoption of the ordinance, an individual was shot and killed during the commission of an armed robbery at Plaintiff Lafayette Video & News.

11 Although Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Daniel Linz, testified that he would not consider Plaintiffs' businesses to be hotspots for crime because the raw numbers reflected in the 2009 data were de minimis, he did concede that, in determining whether a particular address was a hotspot, the type of crimes underlying the numbers would be information that would factor into his decision. He went on to testify that, even if a particular address would not be a hotspot for crime in general because the crime numbers were too small, it would still be possible for that location to be a hotspot for a particular type of crime.

Our conclusion is further buttressed by an examination of evidence relating to areas outside of Indianapolis. As Judge Easterbrook noted in Annex Books I, the City is not required to use "local" evidence to show that adult businesses without on-premise viewing cause similar secondary effects as businesses that do offer such services. Apparently relying on that guidance, the City introduced an article co-authored by its expert, Dr. McCleary, 1048 which, based on his research, including his study conducted in Sioux City, Iowa, establishes a link between adult bookstores without live entertainment or private viewing and secondary effects crimes. Richard McCleary & Alan C. Weinstein, Do "Off–Site" Adult Businesses Have Secondary Effects? Legal Doctrine, Social Theory, and Empirical Evidence, 31 Law & Policy 217–35 (2009) ("McCleary Article"). In the McCleary Article, the authors theorize that: "To the extent that on-site and off-site adult bookstores attract high-value targets from wide catchment areas, both business types are expected to attract predators to their neighborhoods, thereby generating ambient victimization risk." Id. at 223. In support of that conclusion, the authors cited to a Sioux City case study, which showed that crime rose 190% in the area within 500 feet of a new off-site viewing adult bookstore, while crime in a comparable control area rose only 25% during the same period. Id. at 223–25. The study also revealed that the most significant increase in crime occurred during the store's "overnight shift" from 8:00 p.m. to 3:59 a.m. Id. at 227–28.

The data in the McCleary Article also address some of the concerns expressed by Judge Easterbrook regarding the evidence initially relied upon by the City in enacting the Ordinance. Unlike those studies, the Sioux City study focused on an adult bookstore without live entertainment and, although the statute at issue there was not an hours of operation ordinance, the study did include a breakdown of crime statistics for daytime versus overnight hours. At the evidentiary hearing, Dr. McCleary testified that not only did crime increase after the adult bookstore opened in Sioux City, but the character of the crimes observed changed as well, such that, before the store opened, there were no incidences of crimes where life was at risk, but, after it opened, more serious crimes began to occur. Although this evidence is not by itself determinative of our decision here, the data from Indianapolis coupled with the Sioux City case study are highly persuasive as well as probative in establishing that adult bookstores without live entertainment cause similar secondary effects as adult businesses that do provide live viewing booths. [12]

12 In our December 2, 2009 Order granting Plaintiffs' request for a preliminary injunction, we noted that Dr. McCleary's Sioux City study had been heavily criticized in Dr. John's Inc. v. City of Sioux City, 438 F.Supp.2d 1005 (N.D.Iowa 2006), where Dr. McCleary's data was originally submitted in support of Sioux City's regulation of an adult bookstore. However, in response to the court's criticisms, Dr. McCleary supplemented the data, using larger data sets and evaluating crimes within 500 feet of the adult bookstore instead of fifty feet to address the concerns raised by the court in Dr. John's. Because the conclusions contained in the McCleary Article are now buttressed by the expanded data, the prior criticisms of the study carry less weight in our analysis.

Having concluded that the City has shown a reasonable basis for its finding that adult bookstores without live entertainment create similar secondary effects as those with such offerings, and that when the Ordinance was in effect those secondary effects were reduced to some degree, we now turn to the issue of whether the reduction in crime attributable to the Ordinance is sufficient to justify the corresponding reduction in speech. This is neither an easy nor a straightforward determination. As Judge Easterbrook recognized in Annex Books I: "[B]ecause crime and speech cannot be reduced to a common metric, a direct comparison (how much speech should be sacrificed to achieve how much reduction in crime?) is difficult if not impossible." 581 F.3d at 465–66. However, in an effort to make such a calculation in a way that embraces a 1049 rigorous analysis of the evidence presented by the parties, while affording the City "the benefit of the doubt," (id. at 466), we hold that the City has shown that the public benefits flowing from the Ordinance are sufficient to justify the regulation without an unjustified, substantial decrease in freedom of speech.

Plaintiffs attempted to correlate a decline in sales with a decline in speech, but the evidence showed that sales at the stores were declining before enforcement of the Ordinance, and, in fact the pre-enforcement declines in sales were in a number of cases greater than the declines in sales during the enforcement period. Moreover, as the Supreme Court recognized in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), although it is often commercial distributors of speech who are in a position to assert the kind of claims asserted here, the First Amendment's concern is not a seller's access to profits, but rather "the central First Amendment concern remains the need to maintain free access of the public to the expression." Id. at 77, 96 S.Ct. 2440.

Here, no evidence was introduced showing that any book, film, video or magazine was taken off of the shelves or made unavailable to a patron as a result of the Ordinance. Nor was there evidence that any patron was unable to access speech during the enforcement period because he or she could visit the stores only on Sundays or between the hours of midnight and 10:00 a.m. Additionally we note, and the parties have stipulated, that, although adult bookstores are currently free to operate twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, none of Plaintiffs' stores actually do so. According to the parties' stipulation, Keystone and Annex Books are open 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 a.m., seven days a week. Lafayette is open 10:00 a.m. to midnight, Monday through Thursday as well as on Sunday. On Friday and Saturday nights, Lafayette's hours are 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 a.m. New Flicks went out of business during the time period when the Ordinance was not being enforced and it has not reopened.

Given these facts, there is no persuasive support for a conclusion that the opportunity to purvey expressive materials of the nature sold at Plaintiffs' businesses is curtailed to a significant degree by the Ordinance. We are persuaded that the remaining hours of opportunity for an unfettered dissemination of speech under the Ordinance are sufficient to satisfy the First Amendment and that the Ordinance is not "substantially broader than necessary" to further the City's legitimate interest in reducing the secondary effects described above. Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). In fact, we note, similar hours restrictions have previously been upheld by the Seventh Circuit against First Amendment challenges in other analogous cases. See Andy's Restaurant, 466 F.3d at 555–56 (upholding ordinance which, among other regulations, limited operating hours of sexually oriented businesses to 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m., seven days a week); Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 846 (7th Cir.2000) (upholding a provision of an ordinance "limiting the business hours for sexually oriented businesses to be between 10 a.m. and midnight, Monday through Saturday").

For these reasons, we hold that the City has presented sufficient evidence to establish that the Ordinance satisfies the intermediate scrutiny test set out in Alameda Books and its progeny. Accordingly, we declare that the Ordinance 87,2003 is valid under the First Amendment and is thus 1050 enforceable by the City. Final judgment shall issue accordingly.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

926 F.Supp.2d 1039

740 F.3d 1136
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

ANNEX BOOKS, INC., et al., Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 13–1500.
|
Argued Jan. 15, 2014.
|
Decided Jan. 24, 2014.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Feb. 24, 2014.

Synopsis

Background: Owners of adult entertainment establishments brought action challenging constitutionality of city's adult entertainment business ordinance. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Sarah Evans Barker, J., 926 F.Supp.2d 1039, upheld ordinance. Owners appealed.

Holding: The Court of Appeals, Easterbrook, Circuit Judge, held that prevention of armed robberies at or near adult bookstores did not support closure of adult bookstores overnight.

Reversed and remanded.

West Headnotes (1)

[1] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

The prevention of armed robberies at or near adult bookstores was not a permissive regulation of the secondary effects of adult establishment that would support city ordinance which required adult bookstores to remain closed between the hours of midnight and 10 a.m. every day, and all day Sunday, under First Amendment freedom of speech protections, where there was no significant difference between the rate of robberies at or near adult bookstores and other late-night retail outlets, and the risk of robberies fell on owners and patrons of adult bookstores, who could decide for themselves what risks to run. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1137 J. Michael Murray, Attorney, Steven D. Shafron, Attorney, Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Devan, Cleveland, OH, for Plaintiff–Appellant.

Scott D. Bergthold, Attorney, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, TN, for Defendant–Appellee.

Before FLAUM, EASTERBROOK, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge.

The Supreme Court has held that state and local governments may regulate adult establishments by using time, place, and manner restrictions to reduce the secondary effects of those businesses on third parties, but may not regulate them to restrict the dissemination of speech disapproved by local residents. Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002); Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); see also, e.g., Illinois One News, Inc. v. Marshall, 477 F.3d 461, 463 (7th Cir.2007).

Indianapolis requires adult bookstores to remain closed between the hours of midnight and 10 a.m. every day, and all day Sunday. Other retail businesses are not subject to these restrictions. In earlier rounds of this litigation, Indianapolis contended that closure would curtail secondary effects, but we concluded that the evidence it offered was weak, contested in material respects, or concerned different kinds of businesses or different kinds of laws, such as minimum distances between adult outlets rather than closure. See 581 F.3d 460 (7th Cir.2009); 624 F.3d 368 (7th Cir.2010). The district court then held a trial. Indianapolis gave a single justification: fewer armed robberies at or near adult bookstores. The district court found this adequate and entered judgment for the City. 926 F.Supp.2d 1039 (S.D.Ind.2013).

The current justification is weak as a statistical matter. The City did not use a multivariate regression to control for other potentially important variables, such as the presence of late-night taverns. The change in the number of armed robberies is small; the difference is not statistically significant. The data do not show that robberies are more likely at adult bookstores than at other late-night retail outlets, such as liquor stores, pharmacies, and convenience stores, that are not subject to the closing hours imposed on bookstores. And most of the harm of armed robberies falls on the bookstores (and their patrons) rather than on strangers. The secondary-effects approach endorsed by Alameda Books and Playtime Theatres permits governments to protect persons who want nothing to do with dirty books from harms created by adult businesses; the Supreme Court has not endorsed an approach under which governments can close bookstores in 1138 order to reduce crime directed against businesses that knowingly accept the risk of being robbed, or persons who voluntarily frequent their premises. As we remarked in New Albany DVD, LLC v. New Albany, 581 F.3d 556 (7th Cir.2009), adults may decide for themselves what risks to run by the literature they choose, and cities must protect readers from robbers rather than reduce risks by closing bookstores. Cf. Virginia Board of Pharmacy v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976) (fear that readers will act unwisely does not justify restricting otherwise-lawful speech).

That the City's regulation takes the form of closure is the nub of the problem. Justice Kennedy, whose vote was essential to the disposition of Alameda Books, remarked that "a city may not regulate the secondary effects of speech by suppressing the speech itself." 535 U.S. at 445, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (opinion concurring in the judgment). Yet that's what Indianapolis has done. The benefits come from closure: shuttered shops can't be robbed at gunpoint, and they lack customers who could be mugged. If that sort of benefit were enough to justify closure, then a city could forbid adult bookstores altogether.

Indianapolis observes that customers are free to patronize stores during the hours they are allowed to be open. As the City depicts things, there is no loss to speech—anyone who wants any magazine, book, or movie can get it, eventually —and some gain in the reduction of armed robberies. With even a little gain on one side, and no loss on the other, the City maintains that it must prevail.

To test the proposition that delay in obtaining reading matter does not cause loss, we put a hypothetical at oral argument. Suppose Indianapolis were to prohibit the distribution of newspapers on Sundays. (Just newspapers: our hypothetical law differs from a general Sunday-closing statute. See McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961).) Closure could achieve multiple benefits, including a reduction in the number of traffic accidents (newspapers generate lots of traffic because trucks deliver newsprint to plants and printed papers throughout the region; home delivery carriers may drive their own cars); a reduction in robberies of paper deliverers, who may be on the street when few others are awake to protect them; and a reduction in the newspaper's carbon footprint and other pollutants. All the news (and ads) now in the Sunday paper could appear in Monday's paper, so readers would retain access, and anyone who wants up-to-the-minute news could get it on the Internet while avoiding accidents, robberies, and pollution. The lawyer representing Indianapolis was shocked at the idea, however; he proclaimed that the City could not do such a thing consistent with the first amendment.

What is the difference between preventing a newspaper from selling paper copies on Sunday (or before 10 a.m.) and preventing an adult bookstore from selling paper copies on Sunday (or before 10)? Not secondary effects: the harms to third parties caused by a newspaper likely exceed those caused by an adult bookstore. The difference lies in the content of the reading material. Indianapolis likes G-rated newspapers but not sexually oriented books, magazines, and movies. Yet neither Alameda Books nor Playtime Theatres permits units of government to stop the distribution of books because their content is objectionable, unless the material is obscene. See also, e.g., United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 130 S.Ct. 1577, 176 L.Ed.2d 435 (2010) ("crush videos" cannot be suppressed); American Booksellers Association, Inc. v. Hudnut, 771 F.2d 323 (7th Cir.1985), affirmed summarily, 475 U.S. 1001, 106 S.Ct. 1172, 89 L.Ed.2d 291 (1986) (material that is pornographic, but not obscene, cannot be suppressed). Indianapolis does not contend that any of the plaintiffs sells obscene material; it follows that objection to the plaintiffs' stock in trade cannot justify closure.

1139

The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the case is remanded with instructions to enter an injunction against enforcement of the closure ordinance.

All Citations

740 F.3d 1136

9 F.3d 1309
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Richard GRAFF, Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
CITY OF CHICAGO, an Illinois corporation, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 92–2352.
|
Argued June 2, 1993.
|
Decided Nov. 24, 1993.

News vendor brought action challenging constitutionality of city ordinance governing licensing of sidewalk newsstands. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, George W. Lindberg, J., 800 F.Supp. 576, dismissed action, and vendor appealed. Withdrawing prior opinion, 986 F.2d 1055, the Court of Appeals, Manion, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) construction and operation of newsstand on public sidewalk was mere conduct, and not expressive activity protected by the First Amendment; (2) ordinance qualified as reasonable time, place and manner restriction, even assuming that operation of newsstand involved speech; and (3) imposition of different permitting requirements on newsstand vendors and operators of sidewalk cafes did not violate vendor's equal protection rights.

Affirmed.

Flaum, Circuit Judge, concurred in judgment and filed opinion, in which Cudahy, Circuit Judge, joined.

Ripple, Circuit Judge, concurred in result and filed opinion, in which Cudahy and Ilana Diamond Rovner, Circuit Judges, joined.

Cummings, Circuit Judge, dissented and filed opinion, in which Bauer, Circuit Judge, and Fairchild, Senior Circuit Judge, joined.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Federal Courts
Preliminary injunction;temporary restraining order

Court of Appeals had jurisdiction to hear interlocutory appeal from order denying preliminary injunction, though one count of complaint remained alive in district court. 28 U.S.C.A. § 1292(a)(1).

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Streets and highways

No person has a First Amendment right to erect or maintain a structure on public way. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Streets and highways

Construction and operation of newsstand is conduct, not speech, which city may lawfully proscribe on public way consistent with First Amendment. (Per Manion, Circuit Judge with four Judges concurring, and four Judges concurring in result.) U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Vendors in general

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Newsstand ordinance that required Commissioner of Transportation to consider certain criteria in deciding whether to reissue permit for operation of newsstand on public way, including the design, materials and color scheme of newsstand, the number of publications it proposes to sell, and the size of stand relative to the number of days that it will be open, sufficiently restricted Commissioner's discretion to satisfy First Amendment concerns, notwithstanding the discretion accorded to Commissioner in deciding how many permits to reissue. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

15 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

Not all discretionary decisions implicate the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Vendors in general

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Restriction on the size of newspaper stands that could be constructed on public way, which also required that any stand allow at least six feet of clear passage and not be located within three feet of property line, was a reasonable time, place and manner restriction, which did not violate newsstand owner's First Amendment rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

18 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Vendors in general

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Newsstand ordinance which allegedly did not allow newsstands to sell videotapes or books, by allowing Commissioner of Transportation to consider the number of newspapers and periodicals sold as a significant factor in deciding whether to issue newsstand permit, was reasonable time, place and manner restriction, that did not violate newsstand owner's First Amendment rights; to the extent that ordinance discriminated against newsstand owners who desired to sell videotapes or books, municipal legislature could reasonably conclude that the purchase of such items would be more time consuming and would cause more congregating and impede flow of pedestrian traffic around newsstand. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Requirement that time, place and manner restriction be "narrowly tailored" in order to satisfy First Amendment concerns is satisfied as long as restriction promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent restriction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Federal Civil Procedure
Clear or certain nature of insufficiency

Facial challenge to the constitutionality of newsstand ordinance, as allegedly violating newsstand owner's First Amendment rights by discriminating against him merely because he wished to sell videotapes and books and publications other than newspapers and periodicals, could properly be dismissed at pleading stage, where case did not involve any disputed issues of material fact and interest that municipality raised in case were not unique or different. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Particular claims

Even in First Amendment context, plaintiff is not excused from requirement that facts as alleged must state cause of action. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Pleading

When courts have already upheld similar ordinance because of governmental interest at stake, future litigant should not be able to challenge similar governmental interests without showing some distinction at pleading stage.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Sidewalks

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Newsstand ordinance did not violate newsstand owner's First Amendment rights, by failing to provide for prompt judicial review of administrative denial of owner's application for permit to operate newsstand on public sidewalk; newsstand owner could obtain review of agency's decision by means of common-law writ of certiorari, which was in itself sufficient review. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

32 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Sidewalks

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Rational basis existed for mandating different permit requirements for sidewalk cafes and for newsstands; accordingly, differences in permit requirements did not violate newsstand owner's equal protection rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1310 Matthew J. Piers, Jonathan A. Rothstein (argued), Jennifer L. Fischer, Gessler, Flynn, Fleischmann, Hughes & Socol, Chicago, IL, for Richard Graff.

Eileen T. Pahl, Office of the Corp. Counsel, Chicago, IL, Ruth M. Moscovitch, Asst. 1311 Corp. Counsel, Bobbie McGee Gregg, Asst. U.S. Atty., Kelly R. Welsh, Asst. Corp. Counsel, Benna R. Solomon, Office of the Corp. Counsel, Appeals Div., Lawrence Rosenthal, Deputy County Counsel (argued), Deputy Corp. Counsel City of Chicago, Chicago, IL, for City of Chicago.

Jeffrey T. Kraus, William S. Ettelson, Altheimer & Gray, Chicago, IL, for amicus curiae Chicago Cent. Area Committee, Burnham Park Planning Bd., Cent. Michigan Avenue Business Assoc. and LaSalle Street Council, Inc.

Lawrence R. Levin, Damon E. Dunn, Levin & Funkhouser, Chicago, IL, for amicus curiae Chicago Sun–Times, Inc., Gannett Satellite Information Network, Inc. and Chicago Tribune Co.

Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and CUMMINGS, BAUER, CUDAHY, COFFEY, FLAUM, EASTERBROOK, RIPPLE, MANION, KANNE, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges, and FAIRCHILD, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion

MANION, Circuit Judge.

For nearly seventy years a newsstand has stood in front of the City of Chicago Cultural Center (formerly the Chicago Public Library). The plaintiff, Richard Graff, has operated his newsstand there since July 1984, when he purchased the stand for over fifty thousand dollars. This case concerns a City of Chicago municipal ordinance designed to force newsstand operators, such as Graff, to either acquire a permit or face eviction. Chicago threatened to remove Graff from his location. Rather than request a permit, Graff ultimately sought relief in the federal district court, with a facial challenge to the ordinance. The district court denied Graff's request to enjoin Chicago's proposed enforcement of the ordinance. 800 F.Supp. 576. For the following reasons, we affirm.

I. Background

From all indications Graff's predecessors had no ownership or property rights to the newsstand. Such newsstands seemed to have operated on public property by sheer acquiescence. At the time Graff purchased the newsstand, Chicago ostensibly required newsstand operators to acquire permits. We say ostensibly, because Graff asserted that then and now newsstands have operated on the public way without permits and only Graff has been targeted for eviction.

Under what we shall call the old ordinance, these permits were issued at the discretion of the commissioner of streets and sanitation, and the mayor could revoke a permit at any time. The old ordinance provided that such newsstands could only sell Chicago papers, and provided the mayor with no standards to guide his discretion. It also lacked hearing procedures to review the decisions to deny or revoke a permit. Chicago Mun.Code §§ 10–28–130 to –190. Graff attempted to apply for a permit under the old ordinance without much success, although Chicago continued to issue permits for newsstands at other locations.

In November 1990, Chicago gave Graff two months' notice to remove his newsstand from the public way. This order was later rescinded. Graff, however, had had enough. On February 20, 1991, he filed a complaint against Chicago and Mayor Daley alleging that the old ordinance violated the Commerce Clause and the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.[1] He sought injunctive relief, compensatory damages and attorneys fees. Rather than defend the old ordinance, on June 28, 1991, Chicago amended it. Chicago Mun.Code §§ 10–28–130 to –192 (1991). The defendants thereafter moved to dismiss the complaint arguing the new ordinance corrected the constitutional deficiencies that Graff had identified in his complaint. The court dismissed the case without prejudice. Rather than apply for a permit under the new ordinance, on September 11, 1991, Graff amended his complaint and attacked the new ordinance on its face. The complaint sought comprehensive relief: declaratory, preliminary and permanent injunctions, compensatory 1312 damages and attorneys fees under the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

[1] Mayor Daley was sued only in his official capacity. Graff does not appeal the district court's dismissing Mayor Daley from the case. See Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 105 S.Ct. 3099, 87 L.Ed.2d 114 (1985) (official capacity suits are essentially against the municipality).

Broadly speaking, in count one Graff alleges that Chicago's permit ordinance constitutes an unlawful prior restraint of free speech. In count two he alleges that the new ordinance violates the Equal Protection Clause because other, non-expressive uses of the public way (such as sidewalk cafes) are treated more favorably than newsstands. In count three he alleges that the old ordinance denied him equal protection of law under the Fourteenth Amendment. In 1987 Graff moved his newsstand from the east side of the Cultural Center to the west side entrance off of Randolph Street to accommodate construction of the underground Pedway Tunnel. Under count three he seeks to recoup the expenses of having had to move his newsstand and certain architectural expenses he incurred when filing his application for a permit under the old ordinance.

Again, Chicago moved to dismiss. Before the court ruled on the motion, on May 14, 1992, Chicago again notified Graff that it intended to remove his newsstand in fifteen days. Chicago had consistently objected to the size of the newsstand and had requested that it be built out of steel rather than wood. Graff filed an "Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and for Preliminary Injunction." The motion had the effect of quickly forcing the court's hand. On May 28, 1992, the court dismissed counts one and two and denied injunctive relief entirely.

The court initially found that the complaint could be read to raise an as-applied and a facial challenge to the new ordinance. But because Graff had not applied for a permit under the new ordinance, the court concluded that only a facial challenge was before it. As to count one, the court concluded that the new ordinance was content-neutral and did not raise the threat of self-censorship as enunciated in City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer, 486 U.S. 750, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988). The court also concluded that the new ordinance contained reasonable time, place and manner restrictions necessary to accommodate the multiple uses of the public way, and contained adequate procedural safeguards. As to count two, the court ruled that Chicago could establish size limitations for newsstands, even though it did not do the same for sidewalk cafes. The court ruled that the municipal code did not support Graff's allegation that the landmark commission treated newsstands differently than other structures that visibly affected landmark property. Because Graff could not show a substantial likelihood of success on the merits, the district court denied Graff's motions for injunctive relief. Count three dealing with the old ordinance remains alive in the district court.

While Graff appealed the dismissal of counts one and two, he applied for a permit to operate two newsstands in front of the Cultural Center. Because of the location, Graff had to first seek permission from the Commission on Chicago Historical and Architectural Landmarks. That application was denied on August 13, 1992, because the newsstands would compromise the architectural integrity of the adjoining landmark building. On August 14, 1992, Chicago again notified Graff that he had fifteen days to remove his newsstand. Graff sought an injunction in this court, which we promptly dismissed. We directed him to file the matter in the district court pursuant to Fed.R.App.P. 8(a). After the district court denied him relief, on September 16, 1992, we granted Graff's motion and enjoined Chicago from destroying the newsstand pending appeal.

On February 8, 1993, after oral argument but before decision, Chicago moved to dissolve the injunction because of planned rehabilitation of the Cultural Center. Chicago had hoped to replace the handicap access ramp, and clean and remodel the exterior stonework. On February 16, 1993 a panel of this court issued its opinion reversing the district court because the new ordinance failed to provide sufficient judicial oversight, in violation of the First Amendment as espoused in FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 228, 110 S.Ct. 596, 606, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990). See Graff v. City of Chicago, 986 F.2d 1055 (7th Cir.1993). Chicago's motion to dissolve the injunction was denied as moot. On April 15, 1993, this court granted Chicago's petition for rehearing en 1313 banc and vacated the panel opinion. After en banc review, we now affirm.

II. Jurisdiction

[1] In his complaint, Graff requested a preliminary injunction. He did not press the district court for an early hearing apparently because Chicago had not yet moved the bulldozers in for the kill. On May 14, 1992, however, Chicago notified Graff that he had fifteen days to vacate. A week later Graff filed an "Emergency Motion for Temporary Restraining Order and for Preliminary Injunction." Within the week the court dismissed counts one and two, and denied all injunctive motions as moot. In his notice of appeal, Graff sought review of the district court's order "denying the plaintiff's motion for a temporary restraining order, and granting, in part, defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's first amended complaint."

Initially, the City argues that we lack jurisdiction to hear this appeal because one count remains alive in the district court, and therefore, final judgment has not been entered. However, 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1) grants us jurisdiction to hear certain interlocutory appeals, as when the district court refuses to enter an injunction. Here, the district court did just that; it refused to enter an injunction in favor of Graff by dismissing counts one and two of the complaint. Holmes v. Fisher, 854 F.2d 229, 230 (7th Cir.1988). It does not matter that Graff also sought review of the denial of his temporary restraining order (which is not yet appealable). See Geneva Assurance Syndicate, Inc. v. Medical Emergency Servs. Ass'n, 964 F.2d 599, 600 (7th Cir.1992) (per curiam). Therefore, we have jurisdiction to review the district court's refusal to enter an injunction and whether the district court properly dismissed counts one and two.

III. Analysis

This case essentially involves two interdependent questions: whether the district court should have enjoined Chicago from removing Graff's newsstand and whether Chicago's newsstand ordinance is constitutional. We conclude that the statute is constitutional. Also, the district court acted properly in refusing to enter a preliminary injunction and in dismissing counts one and two. Graff attempts to have Chicago's newsstand ordinance declared unconstitutional in the hope that his newsstand stays put. However, without the newsstand ordinance, Graff still has no right to operate his newsstand on public property. Contrary to Graff's contentions about speech, this case involves a structure. Graff has no First Amendment right to build a structure on public property. The district court also acted properly in dismissing Graff's challenges to the new ordinance. The ordinance does not allow Chicago the opportunity to grant or deny newsstand permits because of the personal or institutional views of a government official. To the extent that the ordinance restricts the types of publications sold from a newsstand, the restrictions are reasonable. The ordinance contains reasonable time, place and manner restrictions, justified without reference to speech content, and leaves open alternative avenues to communicate the same information. We also conclude that the ordinance contains sufficient judicial review provisions and passes muster under Equal Protection analysis.

A. Newsstand Structure

1.

Chicago has passed numerous ordinances attempting to deal with the myriad of problems that arise on its public way, from carnivals to snow removal. Chicago Mun.Code §§ 10–28–010 to –800. Chicago asserts that this ordinance prohibits all vendors from building structures on the public way; newspaper vendors can erect a structure only after obtaining a permit. As a general starting point, unless another ordinance specifically authorizes otherwise, "no person shall erect or place any building, structure, or other stationary object, in whole or in part, upon any public way or other public ground within the city." Id. at –040. There are exceptions. "It shall be unlawful for any person to erect, place or maintain in, upon or over any public way or other public place in the city, any [stand] ... for the display or sale of goods, wares or merchandise ... unless a permit for the same shall be obtained from the superintendent of compensa 1314 tion...." Id. at –050. Specifically for newspaper vendors,

> It shall be unlawful for any person to erect, locate, construct or maintain any newspaper stand on the public way or any other unenclosed property owned or controlled by the city without obtaining a permit therefor from the commissioner of transportation as hereinafter provided.

Id. –130. In this case the parties have focused their arguments in the district court and on appeal on the constitutionality of Chicago's newsstand permit ordinance, id. at –130 to –196. Graff sought an injunction to prevent Chicago from removing his newsstand under the supposition that if the permit ordinance were declared unconstitutional, his newsstand should stay. But even without the challenged newsstand ordinance, Graff still has no right to occupy the public sidewalk; that is, unless he has a constitutional right to build or maintain a newsstand on public property. If the ordinance goes down (along with the availability of a permit) the newsstand goes down as well. As a preliminary matter, then, we must examine whether he has an independent constitutional right to erect his newsstand on the public sidewalk.

In Lakewood the city had "absolutely prohibited the private placement of any structure on public property." 486 U.S. at 753, 108 S.Ct. at 2142. The district court found that this prohibition violated the First Amendment as applied to newsracks. The city, however, did not appeal; rather, it enacted ordinances that permitted newsracks under certain conditions. The Supreme Court concluded that the new ordinances placed too much discretion with the city officials, thus rendering the ordinances unconstitutional. The Court did not reach the question of whether "a city may constitutionally prohibit the placement of newsracks on public property." Id. at 762 n. 7, 108 S.Ct. at 2147 n. 7. Today, with regard to newsstands, we reach that question.

[2] At the outset we note that no person has a constitutional right to erect or maintain a structure on the public way. In Lubavitch Chabad House, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 917 F.2d 341 (7th Cir.1990), the City had decorated O'Hare Airport with Christmas trees and other ornaments; persons desiring to display religious symbols were allowed to lease an area of the airport. The Lubavitch Chabad House, however, did not want to pay. The organization sought to display a free standing Chanukah menorah in one of the public areas. We held that the ordinance did not involve any form of constitutionally protected speech. Id. at 347. There is no > private constitutional right to erect a structure on public property. If there were, our traditional public forums, such as our public parks, would be cluttered with all manner of structures. Public parks are certainly quintessential public forums where free speech is protected, but the Constitution neither provides, nor has it ever been construed to > mandate, that any person or group be allowed to erect structures at will.

Id.; accord Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 813–15, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2133–34, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984).

Two years after we decided Lubavitch, the Supreme Court ruled that an airport was not considered a traditional public forum. The Lubavitch rule nevertheless stands that even in a public forum there is no constitutional right to erect a structure. 917 F.2d at 347. The structure of a Chanukah menorah deserves no less protection than the structure of a newsstand. The building of a newsstand is simply not a form of constitutionally protected expression. Thus Lubavitch is dispositive of Graff's request for an injunction. Requiring a permit for the structure is not a prior restraint on speech. While public forums certainly provide places where people have a right to express their views through handbills, literature and the spoken word, Jamison v. Texas, 318 U.S. 413, 416, 63 S.Ct. 669, 671, 87 L.Ed. 869 (1943), they do not have the right to erect a newsstand, in this case on a public sidewalk. Without an ordinance and the permit it requires, newsstands and other structures have no protection from the city's bulldozer.

2.

Lubavitch involved a structure used to advance speech and religion. Graff nevertheless 1315 maintains that Supreme Court precedent entitles structures for newspaper distribution to constitutional protection. In Lakewood a newspaper challenged a city ordinance that allowed the mayor to grant or deny permits to publishers to place their newsracks on public property. The mayor had to state specific reasons if he denied the application; in granting a permit, the mayor could add such terms and conditions he deemed reasonable and necessary. The newspaper elected not to apply for a permit, instead bringing a facial challenge to the ordinance. 486 U.S. at 754, 108 S.Ct. at 2142.

> [A] facial challenge lies whenever a licensing law gives a government official or agency substantial power to discriminate based on the content or viewpoint of speech by suppressing disfavored speech or disliked speakers.... The law must have a close enough nexus to expression, or to conduct commonly associated with expression, to pose a real and substantial threat of the identified censorship risks.

Id. at 759, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. The Court (in a four to three decision) found that the First Amendment was implicated because the specific ordinance involved newspapers and required them to renew their newsrack licenses annually. The Court saw the printing and circulation of newspapers as "conduct commonly associated with expression" and the periodic licensing scheme as closer to a regulation that allows the government to view actual speech content before issuing a permit.

Graff argues that newsracks and newsstands should receive identical First Amendment protection. But Lakewood does not so easily bridge the gap between newsracks and newsstands. They are significantly different methods of distribution and we must assess them on standards uniquely suited to each. See Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 557, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1245, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975) ("Each medium of expression, of course, must be assessed for First Amendment purposes by standards suited to it, for each may present its own problems") (citations omitted).

[3] Newsstands are large, permanent-type structures. [2] They are constructed, and once in place they are not easily moved. Newsstands do not present one viewpoint; rather they supply many and varying editorial opinions. Newsstands shelter a business operator and his operation; they do not merely dispense or hand deliver newspapers. [3] Newsstands also are more likely to obstruct the views of pedestrians and automobile drivers. In short, newsstands compared to newsracks are much larger, more permanent structures that occupy a significant portion of limited sidewalk space. [4] Thus, building and operating a newsstand is conduct, not speech, which the City can lawfully proscribe:

2 In Lakewood the newspaper publisher insisted that it was not seeking to rent or permanently build a structure on the sidewalk; the newsrack was characterized as similar to a newsboy, and the newsrack his "mechanical cousin." Id., 486 U.S. at 778 n. 6, 108 S.Ct. at 2155 n. 6. This large, immobile and permanent newsstand is precisely what the publisher in Lakewood implied was unacceptable.

3 In Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 781–83, 108 S.Ct. at 2157, Justice White, in dissent, feared that equating newsracks with newsboys and conduct commonly associated with expression could allow newspaper publishers the right to take public property for private use. He concluded that such a comparison also ignored the governmental interests at stake: allowing all members of the public use of their streets and sidewalks, insuring the public's safety and aesthetic interests, especially where alternative methods of newspaper distribution are available. Although this argument was not successful as applied to newsracks, permanent newsstand structures present a much more imposing problem.

4 We disagree with Judge Cummings that "size itself suggests nothing about whether the selling of newspapers and magazines from a stand is speech or conduct." Cummings, J. opinion at 1336. Size is relevant, because at a certain size the city's unfettered ability to regulate structures eclipses its limited ability to regulate speech. The dissent will concede that the city can place a "prior restraint" on the construction of a ten story building on public property, even if the building happens to have a newspaper store on the first floor. The same is true for a five story building or a one story building. We submit that the same is also true for a newsstand on public property even if it is not true for a newsrack on public property. Size matters, and a newsstand is more closely related to a building than it is to a newsrack.

1316 Municipal authorities, as trustees for the public, have the duty to keep their communities' streets open and available for movement of people and property, the primary purpose to which the streets are dedicated. So long as legislation to this end does not abridge the constitutional liberty of one rightfully upon the street to impart information through speech or the distribution of literature, it may lawfully regulate the conduct of those using the streets. For example, a person could not exercise this liberty by taking his stand in the middle of a crowded street, contrary to traffic regulations, and maintain his position to the stoppage of all traffic; a group of distributors could not insist upon a constitutional right to form a cordon across the street and to allow no pedestrian to pass who did not accept a tendered leaflet; nor does the guarantee of freedom of speech or of the press deprive a municipality of power to enact regulations against throwing literature broadcast in the streets. Prohibition of such conduct would not abridge the constitutional liberty since such activity bears no necessary relationship to the freedom to speak, write, print or distribute information or opinion. Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 160–61, 60 S.Ct. 146, 150–51, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939); accord Lee, 505 U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 2717 ("The principal purpose of streets and sidewalks, like airports, is to facilitate transportation, not public discourse." (emphasis added) (Kennedy, J., concurring)).

In Lakewood the Court concluded the ordinance implicated speech because it required periodic license renewal and the licensing system was "directed narrowly and specifically at expression or conduct commonly associated with expression: the circulation of newspapers." 486 U.S. at 760. This case neither concerns simply the circulation and printing of newspapers nor conduct commonly associated with expression. This case involves a structure. A newsrack, as a source of news, is inextricably tied to the publication it contains. For instance, Chicago has newsracks for the Chicago Tribune, the Chicago Sun–Times, USA Today, the Wall Street Journal, and whatever other publications might be popular in the city. To give a city official unfettered discretion over newsracks is to raise the possibility that the official—because of dissatisfaction over a particular editorial policy—might ban or severely limit the newsracks of a particular publication. For instance, if the official is lampooned by, say, the Chicago Tribune, as he or his boss makes a re-election bid, he would have an incentive to limit their newsracks. At the very least, the Chicago Tribune might limit its editorial efforts because of fear of such censorship.

The same threat of prior restraint does not exist for newsstands. They are structures not at all tied to particular publications. In our hypothetical, the Chicago official —even if he wanted to—could not retaliate against the Chicago Tribune by regulating newsstands. Only under the least likely scenario would a Chicago official be able to target a certain publication by targeting a certain newsstand. For a city official to accomplish this type of censorship, he would need a large staff to check all of the newsstands in the city to find the ones disseminating the objectionable material. Then he would have to deny permits to those newsstands. To "chill" similar distribution by others, he would have to make public that he was closing certain newsstands because they were distributing objectionable material. This scenario is hardly similar to one Chicago official nixing all of the newsracks of a certain publication by the stroke of his pen, while safely hidden behind the walls of city hall. So unlikely is the former scenario that the First Amendment does not require the ordinance to be drafted to avoid it. Further, the closing of newsstands would affect all of the publications in the newsstand equally, and the Chicago Tribune would still have its other methods of dissemination—newsboys, newsracks, in-building newsstands, etc.—to sell papers.

The protections provided newsracks are tailored to their peculiar characteristics. Judge Cummings' dissent and Judge Flaum's concurrence take the position that the same protections tailored to fit newsracks should be placed upon newsstands. But newsstands are not newsracks. The same threat of targeting one publication inherent in the regulation of newsracks is not present in the regulation 1317 of newsstands. Judge Cummings' dissent offers a remote scenario where a city official might target certain "off-beat publications" or "pornographic" publications by targeting certain newsstands. Cummings, J. dissent at 1337–38. But the First Amendment does not require that we create unlikely scenarios for the censorship of speech and require city governments to draft their regulations to avoid these scenarios. Only when the ordinance at issue presents an obvious and immediate threat of censorship—as in the case of the newsrack ordinance in Lakewood—should we allow a facial challenge to head off the possibility of censorship. When the threat of censorship derives from the unlikeliest of scenarios—such as the targeting of "off-beat" or "pornographic" publications when issuing newsstand permits—a facial challenge is inappropriate. The threat is too remote and speculative.

Given that there is no constitutional right to build or maintain a newsstand on the public way, the district court properly refused to enjoin Chicago from removing Graff's newsstand. But Chicago is not interested in removing Graff's newsstand because it occupies public land. Rather Chicago wants to remove Graff's newsstand because he has no permit. Thus, the parties in this case did not focus their arguments on the propriety of whether the district court should have issued an injunction. They wanted a ruling on the constitutionality of the new ordinance. The district court obliged, and upheld the ordinance by granting Chicago's motions to dismiss. On appeal Graff claims the ordinance gives Chicago too much discretion, imposes unreasonable time, place and manner restrictions, does not provide sufficient judicial review, and denies equal protection by treating newsstands and sidewalk cafes differently. We will address each of these constitutional challenges.

B. The Commissioner's Limited Discretion

[4] Graff argues that Chicago's newsstand ordinance violates the First Amendment by vesting too much discretion in the government official, here the commissioner of transportation. In Lakewood the Court struck down the City's ordinance because it vested too much discretion in the hands of a government official. 486 U.S. at 772, 108 S.Ct. at 2152. Graff argues that such a danger of viewpoint discrimination also exists in this case.

"[A] licensing statute placing unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency constitutes a prior restraint and may result in censorship." Id. at 757, 108 S.Ct. at 2143. A major premise in Lakewood was that "the Constitution requires that the City establish neutral criteria to insure that the licensing decision is not based on the content or viewpoint of the speech being considered." Id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2146. The Court struck down the Lakewood ordinance specifically because there were "no explicit limits on the Mayor's discretion." Id. at 769, 108 S.Ct. at 2150. In denying a permit application, the mayor was required only to state "it is not in the public interest." Although the ordinance required the mayor to state his reasons, the Court found troubling the lack of specificity required and the limitless reasons the mayor could assert. Id. at 769–70, 108 S.Ct. at 2150–51. In granting a permit, the mayor could require the newsrack to be located "in an inaccessible location without providing any explanation whatsoever." Id. This constituted "unfettered discretion" abridging the First Amendment. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 223, 110 S.Ct. at 603; Freedman, 380 U.S. at 56, 85 S.Ct. at 737 (party can "challenge a statute on the ground that it delegates overly broad licensing discretion"); Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 97–98, 60 S.Ct. 736, 741–42, 84 L.Ed. 1093 (1939) (the offending statute subjected the defendant to "harsh and discriminatory enforcement by local prosecuting officials").

In this case the commissioner of transportation considers six exclusive criteria by which to grant or deny permission to build a newsstand:

> (1) Whether the design, materials and color scheme of the newspaper

> stand comport with and enhance the quality and character of the streetscape, including nearby development and existing land uses; (2) Whether the newspaper stand complies with this code; (3) Whether the applicant has previously 1318 operated a newspaper stand at that location; (4) The extent to which services that would be offered by the newspaper stand are already available in the area; (5) The number of daily publications proposed to be sold from the newspaper stand; and (6) The size of the stand relative to the number of days the stand will be open and operating. [5]

[5] Under the new ordinance, all existing newsstand permits expired on January 1, 1992. Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–135. Although Graff has operated his newsstand since 1984, he has not operated under a permit. Presumably he must now compete for a permit on the same basis as any other person. As such, "when two or more otherwise equally qualified application are pending ... preference shall be given to the application for the newspaper stand offering the largest number of different daily publications." Id. at –160(e). Once Graff is issued a permit under the new ordinance, the Commissioner's only consideration in not renewing it is whether the newspaper stand has complied with the code. Id. at –135(a) & –160(b).

Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–160(a). The ordinance also contains a number of technical considerations, such as application forms, id. at –150, size and location regulations, id. at –170, and maintenance requirements, id. at –180. Graff specifically alleges that the commissioner should not be given discretion to remove a newsstand that "endangers public safety or property," that "interferes with or impedes the flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic," or is placed "in such a manner as to impede or interfere with the reasonable use of [a display window]." Id. at –185(a) & (b).

By requiring the commissioner to consider these factors, his discretion is limited, not unbridled. The criteria give adequate and specific guidance to the commissioner as well as reasons for the applicant to anticipate the basis for granting or denying a particular permit to build a newsstand. If a permit to build a newsstand were denied, these express standards (and the commissioner's written reasons, see id. at –160(c)) give the plaintiff adequate guidance in challenging the application of the ordinance to his particular case, and upon judicial review allow an informed inquiry into whether the commissioner made his decision in an unconstitutional manner, such as by disfavoring certain speech.

Even though the ordinance allows the commissioner to use some discretion, Lakewood nevertheless required the law to have "a close enough nexus to expression, or to conduct commonly associated with expression, to pose a real and substantial threat of the identified censorship risks." 486 U.S. at 759, 108 S.Ct. at 2145 (emphasis added). The criteria set out in Chicago's ordinance in no sense pose a "real or substantial threat" of censorship. See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781 at 794–95, 109 S.Ct. 2746 at 2755–56 (upholding as content-neutral regulations aimed at achieving the best musical volume and sound or appropriate sound quality in light of surrounding neighborhoods). Jacobsen v. Crivaro, 851 F.2d 1067, 1070 (8th Cir.1988) (upholding as non-discretionary an ordinance restricting newsrack locations and sizes). The criteria give the commissioner proper authority to advance the city's desire to permit a given number of newsstands. At the same time they help avoid the threat of someone building a permanent newsstand of whatever size, design and location he chooses.

Graff still finds a problem with what he terms the commissioner's unbridled discretion in determining the number of permits to issue. But the ordinance caps the number of permits the commissioner may issue to the number of newsstands already located on Chicago's streets. Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–130 ("No new permit for a newspaper stand shall be issued on or after the effective date of this ordinance"). As permits expire, or have been revoked, the commissioner may advertise that a permit is available. Id. at –130 & –135. Graff and others may compete for those the commissioner chooses to reissue. Id. at –160(e). [6]

[6] In a footnote in his reply brief, Graff argues for the first time that the current restrictions on the number of permits issued is a codification of arbitrary practices under the old ordinance. This argument is waived. Fed.R.App.P. 28(f) ("A reply brief shall be limited to matter in reply."). The parties also have > not addressed the extent to which having a permit under the old ordinance affects the locations of future newsstands. These issues are not properly before us on appeal.

[5] True, the commissioner has discretion in determining how many permits to reissue. 1319 But that is "the business of government." Chicago Observer, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 929 F.2d 325, 329 (7th Cir.1991). Not all discretionary decisions implicate the First Amendment. See City of Cincinnati, 507 U.S. at ——, 113 S.Ct. at 1517 (the City may limit the total number of newsracks for safety and aesthetic reasons). Since the limited discretion given to the commissioner in Chicago's ordinance does not in any way limit the speech content of the newsstand operator, there is no threat or risk of censorship which violates the First Amendment.

C. Reasonable Time, Place and Manner Restrictions

If the government seeks to control speech without reference to viewpoint, ordinances can contain reasonable time, place and manner restrictions. These restrictions, however, must serve significant government interests (narrowly tailored) and leave alternative avenues to communicate the same information. See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2757, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989); Clark, 468 U.S. 288 at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065 at 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221. If, however, the ordinance discriminates on the basis of viewpoint, such as allowing only communication of particular political or religious messages, the government would face a near insurmountable burden. See City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, ——, 113 S.Ct. 1505, 1516, 123 L.Ed.2d 99 (1993) (noting that prohibiting the use of sound trucks because of noise must apply equally to "music, political speech, and advertising."). Graff alleges that the ordinance controls speech content in several ways. Because the ordinance permits the newsstand to carry only newspapers, periodicals and similar publications, and favors the applicant who will carry the most daily publications, he claims it eliminates vendors who carry other expressive materials. He also complains that the newsstands' size limitation magnifies these impermissible restrictions. Chicago does not dispute these characteristics; rather it argues that they are necessary and reasonable time, place and manner restrictions.

This case resembles City of Renton, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. There the City of Renton, Washington, enacted a zoning ordinance to prohibit adult motion picture theaters from locating within a certain distance from residential, church, or school property. Id. at 43, 106 S.Ct. at 926. The Supreme Court determined that the ordinance > does not appear to fit neatly into either the "content-based" or the "content-neutral" category. To be sure, the ordinance treats theaters that specialize in adult films differently from other kinds of theaters. Nevertheless, as the district court concluded, the Renton ordinance is aimed not at the content of the films shown at "adult motion picture theatres," but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community.

Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. at 929. The Court analyzed the ordinance by looking at the time, place and manner restrictions in the regulation. The Court held that the ordinance was justified without reference to content, was thus "content-neutral," id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. at 929, and served a substantial government interest while allowing for reasonable alternatives of communication. Id. at 53, 106 S.Ct. at 933. Surely if a city can restrict speech through the planning, regulation, and zoning of property because of the secondary effects of adult motion pictures on the neighborhood, id., Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 62, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2448, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), Chicago should be allowed to regulate property on which newsstands could be located. Accord Cornelius, 473 U.S. at 799–800, 105 S.Ct. at 3447–48 ("Nothing in the Constitution requires the Government freely to grant access to all who wish to exercise their right to free speech on every type of Government property without regard to the nature of the property or to the disruption that might be caused by the speaker's activities."). Here the time, place and manner restrictions are entirely reasonable.

[6] Graff asserts that there is no showing that accommodating multiple uses of the public way and public safety requires an arbitrary size limitation on newsstands. The 1320 ordinance requires that the newsstand not occupy more than one-hundred and twenty square feet nor stand more than nine feet in height. Chicago Mun.Code §

10–28–170. In addition, the newsstand must always allow pedestrians at least six feet of clear passage, and cannot be located within three feet of a property line. Id. at –185(b). This is "the business of government." Chicago Observer, 929 F.2d at 329. We are not in a position to second-guess the city council's concerns. In any event, these restrictions are eminently reasonable. Pedestrians certainly should have access to enough space to walk on the sidewalks. Where structures block part of the sidewalk, pedestrians also have an interest in how far they must walk to get around them. In addition to being reasonable, these restrictions are content-neutral and do not constitute a prior restraint. [7]

7 See Chicago Observer, 929 F.2d at 328; Jacobsen, 851 F.2d at 1070; International Caucus of Labor Comm. v. City of Chicago, 816 F.2d 337, 340 (7th Cir.1987) (upholding restrictions on physical props used to spread message based on the size of the property and public safety); see also Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 707, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 3177, 92 L.Ed.2d 568 (1986) ("the First Amendment is not implicated by the enforcement of a public health regulation of general application against the physical premises in which respondents happen to sell books"); Heffron v. International Soc'y for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 644 n. 4, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 2562 n. 4 (1981) (noting that there was no First Amendment violation when several hundred potential exhibitors were prevented from speaking because of the cap on booths and a "first come—first serve" policy).

[7] Chicago readily admits that the "intended function" of the ordinance "is merely a preference for newsstands that maximize the number of newspapers sold." Apparently Graff wants to carry more than newspapers, periodicals and similar publications. He asserts that the ordinance is content-based because it does not allow newsstands to sell books or videotapes, relying on Discovery Network, Inc. v. City of Cincinnati, 946 F.2d 464 (6th Cir.1991). [8] There the district court held unconstitutional an ordinance that completely prohibited the distribution of commercial handbills on public property. The city had asserted its interests in safety and aesthetics, although it allowed newsracks to carry all other publications. The court of appeals concluded that the ordinance was an impermissible content-based restriction. 946 F.2d at 472, aff'd, 507 U.S. at ——, 113 S.Ct. at 1516. In distinguishing City of Renton, the Sixth Circuit stated: "Had Cincinnati produced evidence that the types of newsracks distributing commercial speech caused effects distinct from newsracks distributing newspapers, such as the clogging of downtown streets, ... the ordinance may have been constitutional under the secondary effects doctrine." Discovery Network, 946 F.2d at 472 n. 12. In affirming, the Supreme Court also noted that in contrast to City of Renton there were no distinguishing secondary effects attributable to newsracks containing commercial publications as compared to newsracks containing newspapers that would justify differing treatment. City of Cincinnati, 507 U.S. at ——, 113 S.Ct. at 1517. Chicago, following this reasoning, notes that newspapers do not represent any favored viewpoints not represented in books or videotapes. The restrictions are "simply an effort to reduce clutter on the public way, ... and facilitate the distribution of newspapers from a newsstand without undue obstruction of the public ways."

8 Discovery Network, 946 F.2d 464, was affirmed after the parties had completed briefing and while the appeal was pending. City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, 113 S.Ct. 1505, 123 L.Ed.2d 99 (1993).

Certainly a city can regulate newsstands to reduce clutter on its streets. See Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 805, 104 S.Ct. at 2128. But Chicago has advanced no argument that books and videotapes clutter the streets any more than do newspapers. The assertion that newsstands themselves clutter the streets merely restates the issue. Chicago more convincingly argues that books and videotape sales would obstruct the flow of pedestrians. The city can recognize that people impulsively or routinely purchase newspapers in seconds. The more time-consuming purchase of books or videotapes, in contrast, would cause congregation and impede the flow of others who would then have to walk around not only the newsstand structure but the audience it attracted. See 1321 Heffron, 452 U.S. 640, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298. Also, browsers would block access to those who wanted to make a quick purchase of a newspaper. See Gannett Satellite Info. Net. v. Metro Transp. A., 745 F.2d 767, 773–4 (2d Cir.1984) (upholding as content neutral a regulation which allowed newspapers but not other vendors to install coin operated vending machines; "the newspapers are in a privileged position and are not and will not become the victims of discrimination").

That the ordinance considers how many publications the newsstand will carry does not infringe, but rather promotes First Amendment interests. The ordinance clearly favors an applicant who has the higher, not the lower, proposed number of publications to be sold from the newsstand. This conceivably "censors" only the newsstand operator who himself might eliminate certain publications from distribution. In addition, an ordinance directed at the number of publications concerns quantity, not quality or content. Graff cites no case where an ordinance promoting more speech (in general) infringes the First Amendment.

Graff asserts that promoting the dailies serves to advance a message less controversial to the greatest number of people. This ignores the reality of the marketplace. The dailies succeed only because they sell to the greatest number of people, notwithstanding the government's perceived agreement with any particular viewpoint. Any notion that Chicago is promoting the dailies because based on past experience it is likely to agree with their future viewpoints is mitigated by the ordinance favoring the newsstand operator who sells the most dailies—an obvious attempt at variety, not indoctrination. Chicago argued in the district court that the Supreme Court has encouraged the promotion of daily publications over the sale of other "expressive materials." As stated in Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 771, 108 S.Ct. at 2151, "News is not fungible. Some stories may be particularly well covered by certain publications, providing that newspaper with a unique opportunity to develop readership. In order to benefit from that event, a paper needs public access at a particular time; eventual access would come too little and too late." The manner in which this ordinance regulates the newsstand operation allows that necessary access.

Graff finally argues that the time, place and manner restrictions are not narrowly tailored to serve the asserted governmental interests. See Ward, 491 U.S. at 796, 109 S.Ct. at 2756; City of Los Angeles v. Preferred, 476 U.S. 488, 106 S.Ct. 2034, 90 L.Ed.2d 480 (1986). Specifically, Graff argues the ordinance sets an arbitrary cap on the number of permits and that given the provision requiring minimum clearance around the newsstand, there is no reason for the arbitrary size limitation. He wants further discovery to show there are less restrictive alternatives.

[8] The "requirement of narrow tailoring is satisfied so long as the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. at 2758 (citations omitted). This test is not as heightened as Graff would have us believe.

> So long as the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest, ... the regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative.

Id. at 800, 109 S.Ct. at 2758. Because Chicago has the ability to ban all newsstands, providing for some by a comprehensive permit scheme serves the people of Chicago well. The ordinance accommodates competing interests where pedestrians wish room to walk, several newsstand operators desire the same location, and tourists wish to take a picture of a famous landmark without a newsstand front and center. Without the permit ordinance, Chicago's interests would not only be achieved with less effectiveness, but would fail. The restrictions also leave open alternative channels for communication of the information. Id. at 802, 109 S.Ct. at 2760. Chicago not only "teems with ads and with publications," Chicago Observer, 929 F.2d at 328, one can easily discern that the public has no problem picking up a newspaper, book or videotape, be it in stores that 1322 actually own their own property or from newsboys yelling out the headlines.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that the time, place and manner restrictions contained in the new ordinance are reasonable, are justified without reference to specific content, and are narrowly tailored to serve significant interests of the people of Chicago. Alternative channels are also available to communicate any speech otherwise restricted.

D. The Propriety of Dismissal Versus Summary Judgment

[9] The district court dismissed two counts of the complaint based in part on the reasonableness of the ordinance's time, place and manner restrictions. Graff argues that the pleading stage is no place for such an inquiry, especially because the government has the burden on this issue. See Preferred, 476 U.S. at 496, 106 S.Ct. at 2038; accord Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 78 S.Ct.

1332, 2 L.Ed.2d 1460 (1958) (invalidating state procedure because it placed the burden on the individual to show the restriction on speech was unjustified). No doubt the norm is to wait until the summary judgment stage of the litigation to address the ultimate question of whether the ordinance should stand. FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 221, 110 S.Ct. at 602; Renton, 475 U.S. at 45, 106 S.Ct. at 927; Vincent, 466 U.S. at 793, 104 S.Ct. at 2122; Young, 427 U.S. at 55, 96 S.Ct. at 2445. And Chicago does not dispute that it bears the burden on these issues. Contrary to Graff's assertions, however, in this case the district court was correct in resolving this matter.

[10] In International Caucus of Labor Committees v. City of Chicago, 816 F.2d 337, 339 (7th Cir.1987), the district court dismissed a facial attack on an ordinance that prohibited persons from setting up tables, hanging signs and storing literature at O'Hare International Airport. We had previously upheld parts of a similar ordinance in International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc. v. Rochford, 585 F.2d 263 (7th Cir.1978). The court, quoting from Supreme Court precedent, gave credence to the government's case at the pleading stage:

> A state's interests in protecting the safety and convenience of persons using the public forum is a valid governmental objective. The characteristic nature and function of the forum must be considered in assessing the constitutionality of the regulation.... As held in Rochford, the City has valid concerns about expediting the processing of travelers, maintaining the free and orderly flow of traffic, and avoiding the disruption of normal airport activities. Prohibitions on the use of banners or signs that exceed the body width and on the storing of materials, except in a carry bag that must be carried or harnessed, are reasonably related to the City's legitimate interests.

International Caucus, 816 F.2d at 339–40 (citations and quotations omitted). As we have seen, Chicago asserted that many of these interests apply in this case as well. In International Caucus, we concluded that even in the First Amendment context, the plaintiff is not excused "from the requirement that the facts as alleged must state a cause of action." Id. at 340.

In Rothner v. City of Chicago, 929 F.2d 297 (7th Cir.1991), we also affirmed the district court's dismissal of a facial challenge to a city ordinance. Chicago had prohibited minors from playing video games while school was in session. With the caveat that "courts should proceed cautiously when asked to dismiss on the basis of the pleadings," id. at 302, we concluded that the purpose of the ordinance, to encourage students to complete high school and discourage truancy, was unrelated to speech content. Also, the ordinance was narrowly tailored to serve an important governmental interest, namely "insuring that children receive an adequate education." Id. at 303. And alternative channels of communication were open—the children were free to play the video games on their own time. There, we concluded that the First Amendment did not require us to "try the statute" beyond the pleading stage. Id. at 304 (citations omitted).

[11] From Preferred, International Caucus and Rothner we gather several important principles. Courts should not merely assume that an ordinance advances the state's interests. 1323 Preferred, 476 U.S. at 496, 106 S.Ct. at 2038. In Preferred the Court remanded to the district court because it needed to "know more about the present uses of the public utility poles and rights-of-way and how respondent proposes to install and maintain its facilities on them." Id. at 495, 106 S.Ct. at 2038. In this case, however, no one is questioning the present uses of newspapers or sidewalks on the streets of Chicago. How Graff proposes to use his newsstand we accept as true from his complaint. See City of Renton, 475 U.S. at 53, 106 S.Ct. at 931. (City does not have to conduct studies or produce independent evidence on issues that are well developed here or elsewhere). Where the courts have already upheld a similar ordinance because of the governmental interests at stake, a future litigant should not be able to challenge similar governmental interests without showing some distinction at the pleading stage. E.g., International Caucus, 816 F.2d at 340.

In this case there are no disputed issues of material fact that we need to resolve. Nor are the interests that Chicago raises in this case unique or different. It has not relied on independent research studies or findings. Rather, Chicago has relied on a common sense approach and the desire to best allocate public property within the spirit of the First Amendment. As discussed in Part C, we conclude that as a matter of law Chicago can reasonably restrict newsstands to selling daily newspapers. Thus, the district court properly dismissed at the pleading stage Graff's arguments that the ordinance should allow him to operate a larger newsstand in which to sell books, videotapes and other methods of expression.

E. The Adequacy of Procedural Safeguards

Graff asserts that the ordinance is completely devoid of safeguards for review of the commissioner's decision. Chicago responds that state law provides for judicial review, which in itself is sufficient. Primarily, the First Amendment protects speech by prohibiting the government from engaging in censorship. But even if an ordinance properly limits an administrator's discretion, theoretically the government could still act improperly where its decision is not subject to review. The question is whether sufficient procedural safeguards exist to "obviate the dangers of a censorship system." Southeastern Promotions, 420 U.S. at 559, 95 S.Ct. at 1247. In Freedman of Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58–59, 85 S.Ct. 734, 738–39, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), the Court set out certain "safeguards," later summarized by Justice Brennan as follows:

> (1) any prior restraint in advance of a final judicial determination on the merits must be no longer than that necessary to preserve the status quo pending judicial resolution; (2) a prompt judicial determination must be available; and (3) the would-be censor must bear both the burden of going to court and the burden of proof in court.

FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 239, 110 S.Ct. at 611.[9] Of concern to Graff, since he has no permit, are the procedures Chicago follows in removing a newsstand without a permit. Once the commissioner discovers a newsstand operating on public property without a valid permit, the commissioner has the authority to give the operator fifteen days after the posting of a removal notice to restore the public property to its original condition. Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–190(c). Within that time the owner or operator may request a hearing before the commissioner of transportation, which will be scheduled within thirty days. Even if the commissioner were to rule unfavorably, the operator would not have to remove his newsstand until fifteen days after the commissioner's final decision. Whether a newsstand is ordered removed, or a permit is granted, denied or renewed, the ordinance leaves these final determinations solely in the hands of the commissioner of transportation. But there is much opportunity for input and 1324 discussion before that final determination is made.[10]

9 In FW/PBS a plurality (O'Connor, Stevens and Kennedy, JJ.) found that "the first two safeguards are essential: the licensor must make the decision whether to issue the license within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained and there must be the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event that the license is erroneously denied." 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. at 606. Justices White and Scalia and Chief Justice Rehnquist did not apply any of the "safeguards." And Justices Brennan, Marshall and Blackmun would have applied all three. The Court considered the nature of the speech and the discretion in the ordinance when determining to what extent the Freedman safeguards were necessary. Thus, if the full procedural protections of Freedman are not necessary in the context of sexually oriented licensing schemes, FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. at 606, it is an open question whether they are necessary in an ordinance that regulates the building of newsstands on public property.

10 In this case Chicago utilizes the usual procedure in ruling on a permit application—set up more than one level of inquiry and get as many people involved in the process as possible; public hearings, of course, are necessary, at least politically. To begin the process, the commissioner of transportation advertises the availability of newsstand permits (in a newspaper, of course) and shortly thereafter accepts applications. Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–135. Copies are soon distributed to the commissioner of planning and development and the alderman of the ward affected. The appropriate city council committee is also involved in holding public hearings on the permit. All interested persons, including the applicant, are given an opportunity to speak. The city council committee submits its recommendation to the commissioner of planning and development. He then submits a report to the commissioner of transportation, who gives the previous recommendations "due consideration," and acts on it within thirty days of that receipt. Id. at –160(a). All are bound by the six enumerated considerations, listed supra. The total time from > application to decision can be no less than thirty-five and no more than sixty-five days. If the application is denied, the applicant can request a hearing before the commissioner of transportation which must be held within the next thirty days (a quasi-motion for reconsideration). Id. at –160(c).

[12] Graff argues that the ordinance does not provide for "expeditious judicial review" of the commissioner's decision. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 239, 110 S.Ct. at 611.[11] The ordinance contains no mention of the role of the judiciary in reviewing the commissioner's decisions. As an initial matter, it is not clear why the Court in Freedman set out the apparent requirement that an ordinance such as this explicitly provide for prompt judicial review. A person always has a judicial forum when his speech is allegedly infringed. Neither Graff nor the City argues that the judiciary cannot hear challenges to this ordinance simply because it does not have a specific provision designating a review process. The lack of these additional procedural safeguards does not in any way increase the threat of speech censorship. The "safeguards" or the absence thereof neither expand nor detract from the courts' jurisdiction over constitutional questions. But we are not writing on a clean slate.

11 In FW/PBS the Court held that the city of Dallas need not bear the burden of going to court nor the burden of proof once in court for two reasons: The ordinance was not presumptively invalid because the decisionmaker did not pass "judgment on the content of any protected speech." Also, "[b]ecause the license [or in this case, a permit] is the key to the applicant's obtaining and maintaining a business, there is every incentive for the applicant to pursue a license denial through the court." 493 U.S. at 229–30, 110 S.Ct. at 606. These same reasons apply in this case. We have already held that the ordinance does not give the commissioner unfettered discretion and that any content restrictions are reasonable. Graff's newsstand is also as much a business as an adult book store. Therefore, Chicago need not prove its case in court before ruling on a permit application or removing a newsstand.

The Constitution of the State of Illinois, Article 7, Section 6 (1970), delineates the explicit powers of home rule units (which the parties do not dispute includes Chicago). See City of Chicago v. State & Mun. Teamsters, 127 Ill.App.3d 328, 82 Ill.Dec. 488, 492, 468 N.E.2d 1268, 1272 (1984). "A home rule unit may exercise any power and perform any function pertaining to its government and affairs." Ill. Const. art. 7, § 6(a). The Supreme Court of Illinois took little time in holding that this power does not include providing for judicial review of administrative agency decisions. Paper Supply Co. v. City of Chicago, 57 Ill.2d 553, 317 N.E.2d 3, 16–17 (1974); Cummings v. Daley, 58 Ill.2d 1, 317 N.E.2d 22, 23 (1974). In each of those cases the Supreme Court of Illinois rejected a home rule municipality's attempts to determine "both the jurisdiction of the circuit court to review its municipal administrative determinations and the procedure to be followed in seeking judicial review of those determinations." 1325 Nowicki v. Evanston Fair Housing Review Bd., 62 Ill.2d 11, 338 N.E.2d 186, 187 (1975); see Quinlan & Tyson, Inc. v. City of Evanston, 25 Ill.App.3d 879, 324 N.E.2d 65 (1975). Just because Chicago lacks the separate authority to make available "expeditious judicial review," FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 239, 110 S.Ct. at 611, does not mean that such review does not exist.

The appropriate method to review Chicago's administrative agency decisions is by the common law writ of certiorari. Holstein v. City of Chicago, 803 F.Supp. 205, 210 (N.D.Ill.1992); Stratton v. Wenona Comm'n Unit Dist. No. 1, 133 Ill.2d 413, 141 Ill.Dec. 453, 458, 551 N.E.2d 640, 645 (Ill.App.1990); Norton v. Nicholson, 187 Ill.App.3d 1046, 135 Ill.Dec. 485, 491, 543 N.E.2d 1053, 1059 (1989). Unless excused, claimants have six months to file, wherein review "is extremely broad in scope, and extends to all questions of fact and law contained in the record before the court, including de novo review of any constitutional issues." Holstein, 803 F.Supp. at 210, citing Howard v. Lawton, 22 Ill.2d 331, 175 N.E.2d 556, 557 (1961).

> [T]he court determines from the record alone whether there is any evidence fairly tending to support the order reviewed, and the court cannot set aside the order unless it is contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence.... [F]indings and conclusions on questions of fact are prima facie true and correct. It is not the court's function to resolve conflicting evidence.

Norton, 187 Ill.App.3d 1046, 135 Ill.Dec. 485, 543 N.E.2d at 1059. "If the circuit court, on the return of the writ, finds from the record that the inferior tribunal proceeded according to law, the writ is quashed; however, if the proceedings are not in compliance with the law, the judgment and proceedings shown by the return will be quashed." Stratton, 133 Ill.2d 413, 141 Ill.Dec. 453, 551 N.E.2d at 645. [12]

12 The case of Smith v. Department of Public Aid, 67 Ill.2d 529, 10 Ill.Dec. 520, 367 N.E.2d 1286 (1977), helps illustrate the importance of the common law writ of certiorari in the constitutional context. In Smith a county public aid department increased the purchase price for food stamps. A state department of public aid affirmed that decision. On writ of certiorari the trial court declared certain state and federal statutes unconstitutional. In particular, the trial court found that the Illinois Public Aid Code, Ill.Rev.Stat.1975, ch. 23, par. 11–8.7, and a portion of the federal food stamp program, 7 U.S.C. § 2022 (1970), deprived the plaintiffs of due process and equal protection under the Illinois Constitution and the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, because they did not provide for sufficient judicial review. 67 Ill.2d 529, 367 N.E.2d at 1292. The Supreme Court of Illinois reversed, holding that the common law writ of certiorari provided sufficient oversight. Id. at 1293.

In some other First Amendment cases the Supreme Court seemed to require an ordinance to provide for judicial review, even when the writ of common law certiorari was available. However, the Court has not been presented directly with the argument that certiorari was in itself sufficient review, especially where a state makes the common law writ the current common practice, and in fact forbids any other kind of review. We conclude that such review is sufficient. Illinois has shown that a judicial forum is available to review administrative agency decisions. The state maintains uniform judicial review procedures by forbidding home rule units such as Chicago from commenting on the matter. As such the state can expect such uniform procedures to expedite cases and better serve the interests of Graff in a case such as this one.

F. Equal Protection

[13] In count two, Graff alleges that newsstands are treated differently than other permitted uses of the public way, such as sidewalk cafes. One would hope so. Differences are obvious. Each use requires a permit, but separate ordinances necessarily provide different criteria for issuing them. Where, as here, the newsstand ordinance passes strict scrutiny under the First Amendment, it most certainly will pass the rational basis test under equal protection analysis.

> [E]qual protection is not a license for courts to judge the wisdom, fairness, or logic of legislative choices. In areas of social and economic policy, a statutory classification that neither proceeds along suspect lines nor infringes fundamental constitutional rights must be upheld against an equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state 1326 of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification.

Federal Commun. Comm. v. Beach Commun., Inc., 508 U.S. 307, ——, 113 S.Ct. 2096, 2101, 124 L.Ed.2d 211 (1993). We have already explained why the ordinance infringes no fundamental First Amendment right. [13] If reasonable time, place and manner restrictions outweigh Graff's right to free speech, they certainly are sufficient to pass as "conceivable" and "rational."

13 Graff alleged in his amended complaint and in the facts section of his brief on appeal that then and now newsstands have operated on the public way without permits and only Graff has been targeted for eviction. Why was this not pursued in response to Chicago's motion to dismiss? If Chicago was allowing newsstands without permits, surely it could not seriously argue that it could remove a newsstand that had not secured one. See Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 295 n. 6, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3070 n. 6, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). Obviously there would be no need for the district court to rule on the constitutionality of an ordinance on its face when it was being applied in such a random fashion. Indeed, the record shows that Graff received notices to remove his newsstand which for whatever reasons were later rescinded. Graff, however, raised the equal protection analysis only in arguing that Chicago discriminated by its treatment of newsstands as compared to other, nonexpressive uses of the public way. He did not explicitly or implicitly argue any disparity in requiring newsstand permits to the district court or on appeal; thus, the issue is; waived. Brookins v. Kolb, 990 F.2d 308, 316 (7th Cir.1993); Textile Banking Co. v. Rentschler, 657 F.2d 844, 853 (7th Cir.1981). We have proceeded in this case on the assumption that Chicago evenhandedly enforces its ordinances.

Graff argues that Chicago taxes newsstands but not other uses of the public way. Chicago responds that Graff waived the argument because in the district court he questioned only the propriety of a newsstand fee as an invalid prior restraint under the First Amendment, an issue he has not raised on appeal. Graff also argues that newsstands and sidewalk cafes are treated differently with respect to landmark commission approval. Chicago disputes this. It argues Chicago Municipal Code section 2–120–740 subjects all structures on public property to equal treatment. In fact, it argues that section 4–384–060 gives the City even more discretion in refusing to grant a cafe permit (as compared to refusing a newsstand permit).

These distinctions do not really matter. Varying taxes and different permit requirements for obviously different uses do not merit word-by-word scrutiny by judges who might prefer to tax and regulate some other way. The question is whether the different treatment of newsstands and cafes occupying the public sidewalks are for "conceivable" and "rational" reasons. We can conceive of many rational reasons for the differences,[14] not the least of which one serves food (a highly regulated enterprise) and the other does not. The only real similarity is that they occupy the sidewalk. It would arguably be irrational to treat these completely different purposes the same way. In fact, equal treatment with a sidewalk cafe would probably result in much more burdensome limitations for a newsstand anyway. Chicago has a very rational basis for mandating different 1327 permit requirements for these very different uses.

14 Chicago could reasonably feel that newsstands impede the flow of pedestrian traffic more so than sidewalk cafes. Cafes involve a restaurant that seeks to extend its eating facility to the fresh air. It is reasonable for Chicago to believe that newsstands will not ordinarily attach to nearby buildings. They are free standing on the sidewalk, thus requiring size limitations so as to accommodate adjacent structures. For pedestrians wishing to determine whether it is safe to cross the street, or for drivers wishing to avoid hitting pedestrians, cafes pose less serious threats to safety. It is not only conceivable, but probably a certainty, that many cafes are located in front of property already in use as a restaurant. Extending that type of business onto part of the sidewalk would compromise landmark property no more than the restaurant operating there in the first place. Newsstands, by contrast, stick out; Chicago could feel that such structures are not as aesthetically pleasing. They are separate entities usually having nothing to do with adjoining property. Chicago should be given deference in asserting that lack of patrons would run unattractive cafes out of business, giving them ample incentive to maintain aesthetically pleasing premises. Persons merely wanting a newspaper probably do not regard the beauty of the newsstand of any consequence. Cafes require sufficient space to accommodate sitting customers and tables for food. Newsstands, in contrast, differ radically in the amount of space necessary, and employ fewer people. Eating establishments are heavily regulated and taxed in their own right.

IV. Conclusion

Graff does not have a constitutional right to build a newsstand on public property. This case involves a structure which in itself has no First Amendment protection. Thus, the district court properly refused to enter a preliminary injunction, notwithstanding the validity of a permit ordinance. Even if newsstands involve speech, Chicago's new ordinance passes muster. The ordinance does not allow for content based discrimination by giving the commissioner of transportation too much discretion in ruling on a permit. To the extent that the ordinance restricts speech, Chicago has articulated reasonable time, place and manner restrictions to justify any infringement. The ordinance is also subject to adequate procedural safeguards; therefore the district court was correct in dismissing count one. Because the ordinance is constitutional under Equal Protection analysis, the court was correct in dismissing count two.

The district court is AFFIRMED.

FLAUM, Circuit Judge, with whom CUDAHY, Circuit Judge, joins, concurring.

I concur in the judgment of the majority but write separately to emphasize my belief that the erection and maintenance of newspaper stands qualifies as "conduct commonly associated with expression." City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 759, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 2145, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988). Accordingly, Chicago's licensing ordinance (hereinafter

"the Ordinance") implicates the First Amendment's protection of expression, see id. at 769, 108 S.Ct. at 2150, and a facial challenge against it lies if the Ordinance carries with it significant risks of self-censorship and of post-decision difficulty in detecting whether censorship motives clandestinely prompted license denials, see id. at 759, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. Because Chicago's scheme at the outset establishes a discretionary system to govern the issuance of permits, the specter of these risks looms and a facial review of the ordinance is in order. Scrutiny of the Ordinance's provisions, however, reveals that the danger of content-based censorship presented by such licensing schemes is in this case sufficiently mitigated to allow the Ordinance to survive facial attack. In addition, I do not feel that the Ordinance is the kind of scheme for which the lack of a special provision for prompt judicial review is fatal. [1]

1 I do not think it is necessary for the majority to reach the question of whether or not there is an independent constitutional right to erect newsstands on public property. Because Chicago did not enact an absolute ban on newsstands and the majority today finds that capping permits at their historical level is a reasonable restriction, passing on this question is not necessary for the resolution of this case. Comment on the nonexistence of such a right may be tempting but is probably unadvised as the issue is by no means settled. Compare Providence Journal Co. v. City of Newport, 665 F.Supp. 107, 112 (D.R.I.1987) (intimating that a total prohibition of newsracks, newsstands and newsboys may be unconstitutional), and City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 762 n. 7, 108 S.Ct. at 2147 n. 7 (declining to pass on whether a city may constitutionally prohibit the placement of newsracks on public property), with id. at 780–81, 108 S.Ct. at 2156 (White, J., dissenting) (stating that there is no First Amendment right to erect newsracks on city streets) and City of Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, ——, 113 S.Ct. 1505, 1525, 123 L.Ed.2d 99 (1993) (Rehnquist, C.J., dissenting) (same).

I.

I respectfully suggest that the majority misses the mark in asserting that "[t]his case neither concerns simply the circulation and printing of newspapers nor conduct commonly associated with expression." Ante, at 1316. Like newsracks, newsstands are in the business of circulating expressive materials. See City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 768, 108 S.Ct. at 2149. That they do so on a larger scale, with greater variety [2] and take up 1328 more physical space in performing their distributive function does not alter the fundamental fact that maintaining a newsstand, just like maintaining a newsrack, is an activity peculiarly linked to expression. In that respect a newsstand is not like a candy machine or a hot dog stand or any other mere "structure." See id. at 760–61, 108 S.Ct. at 2145–46. A newsstand is an instrument for the dissemination of expressive materials, and as such it falls within that special category of activities whose regulation implicates First Amendment values.

2 The majority seems to suggest that because newsstands facilitate the distribution of many different publications they are somehow less associated with expression than newsracks which typically only offer for sale a single publication. See ante, at 1316. The majority apparently believes this follows from the fact that shutting down whole newsstands because of displeasure with one publication is a more awkward and less effective means of censoring that publication than targeting its individual newsracks directly. While this observation may buttress an eventual conclusion that Chicago's mechanism for licensing newsstands passes constitutional muster, to conclude that this single characteristic renders the maintenance of newsstands any less conduct intimately tied to expression is fallacious. The result from such a logical leap and its concomitant hasty dismissal of the constitutional dimensions of this case is a failure to consider the full breadth of First Amendment risks occasioned by discretionary control over newsstands. Admittedly, the licensing of newsstands is a clumsy way to censor the Chicago Tribune, but it has the potential to be a honed weapon in a war against the lone operator who insists on including controversial or unpopular publications in his selection. Judge Cummings' dissent succeeds in putting its finger on the panoply of hardly fanciful dangers to free expression that can be the bedfellows of the regulation of even mere newsstands. See post, at 1337–38. These potential dangers must be acknowledged before turning to address the procedural adequacy of Chicago's licensing system.

Since this licensing scheme is "directed narrowly and specifically at ... conduct commonly associated with expression," id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2145, a facial challenge is an appropriate means to test for constitutional infirmity when by its nature the scheme does not foreclose the "identifiable risks to free expression," id. at 757, 108 S.Ct. at 2144, that a system of prior restraint engenders and that can be "effectively alleviated only through a facial challenge." Id. Now the Ordinance does not fit the traditional mold of a prior restraint since it does not directly regulate speech qua speech. See, e.g., Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 552, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1243, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975) (city preventing performance of rock musical "Hair"); Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 150–52, 89 S.Ct. 935, 938–39, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969) (city requiring permit to conduct a parade); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 57, 85 S.Ct. 734, 738, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965) (movie censorship system); Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 713–17, 51 S.Ct. 625, 630–31, 75 L.Ed. 1357 (1931) (newspaper censorship). Rather, it is one aspect of Chicago's effort to keep within reasonable bounds businesses' usage of the public ways. See Chicago Mun.Code § 4–384–060 (establishing discretionary licensing of sidewalk cafes based on considerations of pedestrian flow, building access, safety and aesthetics). But by targeting for licensing a business inextricably connected to the exercise of First Amendment freedoms, Chicago's scheme raises the possibility of those identifiable risks that we commonly associate with prior restraints.

Firstly, just as the licensure of newsracks can chill a newspaper's zest to pursue issues and opinions displeasing to the licensor, see City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 757–58, 108 S.Ct. at 2144–45, licensure of newsstands has the potential to prompt vendors to spurn publications offensive to the licensor's (or his constituents') sensibilities and politics. Only a facial challenge adequately addresses such a risk. Secondly, discretionary licensing schemes frequently provide fertile ground for "post hoc rationalizations by the licensing official ..., making it difficult for courts to determine in any particular case whether the licensor is permitting favorable, and suppressing unfavorable, expression." Id. at 758, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. In an "as applied" challenge, an unsuccessful applicant for a discretionary newsstand permit would face the same kind of struggle in demonstrating that his rejection was motivated by which publications he sells as a disappointed newspaper would in showing it lost its newsrack because of what it writes. The Ordinance sets out what is basically a discretionary system of licensing, the sort of system in which such risks can lurk, and appellants have alleged that under it city officials "enjoy unfettered discretion to deny ... permits altogether." Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 794, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2755, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). "Thus, waiting for an alleged abuse before considering ... a challenge would achieve nothing except ... to 1329 risk censorship of free expression during the interim." Id. 486 U.S. at 770 n. 11, 108 S.Ct. at 2151 n. 11. Therefore, I feel it is appropriate to examine under the lens of a facial challenge whether the Ordinance is characterized by standards and other features adequate to rein in the exercise of discretion and minimize the risk of content discrimination. See Freedman, 380 U.S. at 56–57, 85 S.Ct. at 738 ("Although we have no occasion to decide whether the vice of overbroadness infects the ... statute, we think that appellant's assertion of a similar danger in the ... apparatus of censorship—one always fraught with danger and viewed with suspicion—gives him standing to make that challenge.").

II.

Turning to the details of the Ordinance, none of the six factors upon which the Commissioner of Public Works' permit decisions are based facially vest him with unbridled discretion in accepting and rejecting applicants.[3] Thus, the Ordinance does not grant to city officials the sort of standardless carte blanche that the Supreme Court has unfailingly condemned. See, e.g., Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 89 S.Ct. 935, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969), Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093 (1940). I do recognize that some of the enumerated factors, as well as having a scheme where six are weighed in combination, allow a measure of flex. We must remember, however, that "perfect clarity and precise guidance have never been required even of regulations that restrict expressive activity," Ward, 491 U.S. at 793, 109 S.Ct. at 2755, and these are after all the kinds of legitimate concerns one would expect a city to weigh when deciding how to allocate limited public space in a neutral way. Moreover, these criteria provide definite and finite guidelines against which the Commissioner's written reasons for a denial, see Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–160(c), can be measured and comparisons made from case to case—a safeguard that the standardless system in Lakewood lacked. See Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 771, 108 S.Ct. at 2151.

[3] The Commissioner of Public Works (CPW) in his ultimate decision (as well as the Commissioner of Planning when making his recommendation to the CPW and the City Council, if making a recommendation to the CPW) can only consider:

(1) whether the design, materials and color scheme of the newspaper stand comport with and enhance the quality and character of the streetscape, including nearby development and existing land uses;
(2) whether the newspaper stand complies with this Code;
(3) whether the applicant has previously operated a newspaper stand at that location;
(4) the extent to which services that would be offered by the newspaper stand are already available in the area;
(5) the number of daily publications proposed to be sold from the newspaper stand; and
(6) the size of the stand relative to the number of days the stand will be open and operating.

Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–160(a).

In spite of the presence of these exclusive factors, their residual malleability may still have proven unacceptable had the ordinance been written to apply them to permit renewal and not just the initial decision to issue. The fact that the full range of discretionary criteria does not apply to renewal—renewals are automatic so long as existing newsstands are in compliance with the City Code, see Chicago Mun.Code 10–28–160(b)—indicates to me that the Ordinance neither was intended to promote nor in fact dangerously facilitates content discrimination in the licensing of newsstands. One of the distressing features of the newsrack ordinance in Lakewood was the need to annually reapply for licenses. This periodic requirement enabled the licensor to routinely discipline newspapers for speech already uttered. See Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 759–60, 108 S.Ct. at 2145–46. In the context of newsstands such a system would allow the licensor to monitor the type of publications offered for sale, effectively presenting the more "direct ... threat to speech [of] allowing a licensor to view the actual content of the speech to be licensed." Id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2146. Then, under the cloak of discretionary decision making, the licensor could easily reject a renewal application because he disapproves of what the stand sells. Chicago's pro forma renewal process, by contrast, does not afford that kind of opportunity for ongoing censorship. 1330 On application for renewal, the discrete question of compliance with the Code replaces the discretion of the initial permit decision. Furthermore, first time applicants, who are subject to the full discretionary process, do not provide in their application a list of publications that they intend to sell. Therefore, overall, Chicago's mechanism offers few routes by which content motives can obliquely infiltrate the permit process.

III.

Seemingly the most difficult feature of the Ordinance, in light of Supreme Court precedent, is the absence of any provision for expeditious judicial review of the Commissioner's decision. However, I believe that because the Ordinance does not involve separating protected from unprotected speech and by its own terms presents little risk of facilitating content discrimination, it can survive constitutional attack despite the lack of a self-contained provision for prompt judicial review.

A.

Since the Supreme Court's decision in Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), it has become accepted practice to examine licensing schemes that regulate speech related activities for the presence of three procedural safeguards: 1) the administrative decision allowing or forbidding the speech must be forthcoming within a short and fixed time; 2) prompt judicial review of a license denial must be available; and 3) the licensor must bear both the burden of going to court and the burden of proof in court. See id. at 58–59, 85 S.Ct. at 738–39. The only possible modification to the Freedman requirements may have been anticipated in FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), where three Justices asserted that a city licensing scheme aimed at the operation of sexually oriented businesses need not include the third Freedman safeguard.[4] See id. 493 U.S. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 607.

[4] In FW/PBS, three Justices (Brennan, Marshall and Blackmun) thought that all three Freedman requirements were necessary, see 493 U.S. at 239–42, 110 S.Ct. at 612–13 (Brennan, J., concurring in the judgment), while three (O'Connor, Stevens and Kennedy) were content with just the first two, see id. 493 U.S. at 227–31, 110 S.Ct. at 606–07 (opinion of O'Connor, J.). To justify dropping the third Freedman > safeguard, Justice O'Connor distinguished Dallas' ordinance from the licensing systems in Freedman and its progeny on two grounds. She observed, first, that under its ordinance Dallas did not purport to "pass [ ] judgment on the content of any protected speech," id. 493 U.S. at 231, 110 S.Ct. at 607, unlike the obscenity censors in Freedman et al., and, second, that because Dallas required a license to operate an adult entertainment business at all, "there is every incentive for the applicant to pursue a license denial through the court," id. All this is of course dicta since six Justices agreed that the ordinance must fall because the other two Freedman requirements did apply and were not satisfied. However, the three who propounded the more narrow reading of Freedman are still on the Court as well as one Justice (Rehnquist) who believed Freedman did not apply at all. See id. 493 U.S. at 243, 110 S.Ct. at 614 (White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

I do not doubt that the Ordinance satisfies the first requirement of rapid and certain administrative action. The Commissioner must make decisions between 35 and 65 days after filing for first time applications and within 10 days for renewal applications. See Chicago Mun.Code 10–28–160(c). The longer period is not an unreasonable start-up delay for a new business and can be accounted for by sound planning, and the shorter period both is brief and more importantly, if timely commenced, does not have to interrupt the operation of an existing newsstand. Further, after FW/PBS, it seems likely that Freedman's third requirement—that the licensor bear all court-related burdens—does not apply in this case. Chicago's ordinance is not designed to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech, and, like Dallas' ordinance in FW/PBS, it sets out a prerequisite to maintaining whole businesses, thus creating strong incentives to challenge adverse decisions. See supra note 4.

B.

While Freedman' s first and third requirements are obstacles which the ordinance can clear, the second requirement plainly is not. Simply no provision is made for prompt judicial review. The majority tries to finesse 1331 this shortcoming by suggesting that the common law writ of certiorari stands as an adequate substitute for an explicit system of swift judicial review set out in the licensing law. Professing confusion about the rationale behind the Supreme Court's insistence on prompt review, the majority glosses over both that there is no indication in the record that Illinois' writ of certiorari is any quicker a judicial process than other common law actions and that review of administrative findings of fact is highly deferential in Illinois on certiorari. See Norton v. Nicholson, 187 Ill.App.3d 1046, 135 Ill.Dec. 485, 491, 543 N.E.2d 1053, 1059 (1989), appeal denied, 129 Ill.2d 565, 140 Ill.Dec. 673, 550 N.E.2d 558, cert. denied, 496 U.S. 938, 110 S.Ct. 3217, 110 L.Ed.2d 665 (1990). This is clearly not the sort of review Freedman envisioned. That Court was explicit about its concerns and holding:

> [B]ecause only a judicial determination in an adversary proceeding assures the necessary sensitivity to freedom of expression, only a procedure requiring a judicial determination suffices to impose a valid prior restraint.... Any restraint imposed in advance of a final judicial determination on the merits must similarly be limited to preservation of the status quo for the shortest fixed period compatible with sound judicial resolution.... [A]n administrative refusal to license, signifying the censor's view that the film is unprotected, may have a discouraging effect on the exhibitor. Therefore, the procedure must also assure a prompt final judicial decision, to minimize the deterrent effect of an interim and possibly erroneous denial of a license.

Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58–59, 85 S.Ct. at 738–39 (citations omitted). In FW/PBS, Justice O'Connor reemphasized that judicial review must be promptly forthcoming "so as to minimize the suppression of the speech in the event of a license denial." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 606. This idea that speech delayed is speech denied and the recognition that "the censor's business is to censor," Freedman, 380 U.S. at 57, 85 S.Ct. at 738, underlie Freedman' s clear demand for a specialized system of prompt judicial review on the merits. And if Freedman were to apply to this case, there can be little doubt that the Ordinance must fall.

However, I believe that a close look at the holding and rationale of Freedman shows that it does not apply here of its own force. Moreover, uncritically extending Freedman's reach to strike down the Ordinance for lack of judicial review, by attributing broad significance to language in later cases that dealt with schemes substantially dissimilar from the one at issue here, would embark us upon a senseless departure from the core logic undergirding the holdings in Freedman and its progeny; for neither the purpose nor effect of the Ordinance, unlike the laws challenged in that line of cases, is to involve the licensor in any decisionmaking of constitutional proportion.

Freedman and its immediate offspring involved various administrative attempts to ban obscene materials. Typically, bodies were set up to cull through the contents of expressive materials to decide whether or not to permit dissemination. If an administrative finding of obscenity or the like was made, a license would not issue, and the material could not legally be promulgated in the desired forum. See Freedman, 380 U.S. at 521 n. 2, 85 S.Ct. at 736 n. 2 (Board of Censors approving films which are "moral and proper" and disapproving those which are "obscene, or ... tend ... to debase or corrupt moral or incite to crimes"); Teitel Film Corp. v. Cusack, 390 U.S. 139, 140, 88 S.Ct. 754, 755, 19 L.Ed.2d 966 (1968) (per curiam) (licensing system examining films for obscenity); Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410, 411–14, 91 S.Ct. 423, 425–27, 27 L.Ed.2d 498 (1971) (postal censorship scheme inspecting mails for obscenity); United States v. Thirty-seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 365–66, 91 S.Ct. 1400, 1402–03, 28 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971) (custom agents confiscating imported obscene materials); Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 548, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1241, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (municipal theater directors rejecting performance of "Hair" believing show was obscene and thus not "in the best interest of the community"); cf. Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 316 & n. 14, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 1161 & n. 14 (1980) (per curiam) (state law authorizing 1332 state judges to enter temporary restraining orders and injunctions of indefinite duration against motion pictures without a final adjudication of obscenity).

Several themes emerged from the post-Freedman cases with regard to the necessity for procedural safeguards. The first, initially dominant theme permeated Freedman itself. There the Court's concerns focused on the institutional tendency of censorship boards to overcensor. "Because the censor's business is to censor, there inheres the danger that he may well be less responsive than a court—part of an independent branch of government—to the constitutionally protected interests in free expression." Freedman, 380 U.S. at 57–58, 85 S.Ct. at 738–39. Prompt judicial review and other procedural requirements were required to ameliorate the unacceptable risk of undue suppression of speech. See id. at 58, 85 S.Ct. at 738.[5] This distrust of anything short of a full-blown judicial determination of the protected character of speech carried through the cases that followed[6] and together with the general distaste for unnecessary delay of speech underlaid the continuing insistence on prompt judicial review.

5 Note that the basic problem in Freedman was not unbridled discretion in administrative hands, but the inadequacy of administrative processes in general to demarcate the correct line between protected and unprotected speech. The Court did recognize, however, that these two very different shortcomings present a common danger: the risk of oversuppression of speech. See id. 380 U.S. at 57, 85 S.Ct. at 738.

6 In Southeastern Promotions, the Court acknowledged that independent of an administrative board's ability to correctly categorize speech, it is always necessary that what the administrative body purports to decide constitutes a constitutionally permissible basis for preventing speech. See Southeastern Promotions, 420 U.S. at 558, 95 S.Ct. at 1246. But because the Court found inadequate procedural safeguards in the case, it did not reach the issue of whether as a substantive matter a production can be kept off a public stage because it is not deemed "culturally uplifting or healthful." Id. at 558, 561, 95 S.Ct. at 1246, 1247.

A second, and somewhat different, theme can be gleaned from the two most recent cases invoking Freedman. These cases did not involve licensing laws under which administrative officials were overtly charged with making decisions of constitutional dimension. In Riley v. National Federation of the Blind of North Carolina, 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988), the Supreme Court examined a Maryland requirement that professional fundraisers be licensed before conducting charitable solicitations. The law did not purport to pass judgment on the expressive content of anticipated solicitation, but neither did it set a time limit within which the licensor was required to decide upon permit requests. See id. at 802, 108 S.Ct. at 2680. Because of the possibility of indefinite delay, nothing "effectively constrain[ed] the licensor's discretion," and the statute was struck down for lack of procedural safeguards. Id. FW/PBS also involved an administrative provision requiring that those who wished to engage in a particular line of business—in this case maintaining adult entertainment establishments—procure a special license. Here too "[the] regulatory scheme allow[ed] indefinite postponement of the issuance of a license." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 110 S.Ct. at 606. Expanding on what was intimated by the Riley Court, Justice O'Connor's opinion[7] pointed out that granting a licensor unlimited time to issue a license and vesting him with broad discretion in making the decision to issue are really two sides of the same coin: "Where the licensor has unlimited time within which to issue a license, the risk of arbitrary suppression is as great as the provision of unbridled discretion." Id. at 227, 110 S.Ct. at 605.

7 She was writing for three Justices. See supra note 4.

The common danger posed by licensors not anchored by either standards or time constraints is the opportunity for the content based suppression of speech. See Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 763–64, 108 S.Ct. at 2147–48. By manipulating loose standards or by delaying action, a licensor can suppress speech of which he disapproves. This grave risk, see R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, —— – ——, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 2543–44, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992), was presented by the non-time restricted processes in both Riley and FW/PBS and could be adequately abated 1333 only by the availability of prompt judicial review.

I believe that these cases indicate that the judgments we wisely do not trust to administrative officials without the benefit of a watchful judicial eye are those judgments that are made or are likely to be made in the First Amendment plane. Cf. Chicago Teachers Union v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292, 309, 106 S.Ct. at 1077 (1986) (reasoning that because "the agency shop itself impinges on the nonunion employees' First Amendment interests," a "reasonably prompt decision by an impartial decisionmaker" as to the appropriateness of mandatory contributions to a collective bargaining agent is necessary). Determinations of what is protected speech and determinations likely to be made according to one person's view of what is favored speech involve those sorts of judgments. As a corollary, then, schemes that abjure such judgments —unlike those in Riley and FW/PBS—should not be required to include a Freedman system of judicial review. Cf. Hudson, 475 U.S. at 307 n. 20, 106 S.Ct. at 1076 n. 20 (suggesting that Freedman procedures are not necessary in all situations involving First Amendment materials). Clearly included among such nonthreatening schemes are those that only ask and allow administrators to make the kind of determinations for which they are especially suited; e.g. questions about city aesthetics, traffic flow or City Code violations.

Certainly, the Ordinance is in that category of innocuous schemes which a specially mandated judicial review mechanism would only hamper through inappropriate and inefficient second-guessing of legitimate administrative decisions. As discussed, the Ordinance contains definite and reasonable time constraints as well as standards and a structure which effectively foreclose any serious opportunity for content based decisionmaking. It does not put before the licensor the authority, information or mechanism by which he could make decisions of direct First Amendment concern. Consequently, the Ordinance does not implicate the kinds of risks which should necessitate a special provision for judicial review.

IV.

Furthermore, I agree with the majority's conclusion that the place and manner restrictions that the Ordinance imposes on licensed newsstands fall within the limits of constitutional acceptability. For all of the foregoing reasons, I believe that the Ordinance survives facial attack and should be upheld. I therefore concur in the judgment.

RIPPLE, Circuit Judge, with whom CUDAHY and ILANA DIAMOND ROVNER, Circuit Judges, join concurring.

The significant number of opinions already filed in this case would, under most circumstances, be a substantial disincentive to another contribution by a single member of the court. The eyes of the bench and bar, and certainly those of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States who will undoubtedly be asked to review our work, are a fragile national resource. Under the unique circumstances presented here, however, an addition to the dialogue is justified because this case presents a most difficult problem for the court, a problem that, in the final analysis, can only be resolved by additional guidance from the Supreme Court of the United States. Under such circumstances, we have an obligation to examine thoroughly the matter while it is before us.

We must frankly admit the source of our difficulty. The opinions of the Supreme Court in FW/PBS v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), and Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988), applied literally, appear to provide an analytical framework for the problem before us. My dissenting colleagues have filed a thorough exposition of this approach and, if the Supreme Court intends that FW/PBS and Lakewood be read and applied in such a formal fashion, this opinion has much to recommend it. By contrast, the principal opinion apparently finds the approach of these cases to produce an unrealistic result and seeks to avoid their application by recharacterizing the situation presented by this case as devoid of any expressive activity. In order to accomplish this feat, the principal opinion must declare that the placement 1334 of a newsstand, as opposed to a newsrack, does not implicate expressive activity. I respectfully submit that this approach is untenable. In Lakewood, the Supreme Court expressly noted that the regulatory scheme at issue in that case involved "expression or conduct commonly associated with expression: the circulation of newspapers." 486 U.S. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. This case also involves the circulation of newspapers. The fact that one case involved a small, mechanical stand and the other a larger, manned stand cannot alter the reality that both involve expression. Indeed, the awkwardness of the plurality's attempt at a quick fix to this difficult problem is readily apparent in the opinion's subsequent reliance, despite its declaration that the First Amendment is not implicated, on a traditional First Amendment analysis—time, place, and manner regulation—to resolve ultimately the merits of the case.

In my view, we must frankly face up to the difficulty before us. This case does involve a First Amendment interest. Like Judge Flaum, I believe that, if FW/PBS and Lakewood do not govern our decision, we must be able to discern a principled doctrinal distinction between them and the case before us. A useful key to unlocking this analytical conundrum is, I believe, the established analysis applicable to time, place, or manner restrictions. For a very long time the Supreme Court has had to deal with even-handed attempts to regulate the exercise of expression in public forums. Parade or demonstration permits are the usual context in which these cases have arisen. The Court has evaluated such attempts by governments to bring order to the public forum under what is commonly known as time, place, or manner analysis. See Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). The Court has "often noted that restrictions of this kind are valid provided that they are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternate channels for communication of the information." Id. at 293, 104 S.Ct. at 3069; see also Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 576, 61 S.Ct. 762, 766, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941) ("If a municipality has authority to control the use of its public streets for parades or processions, as it undoubtedly has, it cannot be denied authority to give consideration, without unfair discrimination, to time, place, and manner in relation to the other purposes of the streets."). [1]

[1] The Court also has used time, place, and manner analysis to evaluate restrictions on expression outside the parade and demonstration context. See, e.g., Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2753, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (upholding noise ordinance under Clark time, place, and manner formulation); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) (stating that zoning ordinance limiting placement of adult theatres was content neutral and valid as a time, place, manner regulation); Heffron v. International Soc'y for Krishna Consciousness, 452 U.S. 640, 647, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981) (holding state fair rule that required all distribution and sale of materials to take place from fixed location was reasonable time, place, and manner restriction); Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 1830, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976) (acknowledging time, place, manner analysis for restrictions "that are justified without reference to the content of speech, that ... serve a significant governmental interest, and that ... leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information," but holding test inapplicable to ban on advertisement of prescription drug prices which made reference to content).

If we are to apply this approach to the situation before us, we must deal frankly with FW/PBS and Lakewood which, our dissenting colleagues remind us, appear to have an easy application to this case. These two cases appear to apply prior restraint analysis to fact situations that are the functional equivalent of those situations that the Court had analyzed traditionally under the time, place, and manner analysis. Specifically, in Lakewood, the Court struck down as facially invalid an ordinance requiring a license to place newspaper dispensing machines on the city streets. Similarly, in FW/PBS, the Court struck down parts of an ordinance requiring the licensing of adult businesses. In both cases, the Court characterized the restriction imposed by the ordinance as a prior restraint and determined that its failure to comply with the stringent mandate of 1335 Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), rendered the ordinance unconstitutional.

We must determine why, in Lakewood and FW/PBS, the Court did not follow its usual approach of treating factual situations such as these as susceptible to time, place, and manner analysis and instead employed prior restraint analysis. What distinguishes the Court's treatment of licensing schemes in these two sets of cases is the presence of unfettered discretion. In both Cox and Clark, the Court dealt with the administration of an ordinance or regulation which proscribed the activity of the licensing authority. In fact, the Cox Court distinguished those cases in which government officials were unrestrained in their power to grant or deny permits. 312 U.S. at 577, 61 S.Ct. at 766. In both Lakewood and FW/PBS, however, there was unfettered discretion to grant or deny the license—in Lakewood pursuant to the very language of the ordinance and in FW/PBS pursuant to the way the licensing official could delay the licensing decision, presumably indefinitely. This type of discretion, in the Court's eyes, "gives a government official or agency substantial power to discriminate based on the content or viewpoint of speech by suppressing disfavored speech or disliked speakers." Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 759, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. It also presents the possibility of selfcensorship. Id. Because of these concerns, the Court in Lakewood struck down the ordinance absent "neutral criteria to insure that the licensing decision is not based on the content," id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2146, and, in FW/PBS, struck down the ordinance absent the procedural guarantees of Freedman, 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. at 606.

The concerns the Court voiced in both Lakewood and FW/PBS are not present here. The Chicago ordinance sets forth criteria according to which a permit must be evaluated. Furthermore, there is a time limit within which city officials must respond to the application. In no way does the ordinance place unfettered discretion in the hands of city officials. As a result, there is no risk of either hidden or self censorship.[2] It is the absence of this discretion, and the risks inherent in it, which allows us to evaluate the ordinance according to the guidelines of Cox, Clark, and, as the plurality mentions, City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986).

2 Lakewood hints at this distinction. In excepting building permits from the scope of its holding, it noted that its holding did not apply to "laws of general application that are not aimed at conduct commonly associated with expression." Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 760–61, 108 S.Ct. at 2145–46. It noted that, although such laws of general application are subject to abuse, the abuse easily can be detected because "the general application of the statute to areas unrelated to expression will provide the courts a yardstick with which to measure the licensor's occasional speech-related decision." Id. at 761, 108 S.Ct. at 2146. Here, we do not deal with laws of general applicability. As demonstrated in the text, however, we do deal with a statute whose structure and operation render content-based abuse at the hand of governmental officials detectable in a relatively easy manner.

I therefore respectfully submit that time, place, and manner analysis is an appropriate analytical tool for the assessment of this statute and, like my colleagues who have joined the principal opinion, I believe that the ordinance in question can be sustained on this basis. I hasten to add, however, that there is a great need for clarification of standards in this area, and I respectfully suggest that this case is deserving of further review in the Supreme Court of the United States. City officials ought to be able to address matters as basic as the regulation of newsstands on the city streets in a more expeditious manner than afforded by litigation of this sort.

CUMMINGS, Circuit Judge, with whom BAUER, Circuit Judge, and FAIRCHILD, Senior Circuit Judge, join, dissenting.

I agree with the majority that no person has an inherent or fundamental right under the Constitution to build a structure on public property, but my agreement with

Judge Manion's opinion ends there. The issue is not whether a municipality may regulate speech taking place on a public sidewalk—of course it may—but what the city must demonstrate to justify the regulation. 1336 Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 515–516, 59 S.Ct. 954, 963–64. I respectfully dissent because the majority's decision is at odds with two recent Supreme Court decisions: City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771, and FW/PBS v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603. In each case, the Court struck down municipal licensing schemes that regulated some form of speech—in Lakewood newsracks, and in FW/PBS sexually oriented businesses—because the ordinances placed too much power in the hands of a city official. The Court feared that the city official might abuse his authority by discriminating against the speaker based on the content of his speech. In the present case, Chicago also seeks to license First Amendment activity and in so doing has vested a city administrator with the power of content discrimination.

By upholding the Chicago ordinance, the majority ignores or contradicts Lakewood and FW/PBS in at least three respects. First, Judge Manion contends that Chicago's newsstand ordinance does not implicate the First Amendment at all because it merely regulates conduct, not speech. This is insupportable. Lakewood struck down a regulation of newsracks as a prior restraint under the First Amendment, and newsracks and newsstands are as close an analogy as one is likely to find. Not even the majority seems persuaded by this view of the First Amendment, since the opinion goes on to analyze Richard Graff's challenge in constitutional terms. Second, Lakewood, FW/PBS and a long series of earlier decisions review licensing schemes directed at First Amendment activity as prior restraints on speech that are valid only if the licensor's power is checked by procedural safeguards. The majority, however, frames Chicago's ordinance as merely a time, place and manner regulation, not a prior restraint, and subjects it to only the most deferential scrutiny. Third, FW/PBS requires an ordinance like Chicago's to provide for prompt judicial review of the decision to deny a license—and FW/PBS shows that common law certiorari cannot meet this requirement. Yet the majority upholds Chicago's newsstand ordinance (which is silent on the subject of judicial review) on the ground that common law certiorari is available. Today's decision can only sow confusion in First Amendment jurisprudence and weaken the protections it affords for newsstand operators and others as well.

Because Lakewood held that erecting newsracks on public property is speech protected under the First Amendment, the majority must explain how newsstands differ from newsracks if it is to hold that the former do not constitute speech. According to the opinion, "newsstands compared to newsracks are much larger, more permanent structures that occupy a significant portion of limited sidewalk space. Thus, building and operating a newsstand is conduct, not speech * * * " (Opinion at p. 1315). The argument, in essence, is that newsstands receive less First Amendment protection than newsracks because they hold more opinions and are bigger. With all due respect, these distinctions cannot remove newsstands from the First Amendment. It is true that the size of newsstands might make them a more inviting subject of municipal regulation, although one large newsstand produces less clutter than several newsracks chained to various street lamps. Yet size itself suggests nothing about whether the selling of newspapers and magazines from a stand is speech or conduct. And since the First Amendment is all about seeing to it that citizens have access to a wide variety of opinions and information, the fact that stands offer more opinions than racks would suggest that they should receive greater, not lesser protection. Cf. Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 377, 47 S.Ct. 641, 648, 71 L.Ed. 1095 (Brandeis, J., concurring); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 20, 65 S.Ct. 1416, 1424, 89 L.Ed. 2013; N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 266, 84 S.Ct. 710, 718, 11 L.Ed.2d 686. Newsracks might be a more convenient target for content discrimination because they sell discrete products, but this fact is also irrelevant in the initial judgment about whether the operation of a newsstand is conduct or speech.

In truth, it is both. Cf. Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342; Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 29 L.Ed.2d 284; 1337 Tinker v. Des Moines School District, 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731. As the majority points out, erecting a structure on a sidewalk is a physical act. But Graff did not seek a permit merely to build a stand on the public pavement; he also wanted permission to show up every morning and hawk his newspapers and magazines from its confines, just like the publisher in Lakewood who used newsracks to sell papers. There is of course no inherent First Amendment value in the mundane activity of placing metal boxes on street corners. Nevertheless, the boxes in Lakewood received constitutional protection because they made the distribution of First Amendment material easier. Here the city argues that Graff can sell his papers and magazines from the sidewalk without the stand, but this misses the point. The stand is an implement of commerce that facilitates the vendor's free speech. Graff's newsstand gives him greater visibility, a stable location, and the ability to sell a wide variety of publications. The publishers in Lakewood could also have sold their papers without newsracks by simply leaving piles of papers on street corners under rocks—with honest purchasers depositing their quarters in small cups. But the Supreme Court has long recognized that the First Amendment protects the expression of ideas as well as ideas themselves, and that distribution is an inseparable part of expression. See, e.g., Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 150, 80 S.Ct. 215, 217, 4 L.Ed.2d 205. To hold otherwise would be to elevate form over substance; one might as well say that publishing a newspaper is purely conduct because, after all, putting ink to paper is a physical act. Moreover, the speech the city seeks to regulate here takes place on a traditional public forum: the sidewalk. Hague, 307 U.S. at 515–516, 59 S.Ct. at 963–64. I do not suggest that all regulation is inappropriate. But to pretend that the First Amendment does not come into play at all is mistaken. As Justice Roberts said in Hague, the right of citizens to use the sidewalk for speech "is not absolute, but relative * * *. But it must not, in the guise of regulation, be abridged or denied." Id.

A second fallacy underlies the majority's discussion. It is that newsstand operators such as Graff do not need the protections of the First Amendment because the potential for abuse is small. The majority suggests both that Chicago lacks the means and will to discriminate on the basis of content, and that newsstands, since they are not associated with one particular publication, are not likely targets of such discrimination. This reasoning is undoubtedly behind the majority's failure to recognize that licensing of newsstand operators constitutes a prior restraint. But newsstand operators do have a point of view based on the publications they choose to peddle. Their decisions to sell or not sell pornography, religious literature and political publications are matters of judgment, advocacy and editorial discretion, like booksellers. Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 72 S.Ct. 777, 96 L.Ed. 1098; Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 56 S.Ct. 444, 80 L.Ed. 660; Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 150, 80 S.Ct. 215, 217, 4 L.Ed.2d 205. Recall that Graff's suit like FW/PBS and Lakewood is a facial challenge; thus the harm is necessarily theoretical. As the majority correctly points out, it is unlikely that the mayor in a pique over an unfavorable editorial would order municipal employees to revoke the license of every newsstand selling the Chicago Tribune (i.e., every newsstand in the city). But it is hardly a stretch to imagine city officials using the threat, of license renewal to combat the prevalence of pornographic but perfectly legal magazines on the sidewalks. Nor is it difficult to imagine officials, angry over articles in one of the many smaller, less visible weekly publications sold in Chicago, threatening newsstand operators who refuse to drop the offending organ. The majority suggests that even if every newsstand were closed, the Chicago Tribune would have other methods of distribution including newsboys, newsracks and in-building newsstands. This is true enough for the Chicago Tribune, but not so for the hundreds of other, smaller, off-beat publications that are available only at newsstands. To these publications, newsstands—where the marginal cost of carrying an additional paper or magazine is low—represent the only access to the marketplace; after all, not every publisher can afford to blanket the city with newsracks or persuade bookstores paying premium rents to sell its product.

1338 Moreover, contrary to the majority's assertions, the ordinance at issue does leave room for city officials to punish newsstands based on content. Though at first blush the statute offers elaborate procedural guidelines for the issuance and denial of permits, these are illusory. For example, Section 10–28–160(a) outlines procedures for hearings and reports by which a City Council committee is to comment on a proposed newsstand license. But these procedures are entirely optional. Under the ordinance the City Council could decide not to comment on newsstand applications at all. In addition, in each case not involving an historical landmark, the Commissioner of Public Works is the sole, unfettered decisionmaker. It is a measure of the leniency of the city's criteria that Graff's application was ultimately denied even though his stand has operated at the same site for approximately seventy years; the ordinance instructs the Commissioner to consider a stand's longevity before granting or denying a permit, but this did not help Graff. Perhaps the most glaring deficiency in the ordinance, however, is the lone reference to subsequent review of the Commissioner's decision. Under Section 10–28–160(c), a vendor whose application is denied has ten days to request a hearing "at which he will be given an opportunity to prove that the determination of the Commissioner was in error." The ordinance does not define error or specify what proof is required. And the person who reviews the decision by the Commissioner of Public Works is none other than the Commissioner of Public Works! The ordinance merely instructs the Commissioner to issue a permit promptly if he "determines that his previous determination was incorrect." Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–160(c). Given the lack of genuine means for appeal, judicial or otherwise, and the purely optional nature of these procedures, the city's standards are mere window-dressing rather than a practical check on the power of the administrator.

The city contends that any attempt at content discrimination would fail because permit applications do not contain a list of what publications a particular newsstand sells. This is hardly comforting. City officials, were they so inclined, could stroll over to a stand and examine for themselves what magazines are sold. The ordinance also contains no minimum or maximum limit on the number of permits issued. Thus were the Commissioner seeking to punish a stand for selling a specific publication, he would not face the obstacle of having to find a replacement vendor. Officials also are expressly instructed under the ordinance to give preference to stands selling the most daily newspapers. The majority characterizes this provision as "an obvious attempt at variety, not indoctrination" (Opinion at p. 1321). But why does Chicago feel compelled to state a preference when the marketplace itself will prompt newsstand operators to carry more dailies if, as the majority maintains, they reach the most number of people? This looks like an attempt by officials to curry favor with the most powerful press in the city.

Each of these deficiencies is aggravated by the silence of the ordinance on the subject of judicial review. Here is where the Chicago regulation runs smack into a constitutional wall. The majority tries to steer around the wall by holding that the ordinance is not a prior restraint and subject to merely time, place and manner analysis. The majority's view ensues from its treatment of the Chicago regulation as a zoning ordinance rather than a licensing scheme. Thus the majority analogizes Graff's challenge to City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. In that case the Court upheld a municipal ordinance prohibiting adult theaters from setting up shop close to a house, church, park or school. The Court applied a time, place and manner analysis —that is, the justices asked only whether the ordinance was designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and whether it allowed for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. Id. at 50, 106 S.Ct. at 930. But the ordinance in City of Renton was a zoning restriction— that is, it established rules that applied across the board to all similarly situated enterprises. There was no threat in City of Renton, then, that a decisionmaker would discriminate against individual merchants based on the content of what they sold. Under a licensing scheme, by contrast, a city official is vested with the power to make decisions regarding individual 1339 permit applicants. The Chicago ordinance—where an official grants or denies individual permit applications and then reviews the permits periodically—is analogous not to the ordinance in City of Renton but to the ordinances in FW/PBS and Lakewood.

Chicago's licensing scheme represents a classic prior restraint because it forces news vendors to apply for a permit from local officials before they can sell newspapers and magazines; the city itself assumes the power to regulate speech and puts the authority of denial in the hands of one official. As the Court said in Lakewood, "a facial challenge lies whenever a licensing law gives a government official or agency substantial power to discriminate based on the content or viewpoint of speech by suppressing disfavored speech or disliked speakers." 486 U.S. at 759, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. There the Court recognized two critical factors—both present in this case as well—that identified a licensing scheme subject to facial challenge. First, businesses had to apply for licenses that were periodically renewed by the issuer. Second, the licensing system was "directed narrowly and specifically at expression or conduct commonly associated with expression: the circulation of newspapers." Id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. at 2145. The Chicago ordinance is also directed specifically at newsstand operators: "It shall be unlawful for any person to erect, locate, construct or maintain any newspaper stand * * * without obtaining a permit * * *." Chicago Mun.Code § 10–28–130.

A licensing scheme that operates as a prior restraint, as opposed to a zoning ordinance, is subject to more intense scrutiny than mere time, place and manner analysis; the regulation must also provide adequate procedural safeguards to prevent city officials from abusing their discretion. The Supreme Court has held in a long line of cases that authority exercised to administer a licensing scheme must be bounded by clear and precise standards where officials have the power to foreclose speech in public places. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 553, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1243, 43 L.Ed.2d 448; Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 150–151, 89 S.Ct. 935, 938–39; Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 322, 78 S.Ct. 277, 282, 2 L.Ed.2d 302; Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290, 293–294, 71 S.Ct. 312, 314–15, 95 L.Ed. 280; Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 161–162, 60 S.Ct. 146, 149–51, 84 L.Ed. 155; Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954. A prior restraint "avoids constitutional infirmity only if it takes place under procedural safeguards designed to obviate the dangers of a censorship system." Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58, 85 S.Ct. 734, 738, 13 L.Ed.2d 649. An ordinance must contain explicit limits on the decisionmaker's discretion. Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 769, 108 S.Ct. at 2150. It is also clear that these limits must exist whether or not a municipal ordinance also happens to pass muster as a time, place and manner restriction. In FW/PBS, for example, the plurality did not even reach the time, place and manner question because the procedural safeguards in that ordinance were inadequate. 493 U.S. at 223, 110 S.Ct. at 603.

It is thus both surprising and dismaying that the Court's decision today focuses so heavily on the merits of the Chicago ordinance as a time, place and manner restriction, to the exclusion of its other failings. Given the lack of sufficient procedural safeguards, the majority's discussion of time, place and manner is interesting, but beside the point. Under FW/PBS, which by the way follows from a long line of cases setting forth similar standards, a city may only license a business associated with First Amendment freedoms if, first, the licensor is obligated to grant or deny the permit within a specified and reasonable time during which the status quo is maintained and, second, if there is the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event the license is erroneously denied. Id. at 228, 110 S.Ct. at 606. A ministerial action denying a license is not presumptively invalid, unlike most prior restraints, and the city is not required to justify its decision in court on every occasion. Id. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 607. However, the vendor denied a license must be able to seek prompt judicial review, and the absence of review is fatal. See Southeastern Promotions, 420 U.S. at 561–562, 95 S.Ct. at 1247–48; 1340 FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 606;[1] Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58, 85 S.Ct. at 738; cf. Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 442–443, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1328–29, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469.

1 The majority suggests that reliance on FW/PBS is misplaced because part of Justice O'Connor's opinion was joined by only two other justices. But three other justices concurred in the judgment and criticized Justice O'Connor's position because the procedural safeguards she prescribed were not strong enough!

Even the majority admits that in Freedman the Supreme Court has "set out the apparent requirement that an ordinance such as this explicitly provide for prompt judicial review" (Opinion at p. 1324). Since the Chicago ordinance makes no mention of prompt judicial review, and indeed provides no mechanism for it, it must be invalid. According to the majority, however, "it is not clear" why the Freedman Court chose to require that licensing schemes make explicit provision for prompt judicial review when common law certiorari is available (Opinion at p. 1324). The majority uses its confusion as an excuse simply to ignore the requirement by stating that the availability of common law certiorari is an adequate form of judicial review when an ordinance is otherwise silent. The majority's conclusion is in direct conflict with FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 606. In that case, the Supreme Court held that a municipal ordinance—where of course appeal by common law certiorari was also available—was invalid in part because it "fail[ed] to provide an avenue for prompt judicial review so as to minimize suppression of the speech in the event of a license denial. We therefore hold that the failure to provide these essential safeguards renders the ordinance's licensing requirement unconstitutional insofar as it is enforced against those businesses engaged in First Amendment activity * * *." 493 U.S. at 229, 110 S.Ct. at 606. In fact, the ordinance struck down in FW/PBS for want of judicial review had a more elaborate appeals procedure than Chicago's newsstand ordinance, including the right to take one's case to a permit and license appeal board and to an automatic stay during those proceedings.[2] Clearly, if the ever-present availability of common law certiorari was unable to cure the ordinance in Dallas, it cannot save the Chicago ordinance either. The majority's holding to the contrary puts this Circuit at odds with an explicit and oft-repeated mandate from the Supreme Court.

2 The Dallas ordinance is reprinted as an appendix to the district court's decision in FW/PBS. Dumas

> v. City of Dallas, 648 F.Supp. 1061, 1084–1085 (N.D.Tex.1986).

Common law certiorari is insufficient because it is much too slow and uncertain as a mechanism for safeguarding speech. It is an unfortunate fact of life in the modern court system that it may take years, and cost a plaintiff a great deal of money, before his complaint receives a hearing on the merits. Contrast that with the traditional vigilance First Amendment jurisprudence has shown toward prior restraints on speech:

> Any system of prior restraint * * * "comes to this Court bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity." * * * The presumption against prior restraints is heavier—and the degree of protection broader—than that against limits on expression imposed by criminal penalties. Behind the distinction is a theory deeply etched in our law: a free society prefers to punish the few who abuse rights of speech after they break the law than to throttle them and all others beforehand. It is always difficult to know in advance what an individual will say, and the line between legitimate and illegitimate speech is often so finely drawn that the risks of freewheeling censorship are formidable.

Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., Inc., 445 U.S. 308, 316 n. 13, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 1161 n. 13, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (citations omitted). To force a purveyor of First Amendment materials whose speech has been stifled to wait months, if not years, for a court to pass judgment on his case is anathema to prior restraint law. See Kingsley Books, 354 U.S. at 438–443, 77 S.Ct. at 1326–29 (upholding procedural safeguards where statute required obscenity hearing within one day of charge, and judicial decision within two days of hearing). Moreover, under common law certiorari the government is as a general rule 1341 not enjoined from prohibiting speech while the case is being appealed. Chicago profits by delay while the speaker and audience suffer.

The majority posits the curious argument that Illinois law prevents municipalities from specifying what form of judicial review an administrative decision must receive. Perhaps. But since when does a city gain special dispensation to violate the United States Constitution because a state law contradicts it? Under the Supremacy clause, the state law must give. Nor is it clear that Illinois law does prevent Chicago from specifying a form of prompt judicial review. The cases cited by the majority, Nowicki v. Evanston Fair Housing Review Board, 62 Ill.2d 11, 338 N.E.2d 186 (1975), and Quinlan & Tyson, Inc. v. City of Evanston, 25 Ill.App.3d 879, 324 N.E.2d 65 (1st Dist.1975), stand mainly for the proposition that Illinois cities lack the power to alter the jurisdiction of state circuit courts. This would not prevent the municipality from specifying an expedited procedure, or petitioning the state legislature for a minor change in the law, or even setting up an administrative review procedure at least to blunt the unfairness of having the Commissioner of Public Works act as the primary reviewer of his own decisions.

The majority's approach to Graff's challenge is confusing indeed. After today's decision, it is unclear who may bring facial challenges, whether licensing schemes directed at First Amendment activity are to be analyzed as prior restraints, whether a licensing restriction aimed purportedly only at the time, place and manner of speech must include procedural safeguards, and whether those safeguards must encompass prompt judicial review. Indeed, it is not even clear after today's decision whether selling newspapers from anything other than a corner box implicates the First Amendment. While regulation of the typical modern newsstand, with its shabby mix of magazines specializing in pornography, tattoos and motorcycles, may not arouse passionate concern about the denial of free speech, newsstands remain an important sector of the newspaper industry, particularly in a big-city market such as Chicago. See amici curiae of Chicago Tribune, Chicago Sun–Times and Gannett Satellite Information Network, Inc., publisher of USA Today. The city's regulation thus strikes at the core of the First Amendment. I would hold that Chicago may regulate newsstands,[3] but that its burden must be higher than what the Court requires today—a burden that the Chicago ordinance in its present form cannot meet because of the absence of judicial review. Because of the confusion that will inevitably flow from the majority decision, I respectfully dissent.

3 The newsstand in question harmonizes with the appearance of the adjacent former Chicago Public Library, is set unobtrusively at the edge of one side of the building, does not interfere with its maintenance and does not block the sidewalk.

All Citations

9 F.3d 1309, 62 USLW 2366

62 USLW 2366

End of Document

88 F.3d 441
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

NORTH AVENUE NOVELTIES, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
CITY OF CHICAGO, an Illinois municipal corporation, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 95–2474.
|
Argued May 17, 1996.
|
Decided July 1, 1996.
|
Rehearing Denied July 18, 1996.

Adult bookstore brought action against city challenging constitutionality of "adult use" provisions of city zoning ordinance. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Harry D. Leinenweber, J., held that ordinance was constitutional. Bookstore appealed. The Court of Appeals, Cummings, Circuit Judge, held that ordinance offers reasonable opportunity to disseminate speech at issue so as to comply with First Amendment even though ordinance sets aside lesser amount of space for adult uses than other cities.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (6)

[1] Federal Civil Procedure
Construction against pleader

Complaints are construed favorably to their drafters.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Zoning and Planning
Validity of regulations

Adult bookstore which was operating in planned manufacturing district and within 1,000 feet from residential district in violation of adult-use provisions of city zoning ordinance had standing to challenge provisions as unconstitutional limitation on total amount of sexually explicit speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Chicago, Ill. Municipal Code §§ 17–9.3–2(B)(6), 17–9.3–3(A)(4) (1992).

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Time, place, and manner regulations of expression are constitutional so long as they are designed to serve substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Government bears burden of justifying restriction which time, place, or manner regulation places on speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Zoning and Land Use

Federal Constitution does not mandate that any minimum percentage of land be made available for certain types of speech; what it does require is that zoning schemes which regulate location of speech provide reasonable opportunity to disseminate speech at issue. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

14 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

City zoning ordinance, which limits location of adult uses to commercial and manufacturing districts and permits uses only if they are more than 1,000 feet from existing adult use, school, place of worship, or residential district, offers reasonable opportunity to disseminate speech at issue so as to comply with First Amendment even though ordinance sets aside lesser amount of space for adult uses than other cities; numerous adult-use sites were available when plaintiff opened adult bookstore business, between 22 and 56 locations were available for new adult uses, city zoning administrator received only about four or five inquiries per year concerning adult-use locations, and no person had attempted to open adult use but was prevented from doing so by ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Chicago, Ill. Municipal Code §§ 17–9.3–2(B)(6), 17–9.3–3(A)(4) (1992).

24 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

442 Michael Null, Reed Lee (argued), and Deidre Baumann, Null & Associates, Chicago, IL, for North Avenue Novelties, Inc.

Lawrence Rosenthal, Benna R. Solomon, Anita K. Modak–Truran, Kenneth L. Schmetterer (argued), and Susan S. Sher, Office of Corporation Counsel, Appeals Division, Chicago, IL, for City of Chicago.

Before CUMMINGS, BAUER and KANNE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

CUMMINGS, Circuit Judge.

Plaintiff North Avenue Novelties, Inc. ("Novelties") seeks a declaratory judgment that the provisions of the Chicago Zoning Ordinance specifying the location of "adult uses" in Chicago are unconstitutional. For the following reasons, we affirm the district court's conclusion that the ordinance is not unconstitutional.

I.

It is helpful to begin by examining the overall scheme of the Chicago Zoning Ordinance. Decades ago, the City of Chicago was divided into Residential Districts, Business Districts, Commercial Districts, and Manufacturing Districts. The ordinance was subsequently amended to create a fifth type: Planned Manufacturing Districts ("PMDs"). Like any zoning scheme, the purpose of these divisions was to ensure conformity in the types of buildings and activities that comprise each area, and to achieve this result the Chicago Municipal Code outlines the specific "permitted uses" and "special uses" for each district. Any use that is not specifically listed is prohibited. See 443 Williams v. City of Bloomington, 108 Ill.App.2d 307, 311, 247 N.E.2d 446, 449 (4th Dist.1969).

In 1992, the City of Chicago amended the Zoning Ordinance to limit the location of "adult uses." It did so in two ways. First, it designated adult uses as "special uses" only for Commercial and Manufacturing Districts.[1] Second, it dictated that adult uses are only permitted if they are located at least 1,000 feet from (a) any existing adult use; (b) any existing school or place of worship; and (c) any district zoned for residential use. Chicago, Ill. Municipal Code §§ 17–9.3–2(B)(6) & 17–9.3–3(A)(4) (1992).

1 Originally, adult uses were only "special uses" in General Commercial Districts (C2–1 to C2–5) and Commercial–Manufacturing Districts (C3–1 to C3–7). However, amendments in 1993 and 1994 expanded the area to encompass all Commercial Districts and Manufacturing Districts.

Novelties opened its bookstore in 1992 at 1308 W. North Avenue in Chicago. Given the sexual character of its products, the bookstore easily qualified as an "adult use" under the ordinance. However, the bookstore's location is such that it fails both adult use requirements. It is not within a Commercial or Manufacturing District, but is located in a PMD known as the "Elston Corridor PMD." And, it is only 825 feet from a Residential District. Thus Novelties is precluded from operating the bookstore at its current location.

II.

As in any case, we must initially determine whether this dispute is properly before us. Although the district court concluded that the adult use provisions of the Chicago Zoning Ordinance were not unconstitutional, it initially held that Novelties lacked standing to assert its claim. This conclusion was based upon the fact that commercial and retail businesses—adult or otherwise—are not permitted to operate in PMD areas. See Chicago, Ill. Municipal Code §§ 17, Part F, ch. 10.3–1 (permitted uses) & 10.4–1 (special uses).[2] As a result, the court decided that a determination that the specific adult use provisions were unconstitutional would not change Novelties' position because the provisions prohibiting commercial operations in PMDs would still preclude the bookstore's operation.

[2] The regulations for the Elston Corridor PMD are the same as those governing an M1–3 Restricted Manufacturing District. However, despite this fact, adult uses are not permitted anywhere within the PMD because the amendment that allowed adult uses in M1–3 districts specifically stated that it did not apply to PMDs.

We recently addressed a similar situation in Harp Advertising Illinois v. Village of Chicago Ridge, Ill., 9 F.3d 1290 (7th Cir.1993). In Harp, an advertising company wanted to erect a billboard in Chicago Ridge, Illinois, but the village's zoning code prohibited all off-premises signs. The company brought suit alleging that the zoning code violated the First Amendment. That code was not the only ordinance in play, however, for the village's sign code prohibited all signs with faces exceeding 200 square feet, which the plaintiff's sign did. Because the plaintiff did not contest the validity of the sign ordinance, we held that it had no standing to challenge the zoning ordinance. We noted that one of the essential elements of standing is redressability: a favorable decision of the court must redress the plaintiff's injury. Id. at 1292 (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 559–560, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2135–36, 119 L.Ed.2d 351). Holding that the zoning ordinance was unconstitutional would not have changed the plaintiff's position because its sign would still have been precluded by another, valid, existing ordinance.

Harp is similar to our case in that another zoning provision also precludes adult bookstores in Novelties' area: The ordinance prohibits all commercial activity, without regard to sexually explicit nature, in PMD areas. Thus the court below was correct that if one were to simply delete the adult use provisions from the ordinance, the PMD provisions would still remain to preclude Novelties' operation. However, the distinguishing factor between our case and Harp is that, unlike the plaintiff in Harp, Novelties challenges the PMD provisions of the ordinance as well as the adult use provisions, although admittedly it didn't spell this out in its complaint as clearly as it could have.

444 [1] [2] Novelties concedes that the City of Chicago is lawfully permitted under its police power to prohibit commercial and retail operations in areas, like the area here, that have been designated only for manufacturing and industrial business. See Cosmopolitan Nat'l Bank v. County of Cook, 103 Ill.2d 302, 310, 82 Ill.Dec. 649, 653, 469 N.E.2d 183, 187 (1984). However, Novelties challenges Chicago's overall scheme of limiting adult uses to certain specified areas. In essence, this is a facial attack on the ordinance because Novelties alleges that it unconstitutionally limits the total amount of sexually explicit speech. In making this challenge, Novelties necessarily contends that the PMD provisions contribute to the overall speech restriction. One must only set forth in a complaint a "short and plain statement of the claim" in federal court, Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a)(2), and "unlike insurance contracts, complaints are construed favorably to their drafters." Hrubec v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 981 F.2d 962, 963 (7th Cir.1992). It would make little sense to read Novelties' complaint so strictly that it had fully conceded that some provisions of Chicago's Zoning Ordinance could preclude its operation such that it had no case. We conclude that we have jurisdiction to resolve Novelties' claim.

III.

[3] [4] Many municipalities have attempted to lessen the "secondary effects" of adult establishments by controlling their locations. The Chicago Zoning Ordinance is typical in this regard: It does not prohibit sexually explicit expression, but merely requires that such expression take place only in specified areas, and only in a non-concentrated manner. Such restrictions are viewed as content-neutral "time, place, and manner regulations," and are constitutional so long as they are "designed to serve a substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 50, 106 S.Ct. 925, 930, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. As with any restriction on speech, the government bears the burden of justifying the regulation. See, e.g., Board of Trustees of State University of New York v. Fox, 492 U.S. 469, 480, 109 S.Ct. 3028, 3034–35, 106 L.Ed.2d 388; City of Watseka v. Illinois Pub. Action Council, 796 F.2d 1547, 1552 (7th Cir.1986), aff'd, 479 U.S. 1048, 107 S.Ct. 919, 93 L.Ed.2d 972.

Novelties does not disagree with the City of Chicago's substantial interest in regulating the location of sexually explicit materials; it contends only that the ordinance fails to leave open sufficient alternate communication avenues. It recognizes that the Supreme Court has previously upheld very similar zoning schemes: One which dispersed adult uses by requiring that they be 1,000 feet from each other, see Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, and one that concentrated them by requiring that they be 1,000 feet from residential areas, schools, and places of worship, see Renton, supra. Novelties contends, however, that while both of these schemes may have been constitutional in their respective cities, the Chicago Zoning Ordinance violates the First Amendment by merging the strategies and applying them to Chicago. We agree that the holdings of Young and Renton cannot merely be "combined" to conclude that the Chicago zoning scheme is necessarily constitutional; instead the scheme, as it is applied to Chicago's geographic area, must be considered.

In Young, the plurality focused on the fact that the ordinance at issue did not "deny [distributors of sexually explicit materials] access to the market or [render] the viewing public ... unable to satisfy its appetite for sexually explicit fare." Young, 427 U.S. at 62, 96 S.Ct. at 2448. Justice Powell agreed and stated that the "primary concern of the free speech guarantee is that there be full opportunity for expression in all its varied forms to convey a desired message [and] that there be full opportunity for everyone to receive the message." Id. at 76, 96 S.Ct. at 2455 (J. Powell, concurring). Thus in analyzing Chicago's scheme, it is necessary to focus both on the ability of producers as a group to provide sexually explicit expression, as well as on the ability of the public as a whole to receive it.

Both parties used experts to evaluate the available locations for adult uses under the 445 ordinance. Edwin Thomas, a professor of quantitative geography, testified for Novelties, and Thomas Smith, Director of Planning and Development, testified for Chicago. Using the most expansive definition of "school" and "place of worship" possible, Professor Thomas concluded that the zoning ordinance left available roughly 270 acres, in various locations, or less than one percent of the land within Chicago's city limits. Mr. Smith's calculations led to figures for land available for adult use ranging from one percent to three percent. Novelties' entire argument rests upon comparing Thomas' figures with the figures relating to the ordinances at issue in other adult use zoning cases. It notes that the Chicago figures represent smaller acreage than that in Renton, Washington: Chicago would have to set aside for adult uses 5 percent of its land to be equivalent based on total acreage, or make 16,602 acres available to be equivalent based on population. See Renton, supra. And to equal the percentages of available land in Los Angeles, Chicago would need to provide roughly 3,637 acres (compared by land) or 5,943 acres (compared by population) for adult uses. See Topanga Press, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 989 F.2d 1524 (9th Cir.1993) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction against ordinance's application to adult uses). Because Chicago's ordinance sets aside a lesser amount of space for adult uses than other cities, argues Novelties, its scheme is unconstitutional.

[5] The district court properly dismissed these comparisons by noting that the amount of acreage, standing alone, is largely irrelevant. The constitution does not mandate that any minimum percentage of land be made available for certain types of speech. What it does require is that zoning schemes that regulate the location of speech provide a "reasonable opportunity" to disseminate the speech at issue. Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. at 931; Young, 427 U.S. at 71, 96 S.Ct. at 2452–53. Requiring a "reasonable opportunity" in each region can, and most likely does, result in vastly different acreage percentages. But those differences in no way imply that the regions with lower percentages are acting unconstitutionally.

[6] With "reasonable opportunity" as the proper focus, the relevant evidence was as follows: There are currently 35 adult uses within Chicago's city limits. Thomas testified that "numerous" adult use sites were available when Novelties opened for business. He further testified that between 22 and 56 locations (depending upon precisely where adult uses would actually open) are available for new adult uses. The Chicago Zoning Administrator testified that his office receives only about 4 or 5 inquiries per year concerning possible adult use locations. There was no evidence that any person has attempted to open an adult use, but was prevented from doing so by Chicago's ordinance. From this it is clear that the zoning scheme has not lessened the ability of producers of sexually explicit materials to find legal locations throughout Chicago to sell their product. Moreover, there is no indication that the Chicago population is having any difficulty receiving this product. Therefore, the Chicago Zoning Ordinance provides for sufficient alternate channels of communication for sexually explicit materials and is not unconstitutional.

IV.

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's judgment is affirmed.

All Citations

88 F.3d 441

End of Document

633 F.2d 27
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Charles CHULCHIAN, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CITY OF INDIANAPOLIS et al., Defendants-Appellees.

No. 79-2232.
|
Argued April 28, 1980.
|
Decided Oct. 6, 1980.

Theater owner appealed from an order of the District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Indianapolis Division, William E. Steckler, Chief Judge, which upheld certain sections of a city's general business licensing ordinance. The Court of Appeals, Bauer, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) city's construction of the ordinance sufficiently clarified the word "permit;" (2) ordinance was not vague; (3) licensing ordinance which required that licensee knowingly permit illegal conduct on the premises in order to be denied a license did not grant boundless discretion to city, which acknowledged that it bore the burden to prove knowledge of the illegal conduct and that it would not deny a license because of an isolated incident; (4) procedures of the license review board comported with due process; (5) theater owner's 1979 license was wrongfully withheld and it was therefore not permissible to base a further denial on the 1979 proceedings; and (6) federal court of appeals could not order city to issue a license because the administrative process was not complete.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Federal Courts
Questions Considered

Federal Court of Appeals would consider merits of theater owner's challenge of validity of city's general business licensing ordinance as situation capable of repetition, yet evading review, after license administrator denied theater owner's application for 1980 license for substantially same reasons as those advanced to deny 1979 license.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

City's construction of licensing ordinance, which provided that licensee shall not "permit" any sort of illegal conduct or practices to take place, to require knowledge of the illegal conduct by licensee sufficiently clarified word "permit.".

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

While city ordinance, which prohibited licensee from knowingly allowing any illegal activity granted discretion to controller and license review board to consider quantity and quality of illegal conduct, the ordinance was not vague.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Trade or Business

Businesses which deal in material protected by First Amendment are not immune from all regulations; they can be subject to usual panoply of health, safety, licensing, and zoning regulations, as all other businesses. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

Governmental regulation is justified, despite its incidental impact on speech, if it is within constitutional power of the government, if it furthers important or substantial governmental interest, if governmental interest is unrelated to suppression of free expression, and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Municipal Corporations
Public safety and welfare

Municipal Corporations
Public health

City may reasonably desire to protect health, safety, and welfare of patrons of business from illegal conduct and city's interest may properly extend beyond health and safety laws.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General

Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

City ordinance which provided that licensee shall not permit any sort of illegal conduct or practices on the premises, under which ordinance licensee is required to have knowledge of the illegal conduct in order to be denied license, furthered legitimate and substantial governmental interest which was unrelated to suppression of free expression for First Amendment purposes. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

City business licensing ordinance which required that licensee knowingly permit illegal conduct on the premises in order to be denied license did not grant boundless discretion to city, which acknowledged that it bore burden to prove knowledge of the illegal conduct and that it would not deny license because of isolated incident, but, rather, would require pattern of arrests, and was constitutional on its face. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Licenses, permits, and certifications in general

Under Indiana law, city business licensing ordinance providing for trial de novo in which city is free to assert new grounds to support its decision comports with due process. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5, 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Licenses, permits, and certifications in general

Procedures of city license review board which must follow requirements in general business licensing ordinance comport with due process. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 5, 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures, videos and games

Because 1979 proceedings wherein theater owner sought license were dismissed, city license review board never had opportunity to consider whether arrests other than violations of "obscene conduct" ordinance which had been invalidated justified denial of theater owner's 1979 license; therefore, at least for purposes of 1979 license, city failed to meet its burden to prove that theater owner was not qualified for a license under general business licensing ordinance. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures in general

It was not permissible to base denial of theater owner's application for 1980 license on 1979 proceeding wherein city failed to meet its burden to prove that theater owner was not qualified for a license. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Judicial review or intervention

Federal Court of Appeals could not order city to issue license to theater owner because administrative process was not complete.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

28 Richard Kammen, Indianapolis, Ind., for plaintiff-appellant.

JoAnn Hoffman, Indianapolis, Ind., for defendants-appellees.

Before FAIRCHILD, Chief Circuit Judge, BAUER, Circuit Judge, and GRANT, Senior District Judge. *

* The Honorable Robert A. Grant, Senior Judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, is sitting by designation.

Opinion

BAUER, Circuit Judge.

The issue here is the validity of the general business licensing ordinance of the City of Indianapolis under the First Amendment, as applied to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. Plaintiff-appellant Charles Chulchian was denied a license to operate a movie theatre under the ordinance. He appeals that part of the district court's order which upheld certain sections of the ordinance. We affirm the district court's order.

I.

The City of Indianapolis, defendant-appellee here, requires the annual licensing of all businesses in the City. [1] Regulations issued 29 pursuant to the licensing ordinance designate a license administrator as the first level of review. If an application for a license is denied, the applicant is entitled to a hearing before the controller. [2] If the controller also denies the application, the applicant may then appeal to a license review board, whose decision is final. [3]

1 Pertinent sections of the ordinance provide:

Sec. 17-1. Definitions.

As used in this chapter, the following terms shall have the meanings ascribed to them in this section:

Business shall mean and include all kinds of vocations, occupations, professions, enterprises, establishments and all other kinds of activities and matters, together with all devices, vehicles and appurtenances used therein, which are conducted directly or indirectly, on any premises in this city or anywhere else within the jurisdiction of the city.

License shall mean and include the word "permit" and shall mean the privilege of carrying on a specified business within the city; however, both permits and licenses may be granted where specifically authorized under this Code.

Licensee shall include the word "permittee" and shall mean the person to whom a license has been granted and his agents and employees.

Premises shall include all lands, structures, places, the equipment and appurtenances connected with or used in any business, and also any personal property which is either affixed to or is otherwise used in connection with any business.

Public welfare shall mean the prosperity, well-being and convenience of the inhabitants of the city, either as a whole or in some limited group.

Sec. 17-2. Purpose of this chapter.

It is the purpose of this chapter to license certain business activities for the purpose of protecting the public welfare and, in order to achieve this objective, the provisions of this chapter should be liberally construed to that end.

Sec. 17-25. When license is required.

It shall be unlawful for any person, either directly or indirectly, to conduct or maintain any business or premises for which a license is required by this Code or other ordinance, unless a valid license has been obtained therefor from the controller and kept in effect at all times. No person shall operate or permit the operation for him of any business when his license therefor has been suspended, revoked or expired.

Code of Indianapolis ss 17-1, -2, -25.

2 Code of Indianapolis s 17-31(3)-(5). See notes 7, 8 infra.

3 Code of Indianapolis s 17-68.

Plaintiff-appellant Charles Chulchian operates the Rivoli Theater, a movie theatre in Indianapolis, Indiana. The theatre exhibits sexually explicit films. In years prior to 1979, Chulchian sought and obtained a license from the City. Chulchian's application for his 1979 license, however, was denied first by the license administrator and, after a hearing, by the controller. Both the administrator and the controller stated two reasons for refusing Chulchian's license. Both stated that Chulchian violated section 17-6(4) of the ordinance because there were at least ten arrests on the premises for "illegal, immoral or obscene conduct." Second, they stated that the "residents of the area consider the Rivoli 'to create a nuisance,' " in violation of section 17-6(2).[4] Chulchian then filed this suit, attacking the constitutionality of the licensing ordinance and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief under 42 U.S.C. s 1983. The License Review Board voluntarily stayed its consideration of Chulchian's appeal pending the court's decision.

4 The ordinance provides:

Sec. 17-6. General duties of licensees.

Every licensee, his agents and employees, shall:

(1) Permit inspections of his business and premises by public authorities acting pursuant to law;

(2) Conduct his business and premises in such a manner as not to create a nuisance or any sort of hazard to the public;

(3) Keep the premises clean and free from any sort of rubbish or combustible or explosive material;

(4) Not permit any sort of illegal, immoral or obscene conduct or practices to take place on his premises or in the conduct of his business.

On Chulchian's motion for summary judgment, the district court ruled that certain sections of the licensing ordinance were unconstitutional. Evansville Book Mart, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, 477 F.Supp. 128 (S.D.Ind.1979). The court first reviewed the arrests constituting the "illegal, immoral or obscene conduct" allegedly permitted by appellant. The arrests were made pursuant to Indianapolis Code s 20-44, the "obscene conduct ordinance."[5] Without 30 ruling on the ordinance's constitutionality, the court held it invalid under Indiana law as an attempted local law. Id. at 131.

5 Section 20-44, Code of Indianapolis, states:

Any person who utters any obscene or licentious language, where there are persons other than males to be offended thereby; or who applies words to the person of another, or who uses in the presence of another any opprobrious or vile epithet involving moral turpitude or profaning God, Jesus Christ or the Holy Ghost; or who by the use of profane, vile or indecent language, or loud and unusual noises, collects or causes to be collected upon any of the streets, ways or public places of the city, a crowd of three (3) or more persons; or who disturbs the peace and quiet of the city or its inhabitants by loud talking, making unusual noises or by crying any alarm without good cause, or by threatening any person, or challenging him to fight, or menacing him with physical injury or pecuniary loss; or who accosts or approaches any person of the opposite sex unknown to the person, and by word, sign or gesture attempts to speak or become acquainted with such person against his or her will in a public street or in any public place in the city, except in the transaction of legitimate business; or who attempts to entice or procure a person of the opposite or same sex to commit an unlawful act; or who accosts or approaches any person and by word, sign or gesture suggests or invites the doing of an indecent or unnatural act; shall be guilty of an offense.

The court next considered Chulchian's challenges to the two sections on which the controller based denial of his license. The court struck down section 17-31(c)(6) of the ordinance, which permits the controller > to take into consideration the effect of the proposed business or calling upon surrounding property and upon residents or inhabitants thereof; and in granting, denying or revoking said license the controller may exercise his sound discretion as to whether said license should be granted, transferred, denied or revoked.

Code of Indianapolis s 17-31(c)(6). The court held the section "unconstitutional due to its lack of guiding standards for the licensing officials." 477 F.Supp. at 132-33.

The second section provides that a licensee shall "(n)ot permit any sort of illegal, immoral or obscene conduct or practices to take place on his premises or in the conduct of his business." Code of Indianapolis s 17-6(4). The City conceded, and the court ruled, that the use of the words "immoral" and "obscene" was unconstitutional. 477 F.Supp. at 131. The court upheld the rest of the ordinance "because it is content neutral in that it does not single out adult theatres, and is the expression of an equally legitimate City concern, the City's interest in preventing the licensing of businesses the owners of which permit illegal occurrences." Id. at 132. The court ruled that the City may constitutionally deny a license on the basis of illegal conduct other than prior convictions for showing obscene films. The court stated that it did not "have before it documentation of arrests under valid statutes." Id. The court nevertheless denied appellant's request to order the issuance of a license because of representations by the City that "other arrests for violations of valid state statutes had been made recently at the theatre." Id. The court also upheld as constitutionally sufficient the procedures governing the decision of the controller and the License Review Board. Id. at 130.

Chulchian appeals, first, the district court's order upholding the "permitting illegal conduct" portion of section 17-6(4); second, the court's ruling upholding the constitutionality of the procedures governing the controller's decision of the License Review Board; and third, the court's refusal to order the City to issue him a license.

II.

At the outset, we must resolve the procedural posture of this suit. A license to do business in Indianapolis is effective for only one year. We did not hear oral argument until April 1980, after appellant's 1979 license would have expired. The License Review Board, which had agreed to stay consideration of appellant's appeal until this court rendered its decision, dismissed Chulchian's appeal. The present appeal is not moot, however, because appellant's application for a 1980 license has also been denied.

[1] The License Administrator denied appellant's application on the grounds that his 1979 license had been denied and that under section 17-6(2) the operation of his business constituted a nuisance. These reasons are substantially the same as those advanced to deny appellant's 1979 license. We therefore consider the merits of appellant's case as a situation " 'capable of repetition, yet evading review.' " 31 Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 125, 93 S.Ct. 705, 713, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973), quoting Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. I.C.C., 219 U.S. 498, 515, 31 S.Ct. 279, 283, 55 L.Ed. 310 (1911).

III.

A.

The district court's decision striking the words "obscene" and "immoral" from section 17-6(4) is not challenged by the parties. As construed by the district court, the section now reads that a licensee "shall not permit any sort of illegal conduct or practices to take place ...." Appellant argues that the ordinance is unconstitutionally vague because "permit" is undefined and because the type of illegal conduct which will justify denial is not specified.

[2] Although the ordinance has not been authoritatively construed by the Indiana courts, the body charged with its enforcement, the City, has provided a narrowing construction of the statute. See Law Students Civil Rights Research Council, Inc. v. Wadmond, 401 U.S. 154, 162-63, 91 S.Ct. 720, 726, 27 L.Ed.2d 749 (1971). The City first concedes that it cannot deny a license based on conduct beyond the licensee's control. The City acknowledges that section 17-6(4) requires knowledge of the illegal conduct by the licensee. We agree that such a construction sufficiently clarifies "permit."

[3] We also agree that the ordinance has standards for its enforcement. The ordinance prohibits a licensee from knowingly allowing any illegal activity, i. e., any violation of law. It is hornbook law that all persons are deemed to have notice of the law. Other laws which similarly impose liability for violations of law have been upheld from vagueness attacks. See, e. g., United States v. Polizzi, 500 F.2d 856, 874-75 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1121, 95 S.Ct. 802, 42 L.Ed.2d 820 (1975). (Interstate Travel Act.) Compare Entertainment Concepts, Inc., III v. Maciejewski, 631 F.2d 497 (7th Cir. 1980) (no definition of "adult" in zoning ordinance). While the ordinance grants discretion to the controller and the License Review Board to consider the quantity and quality of illegal conduct, it is not vague.

Chulchian next challenges section 17-6(4) as an impermissible regulation of his movie theatre. Chulchian asserts that the ordinance impermissibly treads on constitutionally protected speech because it authorizes the closing of his theatre if he permits illegal conduct. We disagree.

[4] [5] Businesses which deal in material protected by the First Amendment, for example bookstores and theatres, are not immune from all regulation. They can be subject to the usual panoply of health, safety, licensing, and zoning regulations as all other businesses. See Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 62, 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2448, 2456, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (Powell, J., concurring) (1976); Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203, 1214, 1218 (7th Cir. 1980). Enforcement of the ordinance here, however, implicates First Amendment rights. The four part test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), therefore governs our review. Under that test, a governmental regulation is justified, despite its incidental impact on speech, > if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest.

Id. at 377, 88 S.Ct. at 1679. We hold that section 17-6(4), as now construed, meets all these requirements. Consequently, we hold that enforcement of the ordinance by denial of a license is constitutional.

First, the section applies to all businesses in Indianapolis. Although it covers theatres, it does not regulate them based on content. Compare Entertainment Concepts, Inc., III v. Maciejewski; Genusa v. City of Peoria. The Indianapolis provision is typical of many municipal licensing ordinances which hold the operator responsible 32 for conduct on the premises. See, e. g., James Bakalis & Nickie Bakalis, Inc. v. Simonson, 434 F.2d 515, 519 (D.C.Cir.1970) (liquor license ordinance).

[6] The district court held the ordinance valid as fulfilling "the City's interest in preventing the licensing of businesses the owners of which permit illegal occurrences." 477 F.Supp. at 132. The ordinance serves the dual goal of encouraging business responsibility and protecting patrons who frequent the premises. The City may reasonably desire to protect the health, safety, and welfare of patrons of business from illegal conduct, and the City's interest may properly extend beyond health and safety laws. Ralston v. Ryan, 217 Ind. 482, 29 N.E.2d 202 (1940).

[7] The ordinance furthers this interest. First, the illegal conduct must occur on the premises where it is likely to affect the patrons. Next, because of the knowledge requirement, the ordinance does not penalize a licensee for an isolated incident over which he has no control. The ordinance therefore furthers a legitimate and substantial governmental interest that is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. at 1679.

The ordinance here is distinguishable from an ordinance forbidding licensing of an applicant who has been convicted of certain crimes. See, e. g., Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d at 1218-19. Such regulations offend two constitutional values-they first deny a certain class of people the opportunity to exercise First Amendment rights; second, they have not been shown to further any legitimate state interest. Id. A licensee's conduct off the premises may or may not be related to the conduct of his business. In addition, the "criminal convictions" type of statute invariably penalizes the licensee for prior conduct which again may or may not be related to his present conduct of his business. The Indianapolis ordinance, in contrast, holds a licensee responsible only for present conduct on the premises. [6]

6 We briefly considered a similar ordinance in Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203 (7th Cir. 1980). The Peoria ordinance required "that no licensee or person associated with a licensee shall permit anything to occur on licensed premises that is in any manner unlawful." Id. at 1221 (footnote omitted). We held, "(o)n the assumption that Peoria does not mean by this provision to enlarge the licensee's vicarious criminal liability beyond traditional bounds, we see no problem with the provision. As we construe it, it is merely a legal redundancy." Id.

> Appellant's counsel interprets Genusa to mean that the ordinance makes the licensee responsible only for conduct sufficient to hold the licensee liable as a conspirator, accessory, or aider and abettor. We do not think that Genusa intended to define the kinds of conduct for which permits can be revoked by the criminality of the licensee. Were that the case, the provision would run smack into the court's holding striking down the "criminal convictions" provision. Id. at 1218-19. Since the City cannot legitimately deny a license to a person convicted of a crime, it hardly seems logical to allow the City to deny a license to persons who conspire with or aid criminals. Under the interpretation pressed by appellant, the provisions would not be a "legal redundancy," id. at 1221, but a legal nullity. We think that Genusa simply meant that the ordinance could not create a new level of vicarious criminal responsibility. We do think that it is more than a "legal redundancy," however, because it creates a potential civil liability.

[8] Finally, the means chosen are limited so as not to trample on protected expression. United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. at 1679. The ordinance, as we have construed it, requires that a licensee knowingly permit illegal conduct. The City conceded that it cannot use obscenity convictions to justify denial of a license. See Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., Inc., 445 U.S. 308, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980). The City acknowledged in oral argument that it bears the burden to prove knowledge, so that a licensee does not act at his peril. The City also indicated that it would not deny a license because of an isolated incident, but would require a pattern of arrests. The discretion granted under the ordinance is therefore not boundless. As construed by Judge Steckler and this opinion, the provision is constitutional on its face.

33 B.

The scope of our review of the procedures contained in the Indianapolis licensing ordinance has been narrowed considerably due to several concessions by the City in its brief and oral argument. The City first concedes that the applicant must show only that he is generally qualified for a license under sections 17-31(c) and 17-29. [7] Cf. Indiana State Bd. of Registration v. Cummings, 387 N.E.2d 491, 494 (Ind.App.1979) (applicant for health facility administrator's license must make prima facie showing of qualifications). Once he has demonstrated that he has the qualifications listed in section 17-29, the burden "shifts to the agency before whom the application is pending (to) present evidence to the contrary." Appellee's Brief at 7. The City further concedes that if the City fails to present sufficient contrary evidence the controller must issue the license. [8]

7 Section 17-31(c)(3) provides in pertinent part:

> (3) Before issuing or renewing a license, the controller may institute an investigation to determine the qualifications of the applicant or the surety, if a bond is required. Each applicant for a license or the renewal of a license shall have the burden of proving that he is qualified and is entitled to a hearing before the controller, or someone appointed by the controller, to present evidence as to his qualifications. Each applicant for a license or a surety on a bond may be required by the controller to submit evidence under oath or in the form of an affidavit.

Section 17-29 provides:

General qualifications of licensees.

> In order to obtain any license required by this Code or other city ordinance, the applicant shall meet the following requirements:
>
> (1) The applicant must be a citizen of the United States or a declarant for citizenship, as prescribed by law;
>
> (2) The applicant must not have had any license to operate a business revoked or suspended because of his conduct of the business or because of his violation of any law or regulation while conducting that business;

(3) The applicant must agree to comply with all laws, provisions of this Code and other ordinances, all regulations promulgated thereunder and the orders and decisions of all public officials which pertain to his business or premises; he shall also agree that his business and premises will not be used for any unlawful or immoral purposes;

(4) Each corporation must be organized and controlled by the laws of the state or be authorized and qualified by its laws to engage in business in the state.

The qualifications required in section 17-29 are of the general type approved by Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d at 1215. We presume that the City will read the word "immoral" out of section 17-29(3), as it has conceded its use is unconstitutional in section 17-6(4). Supra at 31.

8 Sections 17-31(c)(4) and (5) provide:

(4) If the controller finds an applicant qualified to receive the license for which he has applied, he shall issue the license with his official seal affixed after all license fees have been paid to him, and shall deposit them in the city general fund. All bonds required to be posted in connection with any license shall be approved by the controller as to the surety thereon, and shall be filed with the controller prior to the issuance of the license.

(5) If any license or permit is refused by the controller, the reasons for the refusal shall be stated in writing and delivered to the applicant upon his request; and, if the applicant remedies the reasons for the refusal and becomes qualified for the license or permit, and such facts are presented to the controller and found by him to be correct, the license or permit shall then be issued.

Counsel for the City stated in oral argument that the language in sections (4) and (5) is mandatory in nature.

[9] Two of appellant's contentions remain after the City's concessions. First, Chulchian argues that the provision for a trial de novo in which the City is free to assert new grounds to support its decision is improper. We disagree.

The Board conducts its proceedings pursuant to the Indiana Administrative Adjudication and Court Review Act. Code of Indianapolis s 17-38(c). Indiana law provides that a hearing by a full administrative board governed by that Act may be de novo. Indiana cases have determined that the procedure comports with due process because the parties are afforded notice and an opportunity to prepare. Warren v. Indiana Telephone Co., 217 Ind. 93, 26 N.E.2d 399, 409 (1940).

[10] Finally, we reject Chulchian's assertion that no standards govern the decision of the License Review Board. The Board must follow the requirements in the 34 Licensing Ordinance. The Chairman of the License Review Board testified that the Board also refers to applicable Indiana law and court decisions in making a judgment. We conclude that on their face, the procedures of the License Review Board comport with due process. Any charge that the Board has acted arbitrarily or otherwise in violation of appellant's constitutional rights will have to await action by the Board.

C.

[11] [12] We must now consider the current status of appellant's application. The proceedings on Chulchian's 1979 application were dismissed and further action on his 1980 application was stayed pending our decision. The License Administrator, however, denied Chulchian's 1980 application on the basis of the denial of his 1979 license. Counsel for the City admitted that it denied Chulchian's 1979 license because of violations of the obscene conduct ordinance struck down by Judge Steckler. Contrary to the City's assertion in brief, the judge also invalidated the finding that Chulchian's business was a nuisance since the controller based his determination on community opinion. 477 F.Supp. at 132. Judge Steckler was assured that there were other valid arrests sufficient to justify denial. But because the 1979 proceedings were dismissed, the License Review Board never had the opportunity to consider whether other arrests justified denial of Chulchian's 1979 license. We must assume therefore that at least for purposes of the 1979 license, the City failed to meet its burden that Chulchian was not qualified for a license. The 1979 license was therefore wrongfully withheld, and it is not permissible to base a further denial on the 1979 proceedings.

[13] We cannot order the City to issue a license because the administrative process is not complete. See Indiana State Bd. of Registration v. Cummings, 387 N.E.2d at 497. We note, however, that the License Administrator also denied Chulchian's 1980 application because he "conducted (his) business and premises in such a manner as to create a nuisance to the public" in violation of section 17-6(2). While we have grave reservations about its validity on vagueness and overbreadth grounds, see generally, Rendleman, Civilizing Pornography: The Case For an Exclusive Obscenity Nuisance Statute, 44 U.Chi.L.Rev. 509 (1977), the lower court did not rule on the section's constitutionality. We therefore do not consider it here.

We affirm the order of the district court.

All Citations

633 F.2d 27

936 F.Supp. 1479
United States District Court,
E.D. Wisconsin.

TEE & BEE, INC., Plaintiff,
v.
CITY OF WEST ALLIS, Defendant.

No. 92–CV–1299.
|
Aug. 19, 1996.

Adult bookstore brought action alleging that municipal ordinance regulating adult-oriented establishments violated First Amendment. On municipality's motion for summary judgment, the District Court, Randa, J., held that: (1) bookstore had standing to bring action, even though it had brought state court suit seeking declaration that it no longer qualified as "adult business" under ordinance, and (2) ordinance restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments.

Motion granted.

West Headnotes (29)

[1] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

To have standing to challenge municipal ordinance as facially unconstitutional, adult bookstore was required to demonstrate concrete and specific facts indicating both that challenged ordinance injured bookstore, and that court intervention would benefit bookstore in tangible way.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Adult bookstore's standing to challenge constitutionality of municipal ordinance was required to be evaluated separately with respect to each contested provision of ordinance.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Adult bookstore had standing in federal action to challenge constitutionality of municipal ordinance restricting adult businesses, even though bookstore had brought state court suit seeking declaration that bookstore no longer qualified as "adult business" under ordinance; bookstore reorganized its business in response to municipality's denial of its license application, application was denied based on ordinance disputed in federal action, and bookstore intended to return to its former status should ordinance be invalidated. West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

First Amendment does not immunize adult-oriented businesses from regulations designed to protect public health, safety, and general welfare. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Municipality may regulate activities protected by First Amendment provided that: (1) intended activity lies within governmental body's sphere of regulatory power; (2) regulation furthers important or substantial governmental interest; (3) governmental interest is unrelated to suppressing content of regulated material; and (4) incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than essential to furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment
Licenses
Municipal corporations

Municipality acted within scope of its police power in enacting ordinance restricting First Amendment activity of adult-oriented establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

To establish presence of substantial government interests in enacting ordinance regulating First Amendment activity of adult businesses, municipality was required only to demonstrate that, in enacting ordinance, it relied upon evidence that was reasonably believed to be relevant to problem that municipality addressed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance restricting First Amendment activity of adult businesses was to further substantial government interests of preventing crime, promoting safe and sanitary conditions, and protecting against urban blight and decreased property values. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance restricting First Amendment activity of adult businesses was "content-neutral" time, place, and manner restriction, as opposed to "content-based" prior restraint of speech; ordinance's preamble, read together with minutes of city council meeting, indicated that purpose of ordinance was to combat deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness

Reasonable regulations of time, place, and manner of protected speech are permitted by First Amendment, where those regulations are necessary to further significant government interests. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provisions, requiring adult-oriented establishments and their employees to be licensed, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; requirements were reasonably well-tailored to prevent spread of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), prevent crime, and maintain property values. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(2)(a), (5).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law

Licenses and permits in general

Requiring adult-oriented establishment to secure license, and its employees to secure permits, does not violate First Amendment provided such regulations serve substantial governmental purposes and are not unduly burdensome. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law

Licenses and Permits in General

Licensing is considered a valid means by which to ensure adherence to ordinance provisions, for purposes of determining whether incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than essential to furtherance of municipality's substantial governmental interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provisions, requiring disclosure of information concerning applicants for operators' and employees' licenses in connection with adult-oriented establishments, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; municipality cited findings that criminal activity increases in areas surrounding such establishments, and that some of that activity is linked to operators and employees of such establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(4)(a), (6)(a, b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring disclosure of information concerning shareholders holding more than ten-percent share of adult-oriented establishments, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; ten percent interest requirement ensured that stockholder possessing mere de minimus interest would not be subjected to disclosure requirement. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(4)(a).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that applicants for licenses to operate adult-oriented establishments must not have violated ordinance restricting such establishments within past five years, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; requirement was reasonable means by which to ensure that those licensed would respect and abide by provisions regulating such establishments. U.S.C.A.

Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28, 9.28(4)(a)(2)(ii).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that applicants for licenses to operate adult-oriented establishments must not have been convicted of offense involving moral turpitude, prostitution, obscenity, or other sex-related offense within past five years, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; provision referred to offenses only of a sexual nature, and denied license only when applicant had recently participated in type of criminal activity which ordinance sought to impede. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(4)(a)(2)(iii).

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

Persons with prior criminal records are not First Amendment outcasts. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Federal Courts
Anticipating or predicting state decision

When no reported state court decisions construing language of municipal statute exist, federal court must examine all data before it and decide the matter according to how it believes the highest state court would decide.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that adult-oriented establishments pay fees for licenses and employee permits, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; fees were reasonably related to administrative and enforcement costs of regulatory process. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(8)(a, b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that permits issued to employee of adult-oriented establishments be carried on employee's person and displayed upon request to authorized individuals, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; requirement was rational means by which municipality could enforce ordinance and ensure that only authorized employees were working. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(9)(b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that police department file information about operators and employees of adult-oriented establishments in connection with applications to renew establishments' licenses, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in preventing crime and preserving quality of neighboring communities; provision was means of gathering information about renewal applicants such that educated decision could be made concerning eligibility for continued operation or employment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(10)(c, f).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that permits issued to employees of adult-oriented establishments were not transferable, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; allowing permits to be transferable would defeat purpose of permit requirement, i.e., to ensure that only employees without convictions for crimes of sexual nature were working in establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(11)(e).

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

License revocation provisions of municipality's ordinance restricting adult-oriented establishments restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; District Court had decided that denial of license to certain individuals was well-tailored to ordinance's stated purpose of preventing sex-related crimes, and it followed that commission of such crimes after issuance of license would be grounds for revocation of license. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(12)(a)(2, 4, 6, 7).

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, restricting hours of operation of adult-oriented establishments, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; restricted hours of operation fell within period of time when crime was more likely to occur. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(14)(a).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law

Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Licenses

Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that adult-oriented establishments be open to inspection at reasonable times, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in preventing criminal activity from occurring on premises of establishments and in preventing ordinance violations. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(14)(b), (21).

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring that booths for private viewing of adult-oriented entertainment have one side open so that person occupying booth may be seen from aisle, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(15)(b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring adult-oriented establishments to maintain register listing personal information about employees, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; municipality had substantial need to notify license holders of violations committed by their employees, and register provided tracking device to verify that only authorized employees were working. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(16)(a).

Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment
Licenses
Constitutionality and Validity of Acts and Ordinances

Municipality's ordinance provision, requiring adult-oriented establishments to post list of titles and prices of all entertainment provided at establishment, and to present list to authorized persons upon request, restricted First Amendment freedoms to no greater extent than was essential to further municipality's interests in combating deleterious secondary effects of such establishments; list provided means by which authorized persons might inspect for obscenity violations. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West Allis, Wis., Revised Municipal Code § 9.28(16)(d).

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1483 Jeff Scott Olson, Olson Law Office, Madison, WI, for Plaintiff.

Scott E. Post, West Allis City Attorney's Office, West Allis, WI, for Defendant.

DECISION AND ORDER

RANDA, District Judge.

This matter comes before the Court on defendant City of West Allis' ("the City") motion for summary judgment. For the following reasons, the City's motion is granted and the case dismissed.

FACTS

In 1990 and 1991, the West Allis Common Council ("the Council") considered Ordinance No. 5835, which, among other things, created section 9.28 of the West Allis Revised

Municipal Code. Section 9.28 was designed to regulate the operation of adult businesses in the City. The ordinance was first introduced on July 17, 1990 and was sent to the Council's License and Health Committee, where it remained until August 15, 1991. During that time, the ordinance was sent to various staff members for analysis, discussion, and revision.

The ordinance set forth the Council's factual findings and listed the studies the Council relied upon in finding the ordinance necessary. Based on those findings, the Council deemed the ordinance necessary to prevent the concentration of adult businesses and to prevent such businesses from locating near certain other uses. The Council also found it necessary to regulate and license each individual adult business in order to minimize the negative secondary effects associated with adult businesses. On August 20, 1991, the Council ("the Council") formally passed Ordinance No. 5835.

In October and November of 1991, the License and Health Committee considered amending § 9.28. On November 18, 1991, the Council passed Ordinance No. 5867 amending § 9.28. The amended ordinance defined "adult bookstore" as follows:

> "Adult bookstore" means an establishment having a substantial portion of its stock in trade, for sale, rent, lease, inspection or viewing, books, films, video cassettes, magazines or other periodicals, which are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matters depicting, describing or relating to "specified anatomical areas," as defined below, and in conjunction therewith have facilities for the presentation of "adult entertainment," as defined below, including adult oriented films, movies, or live performances for observation by patrons therein.

The effect of this change was to classify as an "adult bookstore" only those businesses that offered the viewing of certain materials on the business premises.

On or about May 20, 1992, Tee and Bee, Inc. ("T & B") opened Super Video and Variety ("Super Video") at 9800 West Greenfield Avenue. Super Video engaged in the sale of sexually explicit books, magazines, videotapes, and other materials. Because Super Video had no facilities for the presentation of adult materials, it did not fall within the definition of "adult bookstore." This did not alleviate the public's concerns, however. In response to public anxiety concerning Super Video, the License and Health Committee considered another amendment to § 9.28. Committee meetings were held on the matter on July 16, August 13, and October 15, 1992. In addition, a public hearing was held on September 22, 1992, at which time City staff members, along with members of the public, provided additional information regarding 1484 adult businesses in general and Super Video in particular.

On October 20, 1992, the Council passed the proposed amendment to § 9.28 which, among other things, redefined the phrase "adult bookstore":

> "Adult bookstore" means an establishment which has a facility or facilities, including but not limited to booths, cubicles, rooms, or stalls, for the presentation of "adult entertainment" as defined below, including adult oriented films, movies or live performances for observation by patrons therein, or which, as part of its regular and substantial course of conduct, offers for sale, rent, trade, lease, inspection or viewing books, films, video cassettes, magazines or other periodicals, which are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matters depicting, describing or relating to "specified anatomical areas" or "specified sexual activities" as defined below.

In November of 1992, the City Clerk sent out a questionnaire to all of the City's known bookstores and video stores. T & B's response was to file this lawsuit on December 4, 1992, seeking a preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining enforcement of amended § 9.28. Initially, a magistrate judge issued a recommendation granting the preliminary injunction. However, on September 2, 1994, the Court declined to adopt the magistrate's recommendation, denied plaintiff's request for a preliminary injunction, and dissolved whatever preliminary injunction may have been in effect.

On September 15, 1994, T & B sought a license to operate an adult bookstore. The Council denied the plaintiff's application. In denying the application, the Council relied on provisions of amended § 9.28 which are disputed in this action. In response to the Council's denial, T & B reorganized its business so that less than fifty percent of its stock-in-trade consisted of sexually explicit material. As a result, T & B's business is no longer classified as an adult-oriented business.

LAW

I. SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is proper "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.Pro. 56(c); Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). Summary judgment is particularly appropriate in a case challenging the facial constitutionality of a statute. Felix v. Young, 536 F.2d 1126, 1130, n. 7 (6th Cir.1976). The Court finds that no genuine issues of material fact are present in the record before it.

II. STANDING

[1] [2] T & B's suit against the City presents a facial challenge to the constitutionality of § 9.28. T & B must have standing to bring such a challenge. To have standing, T & B must demonstrate concrete and specific facts indicating both that the challenged ordinance injured T & B and that court intervention would benefit T & B in a tangible way. Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975). T & B's standing to challenge the ordinance's constitutionality must be evaluated separately with respect to each contested provision of the ordinance. Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203, 1209 (7th Cir.1980). The magistrate judge concluded that T & B had standing to challenge the following provisions of § 9.28: (1) the license disability and disclosure provisions for applicants, shareholders, officers, and directors; (2) the employee permit and disclosure provisions; (3) the license revocation provisions; (4) the hours-of-operation provision; (5) the special inspection provision; (6) the employee register provision; (7) the vicarious liability provision; (8) the entertainment listing provision; and (9) the employee permit procedural provisions. This Court previously affirmed and adopted the magistrate's ruling on standing.

[3] The City argues that T & B no longer has standing to challenge § 9.28 because T & B brought suit in state court seeking a declaration that Super Video no longer qualifies as an "adult business". Lacking such status, 1485 Super Video would not be subject to the provisions of § 9.28. The Court does not believe the state court action affects T & B's standing to challenge the ordinance. T & B reorganized its business solely in response to the Council's denial of its license application to operate an adult bookstore. The Council denied the application based on provisions of the ordinance disputed in this action. [1] Moreover, it is undisputed that T & B will return Super Video to its former status as an adult bookstore should the ordinance be invalidated. Therefore, T & B has standing to contest the provisions of the ordinance.

1 The reasons for the denial were as follows: (1) Conviction of T & B for Possession of Drug Paraphernalia with Intent to Deliver, an offense involving moral turpitude under § 9.28(4)(a)(2)(iii); (2) Conviction of T & B for Exposing a Minor to Sexually Explicit Material, a violation of §§ 9.28(4)(a)(2)(ii) & 9.28(4)(a)(2)(iii); and (3) Failure of T & B to cooperate with the licensing process, a violation of § 9.28(e).

III. CONSTITUTIONALITY

[4] [5] [6] [7] [8] [9] [10] The First Amendment does not immunize adult-oriented businesses from regulations designed to protect public health, safety, and general welfare. Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 62, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2448, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (Powell, J. concurring); Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1214; Chulchian v. City of Indianapolis, 633 F.2d 27, 31 (7th Cir.1980). A municipality may regulate activities protected by the First Amendment provided the following four-part test is met: (1) the intended activity lies within the governmental body's sphere of regulatory power; (2) the regulation "furthers an important or substantial governmental interest"; (3) the governmental interest is unrelated to suppressing the content of the regulated material; and (4) "the incidental restriction on alleged

First Amendment freedoms is no greater than essential to the furtherance of that interest." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376–77, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1678–79, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). A facial examination of § 9.28 indicates that all four parts of the O'Brien test are satisfied. First, the City clearly acted within the scope of its police power in enacting an ordinance relating to the regulation and licensing of adult-oriented establishments. See generally Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); Genusa v. City of Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203 (7th Cir.1980); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990); TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 24 F.3d 705 (5th Cir.1994). Second, in order to establish the presence of substantial government interests, the City need only demonstrate that, in enacting its ordinance, it relied upon evidence that "is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. at 931. The record indicates that the purpose of the City's ordinance was to further a number of substantial governmental interests, including preventing crime, promoting safe and sanitary conditions, and protecting against urban blight and decreased property values.[2] Third, the preamble of the ordinance, read together with the minutes of the Council's September 22, 1992 meeting, indicate that the purpose of enacting § 9.28 was to combat the deleterious "secondary effects" of adult-oriented establishments.[3] Thus, the contested ordinance is a "content-neutral" time, place, and manner restriction as opposed to a 1486 "content-based" prior restraint of speech.[4] "Reasonable regulations of the time, place, and manner of protected speech, where those regulations are necessary to further significant governmental interests, are permitted by the First Amendment." Young, 427 U.S. at 63, n. 18, 96 S.Ct. at 2449, n. 18. The remaining test is whether the restrictions imposed by the ordinance are "no greater than essential" for furtherance of the government interest. While the Court finds this element to be satisfied as well, the analysis is more involved, as the extent of the imposed burden must be evaluated with respect to each of the ordinance's contested provisions.

2 The substantial government interests furthered by the separate provisions of the ordinance will be discussed in more detail infra.

3 In making this determination, the Council relied on findings from the locales of Indianapolis, Indiana; Austin, Texas; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Newport News, Virginia; Marion County, Indiana; Detroit, Michigan; and Seattle, Washington. These studies found that adult businesses are predisposed to the creation of unsafe and unsanitary conditions; that operators and employees of adult business tend to participate in various offenses—particularly sex-related offenses—on the premises of such establishments; that adult businesses create a substantial law enforcement problem; and that the operational characteristics of adult businesses have a deleterious effect on surrounding areas, resulting in neighborhood blight and reduced property values, especially when such businesses are concentrated in one area.

4 The United States Supreme Court holds that "at least with respect to businesses that purvey sexually explicit materials, zoning ordinances designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects of such businesses are to be reviewed under the standards applicable to 'content neutral' time, place, and manner regulations." City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49, 106 S.Ct. 925, 929–30, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) (footnote omitted).

A. Genusa

In this regard, T & B generally contends that all non-locational provisions of the City's ordinance are unconstitutional, relying on the invalidation of similar requirements in the case of Genusa v. City of Peoria. In Genusa, the 7th Circuit struck down as unconstitutional several licensing and permit provisions similar and/or identical to those involved in the case at bar. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1221. However, as the Court indicated in its prior decision on the injunction issue, Genusa is distinguishable from the case at bar in two important respects.

First, the Genusa ordinance had as its only express purpose the "scattering" of adult establishments in order to avoid the undesirable consequences associated with their concentration in a single area. Id. at 1208–09. The 7th Circuit thus struck down various inspection, investigation, disclosure, and employee permit requirements, along with various standards for the issuance and revocation of licenses, because they bore no rational relation to the express goal of "inverse or scatter zoning". Id. at 1212–22. In other words, the various licensing and permit requirements were "unrelated to the City's stated goal of preventing adult businesses from congregating in one location." TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710. Here, the purposes of the ordinance exceed that of mere "scatter zoning". A primary purpose of the ordinance is to mitigate the deleterious secondary effects associated with adult businesses. For instance, one important purpose of the ordinance is to prevent crime—specifically, crimes of a sexual nature—that are often associated with both the patrons and the operators of adult establishments. Another purpose is to prevent the unsanitary and often unsafe conditions of such businesses. Unlike the ordinance in Genusa, these purposes are directed at "curtailing side effects not simply of clusters of adult businesses, but of each adult business." TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710. In fact, the 5th Circuit relied upon this important distinction to uphold the very type of regulations involved in the case at bar and struck down in Genusa. Id.

Second, the Genusa court noted that the record before it was devoid of any evidence that adult establishments presented other types of dangers posited by the City but not mentioned in the ordinance's preamble. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1214–20. Here, the ordinance references factual studies and experiences from other cities supporting such a connection. Evidence gleaned from such studies is a sufficient basis for local regulation. Courts have repeatedly held that local municipalities need not conduct their own studies on areas of important local concern, but instead may rely on studies performed in other locales. City of Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. at 931; Suburban Video, Inc. v. City of Delafield, 694 F.Supp. 585, 590 (E.D.Wis.1988). The record is replete with information showing that the City determined it necessary to provide for the licensing and regulation of adult-oriented businesses in order to combat the secondary effects of such facilities in the surrounding community. For these reasons, the Court finds that the 7th Circuit holding in Genusa does not compel the invalidation of all non-locational regulatory provisions. Rather, the Genusa court invalidated several non-locational ordinance provisions because the city failed to prove that the non-locational regulations 1487 were designed to further a substantial government interest unrelated to the content of the regulated material. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1219.

B. Licensing and Permit Requirements

1. The license and permit.

[11] [12] The ordinance requires that a license be obtained before an adult-oriented establishment may be operated in the City. § 9.28(2)(a). The ordinance further mandates that all employees in adult businesses must have permits. § 9.28(5). Requiring an adult-oriented establishment to secure a license and its employees to secure permits is constitutional provided such regulations serve substantial governmental purposes and are not unduly burdensome. Both the license and the permit requirements in the ordinance satisfy these requirements. The City cited numerous purposes for implementing the ordinance, including deterring the spread of AIDS, preventing crime, and maintaining property values. The findings further illustrate that "operators and employees of said establishments have been found to have participated in various offenses, including, but not limited to, sex-related offenses, at such establishments," and that licensing adult businesses and their employees is necessary "to minimize the impact of ... secondary effects known to be associated with said adult-oriented establishments...." The Court finds that these purposes constitute substantial government interests under Renton.

[13] The City also has an obvious and substantial interest in preventing the violation of the ordinance itself. Licensing is considered a valid means by which to ensure adherence to ordinance provisions. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1212–13. Furthermore, a licensing scheme similar to that presented by the West Allis ordinance was upheld in T.K.'s Video:

> The requirement that all owners of a sexually oriented business be licensed is reasonable. It serves as a means to enhance the likelihood that owners of the business will comply with the order's regulations and will not knowingly allow their establishments to be used as places of illegal sexual activity or solicitation. The requirement that clerks and employees of a sexually oriented business be licensed is also reasonable. This requirement bears a reasonable relationship to the stated purpose of the > order by preventing the spread of sexually transmitted diseases and illegal sexual activity. Both requirements are narrowly tailored and impose no greater restriction on First Amendment freedoms than is necessary to further the county's substantial interest.

T.K's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 830 F.Supp. 335, 343 (E.D.Tex.1993), vac'd-in-part on other grounds, 24 F.3d 705 (5th Cir.1994). The Court agrees and finds that the licensing and permit requirements involved in this case are reasonably well-tailored toward furthering the City's substantial interest in preventing the specific harms articulated in the ordinance. The general license and permit requirements of the ordinance are therefore constitutional.

2. Disclosure requirements.

[14] In order to obtain an operating license, the applicant must provide the City with information including: (1) the applicant's name, aliases, address, and date of birth; (2) similar information for any directors, officers, and shareholders holding more than a ten percent stock interest; (3) the nature of the proposed adult business and expected address; and (4) whether the named individuals currently operate or previously operated another adult-oriented business. § 9.28(4)(a). In order to obtain an employee permit, the employee must provide the following data: (1) name, aliases, age, and address; and (2) whether he or she has ever had such a license or permit revoked or suspended. § 9.28(6)(a) & (b). T & B contends that this portion of the ordinance should be invalidated because the City did not establish a relationship between the mandated disclosure of information and a substantial government interest. This assertion is without merit. In the preamble of its ordinance, the City cites findings indicating that criminal activity, and particularly criminal activity of a sexual nature, increases in the areas surrounding adult businesses, and 1488 that some of that activity is linked to the operators and employees of such establishments. As the court in TK's Video reasoned:

> Disclosure of owner and employee personal history might not be tailored to locating adult businesses, but it does monitor persons with a history of regulatory violations or sexual misconduct who would manage or work in them. These histories are plainly correlated with the side effects that can attend these businesses, the regulation of which was the legislative objective. In more legalistic and abstract terms, ends and means are substantially related. Insisting on this fit of ends and means both assures a level of scrutiny appropriate to the protected character of the activities and sluices regulation away from content, training it on business offal.

TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710.

[15] T & B argues, however, that the stockholder licensing and disclosure requirements are unconstitutional because they restrict more First Amendment freedoms than is necessary for the furtherance of the City's interest. [5] In support of this contention, T & B relies on the invalidation of a similar provision by the district court in T.K.'s Video. See T.K.'s Video, 830 F.Supp. at 335. T.K.'s Video is distinguishable from the case at bar in this respect. The district court in T.K.'s Video invalidated the portion of the provision mandating stockholder disclosure because it required that "all stockholders regardless of their interest must be licensed even if their interest is merely de minimis ...." Id. at 343. Conversely, another federal court upheld disclosure requirements for "each individual who has a 20 percent or greater interest in the business." See Dumas v. City of Dallas, 648 F.Supp. 1061 (N.D.Tex.1986), aff'd sub nom, FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 837 F.2d 1298 (5th Cir.1988), vac'd-in-part on other grounds, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990). The important distinction seems to be the setting of a minimum level of interest in the adult-oriented establishment in order to ensure that an individual shareholder is not subjected to regulation when he or she possesses a mere de minimus interest. The City safeguarded against such a result by requiring a license for shareholders holding more than ten percent of the corporation's stock. [6] Therefore, the stockholder and other disclosure and license requirements are constitutional.

5 Because the City's disclosure provision seeks to control the secondary effects of adult-oriented businesses, its purpose goes beyond mere notice and accountability concerns. Such a provision was struck down with respect to shareholder disclosure requirements in Acorn Investments, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 887 F.2d 219, 226 (9th Cir.1989). Unlike the case at bar, the government in Acorn did not articulate concern about the possibility of owners and shareholders of adult-oriented businesses having recent convictions for sex-related offenses. Rather, the concern centered around notifying owners and shareholders about ordinance violations. Consequently, the court in Acorn invalidated the shareholder disclosure provision because prompt notification to shareholders of ordinance violations was not substantially related to ensuring compliance with the ordinance, given that shareholders are not legally responsible for a corporation's management. Id.

6 While the Court recognizes that the interest level set by the City (greater than 10%) is lower than that set by Denton County in Dumas (20%), the main concern is that licensing and disclosure requirements not attach to shareholders whose interests are de minimis. Drawing lines in this regard may be somewhat arbitrary, but the Court believes the City acted reasonably in limiting the reach of the ordinance to shareholders with greater than a ten percent interest in the corporation.

3. Standards for issuance of license.

For a corporate applicant to receive a license to operate an adult-oriented business, the following must be true: (1) all officers, directors, and shareholders must be at least eighteen years old; (2) none of the above-named persons shall have violated § 9.28 within five years preceding the application date; and (3) none of the above-named persons shall have a conviction for offenses of moral turpitude, prostitution, obscenity or other sex-related offense within five years preceding the application date, unless the individual has been pardoned. § 9.28(4)(a)(2)(i)–(iii). These standards do not vest overly-broad discretion in any governmental figure, as they consist of objectively determinable facts. FW/PBS, 837 F.2d 1298, 1305–06 (5th Cir.1988), vacated in part 1489 on other grounds, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990); Keyishian v. Board of Regents of University of State of N. Y., 385 U.S. 589, 603–04, 87 S.Ct. 675, 684, 17 L.Ed.2d 629 (1967).

[16] [17] An individual's past actions are very often the best indicator of that person's future actions. Denying licensure to individuals who have recently violated an adult-oriented business ordinance is a reasonable means by which to ensure that those licensed to operate adult businesses will respect and abide by the provisions regulating the business. Likewise, when an individual has been convicted of specified crimes that relate to the "crime-control intent" of the ordinance, a municipality may deny licensure. Dumas, 648 F.Supp. at 1073.[7] In Dumas, the 5th Circuit agreed with the district court's analysis in this regard:

7 The Dumas court expanded the holding of Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 92 L.Ed.2d 568 (1986). In Arcara, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the closing of an adult-oriented establishment where it was found that the management of the establishment was aware that illegal sexual activity was occurring on the premises. Id., 478 U.S. at 704–05, 106 S.Ct. at 3176. The Dumas court stated that "[i]f violation of law by a licensee may permissibly justify closure, it follows inescapably that one who has been convicted of a sex-related crime may be denied licensure." Dumas, 648 F.Supp. at 1074, n. 34.

> ... the city's findings demonstrate a compelling interest in limiting the involvement of convicted persons in the operation of sexually oriented businesses; that by documenting the strong relationship between sexually-oriented businesses and sexually-related crimes, the City established a compelling justification for barring those prone to such crimes from the management of these businesses. The argument would continue that the City's findings conform with the well-accepted notion that the government may attach to criminal convictions disabilities aimed at preventing recidivism.
>
> FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 837 F.2d at 1305.

As mentioned previously, the City has a substantial interest in preventing crimes associated with adult-oriented establishments, particularly crimes of a sexual nature. The constitutionality of the ordinance's civil disability provision consequently turns on whether the standards for license denial are sufficiently well-tailored to furthering the City's interest.

[18] "Persons with prior criminal records are not First Amendment outcasts." Fernandes v. Limmer, 663 F.2d 619, 630 (5th Cir.1981). However, courts have upheld civil disability provisions denying adult-oriented business licenses to individuals who have been convicted of certain sex-related offenses within a specified period of time. See T.K.'s Video, 830 F.Supp. at 345; FW/PBS, 837 F.2d at 1305. T & B argues that the City's civil disability provision is not sufficiently well-tailored because the "moral turpitude" language extends the scope of the disability beyond sex-related offenses. In support of this contention, T & B refers to the treatment of a similar civil disability provision in FW/PBS, 837 F.2d at 1305. In upholding that provision, the Dumas court narrowed it, invalidating five of the enumerated crimes on the grounds that they were not sufficiently related to the purpose of the ordinance. Dumas, 648 F.Supp. at 1074. [8] The remaining crimes, deemed by the 5th Circuit to be "related to the kinds of criminal activity associated with sexually oriented businesses," were all of a sexual nature. FW/PBS, 837 F.2d at 1305.

8 It was actually the district court which invalidated the provisions at issue; the 5th Circuit later affirmed the district court holding in FW/PBS. The five crimes which were eliminated from the list of offenses included the following: "(1) a controlled substances act violation, (2) bribery, (3) robbery, (4) kidnapping, or (5) organized criminal activity...." Dumas, 648 F.Supp. at 1074. T & B emphasizes the invalidation of the controlled substances provision because one of the City's reasons for denying T & B's license application was the fact that T & B had been convicted of Possession of Drug Paraphernalia with Intent to Deliver, cited by the City as a crime involving "moral turpitude".

[19] In examining the City's civil disability provision with respect to what types of criminal convictions will render an applicant ineligible for a license, the Court must look closely at the plain language of the provision. When no reported state court decisions construing the language exist, a federal court 1490 must examine all the data before it and decide the matter according to how it believes the highest state court would decide. Green v. J.C. Penney Auto Ins. Co., Inc., 806 F.2d 759, 761 (7th Cir.1986). Under the City's civil disability provision, ineligibility results from a conviction "of any offense involving moral turpitude, prostitution, obscenity or other offense of a sexual nature in any jurisdiction within five (5) years immediately preceding the date of the application." § 9.28(4)(a)(2)(iii). This language is made subject to §§ 111.321, 111.322, and 111.335 of the Wisconsin Statutes. Most significantly, § 111.335 states the following:

> Notwithstanding s. 111.322, it is not employment discrimination because of conviction record, to refuse to employ or license, or to bar or terminate from employment or licensing, any individual who:
>
> 1. Has been convicted of any felony, misdemeanor or other offense the circumstances of which substantially relate to the circumstances of the particular job or licensed activity.

Wis.Stat. § 111.335(1)(c).

The foregoing allows municipalities to discriminate in the issuance of licenses on the basis of prior criminal convictions, but only if the prior conviction involves an offense substantially related to the activity being licensed. The civil disability provision of § 9.28 is expressly made subject to the foregoing statute. Accordingly, the Court interprets the phrase "any offense involving moral turpitude, prostitution, obscenity or other offense of a sexual nature" as including only offenses of a sexual nature. This interpretation is further supported by the fact that the most logical reading of the provision is that the phrase "or other offense of a sexual nature" modifies all three offenses preceding it. [9]

9 A contrary reading would interpret the phrase "or other offenses of a sexual nature" as modifying only the offense of obscenity. However, this reading is illogical given that the offense of obscenity is preceded by the offense of prostitution, which is clearly another offense of a sexual nature. A better reading of the provision is that it enumerates moral turpitude, prostitution, and obscenity as specific examples of sex-related crimes, but not the only sex-related crimes that will render an applicant ineligible for a license.

Courts have held that, when the civil disability provision of an adult-oriented business ordinance is tailored to apply to sex-related crimes only, the "relationship between the offense and the evil to be regulated is direct and substantial." FW/PBS, Inc., 837 F.2d at 1305; see also TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 711. Findings specified by the City in the ordinance confirm that the presence of adult-oriented businesses in a neighborhood has been connected to an increase in crimes of a sexual nature. Therefore, the Court finds that the City's civil disability provision is facially constitutional. [10] As construed, the provision denies a license based only on convictions for sex-related crimes. Furthermore, after five years has elapsed, an individual with a prior criminal conviction may once again be eligible. These built-in limitations on the scope of the provision ensure that licenses are denied only when the applicant has recently participated in the type of criminal activity associated with adult-oriented establishments, precisely the sort of activity which the ordinance seeks to impede.

10 While the ordinance is facially constitutional under the Court's interpretation, the effect of the Court's reading of the provision is to invalidate one of the reasons for denying T & B's license. Conviction for Possession of Drug Paraphernalia with Intent to Deliver is not an offense involving moral turpitude under the Court's reading of the ordinance, as it is not a sex-related offense. However, the City's other reasons for denying T & B a license remain valid, particularly the fact that T & B was previously convicted of exposing a minor to sexually explicit material, a sex-related offense. (See footnote 1, supra).

4. License and permit fee.

[20] Provided that the license and permit requirements are valid, a municipality may collect fees to mitigate the administrative costs of such regulation. Murdock v. Com. of Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 114, n. 8, 63 S.Ct. 870, 875, n. 14, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943); Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1213. The West Allis ordinance sets its license fee at $500, with $250 being returned to the applicant if the license is denied. § 9.29(8)(a). The employee permit fee is set at $50, with $25 being returned if the permit is denied. § 9.28(8)(b). Similar fees have been upheld 1491 as constitutional. In T.K.'s Video, the district court held that both a $500 business licensing fee and a $50 employee licensing fee were reasonably related to the administrative costs of issuing the licenses. T.K.'s Video, 830 F.Supp. at 345. A $100 licensing fee was upheld in Genusa. Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1213. In the absence of an argument from T & B that the City's fee schedule is excessive, the Court finds that the license and permit fees are reasonably related to the administrative and enforcement costs associated with the regulatory process.

5. Display of permit provision.

[21] An employee permit must be carried by the employee and displayed upon request to authorized individuals. § 9.28(9)(b). The Court has already found that the permit requirement for employees of adult-oriented establishments is constitutional. The requirement that employees retain possession of the secured permit is a rational and logical means by which the City may enforce its ordinance and ensure that only authorized employees are working at any given time. Accordingly, the Court upholds this provision.

6. Renewal of license or permit provisions.

[22] T & B contests the license and permit renewal provisions which require the West Allis Police Department to file information about operators and employees of adult-oriented businesses with the City Clerk. See §§ 9.28(10)(c) & 9.28(10)(f). The Court finds that, coupled with the licensing and permit provisions, these provisions are well-tailored to the City's goals of preventing crime and preserving the quality of neighboring communities. The provision is merely another means of gathering information about renewal applicants such that an educated decision may be made concerning their eligibility for continued operation of, or employment in, an adult-oriented business.

T & B also contests the provisions relating to employee permit renewal. Employee permits are renewable every year, so long as applications for renewal are filed at least sixty days before the permit expires. § 9.28(10)(d). The permit renewal fee is $50, with $25 being returned if the application is denied. § 9.28(10)(e). T & B does not argue that the time limitations are unreasonable, nor that the fee is excessive. Rather, T & B claims that the entire employee permit scheme is invalid under Genusa. However, as the Court previously stated, the case at bar is distinguishable from Genusa in that the City has shown a substantial government interest in licensing employees as a means to control the deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments. Furthermore, the Court has found that the permit requirement is well-tailored towards furthering that interest. While T & B characterizes the permit scheme as onerous because it prevents the business from replacing outgoing employees immediately, "hiring difficulties do not translate into constitutional infirmities." Clampitt v. City of Ft. Wayne, 682 F.Supp. 401, 406 (N.D.Ind.1988), aff'd, Oriental Health Spa v. City of Ft. Wayne, 864 F.2d 486 (7th Cir.1988). Accordingly, the Court upholds these provisions of the City's ordinance.

[23] Employee permits are not transferrable. § 9.28(11)(e). The non-transferrable nature of an employee permit is consistent with the City's legitimate interest in preventing crime. Requiring employees to secure permits assists the City in denying a permit to any employee whose record contains a sex-related offense and assures the City that only employees without convictions for crimes of a sexual nature are working in adult-oriented establishments. This interest can only be furthered if permits are employee-specific; allowing permits to be transferrable would defeat the purpose of the permit requirement. For these reasons, the Court finds § 9.28(11)(e) constitutional.

7. License revocation provisions.

[24] An operator may have its license suspended or revoked if he or she employs an individual or independent performer who has not secured the required permit. § 9.28(12)(a)(4). Further justification for revocation or suspension of a license include: (1) violation of the ordinance by the operator or any employee/entertainer of the operator, 1492 § 9.28(12)(a)(2); (2) the serving or consumption of intoxicating liquors or fermented malt beverage on the premises, § 9.28(12)(a)(6); and (3) selling or showing adult material to a minor. § 9.28(12)(a)(7). If the Council believes that a violation has occurred, it will issue the operator written notice of revocation, at which time the operator may request a hearing to review the revocation. § 9.28(12)(b).

The Court has stated above that the denial of a license to individuals that have recently violated the ordinance or have recently committed a sex-related crime is sufficiently well-tailored to the stated purpose of preventing sex-related crimes. It follows that if a license may be denied initially on these grounds, commission of such offenses after a license is issued is grounds for revocation or suspension of that license. Furthermore, the revocation proceedings provide for procedural safeguards in the form of both written notice of license revocation/suspension and a hearing. The license revocation provisions of the City's ordinance are valid.

C. Other Contested Provisions

1. Hours of operation provision.

[25] Under the City's ordinance, adult-oriented establishments are not permitted to operate between the hours of 2:00 a.m. and 8:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, between 3:00 a.m. and 8:00 a.m. on Saturdays, and between 3:00 a.m. and 12:00 noon on Sundays. § 9.28(14)(a). Ordinances restricting the hours of operation in adult-oriented establishments have been upheld on numerous occasions. See Star Satellite, Inc. v. City of Biloxi, 779 F.2d 1074 (5th Cir.1986) (upheld adult business ordinance which restricted hours of operation to 10:00 a.m. to 12 midnight, Mondays through Saturdays, with no hours of operation allowed on Sundays); Broadway Books, Inc. v. Roberts, 642 F.Supp. 486 (E.D.Tenn.1986) (upheld hours of operation provision which mandated that adult businesses be closed between the hours of 3:00 a.m. and 8:00 a.m. on weekdays and between 3:00 a.m. and 12:00 noon on Sundays).

The record indicates that, in enacting the adult-oriented business ordinance, the City included the goals of preventing crime and preserving the quality of neighborhoods in the list of governmental interests at stake. The Court finds that the manner in which the City seeks to regulate the hours of adult businesses rationally relates to the goal of preventing crime. The restricted hours of operation fall within the period of time when crime is more likely to occur and law enforcement personnel are more likely to be busy with other matters. Furthermore, the hours of operation relate to the goal of preserving the quality of neighborhoods because they provide special precautions during those times when people are generally sleeping and when peaceful enjoyment of the home is most important. The prescribed schedule is not overly burdensome, as it allows for normal operation during a large portion of each day. Furthermore, the closing hours for adult businesses imposed by the ordinance are consistent with the closing hours of taverns, another highly-regulated business. See Wis.Stat. §§ 125.32(3) & 125.68(4). In reviewing a similar provision, the court in Ellwest Stereo Theater, Inc. v. Boner, 718 F.Supp. 1553, 1577 (M.D.Tenn.1989), held that "the required closure of these adult-oriented establishments for a few hours each day is only a minimum infringement on the plaintiffs' First Amendment rights and is justified by the difficulty of policing and enforcing the ordinance in the wee hours of the morning." Similarly, the hours restriction imposed by the City's ordinance is content-neutral, aims at combating the deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments, and only mandates closure for a few hours each day. The Court concludes that the restrictions are narrowly tailored to further the City's articulated goals of preventing crime and preserving the quality of neighborhoods.

2. Inspection and enforcement provisions.

[26] The West Allis ordinance provides that "adult-oriented establishments shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times by the West Allis Police Department, the Building Inspector and the Health Department." § 9.28(14)(B). In another section of the ordinance, the Police Department is given authorization to enter an adult-oriented establishment 1493 "at all reasonable times to inspect the premises and enforce this section." § 9.28(21). The imposition of these inspection provisions as a means of enforcing the ordinance is constitutionally sound. T.K.'s Video, 830 F.Supp. at 345; FW/PBS, 837 F.2d at 1306. In upholding a similar provision, the 5th Circuit held that "sexually oriented businesses face a degree of regulation that renders the inspection provision presumptively reasonable." FW/PBS, 837 F.2d at 1306. As an added safeguard, the ordinance imposes a requirement that all inspections occur at "reasonable times". A similar provision was struck down in Genusa only because the government "failed to demonstrate that the special inspection provisions further a legitimate interest 'unrelated to the suppression of free expression.' " Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1214, quoting O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. at 1679. Here, the City's provision suffers from no such deficiency. The Court upholds the provision, finding that the inspection and enforcement provisions of the ordinance are well-tailored not only to the City's substantial interest in preventing criminal activity from occurring on the premises of adult-oriented businesses, but also to the City's interest in preventing ordinance violations.

3. Open booth provision.

[27] Under the City's ordinance, booths for private viewing of adult oriented entertainment must have one side completely open such that a person occupying the booth may be seen from the aisle at all times. § 9.28(15)(b). In its complaint, T & B contended that the open booth provision was invalid based on both the First Amendment and the Videotape Privacy Protection Act. For the purposes of the preliminary injunction, T & B withdrew its claim with respect to the invalidity of the open booth provision. Subsequent to this withdrawal, T & B made no further argument with respect to the open booth provision. Under these circumstances, the Court will treat this claim as abandoned. However, even if T & B had not abandoned its claim regarding the validity of the open booth provision, precedent upholding similar provisions under similar circumstances makes it clear that the booth provisions are valid. See Matney v. County of Kenosha, 86 F.3d 692 (7th Cir.1996); Libra Books, Inc. v. City of Milwaukee, 818 F.Supp. 263 (E.D.Wis.1993); Suburban Video, Inc. v. City of Delafield, 694 F.Supp. 585 (E.D.Wis.1988).

4. Operator responsibility provisions.

[28] The City's ordinance mandates that employers maintain an employee register which lists employee personal information, including name, aliases, home address, phone number, age, birth date, sex, height, weight, hair and eye color, dates employment began and terminated, and employee duties. § 9.28(16)(a). In furthering its interest of preventing crime, the City has a substantial need to notify license holders of ordinance violations committed by their employees. Ellwest Stereo Theater, 718 F.Supp. at 1566; City of Colorado Springs v. 2354 Inc., 896 P.2d 272, 291 (Colo.1995). An employee register serves this purpose, as well as providing the City with a tracking device to verify that only authorized employees are working in adult-oriented establishments. The Court finds that the use of an employee register is constitutionally valid as a well-tailored means to further the important governmental goal of crime prevention.

[29] Owners and operators must post a list of the titles and prices of all entertainment provided at an adult-oriented establishment and present this list to authorized persons upon request. § 9.28(16)(d). A similar provision was upheld in Broadway Books, 642 F.Supp. at 495. The posting requirement relates to the City's interest in combating increased crime, one of the deleterious secondary effects associated with adult-oriented establishments. The specific crime targeted by the City in this particular provision seems to be obscenity. Obscenity was also specifically addressed under the ordinance's licensing provisions as a sex-related offense which disqualifies an applicant, thus indicating that obscenity offenses are of particular concern. A posted list of available entertainment at each adult-oriented establishment provides a means by which authorized persons may inspect for obscenity violations. 1494 This provision is reasonably necessary and well-tailored to a substantial government interest. As such, it is constitutional.

5. Other ordinance provisions.

T & B does not specifically contest the remaining provisions of the City's ordinance and it is therefore unnecessary for the Court to address their constitutionality.

NOW, THEREFORE, BASED ON THE FOREGOING, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

1. Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted and the case is dismissed.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

936 F.Supp. 1479

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Distinguished by Town of Lyndon v. Beyer, Wis.App., March 15, 2001

237 Wis.2d 545
Court of Appeals of Wisconsin.

† Petition for Review denied Aug. 29, 2000.

Melisa URMANSKI, d/b/a Melisa's Mistake, Plaintiff-Appellant, †
v.
TOWN OF BRADLEY, Defendant-Respondent.

No. 99-2330.
|
Submitted on Briefs April 10, 2000.
|
Opinion Released May 23, 2000.
|
Opinion Filed May 23, 2000.

Operator of establishment pursuant to a retail Class B liquor license issued by town brought declaratory judgment action seeking determination that town ordinance prohibiting nudity on premises operating under a retail Class B liquor license was unconstitutional. The Circuit Court, Lincoln County, J. Michael Nolan, J., found ordinance was constitutional, and operator appealed. The Court of Appeals, Cane, C.J., held that town's anti-nudity statute was constitutional as a content-neutral regulation of conduct.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (6)

[1] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Challenge to the constitutionality of the town's nudity ordinance presents a question of law that the Court of Appeals reviews de novo.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Presumptions and Construction as to Constitutionality

In general, statutes and ordinances are the beneficiaries of a presumption of constitutionality which the attacker must refute.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

Where an ordinance regulates the exercise of First Amendment rights, the burden shifts to the government to defend the constitutionality of that regulation beyond a reasonable doubt. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Exercise of Police Power;Relationship to Governmental Interest or Public Welfare

When "speech" and "nonspeech" elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Conduct, Protection Of

Constitutional Law
Exercise of Police Power;Relationship to Governmental Interest or Public Welfare

Constitutional Law
Narrow Tailoring

In instances when "speech" and "nonspeech" elements are combined in the same course of conduct, the government may infringe upon First Amendment freedoms to regulate conduct as long as: (1) the targeted conduct falls within the domain of state regulatory power; (2) the statutory scheme advances important or substantial government interests; (3) the state's regulatory efforts are unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) the regulations are narrowly tailored. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Nudity in General

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and Regulation

Town ordinance prohibiting nudity on premises operating under a retail Class B liquor license was constitutional as a content-neutral regulation of conduct; town's efforts to promote public health and safety by preventing negative secondary effects associated with nudity at locations where consumption of public alcohol occurred were within town's police powers, town reasonably relied on evidentiary foundation set forth in previous cases addressing such negative secondary effects, ordinance did not attempt to regulate primary effects of expression, and ban was no greater than essential to further town's interest in preventing negative secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*906 *547 On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, the cause was submitted on the briefs of Matthew A. Biegert of Doar, Drill & Skow, S.C. of New Richmond, and Randall D.B. Tigue of Randall Tigue Law Office, P.A. of Minneapolis, MN.

On behalf of the defendant-respondent, the cause was submitted on the brief of Harry R. Hertel of Hertel & Gibbs, S.C. of Eau Claire.

Before CANE, C.J., HOOVER, P.J., and PETERSON, J.

Opinion

¶ 1 CANE, C.J.

Melisa Urmanski, d/b/a Melisa's Mistake, appeals from an order upholding the constitutionality of a Town of Bradley ordinance prohibiting nudity on premises operating under a retail Class B liquor license. Urmanski argues that the ordinance is facially overbroad and, thus, violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Because the Town's ordinance is a content-neutral regulation, justified under O'Brien 's[1] four-factor test, we conclude the ordinance is constitutional and affirm the judgment.

1 See United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968).

BACKGROUND

¶ 2 Urmanski operates an establishment known as "Melisa's Mistake," pursuant to a retail Class B liquor license issued by the Town. In September 1998, Melisa's Mistake began featuring live topless dancing. In November, the Town issued Urmanski *907 an administrative summons and complaint advising her that her liquor license could be revoked for violating the Town's 548 nudity ordinance. TOWN OF BRADLEY, WIS., CODE § 5.20(5) provides:

> (a) No retail Class B licensee, shall suffer or permit any person to appear on licensed premises in such manner or attire as to expose to view any portion of the pubic area, anus, vulva, or genitals, or any simulation thereof, nor shall suffer or permit any female to appear on licensed premises in such manner or attire as to expose to view any portion of the breast below the top of the areola, or any simulation thereof.
>
> (b) Any licensee who shall violate the preceding paragraph shall be subject to revocation, suspension or refusal to renew the license as set forth in s. 125.12 Stats., and the procedures in such section shall govern.

¶ 3 On November 20, the Town suspended Urmanski's liquor license for sixty days. Urmanski subsequently filed suit against the Town, seeking a judgment pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 declaring the Town's ordinance void under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and art. I, § 3, of the Wisconsin Constitution. The circuit court limited the ordinance's application to the public areas of premises holding a class B liquor license and under this limiting construction, determined that the ordinance was constitutional. This appeal followed.

ANALYSIS

[1] [2] [3] ¶ 4 Urmanski's challenge to the constitutionality of the Town's nudity ordinance presents a question of law that this court reviews de novo. See Lounge 549 Mgmt., Ltd. v. Town of Trenton, 219 Wis.2d 13, 19-20, 580 N.W.2d 156 (1998). In general, statutes and ordinances "are the beneficiaries of a presumption of constitutionality which the attacker must refute." Id. at 20, 580 N.W.2d 156. Where an ordinance regulates the exercise of First Amendment rights, however, "the burden shifts to the government to defend the constitutionality of that regulation beyond a reasonable doubt." Id.

[4] [5] ¶ 5 The United States Supreme Court has recognized that although "being in a 'state of nudity' is not an inherently expressive condition … nude dancing … is expressive conduct." City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, ----, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 1391, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). When "speech" and "nonspeech" elements are combined in the same course of conduct, however, "a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). In such instances, the government may infringe upon First Amendment freedoms to regulate conduct as long as:

> (1) the targeted conduct falls within the domain of state regulatory power; (2) the statutory scheme advances important or substantial government interests; (3) the state's regulatory efforts are unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) the regulations are narrowly tailored.

Lounge, 219 Wis.2d at 20-21, 580 N.W.2d 156 (citing O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 376-77, 88 S.Ct. 1673). Before Erie, however, the Court had splintered over the permissible manner in which the 550 government could reasonably regulate the protected expression inherent in nude dancing. [2]

2 The parties here cite Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), in which a plurality of the court applied the four-factor O'Brien test, "but disagreed among themselves over the requisite important or substantial interest that the state needed to show under O'Brien when infringing on First Amendment expression." Lounge Mgmt., Ltd. v. Town of Trenton, 219 Wis.2d 13, 21, 580 N.W.2d 156 (1998); see also O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 376-77, 88 S.Ct. 1673. Although the Barnes Court upheld the constitutionality of an Indiana statute banning public nudity, no five members of the Court agreed on a single rationale for that conclusion.

In City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000), a majority of the Court clarified that the government's interest in preventing the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments justified any de minimis intrusions on the expression inherent in nude dancing. See id. at 1394. Four justices, in an opinion authored by Justice O'Connor, set out the appropriate analytical framework. Although Justice Souter agreed with the analytical approach employed by the plurality, he dissented from the judgment. See id. at 1402. A majority of the Court nevertheless concluded that Erie 's anti-nudity ordinance passed constitutional muster.

Because the application of Erie 's analytical framework is dispositive of the issue presented in the instant case, we refrain from addressing Urmanski's alternative arguments. See Sweet v. Berge, 113 Wis.2d 61, 67, 334 N.W.2d 559 (Ct.App.1983) (only dispositive issues need be addressed).

*908 I. ERIE AND CONTENT-NEUTRAL RESTRICTIONS ON CONDUCT

¶ 6 Erie involved a public indecency ordinance that made it an offense to "knowingly or intentionally appear in public in a 'state of nudity.' " 551 Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1388. [3] The Court first determined what level of scrutiny would apply to the ordinance. It noted that to determine what level of scrutiny applied, it had to decide "whether the State's regulation is related to the suppression of expression." Id. at 1391. The Court recognized:

[3] The ordinance at issue in Erie defined "nudity," as:

> the showing of the human male or female genital [sic], pubic hair or buttocks with less than a fully opaque covering; the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple; the exposure of any device, costume, or covering which gives the appearance of or simulates the genitals, pubic hair, natal cleft, perineum anal region or pubic hair region; or the exposure of any device worn as a cover over the nipples and/or areola of the female breast, which device simulates and gives the realistic appearance of nipples and/or areola.

In turn, "public place" was defined to include:

> all outdoor places owned by or open to the general public, and all buildings and enclosed places owned by or open to the general public, including such places of entertainment, taverns, restaurants, clubs, theaters, dance halls, banquet halls, party rooms or halls limited to specific members, restricted to adults or to patrons invited to attend, whether or not an admission charge is levied.

Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1388 n. * (citing ord. 75-1994, codified as CITY OF ERIE, PENN., CODIFIED ORD. art. 711).

> If the governmental purpose in enacting the regulation is unrelated to the suppression of expression, then the regulation need only satisfy the "less stringent" standard from O'Brien for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech. If the government interest is related to the content of the expression, however, then the regulation falls outside the scope of the O'Brien test and must be justified under a more demanding standard. Id.

552 ¶ 7 The Court recognized that the ordinance did "not target nudity that contains an erotic message; rather, it bans all public nudity, regardless of whether that nudity is accompanied by expressive activity." Id. By its terms, the Erie ordinance, like the ordinance in the instant case, regulated conduct alone. See id.

¶ 8 Despite language in the Erie ordinance's preamble suggesting that its actual purpose was to prohibit erotic dancing, the preamble also indicated that one purpose of the ordinance was to combat the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments. See id. at 1392. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court concluded that although one goal of the *909 ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects, a ban of this type "necessarily has the purpose of suppressing the erotic message of the dance." Id. The Erie Court rejected this conclusion and determined:

> [T]he ordinance does not attempt to regulate the primary effects of the expression, i.e., the effect on the audience of watching nude erotic dancing, but rather the secondary effects, such as the impacts on public health, safety, and welfare, which we have previously recognized are "caused by the presence of even one such" establishment.

Id. (quoting City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47-48, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)). The Court further concluded:

> [E]ven if Erie's public nudity ban has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, the dancers at … such establishments are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings. Any effect on the overall expression is de minimis.

553 Id. at 1393. Consequently, the Court noted, "[i]f States are to be able to regulate secondary effects, then de minimis intrusions on expression such as those at issue here cannot be sufficient to render the ordinance content based." Id. The Court held that Erie 's ordinance was, on its face, a content-neutral restriction on conduct and further recognized:

> Even if the city thought that nude dancing at clubs like [the one at issue in Erie] constituted a particularly problematic instance of public nudity, the regulation is still properly evaluated as a content-neutral restriction because the interest in combating the secondary effects associated with those clubs is unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing.

Id. at 1394.

¶ 9 As in Erie, the ordinance here was enacted, in part, to prevent the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments. A post-enactment affidavit by John Huston, town chairman, stated, in relevant part, that it was his "understanding and belief" that the ordinance had been passed in order to promote important and substantial interests of the Town, including "[its interest in avoiding] the potential for secondary effects such as prostitution, sexual assault, and criminal activity which can occur when nudity takes place at locations where the consumption of public alcohol occurs."

¶ 10 The affidavit further intimated that the desire to avoid secondary effects was "based upon the information made available to the Town through the League of Municipalities, as well as other reliable sources, including legal opinions previously rendered 554 by the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin."[4]

[4] Although Urmanski challenged the admissibility of the post-enactment affidavit before the circuit court, she does not now contend that it was inadmissible, but rather, simply characterizes it as self-serving. Certainly, it would have been better had there been a preamble to the ordinance, as in Erie, or some documents contemporary to the ordinance's enactment showing that the Town enacted the ordinance to prevent negative secondary effects. However, because Urmanski does not assert that the affidavit was otherwise inaccurate or incredible, and further because she has failed to develop any argument against its admissibility, we refrain from addressing it further. See Barakat v. DHSS, 191 Wis.2d 769, 786, 530 N.W.2d 392 (Ct.App.1995) (we will not develop an appellant's unsupported arguments).

¶ 11 Because, according to the affidavit, an asserted purpose of the Town's ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects, we conclude, consistent with Erie, that the instant ordinance is a content- *910 neutral restriction on conduct. See id. at 1394.

II. THE O'BRIEN TEST

[6] ¶ 12 After determining that the ordinance was content-neutral, the Erie Court applied the "less stringent" four-factor test from O'Brien for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech and concluded that Erie 's ordinance passed constitutional muster. See id. at 1395. With regard to the first factor, "whether the government regulation is within the constitutional power of the government to enact," the Court held that "Erie's efforts to protect public health and safety are clearly within the city's police powers." Id. Applying this reasoning to the present case, the Town's efforts to promote public health and safety by preventing negative 555 secondary effects are well within the Town's police powers and thus satisfy the first factor of the O'Brien test.

¶ 13 The second factor of the O'Brien test asks "whether the regulation furthers an important or substantial government interest." Id. The Erie Court recognized the importance of regulating conduct through the public nudity ban and of combating the negative secondary effects associated with nude dancing. See id. It additionally noted that:

> in terms of demonstrating that such secondary effects pose a threat, the city need not "conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities" to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects, "so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses."

Id. (emphasis added).

¶ 14 Comparing Erie to cases with similar anti-nudity ordinances, the Court recognized that the nude dancing at issue in Erie was of the same character as the adult entertainment at issue in the other cases. It consequently held that "it was reasonable for Erie to conclude that such nude dancing was likely to produce the same secondary effects … [a]nd Erie could reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in [the other cases] to the effect that secondary effects are caused by the presence of even one adult entertainment establishment in a given neighborhood." Id.

¶ 15 Here the asserted interest of combating the harmful secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments featuring nude dancing is "undeniably important." Id. Huston's affidavit indicates 556 that the Town's desire to prevent these secondary effects was based on information from the League of Municipalities as well as relevant legal opinions rendered by both the United States and Wisconsin Supreme Courts. We conclude that the Town could reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in previous cases addressing negative secondary effects.

¶ 16 The third O'Brien factor asks whether the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. See Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1397. As discussed earlier in this opinion, the ordinance does not attempt to regulate the primary effects of the expression, i.e., the effect on the audience of watching nude erotic dancing, but rather the secondary effects, such as the impact on public health, safety and welfare. See id. at 1392. Further, if the Town is to be able to regulate secondary effects, then any de minimis intrusions on expression are not sufficient to render the ordinance content based. See id. at 1394.

¶ 17 Finally, the fourth factor requires that the restriction be no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest. See id. at 1397. With respect to this factor, the Erie Court reiterated *911 that the ordinance there regulated conduct and "any incidental impact on the expressive element of nude dancing is de minimis." Id. It concluded that the restrictions on nudity, i.e. having to wear "pasties and G-strings," nevertheless left "ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message." Further, the Court upheld Erie's ordinance despite its ban against all public nudity. Here, the Town's ordinance bans nudity only at those establishments holding a retail Class B liquor license. Because the restrictions imposed by the Town's ordinance are less restrictive than those of Erie, we 557 determine that the Town's ordinance falls within the permissible class of restrictions that are no greater than essential to further the Town's interest in preventing negative secondary effects. Accordingly, we conclude that the ordinance at issue is constitutional as a content-neutral regulation, justified under O'Brien 's four-factor test.

Order affirmed.

All Citations

237 Wis.2d 545, 613 N.W.2d 905, 2000 WI App 141

End of Document

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Certiorari Granted in Part by City News and Novelty, Inc. v. City of Waukesha, U.S.Wis., June 19, 2000

231 Wis.2d 93
Court of Appeals of Wisconsin.

† Petition to review denied Jan. 18, 2000.

CITY NEWS & NOVELTY, INC., Plaintiff–Appellant, †
v.
CITY OF WAUKESHA, Defendant–Respondent.

No. 97–1504.
|
Oral Argument April 13, 1999.
|
Opinion Released Oct. 20, 1999.
|
Opinion Filed Oct. 20, 1999.

Operator of adult-oriented establishment filed a certiorari action seeking judicial review of the administrative review appeals board's denial of its license renewal application. The Circuit Court, Waukesha County, Robert G. Mawdsley, J., affirmed board's determination, and operator appealed. The Court of Appeals, Snyder, J., held that: (1) public hearing provision of city ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments created unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech rights, but provision was severable from remainder of ordinance; (2) operator's due process rights were not violated during license renewal procedure; (3) denying renewal of operator's license, rather than a lesser sanction, did not offend procedural due process requirements; and (4) substantial evidence of operator's ordinance violations supported denial of license renewal.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

West Headnotes (30)

[1] Administrative Law and Procedure
Scope

In an action for certiorari review, appellate review is the same as in the trial court, with the Court of Appeals confining its review to whether: (1) the board kept within its jurisdiction; (2) the board acted according to the law; (3) the action was arbitrary, oppressive or unreasonable; and (4) the evidence presented was such that the board might reasonably make the order or determination in question.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Constitutional questions and questions of statutory construction are questions of law that the Court of Appeals reviews de novo.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Prior restraints

Regulatory scheme established in licensing ordinances cannot place unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency; thus, if a permit or license may be granted or withheld solely at the discretion of a government official, this is an unconstitutional censorship or prior restraint upon the exercise of the freedom of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Prior restraints

Prior restraint upon the exercise of free speech that fails to place limits on the time within which the decisionmaker must issue the license is impermissible; a licensing decision must be made within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Availability of judicial review

Regulatory scheme that established a prior restraint on the exercise of free speech must provide for prompt judicial review in the event that a license is erroneously denied. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in general
Constitutional Law
First Amendment in general

Although ordinances normally receive a presumption of constitutionality which the challenger must refute, when the ordinance regulates First Amendment activities, the burden shifts to the government to defend the constitutionality of that regulation beyond a reasonable doubt. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City ordinance governing issuance, revocation and renewal of licenses for adult-oriented entertainment establishments contained specific guidelines for license renewal, providing narrow, objective, and definite standards to guide city, and, thus, was a constitutionally permissible restraint on license holder's exercise of free speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Although city ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments did not contain a statement specifically requiring the granting of a license when the applicant was not rendered ineligible, ordinance contained clear-cut standards for licensing, including requirements pertaining to establishment's physical layout, conduct of patrons, and responsibilities of employees and operator, and, thus, city council was not free to grant or deny applications at its whim, in violation of applicant's free speech rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments was not unconstitutionally vague and was not impermissible restraint on license applicant's free speech rights because it did not define applicable level of proof under provision barring licensure in the event an applicant was "found" to have previously violated the ordinance; ordinance gave city council power to make its own findings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City's licensing scheme for adult-oriented entertainment establishments was not constitutionally defective as prior restraint on license holder's free speech rights because it required building inspection and allowed for filing of police inspection but did not prescribe mandatory time limits for these actions; discretionary filing of police information and building inspection did not create a means for delaying city's 21-day licensure period. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Although city ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments did not contain provision requiring preservation of the status quo pending judicial review of a license denial or revocation, ordinance preserved status quo pending review, as was required to permissibly restrain license applicant's free speech rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Provisions of city's licensing scheme for adult-oriented entertainment establishments governing access to judicial review of a license denial or revocation satisfied requirement for prompt judicial review necessary to protect applicant's free speech rights; ordinance established framework for review by providing a fixed timetable from time of city's initial determination to date of the administrative review appeals board's decision and allowing for immediate review of board's decision. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Particular claims

Facial challenge asserted by operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment, alleging city's licensing scheme was invalid prior restraint on its free speech rights, was sufficient to challenge ordinance's public hearing provision, regardless of recourse operator pursued in seeking review of denial of its license renewal. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Public hearing provision of city ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments created a risk of an indefinite delay by putting applicant at the mercy of city and, thus, was unconstitutional prior restraint on license applicant's free speech rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Municipal Corporations
Effect of partial invalidity

Defective public hearing provision of city ordinance governing licensing of adult-oriented entertainment establishments was severable from remainder of ordinance; even though ordinance did not contain express severability clause, severance of public hearing provision would not undermine city's overriding goal of regulating adult establishments. W.S.A. 990.001(11).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Municipal Corporations
Effect of partial invalidity
Statutes
Effect of Partial Invalidity;Severability

Court may sever the unconstitutional portions of a statute or an ordinance to leave intact the remainder of the legislation.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Statutes
Effect of Partial Invalidity;Severability

Whether an unconstitutional provision is severable from the remainder of the statute in which it appears is largely a question of legislative intent, but the presumption is in favor of severability.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Mayor's presiding over both the common council's initial determination not to renew license to operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment and the administrative review appeals board's subsequent administrative review did not violate operator's due process rights, absent evidence mayor was influenced by impending financial interests in the outcome of the proceedings or had been the target of any personal abuse from operator. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Local government

Due process protections, including the right to an impartial decision maker, extend to common council proceedings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Impartiality

Circumstances which lead to a high probability of bias by a decision maker, even though no actual bias is revealed in the record, may be sufficient to give the proceedings an unacceptable constitutional taint, in violation of due process clause. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment had a property interest in the renewal of its operating license, which warranted the minimal safeguards of procedural due process, including notice of the charges upon which the license denial was based and giving an opportunity to challenge the charges. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Admission of minor's testimony that he entered adult-oriented entertainment establishment and stole adult magazines, offered at administrative hearing to rebut employee's testimony regarding establishment's personal identification policy and to establish that employee had been issued a citation for permitting a minor to loiter on premises, did not implicate due process protections, where administrative appeals board's decision relied upon testimony of police officers who observed minors loitering on premises and patrons engaging in sexual activity and upon building inspector's report regarding size of viewing booths, rather than minor's testimony. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment, who received citations for and was convicted of open booth violations, had adequate notice, for due process purposes, that administrative review appeals board could consider violations in reviewing denial of operator's application for license renewal. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Denying renewal of license to operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment, due to nine separate ordinance violations occurring within a one-year period, involving minors loitering on premises, open booth violations, and customers performing sexual acts in viewing booths, did not offend procedural due process requirements; there was no requirement that city pursue lesser sanction or least restrictive sanction in event of ordinance violations, and operator had adequate notice of charges and opportunity to challenge charges. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Citations issued to patrons of adult-oriented entertainment establishment for lewd and lascivious conduct were properly imputed to establishment's operator for purposes of determining revocation, suspension or renewal of license.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Testimony of police officers regarding observations of minors loitering in adult-oriented entertainment establishment on three separate occasions, together with testimony of minors involved in two incidents, was substantial evidence supporting nonrenewal of operator's license due to violation of licensing ordinance prohibiting loitering by minors.

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Zoning and Planning
Substantial evidence in general

In reviewing a zoning board's findings, the Court of Appeals applies the substantial evidence test to determine whether the evidence is sufficient.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Zoning and Planning
Substantial evidence in general

Substantial evidence, in context of appeal from decision of a zoning board, is evidence of such convincing power that reasonable persons could reach the same decision as the board.

Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Zoning and Planning
Substantial evidence in general

Substantial evidence test is highly deferential and the Court of Appeals may not substitute its view of the evidence for that of a zoning board.

Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Administrative agencies and proceedings

Conviction for alleged violations of ordinance governing adult-oriented entertainment establishments was not required for administrative review appeals board to consider testimony presented at underlying hearings as part of its review of denial of operator's application for license renewal.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*873 97 On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, there were briefs and oral arguments by Jeff Scott Olson of Madison.

On behalf of the defendant-respondent, there was a brief by Curt R. Meitz, city attorney, and Julie M. Gay, assistant city attorney. There were oral arguments by Curt R. Meitz, city attorney.

Before NETTESHEIM, ANDERSON and SNYDER, JJ.

Opinion

*874 ¶ 1 SNYDER, J.

City News and Novelty, Inc. (City News) appeals from a circuit court judgment affirming the City of Waukesha's (the City) decision not to renew City News's license to operate an adult-oriented establishment. City News raises the following issues on appeal. First, it contends that the City's adult establishment licensing scheme is unconstitutional because it fails to offer explicit standards for license renewal, provides inadequate time limits for judicial review, fails to preserve the status quo throughout the administrative process and does not permit prompt judicial review. Second, City News raises due process arguments claiming that it was deprived of an impartial administrative review, that it was given inadequate notice of the allegations against it and that the City improperly invoked the most severe sanction of nonrenewal. Finally, it contends that the grounds for nonrenewal were insufficient as a matter of law. [1]

[1] We certified the issues of preservation of the status quo, prompt judicial review and imposition of the most severe municipal sanction to the supreme court. See RULE 809.61, STATS. The supreme court, however, declined to take the case.

98 ¶ 2 While we find City News's arguments unavailing in large part, we conclude that § 8.195(3)(d) of the CITY OF WAUKESHA, WIS., MUNICIPAL CODE (1995) (hereinafter MUNICIPAL CODE), providing an applicant the right to a public hearing, is constitutionally infirm. However, because the public hearing provision of § 8.195(3)(d) is severable from the remainder of the ordinance, we reverse as to this provision and affirm as to the remainder.

BACKGROUND

¶ 3 City News is an adult-oriented establishment in the city of Waukesha which sells, rents and otherwise makes available to its customers sexually explicit books, magazines, videotapes and other materials. It also provides viewing booths in which its customers may view videotapes.

¶ 4 City News is licensed annually under the provisions of § 8.195 of the MUNICIPAL CODE. [2] Licensure 99 is required for an individual or a corporation to operate or maintain an adult-oriented establishment. See id. § 100 8.195(2)(a). An application to renew *875 a license must be filed no later than sixty days before the license expires. See id. § 8.195(7). The city clerk shall notify the applicant 101 whether the application is granted or denied within twenty-one days of the application's receipt. See id. § 8.195(3)(c).

[2] The pertinent provisions of CITY OF WAUKESHA, WIS., MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195 (1995), include the following:

> (2) LICENSE. (a) [N]o adult oriented establishment shall be operated or maintained in the City without first obtaining a license to operate issued by the City.
>
> ....
>
> (3) APPLICATION FOR LICENSE. (a) Any person desiring to secure a license shall make application to the City Clerk....
>
> ....
>
> (c) Within 21 days of receiving an application for a license, the City Clerk shall notify the applicant whether the application is granted or denied.
>
> (d) Whenever an application is denied, the City Clerk shall advise the applicant in writing of the reasons for such action. If the applicant requests a hearing within 10 days of receipt of notification of denial, a public hearing shall be held within 10 days thereafter before the Council or its designated committee as hereinafter provided.
>
> ....
>
> (4) STANDARDS FOR ISSUANCE OF LICENSE. To receive a license to operate an adult oriented establishment, an applicant must meet the following standards:
>
> ....
>
> (b) If the applicant is a corporation:

1. All officers, directors, and stockholders required to be named under par. (3)(b) shall be at least 18 years of age.
2. No officer, director, or stockholder required to be named under par. (3)(b) shall have been found to have previously violated this section within 5 years immediately preceding the date of the application.
….
(7) RENEWAL OF LICENSE OR PERMIT. (a) Every license issued pursuant to this section will terminate at the expiration of one year from date of issuance, unless sooner revoked and must be renewed before operation is allowed in the following year. Any operator desiring to renew a license shall make application to the City Clerk. The application for renewal must be filed not later than 60 days before the license expires. The application for renewal shall be upon a form provided by the City Clerk and shall contain such information and data given under oath or affirmation as is required for an application for a new license.
….
(c) If the City Police Department is aware of any information bearing on the operator's qualifications, that information shall be filed in writing with the City Clerk.
(d) The building inspector shall inspect the establishment prior to the renewal of a license to determine compliance with the provisions of this ordinance.
....
(9) PHYSICAL LAYOUT OF ADULT ORIENTED ESTABLISHMENT. Any adult oriented establishment having available for customers, patrons or members, any booth, room or cubicle for the private viewing of any adult entertainment must comply with the following requirements:
(a) Access. Each booth, room or cubicle shall be totally accessible to and from aisles and public areas of the adult oriented establishment and shall be unobstructed by any door, lock or other control-type devices.
(b) Construction. Every booth, room or cubicle shall meet the following construction requirements:
1. Each booth, room or cubicle shall be separated from adjacent booths, rooms or cubicles and any non-public areas by a wall.
2. Have at least one side totally open to a public lighted aisle so that there is an unobstructed view at all times of anyone occupying the same.
….
(c) Occupants. Only one individual shall occupy a booth, room or cubicle at any time. No occupants of same shall engage in any type of sexual activity, cause any bodily discharge or litter while in the booth. No individual shall damage or deface any portion of the booth.
(d) Inspections. The Building Inspector shall conduct monthly inspections of the premises to insure compliance with the provisions of this subsection.
(10) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE OPERATOR. (a) Every act or omission by an employee constituting a violation of the provisions of this Section shall be deemed the act or omission of the operator if such act or omission occurs either with the authorization, knowledge, or approval of the operator, or as a result of the operator's negligent failure to supervise the employee's conduct, and the operator shall be punishable for such act or omission in the same manner as if the operator committed the act or caused the omission.
(b) Any act or omission of any employee constituting a violation of the provisions of this section shall be deemed the act or omission of the operator for purposes of determining whether the operator's license shall be revoked, suspended or renewed.
(c) No employee of an adult oriented establishment shall allow any minor to loiter around or to frequent an adult oriented establishment or to allow any minor to view adult entertainment as defined herein.
….
(f) The operator shall insure compliance of the establishment and its patrons with the provisions of this section.
(11) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW PROCEDURE. The City ordinances and State law shall govern the administrative procedure and review regarding the granting, denial, renewal, nonrenewal, revocation or suspension of a license.

¶ 5 For a corporate applicant, the licensure standards state that no officer, director or stockholder "shall have been found to have previously violated this section within 5 years immediately preceding the date of the application." Id. § 8.195(4)(b)2. The ordinance then sets forth specific requirements for the physical layout and the conduct of patrons and employees of the establishment which, among other things, provide that: (1) every viewing booth or room must have at least one side entirely open to the public, [3] (2) no patron may engage in any type of sexual activity, and (3) no employee may permit a minor to loiter around or patronize the establishment. See id. § 8.195(9)(b)2, (9)(c), (10)(c).

[3] City News has previously challenged the City's open booth policy. In City News & Novelty, Inc. v. City of Waukesha, 170 Wis.2d 14, 23, 487 N.W.2d 316, 319 (Ct.App.1992), we upheld the ordinance by concluding that City News's patrons did not have a protected First Amendment right to privacy in viewing sexual materials in a public setting.

¶ 6 On November 15, 1995, City News applied for renewal of its license which was *876 due to expire on January 25, 1996. On December 19, 1995, the common council passed a resolution finding that City News had committed several code violations and therefore denied its renewal application. The violations included permitting 102 minors to loiter on the premises, failing to maintain an unobstructed view of the viewing booths and allowing patrons to engage in sexual conduct inside the booths.

¶ 7 After City News requested review of the resolution, the common council affirmed the decision. City News sought administrative review, and on June 28, 1996, the City of Waukesha Administrative Review Appeals Board affirmed the common council's decision. City News then filed a certiorari action in the circuit court seeking judicial review of the denial of its license renewal application. In an April 2, 1997 decision, the circuit court affirmed the board's determination. City News appeals. [4]

[4] We note that in Suburban Video, Inc. v. City of Delafield, 694 F.Supp. 585 (E.D.Wis.1988), the District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin addressed the constitutionality of a licensing scheme identical in relevant part to the City of Waukesha's. There, the court found the City of Delafield's ordinance constitutional except for a provision requiring disclosure of an applicant's detailed personal information. See id. at 592. While the court did not specifically address the issues raised here, we nevertheless remark that the licensing scheme was upheld as being narrowly tailored and furthering a substantial governmental purpose. See id. at 589 (citing City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

[1] [2] ¶ 8 In an action for certiorari review, appellate review is the same as in the trial court. See State ex rel. Wilson v. Schocker, 142 Wis.2d 179, 183, 418 N.W.2d 8, 9 (Ct.App.1987). We confine our review to whether: (1) the board kept within its jurisdiction; (2) the board acted according to the law; (3) the action was arbitrary, 103 oppressive or unreasonable; and (4) the evidence presented was such that the board might reasonably make the order or determination in question. See State v. Goulette, 65 Wis.2d 207, 215, 222 N.W.2d 622, 626 (1974). The primary issues raised in this case involve constitutional questions and questions of statutory construction which are questions of law that we review de novo. See City of Waukesha v. Town Bd., 198 Wis.2d 592, 601, 543 N.W.2d 515, 518 (Ct.App.1995); State v. Migliorino, 150 Wis.2d 513, 524, 442 N.W.2d 36, 41 (1989).

DISCUSSION

A. First Amendment Protections

¶ 9 City News raises a number of facial challenges to the constitutionality of the City's licensing scheme. "Although facial challenges to legislation are generally disfavored, they have been permitted in the First Amendment context where the licensing scheme vests unbridled discretion in the decisionmaker and where the regulation is challenged as overbroad." FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 223, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990).

[3] [4] [5] ¶ 10 FW/PBS is the United States Supreme Court's most recent articulation of the constitutional principles that apply to municipal licensing schemes implicating First Amendment rights. The Court held that a licensing scheme that exists as a prior restraint on businesses purveying sexually explicit but protected speech is constitutionally permissible if it contains safeguards to minimize the possibility that the licensing procedure will be used to suppress speech. See id. at 226, 110 S.Ct. 596. The Court then set forth several requirements that licensing ordinances must follow to pass constitutional 104 scrutiny. First, the regulatory scheme cannot place "unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency." *877 Id. at 225, 110 S.Ct. 596 (quoting City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ'g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 757, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988)). In other words, if a permit or license may be granted or withheld solely at the discretion of a government official, this is an "unconstitutional censorship or prior restraint" upon the exercise of the freedom of speech. See id. at 226, 110 S.Ct. 596. Second, "a prior restraint that fails to place limits on the time within which the decisionmaker must issue the license is impermissible." Id. A licensing decision must be made "within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained." Id. at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596. Finally, a regulatory scheme must provide for "prompt judicial review" in the event that a license is erroneously denied. See id.

[6] ¶ 11 We apply the constitutional framework in FW/PBS to our examination of the City's licensing scheme. In doing so, we note that although ordinances normally receive a presumption of constitutionality which the challenger must refute, when the ordinance regulates First Amendment activities "the burden shifts to the government to defend the constitutionality of that regulation beyond a reasonable doubt." County of Kenosha v. C & S Management, Inc., 223 Wis.2d 373, 383, 588 N.W.2d 236, 242 (1999) (quoted source omitted). Wisconsin courts have routinely applied this burden-shifting approach in First Amendment cases. See, e.g., id.; Lounge Management, Ltd. v. Town of Trenton, 219 Wis.2d 13, 20, 580 N.W.2d 156, 159, cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1001, 119 S.Ct. 511, 142 L.Ed.2d 424 (1998); Town of Wayne v. Bishop, 210 Wis.2d 218, 231, 565 N.W.2d 201, 206 (Ct.App.1997). FW/PBS, however, rejected this approach where First Amendment prior restraints are concerned 105 and the government action at issue is the review of an applicant's qualifications for a business operating license. The FW/PBS Court explained its reasoning in the following passage, distinguishing its licensing scheme from the scheme in Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965).

> The Court ... required in Freedman that the censor bear the burden of going to court in order to suppress the speech and the burden of proof once in court. The licensing scheme we examine today is significantly different from the censorship scheme examined in Freedman. In Freedman, the censor engaged in direct censorship of particular expressive material. Under our First Amendment jurisprudence, such regulation of speech is presumptively invalid and, therefore, the censor in Freedman was required to carry the burden of going to court if the speech was to be suppressed and of justifying its decision once in court. Under the Dallas ordinance [in FW/PBS], the city does not exercise discretion by passing judgment on the content of any protected speech. Rather, the city reviews the general qualifications of each license applicant, a ministerial action that is not presumptively invalid. The Court in Freedman also placed the burdens on the censor, because otherwise the motion picture distributor was likely to be deterred from challenging the decision to suppress the speech and, therefore, the censor's decision to suppress was tantamount to complete suppression of the speech. The license applicants under the Dallas scheme have much more at stake than did the motion picture distributor considered in Freedman, where only one film was censored. Because the license is the key to the applicant's obtaining and maintaining a business, there is every incentive for the applicant to pursue a license denial through 106 court. Because of these differences, we conclude that the First Amendment does not require that the city bear the burden of going to court to effect the denial of a license application or that it bear the burden of proof once in court.

*878 FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 229–30, 110 S.Ct. 596 (emphasis added). The licensing ordinance at play here is the same type that was before the Court in FW/PBS. Both involve the ministerial act of assessing license applications; however, neither engages in direct censorship or entails the "exercise [of] discretion by passing judgment on the content of any protected speech." Id. at 229, 110 S.Ct. 596. Consequently, we conclude that the burden does not shift to the City to defend the ordinance's constitutionality.

1. Renewal Standards

[7] ¶ 12 City News first contends that the ordinance is unconstitutional because it fails to provide explicit standards for license renewal. This argument goes to the issue of whether the ordinance permits "unbridled discretion." Because we conclude that the ordinance contains specific guidelines for renewal, we reject City News's argument.

¶ 13 Our review begins with subsec. (7) of the ordinance, entitled "RENEWAL OF LICENSE OR PERMIT," which contains several guidelines for renewal. See MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(7). Every license terminates after one year and must be renewed before operation is permitted for the following year. See id. § 8.195(7)(a). The applicant for renewal must provide a $250 renewal fee, the building must be inspected prior to renewing the license and the City of Waukesha Police Department must file with the city clerk any information it finds bearing on the operator's qualifications. See id. § 8.195(7)(b), (c), (d). The application 107 "shall contain such information and data given under oath or affirmation as is required for an application for a new license." Id. § 8.195(7)(a). City News contends that because the subsec. (7) standards fall under the "RENEWAL" heading, these are the only guidelines that apply for renewal and that the standards found under subsec. (4), entitled "STANDARDS FOR ISSUANCE OF LICENSE," only apply to the issuance of new licenses. We disagree.

¶ 14 At first blush, the ordinance appears to contain discrete subsections on issuance, revocation and renewal of licenses because each of these procedures has a separate heading. However, when read as a whole, it is clear that the standards of issuance are also meant to apply to renewal. Following the subsection on renewal are provisions addressing all matters of licensing. In particular, para. (10)(b) of the subsection entitled "RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE OPERATOR" states that

> [a]ny act or omission of any employee constituting a violation of the provisions of this section shall be deemed the act or omission of the operator for purposes of determining whether the operator's license shall be revoked, suspended or renewed. [Emphasis added.]

Paragraph (10)(f) also provides that "[t]he operator shall insure compliance of the establishment and its patrons with the provisions of this section." (Emphasis added.) The phrase "the provisions of this section" comprises all regulations within the licensing scheme, whether falling under renewal subsec. (7) or not. As outlined earlier, the ordinance's guidelines under subsecs. (9) and (10) address the proper physical layout of the premises and the conduct of the operators, employees 108 and patrons. City News does not dispute the adequacy of these guidelines, and we are satisfied that they provide "narrow, objective, and definite standards to guide the licensing authority." Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 151, 89 S.Ct. 935, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969). We therefore reject City News's argument that the scheme gives the City unfettered discretion to issue licenses.

[8] ¶ 15 Apart from the renewal standards, City News asserts that the ordinance is defective because it does not expressly *879 state that a new license must be issued upon satisfaction of the new license standards. City News cites Wolff v. City of Monticello, 803 F.Supp. 1568 (D.Minn.1992), for the proposition that a licensing scheme must direct the granting of a license when an applicant is not rendered ineligible under its standards.

¶ 16 In Wolff, the court reviewed a licensing ordinance for an adult-oriented establishment that instructed the city council to investigate each application and hold a public hearing. Following the hearing, the council had the unconditional power to "grant or refuse the application." Id. at 1573. The court determined that because the ordinance only provided guidelines as to which persons and places were ineligible for a license, there were no criteria establishing which persons and places were eligible. See id. at 1574. The court faulted this scheme because > there [was] no provision in the ordinance requiring the city council to grant license applications for any person or place that is not rendered ineligible under [the ordinance]. Limits on discretion in licensing schemes must "be made explicit by textual incorporation, binding judicial or administrative construction, or well-established practice." Thus, the city may neither rely on claims of implied limits 109 nor ask the Court to write limits into a silent regulation.

Id. (quoting City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 770, 108 S.Ct. 2138).

¶ 17 Unlike Wolff, the ordinance here has clear-cut standards for licensing. The applicant must not have violated any provision in the ordinance, including requirements pertaining to the physical layout of the establishment, the conduct of the patrons and the responsibilities of the employees and operator. While the ordinance does not contain a statement specifically requiring the granting of a license when the applicant is not rendered ineligible, the common council is not free to grant or deny applications at its whim. The ordinance's standards are plainly spelled out and are not contingent upon the type of "silent regulation" at play in Wolff. See id.

¶ 18 City News's reliance on City of Lakewood is also misplaced. There, the Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional a licensing ordinance that gave the mayor unbounded discretion to grant or deny applications and which merely required an explanation of the reasons for denial without the use of standards. See City of Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 769–72, 108 S.Ct. 2138. City of Lakewood carries no weight here because the City's licensing scheme does set forth specific guidelines and expressly provides that a violation of such guidelines constitutes a ground for nonissuance or nonrenewal.

[9] ¶ 19 City News further contends that the ordinance is unconstitutionally vague and permits unbridled discretion because there are no rules defining the level of proof of findings under MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(4)(b)2, the provision barring licensure in the event an applicant is "found" to have previously violated the ordinance. City News claims that the ordinance must establish whether the finding is to be a 110 mere accusation, a municipal citation, a conviction in municipal court or a conviction in a court of record.

¶ 20 While the criteria for the common council's findings are clearly circumscribed by the ordinance, we agree that the scheme does not set forth levels of proof for the council's findings. However, City News cites no authority, and we can find none, that requires such direction. As the City points out, the common council is given the power "to act for the government … and for the health, safety, and welfare of the public, and may carry out its powers by license, regulation … and other necessary or convenient means." *880 Section 62.11(5), STATS. Within the council's power is the authority to make its own findings. While licensing ordinances must include narrow and detailed standards, City News presents no case law indicating that such standards extend to the level of proof of the municipality's findings. We therefore conclude that City News has failed to rebut the presumption of the ordinance's constitutionality on this issue.

2. Inadequate Time Limits

[10] ¶ 21 City News contends that the City's licensing scheme is defective because it does not prescribe mandatory time limits for the application process. We disagree.

¶ 22 The City's licensing ordinance requires that a license renewal application be filed at least sixty days before the license is due to expire. See MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(7)(a). Within twenty-one days of the application's receipt, the City "shall notify the applicant whether the application is granted or denied."[5] Id. § 8.195(3)(c). As part of the renewal process, "[i]f the City Police Department is aware of any information bearing on the operator's qualifications, that information shall be filed in writing with the City Clerk." Id. 111 § 8.195(7)(c). In addition, "[t]he building inspector shall inspect the establishment prior to the renewal of a license to determine compliance with the provisions of this ordinance." Id. § 8.195(7)(d).

[5] Although City News points out that the City did not give notice of its denial until thirty-five days after receipt of the application, this fact has no bearing on a facial challenge to the ordinance.

¶ 23 Despite the time sequence set forth above, City News contends that the filing of police information and the building inspection render the City's licensing scheme constitutionally defective because these conditions permit a delay in the application process beyond the prescribed time limits. While we agree that a licensing condition must place time limits on the issuance of the license, see FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 226, 110 S.Ct. 596 we are not persuaded that the ordinance fails here.

¶ 24 In FW/PBS, the City of Dallas enacted a licensing scheme for sexually-oriented businesses giving the city police chief thirty days to accept a license application. See id. at 227, 110 S.Ct. 596. Issuance of the license was contingent upon a building inspection for which there was no mandated time period. See id. Because there was no time limitation on the inspection and because the ordinance provided no means for an applicant to ensure inspection within the thirty-day application period, the Court concluded that the scheme was unconstitutional. See id.

¶ 25 In contrast to FW/PBS, the building inspection and filing of police information here do not create a means for delaying the City's twenty-one day licensure period. First, while a building inspection is required, the ordinance provides that the inspection 112 must occur "prior to the renewal of [the] license." MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(7)(d). The onus is on the building inspector to complete his or her inspection before the license is to be renewed. This provision does not compare to FW/PBS because the ordinance there simply stated that a license will not be issued if the premises "have not been approved by the health department, fire department, and the building official." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 110 S.Ct. 596.

¶ 26 Second, MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(7)(c) provides that the filing of police information is to occur only if the police are "aware of any information bearing on the operator's qualifications." Unlike the building inspection, the filing of police information is not compulsory. This provision, therefore, does not stand in the way of the twenty-one day approval deadline *881 because the submission of information is solely at the discretion of the police department. We conclude, therefore, that the City's ordinance does not permit delays in the twenty-one day application period.

3. Preserving the Status Quo

[11] ¶ 27 City News contends that the ordinance is defective because it fails to explicitly require preservation of the status quo pending judicial review of a license denial or revocation. We conclude that while the ordinance does not contain a status quo provision, such language is unnecessary. What is important is that the status quo is maintained by the operation of the licensing scheme. The ordinance here does just that.

¶ 28 FW/PBS instructs that "the licensor must make the decision whether to issue the license within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596. As illustrated above, the licensing scheme in this case 113 starts with a license renewal application deadline sixty days before the license's expiration date. Upon receipt of the application, the City then has twenty-one days to inform the applicant whether the application is accepted or denied. Through these provisions, a decision must be rendered at the very least thirty-nine days before the license is due to lapse. As the City points out, because the common council's review of an application is completed prior to expiration of the license, the status quo is automatically maintained. Therefore, because we do not read FW/PBS as requiring anything more than the effective preservation of the status quo during the period in which the licensor makes its decision, we conclude that the ordinance satisfies the constitutional safeguards.

4. Prompt Judicial Review

[12] ¶ 29 City News next asserts that the ordinance does not guarantee "prompt judicial review," as established by the Supreme Court in Freedman. The Freedman Court held that a licensing scheme must "assure a prompt final judicial decision, to minimize the deterrent effect of an interim and possibly erroneous denial of a license." Id. at 59, 85 S.Ct. 734 (emphasis added). "Any restraint imposed in advance of a final judicial determination on the merits must … be limited to preservation of the status quo for the shortest fixed period compatible with sound judicial resolution." Id. (emphasis added).

¶ 30 While the Freedman Court apparently contemplated timely issuance of a final "decision" or "determination," more recently in FW/PBS the Court appears to have relaxed this requirement by emphasizing the "possibility" and "availability" of prompt 114 judicial review. Justice O'Connor [6] wrote that "expeditious judicial review of that decision must be available " and that "there must be the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event that the license is erroneously denied." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (emphasis added). In his concurrence to FW/PBS, Justice Brennan, the author of the Freedman opinion, also stated that "a prompt judicial determination must be available." FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 239, 110 S.Ct. 596 (emphasis added). While we note this change in the Court's language, we also acknowledge that the Court has yet to squarely define the parameters of "prompt judicial review."

6 Although the Court in FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), was split (three-way) as to which, if any, of the Freedman procedural safeguards applied, a majority of the justices agreed that (1) the licensor should make its decision within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained and (2) a licensing scheme must guarantee prompt judicial review. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 239, 110 S.Ct. 596.

*882 ¶ 31 Since FW/PBS, federal courts of appeal have been divided on the issue of "prompt judicial review." The Fourth, Sixth and Ninth Circuits hold the view that "prompt judicial review" means a timely judicial determination on the merits. See Baby Tam & Co. v. City of Las Vegas, 154 F.3d 1097, 1101–02 (9th Cir.1998); 11126 Baltimore Blvd., Inc. v. Prince George's County, 58 F.3d 988, 998–1001 (4th Cir.1995) (en banc); East Brooks Books, Inc. v. City of Memphis, 48 F.3d 220, 225 (6th Cir.1995). [7] These courts have reasoned that because a person always has a judicial 115 forum available when his or her speech is allegedly encroached, "to hold that mere access to judicial review fulfills [Freedman 's prompt review requirement] makes the safeguard itself meaningless." Baby Tam, 154 F.3d at 1101.

7 Like the Fourth, Sixth and Ninth Circuits, the Eleventh Circuit has rejected the view that mere access to judicial review is sufficient, but it has not stated what more is required to satisfy the "prompt judicial review" standard. See Redner v. Dean, 29 F.3d 1495, 1501–02 (11th Cir.1994).

¶ 32 In the First, Fifth and Seventh Circuits, the courts have taken the alternative approach that prompt access to judicial review qualifies as "prompt judicial review." See TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 24 F.3d 705, 709 (5th Cir.1994); Graff v. City of Chicago, 9 F.3d 1309, 1324–25 (7th Cir.1993) (en banc); Jews for Jesus, Inc. v. Massachusetts Bay Transp. Auth., 984 F.2d 1319, 1327 (1st Cir.1993). In Graff, the court concluded that a newsstand ordinance that did not specifically mention judicial review was nonetheless constitutional because access to judicial review was afforded by means of the common law writ of certiorari. See Graff, 9 F.3d at 1324–25.

¶ 33 Because we believe that a municipality does not have the authority to direct a state judicial court to issue a decision within a specified period of time, we are inclined to follow the reasoning of the First, Fifth and Seventh Circuits and the precise language of Justice O'Connor's opinion in FW/PBS that prompt access or availability of judicial review satisfies First Amendment protections. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 110 S.Ct. 596. As the court explained in TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 709, "the state must offer a fair opportunity to complete the administrative process and access the courts within a brief period. A 'brief period' within which all judicial avenues are exhausted would be an oxymoron." While a local governing body can pass an ordinance directing judicial review within a short period of time, we doubt that it can also require a court to make a complete and final judicial review on the merits within 116 a specified time period. We therefore conclude that the City's ordinance will be upheld as long as expeditious judicial review is available.

¶ 34 Here, the licensing scheme satisfies the prompt judicial review standard. MUNICIPAL CODE § 2.11(1) provides that administrative review of a municipality's determination is to be addressed by ch. 68, STATS.: [8]

8 CITY OF WAUKESHA, WIS., MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(11) (1995) also states that state law governs the administrative procedure and judicial review of a license renewal case.

> To insure fair play and due process in the administration of the affairs, ordinances, resolutions and bylaws of the City, the Council hereby declares that the provisions of Ch. 68, Wis. Stats., relating to municipal administrative review procedure shall be in full force and effect in the City....
> Under ch. 68, an aggrieved party has thirty days in which to seek review of an initial determination before the municipal authority making the determination. See § 68.08, STATS. The municipal authority then has fifteen days to conduct its review. See § 68.09(3), STATS. Once the municipality *883 issues its > decision, the person aggrieved may then appeal; the appeal is taken within thirty days of the issuance of the decision. See § 68.10(1), (2), STATS. The municipality must provide a hearing to the appellant within fifteen days of receipt of the notice of appeal. See § 68.11(1), STATS. After the hearing is held, the reviewing body has twenty days to make its final determination. See § 68.12(1), STATS. The appellant may then seek judicial review by certiorari within thirty days of receipt of the final determination. See § 68.13, STATS.

117 ¶ 35 The ch. 68, STATS., framework for review provides a fixed timetable from the time of the municipal authority's initial determination to the date of the administrative review appeals board's decision. Contrary to City News's assertion, judicial review may not be delayed for an indefinite period of time, as was the case in Redner v. Dean, 29 F.3d 1495, 1502 (11th Cir.1994). There, the licensing scheme was struck down because it stated (1) that an applicant "may" begin operating its establishment "unless and until the County Administrator notifies the applicant of a denial of the application," and (2) that an appeal will be heard "as soon as the Board's calendar will allow." Id. at 1500–01. Unlike Redner, however, ch. 68 does not contain contingencies that leave an applicant at the mercy of the licensor's discretion.

¶ 36 Perhaps more importantly, once the administrative review appeals board has issued its final determination, see § 68.12(1), STATS., an appellant may obtain immediate judicial review. Review by certiorari must be filed within thirty days of receipt of the final determination. See § 68.13(1), STATS. We conclude that because the ch. 68, STATS., timetable provides prompt access to judicial review, the dictates of FW/PBS are satisfied. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 227, 110 S.Ct. 596.

5. Public Hearing Provision

¶ 37 City News further argues that an indefinite time period is created as to the public hearing set forth under MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(3)(d). This provision states:

> Whenever an application is denied, the City Clerk shall advise the applicant in writing of the reasons for such action. If the applicant requests a hearing within 10 days of receipt of notification of 118 denial, a public hearing shall be held within 10 days thereafter before the Council or its designated committee as hereinafter provided.

While § 8.195(3)(d) provides a ten-day period in which a hearing will be held to review the common council's initial determination, there is no language addressing what is to take place following the hearing. And although the provision concludes that the public hearing shall be held "as hereinafter provided," id., there is no further explanation within § 8.195.

[13] ¶ 38 The City responds that City News is precluded from raising this argument because it failed to pursue the public hearing and instead sought alternative means of review under ch. 68, STATS. This response must fail, however, because City News has brought a facial challenge alleging invalid prior restraints contrary to the First Amendment and such a challenge may be raised regardless of the recourse City News has pursued. See Brandmiller v. Arreola, 199 Wis.2d 528, 546–47, 544 N.W.2d 894, 902 (1996) ("[I]n asserting an overbreadth challenge an individual may hypothesize situations in which a statute or ordinance would unconstitutionally intrude upon First Amendment rights of third parties."). City News, moreover, has standing to contest this provision because > [i]n the area of freedom of expression it is well established that one has standing to challenge a statute on the ground that it delegates overly broad licensing discretion to an administrative office, whether or not his conduct could be proscribed by a properly drawn statute, and whether or not he applied for a license.

Freedman, 380 U.S. at 56, 85 S.Ct. 734.

[14] 119 ¶ 39 We agree with City News that MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(3)(d) creates *884 a risk of an indefinite delay by putting an applicant at the mercy of the licensing body. While the applicant may receive a public hearing within ten days, the common council is given no direction as to what it must do following the hearing or when it must presumably take action in response to the hearing. If a decision is to follow, there are no guidelines providing when such a decision must be issued. Therefore, we conclude, consistent with Redner, that the public hearing provision within § 8.195(3)(d) is unconstitutionally deficient. See Redner, 29 F.3d at 1502.

[15] [16] [17] ¶ 40 We are not convinced, however, that the entire ordinance must fail. A court may sever the unconstitutional portions of a statute or an ordinance to leave intact the remainder of the legislation. See State v. Janssen, 219 Wis.2d 362, 378–79, 580 N.W.2d 260, 267 (1998). "Whether an unconstitutional provision is severable from the remainder of the statute in which it appears is largely a question of legislative intent, but the presumption is in favor of severability." Id. at 379, 580 N.W.2d at 267 (quoting Regan v. Time, Inc., 468 U.S. 641, 653, 104 S.Ct. 3262, 82 L.Ed.2d 487 (1984)).

¶ 41 As a rule of statutory construction, severability is codified under § 990.001(11), STATS., which states:

> The provisions of the statutes are severable. The provisions of any session law are severable. If any provision of the statutes or of a session law is invalid, or if the application of either to any person or circumstance is invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications which can be 120 given effect without the invalid provision or application.

¶ 42 In City of Madison v. Nickel, 66 Wis.2d 71, 223 N.W.2d 865 (1974), our supreme court saved an obscenity ordinance by severing a portion of it that provided an unconstitutional definition of obscenity. See id. at 80, 223 N.W.2d at 870; see also State v. Zarnke, 224 Wis.2d 116, 135–37, 589 N.W.2d 370, 377–78 (1999). In determining whether a defective section of an ordinance fatally infects the remainder of the law, a court should look to the legislative intent, particularly whether "the legislature would be presumed to have enacted the valid portion without the invalid [portion]." Nickel, 66 Wis.2d at 79, 223 N.W.2d at 869 (quoted source omitted). If a statute contains distinct parts and the offending parts can be extracted while leaving intact a "living, complete law capable of being carried into effect … the valid portions must stand." Id. at 79–80, 223 N.W.2d at 870 (quoted source omitted). Additional consideration is given to whether the ordinance contains a severability clause.

¶ 43 Although the ordinance in this case does not contain an express severability clause, the "severability intention" of the common council can be gleaned from the purpose and structure of the ordinance. See Denver Area Educ. Telecomms. Consortium, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 518 U.S. 727, 767, 116 S.Ct. 2374, 135 L.Ed.2d 888 (1996) (where the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act did not contain a severability clause, the Court looked to its purpose and structure to decipher the legislature's intent). The common council has clearly expressed its objective in creating the adult establishment licensing ordinance:

> 121 WHEREAS although the provisions of this ordinance have neither the purpose or effect of imposing a limitation or restriction on the content of any communicative materials, the Common Council deems it to be in the interests of the City of Waukesha to provide for licensing and regulation of adult oriented establishments … to combat and curb the secondary effects of such establishments.

MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195 preamble. While there is no stated purpose regarding the *885 methods of administrative review, we fail to see how severance of the public hearing provision would undermine the overriding goal of regulating adult establishments. Cf. Katt v. Village of Sturtevant, 269 Wis. 638, 642, 70 N.W.2d 188, 190 (1955) (where intention of village board could not be carried out by severing one provision, the whole ordinance was void).

¶ 44 Although MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(3)(d) may offer an aggrieved applicant an avenue for administrative review, the primary method of review lies under ch. 68, STATS. As the common council has provided under § 8.195(11) ("Administrative Review Procedure"),

> The City ordinances and State law shall govern the administrative procedure and review regarding the granting, denial, renewal, nonrenewal, revocation or suspension of a license.

In addition, § 2.11(1) of the MUNICIPAL CODE specifically declares that ch. 68 is controlling for purposes of administrative review. As we have already determined, ch. 68 sets forth narrow, definite and objective standards for bringing an appeal, and City News does not directly challenge this chapter.

122 ¶ 45 Based on the purpose and structure of the ordinance, we are certain that the common council would have still enacted the ordinance even without the public hearing provision. Therefore, because we conclude that severance of the invalid provision leaves intact an otherwise complete licensing scheme, we refuse to strike the entire ordinance.

B. Due Process Considerations

1. Impartial Decision Maker

[18] ¶ 46 City News claims that it was deprived of an impartial decision maker when Mayor Carol Opel presided over both the common council's initial determination and the administrative review appeals board's subsequent administrative review.[9] We are not persuaded.

9 The administrative review appeals board is established under CITY OF WAUKESHA, WIS., MUNICIPAL CODE, § 2.11(3) (1995).

[19] ¶ 47 Due process protections, including the right to an impartial decision maker, extend to common council proceedings. See State ex rel. DeLuca v. Common Council, 72 Wis.2d 672, 677, 679, 242 N.W.2d 689, 692, 693 (1976). These protections have been adopted under ch. 68, STATS., which guarantees an appellant the right to a hearing on administrative appeal following the municipality's initial determination. See §§ 68.10(1)(a), 68.11(1), STATS.[10] Section 68.11(2) states that for purposes of the administrative hearing, the 123 municipality must provide "an impartial decision maker, who may be an officer, committee, board, commission or the governing body who did not participate in making or reviewing the initial determination, who shall make the decision on administrative appeal."

10 An appellant, however, is not granted a hearing on administrative appeal "[i]f the person aggrieved had a hearing substantially in compliance with s. 68.11 when the initial determination was made." Section 68.10(1)(b), STATS.

¶ 48 The city mayor is directed to preside over common council meetings. See § 62.09(8)(b), STATS. In this case, the mayor was present for council meetings addressing City News's license application. The mayor also signed the council's December 19, 1995 resolution denying City News's license application. Later, when the administrative review appeals board conducted its § 68.09, STATS., review, the mayor was one of three individuals who decided to uphold the common council's resolution. City News now argues that because the mayor is the chief executive officer of Waukesha and is entrusted with the power to veto all acts of the common council, see § 62.09(8)(a) and (c), she *886 thereby "participate[d] in making or reviewing the initial determination," § 68.11(2), STATS., by presiding over the council and signing the December 19 resolution. City News claims that by approving the resolution and, in turn, choosing not to exercise her veto power, the mayor disqualified herself as an "impartial decision maker."

[20] ¶ 49 DeLuca is instructive on this issue. There, the court explained that due process protections extend both to the bias and the appearance of bias of the decision maker. "Circumstances which lead to a high probability of bias, even though no actual bias is revealed in the record, may be sufficient to give the proceedings an unacceptable constitutional taint." DeLuca, 72 Wis.2d at 684, 242 N.W.2d at 695. Following Withrow v. Larkin, 421 U.S. 35, 95 S.Ct. 1456, 43 L.Ed.2d 712 (1975), the court 124 recognized two circumstances that show "such a high probability of actual bias as to be constitutionally intolerable." DeLuca, 72 Wis.2d at 684, 242 N.W.2d at 695. The first situation presents itself when the decision maker has a financial interest at stake; the second occurs when the adjudicator has been subject to "personal abuse or criticism" from the party before it. See id.

¶ 50 In the present case, there is no indication that the mayor was influenced by impending financial interests in the outcome of the proceedings or had been the target of any personal abuse from City News. In addition, during the administrative review hearings, the mayor stated that

> I, too[,] believe that I can be an impartial hearer of this testimony. While I have chaired all the common council meetings, I act as a facilitator. I have not offered > testimony or debate or spoke to the issue before the council at any time.

These statements support the conclusion that the mayor did not play a role in the decision-making process, and City News has not presented any evidence suggesting that the mayor did more than facilitate the common council's meetings. We agree with the City that under the circumstances the mayor's signature was a purely administrative act and was not indicative of her position on the merits of the dispute. Although the mayor had the power to veto the council's resolution, this discretion did not constitute review of the resolution. Therefore, because we are persuaded that the mayor did not participate in making or reviewing the resolution, we conclude that she was not disqualified from her subsequent participation in the administrative review proceedings.

125 2. Adequate Notice

[21] ¶ 51 City News next raises several arguments alleging a lack of sufficient notice as to the charges against it. As it points out, it has a property interest in the renewal of its operating license. See Manos v. City of Green Bay, 372 F.Supp. 40, 48–49 (E.D.Wis.1974) (property interest was found for retention of liquor license). Such a property interest warrants the minimal safeguards of procedural due process. See id. at 49. These basic guarantees include providing notice of the charges upon which the license denial was based and giving an opportunity to challenge the charges. See id. at 51.

¶ 52 City News claims that following the issuance of the City's resolution, the City exceeded the scope of the allegations contained therein when it presented testimony from T.M., and related exhibits, at the administrative review hearing. [11] We are not persuaded.

11 City News also complains that testimony about Jamie Bahr, including Exhibits 36 and 37, should not have been presented because this evidence went beyond the scope of the December 19 resolution. While we understand that the evidence about Bahr concerns a citation for displaying sexual material to minors, City News does not explain, and we cannot readily determine, the substance of the testimony. We therefore decline to address the issue. See State v. Pettit, 171 Wis.2d 627, 647, 492 N.W.2d 633, 642 (Ct.App.1992).

[22] ¶ 53 T.M. testified that he was seventeen years old when he entered City *887 News on March 7, 1996, and stole adult magazines. At the administrative hearing, City News objected to T.M.'s testimony because it had not received notice that the City was going to call T.M. and his actions were not mentioned in the December 19, 1995 resolution because the March 7 incident 126 occurred after the common council had issued the resolution. The City responded that T.M.'s testimony was offered to impeach the prior testimony of City News employee David Hull concerning City News's personal identification policy and the fact that Hull had been issued a citation for permitting a minor to loiter on its premises. The administrative review appeals board noted City News's objection but nonetheless permitted T.M. to testify. [12]

12 The administrative review appeals board explained that it was its policy to note all objections but to nonetheless receive the evidence and determine its weight upon deliberation.

¶ 54 We agree with the City. T.M.'s testimony was not used as a new ground for rejecting City News's license application. Rather, it was brought for the purpose of impeaching Hull's testimony that he abided by the store's policy of checking the identification of every person who appeared younger than thirty years of age. City News admitted as much in its proposed findings of fact for the administrative review appeals board where it stated, "[W]e find that [T.M.'s] testimony is not credible and is not sufficient to rebut the testimony of David Hull, the purpose for which it was offered." The administrative review appeals board's findings are also telling. There, the board relies upon the testimony of police officers who observed minors loitering on City News's premises and patrons engaging in sexual activity, and upon a building inspector's report regarding the size of the viewing booths. There is no mention, however, of T.M. We conclude, therefore, that the admission of T.M.'s testimony did not implicate due process protections.

[23] ¶ 55 Next, City News complains that it was denied adequate notice of a November 7, 1995 open booth violation that was raised at the administrative 127 review hearing but not cited in the December 19 resolution. The resolution cited three open booth violations for which City News's operator received ordinance citations and was subsequently convicted. The resolution states:

> WHEREAS, on 11/30/94, 12/1/94 and 12/2/94 City News and Novelty, Inc. through its employees and/or agents violated the provisions of section 8.195(9)(b)2 of the Waukesha Municipal Code by failing to have every booth, room or cubicle totally open to a public lighted aisle so [as to] permit[ ] an unobstructed view at all times of anyone occupying the same.

During the administrative review, however, city building inspector Marvis Lemke reported that while City News's booths had violated the open booth ordinance upon his annual inspection on November 7, by November 30 the booth entrances had been reopened to an acceptable level. In the administrative review appeals board's findings, the board included Lemke's November 7 inspection report and mentioned the three ordinance violations. City News now claims that it had no notice of the November 7 open booth violation.

¶ 56 City News was provided sufficient notice to defend against the November 7 booth violation. First, MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(7)(d) advises that "[t]he building inspector shall inspect the establishment prior to the renewal of a license to determine compliance with the provisions of this ordinance." City News therefore had notice that an inspection would be made before *888 its license would be renewed. Second, City News does not deny that it received citations for and was convicted of open booth violations occurring on November 30 and December 1 and 2, 1994. The December 19 resolution cited these violations. Third, the basis of all of the open 128 booth violations was the same—City News's use of wood paneling to narrow the booth openings, thereby creating an obstructed view of the booths.

3. Sanctions Imposed

[24] ¶ 57 City News next raises the issue of whether the City's response to its alleged violations of the ordinance, which was to invoke the most severe form of sanction and deny renewal of the license, passes constitutional muster. City News claims that the City acted unreasonably in "saving up" all of its complaints past the point where City News could effectively remedy them prior to renewal. City News argues that by utilizing a "sub rosa theory of strict liability without ever articulating it as such," the City has offended procedural due process requirements.

¶ 58 The City responds that the issue of whether it may deny a license renewal application rather than issue a license suspension or revocation is solely a matter of discretion for the licensing body. It asserts that there is no licensing requirement that it first provide a warning, a suspension or some lesser penalty before nonrenewal is appropriate. It adds that City News has failed to cite any authority addressing the issue of the appropriateness of particular sanctions sought by a municipality based upon ordinance violations.

¶ 59 We agree with the City that there is no authority requiring a municipality to pursue a lesser sanction or the least restrictive sanction in the event of an ordinance violation. There are, however, particular procedural due process considerations at play. These include providing notice of the charges, an opportunity to respond to and challenge the charges, an opportunity to present witnesses, and an opportunity to confront and cross-examine opposing witnesses. See 129 Manos, 372 F.Supp. at 51. In this case, we have already determined that City News was provided adequate notice of the charges. In addition, there is no dispute that it was afforded an opportunity to challenge the charges.

¶ 60 We next consider the particular types of sanctions available when an operator violates the ordinance. First, there is nonissuance and nonrenewal of a license. This measure is conditioned upon an applicant having violated a provision of the licensing scheme within five years of the application. Second, revocation of a license for one year is similarly available where "[t]he operator or any employee of the operator violates any provision of this section or any rules or regulation adopted by the Council pursuant to this section." MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(8)(a)2. Finally, a suspension of thirty days or less may be invoked "in the case of a first offense by an operator where the conduct was solely that of an employee … if the Council shall find that the operator had no actual or constructive knowledge of such violation and could not by the exercise of due diligence have had such actual or constructive knowledge." Id.

¶ 61 Suspension is inappropriate here because the board specifically found that a director of City News had committed various violations of the ordinance. According to the board's June 28, 1996 findings, Police Officer Richard Piagentini observed a minor patron on City News's premises on December 24, 1994, and City News director Daniel Bishop was subsequently convicted for permitting the minor on the premises contrary to MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(10)(c). The findings indicate that Bishop also received convictions for three other ordinance violations based on City *889 News's failure to maintain open viewing booths pursuant 130 to § 8.195(9)(b)2. Therefore, because a director of City News was found to have contravened the ordinance, we attribute knowledge of the violations to City News. We further note that the violations cited by the board were not solely at the hands of an employee. Thus, suspension is not an available sanction in this case.

¶ 62 While revocation and nonrenewal both rely upon a violation of the ordinance, we believe the City properly exercised its discretion in deciding to impose a nonrenewal sanction. In its findings, the board listed nine separate ordinance violations occurring within a one-year period. Four of these involved minors loitering on the premises, three involved open booth violations and two dealt with customers masturbating in viewing booths. In its preamble, the ordinance speaks to particular health and safety concerns endemic to adult-oriented establishments. Such concerns include the transmission of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases and increased levels of criminal activity such as prostitution, rape and assaults. Considering both the health and safety issues as well as City News's record of ordinance violations, we are satisfied that the City acted within its discretion.

C. Sufficiency of Nonrenewal Grounds

[25] ¶ 63 Finally, City News asserts that the grounds upon which the nonrenewal determination was based were inadequate as a matter of law. It claims that citations issued to patrons in February and March 1995 for lewd and lascivious conduct cannot stand as a 131 basis for nonrenewal.[13] City News further argues that because the standards for issuance of a new license concern only the conduct of officers, directors and stockholders of the corporation,[14] the conduct of patrons is immaterial. City News is wrong.

13 The administrative review appeals board's findings were, in pertinent part, as follows:

> 1. On February 28, 1995, Officer John Gibbs observed a patron of City News and Novelty, Inc. … masturbating in a viewing booth.… There were no employees in the booth area when the Officer made his observation. The patron was convicted of the criminal charge of lewd and lascivious conduct contrary to Section 944.20, Wis. Stats.…
>
> 2. On March 11, 1995, Officer Paul De Jarlais observed a patron at City News … masturbating in a viewing booth. There were no employees in the booth area when the Officer made his observation. The patron was convicted of the criminal charge of lewd and lascivious conduct contrary to Section 944.20, Wis. Stats.…

14 MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(4)(b)2 provides, "No officer, director, or stockholder required to be named under par. (3)(b) shall have been found to have previously violated this section within 5 years immediately preceding the date of the application."

¶ 64 As we have previously outlined, the ordinance contains specific restrictions under subsecs. (9) and (10) that stand apart from the general licensure standards under MUNICIPAL CODE § 8.195(4)(b). One such requirement is that no occupants of booths, rooms or cubicles shall engage in any type of sexual activity. See id. § 8.195(9)(c). At the end of the licensing scheme, the ordinance states generally that "[t]he operator shall insure compliance of the establishment and its patrons with the provisions of this section." Id. 8.195(10)(f) (emphasis added). "Operator" is defined as any "person, partnership, or corporation operating, 132 conducting, maintaining or owning any adult-oriented establishment." Id. § 8.195(1).

¶ 65 It is clear from the ordinance that City News is the operator here and that when patrons were issued citations for and convicted of lewd and lascivious behavior, City News violated the ordinance by not ensuring compliance with the para. (9)(c) prohibition on sexual activity. A plain reading of the ordinance does not limit the *890 City's review to only the conduct of officers, directors and stockholders. If it did, then the conduct of employees, including permitting the exposure of sexual material to minors, would be of no consequence. City News's position, therefore, contravenes the explicit condition that actions of "any employee constituting a violation of the provisions of this section" are imputed to the operator for purposes of determining revocation, suspension or renewal. See id. § 8.195(10)(b). We reject this narrow reading of the ordinance.

[26] [27] [28] [29] ¶ 66 City News next asserts that the testimony of police officers that minors had been found loitering in the store on three separate occasions [15] was insufficient 133 evidence as a matter of law to qualify as a "finding," as this concept is used within the licensing ordinance. See id. § 8.195(4)(b)2 ("[N]o officer, director, or stockholder … shall have been found to have previously violated this section …."). (Emphasis added.) In reviewing the board's findings, we apply the substantial evidence test to determine whether the evidence is sufficient. See Clark v. Waupaca County Bd. of Adjustment, 186 Wis.2d 300, 304, 519 N.W.2d 782, 784 (Ct.App.1994). Substantial evidence is evidence of such convincing power that reasonable persons could reach the same decision as the board. See id. The substantial evidence test is highly deferential and we may not substitute our view of the evidence for that of the board. See id.

15 The administrative review appeals board's findings stated the following:

> 2. On July 23, 1995, Officer John Konkol observed S.S., a patron, at City News … who was a minor. Officer Konkol made the observation while on duty. Additionally, S.S. testified that she was a patron at City News … on July 23, 1995 and … was a minor. Christopher Alverson, the employee on duty at the time, was convicted of a civil ordinance violation contrary to Section 8.195, Subsection 8.195(10)(c) of the Municipal Code of Waukesha on August 25, 1995. There was no evidence to refute the credible testimony of Officer Konkol or S.S.
>
> 3. On October 18, 1995, Officer Mark Howard observed S.D., a patron, at City News … who was a minor. Officer Howard made the observation during the course of a routine investigation. Additionally, S.D. testified that he was a patron of City News … on October 18, 1995 and … was a minor. There was no evidence to refute the credible testimony of Officer Howard and S.D.
>
> 4. On November 29, 1995, Officer Paul Paikowski observed a patron of City News … who was a minor. Officer Paikowski made these observations as a result of a routine inspection of the premises. He was not called to the scene by an employee of City News …. There was no evidence to refute the credible testimony of Officer Paikowski.

Because the July 23 incident led to a conviction, City News is wrong in stating that it "has never been convicted, even in municipal court, of these violations." City News is otherwise correct that the October 18 and November 29 incidents did not result in convictions.

¶ 67 We conclude that substantial evidence supported the board's findings. At the administrative hearings, a police officer testified to each of the three incidents involving minors. Each observation made by the officers took place while the officer was on duty. For two of these incidents, the minor involved testified to 134 his or her conduct. This evidence was substantial and City News has failed to present any evidence to refute the testimony of the officers or the minor patrons.

[30] ¶ 68 Finally, City News seeks to refute evidence of a fourth incident involving a minor loitering on its premises. At the administrative hearings, an officer testified that while on patrol he observed a minor at City News on December 24, 1994. The board's findings indicate that an employee and a director of City News were convicted of civil ordinance violations for this incident. City News now contends that because these convictions were later dismissed on appeal and because a conviction *891 must stand to qualify as a finding of the board, this incident carries no weight in support of the board's decision. We disagree.

¶ 69 First, City News provides no authority to support its view that only a conviction can constitute a finding of the board. Contrary to this position, the board has the discretion to make its own findings of fact based on the evidence presented. As was the case with the July 23, October 18 and November 29, 1995 incidents involving minors, an officer testified that he observed a minor patron on City News's premises. This evidence was not refuted by City News, and while the convictions of the employee and director were dismissed, the board was still justified in relying on the evidence presented at the hearings. Because we conclude that the board's findings are supported by a reasonable view of the evidence, see Snyder v. Waukesha County Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 74 Wis.2d 468, 476, 247 N.W.2d 98, 103 (1976), City News's argument is without merit.

135 CONCLUSION

¶ 70 While City News's due process and sufficiency of the evidence challenges fail, we agree that the public hearing provision under § 8.195(3)(d) of the MUNICIPAL CODE is constitutionally deficient. However, rather than striking the entire ordinance, we conclude that § 8.195(3)(d) is severable and thus reverse as to this provision and affirm as to the remainder.

Costs are denied to both parties.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

All Citations

231 Wis.2d 93, 604 N.W.2d 870

721 F.3d 729
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

ENTERTAINMENT PRODUCTIONS, INC., Platinum Rose, Inc., 777 Memphis, Inc., Manhattan, Inc., and Tennessee Entertainment Concepts, Inc., Tennessee Corporations; 2882 Lambs Place, L.L.C., a Tennessee Limited Liability Company; 600 Marshall Entertainment Concepts, LLC, a Tennessee Limited Liability Corporation, Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
SHELBY COUNTY, TENNESSEE, a Political Subdivision of the State of Tennessee; City of Memphis, a Tennessee Municipal Corporation, Defendants–Appellees, Robert E. Cooper, Jr., Tennessee Attorney General, Intervenor Defendant–Appellee.

No. 11–6396.
|
Argued: Dec. 6, 2012.
|
Decided and Filed: July 9, 2013.

Synopsis

Background: Owners of adult-oriented entertainment establishments brought action challenging constitutionality of state law regulating such establishments. The United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Frederick Motz, J., 2011 WL 3903002, entered judgment against owners. Owners appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Boggs, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] statute, as enforced by local ordinance, did not violate First Amendment;

[2] ordinance did not violate First Amendment; and

[3] prior determination relating to statutory definitions was law of the case.

Affirmed.

Karen Nelson Moore, Circuit Judge, filed opinion concurring in the judgment.

West Headnotes (20)

[1] Federal Courts
Summary judgment

Court of Appeals reviews the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Statutes, regulations, and ordinances, questions concerning in general

Court of Appeals reviews de novo a challenge to the constitutionality of a state statute.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Erotic dance is a form of symbolic speech or expressive conduct which, though protected by the First Amendment, falls within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Court of Appeals assesses the constitutionally of regulations that purport to ameliorate the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments under an intermediate-scrutiny standard, under which content-neutral regulations of the time, place, or manner of protected expression are valid so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Because regulations that purport to ameliorate the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments are actual regulations of First Amendment expression, as opposed to regulations of conduct, Court of Appeals looks first to the defendants to provide a connection between the regulations of protected speech and the adverse secondary effects that they seek to control. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

A state issuing a regulation that purports to ameliorate the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments must have had a reasonable evidentiary basis for concluding that its regulation would have the desired effect; although not extraordinarily high, this evidentiary burden requires that the state show that the evidence upon which it relied was reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the entity sought to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

There is no hard-and-fast rule that the government have any empirical data directly supporting a link between a regulation purporting to ameliorate the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments and the secondary effect it seeks to ameliorate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press
Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Once a state has established a substantial interest in regulating erotic speech, the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to cast direct doubt on the state's rationale for the challenged regulation; they may do this either by demonstrating that the state's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the state's factual findings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

A state may rely upon a variety of data, including empirical studies from other states and cities, the laws and experiences of other jurisdictions, and prior court decisions to support its rationale for its challenged regulation limiting erotic speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Evidence suggesting that a different conclusion by the state legislature is also reasonable does not prove that the state's findings in support of regulation of erotic speech were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Notwithstanding the reasonableness of the state's rationale, a statute regulating erotic speech must leave the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

A state or municipality may not set out to reduce the secondary effects of erotic speech by proportionally reducing the availability of the speech itself. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

State statute, as enforced by local ordinance, that regulated sexually-oriented businesses, and which prohibited certain activities in such establishments, served substantial government interest of combating harmful secondary effects of such establishments, and therefore did not violate First Amendment; despite claim by establishment owners, state was not required to provide direct empirical support to sustain regulation, and vast array of germane, widely accepted evidence of secondary effects supported state's rationale in regulating sexually-oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

Court of Appeals reviews factual disputes for clear error.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Ordinance that regulated sexually-oriented businesses and which prohibited the sale of alcohol in erotic entertainment establishments served substantial government interest of combating harmful secondary effects of such establishments, and therefore did not violate First Amendment; any reduction in the availability of erotic speech was due not to the operation of the ordinance, but to the establishment owners' economic choice to invest their resources elsewhere. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Federal Courts
Former decision as law of the case

Prior determination by Court of Appeals on review of denial of request for preliminary injunction, relating to statutory definitions of "adult-oriented establishments," "adult cabaret," and "adult entertainment" in statute that regulated sexually-oriented businesses, was law of the case in action alleging statute was overbroad and void for vagueness, precluding Court of Appeals from revisiting interpretation of such terms on subsequent appeal. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Courts
Previous Decisions in Same Case as Law of the Case

Under the law-of-the-case doctrine, findings made at one point in the litigation become the law of the case for subsequent stages of that same litigation.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Courts
Previous Decisions in Same Case as Law of the Case

Court of Appeals generally will not disturb law-of-the-case findings unless there is (1) an intervening change of controlling law; (2) new evidence available; or (3) a need to correct a clear error or prevent manifest injustice.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Federal Civil Procedure

Government records, papers and property

Owners of adult entertainment establishments were not prejudiced by denial of motion to compel city to produce police reports and crime data sheets, in action challenging constitutionality of state statute, as enforced by local ordinance, that regulated sexually-oriented businesses, where such request fell into category of a fishing expedition. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 26(b)(1), 28 U.S.C.A.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Federal Civil Procedure

Inconvenience or other detriment

Federal Civil Procedure

Scope

Though parties generally may discover any unprivileged evidence relevant to their claim, a district court may limit discovery due to irrelevance and burdensomeness. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 26(b)(1), 28 U.S.C.A.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

732 ARGUED: J. Michael Murray, Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Devan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. Robert B. Rolwing, Shelby County, Tennessee, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellee Shelby County. Steven A. Hart, Office of the Tennessee Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellee Attorney General. ON BRIEF: J. Michael Murray, Raymond V. Vasvari, Jr., Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Devan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. Robert B. Rolwing, Shelby County, Tennessee, Memphis, Tennessee, Roane Waring III, City of Memphis, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellee Shelby County. Steven A. Hart, Office of the Tennessee Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellee Attorney General.

Before: BOGGS, MOORE, and SUTTON, Circuit Judges.

BOGGS, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which SUTTON, J., joined, and MOORE, J., joined in the result. MOORE, J. (pp. 744–46), delivered a separate opinion concurring in the judgment.

OPINION

BOGGS, Circuit Judge.

In this second chapter of the litigation over Shelby County Ordinance 344, Entertainment Productions, Inc., et al., seek to resuscitate their case against Shelby County and the State of Tennessee after a final judgment against them in the district court below. The appellants, a group of business entities that collectively own a substantial fraction of the adult nightclubs in Memphis, seek to enjoin and invalidate the Tennessee Adult–Oriented Establishment Registration Act of 1998, as locally enforced by Ordinance 344. They assert that the Act violates the First Amendment under a variety of theories. We disagree. For the reasons set out below, we affirm the district court.

I

We have chronicled the facts of this case in detail elsewhere. Entm't Prods., Inc. v. Shelby Cnty. (Entm't Prods. I), 588 F.3d 372, 376–77 (6th Cir.2009). The Act at issue is a county-option state law, enacted to address the deleterious secondary effects associated with adult-oriented businesses, including crime, the spread of venereal disease, decreased property values, and other public-welfare and safety issues. The Act applies to all businesses falling within the statutory definition of "adult-oriented establishment." These establishments are regulated in two principal ways. First, all businesses subject to the Act, as well as their employees, must obtain a license. Second, the Act regulates the manner in which entertainment may be provided by these establishments in four major ways: (1) it prohibits nudity; (2) it prohibits certain sexual activities, touching 733 of certain anatomical areas, and all physical contact during performances; (3) it prohibits the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises; and (4) it requires that all performances take place on a stage at least 18 inches above floor level and that all performers stay at least six feet away from customers and other performers.

Shelby County adopted the Act in September 2007. The appellants filed suit against the county in January 2008 in the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee. Claiming that the Act violated the First Amendment, they sought declaratory relief and preliminary and permanent injunctions. The Tennessee Attorney General moved to intervene, which the district court permitted in March 2008. The court subsequently denied the appellants' request for a preliminary injunction the following month. We affirmed this decision. Entm't Prods. I, 588 F.3d at 395.

Proceeding on remand, the appellants based their First Amendment argument on three different theories: (1) facial invalidity under intermediate scrutiny, (2) overbreadth, and (3) vagueness. The district court granted summary judgment for the appellees as to all claims except the claim of facial invalidity attacking the reasonableness of the Ordinance's coverage of establishments featuring "briefly attired" dancers. After a bench trial, the district court upheld the regulation as to this final challenge.

II

[1] We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Trs. of the Mich. Laborers' Health Care Fund v. Gibbons, 209 F.3d 587, 590 (6th Cir.2000). The decision below may be affirmed only if the pleadings, affidavits, and other submissions show "that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(a). In determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, we draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587–88, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986).

[2] We also review de novo the sole claim that proceeded to trial, as it challenges the constitutionality of a state statute. Associated Gen. Contractors of Ohio, Inc. v. Drabik, 214 F.3d 730, 734 (6th Cir.2000).

III

The appellants' first argument does not focus on any single provision of the Act, but rather attacks the statute as a whole. The appellants claim that the Act fails intermediate scrutiny because the data used to justify the regulations are "shoddy." They criticize the methodology employed by the myriad studies cited by the state,[1] and offer their own statistical data showing no correlation between the existence of adult-oriented businesses and a number of the secondary effects that the appellees seek to eliminate. The appellants further charge that, regardless of the reliability of the data used, the Act impermissibly regulates the secondary effects of adult-oriented speech by eliminating the speech itself. Specifically, they claim that the regulations reduce the accessibility of erotic entertainment to a point that the nightclubs would rather leave the market than be regulated.

1 We refer primarily to the challenge against the state Act in this part, but the arguments apply with equal force to the county Ordinance, as it adopts the Act in toto.

A

[3] The Act regulates the exhibition of erotic dance, a form of symbolic speech or 734 expressive conduct. Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox Cnty., Tenn. (Richland Bookmart II), 555 F.3d 512, 520 (6th Cir.2009). Though protected by the First Amendment, " 'nude dancing of the type at issue here is expressive conduct,' which falls 'within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection.' " Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 274 F.3d 377, 391 (6th Cir.2001) (quoting City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion)). Such speech receives protection, " 'of a wholly different, and lesser magnitude.' " Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols [Richland Bookmart I], 137 F.3d 435, 439 (6th Cir.1998) (quoting Young v. Am. Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976)).

[4] [5] We assess the constitutionally of regulations that purport to ameliorate the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments under the intermediate-scrutiny standard announced in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 523–24. According to Renton, content-neutral regulations of the time, place, or manner of protected expression are valid "so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Because these regulations are "actual regulation[s] of First Amendment expression," as opposed to regulations of conduct (e.g., prohibitions on public nudity or the destruction of draft cards), we look first to the defendants to provide a connection between the regulations of protected speech and the adverse secondary effects that they seek to control. Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 523.

[6] [7] The state issuing the regulation must have "had a reasonable evidentiary basis for concluding that its regulation would have the desired effect. Although not extraordinarily high, this evidentiary burden requires that the state show that the evidence upon which it relied was 'reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem' that the entity sought to address." 729, Inc. v. Kenton Cnty. Fiscal Ct., 515 F.3d 485, 491 (6th Cir.2008) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). It need not produce new empirical data specific to the local situation that it seeks to abate. Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Indeed, there is no hard-and-fast rule that the government have any empirical data directly supporting a link between a given regulation and the secondary effect it is purported to ameliorate. See City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality opinion) (observing that such a requirement would undermine the settled position that municipalities must be given a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to the problem of secondary effects); id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment) ("[W]e have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required. As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners." (citations omitted)). So long as the state is reasonable in its belief that the evidence upon which it relied is relevant, it will meet this initial burden.

[8] [9] [10] Once the state has established a substantial interest in regulating erotic speech, the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to "cast direct doubt" on the state's rationale for the challenged regulation. Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). They may do this "either by demonstrating that the [state's] evidence does not 735 support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the [state's] factual findings." Id. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Though the state is not allowed to "get away with shoddy data or reasoning," id. at 426, 122 S.Ct. 1728, it is not "required to demonstrate empirically that its proposed regulations will or are likely to successfully ameliorate adverse secondary effects." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 524. A state may rely upon a variety of data, including empirical studies from other states and cities, the laws and experiences of other jurisdictions, and prior court decisions. 84 Video/Newsstand, Inc. v. Sartini, 455 Fed.Appx. 541, 552 (6th Cir.2011); see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (noting that the Court has never per se required empirical data); Renton, 475 U.S. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("We hold that [the defendant] was entitled to rely on the experiences of Seattle and other cities, and in particular on the 'detailed findings' summarized in the [state supreme court's] opinion, in enacting its adult theater zoning ordinance."). Additionally, "evidence suggesting that a different conclusion [by the legislature] is also reasonable does not prove that the [state's] findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 527. Rather, the defendants must show either that the data relied upon are irrelevant or that the government has drawn an unreasonable conclusion from those data.

[11] [12] Finally, and notwithstanding the reasonableness of the state's rationale, the statute must leave "the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment). Justice Kennedy did not expand upon this final requirement beyond noting that a state or municipality may not set out to reduce the secondary effects of adult speech by proportionally reducing the availability of the speech itself. Id. at 450–51, 122 S.Ct. 1728 ("If two adult businesses are under the same roof, an ordinance requiring them to separate will have one of two results: One business will either move elsewhere or close. The city's premise cannot be the latter."). Justice Kennedy made his concurrence with the plurality contingent upon this requirement, see ibid. ("[T]he necessary rationale for applying intermediate scrutiny is the promise that zoning ordinances like this one may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech."), which accordingly binds us. 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491.

B

1

We have previously recognized the state's substantial interest in controlling the adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments, "which include violent, sexual, and property crimes as well as blight and negative effects on property values." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 524. As evidenced by documents submitted by the state attorney general, the Tennessee Act and the Shelby County Ordinance purport to do the very same. Both governmental entities embarked upon extensive fact-finding processes during the drafting of the respective provisions: The preamble of the 1998 Act references "convincing documented evidence" of the adverse secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses; the preamble to the Act's 1995 predecessor cites 15 municipal studies on the secondary effects of sexually oriented business, and 15 state and federal judicial opinions upholding similar regulatory schemes; before enacting the law, the legislature sought the opinion of the state attorney general, who vouched for the Act's constitutionality; and before Shelby County enacted Ordinance 344, it hired Duncan Associates, a 736 Texas-based consulting firm, to make an additional set of findings based upon local crime statistics and in-person, undercover visits to a number of adult-oriented businesses in the area (including many of the appellants' businesses).

[13] With this, the appellees easily clear Renton's initial hurdle: Both the state and the county passed their respective legislation to advance a governmental interest that we have previously recognized to be substantial. They relied upon ample empirical, legal, and anecdotal evidence that they reasonably believed to be relevant to the issues created by adult-oriented speech. This evidence provided a reasonable basis for concluding that the Act would have the desired effect of ameliorating the deleterious effects of erotic expression. The first step in our intermediate-scrutiny analysis is therefore satisfied.

2

Next, the burden shifts to appellants to show that the evidence presented does not support the rationale asserted or to furnish their own studies that dispute the state's findings. Appellants attack the Act on both fronts. They allege that the data relied upon by both the state and Shelby County are "fatally flawed" and additionally present their own research that purportedly negates the link between adult-oriented establishments and the deleterious secondary effects that the state wishes to control. However, we find no merit in either of these arguments. Viewing the appellants' evidence in the most charitable light possible, they have, at most, demonstrated that the methodological framework used to assess the relationship between adult-oriented businesses and the purported secondary effects of such businesses is subject to reasonable debate. This is to say that they have failed to show that the state's data have been discredited, thus making their reliance upon them unreasonable. What's more, the state relied upon a substantial amount of non-empirical evidence that appellants do not contest. Even if we do not consider the studies, the state is still entitled to summary judgment.

a

Appellants submitted a 36–page expert report by Dr. Daniel Linz that goes through each of the studies relied upon by the state and briefly explains how these studies are either methodologically flawed or irrelevant. Dr. Linz bases his criticism on an analytical framework expounded by himself and a group of colleagues in a 2001 article. See Daniel Linz et al., Government Regulation of "Adult" Businesses Through Zoning and Anti–Nudity Ordinances: Debunking the Legal Myth of Negative Secondary Effects, 6 Comm. L. & Pol'y 355 (2001). The foundational premise of his argument is that a study must meet a Daubert-style definition of scientific validity before a state may reasonably rely upon it for the purposes of regulating adult-oriented businesses. See id. at 366–67, 391 (citing Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993)). He goes on to advance a four-point methodology for assessing the scientific validity of a secondary-effects study: (1) the control area must be equivalent to the area containing the adult-oriented businesses in terms of crime, blight, and economic factors; (2) the study must assess the areas for a "sufficient period of elapsed time"—at least one year before and after the establishment of the adult-oriented business, according to Linz; (3) the source and types of crime data assessed must be similar (e.g., if the control area is measured by calls for service, which he asserts is best, the test area must be measured by the same); (4) any survey research must be conducted in a proper, unbiased manner. Id. at 372–75.

737 In his report, Dr. Linz attacks all of the studies cited by the state for shortcomings related to his framework. For example, he claims that the 1979 Phoenix and 1986 Indianapolis studies are unreliable because both failed to account for differences in socio-economic conditions and property values between the sample and control areas. He attacks other studies, such as the 1977 Los Angeles survey, for failing to control for ramped-up police enforcement in the sampling area. Finally, he assails other studies, such as the 1983 Houston study, for not being empirical.

b

The appellants' argument fails as a matter of law for a variety of reasons. First and foremost, the foundational premise of their argument—that the state's evidence must pass muster under Daubert or some equivalent—is flatly wrong. Neither the Supreme Court nor this court has ever held that the First Amendment demands direct empirical support, let alone a specific methodology, to sustain a regulation on erotic expression. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion); id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment); Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 527. If a governmental entity need not rely upon direct empirical evidence, a fortiori it need not rely upon direct empirical evidence that meets a particular commentator's threshold of scientific validity.

As the Supreme Court observed in Alameda Books, this does not mean that governmental entities can rely upon "shoddy data." 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). This statement, however, does not mean that the state's evidence must hurdle some methodological bar before it may be relied upon. Rather, we understand the nature of the state's ultimate burden—a reasonable belief of relevance—to set nothing more than a floor. States may not regulate erotic speech based upon evidence that is nongermane or, worse, nonexistent. Post–Alameda Books case law confirms this. Take for example the three cases upon which the appellants principally rely: New Albany DVD, LLC v. City of New Albany, 581 F.3d 556 (7th Cir.2009), Annex Books, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, 581 F.3d 460 (7th Cir.2009), and Abilene Retail # 30, Inc. v. Board of Commissioners of Dickinson County, 492 F.3d 1164 (10th Cir.2007). Addressing them in chronological order, Abilene Retail concerned a zoning ordinance passed in a rural county based upon the standard litany of urban-based secondary-effects studies. The Tenth Circuit reversed a grant of summary judgment because of a material dispute as to the relevance of the existing canon of studies to a non-urban setting. 492 F.3d at 1175–76. Next, the Seventh Circuit in Annex Books found a material question as to the relevance of data on the dispersal of businesses featuring live sexual entertainment to a set of regulations of the conditions and hours of operation of adult bookstores. 581 F.3d at 461–63. The Seventh Circuit again reversed a grant of summary judgment in New Albany DVD, where a municipality passed regulations of adult bookstores based upon threadbare anecdotal evidence that theft and pornographic litter tended to occur with higher frequency around such stores. 581 F.3d at 559–61.

In contrast, the State of Tennessee and Shelby County relied upon a vast array of germane, widely accepted evidence in passing their respective regulations. To the extent that the appellants ask the federal courts to declare this evidence insufficient, they ask the court system to effect a paradigm shift in empirical criminology through judicial decree, if not a fundamental restructuring of First Amendment law. Similar requests have been roundly rejected by our sister circuits, and we now join 738 them. See, e.g., Imaginary Images, Inc. v. Evans, 612 F.3d 736, 747–48 (4th Cir.2010) ("So while the Linz study and others may well be of interest to legislatures or those formulating policy, it does not provide the kind of 'clear and convincing' evidence needed to rebut the government's showing and invalidate the regulation."); Doctor John's v. Wahlen, 542 F.3d 787, 791–93 (10th Cir.2008) ("Even Doctor John's concedes that 'courts continue to rule that studies of secondary effects ... do not have to meet the standard of Daubert.' ... [I]n light of the Supreme Court's rejection of this specific analysis by Dr. Linz, we see little need to continue." (alterations in original)); Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d 860, 882–83

& n. 33 (11th Cir.2007) ("We also note that at least three other circuits have rejected, for similar reasons, attempts by plaintiffs to use studies based on [call-for-police-service] data to cast direct doubt on an ordinance that the municipality supported with evidence of the sort relied upon by the City of Daytona Beach here. Interestingly, Daniel Linz, one of the experts hired by Lollipop's, also co-authored the studies found to be insufficient in two of these cases." (citations omitted)); Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 395 F.3d 1114, 1126–27 (9th Cir.2005) ("The Appellants' proffered expert [Linz] declared that the City's evidence was flawed because 'systematically collecting police call-for-service information' and adhering to the Appellants' suggested methodological standards were 'the only reliable information' that could have supported the City's concern. This is simply not the law."); G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639–40 (7th Cir.2003) ("Plaintiff argues that its complaint must survive summary judgment because the evidence relied upon by the Board does not meet the standards of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals. Under the plaintiff's view, the Town cannot demonstrate a reasonable belief in a causal relationship between the activity regulated and secondary effects, as required by Alameda Books and Renton, unless the studies it relied upon are of sufficient methodological rigor to be admissible under Daubert. This argument is completely unfounded." (citations omitted)).

We do not suggest that Dr. Linz's work is flawed. To the contrary, we construe it in the most charitable light possible. However, the most we may fairly say of his work is that it is a minority viewpoint within the secondary-effects literature. As suggested by two of our sister circuits[2]—and as we state clearly now—federal court is simply not the appropriate forum for Dr. Linz and his colleagues to wage methodological combat with other studies on the secondary effects of adult speech. At best, the appellants have demonstrated that the 739 State of Tennessee and Shelby County faced a choice between two reasonable alternative viewpoints when assessing the need for the challenged regulations. The appellants effectively ask us to second-guess the deliberative judgments of both legislative bodies. We decline to do so.

2 See Imaginary Images, 612 F.3d at 749 ("None of this is to say that Virginia's policy is unassailable or even right. But the primary means to challenge legislative misconceptions is through the channels of representative government: hearings, speeches, conversations, debates, the whole clamorous drama of democracy that leads to the enactment of the given law. In the First Amendment context, those affected by restrictions designed to combat secondary effects may of course demonstrate that the justification for a particular restriction rests on 'shoddy data or reasoning.' But to invoke the power of the judiciary to set the policy aside, such evidence must be sufficiently convincing to 'prove[ ] unsound' the government's justification for its policy."); G.M. Enters., 350 F.3d at 639–40 ("Alameda Books does not require a court to re-weigh the evidence considered by a legislative body, nor does it empower a court to substitute its judgment in regards to whether a regulation will best serve a community, so long as the regulatory body has satisfied the Renton requirement that it consider evidence 'reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem' addressed.").

c

Though the foregoing analysis amply supports the district court's grant of summary judgment on the appellant's intermediate-scrutiny argument, we briefly note that the appellants would not prevail even if we did not consider the contested studies. The state may rely upon "any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (emphasis added) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). This includes "land-use studies, prior judicial opinions, surveys of relevant professionals (such as real-estate appraisers), anecdotal testimony, police reports, and other direct and circumstantial evidence." 84 Video/Newsstand, 455 Fed.Appx. at 549. The studies assailed by the appellants are but one piece of a larger body of evidence relied upon by both the state and the county, which included the experiences of other states and municipalities, judicial opinions, crime statistics, anecdotes from police, their own prior experiences with regulating adult-oriented businesses, and plain common sense. Even if we count the reasonableness of the state's reliance upon these studies as disputed, the district court's decision is supported by the uncontested, non-empirical evidence in the record.

C

[14] The district court separately considered the issue of whether the state was reasonable in its belief that the same body of data justified regulation of "briefly attired dancers." [3] After a bench trial, the district court ruled in favor of the state, relying upon our opinion in Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 529–30. The appellants' primary quarrel with the district court's opinion appears to be that it credited the testimony of Dr. Richard McCleary, the state's expert, over that of Dr. Linz. Factual disputes such as this are reviewed only for clear error, Morrison v. Colley, 467 F.3d 503, 506 (6th Cir.2006), and we find none.

3 By "briefly attired," we understand appellants to mean "entertainers who are distinctly not nude, but are clad in bikinis, swimsuits, and other materials which, while opaque, do not completely cover the entire buttocks, or all portions of the breast below the topmost portion of the areola." Entm't Prods. I, 588 F.3d at 383 (internal quotation marks omitted).

The appellants additionally cite R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford, 361 F.3d 402 (7th Cir.2004), as establishing that the existing body of secondary-effects literature is devoid of a link between non-nude dancing and the adverse effects that the state and the county wish to ameliorate. This argument, however, represents a misunderstanding of the applicable First Amendment case law and of R.V.S. itself. As discussed in detail in the previous section, a state or municipality is not obliged to produce direct evidence of a link between a particular activity that it wishes to regulate and the secondary effects that it wishes to mitigate—it need only produce evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem and upon which it reasonably relied in concluding that the regulations passed would have the effects desired. See 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491. Furthermore, R.V.S. falls into the previously discussed category of cases in which a federal court has struck down an adult- 740 entertainment regulation due to a total absence of evidence relied upon by the state or municipality. See 361 F.3d at 405 ("[I]t is undisputed that the City Council did not rely on any studies from other towns or conduct any of their own studies.... The Ordinance does not contain any preamble or legislative findings and the journal of proceedings for the City Council meeting at which it was adopted does not state any findings."). Thus, R.V.S. neither conflicts with nor bears upon our prior case law holding that it is reasonable for governments to conclude that establishments featuring scantily clad dancers pose the same types of problems as establishments featuring nude and semi-nude entertainment. Entm't Prods. I, 588 F.3d at 383 (citing Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 529–30).

D

The appellants mount a final effort to strike down the Act under intermediate scrutiny by threatening to shut down if they lose. They argue that the Act fails Justice Kennedy's proportionality requirement from Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment), because the appellants' exit from the adult-entertainment market would cause a rapid decrease in the quantity and accessibility of adult speech. See ibid. The appellants submitted two affidavits by two nightclub proprietors, which speak of the economic impact that the Act—namely the ban on the sale or consumption of alcohol at their clubs—would have on their business. At oral argument, counsel for the appellants stated that his clients' nightclubs have ceased production of nude and semi-nude entertainment, choosing to operate as bikini bars so as to avoid regulation by the Act. The county confirms that no bar has filed for a license to operate as an adult-oriented business in Shelby County since the January 2013 effective date of Ordinance 344.

In Alameda Books, the Supreme Court assessed the effects of a Los Angeles zoning ordinance on the availability of adult speech. The challenged ordinance prohibited the operation of multiple adult businesses in a single building, on the theory that a concentration of adult-oriented businesses bred higher crime rates. 535 U.S. at 430–31, 122 S.Ct. 1728. In his decisive concurrence, Justice Kennedy posited that a proper Renton analysis must "address how speech will fare under the [challenged] ordinance." 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728. He observed:

> [T]he necessary rationale for applying intermediate scrutiny is the promise that ... ordinances like this one may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech. For this reason, it does not suffice to say that inconvenience will reduce demand and fewer patrons will lead to fewer secondary effects.... It is no trick to reduce secondary effects by reducing speech or its > audience; but a city may not attack secondary effects indirectly by attacking speech.

Ibid.

We applied this framework in our opinion in 729, Inc. 515 F.3d at 492–93. At issue was the constitutionality of a "cooling off" provision—a one-hour period after a performance during which erotic entertainers could not come within five feet of a patron. Id. at 490. We held that, though the regulation did affect speech by preventing dancers from being physically present in a particular area for a particular period of time, it did not run afoul of Alameda Books. Id. at 493. The regulation served a substantial governmental interest in minimizing customer-entertainer contact that carried a risk of prostitution and did so in a manner that substantially preserved erotic speech. Ibid. It neither banned communication between customers 741 and entertainers outright (affected performers could communicate with patrons while still complying with the buffer-zone restriction) nor substantially reduced the opportunity to engage in protected conduct (it affected only those dancers performing on that night within the preceding hour). Ibid.

Turning to the issue before us, we have no trouble making the initial conclusion that Ordinance 344 serves a substantial governmental interest. It seems almost too obvious to say that the combination of intoxicating beverages and erotic entertainment can be extremely volatile, and that banning the consumption of alcohol at adult-oriented businesses may reduce a variety of secondary effects. This common-sense observation is supported by the findings contained in the Duncan Associates report, which uncovered instances of patrons drinking "to the point of total inebriation," coupled with numerous violations of state and local laws proscribing customer-patron sexual contact. The report further suggested that the combination of drinking and sexual stimulation increased the risk of patrons become targets for crime, as these individuals are likely to "have their guard down." This conclusion is, in some sense, too narrow, in that it does not take into account the increased risk that the intoxicated, sexually stimulated patrons may themselves engage in criminal activity, e.g., soliciting performers for sex, exposing themselves in public, and like crimes.

Our analysis becomes more complex when we turn to the proportional impact that this regulation has on the availability of adult speech in Shelby County. The appellants would have us believe that because they have voluntarily ceased production of adult entertainment, the availability of protected adult speech has dropped to zero. However, their argument ultimately proves too much. The appellants do not allege that the alcoholic-beverage ban would damage their revenue stream so profoundly that it makes their businesses unprofitable. Rather, they allege that the ban would merely make their clubs less profitable. Though they do not specify how much their profits would be reduced were they to stay in the adult-entertainment business, it is telling that an owner of one of the defendant clubs operates an alcohol-free cabaret in Nashville. Although he notes that the Nashville club is less profitable than his other clubs, compliance with the ban has clearly not driven him from the market.

At bottom, we understand the appellants to make the following argument: Compliance with the alcoholic-beverage ban would reduce their profits. This reduction in profits results in a situation where it is more profitable to operate outside of the Ordinance's coverage as a bikini bar than it is to operate within the Ordinance's coverage as a strip club. Being rational actors, the appellants choose to convert their establishments into the more lucrative bikini bars, resulting in a substantial drop-off in the availability of erotic speech. Accordingly, they theorize, the Ordinance cannot pass muster under Alameda Books.

[15] The problem with this argument is that it ignores the fact that any reduction in the availability of erotic speech is due not to the operation of the Ordinance, but to the appellants' economic choice to invest their resources elsewhere. This scenario is categorically different from the ones faced in Alameda Books, where Justice Kennedy expressed concern that municipalities could enact zoning ordinances to force adult-oriented businesses to close, and in 729, Inc., where this court scrutinized a local cool-down provision to ensure that it did not directly effect a substantial reduction in the opportunities for erotic expression. Shelby County did not premise 742 its alcoholic-beverage ban on the elimination of adult speech, and the ban imposes neither a crushing financial burden nor a direct and substantial curtailment of opportunities for erotic expression. It merely regulates the types of revenue-generating activities that proprietors of adult-oriented businesses may conduct.

It is not enough that the ban, combined with outside forces such as the relative demands for striptease, bikini contests, and alcohol, result in an economic climate where it is more lucrative to operate a non-nude club with alcohol than a nude club without. Were this sufficient to sustain a proportionality argument under Alameda Books, it is hard to see how any government action that alters the economic calculus of adult-oriented businesses would not potentially violate the First Amendment. Suppose that Shelby County decided to discourage nude and semi-nude entertainment not by regulating adult-oriented businesses, but by subsidizing non-adult-oriented businesses. Giving financial breaks to comedy clubs, disco bars, and the local theatre may well create an economic choice similar to the one presented here, yet it is patently absurd to say that such action would violate the First Amendment. The appellants' legal theory would expand Justice Kennedy's concurrence beyond any recognizable limiting principle, and we accordingly reject it.

IV

The appellants' next set of challenges relate to the statutory definitions of "adult-oriented establishments," "adult cabaret," and "adult entertainment." They attack these critical terms, which ultimately define the scope of the Act's coverage, under theories of overbreadth and void-for-vagueness. We previously addressed the meaning of these terms during our review of the appellants' request for a preliminary injunction. Entm't Prods. I, 588 F.3d at 383–89. We denied the preliminary injunction after finding that the operative terms were susceptible to a narrowing construction that would clearly exempt mainstream artistic venues, thereby curing any potential overbreadth and sufficiently clarifying any portion of the Act allegedly contaminated by vagueness. Id. at 389, 394–95.

[16] [17] [18] Appellants' arguments here are, in substantial part, an attempt to relitigate that finding. However, "[u]nder the law-of-the-case doctrine, findings made at one point in the litigation become the law of the case for subsequent stages of that same litigation." Rouse v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 300 F.3d 711, 715 (6th Cir.2002). We generally will not disturb these findings unless there is "(1) an intervening change of controlling law; (2) new evidence available; or (3) a need to correct a clear error or prevent manifest injustice." Louisville/Jefferson Cnty. Metro Gov't v. Hotels.com, L.P., 590 F.3d 381, 389 (6th Cir.2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). The appellants claim that the Supreme Court's intervening opinion in United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 130 S.Ct. 1577, 176 L.Ed.2d 435 (2010), vitiated our analysis in Entertainment Productions I. They read Stevens to circumscribe our ability to apply a narrowing construction to potentially overbroad terms, such that we must revisit our prior holding. However, we find no new principle of First Amendment law in Stevens that affects our analysis, and appellants' counsel could not point us to one during oral arguments.

The Stevens Court struck down a federal law that criminalized the commercial creation, sale, or possession of "a depiction of animal cruelty," which the statute defined as "[one] in which a living animal is intentionally maimed, mutilated, tortured, wounded, or killed," if that conduct violates federal or state law where "the creation, sale, or possession takes place." 743 Id. at 1582 (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 48(a), (c)(1) (amended 2010)). The Court found no language in § 48 that would delineate acts that are traditionally considered animal cruelty, such as the "crush videos" that were the original target of statute, from arguably protected speech, such as depictions of hunting and livestock slaughter. Id. at 1588–89. Rather, the statute's criminal scope was a function of the legality of the act depicted in the jurisdiction in which it was made, thereby subjecting citizens to a "bewildering maze of regulations from at least 56 separate jurisdictions." Id. at 1589.

The appellants point us not to what the Court held, but rather to what it did not. They argue that the Court's rejection of the government's various defensive arguments elucidates a new and deeper understanding of the overbreadth doctrine. This argument, however, reads too much into a rudimentary application of preexisting law to an overbroad statute. The government first argued that the phrase "depiction of animal cruelty" should be construed to require an accompanying act of cruelty. Id. at 1588. The Court rejected this argument out of hand:

> The Government contends that the terms in the definition should be read to require the additional element of "accompanying acts of cruelty." The Government bases this argument on the definiendum, "depiction of animal cruelty"....

....

> But the phrase "wounded ... or killed" at issue here contains little ambiguity. The Government's opening brief properly applies the ordinary meaning of these words, stating for example that to " 'kill' is 'to deprive of life.' " We agree that "wounded" and "killed" should be read according to their ordinary meaning. Nothing about that meaning requires cruelty.

Ibid. (citations omitted). The government next argued that the statute's exemption clause, which carved out "any depiction that has serious religious, political, scientific, educational, journalistic, historical, or artistic value," 18 U.S.C. § 48(b) (amended 2010), protected speech that contained "anything more than scant social value." Id. at 1590 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court again rejected this argument as an "unrealistically broad reading of the exceptions clause." Ibid. This left the government with only a bare assertion of prosecutorial discretion, which the Court rejected forcefully by stating that "the First Amendment protects against the Government; it does not leave us at the mercy of noblesse oblige." Id. at 1591.

To the extent that the Court may have appeared exceptionally strict in its analysis of the proposed narrowing constructions, it is likely because those proposed constructions were exceptionally weak. We discern no new principle of First Amendment law flowing from the Court's opinion. Indeed, the Stevens Court began its analysis exactly where we began ours: by citing United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 293, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008), for the proposition that "[t]he first step in overbreadth analysis is to construe the challenged statute; it is impossible to determine whether a statute reaches too far without first knowing what the statute covers." Compare Stevens, 130 S.Ct. at 1587, with Entm't Prods. I, 588 F.3d at 381. Our analyses diverged at this point because the Court found that "animal cruelty" was not readily susceptible to a narrowing construction in light of the plain-text definition of the phrase, while we found the opposite with regards to "adult-oriented establishments," "adult cabaret," and "adult entertainment." Having presented no persuasive reason for us to revisit our prior interpretation of the Act, we adhere to our ruling in Entertainment 744 Productions I and reject the appellants' overbreadth and void-for-vagueness arguments.

V

The appellants make two final arguments unrelated to the First Amendment. They first argue that Ordinance 344 is preempted by Section 7–51–1121(b) of the Act, which states

> Notwithstanding any provision of subsection (a) or any other law to the contrary, if a city or other political subdivision in this state chooses to enact and enforce its own regulatory scheme for adult-oriented establishments and sexually-oriented businesses [sic], then this part shall not apply within the jurisdiction of such city or other political subdivision.

Appellants suggest that this provision preempts enforcement of the Act in Shelby County because the City of Memphis and the county have a number of other provisions that address sexually oriented businesses. Appellants' suggested reading contradicts the provision's plain text. This section does quite the opposite of preemption: it allows localities to enact and enforce their own regulatory schemes without fear of being preempted by the state. We focus specifically on the operative verb of the provision—"choose." If a city or other political subdivision chooses to enact and enforce its own regulatory regime, then the state opt-in regime does not apply. If, however, the political subdivision chooses to opt into the state regulatory regime, as Shelby County has done here, then it only makes sense that the Act applies. The appellants have not shown how any county or city ordinance conflicts with the operation of the Act. They present no argument as to why the Act should be preempted, save the fact that both the county and the city have other laws that touch on the same subject matter. We reject this argument.

[19] [20] Finally, appellants claim they were prejudiced by an erroneous denial of a motion to compel the City of Memphis to produce a number of police reports and crime-data sheets. According to the magistrate judge's order, the appellants sought the production of "essentially all records and reports relating to crimes within the city limits over a five-year time period." Entm't Prods.

v. Shelby Cnty., No. 08–2047–D/P, 2009 WL 1148240 (W.D.Tenn. Apr. 28, 2009). The magistrate judge denied the request as overly broad and irrelevant, and the district court affirmed. We agree. Though the parties generally may discover any unprivileged evidence relevant to their claim, Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(b)(1), the district court may limit discovery due to irrelevance and burdensomeness. Surles ex rel. Johnson v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 474 F.3d 288, 305 (6th Cir.2007). We have previously ruled that litigants challenging an adult-entertainment regulation are not entitled to discovery regarding localized manifestations of secondary effects, as a state or municipality need not rely upon this data in order to pass a valid regulation. Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 466 F.3d 391, 398 (6th Cir.2006). Since the discovery sought would not resolve any factual disputes that could entitle the appellants to relief, their request "falls more in the category of a fishing expedition," and the district court did not err in denying it. See Stanford v. Parker, 266 F.3d 442, 460 (6th Cir.2001).

VI

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court.

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge, concurring in the judgment.

I write separately to address the district court's grant of summary judgment. In 745 my view, the district court's decision is supported by the simple fact that plaintiffs failed to address defendants' public health, safety, and welfare rationales for introducing the Act.

Under the burden-shifting framework announced in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., defendants have the initial burden of putting forth "any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." 535 U.S. 425, 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (quoting City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)). Then the burden shifts to plaintiffs to "cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that [defendants'] evidence does not support [their] rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes [defendants'] factual findings." Id. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. "If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on [defendants'] rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to [defendants] to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies [the Act]." Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. This case concerns the second step, when the burden is on plaintiffs.

As both the district court and majority opinion note, our cases make clear that "evidence suggesting that a different conclusion is also reasonable does not prove that the County's findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable." Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox County, 555 F.3d 512, 527 (6th Cir.2009). With this, both opinions hold that summary judgment was appropriate. To me, relying on this proposition of law to grant summary judgment in favor of defendants undermines the wisdom of the burden-shifting mechanism. Frankly, it is exceptionally unclear from our cases what evidence plaintiffs needed to present to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether they have cast doubt on defendants' rationale for introducing the Act. Given this uncertainty, I think that the issue is more suited for trial than summary judgment.

Noting this concern, I would nonetheless affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment because plaintiffs failed to present any evidence that casts doubt on the public health, safety, and welfare rationales for introducing the Act. The district court aptly noted in granting summary judgment in favor of defendants:

> Dr. Linz analyzed studies on property values and crime relied on by the County and the State. Dr. Linz' critiques and supplemental studies did not extend to the spread of sexually transmitted diseases or any other public health, safety, and welfare issues, and Plaintiffs submitted no other evidence to counter the County's and State's concerns on those issues. As such, Plaintiffs have failed to shift the burden of proof from themselves back to the County with regard to the City's public health concerns.

R. 123 (9/29/09 D. Ct. Order at 13) (Page ID # 4727). Given that plaintiffs failed to raise any doubt on the public health, safety, and welfare rationales for adopting Act, plaintiffs failed to shift the burden back to defendants. See 84 Video/Newsstand, Inc. v. Sartini, 455 Fed.Appx. 541, 552 (6th Cir.2011), cert. denied, —— U.S. ——, 132 S.Ct. 1637, 182 L.Ed.2d 234 (2012) ("Linz's testimony and studies fail to cast doubt on the entire body of evidence relied on by the General Assembly, including those secondary-effects studies not discussed by Linz and the significant quantity of other types of evidence relied on by the Legislature with which Linz does not engage, including prior court decisions, news reports, and anecdotal testimony by law enforcement officials and others."); see also 746 Heideman v. South Salt Lake City, 165 Fed.Appx. 627, 631–32 (10th Cir.2006) ("Simply put, the record does not contain any evidence to counter the City's concern over unsanitary conditions or the possibility of public health concerns associated with unregulated nude conduct in adult business establishments.... Accordingly, Plaintiffs failed to shift the burden of proof from themselves back to the City."). Instead of heightening plaintiffs' burden at summary judgment to meet some unknown (or perhaps unattainable) evidentiary burden to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether they have cast doubt on defendants' rationale, I would hold simply that plaintiffs were required to cast doubt on each rationale presented by defendants. Because plaintiffs failed to address all of defendants' rationales, the district court did not err in granting summary judgment in favor of defendants, and therefore I concur in the judgment.

All Citations

721 F.3d 729

End of Document

714 F.3d 65
United States Court of Appeals,
First Circuit.

Gary LUND, d/b/a Club Martinique, Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

CITY OF FALL RIVER, MA; James Hartnett, City Planner; Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals; David Assad, as Chairman of the Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals; Gene Alves, as Vice Chairman of the Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals; Richard Mateus, as Member of the Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals; Andrea Merolla–Simister, as Member of the Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals; John Frank, III, as Member of the Fall River Zoning Board of Appeals, Defendants, Appellees.

No. 12–1758.
|
April 22, 2013.

Synopsis

Background: Plaintiff brought Massachusetts state–court action against city, challenging zoning ordinances as violating his First Amendment rights by preventing him from opening adult entertainment establishment on property zoned as industrial without providing adequate opportunity elsewhere. City removed action. The United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, George A. O'Toole, Jr., J., 2012 WL 1856947, entered judgment for city. Plaintiff appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Souter, Associate Justice, sitting by designation, held that:

[1] that purportedly available sites were subject to long-term leases or required costly development was not relevant in constitutional analysis;

[2] court reasonably determined that there were eight available sites in city for adult establishments; and

[3] ordinances provided plaintiff with reasonable means of commercial adult activity as alternative to their restrictions.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (8)

[1] Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

Where, in a nonjury case, the basic dispute between the parties concerns the factual inferences that one might draw from the more basic facts of the case, where there are no significant disagreements about those basic facts, and where neither party has sought to introduce additional factual evidence or asked to present witnesses, the Court of Appeals applies a clear error standard of review, rather than a de novo standard, on all issues not purely legal.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Mode and sufficiency of presentation

Plaintiff forfeited his argument that district court, in entering judgment in favor of city, failed to assess impact of zoning ordinance's requirement of 750–foot buffer between loading facilities and any structure used for residential purposes, by raising that argument for first time on appeal in his suit to challenge ordinances as violating his First Amendment rights by preventing him from opening adult entertainment establishment on property zoned as industrial without providing adequate opportunity elsewhere. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Availability of other sites

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Even if purportedly available sites in city for adult entertainment establishments were subject to long-term leases or would require costly development, these were not relevant considerations in assessing whether zoning ordinances interfered with plaintiff's First Amendment rights by preventing him from opening establishment on property zoned as industrial without providing adequate opportunity elsewhere; fact that other private parties leased properties before plaintiff, alone, was of no moment in constitutional analysis, and cost of development was nothing more than business consideration for plaintiff to weigh. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

District court reasonably determined that there were eight available sites in city for adult entertainment establishments, in suit challenging zoning ordinances as violating plaintiff's First Amendment rights by preventing him from opening establishment on property zoned as industrial without providing adequate opportunity elsewhere; while plaintiff challenged one site because it required relocation of access drive and tear-down of existing structure and other sites as requiring subdivision, these were economic arguments that court was not required to consider in its constitutional analysis, and, contrary to plaintiff's contention, access drives could have been constructed so that buildings on one parcel would satisfy ordinance's 50–foot setback requirement and accommodate six sites. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

Under the Renton scheme for analyzing a First Amendment challenge to zoning that limits adult businesses, if a zoning code passes muster as a time, place, and manner regulation, if it is content neutral, and if it advances a substantial governmental interest, the question remaining is whether it leaves reasonable means of commercial adult activity as an alternative to its restrictions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

Determination as to whether a zoning ordinance, challenged under the First Amendment, leaves reasonable means of commercial adult activity as an alternative to its restrictions does not ask whether a degree of curtailment of speech exists, but rather whether the remaining communicative avenues are adequate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

In determining whether a zoning ordinance, challenged under the First Amendment, leaves reasonable means of commercial adult activity as an alternative to its restrictions, the reviewing court looks to multiple factors, including the percentage of acreage within the zone for adult business use compared with the acreage available to commercial enterprises and the number of sites available to adult entertainment businesses, with no single dispositive evaluative consideration. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

City's zoning ordinances provided plaintiff with reasonable means of commercial adult activity as alternative to their restrictions, precluding his First Amendment challenge to those ordinances; ordinances did not restrict 28.53 acres of city's 11,783 developable acres, or 0.24%, on 8 separate sites, and court appropriately considered city's urban nature and larger land mass. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

67 Brian R. Cunha, with whom Brian Cunha & Associates, P.C. was on brief, for appellant.

Elizabeth Sousa, with whom the Office of the Corporation Counsel was on brief, for appellees.

Before LYNCH, Chief Judge, SOUTER,* Associate Justice, and SELYA, Circuit Judge.

* Hon. David H. Souter, Associate Justice (Ret.) of the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting by designation.

Opinion

SOUTER, Associate Justice.

Appellant, Gary Lund, contends that the City of Fall River's zoning ordinances violate the First Amendment by preventing him from opening an adult entertainment establishment on land zoned industrial without providing an adequate opportunity elsewhere. The district court rejected his claim, and we affirm.

I

By the terms of a Fall River ordinance, intending providers of adult entertainment must obtain a "special permit," see Revised Code of Ordinances of the City of Fall River, Mass., Rev. Ordinances § 86–85, which may be granted only if the applicant meets a variety of zoning conditions, see id. §§ 86–88, 86–201. So far as it matters here, § 86–88 mandates a minimum amount of parking proportional to the size of the building to be used and requires it to be surrounded by a four-foot, landscaped perimeter. All parking and loading structures must be at least 50 feet from any street and 750 feet from any residence. Section 86–201 forbids adult entertainment on a site within an "Industrial District."

Lund applied for a special permit to open "Club Martinique" at 139 Front Street, even though he conceded that his proposal failed to comply with the ordinance. See J.A. 17. 139 Front Street is within an Industrial District and is thus disqualified as a site for adult entertainment by § 86–201, and beyond that his proposal would have violated § 86–88 owing to the presence of parking spaces closer than 50 feet to the street and the absence of landscaping. When the City denied his application, Lund appealed to the Zoning Board of Appeals for variances from the ordinances, which the Board denied, noting the unequivocal language of §§ 86–88 and 86–201. See, e.g., id. § 86–88 ("Any building ... containing an adult use shall meet the setback requirements...."); id. § 86–201 ("In an Industrial District, no structure shall be used except for one of the following uses: Existing mill buildings may be used for art use, except adult use as defined in 68 section 86–81 is prohibited." (ellipses omitted)).

Lund then went to the Superior Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for declaratory and injunctive relief, as well as compensatory damages, alleging that the City's ordinances violate the First Amendment. He contended that sections 86–88 and 86–201, individually and in combination, "den[y him] a reasonable opportunity and accommodation to open and operate, within the City, an adult entertainment club." J.A. 21. The City removed the case to the district court, see 28 U.S.C. § 1441(a), which had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

There, the scope of disagreement narrowed substantially after an evidentiary hearing on Lund's request for preliminary injunction, in which he and the City offered expert testimony about the amount of legally available land in the City. At the close of evidence, Lund's counsel stated, "I don't think that there's any facts (sic) in dispute here. And I know I said at the beginning just a preliminary injunction, but I don't see why ... you can't make a summary judgment decision as well. I don't think there's any factual dispute ... between the two experts. There are different scenarios that they've presented....” Evidentiary Hearing Tr. 59, June 3, 2010. The district court responded that the disputed question was fairly discrete, as addressing the last of the conditions to be met by adult commerce regulation subject to intermediate scrutiny under City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986): whether the ordinances blocking the proposed adult use provide reasonable alternative means for Lund to conduct his adult entertainment business.

> THE COURT: If that's the framing of the issue ... then I think we have all the evidence we need to decide the merits of the case one way or the other.
>
> MR. CUNHA [plaintiff's counsel]: And I don't disagree.
>
> THE COURT: Does the [C]ity disagree with that?
>
> MS. PEREIRA [defendants' counsel]: No, your Honor.

Evidentiary Hearing Tr. 60, June 3, 2010; see also Lund v. City of Fall River, No. 10–10310, 2012 WL 1856947, at *2 (D.Mass. May 22, 2012) (“Lund conceded that the sole question presented here is whether sections 86–88 and 86–201 provide reasonable alternative avenues of communication.”).

After consideration, the district court entered judgment for the City on the authority of Renton. See Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *2–6. The court found that out of the City's 11,783 developable acres, 28.53 acres (or 0.24%), on 8 separate sites, are available as adult entertainment venues. Id. at *5–7. The court thus rejected Lund's objections that he could not have adequate space within that acreage without combining multiple parcels and undertaking costly redevelopment to comply with the ordinances; the district court declined to declare any of the 28.53 acres unavailable due to such “economic” considerations. See id. at *7–11. Finally, the court held that 0.24% of the City provided Lund with reasonable room to exercise his protected expressive right, id. at *9–11, relying upon our decision in D.H.L. Associates, Inc. v. O'Gorman, 199 F.3d 50, 60 (1st Cir.1999), which found no constitutional deprivation in municipal zoning that left only 0.09% of developable land available for adult entertainment.

This timely appeal followed, there being no question of our jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

69 II

The standard of review that we apply turns on the character of the proceeding in the period after the case was submitted to the court at the end of the colloquy just quoted. Lund's counsel expressly proposed treating his motion for a preliminary injunction as a motion for summary judgment, which would leave it to the court to draw fair inferences from the undisputed material facts and determine whether Lund was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Jirau–Bernal v. Agrait, 37 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir.1994). Presumably he intended the court to act as if cross-motions for summary judgement were before him, and so to grant judgment for the City if it was entitled to it as a matter of law. Looked at this way, the case here would present only issues of fair inference and legal entitlement, which we would review de novo, as on a conventional appeal from summary judgment. See Shafmaster v. United States, 707 F.3d 130, 135 (1st Cir.2013).

[1] But the colloquy did not end with simple assent to proceed on summary judgment. The court's response spoke of “hav[ing] all the evidence we need to decide the merits of the case one way or the other,” and each counsel went on record as having no disagreement. This sounds more like an agreement for plenary submission of the case to the judge as fact-finder, and this is what the judge ultimately understood. His order here on appeal begins with citation to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65, subsection (a)(2) of which authorizes a court to “advance the trial on the merits and consolidate it with the hearing” on a motion for preliminary relief. This also seems to be what Lund's counsel understood he had agreed to, for his appeal addresses the merits of the ruling, not the procedural propriety of the route to reaching it. Accordingly, we think the better view is to see the order appealed not as one of summary judgment, but as the product of the procedural crawl that then-Judge Breyer described in Federacion de Empleados del Tribunal Gen. de Justicia v. Torres, 747 F.2d 35 (1st Cir.1984).

> [W]here, in a nonjury case, ‘the basic dispute between the parties concerns the factual inferences ... that one might draw from the more basic facts to which the parties have drawn the court's attention,’ where

> '[t]here are no significant disagreements about those basic facts,' and where neither party has 'sought to introduce additional factual evidence or asked to present witnesses'.... the standard for appellate oversight shifts from de novo review to clear-error review.

EEOC v. Steamship Clerks Union, Loc. 1066, 48 F.3d 594, 603 (1st Cir.1995) (quoting Federacion de Empleados del Tribunal Gen. de Justicia, 747 F.2d at 36). It follows that our review standard is for clear error on all issues not purely legal, though we will be candid to say that the result would be the same if the examination were de novo.

III

Lund's exceptions to the district court's ruling boil off at two. He contends it was error to find that 28.53 acres on 8 sites were "available" for adult entertainment, and he argues that the available land does not provide him a reasonable opportunity to open an adult business.

A

After testimony and evidence from both parties' experts, the district court adopted the City's contention that the ordinances left 28.53 acres for adult entertainment, being 0.24% of the City's developable land, comprising 8 sites. The court found that 70 Lund's contrary assertions "lack[ed] evidentiary support, whereas the City's figure [was] well-supported by the testimony and exhibits presented." Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *3. Lund argues the contrary on three grounds.

[2] First, despite his concession in the district court that no further trial proceedings were necessary, he says now that a remand is needed to determine the effect of the § 86–88 limitation that "[p]arking and loading facilities ... be set back a minimum of ... 750 feet from any structure used ... for residential purposes." He concedes that the district court correctly considered § 86–88's 750–foot buffer requirement with respect to parking but argues that it failed to assess the impact of applying it to loading facilities. But the answer is that Lund never raised this claim below. Save for his quotation of the ordinance in a footnote, the word "loading" does not appear in his motion for a preliminary injunction, and he did not make this argument at the hearing. That is the end of the matter here. See McCoy v. Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 950 F.2d 13, 22 (1st Cir.1991) ("[T]heories not raised squarely in the district court cannot be surfaced for the first time on appeal.").

[3] Second, Lund points out that excluding sites covered by long-term leases or requiring costly redevelopment would greatly diminish the quantity of land "available," and he contends that declining to weigh the consequences of these leases and costs in figuring the quantity of available land in the City was error. The district court rejected this claim as "primarily one of economic impact upon his speech-related business," a consideration that the Supreme Court "has cautioned against considering in First Amendment analyses." Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *3.

The district court was correct. The proper enquiry looks to restrictions imposed by the government, not to the market effects of other people's commerce or the economics of site clearance. Even if we credit Lund's representation that sites identified by the district court are subject to long-term leases, the fact that other competing private parties got ahead of him is not alone of any moment in the constitutional analysis, and the cost of development is nothing more than a business consideration for Lund to weigh. As the Renton Court put it, "That [plaintiffs] must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation." 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925; accord D.H.L. Associates, 199 F.3d at 60. Hence, whether it makes sense for Lund to finance a costly redevelopment or to pay what current tenants would demand to break their leases are simply private business considerations.[1] It is worth noting that our sister circuits have been quick to reject similar arguments. See, e.g., David Vincent, Inc. v. Broward Cnty., Fla., 200 F.3d 1325, 1334 (11th Cir.2000) ("[T]he economic feasibility of relocating to a site is not a First Amendment concern."); Ambassador Books & Video, Inc. 71 v. City of Little Rock, Ark., 20 F.3d 858, 864–65 (8th Cir.1994) ("[T]he cost factor is unimportant in determining whether the ordinance satisfies the standards of the First Amendment."); World Wide Video of Wash., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186, 1199–200 (9th Cir.2004).

1 It is true, as Lund notes, that we said in D.H.L. Associates that the case would have been "entirely different" if the land had been encumbered by restrictive covenants precluding its use for adult entertainment. Appellant's Br. 32–33 (quoting 199 F.3d at 60 n. 6). Lund argues that D.H.L. Associates makes clear that restrictive covenants are, therefore, relevant to the availability determination. Maybe so. But restrictive covenants are substantive land-use restrictions enforceable by the governmental power of the courts, and, in any case, Lund failed to offer any evidence credited by the district court on that issue. The closest he comes to suggesting otherwise is in a reference to an affidavit that speaks of "restrictions" without further detail. J.A. 73.

[4] Third, Lund assigns error to the district court's finding of 8 sites available for adult use. He argues that treating parcel C–11–7 as a possible site for more than one adult business was incorrect because its access drive would need to be relocated and the existing structure torn down. He argues that parcels D–19–1, D–19–91, and D–19–93 could not accommodate 6 sites, as the district court found, because the lots would require sub-division. But Lund gives us no reason to see these as anything more than further economic arguments that the district court rightly declined to consider.

Lund also contends that parcels D–19–1, D–19–91, and D–19–93 could not meet § 86–88's requirement of a 50–foot setback from the street, contrary to evidence introduced by the City. Its expert testimony, which the district court credited, was that access drives could be constructed from William S. Canning Boulevard that would permit the buildings to be located 50 feet from the road and thus allow for 6 adult sites. See Evidentiary Hearing Tr. 46–47, June 3, 2010. We have reviewed the maps submitted by the parties, along with the relevant testimony, and see no error in the district court's acceptance of the City's testimony that these parcels could have accommodated 6 sites. Lund's argument about the potential of these parcels therefore fails to discredit the district court's conservative estimate that 8 sites were available overall. See Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *5 n. 10 ("The actual number available is surely greater.").

* * *

In sum, we find no error in the district court's calculation of available land and now turn to the constitutional question.

B

[5] That calculation prefaces the last of the questions to be addressed under the Renton scheme for analyzing a First Amendment challenge to zoning that limits adult businesses. If a zoning code passes muster as a time, place, and manner regulation, if it is content neutral, and if it advances a substantial governmental interest, the question remaining is whether it leaves reasonable means of commercial adult activity as an alternative to its restrictions. [2] See Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–54, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 433–34, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality op.) (discussing the Renton framework); D.H.L. Associates, 199 F.3d at 58–59 (same). Lund has conceded that the ordinances survive Renton's first two enquiries and that the City's interest is substantial, Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *2, leaving only the issue of whether the district court correctly concluded that the land available under the ordinances allows for "reasonable alternative avenues of communication." Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also id. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("[T]he First Amendment requires only that Renton refrain from effectively 72 denying respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theatre....").

2 In the district court, Lund argued that the only issue was the sufficiency of space and sites to qualify as reasonable opportunity. See supra p. 68. In his brief here, he has suggested in passing that the complete ban on adult business in the industrial zone removes the ordinances from the category of time, place, and manner regulations, so as to entail more demanding scrutiny. He is obviously mistaken and in any event waived the point in the district court.

[6] [7] In D.H.L. Associates, we explained that this enquiry does not ask " 'whether a degree of curtailment' of speech exists, but rather 'whether the remaining communicative avenues are adequate.' " 199 F.3d at 59 (quoting Nat'l Amusements, Inc. v. Town of Dedham, 43 F.3d 731, 745 (1st Cir.1995)). A reviewing court looks to "multiple factors," including "the percentage of acreage within the zone [for adult business use] compared [with] the acreage available to commercial enterprises" and "[t]he number of sites available to adult entertainment businesses," D.H.L. Associates, 199 F.3d at 59–60, there being "no single dispositive evaluative consideration." Id. at 60.

This comprehensive canvas accords with the approaches of other circuits, which have understood the final Renton prong as calling for a general assessment of whether the ordinances "afford a reasonable opportunity to locate and operate such a business." TJS of N.Y., Inc. v. Town of Smithtown, 598 F.3d 17, 22 (2d Cir.2010); see also Isbell v. City of San Diego, 258 F.3d 1108, 1112 (9th Cir.2001) ("whether [the number of sites] ... afford[s] ... a reasonable opportunity"); Big Dipper Entm't, L.L.C. v. City of Warren, 641 F.3d 715, 719 (6th Cir.2011) (whether "a 'reasonable opportunity' to open"); accord BZAPS, Inc. v. City of Mankato, 268 F.3d 603, 606 (8th Cir.2001) (rejecting similar challenge because "numerous locations ... remain available"); Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa County, Arizona, 336 F.3d 1153, 1170 (9th Cir.2003) (statute survives "unless the government enactment will foreclose an entire medium of public expression [in] a particular community" (internal quotation marks omitted)). The enquiry is necessarily "fact-intensive," Big Dipper Entertainment, L.L.C., 641 F.3d at 719, and the issue of reasonable opportunity "must be resolved on a case-by-case basis," Fly Fish, Inc. v. City of Cocoa Beach, 337 F.3d 1301, 1310 (11th Cir.2003) (internal quotation marks omitted).

[8] Here, we think the ordinances provide Lund the opportunity required. This conclusion claims substantial support from D.H.L. Associates, where we found no First Amendment violation in a Town's restriction of all but 0.09% of developable land from adult entertainment purposes. The percentage available here is more than twice as great, with 8 sites available in the City, as compared with the 5 that we held sufficient in D.H.L. Associates. Lund cannot break free of the gravitational pull of that case. [3]

3 There are cases from some circuits that would proceed differently if presented with evidence of strong competition from other adult entertainment companies vying for scarce real estate in the City. See Fly Fish, Inc., 337 F.3d at 1309 (contrasting cases that adopt a bright-line rule in which an ordinance can survive only if "there are more reasonable sites available than businesses with demand for them" with cases that adopt a more contextual supply-and-demand test (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)). We express no opinion on this question because, as the district court noted, "neither party has presented evidence that anyone other than Lund has opened or has sought to open an adult entertainment business under these ordinances." Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *5.

Lund calls D.H.L. Associates a distinguishable case and faults the district court for not dealing with the differences between the Town of Tyngsboro (the defendant in D.H.L. Associates) and the City of Fall River. Lund cites the City's urban character, its larger land mass, the comparatively small number of parcels available for sale, the lack of an "adult overlay 73 district" (in contrast to Tyngsboro), the ban on adult entertainment in the City's Industrial District, and the City's lack of an explanation for banning adult entertainment there. See Appellant's Br. 38–44.

But the district court made just the comparison Lund stresses, in contrasting rural Tyngsboro with Fall River, "one of the largest industrial cities in Massachusetts," Lund, 2012 WL 1856947, at *5, while recognizing that "D.H.L. Associates, Inc. teaches only that a somewhat higher level of available land might be necessary to assure reasonable alternative locations in a developed urban environment than in an undeveloped rural one," id. The court's conclusion thus rested on explicit consideration of the City's urban nature, and the City's larger land mass was fully acknowledged in evaluating the percentage of available land. The number of parcels available for sale is an economic consideration that has no role in the constitutional analysis, and if the City chooses to allow adult businesses in shopping centers but not in factory districts, there is nothing obviously suspect in the choice. In sum, the differences Lund identified between this case and D.H.L. Associates fail to render the precedent inapt or the district court's analysis inadequate.

Lund's remaining points touching on § 86–201 are essentially policy differences with the City, which do not rise to the level of First Amendment significance. Because the City has provided Lund with a reasonable opportunity for conduct protected by the First Amendment, we affirm the district court's judgment.

It is so ordered.

All Citations

714 F.3d 65

612 F.3d 736
United States Court of Appeals,
Fourth Circuit.

IMAGINARY IMAGES, INCORPORATED, d/b/a Paper Moon; BTF3, L.L.C., d/b/a Paper Moon; Papermoon–Springfield, Incorporated, d/b/a Paper Moon, Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
Pamela O'Berry EVANS, in her official capacity as Chair of the Virginia Alcohol Beverage Control Board; Susan R. Swecker, in her official capacity as Member of the Virginia Alcohol Control Board; Esther H. Vassar, in her official capacity as Member of the Virginia Alcohol Control Board, Defendants–Appellees.

No. 09–1199.
|
Argued: May 13, 2010.
|
Decided: July 15, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Adult entertainment establishments brought action against members of the Virginia Alcohol Beverage Control Board, challenging revisions to liquor licensing statutes and regulations that prohibited such establishments from serving mixed alcoholic beverages. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, James R. Spencer, Chief Judge, 593 F.Supp.2d 848, granted in part and denied in part establishments' motion for preliminary injunction. Establishments appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Wilkinson, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] statutes and regulations had minimal effect on expressive interests protected by First Amendment;

[2] Board fairly supported its policy banning mixed alcoholic beverages at sexually oriented businesses;

[3] statutes and regulations materially advanced state's substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects;

[4] establishments failed to rebut Board's justification for policy;

[5] statutes were not impermissibly vague under First Amendment; and [6] statutes and regulations were not facially overbroad under First Amendment.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (23)

[1] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Regulations of sexually oriented entertainment receive intermediate scrutiny if they are not premised on a desire to suppress the content of such entertainment, but rather to address the harmful secondary effects it produces, such as higher crime rates, lower property values, and unwanted interactions between patrons and entertainers such as public sexual conduct, sexual assault, and prostitution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Under the intermediate scrutiny standard, the government must show that its regulation of sexually oriented entertainment materially advances its substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects and that reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain available. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

While the government must "fairly support" its policy of regulating sexually oriented entertainment, it need not settle the matter beyond debate or produce an exhaustive evidentiary demonstration.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Government's policy expertise in regulating sexually oriented entertainment is entitled to deference on First Amendment challenge, and it may demonstrate the efficacy of its method of reducing secondary effects by appeal to common sense, rather than empirical data. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

In order for policy regulating sexually oriented entertainment to fail intermediate scrutiny analysis under the First Amendment there must be some greater showing than some loss of revenue by complainant. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

A law may result in a mild and incidental diminution of speech without running afoul of the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments
Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statutes and regulations prohibiting adult entertainment establishments featuring erotic dancers who offered striptease routines from serving mixed alcoholic beverages had minimal effect on expressive interests protected by First Amendment; acts affected by laws were removed from First Amendment's core concerns, laws pertained only to businesses where performers gave strip shows or exposed their buttocks or breasts and did not prohibit all alcohol at sexually oriented businesses, and exception existed for conduct with serious artistic or literary merit. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), 4.1–325(12, 13); 3 VAC 5–50–140(B, C).

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Society's interest in protecting sexually oriented entertainment under the First Amendment is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments
Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board fairly supported its justifications for policy banning mixed alcoholic beverages at sexually oriented businesses, namely, to curtail adverse secondary effects of such businesses, for purposes of First Amendment challenge to policy, even though Board did not produce empirical studies showing that policy would reduce negative secondary effects of such businesses; Board's policy was supported by over 40 studies documenting negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments, deleterious effects spawned by bars and clubs featuring nude or topless dancing were well established, and Board could reasonably conclude that higher level of alcohol in mixed beverages would result in higher level of intoxication and thus higher levels of negative secondary effects in surrounding community. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statutes and regulations banning mixed alcoholic beverages at sexually oriented business materially advanced state's substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects of such businesses, as required to withstand First Amendment challenge, since sexually oriented businesses were capable of producing harmful secondary effects, such as higher crime rates and lower property values, public sexual conduct, sexual assault, and prostitution, intoxication would exacerbate those effects, more intoxication would result in more exacerbation, and mixed beverages, with stronger alcoholic content, could lead to more intoxication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), 4.1–325(12, 13); 3 VAC 5–50–140(B, C).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

Expert testimony that, based on crime data, there was no increase in crime near plaintiff's strip clubs after they had obtained mixed alcoholic beverage licenses, and that sexually oriented businesses in community were generally not "hot spots" for crime, was insufficient to rebut Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board's justification for imposing secondary effects regulation banning mixed alcoholic beverages in sexually oriented businesses; expert's analysis focused only on plaintiff's clubs, rather than sexually oriented businesses as a category, study was based on only nine months of data, and data sets used by expert were suspect. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Evidence rebutting the government's justification for a secondary effects regulation of sexually oriented entertainment must do more than challenge the government's rationale; it must convincingly discredit the foundation upon which the government's justification rests. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law

Determination of Facts

Municipal Corporations

Police power and regulations

Statutes

Recitals and findings

As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments made by lawmakers; a local policymaking body knows the streets better than the courts do, it is entitled to rely on that knowledge, and if its inferences appear reasonable, the court should not say there is no basis for its conclusion.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Statutes in general

In assessing a statutory vagueness challenge, a court must ask whether the government's policy is set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Vagueness

While laws that regulate expression are subjected to stricter standards, perfect clarity and precise guidance have never been required even of regulations that restrict expressive activity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statutes prohibiting mixed alcoholic beverages at establishments that host "stripteasing," or that allow "any striptease act on the licensed premises," were not impermissibly vague under First Amendment right to freedom of expression, since terms "striptease" and "stripteasing" had straightforward definitions, and terms were of common usage. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), 4.1–325(12, 13).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statute providing that mixed alcoholic beverage licensee was prohibited from allowing "persons connected with the licensed business to appear nude or partially nude" was not impermissibly vague under First Amendment right to freedom of expression, since term "nudity," as matter of everyday speech, referred to absence of clothing covering those parts of the body commonly denominated "private," and thus "partial nudity" referred to partial exposure of the private parts. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. § 4.1–325(12, 13).

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statute prohibiting mixed alcoholic beverages at establishments that had "employees who are not clad both above and below the waist" was not impermissibly vague under First Amendment right to freedom of expression, since meaning of phrase, namely that employees may not dance "topless" or "bottomless," was apparent. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. § 4.1–226(2)(i).

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Constitutional Law
Criminal Law

The First Amendment overbreadth doctrine allows a party to challenge a statute on its face because it also threatens others not before the court, namely, those who desire to engage in legally protected expression but who may refrain from doing so rather than risk prosecution or undertake to have the law declared partially invalid. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Use as last resort;sparing use

The First Amendment overbreadth doctrine is "strong medicine" to be applied sparingly and only as a last resort. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Substantial impact, necessity of

A court properly holds a law facially invalid on First Amendment overbreadth grounds only where its overbreadth is substantial when judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Virginia liquor licensing statutes and regulations prohibiting mixed alcoholic beverages at strip clubs, which contained exemption for conduct with serious artistic or literary merit, were not facially overbroad under First Amendment right to freedom of expression, even if majority of establishments licensed to sell mixed beverages in state would not come within exception for cultural venues, since state's prohibition was within statutes' legitimate sweep, and ordinary bar was unlikely to have its employees strip or otherwise expose their breasts or buttocks for expressive purposes. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's V.C.A. §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), 4.1–325(12, 13); 3 VAC 5–50–140(B, C).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Overbreadth in General

Statutory perfection is not required to survive a First Amendment overbreadth challenge; a statute that shields most protected activity is permissible. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*740 ARGUED: J. Michael Murray, Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Devan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. Mikie F. Melis, Office of the Attorney General, Richmond, Virginia, for Appellees. ON BRIEF: Steven D. Shafron, Berkman, Gordon, Murray & Devan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. William C. Mims, Attorney General of Virginia, Stephen R. McCullough, Solicitor General of Virginia, Catherine Crooks Hill, Assistant Attorney General, Office of the Attorney General, Richmond, Virginia, for Appellees.

Before TRAXLER, Chief Judge, WILKINSON, Circuit Judge, and SAMUEL G. WILSON, United States District Judge for the Western District of Virginia, sitting by designation.

Affirmed by published opinion. Judge WILKINSON wrote the opinion, in which Chief Judge TRAXLER and Judge WILSON joined.

OPINION

WILKINSON, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs are three nightclubs where women give erotic dance performances wearing only g-strings and pasties. The clubs brought First Amendment, vagueness, and overbreadth challenges to Virginia's alcohol licensing program, which allows the clubs to serve beer and wine but not mixed beverages. Under the standard of intermediate scrutiny applicable to policies aimed at the harmful secondary effects of sexually oriented entertainment, Virginia's policy passes constitutional muster. The public interest served by the policy is substantial, the restriction on the clubs mild and the burden on First Amendment values slight. Moreover, legislatures must have some leeway to draw a regulatory middle ground and Virginia's is a policy of moderation. Judicial invalidation of carefully drawn distinctions risks chasing lawmakers from the paths of compromise and into absolutes. We thus decline to overturn the classifications here, and accordingly affirm the judgment of the district court.

741 I.

The sale and consumption of alcohol within the Commonwealth of Virginia is governed by the comprehensive regulatory scheme established by the Alcoholic Beverage Control ("ABC") Act, Va.Code §§ 4.1–100, et seq., and by regulations adopted by the ABC Board, the regulatory body created by the Act. See Va.Code §§ 4.1–101, –103. Under this regime, establishments where performers offer striptease routines may obtain licenses to sell beer, wine, or both. Such facilities are not eligible, however, for mixed beverage licenses, which permit the sale of distilled spirits. See Va.Code §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), –325(12), (13); 3 Va. Admin. Code § 5–50–140.

The current shape of these provisions stems in part from earlier litigation. In Giovani Carandola, Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507 (4th Cir.2002) ("Carandola I "), this court struck down as overbroad certain North Carolina limitations on the availability of alcohol at establishments hosting sexually oriented performances. The offending provisions were then amended and the court upheld the revised scheme against overbreadth and vagueness challenges. See Giovani Carandola, Ltd. v. Fox, 470 F.3d 1074 (4th Cir.2006) ("Carandola II "). At the time, the Virginia ABC statutes and relevant ABC regulation used language similar to that which Carandola I had invalidated, leading to an injunction in 2007 against enforcement of certain portions of the Virginia program. See Norfolk 302, LLC v. Vassar, 524 F.Supp.2d 728, 742 (E.D.Va.2007). The Virginia General Assembly promptly amended the challenged statutes to bring them into compliance and the ABC Board similarly amended its regulation, after which this court issued an order dismissing the ABC Board's pending appeal and vacating the injunction as moot.

During the period when Virginia's rules were suspended, mixed beverage licenses were issued to the plaintiffs in this case. Plaintiffs are three Virginia nightclubs belonging to the Papermoon chain—two in Richmond and one in Springfield—where dancers perform wearing only g-strings and pasties. In June 2008, with the revised licensing program about to take effect and their mixed beverage licenses in jeopardy, plaintiffs, whom we shall refer to as Papermoon, sued the ABC Board's members to block enforcement. Papermoon argued that the scheme violated the First Amendment, was unconstitutionally vague, and was facially overbroad.

An evidentiary hearing was held a few months later at which the ABC Board offered the testimony of W. Curtis Coleburn, its chief operating officer. Coleburn testified that he and the Board had reviewed at least forty-two studies and numerous cases dealing with the negative effects on the surrounding community of sexually oriented businesses. He explained that Virginia's decision to limit establishments offering sexually oriented entertainment to beer and wine reflected the fact that distilled spirits more readily lead to intoxication because of their higher alcohol content. He also stated that Virginia's policy had been modified to incorporate the teachings of the Carandola decisions.

In response, Papermoon offered various evidence meant to show that its clubs did not produce secondary effects. This consisted chiefly of testimony from its expert, Professor Daniel Linz of the University of California at Santa Barbara. Linz explained that he had reviewed crime data for the Papermoon locations and found that there was no increase in crime near the clubs after they obtained mixed beverage licenses and that sexually oriented businesses in Richmond generally were not "hot spots" for crime.

In December 2008, the district court rejected the bulk of Papermoon's claims, 742 holding, with exceptions not relevant here, that Virginia's policy prohibiting distilled spirits at establishments like the Papermoon clubs was constitutional. See Imaginary Images, Inc. v. Evans, 593 F.Supp.2d 848, 863 (E.D.Va.2008). Papermoon now appeals.

II.

[1] [2] Although it is a far cry from political speech, "nude dancing is not without its First Amendment protections." Schad v. Borough of Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981). Regulations of sexually oriented entertainment "receive intermediate scrutiny if they are not premised on a desire to suppress the content of such entertainment, but rather to address the harmful secondary effects" it produces—higher crime rates, lower property values, and unwanted interactions between patrons and entertainers such as public sexual conduct, sexual assault, and prostitution. Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 513. Under this standard, the government must show that its regulation materially advances its substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects and that reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain available. City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality); Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 515; see also Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (government must show its interest "would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.").

[3] [4] But while the government must "fairly support" its policy, it need not settle the matter beyond debate or produce an exhaustive evidentiary demonstration. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality); see also id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) ("[V]ery little evidence is required."). [1] Moreover, its policy expertise is entitled to "deference," and it may demonstrate the efficacy of its method of reducing secondary effects "by appeal to common sense," rather than "empirical data." Id. at 439–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality); see also id. at 451–52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). It may also rely on the experiences of other jurisdictions and on findings expressed in other cases. See City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Once the government makes this showing, the matter is at an end unless the plaintiff "produces clear and convincing evidence" to rebut it. Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 516.

1 Justice Kennedy's separate opinion in Alameda Books accepted the four-member plurality's holding on the evidentiary standard that governs the secondary effects inquiry. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) ("The plurality ... gives the correct answer" to the question "how much evidence is required?"); see also Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 516.

Papermoon argues that Virginia's policy is unconstitutional because a ban on mixed beverages at its clubs is pointless when beer and wine are still allowed. It asserts that the ABC Board produced no studies to support such a restriction, while Papermoon offered social science evidence undermining it. In assessing Papermoon's challenge, we first examine the nature of the regulation and its burden on expressive interests. We next consider whether the ABC Board sufficiently demonstrated the necessary relationship between the mixed beverage restriction and its interest in reducing negative secondary effects. Finally, we turn to Papermoon's rebuttal evidence.

743 A.

We begin by noting that Virginia's policy regarding alcohol at erotic dancing locales is about as tame as one could imagine. Virginia "has not forbidden these performances across the board. It has merely proscribed such performances in establishments that it licenses to sell liquor by the drink." California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 118, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972); see also Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 513 n. 2 & 519.

Indeed, Virginia does not even prohibit all alcohol at sexually oriented businesses, only mixed beverages. Wine and beer are as available at the Papermoon clubs as at any other Virginia bar. And as Papermoon itself notes, beer remained the drink of choice for its patrons even during the period when it sold mixed beverages. Given that the First Amendment has been held to permit banning any alcohol where dancers strip to g-strings and pasties, Virginia's policy is hardly censorious. See Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d 860, 886 (11th Cir.2007); Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 728 (7th Cir.2003).

[5] [6] A mixed beverage license may well be a moneymaker—Papermoon offered uncontradicted evidence that it was—but in order to fail intermediate scrutiny there must be some greater showing than some loss of revenue. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925. Indeed, the Court recognizes that a law may result in a mild and incidental diminution of speech without running afoul of the First Amendment. See Ward, 491 U.S. at 799–800, 109 S.Ct. 2746. And here, it must be said, there is no indication that expression is being curtailed at all. Although one of the three Papermoon clubs initially decided to keep its mixed beverage license and have its dancers wear extra clothes, it evidently thought better of that decision and returned to pasties and g-strings.

From aught that appears, Papermoon dancers continue to express themselves after reinstatement of the regulation without diminution of inhibition—the performance went on as before.

B.

[7] Not only does Virginia's policy regulate with the lightest of touches, but the degree to which it trenches upon First Amendment values is minimal at best. The First Amendment's pride of place in our constitutional order is a reflection of how essential the institution of free speech is to a democratic society. See Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Cent. Comm., 489 U.S. 214, 223, 109 S.Ct. 1013, 103 L.Ed.2d 271 (1989); New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964). But that principle also provides a limitation: activities that have little to do with advocacy, deliberation, or the exposition of ideas have correspondingly little to do with the First Amendment. See City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). Here the kind of acts affected by the laws Papermoon assails are removed from the First Amendment's core concerns.

The challenged provisions pertain only to businesses where performers give strip shows or otherwise expose their buttocks or breasts. See Va.Code §§ 4.1–226(2)(i), –325(12), (13); 3 Va. Admin. Code § 5–50–140(B). And the policy does not even purport to reach all such displays. Sexual entertainment "expressing matters of serious literary, artistic, scientific, or political value" offered in "establishments that are devoted primarily to the arts or theatrical performances" is entirely exempt. Va.Code §§ 4.1–226(2), –325(C); 3 Va. Admin. Code § 5–50–140(C). In other words, the policy primarily, if not exclusively, applies to bars offering performances 744 partaking more of "sexuality than of communication." LaRue, 409 U.S. at 118, 93 S.Ct. 390.

[8] Sexual expression and depictions can and do play an important role both in democratic and artistic discourse, and it is thus crucial to our ruling that Virginia has taken care to narrow its regulatory focus here to the particular context of sexually oriented entertainment at bars. As to this, we are simply not at liberty to ignore the Supreme Court's emphasis upon the relatively greater protections afforded many other forms and outlets for artistic speech. The Court has instructed that nude dancing is "only marginally" of First Amendment value, Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), and "only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382. For quite simply, "it is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate." Id. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (quoting Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976)). In the context of a restriction as mild as the one to which Papermoon has been subjected, "[t]he impairment of First Amendment values is slight to the point of being risible, since the expressive activity involved in the kind of striptease entertainment provided in a bar has at best a modest social value." Blue Canary Corp. v. City of Milwaukee, 251 F.3d 1121, 1124 (7th Cir.2001). And even here, it bears reminding, Virginia has not asked Papermoon to stop the show or even to cease serving all alcoholic beverages in conjunction with it.

C.

1.

[9] With these considerations in mind, we assess the ABC Board's justifications for the challenged policy. Notwithstanding the policy's minimal effect on expressive interests, Papermoon requests that we strike it down because the ABC Board did not produce empirical studies showing that a ban on only mixed beverages at sexually oriented businesses will reduce secondary effects—"higher crime rates and lower property values," and "public sexual conduct, sexual assault, and prostitution." Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 513. In making this claim, however, Papermoon asks us to subject the ABC Board to a more stringent standard than is compatible with the Supreme Court's teachings or the appropriate relationship between courts and policymakers.

For starters, Papermoon's argument takes an ironic turn, namely that the Virginia regulation should be struck because it is too mild to be effective. But in Pap's A.M., the Supreme Court rejected the idea that the government's rationale could be impeached because its regulation was not as effective as a more restrictive alternative—in that case because the government combated the problems of totally nude dancing by requiring only that dancers wear pasties and g-strings. See Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 300–01, 120 S.Ct. 1382; see also id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Scalia, J., concurring) ("I am highly skeptical, to tell the truth, that the addition of pasties and G-strings will at all reduce the tendency of establishments such as Kandyland to attract crime and prostitution...."). It is one thing to challenge the government's rationale as pretextual or to argue its restriction advantages certain speakers or ideas to the detriment of others. See City of Ladue v. Gilleo, 512 U.S. 43, 50–52, 114 S.Ct. 2038, 129 L.Ed.2d 36 (1994). [2] But 745 when the government's policy is not "a covert attack on speech," invalidating a regulation because it is too permissive does First Amendment freedoms no favors. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 447, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment).

2 Papermoon's reliance on Joelner v. Village of Washington Park, 508 F.3d 427 (7th Cir.2007), is accordingly misplaced. The policy there at issue, "prospectively banning alcohol in strip clubs opened in the future," "was adopted to stifle competition with current license holders," not to combat secondary effects, and was subjected to strict scrutiny. Id. at 429, 431, 433.

Even setting this objection aside, however, the ABC Board's position that prohibiting mixed beverages at establishments like Papermoon will curtail adverse secondary effects was hardly unsupported. The Board considered more than forty studies documenting the negative secondary effects associated with establishments like Papermoon, and at any rate, it is well established that "bars and clubs that present nude or topless dancing" have "a long history of spawning deleterious effects." Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 516 (citation omitted).

Nor can there be any controversy over the proposition that intoxication aggravates such secondary effects. "Common sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior." N.Y. State Liquor Auth. v. Bellanca, 452 U.S. 714, 718, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 (1981) (quoting N.Y. State Legis. Annual 150 (1977)). "Liquor and sex are an explosive combination." Blue Canary, 251 F.3d at 1124. Common sense equally indicates that more intoxication will likely translate into more of the unwanted effects intoxication produces.

The remaining link in the chain of reasoning underlying Virginia's policy, and the one Papermoon devotes its energies to attacking, is the assumption that allowing mixed beverages to be served will likely produce more intoxication. Paper-moon notes that the ABC Board's own website instructs that an ounce-and-a-half shot of eighty-proof liquor contains the same amount of alcohol as a twelve-ounce beer or five-ounce glass of wine. How then, asks Papermoon, could mixed beverages lead to more drunkenness?

This argument, however, trips on itself. By Papermoon's own calculations, mixed beverages contain a higher concentration of alcohol in a smaller volume. The fact that there is as much alcohol in a shot of whiskey as there is in a serving of beer more than six times that volume illustrates how much more concentrated distilled spirits are. A state is thus entitled to conclude, as the Commonwealth has: "Distilled spirits used in mixed beverages have higher alcohol content per volume than beer or wine. As a result, patrons drinking straight shots of liquor or mixed beverages can become intoxicated with less volume consumed, and, therefore, in less time and more easily, than patrons drinking beer or wine." Appellee's Br. at 17.

Virginia could certainly conclude that this higher level of intoxication from mixed beverages translates into higher levels of secondary effects in the surrounding area —namely sexual assaults, prostitution, and a generally higher disorderly conduct rate. Virginia could certainly take notice of the fact that people will visit these clubs throughout the hours of the clubs' operation and that patrons will stay for varying lengths of time. For those at a club a relatively short period of time, a state of intoxication can be reached more quickly with distilled spirits. For those there a longer time, the degree of intoxication will be much greater with mixed beverages than it would be for a person drinking beer or wine over the same period. Of course, all of these assumptions will be subject to individual variations dependent upon a variety 746 of factors. But legislatures can pass laws dealing with what will normally happen without making exceptions for individual particularities.

In sum, Virginia has a legitimate interest in reducing the chances of a person leaving a strip club intoxicated by eliminating the sale of distilled spirits and it could further legitimately believe that this modest step could reduce the harmful secondary effects surrounding such establishments.

2.

[10] The particular risks of distilled spirits are reflected in the fact that Virginia in a variety of ways saddles them with special burdens. Distilled spirits are taxed more heavily than beer and wine. See Va.Code §§ 4.1–234, –236. Unlike beer and wine, they generally can only be purchased for home consumption in ABC stores. See id. §§ 4.1–119(A), –210; see also id. § 4.1–221(A). And they may only be served in establishments with full restaurant facilities where at least forty-five percent of gross receipts come from the sale of food or other beverages. See id. § 4.1–210(A)(1). Papermoon argues that because these additional safeguards are in place, there is no need for further restricting the availability of mixed beverage licenses at its clubs. But one sensible precaution does not obviate the need for others. As Coleburn testified, "Our whole system, as well as that of every state in the United States, is designed to discourage people from drinking distilled spirits in favor of the less intoxicating beer and wine."

Virginia has long favored less potent varieties of drink. The original ABC Act established a policy of "discouraging the consumption of hard liquor by making it harder to obtain while encouraging the consumption of light fermented beverages, such as beers and wines by making them easier to obtain." Bolick v. Roberts, 199 F.Supp.2d 397, (E.D.Va.2002) (internal quotation omitted) (vacated as moot by Bolick v. Danielson, 330 F.3d 274 (4th Cir.2003)). Indeed, support for such an approach is literally of early vintage. Thomas Jefferson argued that "[n]o nation is drunken where wine is cheap; and none sober, where the dearness of wine substitutes ardent spirits as the common beverage." Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Jean Guillaume, Baron Hyde de Neuville (Dec. 13, 1818), in A Jefferson Profile as Revealed in His Letters 301 (Saul K. Padover ed., 1956).

And in identifying distilled spirits as a matter of special regulatory concern, Virginia is anything but unique. Like Virginia, most states adopted ABC statutes that "placed more stringent requirements on interests dealing in distilled spirits ... since distilled spirits, of course, contain a significantly higher alcoholic content than beer and wine." California Beer Wholesalers Ass'n v. Alcoholic Bev. Control Appeals Bd., 5 Cal.3d 402, 96 Cal.Rptr. 297, 487 P.2d 745, 749 (1971). Taxes are higher on distilled liquor than on beverages with lower concentrations of alcohol—indeed, one state's highest court held it a violation of the state constitution to tax beverages whose alcoholic content was no greater than that of wine at the much higher rates applicable to distilled spirits, finding it "impossible to ignore this natural progression in alcoholic content by volume." See Federated Distributors, Inc. v. Johnson, 125 Ill.2d 1, 125 Ill.Dec. 343, 530 N.E.2d 501, 509 (1988).

Similarly, licenses allowing the sale of mixed beverages are often costlier than licenses allowing only drinks with lower alcoholic contents, reflecting the fact "either that the legislature believed that a restaurant selling all liquors would ordinarily do a different kind of business or 747 that it was contemplated that it would cost more to police it." JPM Inv. Group, Inc. v. Brevard County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 818 So.2d 595, 599 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.2002) (quoting Salerni v. Scheuy, 140 Conn. 566, 102 A.2d 528, 530 (1954)). Widespread legislative recognition of the special need to regulate mixed beverages stands as an empirical demonstration of its own.

The prevalence and durability of Virginia's distinction in no way render it wrong, at least not where a state is exercising its "inherent police powers" "to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages in inappropriate locations." 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 515, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 134 L.Ed.2d 711 (1996). The provisions at issue comprise part of Virginia's "long-established alcohol control law" and represent but one facet of the comprehensive regulatory approach the Commonwealth has adopted. Carandola I, 303 F.3d. at 514. Those provisions appear alongside a variety of other measures minimizing secondary effects and plainly related to preserving public order, and they "are most naturally viewed as companion provisions, also intended to prevent such societal ills." Id. at 515; see Va.Code § 4.1–325(20).

Courts have no warrant to supplant a state's policy preferences with our own. We have no trouble concluding that Virginia's "inferences appear reasonable." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 452, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). That businesses like Papermoon are capable of producing harmful secondary effects, that intoxication exacerbates those effects, that more intoxication means more exacerbation, and that mixed beverages may lead to more intoxication are propositions whose sensible nature would lead to a Supreme Court slap of any hand that invalidated them. Taken together, they provide "fair[ ] support" for the Commonwealth's policy, and the ABC Board carried its burden. Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality).

D.

[11] [12] Virginia has thus demonstrated the necessary relationship between its mixed beverage restriction and its substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects. We turn therefore to Papermoon's rebuttal of the ABC Board's showing. Evidence rebutting the government's justification for a secondary effects regulation, however, must do more than challenge the government's rationale; it must convincingly discredit the foundation upon which the government's justification rests. See Carandola I, 303 F.3d at 516. Papermoon largely relied on the study produced by its expert, Professor Daniel Linz, and that evidence falls short of the "clear and convincing" standard necessary to sustain its challenge. Id.

For a start, Linz's before-and-after analysis focused only on Papermoon. But officials "need not show that each individual adult establishment actually generates the undesired secondary effects." Independence News, Inc. v. City of Charlotte, 568 F.3d 148, 156 (4th Cir.2009). Since the Virginia policy could be sustained if sexually oriented businesses "as a category" produce secondary effects when mixed beverages are served, Linz's study hardly undermined the government's case. Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox County, 555 F.3d 512, 532 (6th Cir.2009). Moreover, the study was based on only nine months of data, yet as Linz candidly acknowledged, a study of crime rates should be based on at least three years of information. And more generally, there was reason to be skeptical about how well his conclusions about Papermoon matched the governing legal standard since Linz has sought to debunk altogether the idea that 748 sexually oriented businesses generate secondary effects as a "legal myth."

The Commonwealth also contests the data sets he used. The Richmond data he obtained referred to "founded" incidents of crime but he acknowledged that the term is "not defined further by the police department" and that he had "found no other definition." He also admitted that he did not know whether the addresses included with the crime data always referred to the place where a crime was committed, and in any event he did not account for crime that may be linked to Papermoon but that actually occurred outside the narrow zone of geographic proximity he had designated. His Springfield data, meanwhile, did not include many relevant crimes, including disorderly conduct, drunkenness, driving under the influence, homicide, interference with police, prostitution, threatening bodily harm, various weapons offenses, and so on. So while the Linz study and others may well be of interest to legislatures or those formulating policy, it does not provide the kind of "clear and convincing" evidence needed to rebut the government's showing and invalidate the regulation.

E.

[13] We need not dwell further on the particulars of the ABC Board's showing or the problems with Papermoon's rebuttal, however, for there is a simpler principle to be respected. The notion that the decisions of democratically accountable bodies must be set aside because of an absence of some unspecified quantum of social science support or the presence of a conflicting study commissioned by a litigant is one we must approach with skepticism. "As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments" made by lawmakers. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). A local policymaking body "knows the streets ... better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion." Id. at 452, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (citation omitted).

Papermoon insists, however, that there is no evidence in the record showing that people drinking liquor at strip clubs cause more problems than people drinking beer or wine. We agree with Papermoon that no empirical study has been presented that correlates criminal activity to the particular alcoholic beverage consumed, but we disagree that empirical support is needed for the perfectly sensible legislative proposition that someone drinking liquor at a strip club will get more intoxicated than someone drinking beer or wine over the same amount of time and hence be more likely to cross permissible lines. Of course there will be many occasions when legislators will wish to consult empirical work. But much in life is not easily reduced to data sets, and there are limits on how much lawmakers' judgment can be subjected to the argumentative rounds and elusive requirements of statistical validation.

Policymakers "must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems." Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quotation marks omitted). Legislative bodies have the advantage both of commonsense practicality and constituent accountability. And "appeal to common sense," Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality), and "common experience," id. at 452, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment), are what the Supreme Court has approved. We risk violence, then, to democratic principles and to prudent and innovative governance when we make the validity of legislation turn on wars of competing studies. There remains a place in the legislative process for the exercise of simple reason and 749 sound judgment, just as there remains a place in the judicial process for the exercise of some restraint.

These considerations are particularly salient where, as here, lawmakers have sought a middle ground that balances competing demands. Courts often are not equipped to craft such compromises and must take special care not to hamstring those who are. Where compromise embodies invidious distinctions, special scrutiny is demanded. But the distinction between beer and wine on the one hand and distilled spirits on the other is anything but invidious, and to strike down such classifications risks pushing lawmakers away from compromise and toward more polar postures.

It bears repeating that more severe policies, under which alcohol is completely forbidden at establishments like Paper-moon, have been repeatedly upheld in the face of constitutional challenge. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 886 ("[A]ny artistic or communicative elements present in such conduct are not of a kind whose content or effectiveness is dependent upon being conveyed where alcoholic beverages are served.") (quoting Grand Faloon Tavern, Inc. v. Wicker, 670 F.2d 943, 948 (11th Cir.1982)); Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 726 ("The First Amendment does not entitle Ben's Bar, its dancers, or its patrons, to have alcohol available during a 'presentation' of nude or semi-nude dancing."). Were we to invalidate a policy restricting only distilled spirits, the Commonwealth's response might well be to ban alcohol at sexually oriented businesses outright. The First Amendment does not demand that we distort the political process in such a fashion.

None of this is to say that Virginia's policy is unassailable or even right. But the primary means to challenge legislative misconceptions is through the channels of representative government: hearings, speeches, conversations, debates, the whole clamorous drama of democracy that leads to the enactment of the given law. In the First Amendment context, those affected by restrictions designed to combat secondary effects may of course demonstrate that the justification for a particular restriction rests on "shoddy data or reasoning." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality). But to invoke the power of the judiciary to set the policy aside, such evidence must be sufficiently convincing to "prove[ ] unsound" the government's justification for its policy. See id. at 453, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). Here the evidence is not.

III.

Papermoon also challenges portions of the Virginia ABC statutes as unconstitutionally vague and unconstitutionally overbroad. As with its substantive First Amendment claim, we find these objections to be without merit.

A.

[14] [15] We begin with Papermoon's vagueness challenge. In assessing a vagueness challenge, a court must ask whether the government's policy is "set out in terms that the ordinary person exercising ordinary common sense can sufficiently understand and comply with." Carandola II, 470 F.3d at 1079 (citation omitted). While laws that regulate expression are subjected to "stricter standards," Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 151, 80 S.Ct. 215, 4 L.Ed.2d 205 (1959), "perfect clarity and precise guidance have never been required even of regulations that restrict expressive activity." Ward, 491 U.S. at 794, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

[16] Two different sections of the ABC Act prohibit mixed beverages at establishments 750 like Papermoon. The first requires that the ABC Board suspend the mixed beverage license of any establishment hosting "what is commonly called stripteasing, topless entertaining, and the like, or which has employees who are not clad both above and below the waist, or who uncommonly expose the body." See Va.Code § 4.1–226(2)(i); see also id. § 4.1–223(3)(i). The second provides that a mixed beverage licensee may not allow "any striptease act on the licensed premises" or "persons connected with the licensed business to appear nude or partially nude." See id. §§ 4.1–325(12), (13). Papermoon argues that the terms "stripteasing" and "striptease," and the phrases "clad both above and below the waist" and "partially nude" are unconstitutionally vague because it is unclear how much clothing has to be worn to satisfy their requirements.

We find this argument unpersuasive. As the district court noted, "striptease" is defined straightforwardly as "a burlesque act in which a performer removes clothing piece by piece." Merriam–Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 1166 (10th ed.1999); see also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 581, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) (describing a striptease as "a dancer's acts in going from clothed to nude ... integrated into the dance and its expressive function."). The term is clearly one of common usage and given the erotic fashion in which clothes are removed, "a 'striptease' performance, we think, speaks for itself." City of New Orleans v. Kiefer, 246 La. 305, 164 So.2d 336, 339 (1964).

[17] [18] Nor do we think that in this context the term "partially nude" is vague. Nudity, as a matter of everyday speech, refers to the absence of clothing, exposing those parts of the body commonly denominated "private." Partial nudity would thus refer to the partial exposure of the private parts. Not surprisingly, that is precisely what the ABC regulation governing mixed beverage licenses provides, forbidding "less than a fully-opaque covering of the genitals, pubic hair or buttocks, or any portion of the breast below the top of the areola." 3 Va. Admin. Code § 5–50–140(B). This language tracks the definition of "nudity" elsewhere in Virginia law. See Va.Code § 18.2–390(2); see also, e.g., Iowa Code § 709.21(2)(a); Md.Code Ann., Crim. Law § 11–203(a)(6); Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 272, § 105(a); Mo.Rev.Stat. § 565.250(1); 18 Pa. Cons.Stat. § 7507.1(e); Utah Code Ann. § 76–5a–2(6); W. Va.Code § 61–8–28(a)(1); Wis. Stat. § 942.08(1)(a). The meaning of the phrase "clad both above and below the waist" is similarly apparent: Papermoon's dancers may not dance "topless" or "bottomless." Again, the regulations make it clear that if mixed beverages are to be served, g-strings, pasties, and other such fig leaves will not do, as Papermoon itself well understands.

Quite frankly, Papermoon's vagueness challenge depends on wishful thinking. It is clear what conduct the ABC mixed beverage policy reaches—and that what it reaches is what Papermoon's dancers do. The risk that dancers at clubs like Papermoon will be "chilled" into donning more clothing than the law requires is slim indeed.

B.

[19] [20] [21] Finally, we consider Papermoon's overbreadth challenge. The overbreadth doctrine allows a party to "challenge a statute on its face because it also threatens others not before the court—those who desire to engage in legally protected expression but who may refrain from doing so rather than risk prosecution or undertake to have the law declared partially invalid." 751 Bd. of Airport Comm'rs v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 482 U.S. 569, 574, 107 S.Ct. 2568, 96 L.Ed.2d 500 (1987) (internal quotation marks omitted). Accordingly, the overbreadth doctrine is "strong medicine" to be applied "sparingly and only as a last resort." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). A court properly holds a law facially invalid on overbreadth grounds only where its overbreadth is "substantial ... judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Id. at 615, 93 S.Ct. 2908.

[22] [23] As discussed, Virginia's prohibition on mixed beverages at venues like Papermoon is within the statutes' legitimate sweep. And cultural venues offering "matters of serious literary, artistic, scientific, or political value" are properly exempted. Va.Code §§ 4.1–226(2), –325(C); 3 Va. Admin. Code § 5–50–140(C). Papermoon stresses that the overwhelming majority of establishments licensed to sell mixed beverages in Virginia are not "adult entertainment establishments" and still would not come within the exception for cultural venues. But that is beside the point since an ordinary bar is unlikely to have its employees strip or otherwise have their breasts or buttocks exposed (much less for expressive purposes). And one that did allow such displays might plausibly be linked to the secondary effects Virginia has targeted. Perfection is not required to survive an overbreadth challenge—a statute that shields "most protected activity" is permissible. Carandola II, 470 F.3d at 1085. Here, we see few, if any, likely applications of the policy that would be forbidden by the Constitution.

Indeed, the matter should be beyond debate since the exception for cultural venues Virginia adopted uses word-for-word the same language that cured North Carolina's over-breadth problem in Carandola II. See Carandola II, 470 F.3d at 1083–84. Papermoon attempts to distinguish the case, arguing that the policy Carandola addressed only prohibited outright nudity while Virginia's additionally prohibits even the near-nudity of g-strings and pasties where mixed beverages are served. We do not see, however, how this additional requirement is likely to inflict further collateral damage on protected expression. The range of expressive activities dependent upon exposing the buttocks or breasts pretty well coincides with the range of those dependent on exposing the genitals. And if, as Papermoon strenuously urges, Carandola II's conclusion that the statutes there at issue were not overbroad depended on the mildness of the restriction they imposed, then we must point out once again that a policy merely forbidding mixed beverages where erotic performances take place is likewise anything but draconian.

IV.

Where governmental action is involved, a constitution exists in part to prune extremes. Where intermediate scrutiny is concerned, it is not wrong for moderation in the political process to find a constitutional home. The Commonwealth has demonstrated moderation in its efforts to balance the expressive value in erotic dancing with the unwanted encouragement of secondary effects. That courts should not be turned into appellate legislatures should go without saying, but it is particularly true where the political process has not sought to push the constitutional envelope and where lawmakers have responded conscientiously to prior opinions of this and other courts. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

612 F.3d 736

Footnotes

289 F.3d 358
United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

LLEH, INC., Etc.; et al., Plaintiffs,
LLEH, Inc., doing business as Babe's;
April Cooper; Anita Jackson; Sarah
Blackstock, Plaintiffs–Appellees,
v.
WICHITA COUNTY, TEXAS, Defendant–Appellant.

No. 00–11220.
|
April 22, 2002.

Operator of sexually oriented business, and its employees, sued county under § 1983, challenging on First Amendment grounds county regulations governing operations of such businesses in unincorporated areas of county. Following bench trial, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Jerry L. Buchmeyer, Chief Judge, 121 F.Supp.2d 513, entered judgment for plaintiffs, and awarded attorney fees. County appealed. The Court of Appeals, Rhesa Hawkins Barksdale, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) location provision of regulations did not violate First Amendment's free speech guarantee; (2) operating requirements that called for six-foot buffer zone between patrons and performers, and for performers to be on stages at least 18 inches above floor, were constitutional; (3) provision of regulations requiring six-foot buffer zone to be clearly demarcated was constitutional; (4) provisions requiring that such businesses be configured so as to give inspecting law enforcement personnel an unobstructed view, and allowing injunctive relief, were valid; and (5) award of attorney fees would be vacated and matter remanded for reconsideration.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, vacated in part, and remanded.

West Headnotes (19)

[1] Federal Courts
Questions of Law in General

Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

Following a bench trial, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error, while legal issues are reviewed de novo.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Grounds for sustaining decision not relied upon or considered

Court of Appeals may affirm judgment entered following a bench trial for reasons other than those relied upon by the district court.

20 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Courts
Constitutional rights, civil rights, and discrimination in general

Whether free speech rights protected by First Amendment have been infringed is a mixed question of law and fact, subject to de novo review. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

While nonobscene nude dancing is protected by the First Amendment's free speech guarantee, even if only marginally so, the government can regulate such activity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Location provision of county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, under which such businesses could not be located within 1,500 feet of a child care facility, school, dwelling, park, or place of religious worship, or within one mile of a penal institution, was designed to serve a substantial government interest in combatting secondary effects of such businesses, and did not violate First Amendment's free speech guarantee; while county was largely rural and had relied on studies of effects in such business in urban areas, relied-upon studies were reasonably believed to be relevant to county's desire to avoid problems during its growth and development. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

A local government's interest in preserving the quality and character of neighborhoods and urban centers can, if properly set forth, support restrictions on adult entertainment that is protected under First Amendment's free speech guarantee, and in setting forth this interest, a local government may place great weight upon the experiences of, and studies conducted by, other local governments, as well as opinions of courts from other jurisdictions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

First Amendment's free speech guarantee does not require that a city, before enacting an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Constitutional Law

Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Regulations that burden speech incidentally or control the time, place, and manner of expression must be evaluated under First Amendment in terms of their general effect U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

First Amendment does not bar application of a neutral regulation that incidentally burdens speech merely because a party contends that allowing an exception in the particular case will not threaten important government interests. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law

Proximity of performers to patrons

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Operating requirement contained in county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, under which persons performing either partially or totally nude at such businesses could only do so if they were at least six feet from the nearest patron, had no greater incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms than was essential to furtherance of county's legitimate interest in deterring sexual contact and touching in such businesses, and thus was constitutional. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

An incidental burden on protected speech is no greater than is essential, and therefore is permissible under First Amendment, so long as the neutral regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

Incidental burdens on protected speech are not invalid under First Amendment simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

Validity under First Amendment of incidental burdens on protected speech does not turn on a judge's agreement with the responsible decision maker concerning the most appropriate method for promoting significant government interests, nor does it turn on the degree to which those interests should be promoted. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Operating requirement contained in county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, under which persons performing either partially or totally nude at such businesses could only do so if they were at least 18 inches above floor level, had no greater incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms than was essential to furtherance of county's legitimate interest in deterring sexual contact and touching in such businesses, and thus was constitutional. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Proximity of performers to patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Demarcation provision contained in county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, under which owners of such business were required to clearly demarcate six-foot buffer zone between patrons and any person who performed partially or totally nude at such an establishment that was called for under regulations, simply manifested and furthered same substantial government interests as buffer provision, which was itself constitutional, and thus did not violate First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Unobstructed-view provision of county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, under which interior of such a business was required to be configured in such a manner that inspecting law enforcement personnel would have an unobstructed view of every area of the premises from every other area, excluding restrooms, was a content-neutral regulation that furthered important governmental interest in protecting against illegal and unsanitary sexual activity, and had no greater incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms than necessary, and thus was constitutional. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Injunction

Sexually-oriented businesses;obscenity

Injunction provision of county regulations governing sexually oriented businesses located in unincorporated areas of county, which stated that any person violating regulations was subject to a suit to enjoin operation of business, and that district attorney was authorized to bring suit to enjoin violations, was not unconstitutionally overbroad, where speech and activity that could give rise to a violation of regulations was properly regulated under First Amendment, so that any overbreadth in injunction provision was not substantial in relation to provision's plainly legitimate sweep. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Civil Rights

Results of litigation;prevailing parties

A plaintiff prevails in suit under § 1983, and may recover attorney fees under § 1988, when actual relief on the merits of his claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff. 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1988.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Federal Courts

Reversal or Vacation of Judgment in General

Federal Courts

Determination of damages, costs, or interest;remittitur

District court's award of attorney fees under § 1988 to operator of sexually oriented business, who had prevailed in district court in § 1983 action challenging constitutionality of county regulations governing such business, would be vacated, with matter remanded for reconsideration, after Court of Appeals' disposition of matter made it questionable as to whether operator could any longer be deemed to have prevailed in action. 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1988.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

361 Gerald E. Hopkins (argued), Langtry, TX, for Plaintiffs–Appellees.

362 Douglas L. Baker (argued), Wichita Falls, TX, for Defendant–Appellant.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Before DAVIS, WIENER, and BARKSDALE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

RHESA HAWKINS BARKSDALE, Circuit Judge:

Regarding the regulations by Wichita County, Texas, for sexually oriented businesses (SOBs), primarily at issue is whether, for the regulations' location restriction, studies of secondary effects for cities are relevant to such non-urban areas. Among other things, the regulations govern location, stage height, and layout, as well as mandate information disclosure and dancer-to-patron distance. Claiming the regulations pass First Amendment muster, the County appeals a bench trial judgment in favor of LLEH, Inc., and its employees. JUDGMENT ON THE MERITS AFFIRMED in PART and REVERSED in PART; JUDGMENT AWARDING ATTORNEY'S FEES and EXPENSES VACATED; REMANDED.

I.

In June 1999, William Essary, LLEH's sole owner, purchased from Pearl Carter property outside the city limits of Wichita Falls, in an unincorporated area of Wichita County, Texas. LLEH planned to open Babe's BYOB, a SOB, on the property. Learning of LLEH's plans after it had purchased the property and begun construction, the County decided to enact regulations governing the operation and location of SOBs in the County's unincorporated area. (The County attributes its late discovery to LLEH's failure to comply with Texas law, effective 1 September 1999, requiring certain intending SOB operators to post public notice of such intent.)

The County requested the District Attorney to investigate the requirements to formulate regulations. The District Attorney obtained, and considered, studies compiled by other jurisdictions detailing their reasons for, and experiences in, implementing SOB regulations. Those jurisdictions included: Cleburne and Houston, Texas; Garden Grove, California; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Newport News, Virginia; Bellevue, Washington; St. Croix County, Wisconsin; and Minnesota. (The County also considered a report prepared for the American Center for Law and Justice.)

Between October and December 1999, the County held public hearings on its intent to adopt the regulations. Among those participating were law enforcement officers, County citizens, a real estate appraiser, and LLEH (with counsel).

Babe's began doing business in early October 1999. On 6 December, the County enacted Order No. 99–12–579, entitled "The Regulations for Sexually Oriented Businesses in the Unincorporated Areas of Wichita County, Texas" (the Order), with a 10 December effective date. The Order requires a SOB to obtain a permit (SOBP) in order to conduct business in that part of the County covered by the Order. Additionally, in pertinent part, the Order provides:

> SECTION IX—SOBP APPLICATION [location provision]
>
> ....
>
> (e) Applicants for a SOBP shall ... provide:
>
> ....
>
> (4) A certification that the proposed enterprise will be located:
>
> 363 (a) a minimum of one thousand five hundred (1,500) feet from any child care facility, school, dwelling, hospital, public building, public park, or church or place of religious worship[;]
>
> (b) a minimum of one (1) mile from a penal institution[.]
>
> ....
>
> SECTION X—EMPLOYEE IDENTIFICATION BADGE APPLICATION [disclosure provision]
>
> (a) Any person who is employed in any capacity at an enterprise ... is required to make application with and obtain from the County Sheriff an employee identification badge.... The individual applicant shall ... provide the following information to the County Sheriff:
>
> ....
>
> (3) the city, county, and state of each of the applicant's residences for the three (3) years immediately preceding the date of the application, indicating the dates of each residence and including the present mailing address of the applicant.
>
> ....
>
> SECTION XXIV—OPERATING REQUIREMENTS FOR ENTERPRISES [buffer, stage-height, demarcation, and unobstructed-view provisions]
>
> (a) The following shall be violations of these regulations....
>
> ....
>
> (13) for any person performing partially nude or totally nude at an enterprise to do so less than six (6) feet from the nearest patron and on a stage less than eighteen (18) inches above floor level;
>
> (14) for the owner or operator of an enterprise to allow any location within the enterprise to be used for the purpose of partially nude or totally nude live exhibitions unless it is marked with clear indications of the six (6) foot zone. The absence of this demarcation will create a presumption that there have been violations of these regulations during performances in unmarked areas[.]

....

(c) Except as otherwise provided herein[,] the interior of an enterprise shall be configured in such a manner that inspecting law enforcement personnel have an unobstructed view of every area of the premises from any other area of the premises, excluding restrooms, to which any patron is allowed access for any purpose.

(Emphasis added.)

The Order also confers authority upon the District Attorney to seek to have enjoined violations of the Order.

SECTION VIII—INJUNCTION [injunction provision]

(a) A person who violates these regulations is subject to a suit to enjoin operation of the enterprise pursuant to Section 243.010 of the Texas Local Government Code and is also subject to prosecution for criminal violations.

(b) The Criminal District Attorney is hereby authorized to file suit to enjoin violation of these regulations. A suit may be initiated upon information received from private citizens or any law enforcement agency.

(Emphasis added.)

Babe's was in violation of the 1500 feet minimum distance from a dwelling (three 364 houses). (Two of those houses are owned by Pearl Carter, who had sold the property to Essary.) Shortly after the Order's enactment, and because Babe's was already in operation, the Sheriff notified LLEH it would be given a 60–day grace period before the Order was enforced against it.

In February 2000, and apparently still within the grace period, LLEH filed an application under the Order's contingent SOBP provisions, designed to permit existing SOBs not in conformity with the Order's location provision to continue operating during an amortization period in order to recoup their investments. LLEH sought a contingent SOBP for an approximate eight-year period.

A series of checks by law enforcement officials during March and April 2000 revealed, however, that Babe's dancers were not complying with a number of the Order's provisions. The Sheriff obtained warrants for the arrest of dancers for, and management for allowing, violation of the buffer provision. On 30 March, the Sheriff's Office notified LLEH its SOBP application had been denied, citing numerous violations of the Order.

Earlier that March, LLEH filed this action, requesting injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to a number of the Order's provisions. During a 10 April conference with the district court, the County agreed not to enforce the Order until a 25 April hearing on LLEH's preliminary injunction request. At that hearing, enforcement of the buffer provision was preliminarily enjoined.

That May, the County heard the appeal of LLEH's SOBP denial. Later that month, the County agreed to both waive the location provision and reduce the buffer provision from six to three feet until November 2002—the point, according to the County, by which LLEH could recoup its initial investment. (As noted, LLEH maintained it needed a much longer period in which to do so.)

A bench trial was held in July, with judgment entered that September (2000). Relevant to this appeal, the district court: (1) held that the location, buffer, stage-height, demarcation, unobstructed-view, and disclosure provisions violated the First Amendment, failing the tests established in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and/or United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); (2) amended the buffer provision from six to three feet; and (3) held the injunction provision unconstitutionally overbroad. LLEH, Inc. v. Wichita County, Texas, 121 F.Supp.2d 513 (N.D.Tex.2000) (LLEH).

Post-judgment, LLEH sought attorney's fees and expenses (fees). Approximately $43,000 was awarded.

II.

The County challenges most of the rulings against the Order, as well as the fees award.

A.

[1] [2] Following a bench trial, findings of fact are reviewed for clear error; legal issues, de novo. E.g., Joslyn Mfg. Co. v. Koppers Co., Inc., 40 F.3d 750, 753 (5th Cir.1994). "[W]e may affirm for reasons other than those relied upon by the district court". Id. (citing Ballard v. United States, 17 F.3d 116, 118 (5th Cir.1994)).

[3] "Whether ... free speech rights have been infringed is a mixed question of law and fact." Int'l Soc'y for Krishna Consciousness of New Orleans, Inc. v. Baton Rouge, 876 F.2d 494, 496 (5th Cir.1989) (citing 365 Dunagin v. City of Oxford, 718 F.2d 738, 748 n. 8 (5th Cir.1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1259, 104 S.Ct. 3553 (1984)). Accordingly, our "review is de novo ". Id. (quoting Dunagin, 718 F.2d at 748 n. 8).

[4] "While it is now beyond question that nonobscene nude dancing is protected by the First Amendment, even if 'only marginally so,' it is also clear that the government can regulate such activity." J&B Entm't, Inc. v. City of Jackson, 152 F.3d 362, 369 (5th Cir.1998) (quoting Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); internal citations omitted). The test for reviewing such regulations, however, is not as clear: the test for time, place, or manner regulations, described in Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925; or the four-part test for incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms, established in O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 376–77, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

Under Renton, "zoning ordinances designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects of [SOBs] are to be reviewed under the standards applicable to 'content-neutral' time, place, and manner regulations". 475 U.S. at 49, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis added). "[Such] regulations are acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication". Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Additionally, they must be narrowly tailored to achieve the government's interest. See id. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. "A content-neutral time, place, or manner restriction must (1) be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) be narrowly tailored to serve a significant or substantial governmental interest; and (3) preserve ample alternative means of communication." TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, Texas, 24 F.3d 705, 707 (5th Cir.1994). Along the same line, O'Brien provides:

> [A] government regulation [of expressive conduct] is sufficiently justified [1] if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; [2] if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; [3] if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and [4] if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest.

391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

Our court has reviewed SOB licensing and location provisions under the Renton test. See, e.g., Woodall v. City of El Paso, 49 F.3d 1120, 1122–27 (5th Cir.) (1000–foot location provision), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 988, 116 S.Ct. 516, 133 L.Ed.2d 425 (1995); Grand Brittain, Inc. v. City of Amarillo, 27 F.3d 1068, 1069–70 (5th Cir.1994) (per curiam) (1000–foot location provision); TK's Video, Inc., 24 F.3d at 707–11 (licensing, information disclosure, and internal layout provisions); Lakeland Lounge of Jackson, Inc. v. City of Jackson, 973 F.2d 1255, 1257–60 (5th Cir.1992) (250–foot/1000–foot location and light-industrial zoning provisions), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1030, 113 S.Ct. 1845, 123 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993).

We have subsequently reviewed a public nudity ordinance and "no touch" provision under the O'Brien test. See J&B Entm't, Inc., 152 F.3d at 369–78; Hang On, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 65 F.3d 1248, 1253–55 (5th Cir.1995).

Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984), noted the tests' similarities: "[O'Brien's] four-factor standard ... for validating a regulation of expressive conduct ... is little, if any, different from the standard applied to time, place, or manner restrictions". In fact, in 366 Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), concerning a challenge to a public indecency law brought by two nude dancing establishments, a plurality of the Court suggested the tests are interchangeable:

> The "time, place, or manner" test was developed for evaluating restrictions on expression taking place on public property which had been dedicated as a "public forum," although we have on at least one occasion applied it to conduct occurring on private property. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 [(1986)]. In Clark we observed that this test has been interpreted to embody much the same standards as those set forth in United States v. O'Brien, and we turn, therefore, to the rule enunciated in O'Brien.

Id. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion; internal citations omitted).

The district court apparently applied Renton in reviewing the location provision; for the others, O'Brien. Because neither side takes issue with the particular test applied to each of the respective provisions, we will proceed as did the district court. In any event, our holding for each provision is the same under either test.

1.

[5] The district court held the location provision unconstitutional for want of relevant evidence of secondary effects: "Although the County relie [d] upon many studies of secondary effects of other cities, none of the studies [has] any relevance to the problem faced by Wichita County" in an unincorporated, rural area with few residential dwellings. LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 521 (emphasis added).

[6] [7] The County's interest, as identified in the Order's preambulary language, concerns combating SOBs' deleterious effects and protecting the health, safety, and welfare of SOB patrons and County citizens. "A local government's interest in preserving the quality and character of neighborhoods and urban centers can, if properly set forth, support restrictions on ... adult entertainment." J&B Entm't, Inc., 152 F.3d at 371 (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925). "In setting forth this interest, a local government may place great weight upon the experiences of, and studies conducted by, other local governments, as well as opinions of courts from other jurisdictions." Id. (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925).

> The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses.

Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis added).

The district court held, and LLEH maintains, that the County's reliance on studies of secondary effects in urban areas is rendered irrelevant by the rural characteristics of the County's unincorporated areas, particularly the low population and dearth or absence of residences, schools, daycare centers, churches, and playgrounds in the area around Babe's.

[8] [9] To the extent the district court focused on the area in Babe's immediate vicinity, the court erred. "Regulations that burden speech incidentally or control the time, place, and manner of expression must be evaluated in terms of their general effect." United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 688–89, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985) (emphasis added). Moreover, "[t]he First Amendment does not bar application of a neutral regulation that incidentally burdens speech merely 367 because a party contends that allowing an exception in the particular case will not threaten important government interests." Id. at 688, 105 S.Ct. 2897 (emphasis added; citing Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 296–297, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984)).

Even if the area immediately surrounding Babe's were the only area in question, the studies relied upon by the County were still relevant. The secondary effects that urban areas have experienced (well documented in the relied-upon studies) are precisely what the County is attempting to avoid. This is evinced by the Order's preambulary language. For example, the County sought to "minimize and control ... adverse effects" and "deter the spread of urban and rural blight". (Emphasis added.)

Accordingly, it is logical that the County would: (1) review the experiences of urban areas, as discussed in the studies; (2) consider what measures those areas have employed to combat secondary effects; and (3) tailor those corrective measures to the County's needs. By so doing, the County may, in its continued growth and development, successfully sidestep many of the problems encountered by urban areas. In this respect, the relied-upon studies are "reasonably believed to be relevant" to the problems the County seeks to address. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925.

2.

[10] The district court held the six-foot buffer and 18–inch stage height provisions violated O'Brien's fourth prong: "incidental restriction on ... First Amendment freedoms [can be] no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest". O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

LLEH stipulated that the Order satisfies the first and second O'Brien prongs; and, the district court held these two provisions satisfied the third. See LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 522–23. (The district court also held these provisions, along with the demarcation provision discussed infra, void for vagueness because they apply to "partially nude" performances without defining that term. The County does not contest this holding. The district court suggested that "the County can remedy this simply by defining the phrase, 'Partially Nude' as it has already done with 'Nudity or State of Nudity' and 'Semi-nude[,]' ", id. at 524; the County stated, at oral argument, that it intends to do so.)

a.

Concerning the buffer provision and O'Brien's fourth prong, the district court stated: "[T]he regulation must go only so far as is required to achieve the stated interest of deterring sexual contact and touching". Id. at 523–24 (emphasis added). It determined: the provision "would effectively close the club", id. at 523 n. 19; and, accordingly, only a less restrictive, three-foot buffer would be constitutional, id. at 524.

[11] [12] [13] The district court's analysis runs contrary to the principle that "an incidental burden on speech is no greater than is essential, and therefore is permissible under O'Brien, so long as the neutral regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation ". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897 (emphasis added); see also Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798–99, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). "[S]uch regulations [are not] invalid simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897. Moreover, "[t]he validity of such regulations does not turn on a judge's agreement with the responsible decision 368 maker concerning the most appropriate method for promoting significant government interests". Id. Nor does it turn on "the degree to which those interests should be promoted". Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

In addition, the district court's finding that the six-foot buffer would effectively close Babe's is not controlling. "The [provision] does not ban all [partially or totally nude dancing], but instead focuses on the source of the evils the [County] seeks to eliminate ... and eliminates them without at the same time banning or significantly restricting a substantial quantity of speech that does not create the same evils." Id. at 800 n. 7, 109 S.Ct. 2746. The six-foot buffer may have a significant impact on Babe's; but, as noted supra, "[r]egulations that burden speech incidentally or control the time, place, and manner of expression must be evaluated in terms of their general effect". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 688–89, 105 S.Ct. 2897 (emphasis added; internal citation omitted); see also DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 413 (6th Cir.1997) (reviewing a similar six-foot buffer requirement and noting that, to the extent economic impact is considered in determining whether a regulation is sufficiently narrow, "we consider the economic effects of the ordinance in the aggregate, not at the individual level; if the ordinance were intended to destroy the market for adult cabarets, it might run afoul of the First Amendment, but not if it merely has adverse effects on the individual theater"). In this light, the buffer provision satisfies O'Brien's narrow tailoring prong.

b.

[14] The district court held the 18–inch stage-height provision did not satisfy O'Brien's fourth prong: "The interest of deterring sexual contact and touching has already been satisfied with the three foot buffer zone [substituted by the district court for the Order's six-foot zone]. Accordingly, this requirement is arbitrary and does not serve the interest of the County in light of the three foot buffer zone". LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 524.

Again, it is not within a court's province to base its ruling on its determination of "the most appropriate method for promoting [the] government interest[ ]". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897. Because the County's interests would be achieved less effectively absent the stage-height provision, that provision satisfies O'Brien's fourth prong.

3.

[15] The district court held the demarcation provision fails to satisfy two of the O'Brien prongs: the second, for want of "evidence of secondary effects that this rule is intended to ameliorate", LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 524 (emphasis added); and the fourth, because it is not "narrow enough ... when [the court-substituted] three-foot buffer zone is already in place", id. at 525.

"Our appropriate focus is not an empirical enquiry into the actual intent of the enacting legislature, but rather the existence or not of a current governmental interest in the service of which the challenged application of the statute may be constitutional." Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (Souter, J., concurring) (citing McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961)). (As noted, LLEH stipulated that the Order satisfies the second prong.)

The demarcation provision is simply a manifestation of the buffer provision; it furthers the same substantial interests and merely gives definition to the buffer provision. Accordingly, it imposes no further 369 restriction on speech. O'Brien's second and fourth prongs are satisfied.

4.

[16] The district court held the unobstructed-view provision is not sufficiently narrow to satisfy O'Brien's fourth prong. Our court has upheld similar provisions. At issue in TK's Video, Inc., 24 F.3d at 705, was, inter alia, a provision that provided:

> The interior of the premises shall be configured in such a manner that there is an unobstructed view from a manager's station of every area of the premises to which any patron is permitted access for any purpose excluding restrooms.... The view required in this subsection must be by direct line of sight from the manager's station.

Id. at 723. After explaining that the provision was relevant to an interest in protecting against "illegal and unsanitary sexual activity", we held: "The design and layout regulations narrowly respond to a substantial governmental interest". Id. at 711*; see also FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas*, 837 F.2d 1298, 1304 (5th Cir.1988) ("[I]n accordance with the prevailing view, ... the first amendment does not prohibit the City of Dallas from requiring that viewing booths in adult theatres be open".).

The district court focused on the particular hardships that might arise out of compliance with the unobstructed-view provision. After discussing how costly compliance would prove, the court noted LLEH had voluntarily installed surveillance cameras with a monitor at the Babe's manager's station. The district court reasoned that, if LLEH installed two additional cameras, along with additional monitors at the manager's station, the County's interest in law enforcement could be served. Consequently, it concluded, the provision was not sufficiently narrow to satisfy O'Brien's fourth prong.

Again, a regulation with incidental burdens on speech is not invalid "simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897. Such a regulation satisfies O'Brien's fourth prong "so long as the neutral regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation ". Id. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897 (emphasis added).

At trial, the County asserted "that cameras can be manipulated and the[ir] images [can be] misleading". LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 528. The court dismissed this point because the County "fail[ed] to show the Court how a view from one side of a crowded room, 'with the naked eye,' can be any less misleading". Id. We conclude, however, that the County's interest would be achieved less effectively absent the unobstructed view provision.

Moreover, as noted, the "[r]egulations that burden speech incidentally or control the time, place, and manner of expression must be evaluated in terms of their general effect". Albertini, 472 U.S. at 688–89, 105 S.Ct. 2897 (emphasis added; internal citation omitted). The district court erred to the extent it focused on the impact the unobstructed view provision had on Babe's alone.

5.

The disclosure provision held violatiave of O'Brien's fourth prong requires that, in order to obtain the necessary employee identification badge to work at a SOB, the applicant provide certain information to the Sheriff, including, inter alia, "the city, county, and state of each of the applicant's residences for the three (3) years immediately preceding the date of the application, indicating the dates of each residence and 370 including the present mailing address of the applicant". (Emphasis added.) The application form used by the Sheriff to collect the information employs that same language, then provides spaces to list the date and applicant's address.

At trial, a Sheriff's representative answered "yes" when asked if the application form requests "the current residential address of the applicant". Without explanation, the district court determined the disclosure provision and/or the application itself required the applicant to list not only the "current address [but also] phone information " and held that the requirement to list such information "is not narrowly tailored to advance the County's interest". LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 525 (emphasis added). (LLEH maintains the district court also held the provision unconstitutionally overbroad. The court ruled solely on the O'Brien narrowness prong. Id. at 525 n. 23.)

Neither the provision nor the application form requests a telephone number. As to the address, the County has repeatedly conceded that applicants should not have to list their current residential address. Moreover, counsel for the County confirmed at oral argument here that the County plans to amend the provision in this regard. In the light of these concessions, it is not clear why the County raised the disclosure provision as an issue on appeal. In any event, we need not review this aspect of the district court's opinion. We understand the district court's holding as pertaining only to a current residential address and telephone number.

6.

[17] The injunction provision held unconstitutionally overbroad states: "A person who violates [the Order] is subject to a suit to enjoin operation of the enterprise". (Emphasis added.) The provision authorizes the District Attorney "to file suit to enjoin violation of [the Order]". Relying on Universal Amusement Co., Inc. v. Vance, 587 F.2d 159, 168–73 (5th Cir.1978), the district court held the provision overbroad because it "authorizes a suit to enjoin free speech" or "to enjoin ... protected activity". LLEH, 121 F.Supp.2d at 527.

Universal Amusement concerned a statute that provided:

> The habitual use ... of any premises, place or building or part thereof, for any of the following uses shall constitute a public nuisance and shall be enjoined at the suit of either the State or any citizen thereof:
>
> ....
>
> (3) For the commercial manufacturing, commercial distribution, or commercial exhibition of obscene material[.]

587 F.2d at 165 n. 11. Our court held the provision "unconstitutional insofar as it authorizes injunctions against the future exhibition of unnamed films[,] ... for it amounts to a prior restraint on materials not yet declared obscene ". Id. at 169 (emphasis added).

Universal Amusement is inapposite. The provision at issue here authorizes suit to enjoin "violations" of the provisions upheld in this appeal. In the light of our above holdings, the risk of actions seeking to enjoin "free speech" or "protected activity" is substantially diminished, if not eliminated, because we have concluded that the "speech" and "activity" at issue in the provisions is properly regulated. Any overbreadth in the injunction provision is not "substantial ... in relation to the [provision's] plainly legitimate sweep". Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 615, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973).

B.

Approximately $43,000 was awarded pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1988(b), which 371 provides: "In any action or proceeding to enforce a provision of section [1983] of this title, the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party ... a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs...." (Emphasis added.) The County requests that we either vacate the award or remand for reconsideration.

[18] [19] "[A] plaintiff 'prevails' when actual relief on the merits of his claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff". Farrar v. Hobby, 506 U.S. 103, 111–12, 113 S.Ct. 566, 121 L.Ed.2d 494 (1992) (emphasis added). In the light of our disposition of this appeal, the only points on which LLEH might be considered to have "prevailed" are: (1) in having the term "partially nude" adjudged vague (it is unclear whether the County conceded this at trial); (2) in having it adjudged that the County may not request a current residential address, which it conceded pre-trial; and (3) in having a provision (not at issue here) pertaining to on-premises alcohol consumption adjudged preempted by Texas law, which the County also apparently conceded pre-trial. Because the district court is better suited to determine both whether LLEH is a prevailing party in the light of our resolution of this appeal and what, if any, fees would be reasonable, we vacate the award and remand for reconsideration.

III.

For the foregoing reasons, we REVERSE the district court's holdings as to the Order's location, buffer, stage-height, demarcation, unobstructed-view, and injunction provisions. We do not reach its holdings on either the vagueness of the term "partially nude" or the disclosure provision. We VACATE the fees and expenses award. This case is REMANDED for further proceedings consistent with this opinion, including entry of judgment on the merits and reconsideration of fees.

JUDGMENT ON THE MERITS AFFIRMED in PART, REVERSED in PART; JUDGMENT AWARDING ATTORNEY'S FEES and EXPENSES VACATED; REMANDED.

All Citations

289 F.3d 358

354 S.W.3d 187
Supreme Court of Missouri,
En Banc.

Michael OCELLO, et al., Appellants,
v.
Chris KOSTER, in his official capacity as Missouri Attorney General, Respondent.

No. SC 91563.
|
Nov. 15, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Sexually oriented businesses, owners of businesses, and residents filed suit against Missouri Attorney General, challenging constitutional validity of Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act, which contained provisions concerning touching of dancers by patrons, buffer zones around dancers, the banning of nudity in their establishments, alcohol and hours restrictions, and requirements that booths for viewing books and films be open to view. The Circuit Court, Cole County, Jon E. Beetem, J., granted Attorney General's motion for judgment on pleadings, and plaintiffs appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Laura Denvir Stith, J., held that:

[1] failure by joint committee on legislative research to conduct hearing on legislator's written request for hearing related to fiscal note accompanying proposed legislation for regulation of sexually oriented businesses did not render Act unconstitutionally invalid;

[2] Act was content-neutral restriction subject to intermediate scrutiny;

[3] legislature relied on evidence it reasonably believed was relevant to establish connection between restrictions requiring open booths for viewing sexually oriented books and films and prohibiting patrons from touching or coming within six feet of dancers, and negative secondary effects of sexually oriented speech that such restrictions were designed to address;

[4] plaintiffs' evidence did not cast direct doubt on evidence relied upon by legislature in enacting open-booth and dancer-access restrictions;

[5] nudity ban served substantial government interest;

[6] provisions of Act banning alcohol in such businesses and which restricted hours of operation were permissible content-neutral restrictions on speech;

[7] plaintiffs' evidence did not cast direct doubt on evidence that legislature reasonably relied on in enacting restrictions banning alcohol and limiting hours of operation to address secondary negative effects of higher crime and reduced property values; and

[8] content-neutral restrictions on speech in Act did not disproportionately reduce amount of protected sexual expression protected under First Amendment.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (39)

[1] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Supreme Court reviews the constitutional validity of a statute de novo.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Presumptions and Construction as to Constitutionality

A statute is presumed valid, and the Supreme Court will uphold it unless it clearly and undoubtedly conflicts with the constitution.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Doubt

The Supreme Court resolves all doubt in favor of a statute's validity.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Appeal and Error
Extent of Review Dependent on Nature of Decision Appealed from

In reviewing grant of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the appellate court must decide whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the face of the pleadings.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Pleading
Matters not admitted

In considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court will not blindly accept the legal conclusions drawn by the pleaders from the facts.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Pleading
Well pleaded facts, admission of

The well-pleaded facts of the non-moving party's pleading are treated as admitted on motion for judgment on the pleadings.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] States
Committees

Failure by joint committee on legislative research to conduct hearing on legislator's written request for hearing related to fiscal note accompanying proposed legislation for regulation of sexually oriented businesses did not violate state constitutional provision for permanent joint committee on legislative research, which "shall meet when necessary to perform the duties, advisory to the general assembly, assigned to it by law," and thus, failure to conduct hearing did not render Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act constitutionally invalid; constitution required only that committee be formed, that it meet, and that it perform its advisory role, constitution did not require hearing or preparation of fiscal note, constitution did not require legislature to adopt committee's advice, and statute governing proposal of legislation did not provide that failure to conduct hearing on legislator's request relating to fiscal note provided no penalty for such failure. V.A.M.S. Const. Art. 3, § 35; V.A.M.S. § 23.140.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Nature and scope in general

States
Committees

Joint Committee on Legislative Research has only the power granted it by the constitutional provision that creates it, and the General Assembly cannot increase the authority of the Committee beyond the powers set forth in the constitution. V.A.M.S. Const. Art. 3, § 35.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

If restrictions on sexually oriented speech are content-neutral, they will be reviewed under an intermediate scrutiny standard. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Under an intermediate scrutiny standard, content-neutral legislation is examined to determine whether: (1) it is aimed at the negative secondary effects associated with the restricted activity and not the content of the restricted speech; (2) it is a time, place and manner restriction and not a total ban on speech; and (3) it is designed to serve a substantial government interest and leaves open alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act was content-neutral, and not content-based restriction, and therefore, was subject to intermediate scrutiny, in suit brought by numerous sexually oriented businesses and others based on claim that Act violated First Amendment right of free speech; stated purpose of Act was to establish "reasonable and uniform regulations to prevent the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses within the state," Act did not ban sexually oriented businesses of any type, but instead sought to reduce negative secondary effects associated with such businesses, including detrimental health and sanitary conditions, prostitution and drug-related crimes, and deterioration of surrounding neighborhoods, and Act stated that its purpose was to provide content-neutral time, place and manner or comparable restrictions on these businesses so as to limit their secondary negative effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Although legislation regulating sexually oriented conduct nominally looks at the content of the speech in the sense that it is aimed at sexually oriented conduct, it is nevertheless "content-neutral," and therefore, subject to intermediate scrutiny review, if the predominate concerns motivating it are with the secondary effects caused by the speech, and not with the content of the speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Strict or exacting scrutiny;compelling interest test

Content-based restrictions on speech are subject to strict scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Strict or heightened scrutiny;compelling interest

Under strict scrutiny, legislation is presumptively invalid and will be declared unconstitutional unless it is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] States
Police power

The legislature is not required to undertake comparative studies before enacting health and safety laws; to the contrary, a legislative body may choose which evil to regulate first and need not strike at all evils at the same time or in the same way.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Statutes
Motives, Opinions, and Statements of Legislators

One legislator's comments disparaging sexually oriented businesses would not be imputed to entire General Assembly, for purposes of determining whether Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act was content-neutral restriction on speech subject to intermediate scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Motive

A court will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive; what motivates one legislator to make a speech about a statute is not necessarily what motivates scores of others to enact it, and the stakes are sufficiently high for the Supreme Court to eschew guesswork.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In determining whether time, place, and manner restrictions on speech are designed to serve a substantial government interest, the government has the initial burden of showing that it relied on evidence that is reasonably believed to be relevant for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

Little evidence is required to meet the government's initial burden of showing that it relied on evidence reasonably believed to be relevant for demonstrating a connection between a time, place or manner restriction on speech and a substantial, independent government interest; the evidence does not need to be directly related to the government's rationale, as long as it fairly supports the rationale. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

In determining whether a content-neutral restriction on speech was designed to serve a substantial independent government interest, the government need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other government entities to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects of the speech, so long as whatever evidence the government relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the government addresses, and if the government finds it is reasonable to rely on prior judicial opinions that uphold similar restrictions and those opinions fairly support its enactments, that is sufficient to meet this standard. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

In reviewing the government's evidence of secondary negative effects of sexually oriented businesses, for the purposes of determining whether a content-neutral restriction on speech addresses those effects, courts must show deference to the legislature's superior knowledge of the negative secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In a First Amendment challenge to a content-neutral restriction on speech, the government cannot rely on shoddy data or reasoning to satisfy its initial burden of showing that it relied on evidence it reasonably believed was relevant to demonstrate the secondary negative effects of sexually oriented speech that its content-neutral restriction was designed to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In a First Amendment challenge to the constitutionality of a content-neutral restriction on speech, if the government meets its initial burden of showing that it relied on evidence it reasonably believed was relevant to demonstrating a connection between the restriction on speech and the secondary negative effects the restriction served to address, the burden shifts to the challenger to cast direct doubt on the government's rationale, either [1] by demonstrating that the government's evidence does not support its rationale or [2] by furnishing evidence that disputes the government's factual findings; this type of direct doubt must be cast on every rationale the government used to justify its restrictions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness

In reviewing a First Amendment challenge to a content-neutral restriction on speech under intermediate scrutiny, in determining whether the government has made the showing that it relied on evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to establish a connection between its restriction and the suppression of negative secondary effects, neither the Supreme Court nor any court has the right to reweigh the evidence relied on by the legislature. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

In reviewing a First Amendment challenge to a content-neutral restriction on speech under intermediate scrutiny, the court will not look to see whether the challenger has shown an issue of fact exists as to whether the statute's provisions will limit the secondary negative effects of the speech; to the contrary, the question is whether the challenger has cast direct doubt on the government's rationale for the restriction, either by demonstrating that the evidence does not support its rationale that the restrictions will limit secondary effects or by demonstrating that, while it appears to do so, the evidence is faulty and does not in fact support the legislature's factual findings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law
Particular claims

Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In reviewing a First Amendment challenge to a content-neutral restriction on speech under intermediate scrutiny, challengers cannot simply make conclusory generalized allegations in their pleadings that the restrictions are invalid or are aimed at speech; they must discredit all rationales offered by the government, and unsystematic or anecdotal evidence, or evidence that merely attacks one type of evidence, would not be enough to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

If the challenger fails to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to establish a connection between a content-neutral restrictions and the suppression of negative secondary effects, the intermediate scrutiny test governing review of a content-neutral restriction on speech is satisfied, and the government will have established that the restriction is designed to serve a substantial government interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In reviewing a First Amendment challenge to a content-neutral restriction on speech under intermediate scrutiny, only if the challenger succeeds in casting direct doubt on the government's evidence that it believed was relevant to establish a connection between the restriction and the suppression of negative secondary effects does the burden shift back to the government to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its restriction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures, videos and games

In enacting Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act, legislature relied on evidence it reasonably believed was relevant to establish connection between regulations requiring that booths for viewing sexually oriented books and films be open to view from central location and prohibiting patrons from touching or coming within six feet of dancers, and negative secondary effects of sexually oriented speech that such restrictions were designed to address, for purposes of claim by sexually oriented businesses that Act was unconstitutional restriction on speech under First Amendment; Arizona study documented dozens of samples obtained from closed booths in ten different sexually oriented businesses, more than 88% of which contained semen, Missouri health department officials noted that people infected with sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV, frequented these businesses and often engaged in unprotected sex, and other judicial opinions noted findings that closed booths and touching of or close proximity of patrons to dancers led to unsanitary conditions and spread of disease. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures, videos and games

University professor's challenge as to whether legislature had chosen best method of attacking negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses by enacting Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act, together with professor's testimony that alleged deleterious effects of sexually oriented businesses on crime and property values were overblown or unsupported, did not cast direct doubt on evidence that legislature reasonably relied on that was relevant to establish connection between regulations within Act requiring that booths for viewing sexually oriented books and films be open to view from central location and prohibiting patrons from touching or coming within six feet of dancers, and negative secondary effects, namely unsanitary and unhealthy conditions, potential for spread of disease, and safety that restrictions were designed to address, for purposes of determining whether content-neutral restrictions served substantial government interest, under intermediate scrutiny review. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[31] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures, videos and games

Affidavits from various dancers and owners of sexually oriented businesses, which merely provided alternative views as to whether sexually oriented businesses presented health or safety concerns, did not cast direct doubt on evidence that legislature reasonably relied on that was relevant to establish connection between regulations within Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act requiring that booths for viewing sexually oriented books and films be open to view from central location and prohibiting patrons from touching or coming within six feet of dancers, and negative secondary effects, namely unsanitary and unhealthy conditions, potential for spread of disease, and safety that restrictions were designed to address, for purposes of determining whether content-neutral restrictions served substantial government interest, under intermediate scrutiny review. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[32] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Provision of Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act that "[n]o person shall knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appear in a state of nudity," served substantial government interest, and thus, was not unreasonable restriction on speech under First Amendment; legislature relied on numerous judicial opinions upholding nudity bans similar to instant ban, which opinions found connection between sexually oriented businesses and negative secondary effects, legislature reviewed anecdotal evidence describing health concerns related to nude dancing, including testimony of former dancer who explained that dancers constantly rubbed against stripper poles and lay on floor, and that performing these actions while completely nude left their bodies exposed to bacteria, and sexually oriented businesses did not offer any evidence casting direct doubt on evidence or judicial opinions relied upon by legislature that it deemed relevant to establish connection between ban and negative effects that ban was intended to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.531(3).

Cases that cite this headnote

[33] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

A nudity ban is a restriction on expressive conduct, for the purposes of First Amendment review, in the form of a total ban on nudity in sexually oriented businesses, rather than a time, place or manner restriction on such nudity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[34] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation

Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Provisions of Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act banning sale of alcohol in such business, and which restricted hours of operation, served substantial government interest in preventing crime, and thus, were permissible content-neutral restrictions on speech under First Amendment; legislature relied on numerous judicial opinions relating to similar restrictions, which found that alcohol and late hours were associated with higher crime, it relied on anecdotal evidence of conditions inside businesses, including firsthand experiences of dancers who recounted drug use, prostitution, and sexual abuse they frequently faced, businesses presented no evidence to cast direct doubt on those judicial opinions and anecdotal evidence, and while businesses presented alternative anecdotal evidence that sexually oriented businesses did not increase crime but offered high paying, stable jobs and helped maintain safe communities, such evidence suggesting that different conclusion was reasonable did not cast direct doubt on legislature's reliance on evidence it reasonably believed established connection between restrictions and negative secondary effects restrictions were designed to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[35] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

In determining whether the legislature relied on evidence it reasonably believed was relevant to establish a connection between the content-neutral restriction on speech and a negative secondary effect that the restriction is designed to address, the government does not bear the burden of providing evidence that rules out every theory that is inconsistent with its own. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[36] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

University professor's studies and affidavit challenging provisions of Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act which banned consumption of alcohol in sexually oriented businesses and which limited businesses' hours of operation, based on professor's belief that businesses did not contribute to increase in crime or reduce property values because studies relied on by legislature lacked empirical foundation, did not cast direct doubt on evidence that legislature reasonably relied on that was relevant to establish connection between regulations and negative secondary effects of crime and reduction in property values, and thus, restrictions were reasonable content-neutral restrictions on speech, under intermediate scrutiny review, where comparative studies were not necessary to establish connection between sexually oriented businesses and secondary negative effects, and to extent that professor's studies and criticisms were valid, they at best showed only that legislature could have reached different conclusion about connection between businesses and crime and property values. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[37] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

The government does not need to conclusively prove that its content-neutral restrictions on speech will reduce negative secondary effects, in determining whether the restriction serves a substantial government interest, under intermediate scrutiny review, but only that the evidence fairly supports the rationale for the legislation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[38] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Content-neutral restrictions on speech in Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses Act, which contained provisions requiring open booths for viewing sexually oriented books and films, which prohibited patrons from touching or coming within six feet of dancers, which banned nude dancing and alcohol, and which restricted hours of operation, did not disproportionately reduce amount of protected sexual expression protected under First Amendment; economic impact of restrictions on sexually oriented businesses was not relevant to whether restrictions reduced protected speech, restrictions left quantity and quality of speech substantially intact, operating hours restriction still left ample time for businesses to convey speech, and other restrictions placed no intrinsic limitations on speech but instead restricted opportunities for conduct that did not enjoy First Amendment protection. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.A.M.S. § 573.525 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[39] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

The concern of the proportionality test applied in determining whether a content-neutral restriction on speech leaves the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact is not with the economic impact of a statute, but rather any intrinsic limitations on speech embodied in the statute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

195 J. Michael Murray, Raymond V. Vasvari Jr., Berkman, Gordon, Murray & DeVan, Cleveland, James B. Deutsch, Mark H. Ellinger, Thomas W. Rynard, Blitz, Bardgett & Deutsch LC, Jefferson City, Richard T. Bryant, Kansas City, H. Louis Sirkin, Jennifer Kinsley, Sirkin Kinsley, Cincinnati, for Missouri residents and adult entertainment businesses.

Ronald Holliger, General Counsel, Mark E. Long, Emily Dodge, Attorney General's Office, Jefferson City, Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, for the State.

Opinion

LAURA DENVIR STITH, Judge.

Michael Ocello, Passions Video Inc., Genova's Chestnut Lounge Inc., and certain other Missouri residents and businesses (collectively "the businesses") appeal the circuit court's grant of judgment on the pleadings against them in their challenge to the validity of sections 573.525 to 573.540, RSMo Supp.2010 [1] ("the Act"), which regulate sexually oriented businesses in Missouri. They argue that the limitations contained in these statutes concerning touching of dancers by patrons, buffer zones around dancers, the banning of nudity in their establishments, alcohol and hours restrictions, and requirements that booths for viewing books and films be open to view violate their freedom of speech as protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. They also assert that, prior to the Act's adoption, the General Assembly violated an aspect of section 23.140, RSMo 2000, regarding a bill's fiscal note and that this violation voids the Act.

1 Unless otherwise specified, all subsequent statutory references are to RSMo Supp.2010.

For the reasons set forth below, this Court finds that the restrictions are not content-based limitations on speech but rather are aimed at limiting the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses on the health, welfare and safety of Missouri residents. Applying the intermediate level of review that City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality opinion), states is appropriate for use in such cases, this Court finds that the statutes are reasonable time, place and manner or comparable restrictions and that the legislature relied on evidence it "reasonably believed to be relevant" to establish a connection between the statutory provisions under attack and the suppression of negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. Accordingly, the Act does not unconstitutionally limit speech. This Court also rejects the argument that any failure to follow statutory procedures governing preparation of a fiscal note amounts to a failure to follow the Missouri Constitution and thereby voids the legislation. The Missouri Constitution does not require fiscal notes or address how they should be prepared. The judgment is affirmed.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Sections 573.525 to 573.540 (the "Act"), adopted by the Missouri legislature in 2010, regulates certain aspects of sexually oriented businesses by: (1) banning nude dancing in public; (2) requiring that semi-nude dancers not touch or come within six feet of customers; (3) prohibiting alcohol in sexually oriented businesses; (4) requiring sexually oriented businesses to close between midnight and 6 a.m.; and (5) requiring viewing booths in sexually oriented 196 businesses to be visible from a central operating station.

Before the legislature passed the Act, legislative committees heard extensive testimony and received reports and other evidence from police officers, health officials, dancers, and concerned citizens and business owners related to the connection between sexually oriented businesses and a variety of detrimental secondary effects, including crimes such as prostitution and drug use, health and sanitation problems, and decreased property values.

In addition, the legislature heard from experts such as Dr. Richard McCleary, a professor of social ecology at the University of California–Irvine. Dr. McCleary testified that based on his extensive research—much of which, including numerous scientific studies, was provided to the legislature—sexually oriented businesses increase crime, drug use and other negative effects.

The legislature also reviewed dozens of judicial opinions as well as studies conducted by municipalities and states around the country concerning problems associated with sexually oriented businesses, including increased crime inside and outside those establishments, unsanitary and unhealthy conditions inside the establishments, and the deleterious effect of such businesses on property values and neighborhoods.

The legislature also considered evidence offered by opponents of the legislation. This included: (1) testimony from police officers and business owners who believed that sexually oriented businesses did not cause crime, blight or other negative secondary effects in their neighborhoods; (2) the testimony of Dr. Daniel G. Linz, a professor of communication, law and society at the University of California–Santa Barbara, who disputed the validity of many of the studies relied upon by proponents of the legislation; and (3) studies stating there is little correlation between sexually oriented businesses and crime and other negative secondary effects in the surrounding communities.

After holding these hearings, the legislature adopted the Act. On August 10, 2010, shortly before the effective date of the Act, the businesses filed a two-count petition in the Cole County circuit court challenging its validity. In Count I, the businesses claim that the Act is void because the General Assembly failed to hold a hearing regarding the accuracy of a fiscal note assessing the expected cost of the Act as required by section 23.140 and article III, section 35 of the Missouri Constitution. In Count II, the businesses claim that the Act restricts sexually oriented speech in violation of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution because the evidence that the General Assembly relied on to show that sexually oriented businesses cause negative secondary effects was constitutionally inadequate.

The State filed an answer in which it denied that the Act is unconstitutional or that the manner of its adoption was improper or rendered it void. It attached to its answer and incorporated by reference the legislative record upon which the Act was adopted, including the judicial opinions, crime, health and land use studies and reports, expert testimony, and anecdotal evidence offered by both proponents and opponents of the legislation. It then filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, arguing that the General Assembly followed proper legislative procedures in passing the Act, that any deviations did not affect the validity of the legislation, and that the General Assembly reasonably had relied on evidence establishing a connection between sexually oriented businesses and negative secondary effects. The State's motion was granted as to both 197 counts. [2] The businesses appeal. Because they challenge the constitutional validity of section 23.140, appeal is directly to this Court. Mo. Const. art. V, § 3.

2 Judgment was granted as to Count I regarding the fiscal note in November 2010 and, as to Count II regarding the alleged First Amendment violation, in January 2011.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

[1] [2] [3] This Court reviews the constitutional validity of a statute de novo. In re Brasch, 332 S.W.3d 115, 119 (Mo. banc 2011). A statute is presumed valid, and the Court will uphold it unless it "clearly and undoubtedly" conflicts with the constitution. Prokopf v. Whaley, 592 S.W.2d 819, 824 (Mo. banc 1980). This Court "resolve[s] all doubt in favor of the [statute's] validity." Westin Crown Plaza Hotel Co. v. King, 664 S.W.2d 2, 5 (Mo. banc 1984).

[4] [5] [6] In reviewing grant of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, this Court must decide "whether the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the face of the pleadings." RGB2, Inc. v. Chestnut Plaza, Inc., 103 S.W.3d 420, 424 (Mo.App.2003). This Court will not "blindly accept the legal conclusions drawn by the pleaders from the facts." Westcott v. City of Omaha, 901 F.2d 1486, 1488 (8th Cir.1990). "The well-pleaded facts of the non-moving party's pleading are treated as admitted for purposes of the motion." Eaton v. Mallinckrodt, Inc., 224 S.W.3d 596, 599 (Mo. banc 2007). Exhibits attached to the pleadings are incorporated therein and will be considered in determining whether judgment on the pleadings should have been granted. Rule 55.12.

III. FAILURE TO HOLD A FISCAL NOTE HEARING DID NOT INVALIDATE THE ACT

[7] The businesses first challenge the process by which the Missouri General Assembly adopted the Act. The businesses' argument is grounded on article III, section 35 of the Missouri Constitution, which states in pertinent part:

> There shall be a permanent joint committee on legislative research, selected by and from the members of each house as provided by law.... The committee shall meet when necessary to perform the duties, advisory to the general assembly, assigned to it by law.

(emphasis added).

The businesses focus the Court's attention on the requirement of article III, section 35 that the joint committee on legislative research (the "Committee") "shall meet when necessary to perform the duties, advisory to the general assembly, assigned to it by law." Mo. Const. art. III, § 35 (emphasis added). They argue that because the constitution requires the creation of the Committee, any failure to properly and fully carry out duties assigned to the Committee by the legislature constitutes a failure to fulfill a constitutional duty and, necessarily, voids any legislation so passed.

The businesses suggest that this argument has particular application here. They note that section 23.140 requires that "[l]egislation, with the exception of appropriation bills, introduced into either house of the General Assembly shall, before being acted upon, be submitted to the oversight division of the committee on legislative research for the preparation of a fiscal note," § 23.140.1, and that, once prepared, a fiscal note must "accompany [a] bill throughout its course of passage." § 23.140.3. It is undisputed for purposes of this appeal that initial preparation of the fiscal note was procedurally proper.

Section 23.140 also states that a legislator may challenge or seek to amend the 198 contents of a fiscal note by so indicating "in writing ... to the chairman of the legislative research committee and a hearing before the committee or subcommittee shall be granted as soon as possible." § 23.140.3. It is uncontested that a legislator wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee requesting a hearing related to the Act's fiscal note but that no hearing was held. The businesses argue that this was a deviation from the provisions of section 23.140.3, and that this deviation constituted an inherent violation of article III, section 35 of the constitution, because holding hearings is one of the duties "assigned to [the Committee] by law" pursuant to article III, section 35. The businesses argue that the Act, therefore, is unconstitutional and void.

The businesses' argument fails. Article III, section 35 of the constitution merely requires that the Committee be formed, that it meet and that it perform an advisory role to the General Assembly. The constitution itself does not set out any specific requirements for the Committee, require hearings or establish any specific duties for the Committee. And, importantly here, article III, section 35 does not require preparation of fiscal notes, nor does it mandate hearings related thereto.

[8] Of course the legislature has established, in section 23.140, requirements for writing fiscal notes and has set forth methods for challenging and amending them. But the Committee "has only the power granted it by the constitutional provision that creates it." Thompson v. Comm. on Legislative Research, 932 S.W.2d 392, 395 (Mo. banc 1996). The General Assembly cannot increase the authority of the Committee beyond the powers set forth in the constitution. Id. Article III, section 35 does not state that the legislature must follow the advice of the Committee or that the Committee's failure to correctly carry out its duties as to a particular piece of legislation voids that legislation. The constitution says that the Committee is merely advisory to the General Assembly; therefore, the legislature would not have the authority to give the Committee effective veto power over legislation merely by failing to hold a particular hearing. "To hold otherwise would permit the legislature to amend the constitution with a statute." Thompson, 932 S.W.2d at 395.

Nor has the legislature attempted to give the Committee such veto power here. While section 23.140 sets out duties the Committee shall perform, it contains no penalty for non-compliance and says nothing about the effect of failing to follow the procedures outlined therein. Neither does it purport to give the Committee power to delay or quash otherwise validly enacted legislation should the Committee fail to fulfill each of its assigned duties completely or timely. The absence of such provisions does not preclude finding that the provision is mandatory when other circumstances and rules of construction so indicate, see, e.g., State v. Teer, 275 S.W.3d 258, 261 (Mo. banc 2009), but in the absence of such circumstances the lack of sanctions for failure to comply has been found to mean that the provision is directory only, see, e.g., State v. Parkinson, 280 S.W.3d 70, 76 (Mo. banc 2009); State v. Tisius, 92 S.W.3d 751, 770 (Mo. banc 2002); Farmers & Merchants Bank & Trust Co. v. Dir. of Revenue, 896 S.W.2d 30, 32–33 (Mo. banc 1995).

The businesses submit that while the statute here does not provide a sanction for failure to follow it, it should nonetheless be held mandatory because it involves a failure by the General Assembly to follow applicable procedural rules when enacting a statute. They argue that, in such a case, the resulting statute is constitutionally defective and, therefore, void, even in 199 the absence of a specifically codified penalty, citing Hammerschmidt v. Boone Cnty., 877 S.W.2d 98 (Mo. banc 1994).

Reliance on Hammerschmidt is misplaced. The Court there deemed a bill void after finding a violation of a constitutional requirement, contained in article III, section 23, that no bill shall contain more than one subject. Id. at 104–05. By contrast, article III, section 35 does not require a fiscal note, much less does it set forth any procedural requirements related to the fiscal note process. Neither does the constitution elsewhere provide that a failure to follow procedural requirements in passing legislation automatically shall void any bill so enacted. [3]

3 Indeed, article III, section 30 of the constitution provides, in relevant part:

> No bill shall become a law until it is signed by the presiding officer of each house in open session, who first shall suspend all other business, declare that the bill shall now be read and that if no objection be made he will sign the same. If in either house any member shall object in writing to the signing of a bill, the objection shall be noted in the journal and annexed to the bill to be considered by the governor in connection therewith.

By so providing, the constitution offers members of the General Assembly a mechanism by which to challenge perceived violations such as the Committee's failure to hold a fiscal note hearing and to ensure that the governor is made aware of the objection prior to enactment of the legislation. In this case, the record demonstrates that no such objection was lodged. This Court is not called on to address whether other remedies also may be constitutionally permissible.

In sum, the constitution merely requires that the Committee be established, that it meet and that it undertake an advisory role to the General Assembly. Neither article III, section 35 nor section 23.140 require this Court to invalidate the Act on the basis of a procedural error in regard to the fiscal note for the bill in question.

IV. THE ACT IS CONTENT–NEUTRAL AND SUBJECT TO INTERMEDIATE RATHER THAN STRICT SCRUTINY

The businesses also allege that the Act is a content-based restriction on speech subject to strict scrutiny because the purpose of the Act is the suppression of sexually oriented speech. Alternatively, the businesses argue that even were the purpose of the Act not to limit speech, it fails to pass intermediate scrutiny because its provisions reduce protected speech and do not serve the substantial government interest in reducing the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses.

[9] In City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the United States Supreme Court held that the level of scrutiny used to determine whether restrictions on sexually oriented speech are constitutional depends on whether the statutory provisions at issue are considered content-based or content-neutral. Id. at 46–48, 106 S.Ct. 925. If restrictions on sexually oriented speech are content-neutral, they will be reviewed under an intermediate scrutiny standard. Id.

[10] Under an intermediate scrutiny standard, legislation is examined to determine whether: (1) it is aimed at the negative secondary effects associated with the restricted activity and not the content of the restricted speech; (2) it is a time, place and manner restriction and not a total ban on speech; and (3) it is designed to serve a substantial government interest and leaves open alternative avenues of communication. Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925.

200 A. The Act is Content Neutral and Aimed at Negative Secondary Effects of Speech

[11] [12] Legislation that is focused on reducing the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses long has been considered "content-neutral." This is because, although the legislation nominally looks at the content of the speech in the sense that it is aimed at sexually oriented conduct, it is nevertheless "content-neutral" if the " 'predominate concerns' motivating [it] '[are] with the secondary effects [caused by the speech], and not with the content of [the speech].' " Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. at 440–41, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion), quoting, Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. [4]

4 Justice Kennedy's Alameda Books concurrence explains that calling restrictions on sexually oriented speech content-neutral is a legal fiction because such restrictions clearly target speech based on content; they simply do so for the permissible purpose of regulating the secondary effects of the speech rather than the speech itself. 535 U.S. at 448–49, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). While believing the "content-neutral" label thus was a misnomer, he agrees with the plurality that intermediate scrutiny, as defined in Renton and United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), is still the proper standard of review because the restrictions are justified based on the secondary effects caused by the speech not the content of the speech itself. Id. For ease of understanding this opinion continues to call such time, place and manner restrictions on sexually oriented speech "content-neutral."

[13] [14] By contrast, content-based restrictions are subject to strict scrutiny. Id. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728. An example of a content-based law would be legislation prohibiting sexually oriented speech based on a desire to suppress the speech itself. Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–48, 106 S.Ct. 925. Under strict scrutiny, legislation is presumptively invalid and will be declared unconstitutional unless it is "narrowly tailored to serve a compelling government interest." Pleasant Grove City v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460, 467, 129 S.Ct. 1125, 172 L.Ed.2d 853 (2009).

This Court applies these principles here to determine whether the Act is subject to intermediate or strict scrutiny. The express purpose of the Act is set out in its preamble:

> [T]o regulate sexually oriented businesses in order to promote the health, safety, and general welfare of the citizens of this state, and to establish reasonable and uniform regulations to prevent the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses within the state. The provisions of sections 573.525 to 573.537 have neither the purpose nor effect of imposing a limitation or restriction on the content or reasonable access to any communicative materials, including sexually oriented materials. Similarly, it is neither the intent nor effect of sections 573.525 to 573.537 to restrict or deny access by adults to sexually oriented materials protected by the [F]irst [A]mendment, or to deny access by the distributors and exhibitors of sexually oriented entertainment to their intended market. Neither is it the intent nor effect of sections 573.525 to 573.537 to condone or legitimize the distribution of obscene material.

§ 573.525.1 (emphasis added).

In keeping with these stated purposes, the Act does not ban sexually oriented businesses of any type. Rather, it seeks to reduce negative secondary effects associated with such businesses, including detrimental health and sanitary conditions, prostitution and drug-related crimes both inside and outside these locations, as well as deterioration of the surrounding neighborhoods, by prohibiting nude dancing in 201 public; requiring no contact and a six-foot buffer between dancers and patrons; banning alcohol in and restricting the operating hours of sexually oriented businesses; and banning the use of closed booths for viewing sexually oriented films or books.

The preamble to the Act also states that the General Assembly found that:

> Sexually oriented businesses, as a category of commercial enterprises, are associated with a wide variety of adverse secondary effects, including but not limited to personal and property crimes, prostitution, potential spread of disease, lewdness, public indecency, obscenity, illicit drug use and drug trafficking, negative impacts on surrounding properties, urban blight, litter, and sexual assault and exploitation.

§ 573.525.2(1). For these reasons, section 2(3) of the preamble continues by stating that the General Assembly also finds that:

> Each of the foregoing negative secondary effects constitutes a harm which the state has a substantial interest in preventing or abating, or both. Such substantial government interest in preventing secondary effects, which is the state's rationale for sections 573.525 to 573.537, exists independent of any comparative analysis between sexually oriented and nonsexually oriented businesses. Additionally, the state's interest in regulating sexually oriented businesses extends to preventing future secondary effects of current or future sexually oriented businesses that may locate in the state.

§ 573.525.2(3). The Act states that its purpose is to provide "content-neutral" time, place and manner or comparable restrictions on sexually oriented businesses so as to limit their secondary effects; therefore, it is subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny.

The businesses assert, however, that the second of the three sentences of section 2(3) of the Act's preamble, just quoted, reveals that the true purpose of the Act is not to regulate but rather to suppress sexually oriented speech. That sentence states that the government's "substantial interest in suppressing the secondary effects [associated with sexually-oriented businesses], which is the state's rationale for sections 573.525 to 573.537, exists independent of any comparative analysis between sexually oriented and nonsexually oriented businesses." § 573.525.2(3). The businesses argue that this is an admission that the Act is intended to suppress sexually oriented speech.

The businesses misread the above sentence. It does not state that the legislature adopts the Act regardless of whether it will reduce secondary effects. The sentence is in a series of paragraphs in which the legislature specifically finds that sexually oriented businesses do have negative secondary effects, in which it lists such effects, and in which it says the purpose of the enactment is to reduce such secondary effects.

In the sentence in question, the legislature makes clear that the State's substantial interest in reducing these secondary effects is sufficient to support the legislation. In so doing, it rejects the position of opponents of the legislation that to regulate sexually oriented businesses it must show that such businesses have more substantial secondary effects than do other businesses. Regardless of whether other businesses also have secondary effects, the legislature said, it found that negative secondary effects are associated with sexually oriented businesses and a desire to reduce those effects is the basis for this legislation.

[15] [16] This determination was within the General Assembly's legislative prerogative. 202 A legislature is free to and does regulate all sorts of businesses through all sorts of health and safety laws. Indeed, such laws take up many chapters of the Missouri statutes. [5] The legislature is not required to undertake comparative studies before enacting such laws. To the contrary, it is well-settled that a legislative body may choose which evil to regulate first and "need not strike at all evils at the same time or in the same way." Semler v. Oregon State Bd. of Dental Examiners, 294 U.S. 608, 610, 55 S.Ct. 570, 79 L.Ed. 1086 (1935). In large part for this reason, numerous cases have recognized that the fact that other, less-regulated businesses may also have negative secondary effects does not make regulating sexually oriented businesses "arbitrary, discriminatory, or unreasonable." Peek–A–Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee Cnty., No. 8:05–CV–1707, 2009 WL 4349319, *6 (M.D.Fla. Nov. 25, 2009), aff'd 630 F.3d 1346 (11th Cir.2011); accord, Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. v. Fulton Cnty., 596 F.3d 1265, 1281 (11th Cir.2010). This Court agrees.

5 See, e.g., chapter 311, Liquor Control Laws; chapter 292, Health and Safety of Employees; chapter 196, Food, Drugs, and Tobacco; chapter 572, Gambling.

[17] The businesses also argue that certain statements of a member of the General Assembly disparaging sexually-oriented businesses demonstrate the legislature's intent to suppress sexually oriented speech. This contention ignores the well-settled principle that "[a court] will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive.... What motivates one legislator to make a speech about a statute is not necessarily what motivates scores of others to enact it, and the stakes are sufficiently high for us to eschew guesswork." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 384, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Therefore, assuming one member of the General Assembly sought to suppress sexually oriented speech based on its content, that motive cannot be imputed to the legislature.

For the foregoing reasons, the Act properly is reviewed as a content-neutral restriction on speech; therefore, it is subject to intermediate scrutiny.

B. Test for Determining Whether the Act Places Reasonable Time, Place and Manner Restrictions on Speech

Having determined that the legislative restrictions on sexually oriented businesses in question are aimed at the negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented activity rather than on restricting the speech itself, this Court turns to whether the restrictions meet the other two requirements of Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–48, 106 S.Ct. 925, by determining whether they constitute time, place and manner restrictions rather than a total ban on protected speech and whether they are designed to serve a substantial government interest and leave open alternative avenues of communication.

The restrictions that the businesses ask this Court to strike down are: (1) a no-contact requirement; (2) a six-foot buffer requirement; (3) a ban on nude dancing in public; (4) an alcohol ban; (5) an hours-of-operation restriction; and (6) an open-booth requirement. See § 573.531.

These restrictions, except for the nudity ban, are all on their face time, place and manner restrictions. [6] While the nudity ban bars nudity entirely, for reasons discussed further below, the United States 203 Supreme Court has held that bans on nudity are to be examined under the same evidentiary standard as that applied to time, place and manner restrictions. City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 297, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). Therefore, the validity of all of these restrictions will rise or fall based on whether the government has reasonably relied on evidence establishing the restrictions are designed to serve a substantial government interest.

6 Further, the businesses do not allege that the restrictions are a total ban on speech.

[18] [19] [20] The United States Supreme Court clarified the method for determining whether restrictions on sexually oriented businesses meet this standard in Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). The government has the initial burden of showing that it relied on "evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728, quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Little evidence is required to meet this initial burden. Id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). The evidence does not need to be directly related to the government's rationale as long as it "fairly supports" the rationale. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Furthermore, the government "need not 'conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by [other government entities]' to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects, 'so long as whatever evidence the [government] relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the [government] addresses.' " Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382, quoting, Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. If the government finds it is reasonable to rely on prior judicial opinions that uphold similar restrictions and those opinions fairly support its enactments, that is sufficient to meet this standard. Id.

[21] [22] In addition, in reviewing the government's evidence, courts must show deference to the legislature's superior knowledge of the negative secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451–52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) ("[t]he Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion"). Finally, although the initial burden is slight and the government's findings are entitled to deference, the government cannot rely on "shoddy data or reasoning" to satisfy its burden. Id. at 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

[23] If the government meets its initial burden, the burden shifts to the challenger to "cast direct doubt on [the government's] rationale, either [1] by demonstrating that the [government's] evidence does not support its rationale or [2] by furnishing evidence that disputes the [government's] factual findings." Id. (emphasis added). This type of direct doubt must be cast on every rationale the government used to justify its restrictions. SOB, Inc. v. Cnty. of Benton, 317 F.3d 856, 863 (8th Cir.2003); World Wide Video of Washington, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186, 1196 (9th Cir.2004).

This is a heavy burden. To understand it better, it is helpful to understand what the test does not require and what evidence is not sufficient to meet the challenger's burden. It is not the usual burden-shifting test used by courts to determine which side will prevail under a preponderance of the evidence test. This is because the issue for First Amendment purposes is not whether a court would find the challenger's evidence on this issue 204 more persuasive than that relied on by the legislature. The government has to show only that the legislature relied on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to establish a connection between its restrictions and the suppression of negative secondary effects. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion).

[24] [25] [26] In determining whether the government has made such a showing, neither this Court nor any court has the right to reweigh the evidence relied on by the legislature. G.M. Enterprises, Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639–40 (7th Cir.2003). The court will not look to see whether the challenger has shown an issue of fact exists as to whether the statute's provisions will limit secondary effects. To the contrary, the question is whether the challenger has cast direct doubt on the government's rationale—here the prevention of secondary effects—either by demonstrating that the evidence does not support its rationale that the restrictions will limit secondary effects or by demonstrating that, while it appears to do so, the evidence is faulty and does not in fact support the legislature's factual findings. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). To meet this burden, challengers cannot simply make conclusory generalized allegations in their pleadings that the restrictions are invalid or are aimed at speech. They must discredit all rationales offered. Unsystematic or anecdotal evidence, or evidence that merely attacks one type of evidence (such as a lack of controlled studies), would not be enough to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence. Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox Cnty., 555 F.3d 512, 527–28 (6th Cir.2009).

[27] [28] If the challenger fails to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence, the intermediate scrutiny test of Renton and Alameda Books is satisfied and the government will have established that the legislation is designed to serve a substantial government interest. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). In such cases, there is no need for an evidentiary hearing such as the businesses say was required here. Only if the challenger succeeds in casting direct doubt on the government's evidence in either manner described above does "the burden shift [ ] back to the [government] to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

The Court thus turns to the issues of whether the government met its initial burden and whether the challenger businesses cast direct doubt on the government's rationale.

C. Reliance by Legislature on Evidence Reasonably Believed to be Relevant

The legislature based its adoption of the provisions now under attack on evidence introduced at legislative hearings. At those hearings, proponents and opponents of the legislation presented voluminous evidence supporting their disparate positions. The State attached to and incorporated in its pleadings the full legislative record of evidence offered both by those supporting and opposing adoption of the Act. That evidentiary record included: (1) judicial opinions; (2) crime, land use and health impact reports; (3) expert testimony; and (4) anecdotal evidence. All of this evidence was appropriately before the trial court for consideration in determining whether the government met its initial burden and whether the challengers undercut it. Rule 55.12; Gould v. Missouri State Bd. of Registration for Healing Arts, 841 S.W.2d 288, 290 (Mo.App.1992).

This Court has reviewed this evidence (as well as additional evidence offered in 205 the trial court below), in determining whether the government met its burden of showing that the legislature relied on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to reducing negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses in enacting the provisions now challenged and whether the businesses have cast direct doubt on the government's evidence so as to preclude the entry of judgment on the pleadings. [7]

7 The businesses did not attach any evidence to their initial petition; however, they did attach additional evidence to motions submitted to the trial court. Although this evidence was included in the appellate record, the parties disagree as to whether the evidence was properly before the trial court and included in the record. See Castle v. Castle, 642 S.W.2d 709, 711 (Mo.App.1982). Because this Court finds that consideration of the evidence offered by the businesses in the trial court does not change this Court's resolution of the issues before it, this Court need not resolve the parties' disagreement as to whether this evidence was properly before the trial court.

In so doing, this Court looks at the evidence supporting and casting direct doubt on the particular provisions under attack, rather than taking the challengers' invitation to determine simply whether this Court believes that the challengers have shown that there may be equal or better ways to regulate secondary effects in general. This follows from the fact, noted above, that a challenger of a statute regulating sexually oriented businesses must cast direct doubt on every rationale the government used to justify each separate challenged provision. SOB, Inc., 317 F.3d at 863; World Wide Video, 368 F.3d at 1196.

Here, the legislature believed that the approaches it adopted would assist the State in ameliorating the negative secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses including, "personal and property crimes, prostitution, potential spread of disease, lewdness, public indecency, obscenity, illicit drug use and drug trafficking, negative impacts on surrounding properties, urban blight, litter, and sexual assault and exploitation." § 573.525.2(1). Therefore, this Court will look at each restriction and determine whether the legislature reasonably relied on evidence establishing a connection between the restriction and one or more of these negative secondary effects.

1. The challengers failed to cast direct doubt on evidence the legislature reasonably relied on regarding negative secondary effects of the open-booth, no-touch and six-foot buffer restrictions.

[29] The government relied on a number of types of evidence to support the provisions of the Act requiring open booths and establishing a requirement that patrons not touch or come within six feet of the dancers. [8] This evidence included a 206 study from Tucson, Arizona, documenting the unsanitary conditions in closed booths. The Tucson study found that of the dozens of samples collected from closed booths in ten different sexually oriented businesses more than 88 percent contained semen. The government also relied on testimony from health department officials in Missouri describing the health problems associated with sexually oriented businesses. Among other issues, the officials discussed that people infected with sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV, frequent sexually oriented businesses, and often engage in anonymous and unprotected sex.

8 Section 573.531 states in regard to these restrictions:

No employee shall knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appear in a semi-nude condition unless the employee, while semi-nude, shall be and remain on a fixed stage at least six feet from all patrons and at least eighteen > inches from the floor in a room of at least six hundred square feet.

>
> No employee, who appears in a semi-nude condition in a sexually oriented business, shall knowingly or intentionally touch a patron or the clothing of a patron in a sexually oriented business.
>
> A sexually oriented business, which exhibits on the premises, through any mechanical or electronic image-producing device, a film, video cassette, digital video disc, or other video reproduction, characterized by an emphasis on the display of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas shall comply with the following requirements:
>
> (1) The interior of the premises shall be configured in such a manner that there is an unobstructed view from an operator's station of every area of the premises, including the interior of each viewing room but excluding restrooms, to which any patron is permitted access for any purpose;
>
> (2) An operator's station shall not exceed thirty-two square feet of floor area;
>
> (3) If the premises has two or more operator's stations designated, the interior of the premises shall be configured in such a manner that there is an unobstructed view of each area of the premises to which any patron is permitted access for any purpose from at least one of the operator's stations;
>
> (4) The view required under this subsection shall be by direct line of sight from the operator's station;
>
> (5) It is the duty of the operator to ensure that at least one employee is on duty and situated in an operator's station at all times that any patron is on the portion of the premises monitored by such operator station; and
>
> (6) It shall be the duty of the operator and of any employees present on the premises to ensure that the view area specified in this subsection remains unobstructed by any doors, curtains, walls, merchandise, display racks, or other materials or enclosures at all times that any patron is present on the premises.

In addition to studies and testimony, the government relied on judicial opinions, including Bamon Corp. v. Dayton, 923 F.2d 470, 473 (6th Cir.1991), and DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 410–11 (6th Cir.1997). These opinions found, based on testimony from police officers and other government officials, that closed booths and touching or close proximity between dancers and patrons led to unsanitary conditions and the spread of disease.

The United States Supreme Court has held that in meeting its initial evidentiary burden a legislature may reasonably rely on studies, anecdotal evidence and judicial opinions of the type relied on by the Missouri legislature in adopting restrictions on sexually oriented businesses. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382. This is true regardless of whether, as here, some of the evidence concerned other locations and other statutes in other states. The legislature "need not 'conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by [other government entities]' to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects, 'so long as whatever evidence the [government] relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the [government] addresses.' " Id., quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. As a result, this Court finds the State met its initial burden and the burden shifted to the businesses to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence about closed booths, no-touch policies and buffer zones.

[30] To support their challenge to the Act generally, the businesses principally relied on Dr. Linz. Dr. Linz's testimony and studies concerned whether the legislature had chosen the best method of attacking negative secondary effects, and argued that the alleged deleterious effects of sexually oriented businesses on crime and property values are overblown or unsupported, and that such businesses cause no more crime in surrounding areas than do 207 various other types of businesses.[9] But, even had the legislature given credit to Dr. Linz's views, the evidence in support of its open-booth, buffer zone and no-touching requirements was equally based on evidence that such restrictions would improve sanitation and health within sexually oriented businesses and reduce opportunities for prostitution and other crimes in those businesses. Dr. Linz's views and studies about crime and property values in surrounding areas were not directed toward these issues and could not and did not cast direct doubt on the government's evidence related to health concerns.

9 Dr. Linz's testimony and studies are discussed thoroughly below in section IV.B.3.

[31] The businesses also offered various affidavits from dancers and business owners. While some of this anecdotal evidence provided alternative views as to whether sexually oriented businesses present health or safety concerns, they simply offered an alternative viewpoint that at best would have supported an alternative conclusion. As set out above, that is not enough. The businesses needed to cast direct doubt on all of the legislature's rationales for adopting these provisions. See SOB, Inc., 317 F.3d at 863. Their evidence largely failed to address, much less cast direct doubt on, the government's rationale for believing that there were health and safety issues that could reasonably be ameliorated by the open-booth, no-touch and six-foot buffer provisions of the Act. As a result, the challengers failed to meet their burden of proof of casting "direct doubt" to shift the burden of proof back to the government. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The trial court did not err in granting judgment on the pleadings as to these provisions.

2. The nudity ban is valid under the evidentiary standard from Renton and Alameda Books.

[32] [33] The nudity ban, unlike the others provisions in the Act at issue on this appeal, is a restriction on expressive conduct in the form of a total ban on nudity in sexually oriented businesses rather than a time, place or manner restriction on such nudity. [10] The United States Supreme Court held in O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, that such a restriction on expressive conduct is valid if: "[1] it is within the constitutional power of the [g]overnment; [2] if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; [3] if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and [4] if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest."

10 The nudity ban states, "No person shall knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appear in a state of nudity." § 573.531.3.

Thereafter, in 1986, the Supreme Court in Renton adopted a slightly different test, for time, place and manner restrictions. As described above, that test, as modified by Alameda Books, requires the government to show initially that the legislature reasonably relied on evidence that the legislative restrictions would serve the substantial government interest in suppressing the negative secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). If the government meets this requirement, the burden then shifts to the challengers and, unless they can cast direct doubt on the government's evidence, the evidentiary standard from Renton is met. Id.

In 208 Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), the Supreme Court held that because both tests focus on whether the legislation furthers an important governmental interest, the O'Brien test "in the last analysis is little, if any, different from the standard applied to time, place, or manner restrictions." Ward, 491 U.S. at 797–98, 109 S.Ct. 2746, quoting Clark v. Cmty. for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). Then, in Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382, the Supreme Court held that because of the similarities between the tests, the evidentiary test from Renton controls in the case of nudity bans, as it does in the case of time, place and manner restrictions. Accord, Peek–A–Boo Lounge, 630 F.3d at 1354–55. As a result, this Court will apply the evidentiary standard from Renton to the nudity ban in this case.

In the present case, the legislature principally relied on Supreme Court decisions, as well as numerous federal courts of appeals decisions, upholding nudity bans similar to the one at issue in this case, including Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289–90, 120 S.Ct. 1382. In Pap's A.M., the Supreme Court ruled that nude dancing is a form of expressive conduct, but that it "falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Therefore, while a public nudity ban "has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, [dancers] are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings [and][a]ny effect on the overall expression is de minimis." Id. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382.

The Supreme Court went on to uphold the ban. To support its judgment, it relied almost entirely on citations to its prior opinions in Renton, Young v. Am. Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), which found a connection between sexually oriented businesses and negative secondary effects. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Pap's A.M. also credited the city of Erie's reliance on its city council's first-hand knowledge of the negative secondary effects associated with nude dancing in public. Id. at 297–98, 120 S.Ct. 1382. The Court found it inconsequential that Renton and American Mini Theatres dealt with zoning ordinances rather than a nudity ban, holding that "it was reasonable for Erie to conclude that ... nude dancing was likely to produce the same secondary effects. And Erie could reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in Renton and American Mini Theatres." Id. (emphasis added).

Other cases decided by the Supreme Court and numerous federal courts of appeals similarly have affirmed nudity bans in reliance on Pap's A.M. and the cases it cited. See, e.g., Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); Daytona Grand Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d 860, 873–76 (11th Cir.2007); Peek–A–Boo Lounge, 630 F.3d at 1355–56. This makes sense, for once the Supreme Court has determined that a nudity ban is a reasonable exercise of government authority in this area, it would be pointless to require governments to relitigate this issue in individual cases. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451–53, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

The legislature also reviewed anecdotal evidence describing the health concerns related to nude dancing. For instance, the legislature heard from a former dancer who explained that dancers constantly rub against stripper poles and lay on the floor and that performing these actions while completely nude leaves their bodies exposed 209 to bacteria, contributing to the spread of disease. This testimony may have caused particular concern in light of a report from Jefferson County, Missouri, in which a health worker discussed the high and increasing incidence of hepatitis, a virus that often is spread through contact with the body fluids of others.

As the analysis above shows, in enacting the nudity ban, the legislature relied on precedent from the Supreme Court and numerous United States courts of appeals as well as anecdotal evidence describing the health concerns related to nude dancing. The businesses did not offer any evidence casting direct doubt on Pap's A.M. or any of the other cases relied on by the State, nor did they cast doubt on the government's anecdotal evidence concerning the health problems associated with nude dancing. As a result, the businesses failed to meet their burden of casting direct doubt on the government's evidence; therefore, the trial court properly granted judgment on the pleadings as to this statutory provision.

3. Ban on Alcohol Use and Restriction on Hours of Operation.

[34] The government relied on a variety of evidentiary sources to justify the alcohol ban and hours-of-operation restrictions on sexually oriented businesses,[11] including numerous United States courts of appeals opinions upholding both alcohol bans and hours restrictions. For example, in Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702 (7th Cir.2003), the challenger claimed that the government did not meet its evidentiary burden because it failed to provide reports showing that serving alcohol aggravated the secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. Id. at 724–26. The Seventh Circuit relied on LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, in rejecting the challenger's claim.[12] LaRue found that it was reasonable for the government to conclude that alcohol and erotic dancing should not be combined. Id. at 118, 93 S.Ct. 390. Ben's Bar explained that the government reasonably could rely on LaRue in determining that "barroom nude dancing was likely to produce adverse secondary effects at the local level, even in the absence of specific studies on the matter." 316 F.3d at 725–26.

11 The restrictions state, "No operator shall allow or permit a sexually oriented business to be or remain open between the hours of 12:00 midnight and 6:00 a.m. on any day. No person shall knowingly or intentionally sell, use, or consume alcoholic beverages on the premises of a sexually oriented business." §§ 573.531.8–9.

12 Although LaRue upheld the liquor ban using a rational basis analysis, a later Supreme Court case dealing with restrictions on advertising alcohol, 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 134 L.Ed.2d 711 (1996), referenced American Mini Theatres and Barnes, which dealt with adult entertainment restrictions analyzed under intermediate scrutiny. Numerous United States courts of appeals cases have held that Liquormart's reference to the earlier cases "makes clear that the [Supreme] Court is of the opinion that adult > entertainment liquor regulations, like the ones at issue in LaRue, will pass constitutional muster even under the heightened intermediate scrutiny tests outlined in [American Mini Theatres and Barnes]." Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 712–713; Giovani Carandola Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507, 513 n. 2 (4th Cir.2002).

The legislature also relied on Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831 (7th Cir.2000), to support its hours-of-operation restriction. Schultz upheld a far more restrictive provision requiring sexually oriented business to close between midnight and 10 a.m. Monday through Saturday and all day Sunday. Id. at 846. The Seventh Circuit held that the restriction was valid because the government reasonably relied on secondary effects studies showing a 210 connection between sexually oriented businesses and crime as well as legislative research suggesting that operating sexually oriented businesses at night strained the limited overnight resources of the local police. Schultz, 228 F.3d at 846; see also Flanigan's, 596 F.3d 1265 (upholding alcohol ban); BZAPS, Inc. v. City of Mankato, 268 F.3d 603 (8th Cir.2001) (same); Andy's Restaurant & Lounge, Inc. v. City of Gary, 466 F.3d 550 (7th Cir.2006) (upholding hours restriction); Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 526 F.3d 291 (6th Cir.2008) (same).

As with the nudity ban, in deciding to enact its alcohol and hours-of-operation limitations, the legislature was entitled to and did rely on prior cases finding alcohol and late hours of operation are associated with negative secondary effects.

The legislature also relied on extensive anecdotal evidence of conditions inside sexually oriented businesses that the legislature could find would be improved by its restrictions. In addition to the evidence already noted, this included evidence from the firsthand experiences of dozens of strippers and former strippers who recounted the drug use, prostitution and sexual abuse they frequently faced inside of sexually oriented businesses. For instance, strippers described how men grabbed their breasts, buttocks and genitals in the sexually oriented businesses and how some of their bosses would force them to engage in prostitution with the customers.

The businesses did nothing to challenge the government's reliance on the above cases and anecdotal evidence. Accordingly, it stands unchallenged.

Instead, the businesses attacked the government's additional reliance on dozens of studies showing a connection between sexually oriented businesses and increased crime and lower property values. Some of these studies also found that alcohol and late-night operating hours contributed to these negative secondary effects. For instance, a study from Dallas, Texas, found that operating late at night contributed to the crime risk by encouraging loitering, which attracted prostitutes. In another study, conducted by the American Center for Law and Justice, researchers found that alcohol service increased the negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. The government also relied on expert testimony from Dr. McCleary, who found that criminological theory predicted alcohol would increase crime at sexually oriented businesses by lowering patrons' inhibitions, thereby making them more susceptible to predatory criminals.

The businesses sought to cast direct doubt on this evidence in a number of ways. First, they submitted affidavits from Missouri residents, and even from a former agent of the Missouri Division of Alcohol and Tobacco Control, recounting their beliefs that sexually oriented businesses do not cause harmful secondary effects. In addition, they offered affidavits from other dancers, sexually oriented business owners and neighboring residents, who said they believed that sexually oriented businesses provide high-paying, stable jobs and help maintain well-kept safe communities.

[35] The legislature was free to rely on the businesses' anecdotal evidence in deciding whether to adopt one or more of the proposed restrictions on sexually oriented businesses, but it found the contrary evidence more persuasive. This it was entitled to do. As the Sixth Circuit noted in Richland Bookmart, simply offering conflicting anecdotal evidence cannot meet the challenger's burden of casting direct doubt on the government's evidence because 211 such evidence "suggests merely that the [legislature] 'could have reached a different conclusion during its legislative process' with regard to the need to regulate ... sexually oriented businesses." 555 F.3d at 527–28, quoting, Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 881. "[E]vidence suggesting that a different conclusion is also reasonable does not prove that the [legislature's findings] were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable." Id. This is because the government "does not bear the burden of providing evidence that rules out every theory ... that is inconsistent with its own." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). It merely has to show that it relied on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to establishing a connection between the Act and the suppression of negative secondary effects. Id. at 437–38, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

[36] The businesses also relied on testimony, studies and an affidavit from Dr. Linz to try to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence about the need to ban alcohol in and restrict the hours of sexually oriented businesses. Dr. Linz claimed that many of the studies were not scientifically sound because they were not based on empirical studies comparing the incidence of crime and the change in property values between areas with sexually oriented businesses and areas with other types of late-night businesses. He believes that such empirical studies are necessary to get a true picture of the effect of sexually oriented businesses, and he says that his studies show that other businesses cause at least as much crime and lowering of property values as do sexually oriented businesses. Similarly, Dr. Linz also argues that, while the studies relied on by the State do show a correlation between sexually oriented businesses and crime and reduced property values in the areas surrounding sexually oriented businesses, the correlation is not significant and it is unclear that sexually oriented businesses caused these negative effects because the studies used improper control groups, limited measuring times and non-random surveys. Basically, he argues that the studies did not meet the standards required of controlled scientific studies.

While it is evident that Dr. Linz would require such empirical and controlled studies before adopting statutory provisions similar to those in the Act, the legislature made it clear in the very sentence discussed in section IV.A. above that it rejected Dr. Linz's belief that such comparative studies are necessary, stating:

> [the government's] substantial interest in suppressing the secondary effects [associated with sexually oriented businesses], which is the state's rationale for sections 573.525 to 573.537, exists independent of any comparative analysis between sexually oriented and nonsexually oriented businesses.

§ 573.525.2(3). This the legislature was free to do, for the United States Supreme Court itself has stated that such empirical or scientific studies are simply unnecessary. It rejected a similar suggestion that empirical evidence that a particular approach will work must be offered before the legislature may enact restrictions on sexually oriented businesses, stating "[the dissent] asks the [government] to demonstrate, not merely by appeal to common sense, but also with empirical data, that its ordinance will successfully [reduce secondary effects]. Our cases have never required [the government] to make such a showing ...." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (emphasis added).

[37] The Supreme Court's refusal to require empirical studies follows from its belief that the government should be given 212 a "reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions" to the problems caused by sexually oriented businesses. Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Such experimentation is not possible if the government first must study empirical data and make controlled comparisons before it can even undertake the experiment. Therefore, the Supreme Court has held that it is reasonable for a legislature to enact a statute that is supported merely "by appeal to common sense." The government does not need to conclusively prove that its restrictions will reduce negative secondary effects, but only that the evidence "fairly supports" the rationale for the legislation. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437–40, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion).

The Eleventh Circuit relied on these principles in Peek–A–Boo Lounge. It found insufficient the challenger's criticisms of the government's studies based on allegedly inadequate control groups, sample sizes, length of data study and lack of empirical data, stating that the government is not precluded from relying on studies that do not use the scientific method. Peek–A–Boo Lounge, 630 F.3d at 1359.

In addition to criticizing the government's studies, Dr. Linz also presented his own studies that he believed affirmatively showed little or no correlation between sexually oriented businesses and increased crime. While the legislature was free to accept this evidence, the fact that Dr. Linz so firmly believes it to be true does not mean the legislature also must accept it. For instance, Dr. McClearly noted that many of Dr. Linz's studies just measure the number of 911 calls originating from different areas and conclude that sexually oriented businesses did not cause an increase in such calls. The crimes caused by sexually oriented businesses, however, are often so-called victimless crimes such as prostitution and drug dealing. These crimes rarely are reported because there is no "victim" to report the crime. See Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d at 882–83 (questioning experts' studies that relied on 911 call data because "many crimes do not result in calls to 911 ... especially ... for crimes, such as lewdness and prostitution"). Therefore, a lack of additional 911 calls would not necessarily mean such "victimless" crimes were not occurring, particularly in the face of the substantial anecdotal evidence and other studies mentioned earlier showing there was such a connection.

To the extent that Dr. Linz's studies and criticisms were valid, they at best show that the legislature could have reached a different conclusion about the connection between sexually oriented businesses and crime and property values. As repeatedly noted, however, this is not sufficient to cast direct doubt on the government's evidence because "evidence suggesting that a different conclusion [about the relationship between the government's restriction and negative secondary effects] is also reasonable does not prove that the [government's] findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable." Richland Bookmart, 555 F.3d at 527–28.

This principle has particular application here, for Dr. Linz's criticisms and studies addressed only his belief that sexually oriented businesses do not lead to greater neighborhood crime or to a loss of property value. His evidence did not address and so did not cast direct doubt on the legislature's adoption of such measures to attack crime, health, prostitution and drug issues within the businesses themselves based on the prior cases, anecdotal reports and specific studies relied on by the legislature. The trial court did not err in granting judgment on the pleadings as to 213 the alcohol and hours-of-operation restrictions.

4. Proportionality Test

[38] Finally, the businesses argue that even if the government met its evidentiary burden under Renton and Alameda Books, the Act is nevertheless unconstitutional under the proportionality test established by Justice Kennedy's controlling concurrence in Alameda Books. [13]

13 Justice Kennedy's concurrence provided the crucial fifth vote in Alameda Books, and because it was the narrowest opinion, it is controlling under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977). Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa Cnty., 336 F.3d 1153, 1161 (9th Cir.2003).

The proportionality test arose from Justice Kennedy's concern that the plurality's analysis in Alameda Books did "not address how speech will fare under the [statute]." 535 U.S. at 449–50, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Justice Kennedy explained that the government is not permitted to reduce secondary effects by the simple expedient of reducing the amount of protected speech that occurs, even though it may be logical to assume that fewer sexually oriented businesses will mean fewer customers and so fewer secondary effects. Id. Therefore, courts should look to whether the statutes in question leave "the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Id.

The businesses claim that the Act violates this principle because its restrictions have caused sexually oriented businesses' revenue to decline, forcing many to close, thereby substantially reducing the quantity of sexually oriented speech. The businesses' overread Justice Kennedy's concurring opinion. He did not state that the government could not adopt any statute that reduced patronage of sexually oriented businesses or affected their income. He said that a legislature could not adopt statutes that were effective in reducing secondary effects only because they reduced the opportunities for speech, such as by barring more than a certain number of businesses from locating in a community without there being alternative locations for such speech. For this reason, some courts have questioned whether Justice Kennedy's proportionality test has any logical application at all where, as here, the restrictions at issue do not relate to zoning but instead pertain to the clothing and activities within the business itself. See, e.g., Fantasy Ranch, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 459 F.3d 546, 562 (5th Cir.2006); Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa Cnty., 336 F.3d 1153, 1162 (9th Cir.2003).

In any event, even if applicable, it is evident that Justice Kennedy's concern was with protecting opportunities to engage in the protected aspects of speech at issue in sexually oriented businesses, not with protection of the economic interests of adult businesses in and of themselves by permitting unprotected conduct to occur at the location of the expressive speech.

[39] Indeed, at least since Renton, the Supreme Court has held that the "economic impact" of a statute regulating sexually oriented businesses is not relevant in determining whether the statute is valid under the First Amendment. 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925, quoting Young, 427 U.S. at 78, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring). The proportionality test does not affect this principle. Its concern is not with the economic impact of a statute but rather any intrinsic limitations on speech embodied in the statute. Spokane Arcade, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 75 F.3d 663, 667 (9th Cir.1996); Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 726–27 (upholding alcohol ban even though many 214 businesses would not be viable without the ability to serve alcohol).

In this case, the restrictions in question reduce negative secondary effects while "leaving the quantity and quality of speech substantially intact." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 449–50, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). The only restrictions that place intrinsic limitations on speech are the nudity ban and the hours-of-operation restriction. As previously noted, the Supreme Court has specifically stated that even if a nudity ban "has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, [dancers] are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings [and][a]ny effect on the overall expression is de minimis.' " Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382. This statement makes clear that the Supreme Court believes that nudity bans reduce negative secondary effects while placing a minimal burden on speech. The nudity ban at issue in this case is valid under the proportionality test.

Based on the evidence discussed above, the legislature reasonably determined that the overnight hours are a particularly troublesome time for sexually oriented businesses to operate; so, closing the businesses at night should substantially reduce negative secondary effects. Forcing sexually oriented businesses to close overnight, however, will not substantially reduce the quantity and availability of sexually oriented speech because such businesses still will have an ample amount of time, 18 hours a day, to convey their erotic message. 84 Video/ Newsstand, Inc. v. Sartini, 455 Fed.Appx. 541, ——, No. 09–3920, 2011 WL 3904097, at *13 (6th Cir. Sept. 7, 2011) (finding a midnight to 6 a.m. hours restriction left open ample time to convey sexually-oriented speech when the secondary effects are less severe). Because the hours-of-operation restriction, like the nudity ban, only places a minimal burden on protected speech it is valid under Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis.

The other restrictions in the Act place no intrinsic limitations on protected speech but instead restrict opportunities for conduct that does not receive First Amendment protection. Challengers concede there is no First Amendment right to touch or sit within a few feet of erotic dancers, to read books and watch movies in a closed booth, or to drink alcohol throughout the night while so doing. Instead the protected First Amendment right is to dance expressively, to read books and to view videos. The legislation does not restrict the right to engage in these protected activities directly, and its hours and nudity restrictions are minimal and reasonable for the reasons noted above. It simply prohibits such illegal and unsanitary conduct as touching dancers, sexual conduct with or without clothes, and use of closed booths for masturbation or for sex between those in adjoining booths.

As such, to the extent that the no-touch, six-foot buffer, alcohol ban and open-booth restrictions reduce patronage at sexually oriented businesses, it is not because the restrictions unduly reduce speech but because they reduce the very types of secondary effects that the government is entitled to and intends to reduce. That this reduction in secondary effects may make these businesses less appealing to some of their former patrons is not the result of the government restricting free speech but simply demonstrates that it was not speech that drew those customers to the establishments.

Protecting the economic security of these establishments by allowing its customers to engage in non-speech related activities is not protected by the First Amendment and the unprotected activities 215 are subject to reasonable government restrictions of the type at issue here. The Act places only minimal restrictions on speech and does not disproportionately limit speech.

V. CONCLUSION

As the Supreme Court stated, it is not the judiciary's "function to appraise the wisdom of [the government's] decision to [regulate] adult theaters" or other adult businesses based on such evidence. Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Instead the question is limited to (1) whether the government reasonably relied on evidence fairly supporting its rationale for regulating sexually oriented businesses; and (2) whether the challenger succeeded in casting direct doubt on the government's evidence.

In the present case, the government reasonably relied on a plethora of evidence. While the businesses attacked and sought to undermine some of this evidence, they failed to cast direct doubt on other evidence or on the government's rationale of trying to limit the negative secondary effects within the establishments themselves. For these reasons, this Court finds that the government presented at least some evidence to support the legislature's reasonable belief that the restrictions in question are designed to serve the substantial government interest in minimizing the negative secondary effects caused by sexually oriented businesses. Under the test set out by the United States Supreme Court in Renton and Alameda Books, this is sufficient to justify the legislation. As such, the Act does not violate article III of the Missouri Constitution or the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Accordingly, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

TEITELMAN, C.J., RUSSELL, BRECKENRIDGE, FISCHER and PRICE, JJ., and FRANCIS, Sp.J., concur.

DRAPER, J., not participating.

All Citations

354 S.W.3d 187

455 Fed.Appx. 541
This case was not selected for publication in the Federal Reporter.
Not for Publication in West's Federal Reporter.
See Fed. Rule of Appellate Procedure 32.1
generally governing citation of judicial decisions issued on or after Jan. 1, 2007. See also Sixth Circuit Rule 28. (Find CTA6 Rule 28)
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

84 VIDEO/NEWSSTAND, INC., dba 84 Video/Newsstand; Vine Street News, Inc., dba Adult Mart; NU Philly Video/News, Inc.; Mile, Inc., dba Lion's Den; American Pride, Inc., dba Lion's Den; Midwest Pride II, Inc., dba Lion's Den; Entertainment U.S.A. of Cleveland, Inc., dba Christie's Cabaret; Gold Restaurant, Inc., dba Gold Horse; Donna and Bato, LLC, dba Expressions; Calpal, LLC, dba Dreamgirls; NL Corp Inc., dba Diamonds Cabaret; Buckeye Association of Club Executives, Inc., Plaintiffs–Appellants,

v.

Thomas SARTINI, in his official capacity as Ashtabula County Prosecutor; Ross Cirincione, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Bedford Heights; David A. Lambros, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Brookpark; Robert Triozzi, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Cleveland; William Mason, in his official capacity as Cuyahoga County Prosecutor; Tony Geiger, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Lima; Jeurgen Waldick, in his official capacity as Allen County Prosecutor; Mike Minniear, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Milford; Robin Piper, in his official capacity as Butler County Prosecutor; Matthew E. Crall, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Bucyrus; Stanley E. Flegm, in his official capacity as Crawford County Prosecutor; David Kiger, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Jeffersonville; David B. Bender, in his official capacity as Fayette County Prosecutor; Richard C. Pfeiffer, Jr., in his official capacity as Columbus City Attorney; Ron O'Brien, in his official capacity as Franklin County Prosecutor; Donnette Fisher, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Franklin; Rachel A. Hutzel, in his official capacity as Warren County Prosecutor; Daniel G. Padden, in his official capacity as Guernsey County Prosecutor; David A. Hackenberg, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Findlay; Mark C. Miller, in his official capacity as Hancock County Prosecutor; Joseph T. Deters, in his official capacity as Hamilton County Prosecutor; Joseph R. Klammer, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Eastlake; Charles E. Coulson, in his official capacity as Lake County Prosecutor; Richard S. Bindley, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Heath; Douglas Sassen, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Newark; Kenneth W. Oswalt, in his official capacity as Licking County Prosecutor; John T. Madigan, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Toledo; Paul S. Goldberg, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Oregon; Julia R. Bates, in her official capacity as Lucas County Prosecutor; Iris Torres Guglucello, in her official capacity as Law Director of the City of Youngstown; Paul J. Gains, in his official capacity as Mahoning County Prosecutor; Kenneth Fisher, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Brunswick; Dean Holman, in his official capacity as Medina County Prosecutor; Patrick Bonfield, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Dayton; Lori E. Kirkwood, in her official capacity as Law Director for the City of West Carrollton; Mathew Heck, in his official capacity as Montgomery County Prosecutor; Charles Howland, in his official capacity as Morrow County Prosecutor; Dave Remy, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Mansfield; James Mayer, in his official capacity as Richland County Prosecutor; Toni Eddy, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Chillicothe; Michael M. Ater, in his official capacity as Ross County Prosecutor; Andrew L. Zumbar, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Alliance; Joseph Martuccio, in his official capacity as Law Director of the City of Canton; John Ferrero, in his official capacity as Stark County Prosecutor; Max Rothal, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Akron; Penelope Taylor, in her official capacity as Law Director for the City of Tallmadge; Sherri Bevan Walsh, in her official capacity as Summit County Prosecutor; Joseph T. Dull, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Niles; Dennis Watkins, in his official capacity as Trumbull County Prosecutor; Mike Johnson, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of New Philadelphia; Amanda K. Spies, in her official capacity as Tuscarawas County Prosecutor; Russ Leffler, in his official capacity as Huron County Prosecutor; Derek Diveine, in his official capacity as Seneca County Prosecutor; Terry S. Shilling, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Elyria; Dennis Will, in his official capacity as Lorain County Prosecutor; Martin Frantz, in his official capacity as Wayne County Prosecutor; Scott Hillis, in his official capacity as Law Director for the City of Zanesville; D. Michael Haddox, in his official capacity as Muskingum County Prosecutor; Stephen A. Schumaker, in his official capacity as Clark County Prosecutor; Neal M. Jamison; Peter M. Kostoff, Law Director, Defendants–Appellees, The State of Ohio, Defendant–Intervenor.

No. 09–3920.
|
Sept. 7, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Ohio sexually oriented businesses brought action against state and law directors and county prosecutors for cities, villages, and counties throughout Ohio, challenging certain regulations of their businesses as violative of the First Amendment. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio granted summary judgment to defendants, and businesses appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Helene N. White, Circuit Judge, held that statute did not violate First Amendment.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (5)

[1] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Ohio statute regulating the operation of sexually oriented businesses, which required that sexually oriented businesses close for six hours each day, did not violate First Amendment; legislature properly relied on the secondary-effects evidence before it, and such evidence was sufficient to support the hours–of–operation restriction, the restriction was unrelated to the suppression of speech, and posed only an incidental burden on First Amendment freedoms that was no greater than is essential to further the government interest in substantially reducing secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; ; Ohio R.C. § 2907.40.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Definition of "adult bookstore" in Ohio statute regulating the operation of sexually oriented businesses was not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face in violation of First Amendment; definition included not just businesses that had a "significant or substantial portion of [their] stock in trade or inventory in" adult materials, but also those that "maintain[ ] a substantial section of [their] sales or display space for" such articles. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Ohio R.C. § 2907.40(A)(1) .

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses
Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Definition of "adult cabaret" in Ohio statute regulating the operation of sexually oriented businesses was not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face in violation of First Amendment; under statutory definition, it was not enough that a venue regularly feature entertainment including nudity or sexual activity in the sense that they presented such material recurrently, rather, it had to be presented "consistent[ly]" and such entertainment had to constitute a substantial proportion of the venue's overall offerings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Ohio R.C. § 2907.40(A)(1) .

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

No-touch provision of Ohio statute regulating the operation of sexually oriented businesses, which prohibited entertainers who were nude or semi-nude from touching each other during the course of a performance, was not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face in violation of First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Ohio R.C. § 2907.40(C)(2) .

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Motion pictures, videos and games

Hours-of-operation restriction in Ohio statute regulating the operation of sexually oriented businesses applied to adult bookstores and adult video stores; statute defined sexually oriented businesses to mean an adult bookstore, adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motion picture theater, sexual device shop, or sexual encounter center, but did not include a business solely by reason of its showing, selling, or renting materials that may depict sex. Ohio R.C. § 2907.40(A)(15).

Cases that cite this headnote

544 Before: KETHLEDGE and WHITE, Circuit Judges; and BECKWITH [*], Senior District Judge.

[*] Judge Sandra S. Beckwith, Senior United States District Judge for the Southern District of Ohio, sitting by designation.

Opinion

HELENE N. WHITE, Circuit Judge.

*1 Plaintiffs 84 Video/Newsstand, Inc. et al. (Plaintiffs) appeal the district court's grant of summary judgment to Defendants Thomas Sartini, et al., (Defendants), law directors and county prosecutors for cities, villages, and counties throughout Ohio, and Defendant–Intervenor State of Ohio, in this action challenging certain regulations of sexually oriented businesses in Ohio as violative of the First Amendment. We AFFIRM.

I

On May 16, 2007, the Ohio General Assembly adopted Substitute Senate Bill 16 ("S.B. 16"), codified at Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40 (West 2010) ("the Law" or "§ 2907.40"), to regulate the operation of sexually oriented businesses. Section 2907.40 imposes two substantive restrictions on sexually oriented businesses. First, § 2907.40(B) limits hours of operation:

> No sexually oriented business shall be or remain open for business between 12:00 midnight and 6:00 a.m. on any day, except that a sexually oriented business that holds a liquor permit ... may remain open until the hour specified in that permit if it does not conduct, offer, or allow sexually oriented entertainment activity in which the performers appear nude.

Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(B). [1] Second, § 2907.40(C) adopts a so-called "no-touch" provision, limiting physical contact with and between nude or semi-nude performers:

1 Businesses that hold liquor permits in Ohio are required to close at 2:30 A.M. Therefore, a sexually oriented business with a liquor license may remain open until 2:30 only if all nude performances cease at midnight.

> (1) No patron who is not a member of the employee's immediate family shall knowingly touch any employee while that employee is nude or seminude or touch the clothing of any employee while that employee is nude or seminude.
>
> (2) No employee who regularly appears nude or seminude on the premises of a sexually oriented business, while on the premises of that sexually oriented business and while nude or seminude, shall knowingly touch a patron ... or another employee ... or the clothing of a patron ... or another employee ... or allow a patron ... or another employee ... to touch the employee or the clothing of the employee.

Id. § 2907.40(C) (ellipses in subsection (C)(2) refer to exceptions for members of employee's immediate family). Violation of § 2907.40(B) is a first-degree misdemeanor. Id. § 2907.40(D). Violation of § 2907.40(C) is a first-degree misdemeanor if the violation is achieved by touching a "specified anatomical area" [2] or clothing covering such area, and is a fourth-degree 545 misdemeanor if achieved by touching any other part of the body. Id. § 2907.40(E).

2 Section 2907.40(A)(16) defines "specified anatomical areas" as "human genitals, pubic region, and buttocks and the human female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola."

Subsection (A) of the Law defines relevant terms, including "sexually oriented business":

> an adult bookstore, adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motion picture theater, sexual device shop, or sexual encounter center, but does not include a business solely by reason of its showing, selling, or renting materials that may depict sex.

Id. § 2907.40(A)(15). Each individual type of sexually oriented business is also defined. In particular, "adult bookstore" or "adult video store" > means a commercial establishment that has as a significant or substantial portion of its stock in trade or inventory in, derives a significant or substantial portion of its revenues from, devotes a significant or substantial portion of its interior business or advertising to, or maintains a substantial section of its sales or display space for the sale or rental, for any form of consideration, of books, magazines, periodicals, or other printed matter, or photographs, films, motion pictures, video cassettes, compact discs, slides, or other visual representations, that are characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas. [3]

3 "Characterized by" is defined as "describing the essential character or quality of an item." Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(A)(4).

*2 Id. § 2907.40(A)(1). Section 2907.40(A)(2) originally provided its own definition of "adult cabaret." It was later amended to replace the original definition with a reference to the definition contained in § 2907.39. That section provides:

> "Adult cabaret" means a nightclub, bar, juice bar, restaurant, bottle club, or similar commercial establishment, whether or not alcoholic beverages are served, that regularly features any of the following:
>
> (a) Persons who appear in a state of nudity or seminudity;
>
> (b) Live performances that are characterized by the exposure of specified anatomical areas or specified sexual activities;

> (c) Films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides, or other photographic reproductions that are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas.

Id. § 2907.39(A)(3).

The stated purpose of S.B. 16 was to address the adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. The bill included legislative findings that:

> [s]exually oriented businesses, as a category of commercial uses, are associated with a wide variety of adverse secondary effects including, but not limited to lewdness, public indecency, prostitution, potential spread of disease, illicit drug use and drug trafficking, personal and property crimes, negative impacts on surrounding properties, blight, litter, and sexual assault and exploitation.

S.B. 16, 127th Gen. Assem., Reg. Sess. (Ohio 2007), § 3768.03(B)(1).[4] Prior to passage of S.B. 16, the House Judiciary Committee of the Ohio General Assembly heard testimony for and against the bill 546 and received considerable documentary evidence regarding the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. The Senate State and Local Government and Veterans Affairs Committee also considered the legislation. The Ohio General Assembly relied on a variety of sources, including: presentations providing anecdotal accounts of the adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses; summaries and full texts of studies and reports showing that adult businesses cause secondary effects; a critique of the study of one researcher who concluded that adult businesses do not cause adverse secondary effects; legal opinions from the Sixth Circuit and elsewhere upholding regulations addressing secondary effects of adult businesses; and other testimony in favor of the bill. The Legislature also heard testimony from opponents.

[4] These findings were included in the version of S.B. 16 initially passed by the Ohio General Assembly. The final legislation enacted by the Assembly that included the current language of § 2907.40 was a substitute bill. The above legislative findings do not appear in the version of Substitute S.B. 16 enacted into law.

On October 17, 2007, the day § 2907.40 went into effect, the twelve Plaintiffs filed suit seeking a temporary restraining order (TRO), preliminary injunction, permanent injunction, and declaratory judgment. The district court described the parties to the suit:

> Plaintiffs consist of three groups: (1) businesses throughout Ohio that sell adult books, magazines, videos, and DVDs ("bookstore Plaintiffs"); (2) businesses throughout Ohio that present nude or seminude adult performances to patrons ("cabaret Plaintiffs"); and (3) the Buckeye Association of Club Executives ("BACE"), a not-for-profit trade group that promotes and protects the rights of member adult bookstores and cabarets throughout Ohio.
>
> *3 Defendants consist of two groups: (1) law directors for cities and villages throughout Ohio in which Plaintiffs and BACE members are located; and (2) county prosecutors for the counties throughout Ohio in which Plaintiffs and BACE members are located. Defendants have the authority to prosecute violations of § 2907.40. Plaintiffs also served the Ohio Attorney General, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 5.1, because the case involves a question of Ohio constitutional law.

The State of Ohio intervened as a defendant on October 26, 2007.

The district court denied the motion for a TRO on October 18. The court then held a preliminary injunction hearing. At the hearing, Plaintiffs called five witnesses, including two experts: Dr. Daniel Linz, an expert on secondary-effects studies, who testified that sexually oriented businesses do not cause appreciable secondary effects and critiqued existing studies showing secondary effects; and Dr. Judith Hanna, an expert on exotic dance, who testified regarding the expressive aspects of exotic dance. Plaintiffs also offered testimony from individuals with experience operating sexually oriented businesses and submitted the declaration of Dr. Lance Freeman, in which he summarized the findings of a study concluding that the presence of an adult bookstore or adult cabaret in proximity to residential property did not depress property values.

Defendants called three witnesses who testified that sexually oriented businesses cause secondary effects, including crime: Julie Taylor Schmatz, a former exotic dancer; Louis Gentile, a private investigator; and Dr. Richard McCleary, an expert on secondary-effects studies.

The court denied Plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction on August 8, 2008. [5]

[5] Plaintiffs appealed the denial of a preliminary injunction to this court. While the appeal was pending, the district court granted summary judgment for Defendants and entered final judgment on all claims, and Plaintiffs filed the instant appeal. This court subsequently dismissed the preliminary injunction appeal on the ground of mootness and because "[t]he denial of injunctive relief has merged into the final judgment." 84 Video/Newsstand, Inc. v. Sartini, No. 08–4559 (6th Cir. filed Nov. 4, 2009).

547 While the district court proceedings were ongoing, the Ohio General Assembly amended the definition of "adult cabaret" contained in § 2907.40(A)(2), replacing the original definition with a provision incorporating by reference the definition of "adult cabaret" found in § 2907.39 of the Revised Code. Sub. S.B. No. 183, 2008 Ohio Laws 101. Plaintiffs moved for a TRO or preliminary injunction to bar implementation of this amendment. The court denied that motion in an order dated January 5, 2009. Defendants then moved for summary judgment on all Plaintiffs' claims, which the court granted on June 22, 2009. Plaintiffs timely appealed.

II

This court reviews a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Binay v. Bettendorf, 601 F.3d 640, 646 (6th Cir.2010). Summary judgment is appropriate "if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(a); see also Binay, 601 F.3d at 646. This court must draw all reasonable inferences and view all evidence in favor of the non-moving party. Binay, 601 F.3d at 646; Wuliger v. Manufacturers Life Ins. Co., 567 F.3d 787, 792 (6th Cir.2009).

*4 Plaintiffs raise a number of issues on appeal, arguing that: S.B. 16 was based on insufficient evidence that sexually oriented businesses cause certain secondary effects and is not narrowly tailored; the law's definitions of "adult bookstore or video store" and "adult cabaret" are unconstitutionally overbroad; the no-touching restriction independently violates the First Amendment; and adult bookstores and adult video stores are actually excluded from regulation by the plain language of the law. We address these arguments in order.

III

Plaintiffs first assert that Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40 violates the First Amendment because the evidence relied on by the Ohio General Assembly in passing the statute was insufficient to survive intermediate scrutiny. They further argue that the law is not narrowly tailored because it suppresses a substantial amount of speech.

A. Applicable Law

It is beyond doubt that "[n]ude dancing is a form of expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment." Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 526 F.3d 291, 298 (6th Cir.2008); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville and Davidson Cnty., 274 F.3d 377, 391 (6th Cir.2001); see also City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion) ("Nude dancing ... is expressive conduct, although we think that it falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection."). Other forms of erotic entertainment are similarly protected by the First Amendment. City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 46–47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) (affirming that adult theaters are protected by the First Amendment); Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox Cnty. (Richland Bookmart II), 555 F.3d 512, 520 (6th Cir.2009) ("[S]exually explicit but non-obscene speech, such as adult publications and adult videos" are within a "protected category of speech").

We treat regulations targeting the "secondary effects" of sexually oriented businesses as content-neutral, and assess them under intermediate scrutiny. [6] Richland 548 Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 521 & n. 2; 729, Inc. v. Kenton Cnty. Fiscal Court, 515 F.3d 485, 490–91 (6th Cir.2008).

Where a law specifically targets the secondary effects of adult businesses, this court applies the test set out in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), as interpreted by City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 523–24 ("[W]e find it prudent to conduct our analysis in terms set forth in Renton and Alameda Books—or, equivalently, to apply the O'Brien test, incorporating evidentiary standards articulated in Renton and its progeny.").

6 As this court has noted, "to some extent, the classification of restrictions on sexually explicit establishments as content-neutral is a legal fiction—but one that has been generally followed." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 521 n. 2. "Although five members of the Court abandoned the premise that such restrictions are content-neutral ... in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, [535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002),] the Court continued to apply intermediate scrutiny to laws targeting 'secondary effects.' " Id. (quoting 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 490–91).

Under the O'Brien test, courts must determine whether the legislature enacted a challenged law "(1) within its constitutional power, (2) to further a substantial governmental interest that is (3) unrelated to the suppression of speech, and whether (4) the provisions pose only an 'incidental burden on First Amendment freedoms that is no greater than is essential to further the government interest.' " Sensations, 526 F.3d at 298. On the second prong of the O'Brien test, this Circuit further applies the plurality opinion in Alameda Books, which announced a three-step burden-shifting analysis applicable to secondary-effects cases. Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 525. Under Alameda Books,

> *5 [first,] a municipality may rely on any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest. This is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. [Second, if] plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. [Third, if] plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (citations omitted); see also Sensations, 526 F.3d at 297 n. 5. Further, the legislature's evidentiary burden is slight:

> [W]e have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required. As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners.... [The government] is entitled to rely on [its local] knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion.

535 U.S. at 451–52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (citations omitted). Indeed, state and local governments "need not conduct their own studies demonstrating that adverse secondary effects result from the operation of sexually oriented businesses or that the measures chosen 549 will ameliorate these effects." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 524; see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion); id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring); Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. However, "a city may not attack secondary effects indirectly by attacking speech." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). The regulation must be aimed at secondary effects, and the government "must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Id. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

B. Section 2907.40 Survives Scrutiny Under the O'Brien Test

1. Passage of § 2907.40 Was Within the Power of the Ohio General Assembly

[1] The first question under the O'Brien test is whether enacting § 2907.40 was within the state's constitutional power. The parties do not dispute that the Ohio General Assembly had such power. This court has held that "regulating sexually oriented businesses to reduce negative secondary effects lies within the scope of a [government's] authority under the O'Brien test." Sensations, 526 F.3d at 298. Therefore, the first prong of the O'Brien test is satisfied.

2. Section 2907.40 Furthers a Substantial Government Interest

*6 The second step of the O'Brien test asks whether the legislature enacted the law "to further a substantial government interest." See Sensations, 526 F.3d at 298. Under the Alameda Books burden-shifting framework, Defendants must first show that the Ohio General Assembly relied on "evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). "It is now recognized that governments have a substantial interest in controlling adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments, which include violent, sexual, and property crimes as well as blight and negative effects on property values." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 524. Thus, our inquiry hinges on the evidence the Ohio General Assembly relied on when it passed § 2907.40. This court has held that a wide variety of sources may form a sufficient evidentiary basis at this stage, including land-use studies, prior judicial opinions, surveys of relevant professionals (such as real-estate appraisers), anecdotal testimony, police reports, and other direct and circumstantial evidence. See, e.g., Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 525; 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491–92; J.L. Spoons, Inc. v. Dragani, 538 F.3d 379, 381 (6th Cir.2008); see also City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (noting that the City of Erie was permitted to rely on prior judicial decisions and that "it was reasonable for Erie to conclude that ... nude dancing was likely to produce the same secondary effects" found in the prior decisions).

In the instant case, the Ohio General Assembly gathered a range of evidence demonstrating that sexually oriented businesses cause harmful secondary effects, including a combination of anecdotal evidence from live testimony and other submissions, press reports, land-use studies, expert reports, and prior judicial opinions. The evidence consists both of studies and cases from other jurisdictions, and of studies, cases, press reports, and anecdotal evidence from Ohio. This evidence is sufficient to demonstrate a reasonable belief on behalf of the General Assembly that sexually oriented businesses cause negative secondary effects, including certain 550 types of crime, decreased property values, and health risks, and that the proposed statute would address such effects. The burden thus shifts to Plaintiffs to show either that the evidence does not fairly support the General Assembly's rationale for the law—to combat secondary effects—or that the factual findings relied on by the General Assembly were incorrect. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

The Sixth Circuit has previously upheld regulations similar or identical to those enacted in § 2907.40. See Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 519 (upholding, without discussion, an hours-of-operation restriction); Entm't Prods., Inc. v. Shelby Cnty., 588 F.3d 372, 393–94 (6th Cir.2009) (upholding, against overbreadth challenge, a no-touching and six-foot buffer-zone requirement between entertainers and customers and between entertainers and other entertainers); Sensations, 526 F.3d at 299 (upholding no-touching rule between performers and audience members and hours-of-operation restriction); 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 490–93 (upholding requirement that entertainers must "maintain a minimum distance of five ... feet from ... customers, for a minimum of one ... hour after the entertainer appears semi-nude on the establishment's premises"); Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp. Bd. of Trs., 411 F.3d 777, 789–91 (6th Cir.2005) (en banc) (upholding an hours-of-operation limitation); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 274 F.3d 377, 396 (6th Cir.2001) (upholding regulation prohibiting physical contact between customers and entertainers); Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols (Richland Bookmart I), 137 F.3d 435, 440–41 (6th Cir.1998) (upholding hours-of-operation restriction); DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 408–13 (6th Cir.1997) (upholding a regulation prohibiting "entertainers from approaching within six feet of customers, employees, or other entertainers during a performance").

7 Nonetheless, Plaintiffs make two main attacks on the evidence underlying § 2907.40. First, they argue that testimony by their own expert, Dr. Daniel Linz, casts sufficient doubt on the secondary-effects studies relied on by the General Assembly to create a genuine issue of material fact requiring a trial. Second, Plaintiffs argue that the General Assembly's evidence of secondary effects does not support the hours-of-operation restriction in § 2907.40(B).

i. Plaintiffs' Expert Fails to Cast Doubt on the Evidence Relied on by the Ohio General Assembly

Plaintiffs argue that studies and analyses conducted by Dr. Linz substantially undermine the evidence relied on by the General Assembly At the preliminary injunction hearing, Linz testified regarding studies he conducted in cities around the country and in Toledo, Cleveland, Columbus, and Dayton, Ohio. He concluded in all these studies that sexually oriented businesses do not increase adverse secondary effects, namely crime, in surrounding areas. He also testified, as to studies conducted by other researchers, that "the methods are either so flawed or the studies so poorly conducted, that they do not, in fact, demonstrate an adverse secondary effect." Plaintiffs additionally submitted a declaration from Dr. Lance Freeman, accompanied by a study of property values in Ohio he co-authored, concluding that "the presence of an adult bookstore or adult cabaret in proximity to residential property did not lead to a decrease in property values."

Defendants offered testimony by Dr. McCleary. McCleary discussed secondary-effects studies he conducted, and explained that "in every instance, [he] ha[s] *551 been able to corroborate the theory" that sexually oriented businesses cause secondary effects. Based on his own and other researchers' studies, he testified that "it is a scientific fact that sexually-oriented businesses have crime-related secondary effect [sic], that they pose public safety hazards to their immediate environments." McCleary also directly criticized the validity of the findings of Linz's study of four Ohio cities, arguing that the underlying data did in fact demonstrate secondary effects. Linz and McCleary primarily disagreed about study methodology, including: the appropriate criteria for judging the validity of secondary-effects studies; the best way to measure the incidence of crime; the proper geographic area surrounding a sexually oriented business within which to measure crime; and the period of time a study must analyze in order to be valid.

The evidence proffered by Plaintiffs—testimony and reports of qualified experts—is indeed the type of evidence that may appropriately be used to cast doubt on the Legislature's evidence. See Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 526 (commenting that plaintiffs' evidence "is of dubious substantive import" because, "[u]nlike most plaintiffs challenging similar regulations, Plaintiffs do not introduce their own expert findings or studies" (citation omitted)); J.L. Spoons, 538 F.3d at 381–82 (describing expert testimony offered by plaintiffs at preliminary injunction hearing). The question, then, is whether the testimony of Drs. Linz and Freeman is sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the accuracy of the evidence relied on by the Legislature.

8 This court has repeatedly held that governments are not "required to demonstrate empirically that [their] proposed regulations will or are likely to successfully ameliorate adverse secondary effects." Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 524. "[E]vidence suggesting that a different conclusion [by the legislature] is also reasonable does not prove that the [government's] findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable." Id. at 527. Under Alameda Books, the touchstone is whether the legislature "reasonably believed [the evidence it relied on] to be reasonable" and whether the evidence "fairly support[s] the [legislature's] rationale" for the law. 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. A mere difference of opinion about the conclusions to be drawn from a body of evidence cannot invalidate the legislature's decision.

This court has twice decided secondary-effects cases where Dr. Linz's testimony or reports were discussed on appeal. Sensations, 526 F.3d at 295 (upholding Grand Rapids, Michigan, ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses); J.L. Spoons, 538 F.3d at 382–83 (upholding Ohio Liquor Commission Rule restricting nude dancing and sexual contact at establishments holding Liquor Control Commission permits). But neither of these cases gave more than cursory mention to Linz's testimony, and neither specifically discussed whether or to what extent Linz's evidence cast doubt on the evidence relied on by the legislature. Secondary effects cases in other circuits where Linz's testimony was introduced have split regarding the weight to be afforded that evidence. A majority of decisions have held that testimony and studies by Linz were insufficient to invalidate the legislative body's evidence. See, e.g., Imaginary Images, Inc. v. Evans, 612 F.3d 736, 747–48 (4th Cir.2010); Doctor John's v. Wahlen, 542 F.3d 787, 791–93 (10th Cir.2008); Fantasyland Video, Inc. v. Cnty. of San Diego, 505 F.3d 996, 1002 (9th Cir.2007); G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 635–36, 640 (7th Cir.2003); see also Galardi v. City of 552 Forest Park, No. 1:09–CV–965–RWS, 2011 WL 111586, at *6 (N.D.Ga. Jan.13, 2011).

Plaintiffs rely mainly on two recent Seventh and Tenth Circuit cases that credited Linz's testimony with casting doubt on the evidence supporting the government regulations. Annex Books, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, 581 F.3d 460, 461–65 (7th Cir.2009) (concluding that a showing that the city's evidence was not germane to the restrictions it enacted in combination with the presentation of a study by Linz raised a genuine issue of material fact and required remand for an evidentiary hearing); Abilene Retail No. 30, Inc. v. Bd. of Comm'rs of Dickinson Cnty., 492 F.3d 1164, 1187 (10th Cir.2007) (Ebel., J., concurring; concurrence joined by full panel as alternative ground of decision) (crediting Dr. Linz's studies and testimony with undermining the county's evidence, both by presenting five studies conducted by Linz that found no adverse secondary effects from sexually oriented businesses, and by offering testimony and a peer-reviewed article "challenging the validity of the County's studies").

*9 In this case, Linz's evidence is of two types: studies Linz conducted finding that sexually oriented businesses do not cause adverse secondary effects, and criticism of the validity of studies by other researchers that do find such effects. Linz's study of four Ohio cities is directly relevant to the central issue in this case and, if accurate, does tend to cast doubt on the Ohio General Assembly's evidence. McCleary's testimony, in turn, casts doubt on Linz's study.

We conclude that the Linz evidence in the record before us is insufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact requiring remand. This is for two reasons. First, Linz's testimony and studies fail to cast doubt on the entire body of evidence relied on by the General Assembly, including those secondary-effects studies not discussed by Linz and the significant quantity of other types of evidence relied on by the Legislature with which Linz does not engage, including prior court decisions, news reports, and anecdotal testimony by law enforcement officials and others. The legislature's evidentiary burden to justify a regulation targeted at secondary effects is slight. Here, Plaintiffs' testimony and exhibits do not show the body of that evidence as a whole to be so questionable as to undermine support for the restrictions in § 2907.40. Second, to the extent that the Linz evidence does "dispute [ ] the [government's] factual findings" at step two of the Alameda Books burden shifting test, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728, the testimony and reports by Dr. McCleary introduced at the preliminary injunction hearing were sufficient "to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies" the Ohio law in satisfaction of Alameda Books step three. Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The Linz and McCleary testimony amounts to a battle of experts who primarily disagree about study methodology. The General Assembly had before it studies by McCleary as well as a paper by McCleary critiquing Linz's methodology. The General Assembly was entitled to credit McCleary's findings as providing reasonable support for the restrictions it enacted. Even assuming that Linz's evidence, by itself, casts doubt on the Legislature's evidence, McCleary's testimony renews support for Ohio's theory of secondary effects. Thus, no genuine issue of material fact remains as to whether the Legislature properly relied on the secondary-effects evidence before it.

ii. Whether the Ohio General Assembly's Evidence was Sufficient to Support the Hours–of–Operation Restriction in § 2907.40(B)

Plaintiffs also argue that the General Assembly's evidence of secondary effects 553 does not support the hours-of-operation restriction in § 2907.40(B). This court has upheld restrictions on the hours of operations of sexually oriented businesses in several cases. See Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 519 (upholding, but not discussing, an hours-of-operation restriction); Sensations, 526 F.3d at 294, 299 (upholding prohibition against sexually oriented businesses operating between 2:00 AM and 7:00 AM); Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp. Bd. of Trs., 411 F.3d 777, 789–91 (6th Cir.2005) (en banc) (upholding regulation requiring sexually oriented businesses to close at midnight); Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols (Richland Bookmart I), 137 F.3d 435, 438, 440–

41 (6th Cir.1998) (upholding requirement that sexually oriented businesses close between midnight and 8:00 AM Monday through Saturday and all day on Sunday). Those cases gave significant deference to legislative bodies, finding that " '[r]educing crime, open sex and solicitation of sex and preserving the aesthetic and commercial character of the neighborhoods surrounding adult establishments is a substantial government interest.... It is not unreasonable to believe that such regulation of hours [of operation] ... would tend to deter prostitution' and other negative secondary effects." Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 790 (quoting Richland Bookmart I, 137 F.3d at 440) (alterations in original).

10 In this case, the General Assembly considered evidence specifically relevant to the conclusion that closing sexually oriented businesses during the early morning hours could ameliorate negative secondary effects, including prior court cases upholding such restrictions and testimony at the legislative committee hearing by a police officer with experience investigating crime at sexually oriented businesses and by a former manager of adult-entertainment establishments.[7] To rebut these legislative findings, Dr. Linz testified in district court that one of his own studies had found no support for the theory that sexually oriented businesses attract more crime during the late-night or early-morning hours than at other times. Dr. McCleary, in turn, testified that, although he knows of no studies correlating the severity of secondary effects of adult businesses to their hours of operation, there has been a significant amount of research supporting the more general proposition that "[c]rime risks for any business that's at risk goes up" at night.

7 Captain Chuck Adams of the Troy Police Department testified that most illegal activity at a strip club he had investigated occurred after midnight. That activity included open alcoholic containers in a public place, drug possession, DUIs, assault, and prostitution. David Sherman, a former regional manager of a strip-club chain, described how the incidence of illegal activity at strip clubs, including "drug dealing, solicitation, and illegal dances," increased late at night as employees and customers became more intoxicated and disinhibited.

Most of the evidence before the General Assembly that supports an hours-of-operation restriction discussed the late-night secondary effects of live-entertainment establishments, not adult bookstores and adult video stores. Nonetheless, proponents of S.B. 16 presented the General Assembly with several decisions by courts of appeals upholding such restrictions as applied to adult bookstores and video stores, including Center for Fair Public Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir.2003), from the Ninth Circuit and Richland Bookmart I from this circuit. Center for Fair Public Policy, in particular, provides support for the restriction, as it canvassed evidence, including testimony and studies from other jurisdictions, that indicated a link between secondary effects and the hours of operation of non-live- 554 entertainment adult businesses. Additionally, this circuit's opinion in Sensations, Inc. upheld a municipal ordinance limiting the hours of operation of all sexually oriented businesses, including book stores and video stores. 526 F.3d at 294, 298–99. The Ohio General Assembly relied on sufficient evidence to support passage of the law.

3. § 2097.40 is Unrelated to the Suppression of Speech

The third prong of the O'Brien test requires this court to determine whether the challenged law is in fact "unrelated to the suppression of speech." Sensations, 526 F.3d at 298. The parties do not argue that it is not. Targeting the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses is permissible under O'Brien. See, e.g., Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 585–86, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (Souter, J., concurring) ("[O]n its face, the governmental interest in combating prostitution and other criminal activity is not at all inherently related to expression."). Because the stated and unchallenged purpose of § 2907.40 is to address such secondary effects, the law survives O'Brien's third prong.

4. § 2907.40 Poses Only an Incidental Burden on First Amendment Freedoms that is No Greater than is Essential to Further the Government Interest

11 The fourth prong of the O'Brien test asks whether the restrictions "pose only an 'incidental burden on First Amendment freedoms that is no greater than is essential to further the government interest.' " Sensations, 526 F.3d at 298. Justice Kennedy's concurrence in Alameda Books sharpens this inquiry, requiring that a government "must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). In other words, "the necessary rationale for applying intermediate scrutiny is the promise that [regulations] may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech." Id. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Justice Kennedy's concurrence thus requires a proportionality analysis: a government may not seek to reduce secondary effects by reducing speech on a one-to-one basis. As he put it, "[i]t is true that cutting adult speech in half would probably reduce secondary effects proportionately. But again, a promised proportional reduction does not suffice. Content-based taxes could achieve that, yet these are impermissible." Id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728. This court has held that Kennedy's discussion on this point is binding. 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491 ("Although the Alameda Books plurality did not discuss [this] requirement, Justice Kennedy expressly said that consideration of this issue was required for his concurrence in the judgment. Justice Kennedy's opinion binds us on this point.").

Plaintiffs assert that the hours-of-operation restriction fails under this proportionality analysis because it directly reduces a substantial amount of speech. We disagree. Plaintiffs' argument proceeds in two steps: First, they posit that there is insufficient evidence that closing sexually oriented businesses between midnight and 6:00 AM would significantly curtail adverse secondary effects. Second, they argue that they have demonstrated that the hours-of-operation restriction will cause a "massive reduction in speech." Therefore, they argue, § 2907.40 seeks to reduce secondary effects by reducing the amount of speech—measured in hours of operation of the adult businesses—in direct proportion to any secondary effects ameliorated.

555 On the first point, the General Assembly did consider some evidence, including prior court cases, reports and studies from other jurisdictions and anecdotal testimony, that secondary effects of adult businesses are greater during the late night hours. As discussed above, this evidence provides sufficient basis, even if not overwhelming, to conclude that sexually oriented businesses cause secondary effects late at night that are different in severity or scope from those caused at other times of day. This conclusion is significantly bolstered by this Circuit's prior cases upholding hours-of-operation restrictions. See Richland Bookmart II, 555 F.3d at 519; Sensations, 526 F.3d at 294, 299; Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 789–91; Richland Bookmart I, 137 F.3d at 438, 440–41.

*12 On the second point, Plaintiffs offered testimony at the preliminary injunction hearing about the quantity of speech that the hours-of-operation provision would suppress, arguing that it amounts to a "massive reduction." They measured this in terms of economic effect of the law by explaining that prior to passage of § 2907.40, adult bookstores in Ohio did a significant amount of business, measured in millions of dollars per year, during the hours they will now be required to remain closed. Plaintiffs also offered evidence that "juice bars"—establishments that provides nude dancing but do not sell alcoholic beverages—generate the majority of their revenues between 11:00 P.M. to 4:00 A.M., and so may become unprofitable if subject to the law.

Evidence of a regulation's economic impact is not directly relevant to the First Amendment inquiry. See Deja Vu of Nashville, 274 F.3d at 397 ("[T]he relevant inquiry is not whether the Ordinance will cause any economic impact on the sexually oriented businesses. Although ... compliance with the Ordinance will cut into the plaintiffs' profits, the plaintiffs have failed to introduce any evidence showing that they will not have a reasonable opportunity to operate their establishments."); DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 413 ("[T]he inquiry for First Amendment purposes is not concerned with economic impact. In our view, the First Amendment requires only that [the city] refrain from effectively denying respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city." (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925)). Plaintiffs assert, however, that the evidence of lost sales during the early morning hours is indicative of the quantity of speech suppressed, and is not offered to prove loss of profits, per se. We assess this claim under Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis laid out in Alameda Books.[8] 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491. Under the 729, Inc. approach, this 556 court must ask whether the restriction leaves the "quantity and accessibility of protected speech substantially intact," id. at 492 (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 449–50, 122 S.Ct. 1728), and must ensure that it "is reasonably likely to cause a substantial reduction in secondary effects while reducing speech very little." Id. at 493, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring)).

8 The district court relied on Center for Fair Public Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir.2003), which upheld an hours-of-operation > restriction against a challenge similar to that at issue here. There, the Ninth Circuit decided that the hours-of-operation restriction was constitutional because it left open "ample alternative channels for communication." Id. at 1170 (citation omitted). The Ninth Circuit concluded that Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis, which was adopted in the context of a case involving zoning restrictions on sexually oriented businesses, was not applicable in a challenge to hours-of-operation restrictions. The court reasoned that "the application of Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis to this particular type of secondary effects law would invalidate all such laws, and we are satisfied that he never intended such a result. His proportionality requirement was simply not designed with this particular type of restriction in mind." Id. at 1163.

>
> The Ninth Circuit's reasoning is foreclosed in this Circuit by 729, Inc v. Kenton County Fiscal Court, which held that Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis is binding law in secondary effects cases. 515 F.3d at 491. Thus, the district court's reliance on Center for Fair Public Policy was misplaced.

The hours-of-operation restriction requires that sexually oriented businesses close for six hours each day (42 hours per week), leaving 18 hours per day (126 hours per week) when the businesses may remain open. This is less restrictive than the hours-of-operation restriction upheld in Richland Bookmart I, which required closure between midnight and 8:00 AM Monday through Saturday and all day on Sunday, amounting to 72 hours per week (leaving 96 hours per week when the businesses could remain open). 137 F.3d at 438, 440–41. Similarly, in Deja Vu of Cincinnati, this court upheld a regulation allowing such businesses to remain open for just "twelve hours a day, six days a week." 411 F.3d at 791; see also Sensations, 526 F.3d at 294, 299 (upholding prohibition on sexually oriented businesses operating between 2:00 AM and 7:00 AM). Under these precedents, § 2907.40 does leave the quantity of speech substantially intact.

*13 Plaintiffs argue, however, that once Justice Kennedy's proportionality analysis is correctly applied, the hours-of-operation restriction cannot be sustained because the reduction in secondary effects is small while the diminution in the availability of speech is large. With regard to the adult bookstores, this argument fails. To the extent that the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses, including adult bookstores, are more serious late at night, the closure of those businesses between midnight and 6:00 AM addresses those effects while leaving ample time—18 hours per day-when that speech remains available. Plaintiffs have not established that the hours-of-operation restriction will block a significant amount of access to speech. Individuals seeking to take advantage of these stores may do so during their remaining open hours, when the asserted secondary effects are less severe. Further, at oral argument Plaintiffs' counsel conceded that none of the adult bookstores in Ohio closed down as a result of the hours of operation restriction, indicating that the effect of the law is not as dire as feared. Plaintiffs fail to distinguish the instant case from prior Sixth Circuit cases upholding hours-of-operation restrictions, except insofar as they argue that proportionality analysis requires a different outcome on the record presented here. The record does not support such a finding.

Proportionality analysis also fails to invalidate the law with respect to adult cabarets. Plaintiffs argue that "[t]he statute destroys the juice bars' business model by forcing them to close during the very hours that the vast majority of their patrons attend the constitutionally protected performances presented at them." It is true that the premise of the law must not be that the affected businesses will close. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 450–51, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). On the other hand, the First Amendment is not concerned with economic effects. See City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 54, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 78, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (Powell, J., concurring). Juice bars are able to offer nude entertainment for 18 hours per day or, alternatively, to offer non-nude entertainment for 24 hours per day. It is not clear that if following passage of § 2907.40 juice bars can no longer successfully market their business model, the 557 overall quantity of erotic speech will have diminished. See DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 413 ("[W]e consider the economic effects of the ordinance in the aggregate, not at the individual level; if the ordinance were intended to destroy the market for adult cabarets, it might run afoul of the First Amendment, but not if it merely has adverse effects on the individual theater."); see also Deja Vu of Nashville, 274 F.3d at 397 ("Although we do not doubt that compliance with the Ordinance will cut into the plaintiffs' profits, the plaintiffs have failed to introduce any evidence showing that they will not have a reasonable opportunity to operate their establishments."). If juice bars close, erotic dancing will be able to shift more heavily toward alcohol-serving establishments providing nude and semi-nude entertainment until midnight and scantily clad entertainment after midnight. Thus, under the proportionality analysis, the restriction "is reasonably likely to cause a substantial reduction in secondary effects while reducing speech very little." 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 493. This court has upheld hours-of-operation restrictions on juice bars in cases decided after Alameda Books, and Plaintiffs do not successfully distinguish the present case. See Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 789–91.

IV

A

*14 Plaintiffs argue that the definitions of "adult bookstore [and] adult video store" and "adult cabaret" contained in § 2907.40(A)(1) and (A)(2) are unconstitutionally overbroad on their face. A law is unconstitutionally overbroad, and thus must be invalidated, when it "prohibits a substantial amount of protected speech both in an absolute sense and relative to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Entm't Prods., Inc. v. Shelby Cnty., 588 F.3d 372, 379 (6th Cir.2009) (quoting Connection Distrib. Co. v. Holder, 557 F.3d 321, 336 (6th Cir.2009) and United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 293, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008)). "Overbreadth doctrine exists to allay the concern that the threat of enforcement of an overbroad law may deter or chill constitutionally protected speech." J.L. Spoons, Inc. v. Dragani, 538 F.3d 379, 383 (6th Cir.2008). Facial invalidation of a law under the overbreadth doctrine should be sparing and careful however, Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox Cnty. (Richland Bookmart II), 555 F.3d 512, 522 (6th Cir.2009), because "there are substantial social costs created by the overbreadth doctrine when it blocks application of a law to constitutionally unprotected speech, or especially to constitutionally unprotected conduct." Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 120, 123 S.Ct. 2191, 156 L.Ed.2d 148 (2003). For this reason, "the Supreme Court has 'vigorously enforced the requirement that a statute's overbreadth be substantial.' " Entm't Prods., 588 F.3d at 379 (quoting Williams, 553 U.S. at 292, 128 S.Ct. 1830). Thus, for a law to be judged facially overbroad, Plaintiffs must "demonstrate from the text of [the statute] and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally." Id. (quoting N.Y. State Club Ass'n v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 14, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988)).

Although this standard sets a high bar, this Circuit "has not shied away from invalidating a regulatory scheme in its entirety when the threat of impermissible applications and the consequent chilling effect unambiguously warranted this remedy." Id. at 380. Such invalidation of a law on overbreadth grounds is appropriate when the language of the law is not "readily susceptible to a limiting construction." Odle v. Decatur Cnty., 421 F.3d 386, 396 (6th Cir.2005). If a law's language lends 558 itself to an interpretation that avoids unconstitutional applications, it may be upheld. However, this court will "not rewrite statutes to create constitutionality," Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129, 136 (6th Cir.1994), and so will not "accept a construction where to do so would amount to rewriting state or local law—an enterprise the federal courts are not empowered to undertake." Odle, 421 F.3d at 397 (citing Virginia v. American Booksellers Ass'n, Inc., 484 U.S. 383, 397, 108 S.Ct. 636, 98 L.Ed.2d 782 (1988)).

B. The Definition of "Adult Bookstore" Is Not Unconstitutionally Overbroad

Section 2907.40(A)(1) defines " '[a]dult bookstore' or 'adult video store' " to mean > a commercial establishment that has as a significant or substantial portion of its stock in trade or inventory in, derives a significant or substantial portion of its revenues from, devotes a significant or substantial portion of its interior business or advertising to, or maintains a substantial section of its sales or display space for the sale or rental, for any form of consideration, of books, magazines, periodicals, or other printed matter, or photographs, films, motion pictures, video cassettes, compact discs, slides, or other visual representations, that are characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description > of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas.

*15 Plaintiffs argue that this definition sweeps up businesses that deal only partially in sexually oriented materials but do not produce secondary effects, including neighborhood video stores that rent X-rated films, businesses like Borders that a have section devoted to the sale of romance novels, and drug stores, grocery stores and other retail establishments that sell adult-oriented materials such as pornographic magazines. This is so, they argue, because all of these businesses "have 'sections of [their] sales or display space' of adult materials that can easily be characterized as 'substantial.' "

[2] Plaintiffs urge that Executive Arts Studio, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 391 F.3d 783 (6th Cir.2004), dictates the result in the instant case. There, this court struck down as overbroad the following definition of adult bookstore:

> An establishment having as a substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade, books, magazines, and other periodicals [and media] which are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas," as defined herein, or an establishment with a segment or section devoted to the sale or display of such material.

Id. at 787–88 (emphasis added). It did so, however, on the basis that "establishment[s] with a segment or section devoted to the sale or display of [adult] materials" included "multiple establishments which would never be defined as adult bookstores in everyday English, such as a Walden's or Borders." Id. at 796 (emphasis added). Because there was no evidence that such businesses produced secondary effects, the definition was overbroad.

The definition in § 2907.40 is distinguishable from that at issue in Executive Arts because it does not contain the "a segment or section" language. Rather, it limits all four sub-parts of the definition with the modifier "substantial" and three sub-parts with the alternative modifier "significant." The question here, then, is whether a significant number of establishments that do not produce secondary effects (like major bookstore chains or neighborhood video stores) have a "significant or substantial portion of [their] stock in trade or inventory in, derive[ ] a significant or substantial portion of [their] revenues 559 from, devote[ ] a significant or substantial portion of [their] interior business or advertising to, or maintain[ ] a substantial section of [their] sales or display space for" materials characterized by nudity or sexual activities. Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(A)(1) (emphasis added).

Courts have upheld "significant or substantial" language against overbreadth challenges in First Amendment cases. See World Wide Video of Washington, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186, 1198–99 (9th Cir.2004) ("Cases directly addressing the phrase 'significant or substantial' in this context have upheld its validity. Moreover, this phrase is readily susceptible to a narrowing construction." (citations omitted)); Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 996–97 (7th Cir.2002) (upholding definition of "Adult Bookstore, Adult Novelty Store, and Adult Video Store as commercial establishments that, inter alia, 'derive [ ] a significant or substantial portion or [their] revenues' from Media 'characterized by the depiction or description of' nudity or sexual activities." (some internal quotation marks omitted) (alterations in original)). Courts, including this one, have also held that laws that include "significant" or "substantial" language are not unconstitutionally vague. [9] See 511 Detroit St., Inc. v. Kelley, 807 F.2d 1293, 1295–96 (6th Cir.1986); VIP of Berlin, LLC v. Town of Berlin, 593 F.3d 179, 187–88 (2d Cir.2010); Z.J. Gifts D–4, L.L.C. v. City of Littleton, 311 F.3d 1220, 1229–30 (10th Cir.2002), overruled on other grounds, 541 U.S. 774, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004).

9 Although doctrinally distinct, the Supreme Court has "traditionally viewed vagueness and overbreadth as logically related and similar doctrines." Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 358 n. 8, 103 S.Ct. 1855, 75 L.Ed.2d 903 (1983); see also Entm't Prods., 588 F.3d at 379 ("The void-for-vagueness doctrine and the overbreadth doctrine vindicate overlapping values in First Amendment jurisprudence.... When a law implicates First Amendment freedoms, vagueness poses the same risk as overbreadth, as vague laws may chill citizens from exercising their protected rights.").

*16 None of these cases, however, dealt with a definition of adult bookstore or adult video store quite the same as that adopted by the State of Ohio.[10] Section 2907.40 includes not just businesses that have a "significant or substantial portion of [their] stock in trade or inventory in" adult materials, but also those that "maintain[ ] a substantial section of [their] sales or display space for" such articles. Although the term "significant or substantial" is readily susceptible to a limiting construction, prior cases do not squarely address whether the display-space clause of § 2907.40(A)(1) is sufficiently narrow in its reach. Plaintiffs argue that major bookstores with sections of their floor space devoted to romance novels, drugstores with sections "devoted to magazines like Playboy and Penthouse" or general-interest video stores with "a separate section of adult X rated tapes" all fall within this definition. Although the record does not provide evidence regarding whether a significant number of such establishments could fairly be considered to devote a significant portion of their floor space to sexually oriented materials, a common-sense reading of the terms "significant" and "substantial" should exclude these businesses from regulation.[11]

10 State cases cited by Defendants that find "substantial or significant" language not to be overbroad similarly deal with statutory definitions somewhat narrower than Ohio's.

11 The definition at issue here is further limited by the proviso that the printed matter or visual representations featured by these businesses must be "characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas." Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(A)(1) (emphasis added). The statute defines "characterized by" as "describing the essential character or quality of an item." Id. § 2907.40(A)(4). Thus, the definition can be construed to exclude businesses that make available printed or visual media where nudity or sexual activities are not a central element. The Seventh Circuit has upheld a similar restriction against an overbreadth challenge on this reasoning. See Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 996–97 (7th Cir.2002). The "characterized by" clause in § 2907.40(A)(1) defines the contents of the printed or visual media sold, not the nature of the businesses themselves. It thus narrows the reach of § 2907.40 but does not necessarily save it from overbreadth, as it is possible that "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas" could constitute the "essential character" of X-rated videos in a neighborhood video store, romance novels, or pornographic magazines.

560 Further, to be overturned, a "statute's overbreadth [must] be substantial.' " Entm't Prods., 588 F.3d at 379 (quoting Williams, 553 U.S. at 292, 128 S.Ct. 1830). Plaintiffs have not "demonstrate[d] from the text of [the statute] and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally." Id. (quoting N.Y. State Club Ass'n v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 14, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988)). Therefore, the definition of "adult bookstore or adult video store" is not facially overbroad. Should a business like Borders or a general-interest video store (businesses that do not cause secondary effects) become subject to regulation under the law, it may challenge its regulation on an as-applied basis. See New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 773–74, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982) ("Under these circumstances, [the law] is not substantially overbroad and ... whatever overbreadth may exist should be cured through case-by-case analysis of the fact situations to which [the law's] sanctions, assertedly, may not be applied." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted) (some alterations in original)).

C. The Definition of "Adult Cabaret" Is Not Unconstitutionally Overbroad

[3] Section 2907.40(A)(2) states that "[a]dult cabaret has the same meaning as in section 2907.39 of the Revised Code." Section 2907.39(A)(3) provides:

> "Adult cabaret" means a nightclub, bar, juice bar, restaurant, bottle club, or similar commercial establishment, whether or not alcoholic beverages are served, that regularly features any of the following:
>
> (a) Persons who appear in a state of nudity or seminudity;
>
> (b) Live performances that are characterized by the exposure of specified anatomical areas or specified sexual activities;
>
> *17 (c) Films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides, or other photographic reproductions that are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas.

Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.39(A)(3) (emphasis added). "Regularly features" is defined to mean "a consistent or substantial course of conduct, such that the films or performances exhibited constitute a substantial portion of the films or performances offered as a part of the ongoing business of the adult entertainment establishment." Id. § 2907.39(A)(11). Plaintiffs argue that this definition is overbroad because it applies to "liquor permit premises and non-liquor establishments, dinner theaters and 'similar establishments' that might present serious plays and shows that involve mere depictions of sexual activity[, as well as] nightclubs of all kinds, including comedy clubs, that might include 561 performances with nudity or semi-nudity in them."

This court has upheld similar definitions of "adult cabaret" against overbreadth challenges. Entm't Prods., 588 F.3d at 381–83 (upholding definition of "adult cabaret" limited to "establishment[s] that feature as a principal use of [their] business, [employees who are nude or semi-nude]" (emphasis added)); Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 526 F.3d 291, 300 (6th Cir.2008) (in context of ordinance nearly identical to Ohio's law, upholding "a regulation banning total nudity in sexually oriented businesses" because it is "far narrower than a similar regulation [of nudity] applicable to the general public" outside the context of sexually oriented businesses that had been struck down in another case); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson Cnty., 466 F.3d 391, 397–98 (6th Cir.2006) (upholding ordinance defining sexually oriented business as one that "regularly depict[s] material which is distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting [nudity or sexual activity]"). Consistent with these cases, the "regularly features" clause of the "adult cabaret" definition in § 2907.40 limits the statute so that it does not reach a substantial number of constitutionally-protected performances. Plaintiffs have failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether businesses that do not cause secondary effects, such as dinner theaters or comedy clubs, ever "regularly feature" regulated entertainment in the sense that they present it as a "consistent or substantial course of conduct, such that the films or performances exhibited constitute a substantial portion of the films or performances offered as a part of the ongoing business of the adult entertainment establishment." Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.39(A)(11). Under this definition, it is not enough that a venue regularly feature entertainment including nudity or sexual activity in the sense that they present such material recurrently. Rather, it must be presented "consistent[ly]" and such entertainment must constitute a substantial proportion of the venue's overall offerings. This definition is sufficiently limited that it is unlikely to reach a large number of establishments that do not cause secondary effects, and thus that may not be constitutionally regulated by the law. The definition of adult cabaret is not facially overbroad.

V

*18 [4] Plaintiffs also challenge § 2907.40(C)(2) to the extent that it prohibits entertainers who are nude or semi-nude from touching each other during the course of a performance. Although Plaintiffs' brief is unclear as to the First Amendment theory under which they seek to challenge the no-touch provision, their counsel clarified at oral argument that we should analyze their argument as an overbreadth challenge.

The statute states:

> No employee who regularly appears nude or seminude on the premises of a sexually oriented business, while on the premises of that sexually oriented business and while nude or seminude, shall knowingly touch a patron ... or another employee ... or the clothing of a patron ... or another employee ... or allow a patron ... or another employee ... to touch the employee or the clothing of the employee.

Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(C)(2). The law thus prohibits any performer who is nude or seminude from touching or being touched by another performer, whether the second performer is clothed or not.

This court has twice upheld similar prohibitions on erotic performers touching each other. In DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403 (6th Cir.1997), this court upheld an ordinance providing that:

> 562 No entertainer, employee or customer shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any other [sic] on the premises during any > performance and all performances shall only occur upon a stage at least eighteen inches (18 [#]) above the immediate floor level and removed at least six feet (6#) from the nearest entertainer, employee and/or customer.

Id. at 406 (first alteration in original). The court construed the plaintiffs' argument to be that the buffer-zone requirement violated the O'Brien test. It thus did not discuss whether the ordinance violated the overbreadth doctrine. The court also did not discuss the constitutionality of the ordinance as applied to banning contact between entertainers, but rather focused on the ban on contact between entertainers and customers.

More recently, in Entertainment Productions, Inc. v. Shelby County, 588 F.3d 372 (6th Cir.2009), we addressed an overbreadth challenge to a similar statute. The statute at issue in Entertainment Productions provided: " 'No entertainer, employee, or customer shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any other on the premises during any performance,' and to that effect, 'all performances shall only occur ... removed at least six feet (6#) from the nearest entertainer, employee, or customer.' " Id. at 393 (alteration in original). The plaintiffs' overbreadth challenge asserted that the statute unconstitutionally interfered with performers' ability to convey their erotic messages through dance. We rejected this challenge, concluding that the plaintiffs failed to demonstrate a "substantial number of unconstitutional applications" of the restriction. Id. at 394.

*19 We find no meaningful basis on which to distinguish the instant case from Entertainment Productions. Although Plaintiffs here offered evidence that some physical contact between performers communicates a message and constitutes expression within the meaning of the First Amendment, the plaintiffs in Entertainment Productions made the same argument and presented proofs as well. [12] Plaintiffs here made no greater showing of a "substantial number of unconstitutional applications" of the restriction than did the plaintiffs in Entertainment Productions, and thus their overbreadth challenge must fail.

12 Dr. Judith Hanna, an expert in dance and the communicative aspects of dance, testified about the messages that exotic dance performances communicate. Joseph Hall, who works with adult cabarets, also described communicative touching between performers, including in the course of skits entered into a national competition. Dr. Hanna testified in Entertainment Productions as well.

VI

[5] Plaintiffs argue that the plain language of § 2907.40 excludes adult bookstores and video stores from the hours-of-operation restriction. The hours-of-operation restriction applies to all "sexually oriented businesses." Ohio Rev.Code Ann. § 2907.40(B). The definition of "sexually oriented business," found at § 2907.40(A)(15), includes adult bookstores and adult video stores. But that definition also includes language that, Plaintiffs argue, excludes bookstores and video stores from the statute's reach: " 'Sexually oriented business' means an adult bookstore, adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motion picture theater, sexual device shop, or sexual encounter center, but does not include a business solely by reason of its showing, selling, or renting materials that may depict sex." Id. § 2907.40(A)(15) (emphasis added).

The definition of adult bookstore and adult video store, located at 563 § 2907.40(A)(1), identifies adult bookstores and video stores by the contents of the materials they sell or rent: materials "characterized by their emphasis upon [sexual activities] or [nudity]." Plaintiffs thus point to a conflict: These businesses are defined in terms of their selling or renting materials that depict sex in § 2907.40(A)(1), but are apparently excluded from the definition of sexually oriented business on the same grounds in § 2907.40(A)(15).

"In all cases of statutory construction, the starting point is the language employed by [the legislature]." Pittsburgh & Conneaut Dock Co. v. Dir., Office of Workers' Comp. Programs, 473 F.3d 253, 266 (6th Cir.2007). "Reliance on the literal language of the statute is not justified, however, if it leads to an interpretation which is inconsistent with the legislative intent or to an absurd result." Appleton v. First Nat'l Bank of Ohio, 62 F.3d 791, 801 (6th Cir.1995). Importantly, "[c]ourts generally construe statutes in a way to avoid making provisions meaningless." Sakarapanee v. Dep't of Homeland Sec., U.S. Citizenship & Immigration Servs., 616 F.3d 595, 600 (6th Cir.2010); see also Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 174, 121 S.Ct. 2120, 150 L.Ed.2d 251 (2001) ("It is [this Court's] duty to give effect, if possible, to every clause and word of a statute." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Adopting Plaintiffs' reading of the statute would render § 2907.40(A)(1) meaningless by excepting from regulation all those businesses it purports to encompass. Because the plain language of the statute bears another meaning, however, this outcome can be avoided. Section 2907.40(A)(1) defines adult bookstores and adult video stores as commercial establishments whose inventory, revenues, interior business or advertising, or display space consists in "significant or substantial " part of materials "characterized by their emphasis upon the exhibition or description of specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas." Thus, it is not just any business that shows, sells, or rents materials depicting sex that is subject to regulation, but rather only those substantially or significantly devoted to providing materials whose "essential character or quality" is to depict sex or nudity. See § 2907.40(A)(4) (defining "characterized by"). Establishments whose business consists of selling less than a significant or substantial amount of regulated material do not fall within the law. By this reading, § 2907.40(A)(15) reinforces the "significant or substantial" and "characterized by" language of § 2907.40(A)(1) by further clarifying that merely dealing in small amounts of adult material does not bring a business within the definition. Indeed, it would be strange for the Ohio General Assembly to enact a regulation on the hours of operation of adult bookstores and video stores, and in the same regulation exempt all such businesses.

*20 We therefore affirm the district court's rejection of this argument.

VII

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment.

All Citations

455 Fed.Appx. 541, 2011 WL 3904097

End of Document

877 N.E.2d 877
Court of Appeals of Indiana.

PLAZA GROUP PROPERTIES, LLC, Robert W. Allen, and Fuel in Dale, LLC, Appellants–Defendants,
v.
SPENCER COUNTY PLAN COMMISSION and Spencer County Board of Commissioners, Appellees–Plaintiffs.

No. 74A01–0703–CV–145.
|
Dec. 13, 2007.
|
Transfer Denied April 30, 2008.

Synopsis

Background: County brought action against property owner for injunction, requesting that the trial court enter a temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction, and permanent injunction against owner because it failed to apply for and obtain a building permit before renovating its property and violated ordinances by not applying for and obtaining a sexually oriented business permit. Owner counterclaimed alleging that ordinance violated the First Amendment. The Spencer Circuit Court, Wayne A. Roell, J., granted county summary judgment. Property owner appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Baker, C.J., held that:

[1] owner was required to obtain a building permit prior to renovating building;

[2] owner was not entitled to operate sexually oriented business as a nonconforming use;

[3] ordinance prohibiting sexually oriented business within 1000 feet of residence did not violate First Amendment; and

[4] county was entitled to permanent injunction preventing owner from operating sexually oriented business.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (22)

[1] Zoning and Planning
Nonconforming Uses

A "nonconforming" use of property is a use that lawfully existed prior to the enactment of a zoning ordinance and continues after the ordinance's effective date even though it does not comply with the ordinance's restrictions.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Courts
Decisions of United States Courts as Authority in State Courts

Whether a business has a right to maintain a nonconforming use is an issue of state law.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Health
Buildings, structures, and building components

Property owner was required to obtain a building permit prior to renovating building, where the renovations exceeded $5,000.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Zoning and Planning
Existence of use in general

The burden of proving a nonconforming use rests upon the party asserting its existence.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Zoning and Planning
Legality or illegality of use

Owner of property that was in violation of building permit ordinance when zoning ordinance regarding sexually oriented businesses was enacted was not entitled to operate sexually oriented business as a nonconforming use.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Clearly, positively, or unmistakably unconstitutional

When the constitutionality of a county ordinance is challenged, the enactment stands before the court clothed with a presumption of constitutionality until clearly overcome by a contrary showing.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Doubt

Constitutional Law
Burden of Proof

The party challenging the constitutionality of an ordinance bears the burden of proof and all doubts are resolved against that party.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Court of Appeals reviews de novo the question of whether a municipal ordinance violates the United State Constitution.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to the relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

County zoning ordinance governing location of sexually oriented businesses, under which such businesses could not be located within 1,000 feet of a residence, was designed to serve a substantial government interest in combatting secondary effects of such businesses, and did not violate First Amendment's free speech guarantee; while county was largely rural and had relied on studies of effects in such business in urban areas, relied-upon studies were reasonably believed to be relevant to county's desire to avoid negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

A time, place, and manner restriction that indirectly affects speech must be narrowly tailored and leave ample alternative channels for communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

The First Amendment requires only that municipalities refrain from effectively denying sexually oriented businesses a reasonable opportunity to open and operate within the city. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law

Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

The requirement of narrow tailoring of a time, place, and manner restriction that indirectly affects speech is satisfied so long as the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation, and so long as the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest; however, the regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Courts

Decisions of United States Courts as Authority in State Courts

While federal district court decisions may be persuasive, they are not binding authority on state courts.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law

Availability of other sites

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

County zoning ordinance that restricted sexually oriented businesses from operating within 1000 feet of a residence allowed for reasonable alternative avenues of communication, and thus, it did not violate the First Amendment's free speech guarantee; there were at least 34 alternative sites in county on which business operator could operate a sexually oriented business and comply with the 1,000 foot restriction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Appeal and Error

Injunction

Appeal and Error

Refusing injunction

Injunction

Discretionary Nature of Remedy

The granting or denying of an injunction is within the discretion of the trial court, and appellate review is limited to the determination of whether or not the trial court clearly abused that discretion.

Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Injunction

Nature of remedy in general

Injunction

Nature of remedy in general

The difference between a preliminary and permanent injunction is procedural; a "preliminary injunction" is issued while an action in pending, whereas a "permanent injunction" is issued upon a final determination.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Injunction

Grounds in general;multiple factors

Generally, the trial court considers four factors when determining whether to grant injunctive relief: (1) whether plaintiff's remedies at law are inadequate; (2) whether the plaintiff can demonstrate a reasonable likelihood of success on the merits; (3) whether the threatened injury to the plaintiff outweighs the threatened harm a grant of relief would occasion upon the defendant; and (4) whether the public interest would be disserved by granting relief.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Injunction

Irreparable injury

Injunction

Presumptions and burden of proof

The party seeking the injunction carries the burden of demonstrating an irreparable injury; however, when the acts sought to be enjoined are unlawful, the plaintiff need not make a showing of irreparable harm or a balance of the hardships in his favor.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Injunction

Specificity, vagueness, overbreadth, and narrowly-tailored relief

Permanent injunctions are limited to prohibiting injurious interference with rights and must be narrowly tailored so that its scope is not more extensive than is reasonably necessary to protect the interests of the party in whose favor it is granted.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Zoning and Planning

Injunctive and Other Equitable or Affirmative Relief

In seeking an injunction for a zoning violation, the moving party must prove the existence of a valid ordinance and a violation of that ordinance.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Zoning and Planning

Other particular uses

County was entitled to a permanent injunction against property owner to prevent owner from operating sexually oriented business, where operation of such a business was in violation of zoning ordinance.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

879 John D. Cox, Lynch, Cox, Gilman & Mahan PSC, Louisville, KY, H. Louis Sirkin, Jennifer M. Kinsley, Scott R. Nazzarine, Sirkin, Pinales & Schwartz LLP, Cincinnati, OH, Attorneys for Appellants.

John G. Wetherill Rockport, IN, Attorney for Spencer County Plan Commission.

Francis H. Lueken, Jr., Ferdinand, IN, Attorney for Spencer County Board of Commissioners.

Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, TN, Attorney for Appellees.

OPINION

BAKER, Chief Judge.

The parties' dispute requires us to determine the constitutionality of portions of Spencer County's sexually oriented business ordinances. While there is an abundance of caselaw addressing the constitutionality of similar ordinances, discerning the relevant precedent has been compared to "reading the tea leaves." Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129, 134 (6th Cir.1994).

Appellants-defendants Plaza Group Properties, LLC, Robert W. Allen, and Fuel in Dale, LLC (collectively, Plaza), appeal the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of appellees-plaintiffs Spencer County Plan Commission and Spencer County Board of Commissioners (collectively, the County). Plaza first argues that it was lawfully using the property when the County enacted the sexually oriented business ordinances; thus, it is 880 entitled to continue its lawful use even though the newly enacted ordinances prohibit it from operating a sexually oriented business on the property. Alternatively, if we find that Plaza's use was nonconforming at the time the ordinances were enacted, Plaza urges us to find the sexually oriented business ordinances unconstitutional pursuant to the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Because we conclude that there is not a genuine issue of material fact that Plaza made more than $5,000 of renovations to the property without receiving a building permit, Plaza is not entitled to lawful nonconforming use status on the property. And because we determine that the portions of the sexually oriented business ordinances at issue do not unconstitutionally burden protected speech, we reject Plaza's argument that the challenged ordinances are unconstitutional. Therefore, we conclude that the trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the County and it was within the trial court's discretion to enter a permanent injunction prohibiting Plaza from operating a sexually oriented business on the property. Thus, we affirm the judgment of the trial court.

FACTS[1]

[1] We held oral argument in Indianapolis on November 2, 2007. We commend counsel for their excellent oral presentations and we thank the Carmel High School students and staff who attended the argument.

Plaza purchased a truck stop (the property) in Spencer County on October 21, 2005. The property consists of a main building, a motel, and a convenience store and is located "off a highway interchange in an extremely rural area with only one residence within a mile." Appellants' Br. p. 22. Without receiving a building permit, Plaza began remodeling the main building in late October.

After learning about the remodeling, the County issued a stop-work order for the property on November 16, 2005. On December 8, 2005, the County filed a complaint for an injunction against Plaza, alleging that Plaza was violating the County's building and zoning ordinances. The trial court issued a temporary restraining order based on Plaza's failure to comply with the County's building ordinances and enjoined Plaza from using the main building to conduct, maintain, or continue to operate a sexually oriented business.

Theresa Cail, the County Administrator, attests that Plaza is the first sexually oriented business to seek operation in Spencer County in the past twenty years. Appellants' App. p. 210.[2] Prior to Plaza's purchase of the property, the County's zoning ordinances required sexually oriented businesses to obtain a special exception permit but did not specifically regulate businesses of this nature. Thus, the County Plan Commission held a public hearing on November 10, 2005, and formally adopted ordinance 2005–10 on November 28, 2005, which provides, in relevant part, that "[n]o person shall operate or maintain an Adult Organization[3] within 1000 feet 881 of any church, school, daycare center or preschool, or residence [in Spencer County]" (the 1,000–foot restriction). Id. at 145–46. The ordinance also limits an adult organization's hours of operation and prohibits nudity as provided in Indiana Code section 35–45–4–1.[4]

[2] Plaza's appendices do not include the County's complaint, Plaza's answer and counterclaims, or numerous other relevant documents that the County submitted to the trial court during the underlying litigation. We direct counsel's attention to Indiana Appellate Rule 50(A)(2)(f), which requires that the appellant include in the appendix "pleadings and other documents from the Clerk's Record in chronological order that are necessary for resolution of the issues raised on appeal...." It is inappropriate for an appellant to include only its own documents in the appendix; instead, it must include all relevant documents, including those filed by the opposing party.

[3] The ordinance defines "Adult Organization" as an "adult bookstore, adult motion picture theater, adult mini motion picture theatre, adult motion picture arcade, adult cabaret, adult drive-in theater, adult live entertainment arcade or adult service establishment." Appellants' App. p. 143.

[4] Indiana Code section 35–45–4–1 provides that a person who knowingly or intentionally, in a public place, "appears in a state of nudity with the intent to arouse the sexual desires of the person or another person ... commits public indecency, a Class A misdemeanor." Ordinance 2005–11 defines nudity or the state of nudity as "the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage with less than a fully opaque covering or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple." Appellants' App. p. 154.

On December 28, 2005, the County adopted ordinance 2005–11, which details additional licensing requirements for sexually oriented businesses in the County and also contains the 1,000–foot restriction. Id. at 167. Specifically, the ordinance provides that "[i]t shall be unlawful for any person to operate a sexually oriented business in Spencer County without a valid sexually oriented business license." Id. at 157.

It is undisputed that Plaza seeks to run a sexually oriented business and that its property is within 1,000 feet of a residence. On January 4, 2006, the County filed an amended complaint for injunction, requesting that the trial court enter a temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction, and permanent injunction against Plaza because Plaza had failed to apply for and obtain a building permit before renovating its property. Additionally, the County alleged that Plaza had violated ordinances 2005–10 and 2005–11 by not applying for and obtaining a sexually oriented business permit.

Plaza and the County entered into an agreed preliminary injunction order on January 25, 2006, which enjoined Plaza from occupying the property's main building before obtaining a building permit. Furthermore, the parties agreed that Plaza would not "operat[e] a sexually oriented business, as defined in Spencer County Ordinance No.2005–11, on any of the [property]." Id. at 172.

Plaza answered the County's complaint on January 30, 2006, and filed a counterclaim, alleging that ordinances 2005–10 and 2005–11 are unconstitutional on their face and as applied pursuant to the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and "related provisions of the Indiana Constitution." Appellees' App. p. 52–53. The underlying litigation has focused exclusively on the ordinances' constitutionality pursuant to the federal constitution.

The County moved for summary judgment on May 8, 2006. [5] Plaza filed a cross-motion for summary judgment on June 15, 2006. The trial court held a hearing on the parties' motions for summary judgment on February 20, 2007, and entered partial summary judgment in the County's favor on March 9, 2007, finding as follows:

5 The County also filed a motion to show cause on November 1, 2006, alleging that Plaza was in contempt of court for operating a sexually oriented business in violation of the parties' agreed preliminary injunction order and the County's sexually oriented business regulations. The trial court held a hearing and found Plaza to be in contempt of court, fining Plaza $30,000 and awarding the County attorney fees.

> The Court will first address the constitutionality of Spencer County Ordinances 2005–8, 2005–9, 2005–10, 2005–11. Some matters are beyond dispute. Hours of 882 operation restrictions for adult businesses, many of which are more restrictive than those in question, have been upheld as constitutional in numerous federal appellate decisions. Similarly, federal appellate courts have upheld interior configuration operational requirements as a valid means of preventing illegal sexual behavior in adult business. And stripper-patron buffers have passed constitutional muster.
>
> The ordinances contain procedural safeguards. That is, the licensing requirements provide for a relatively quick decision and allow for prompt judicial review of that decision. The county ordinances allow for alternative sites. And there has been no real argument that the ordinances are in any way vague, overbroad or violative of anyone's equal protection rights.
>
> In passing the ordinances cited above, the County relied on numerous studies, reports and appellate cases. The defendants argued that these reports must be significantly tailored to the locality in question. The Court rejects this argument.
>
> In adopting regulations, the [United States] Supreme Court in [City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 51, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)] said that the County may rely upon evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. The County's reliance satisfied this requirement.
>
> Finally, the defendants rely on the New Albany II case for the proposition that the County ordinances are not narrowly tailored as to the location requirements. [New Albany DVD, LLC v. City of New Albany, 362 F.Supp.2d 1015, 1022 (S.D.Ind.2005).] That case was the decision of a [federal district] court. This Court rejects the reasoning in that decision. The fact that there may be imagined less-restrictive alternatives does not negate the fact that the ordinances provide reasonable alternative avenues of communication. Adult businesses have not been denied a reasonable opportunity to open and operate. The regulations restricting operations within 1,000 feet of a residence are valid.
>
> Based on the above, the Court concludes that the ordinances in question are constitutional.
>
> The Court will next address the building ordinance/building permit issue. Spencer County Ordinance 2005–02 is a valid ordinance requiring owners of real property to apply for and obtain a building permit prior to the alteration or remodeling of any building or structure the cost of which exceeds $5,000. The Court is eliminating any costs for painting or carpeting or anything that might be considered redecorating. Even in doing so, the evidence is overwhelming through affidavits and photographs of the many alterations done to the main building that the reasonable cost of those alterations far exceeded $5,000. The affidavits of the [County] identify many and numerous alterations and the estimated cost therefore which were totally ignored by [Plaza's] affidavits.

The evidence before the Court can only lead to the conclusion that the defendant began extensive alterations and remodeling of the main building without first obtaining the required building permit. Any use of the main building was unlawful and thus the defendants have not lawfully used the main building as a sexually oriented business.

* * *

When the motel was first operated as a motel after [Plaza] acquired the property 883 is in question. There are competing affidavits on that question. The answer to that question could very well be dispositive of the issue. However, the evidence is not so clear on either side which would allow this Court to find that there are undisputed facts. Summary judgment is inappropriate with regard to the motel. A short evidentiary hearing will be necessary.

The Court finds that summary judgment is not appropriate with regard to fines. An evidentiary hearing will be necessary at which time the defendants may have the opportunity to give any evidence which might mitigate potential fines. It is the Court's preference that this matter be held in abeyance until any appellate activity in this cause is concluded.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the [County] received a summary judgment that the Spencer County ordinances in question are constitutional.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the [County] receive a summary judgment that [Plaza has] violated the County building code and a summary judgment that [Plaza has] not established any lawful, non-conforming sexually oriented business at the main building.

* * *

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT the [County is] entitled to a summary judgment granting a permanent injunction against [Plaza] from operating a sexually oriented business at the main store or the [convenience store].

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED THAT either party may request an evidentiary hearing with regard to the operation of the motel.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that [Plaza's] Cross Motion for Summary Judgment be denied.

IT IS FINALLY ORDERED that there is no just reason for delay and the Court directs entry of judgment on all of the issues rule upon by this Court.

Appellants' App. p. 9–12. [6] Plaza now appeals.

[6] The trial court entered an order on June 18, 2007, to "correct the widely reported misconceptions about its prior ruling." Appellees' App. p. 170. The trial court emphasized that it "did not order [Plaza to] cease all operations" but, instead, "grant[ed] a permanent injunction against [Plaza] from operating a sexually oriented business." Id. (emphasis in original). The trial court noted that Plaza was free to operate a "commercial establishment" on the property as long as it complied with the local ordinances. Id.

DISCUSSION AND DECISION

I. Jurisdiction

Plaza appeals the trial court's order granting partial summary judgment in favor of the County. While the parties agreed to a preliminary injunction more than a year before the summary judgment hearing, the trial court's partial summary judgment order also permanently enjoined Plaza from operating a sexually oriented business in the property's main store or convenience store. Because the trial court specifically provided that there is no just reason for delay regarding the ruled-upon issues, our court has jurisdiction pursuant to Trial Rule 54(B).

II. Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate only where the evidence shows that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Ind. Trial Rule 56(C). A party seeking summary judgment bears the burden of making a prima facie showing that there are no genuine issues of material fact and that the party is entitled 884 to judgment as a matter of law. Tack's Steel Corp. v. ARC Constr. Co., Inc., 821 N.E.2d 883, 888 (Ind.Ct.App.2005). A factual issue is "genuine" if it is not capable of being conclusively foreclosed by reference to undisputed facts. Am. Mgmt., Inc. v. MIF Realty, L.P., 666 N.E.2d 424, 428 (Ind.Ct.App.1996). Although there may be genuine disputes over certain facts, a fact is material when its existence facilitates the resolution of an issue in the case. Id.

When we review a trial court's entry of summary judgment, we are bound by the same standard that binds the trial court. Id. We may not look beyond the evidence that the parties specifically designated for the motion for summary judgment in the trial court. Best Homes, Inc. v. Rainwater, 714 N.E.2d 702, 705 (Ind.Ct.App.1999). We must accept as true those facts alleged by the nonmoving party, construe the evidence in favor of the nonmovant, and resolve all doubts against the moving party. Shambaugh & Son, Inc. v. Carlisle, 763 N.E.2d 459, 461 (Ind.2002). However, the trial court's order granting or denying a motion for summary judgment is cloaked with a presumption of validity on appeal. Sizemore v. Erie Ins. Exch., 789 N.E.2d 1037, 1038 (Ind.Ct.App.2003). A party appealing from an order granting summary judgment has the burden of persuading us that the decision was erroneous. Id. at 1038–39.

Where, as here, the trial court enters specific findings of fact and conclusions of law, they do not bind us but merely aid our review by providing us with a statement of reasons for the trial court's actions. Crawford County Cmty. Sch. Corp. v. Enlow, 734 N.E.2d 685, 689 (Ind.Ct.App.2000). A grant of summary judgment may be affirmed upon any theory supported by the designated evidence. Bernstein v. Glavin, 725 N.E.2d 455, 458 (Ind.Ct.App.2000).

III. Lawful Nonconforming Use

A. Applicable Law

[1] [2] A nonconforming use of property is a use that lawfully existed prior to the enactment of a zoning ordinance and continues after the ordinance's effective date even though it does not comply with the ordinance's restrictions. Metro. Dev. Comm'n of Marion County v. Pinnacle Media, LLC, 836 N.E.2d 422, 425 (Ind.2005). Whether a business has a right to maintain a nonconforming use is an issue of state law. DeKalb Stone, Inc. v. County of DeKalb, 106 F.3d 956, 959 (11th Cir.1997). Our Supreme Court has summarized the doctrine as follows:

> The general rule is that a nonconforming use may not be terminated by a new zoning enactment. In these situations, it is often said that the landowner had a "vested right" in the use of the property before the use became nonconforming, and because the right was vested, the government cannot terminate it without implicating the Due Process or Takings Clauses of the Fifth Amendment of the federal constitution, applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment.
>
> A relatively frequent subject of land use litigation is whether a developer can have a "vested interest" in a nonconforming use that is only intended—construction has not yet begun at the time of the new enactment—such that the government cannot terminate it.... [M]any courts, including ours, have been presented with cases where a developer encounters a zoning change after embarking on a project but before beginning construction.... As a general proposition, the courts have been willing to hold that the developer acquires a "vested right" such that a new ordinance does not apply retroactively if, but only if, the developer (1) relying in good faith, 885 (2) upon some act or omission of the government, (3) has made substantial changes or otherwise committed himself to his substantial disadvantage prior to a zoning change.
>
> * * *
>
> But where no work has been commenced, or where only preliminary work has been done without going ahead with the construction of the proposed building, there can be no vested rights. The fact that ground had been purchased and plans had been made for the erection of the building before the adoption of the zoning ordinance prohibiting the kind of building contemplated, is held not to exempt the property from the operation of the zoning ordinance. Structures in the course of construction at the time of the enactment or the effective date of the zoning law are exempt from the restrictions of the ordinance.

Pinnacle Media, 836 N.E.2d at 425–26 (citations omitted).

B. Cost of Renovations

[3] It is undisputed that Plaza renovated the property after purchasing it. However, the parties disagree about the extent and cost of those renovations. Ordinance 2005–02 (the building permit ordinance), which was adopted on March 15, 2005, requires property owners in Spencer County to apply for and obtain a building permit before "[b]eginning any addition, alteration, remodeling or repair of any building or structure the cost of which exceeds $5,000." Appellants' App. p. 124. Because Plaza did not obtain a building permit, the County contends that if the renovations cost more than $5,000, Plaza was not engaged in a lawful use of the property when ordinance 2005–10 was enacted on November 28, 2005. Under that scenario, the County argues that ordinance 2005–10 prohibits Plaza from operating a sexually oriented business on the property because it is located within 1,000 feet of a residence.

After evaluating the parties' arguments regarding the cost of Plaza's renovations, the trial court concluded that > [t]he Court is eliminating any costs for painting or carpeting or anything that might be considered redecorating. Even in doing so, the evidence is overwhelming through affidavits and photographs of the many alterations done to the main building that the reasonable cost of those alterations far exceeded $5,000. The affidavits of [the County] identify many and numerous alterations and the estimated cost[s,] which were totally ignored by [Plaza's] affidavits.

>
> The evidence before the Court can only lead to the conclusion that [Plaza] began extensive alterations and remodeling of the main building without first obtaining the required building permit. Any use of the main building was unlawful and thus [Plaza has] not lawfully used the main building as a sexually oriented business.

Id. at 11. Based on this conclusion, the trial court entered summary judgment in favor of the County because Plaza "had not established any lawful, non-conforming sexually oriented business at the main building." Id. at 12.

Richard Allen, a Plaza representative, attested that he purchased fifty mirrors, two used brass decorative entrance doors, twenty-five slat boards, thirty-five fiberglass reinforced panels (FRP), thirty sheets of birch paneling, forty feet of brass pipe, miscellaneous pipe fittings, 5/8 firecore drywall, and ceiling tiles for $3,150. Id. at 361. John Cox, Plaza's attorney, prepared an expense report providing, in 886 part,[7] that Plaza spent an additional $850 for pegboard and roof repairs. Appellees' App. p. 112. Thus, Plaza admits that it spent $4,000 renovating the property.

7 Cox's list also includes an additional $7,125 in expenses for painting, carpeting, and mirrors. Because Allen's affidavit includes the cost of mirrors and the trial court disregarded the costs of paint and carpeting because it considered those expenses to be permissible redecorating, we will not include these amounts in our calculation.

Ralph Pund is a registered professional engineer who is "well familiar with the layout and structural features of [the property,] ... having been in that facility over four hundred times over the past twenty years." Appellants' App. p. 221. The County designated two of Pund's affidavits as evidence, the second of which lists items and materials that Pund determined were installed as part of the remodeling project "but were not listed in the affidavits of [Plaza's representatives]." Appellees' App. p. 64 (emphasis added). The list of omitted items totals $25,837[8] and includes hollow wood doors, wood studs for furring and walls, oak paneling for the vestibule, a three-bowl bar sink, insulated embossed steel doors, wood baseboard and chair rail, a suspended acoustical ceiling, wood frames for mirrors, steel furring channels, wood stage framing, plastic laminate for bars and stage surfaces, fixed bar stools, fluorescent emergency lights, and electric wire and boxes. Id. at 64–65. Pund attached photographs of the renovated property to his first affidavit and the wood mirror frames, plastic bar and stage laminate, fixed bar stools, and fluorescent lights are pictured in the photographs. Appellants' App. p. 226–27. Thus, the photographic evidence confirms that, at the very least, Plaza omitted these items from its cost calculation—items that Pund valued at $10,490. Appellees' App. p. 64–65.

8 We arrive at this amount after subtracting the costs of carpeting, painting, and "miscellaneous material" that Pund included in his calculation. Appellees' App. p. 65.

While we are mindful that we must construe the evidence in favor of Plaza during our review of the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the County, the photographs confirm that Plaza omitted various items and materials used in its renovation to arrive at its $4,000 estimate. And we have previously held that we will not permit a party's contradictory, self-serving testimony to create a genuine issue of material fact for purposes of summary judgment. Miller v. Martig, 754 N.E.2d 41, 46 (Ind.Ct.App.2001). As the trial court found, "the evidence is overwhelming through affidavits and photographs of the many alterations done to the main building that the reasonable cost of those alterations far exceeded $5,000." Appellants' App. p. 11. Because Plaza admits that it made $4,000 of renovations and the photographs show substantial renovations not included in that amount, we find that there is not a genuine issue of material fact that Plaza's renovations exceeded $5,000.

C. Plaza's Use of the Property

[4] [5] Because Plaza's renovations exceeded $5,000, it should have applied for a building permit pursuant to the County's building permit ordinance before renovating the property. Notwithstanding Plaza's violation of the building permit ordinance, Plaza argues that its use of the property is entitled to lawful nonconforming use status because the building permit ordinance is not a zoning ordinance. Phrased another way, Plaza argues that it was in compliance with the County's zoning ordinances when the sexually oriented business ordinances were enacted; thus, it is entitled to operate a sexually oriented business on the 887 property. The burden of proving a nonconforming use rests upon the party asserting its existence. Wesner v. Metro. Dev. Comm'n of Marion County, 609 N.E.2d 1135, 1138 (Ind.Ct.App.1993).

The County draws our attention to section 21(d) of ordinance 2005–11, which provides that "[n]otwithstanding anything to the contrary in any Spencer County ordinances, a nonconforming sexually oriented business, lawfully existing in all respects under law prior to the effective date of this ordinance, may continue to operate...." Appellants' App. p. 168 (emphasis added). The ordinance does not distinguish between zoning ordinances and other ordinances—such as the building permit ordinance—and, instead, provides that the sexually oriented business must have lawfully existed "in all respects" prior to the enactment of ordinance 2005–11.

Furthermore, we have previously held that a landowner who failed to obtain a required building permit did not acquire lawful nonconforming use status when a subsequent zoning regulation was enacted. Bird v. Delaware Muncie Metro. Plan Comm'n, 416 N.E.2d 482, 488 (Ind.Ct.App.1981).[9] Specifically, the landowner in Bird did not obtain a building permit before moving two structures onto his land, and the county later enacted a zoning regulation that rendered the structures unlawful. Because the structures were "not [ ] a preexisting legal use" since the landowner had not obtained a building permit, we held that the landowner did "not acquire lawful status as [a] legal nonconforming use[ ]." Id. at 488.

9 While Plaza relies on our opinion in Board of Zoning Appeals v. Leisz to rebut Bird, the Leisz opinion was vacated when the Supreme Court granted transfer and reversed our decision. 686 N.E.2d 935 (Ind.Ct.App.1997), rev'd on other grounds by Board of Zoning Appeals v. Leisz, 702 N.E.2d 1026 (Ind.1998).

Plaza argues that Bird is distinguishable because the building permit ordinance in that case was contained in the county's zoning ordinances, unlike the building permit ordinance at issue herein. However, in Wesner, we held that an adult business failed to prove it was a lawful nonconforming use because, in part, it had illegally operated as a house of prostitution. 609 N.E.2d at 1138–39. We emphasized that "penal statutes are but one method of promoting the public welfare. Zoning ordinances are another." Id. at 1141. Based on the reasoning of Bird and Wesner, we hold that Plaza was not entitled to lawful nonconforming use status on the property because it was in violation of the building permit ordinance when the sexually oriented business ordinances were enacted. There is no evidence that the building permit ordinance was enacted or enforced for any reason other than general public safety and welfare. Thus, Plaza's argument fails and we hold that the trial court properly found as a matter of law that Plaza was not entitled to lawful nonconforming use status on the property.

IV. Constitutionality of County Ordinances

Although Plaza was not entitled to lawful nonconforming use status on the property, we still must address the constitutionality of the County's sexually oriented business ordinances. In other words, if Plaza successfully challenges the constitutionality of the ordinances, it would no longer be restrained from operating a sexually oriented business on the property and the trial court's entry of summary judgment would be improper.

[6] [7] [8] Plaza argues that ordinances 2005–10 and 2005–11 unconstitutionally burden speech that is protected by the First Amendment to the United States 888 Constitution. When the constitutionality of a county ordinance is challenged, the enactment stands before us "clothed with a presumption of constitutionality until clearly overcome by a contrary showing." Dvorak v. City of Bloomington, 796 N.E.2d 236, 237–38 (Ind.2003). The party challenging the constitutionality bears the burden of proof and all doubts are resolved against that party. Id. at 238. However, we review de novo the question of whether a municipal ordinance violates the United State Constitution. Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 995 (7th Cir.2002).

A. Legal Framework

The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals has summarized the current state of the law pertaining to sexually oriented business regulations:

> In Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the Supreme Court applied a three-step analysis in reviewing the First Amendment validity of a municipal zoning ordinance that regulated adult movie theaters. The Renton analysis instructs courts reviewing regulations of adult entertainment establishments to consider: (1) whether the regulation constitutes an invalid total ban or merely a time, place, and manner regulation, (2) whether the regulation is content-based or content-neutral, and accordingly, whether strict or intermediate scrutiny is to be applied, and (3) if content-neutral, whether the regulation is designed to serve a substantial government interest and allows for reasonable alternative channels of communication.
>
> In upholding a ban on multiple-use adult establishments, the plurality opinion in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), adhered to the Renton framework. However, in his concurrence, Justice Kennedy joined the four dissenters, id. at 455–56, 122 S.Ct. 1728, in eschewing the content-neutral "fiction" of adult entertainment zoning ordinances. Id. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 ("These ordinances are content based and we should call them so."). Generally, content based restrictions on speech are analyzed with the strictest scrutiny, but Justice Kennedy explained that content based zoning regulations can be exceptions to that rule. In so concluding, he agreed with the plurality that "the central holding of Renton is sound: A zoning restriction that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Whatever the label, Renton's second step is best conceived as an inquiry into the purpose behind an ordinance rather than an evaluation of an ordinance's form. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440–41, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (explaining Renton's second step "requires courts to verify that the predominant concerns motivating the ordinance were with the secondary effects of adult [speech]") (emphasis added). As we noted in Ben's Bar [v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 721 n. 26 (7th Cir.2003)], "while the label has changed, the substance of Renton's second step remains the same."
>
> Accordingly, only after confirming that a zoning ordinance's purpose is to combat the secondary effects of speech do we employ Renton's intermediate scrutiny test. Under this test, zoning regulations are constitutional "so long as they are designed to serve a substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. At this stage, courts are 889 "required to ask 'whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance.' " Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 724 (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728). In other words, simply stating that an ordinance is designed to combat secondary effects is insufficient to survive intermediate scrutiny. The governmental interest of regulating secondary effects may only be upheld as substantial if a connection can be made between the negative effects and the regulated speech. In evaluating the sufficiency of this connection, courts must "examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728. According to the Alameda Books plurality, the evidentiary requirement is met if the evidence upon which the municipality enacted the regulation "is reasonably believed to be relevant for demonstrating a connection between [secondary effects producing] speech and a substantial, independent government interest." 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

* * *

In sum, Alameda's plurality opinion along with Justice Kennedy's concurrence establish that in order to justify a content-based time, place, and manner restriction, a municipality must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, (i.e., is designed to serve or furthers a substantial or important government interest), while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact (i.e., the regulation is narrowly tailored and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication). Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 725.
R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford, 361 F.3d 402, 407–09 (7th Cir.2004) (various citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

B. Substantial Government Interest

Plaza first argues that the County did not meet its burden of establishing that it enacted the sexually oriented business ordinances to further a substantial government interest. Specifically, Plaza attacks the evidence the County cited to support adopting the ordinances and argues that the evidence does not fairly support the County's purported rationale for the ordinances.

[9] The United States Supreme Court has held that a municipality can rely on "any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). However, the Supreme Court emphasized that

> [t]his is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

890 Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–439, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (emphasis added). Furthermore, the First Amendment "does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to the relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Andy's Rest. & Lounge, Inc. v. City of Gary, 466 F.3d 550, 555 (7th Cir.2006) (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). And the Supreme Court has "consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

[10] Section 1(a) of ordinance 2005–11 provides that the purpose of the ordinance is "to promote the health, safety, moral, and general welfare of the citizens of the County." Appellants' App. p. 149. As support, section 1(b) cites twenty-six court decisions and twenty case studies concerning the adverse secondary effects that occur in and around sexually oriented businesses. Id. at 150. Based on these cases and studies, the County Board of Commissioners found that

> (1) Sexually oriented businesses, as a category of commercial uses, are associated with a wide variety of adverse secondary effect including, but not limited to, personal and property crimes, prostitution, potential spread of disease, lewdness, public indecency....
>
> (2) Sexually oriented businesses should be separated from sensitive land uses to minimize the impact of their secondary effects upon such uses, and should be separated from other sexually oriented business, to minimize the secondary effects associated with such uses and prevent an unnecessary concentration of sexually oriented businesses in one area.

> (3) Each of the foregoing negative secondary effects constitutes a harm which the County has a substantial government interest in preventing and/or abating. This substantial government interest in preventing secondary effects, which is the County's rationale for this ordinance, exists independent of any comparative analysis between sexually oriented and non-sexually oriented businesses. Additionally, the County's interest in regulating sexually oriented businesses extends to preventing future secondary effects of either current or future sexually oriented businesses that may locate in the County. The County finds that the cases and documentation relied on in this ordinance are reasonably believed to be relevant to said secondary effects.

Appellants' App. p. 151.

Plaza argues that "the studies supposedly relied upon by the County all analyzed the effects of such businesses in residential communities and near other businesses, and which were located in large metropolitan areas." Appellants' Br. p. 22. Plaza contends that the rural location of its property distinguishes it from the cited reports. As Plaza's attorney argued at the summary judgment hearing,

> If you go out there and you take a look, there's nothing there. It's off the highway. There's a single residence. Nobody has ever put forth any evidence anywhere in any of the material that that particular person was complaining about it. To say that it would have secondary effects, an increase in crime, it would be a blight, it would deplete the property values and all that, that's all farmland around there. There's nothing there at all for any of these studies.

Tr. p. 37 (emphasis added).

When challenging the constitutionality of sexually oriented business ordinances, 891 litigants have relied on the rural/urban evidence distinction with varied success. In LLEH, Inc. v. Wichita County, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a trial court's holding that a local ordinance was unconstitutional because the county only relied on studies addressing the secondary effects of adult businesses in urban areas. 289 F.3d 358, 366–67 (5th Cir.2002). Although Wichita County was located in an unincorporated, rural area with few residential dwellings, the LLEH court held that > [t]he secondary effects that urban areas have experienced (well documented in the relied-upon studies) are precisely what the County is attempting to avoid.... By [enacting the regulations], the County may, in its continued growth and development, successfully sidestep many of the problems encountered by urban areas. In this respect, the relied-upon studies are "reasonably believed to be relevant" to the problems the County seeks to address.

Id. at 367 (emphases omitted).

Recently, in Abilene Retail No. 30 v. Board of Commissioners of Dickinson County, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a district court's decision granting summary judgment in favor of a county based on the rural county's reliance on studies from urban areas. 492 F.3d 1164, 1175–76 (10th Cir.2007). The Abilene Retail court held that > [a]ll of the studies relied upon by the Board examine the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses located in urban environments; none examine businesses situated in an entirely rural area. To hold that legislators may reasonably rely on those studies to regulate a single adult bookstore, located on a highway pullout far from any business or residential area within the County, would be to abdicate our independent judgment entirely. Such a holding would require complete deference to a local government's reliance on prepackaged secondary effects studies from other jurisdictions > to regulate any single sexually oriented business, of any type, located in any setting. Our review is deferential, but the evidentiary basis for the [ordinance] must establish some minimal connection to the secondary effects attendant to Dickinson County's existing sexually oriented business(es). Based on the record before us, we conclude that a material dispute of fact exists as to whether the Board has established such a connection.

Id. at 1175–76 (footnotes omitted).

Although not addressing the urban/rural evidence distinction, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals has provided insight into the amount of evidence a city must cite to support its substantial government interest. In R.V.S., the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals noted that the City of Rockford "does not identify any studies, judicial opinions, or experience-based testimony that it considered in adopting the Ordinance." 361 F.3d at 411 (emphasis added). In fact, the court noted that Rockford > produced little evidence of harmful secondary effects connected to Exotic Dancing Nightclubs beyond the assumption that such effects exist. While it is true that common experience may be relied upon to bolster a claim that a regulation serves a current governmental interest, the experience in this case falls short of satisfying the minimal evidentiary showing of Alameda Books. Indeed, while courts may credit a municipality's experience, such consideration cannot amount to an acceptance of an "if they say so" standard.

Id. While the R.V.S. court acknowledged that "courts should not be in the business of second-guessing-fact-bound empirical 892 assessments of city planners," it concluded that Rockford had not satisfied the Alameda Books requirement that municipalities rely upon evidence reasonably believed to be relevant when enacting sexually oriented business ordinances. Id. at 412.

While Plaza urges us to follow the Abilene Retail court's rationale, as the R.V.S. court cautioned, we should not be in the business of second-guessing the empirical assessment of municipalities enacting sexually oriented business ordinances. Instead, if the municipality's evidence fairly supports the municipality's rationale for its ordinance and the adult business fails to cast direct doubt on that rationale, the municipality has met the standard set forth in Renton. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

As the County notes in its brief, Plaza "has not furnished any evidence to dispute the County's factual findings about the secondary effects, and [Plaza] has not demonstrated in any way that the legislative record does not support the County's rationale." Appellees' Br. p. 32. Instead of citing probative evidence supporting its argument that the County's record is insufficient, Plaza merely directs us to the conclusory statement made at the summary judgment hearing that "there's nothing there" around the property and "[t]here's nothing there at all for any of these studies." Tr. p. 37. However, if we allow Plaza's bare assertion that the County's evidence is not reasonably believed to be relevant because of geographical distinctions between Spencer County and the cited evidence, we would, in effect, be adopting an "if they say so" standard for adult businesses making this kind of challenge. This could not have been what the Supreme Court intended when it provided that plaintiffs must cast "direct doubt " on the municipality's purported rationale "either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings" in order to trigger the burden to "shift[ ] back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (emphases added).

Based on this reasoning, we find that Plaza has failed to cast direct doubt on the County's rationale and, therefore, the burden does not shift to the County to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for its substantial government interest. Because the evidence the County relied upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the secondary effects it sought to address with the sexually oriented business ordinances, Plaza's challenge fails on these grounds.

C. Breadth of Ordinances

Plaza next argues that the County was not entitled to summary judgment because the sexually oriented business zoning ordinances are not narrowly tailored. Specifically, Plaza argues that the trial court erroneously rejected the Southern District of Indiana's reasoning in New Albany DVD, LLC v. City of New Albany, 362 F.Supp.2d 1015, 1022 (S.D.Ind.2005) (New Albany II), appeal pending, and upheld the constitutionality of the ordinance banning sexually oriented businesses from operating within 1,000 feet of a residence "without any real analysis." Appellants' Br. p. 24.

[11] [12] [13] A time, place, and manner restriction that indirectly affects speech must be narrowly tailored and leave ample alternative channels for communication. Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 725. "[T]he First Amendment requires only that [municipalities] refrain from effectively denying [sexually oriented businesses] a reasonable opportunity to open and operate ... within 893 the city." Renton, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925. The requirement of narrow tailoring is satisfied > so long as the ... regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.... So long as the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest, however, the regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative. The validity of time, place, or manner regulations does not turn on a judge's agreement with the responsible decisionmaker concerning the most appropriate method for promoting significant government interests or the degree to which those interests should be promoted.

Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799–800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989); see also Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 1002 (7th Cir.2002) (holding that narrow tailoring does not require the restrictions to be the least restrictive means of serving the municipality's content-neutral interests).

Before addressing New Albany II, we note that County Administrator Cail attested that she has > identified at least 34 sites in the B1, B2, I1, and I2 zoning districts which are more than 1,000 feet from any parcel occupied by a sexually oriented business or by a business licensed [ ] to sell alcohol at the premises, and which are more than 1,000 feet from any parcel occupied by any church, public or private elementary or secondary school, daycare center or preschool, public park, or any residence.

Appellees' App. p. 96. Therefore, while Plaza's current location violates the County's ordinances because it is within 1,000 feet of a residence, there are at least thirty-four other sites in Spencer County where Plaza could lawfully operate a sexually oriented business. Plaza does not challenge this evidence.

Plaza argues that the trial court erroneously rejected the reasoning in New Albany II. In that decision, the Southern District of Indiana held that "[t]he 'narrowly tailored' test is an effort to ensure that, given a genuine nexus between the purpose of an Ordinance that regulates First Amendment speech and the Ordinance itself, the law not be broader than necessary to achieve the City's goal." 362 F.Supp.2d at 1022. Plaza directs us to the court's holding that > ostensibly to prevent criminal activity in neighborhoods, the Ordinance broadly restricts adult businesses from locating near dwellings, but not specifically occupied dwellings, which would clearly be a more narrowly tailored restriction. Further, rather than impose a wholesale ban on adult bookstores located near houses of worship, the Ordinance would better satisfy the "narrowly tailored" requirement if it were to restrict the bookstores' hours of operation to exclude Sundays or such other times when the nearby religious establishments are frequented by worshipers.

> We reference these more narrowly tailored restrictions for the reason that if the city is concerned with limiting criminal activity as an adverse secondary effect of adult businesses, and chooses to deal with the problem through zoning restrictions, then it must draw those regulations sufficiently narrowly to address the feared harm but without burdening unduly the protected activity. As it currently stands, these restrictions apply to the only existing adult bookstore in New Albany, which obviously 894 means that the constitutionally protected speech will be substantially burdened since there are no alternative channels for the sale and rental of adult materials by an avowedly adult entertainment business.

Id. at 1022–23 (emphasis in original).

Plaza analogizes the facts at issue herein to the statutes construed in New Albany II. Specifically, Plaza notes that it is the only sexually oriented business seeking to operate in Spencer County and that the County's sexually oriented business ordinances also do not limit the 1,000–foot restriction to occupied dwellings. Therefore, Plaza argues that we should follow the New Albany II court's reasoning and deem the challenged statutes unconstitutional.

[14] As a preliminary matter, we note that while federal district court decisions may be persuasive, they are not binding authority on state courts. Reuille v. E.E. Brandenberger Constr., Inc., 873 N.E.2d 116, 120 n. 1 (Ind.Ct.App.2007).[10] Therefore, the trial court was not bound to apply the New Albany II holding to the facts of this case. Furthermore, the New Albany II court was addressing an adult business's motion for preliminary injunction; therefore, the district court was evaluating the likelihood that the plaintiff's constitutional claim would succeed on the merits. The court did not actually determine the constitutionality of the challenged ordinances.

10 In fact, the only federal court decisions that bind state courts are those of the United States Supreme Court. Doe v. Pryor, 344 F.3d 1282, 1286 (11th Cir.2003).

Turning to the merits of the New Albany II decision, the district court based its holding on alternative ordinance constructions that it found "would clearly be [ ] more narrowly tailored." 362 F.Supp.2d at 1022. While it will almost always be possible to imagine a more narrowly tailored ordinance when assessing a constitutional challenge, the Supreme Court has held that such an analysis is not appropriate. Instead, as noted above, the Supreme Court has provided that "the regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative." Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746. So long as the means chosen "are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest," the regulation is valid. Id. (emphasis added). As the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals noted, "Ward thus expressly rejected the argument that the government must choose the 'least restrictive means' or the 'least restrictive alternative' in order to meet the definition of narrowly tailored." Matney v. County of Kenosha, 86 F.3d 692, 696 (7th Cir.1996).

The Supreme Court's holding in Ward compels us to shift our focus away from whether a less restrictive ordinance can be construed and, instead, concentrate on whether or not the chosen means are substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest. Therefore, we cannot conclude that it was error for the trial court to reject the reasoning of the New Albany II court.

[15] Plaza specifically attacks the 1,000–foot restriction contained in the County's ordinances because Plaza is prohibited from operating a sexually oriented business on the property, as it is located within 1,000 feet of a residence. However, similar restrictions have been deemed constitutional. See, e.g., Renton, 475 U.S. at 52–56, 106 S.Ct. 925 (upholding the constitutionality of city's zoning ordinance prohibiting adult motion picture theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential 895 zone, church, park, or school); Ill. One News, Inc. v. City of Marshall, 477 F.3d 461, 464 (7th Cir.2007) (upholding the constitutionality of a small city's 1,000–foot–restriction, which limited adult businesses to approximately four percent of the city's land).

Furthermore, Plaza has repeatedly emphasized the rural nature of Spencer County. Because of its rural setting, two buildings in Spencer County that are located within 1,000 feet of each other would be considered to be in extremely close proximity to one another. Moreover, as noted above, there are at least thirty-four alternative sites in Spencer County on which Plaza could operate a sexually oriented business and comply with the 1,000–foot restriction.

Appellees' App. p. 96. Therefore, in light of the number of alternative avenues of communication available to Plaza in Spencer County, we find the ordinances' 1,000–foot restriction to be constitutional.

D. Conclusion

In sum, the County's sexually oriented business ordinances are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest while allowing for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. Plaza has failed to cast direct doubt on the County's rationale for the ordinances, and the evidence relied upon by the County is reasonably believed to be relevant to the secondary effects the County seeks to address. The evidence shows that there are at least thirty-four alternative sites in the Spencer County on which Plaza could operate a sexually oriented business and comply with the 1,000–foot restriction. Therefore, because the ordinances are designed to serve a substantial government interest while allowing for reasonable alternative avenues of communication, the dictates of the First Amendment are satisfied and Plaza's challenge fails. [11] Consequently, the trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the County.

[11] County ordinances 2005–10 and –11 are lengthy regulations comprising twenty-six pages of the record. Appellants' App. p. 143–69. We emphasize that we have only analyzed the portions of the ordinances that Plaza has specifically challenged and our holding regarding the ordinances' constitutionality does not apply to the portions of the ordinances not specifically addressed herein.

V. Permanent Injunction

Although the appellants' case summary lists the trial court's permanent injunction as an "anticipated issue on appeal," neither party specifically addresses that issue. However, the gravamen of Plaza's argument is that it should be allowed to operate a sexually oriented business on the property. Thus, contained within its argument is the presumption that the trial court erred by granting the County injunctive relief. Therefore, we will briefly address the propriety of the trial court's entry of injunctive relief.

[16] [17] The granting or denying of an injunction is within the discretion of the trial court, and our review is limited to the determination of whether or not the trial court clearly abused that discretion. Stuller v. Daniels, 869 N.E.2d 1199, 1208 (Ind.Ct.App.2007). A trial court abuses its discretion when its decision is clearly against the logic and effect of the facts and circumstances or if it misinterprets the law. Id. The difference between a preliminary and permanent injunction is procedural: a preliminary injunction is issued while an action in pending, whereas a permanent injunction is issued upon a final determination. City of Gary v. Enter. Trucking & Waste Hauling, 846 N.E.2d 234, 242 (Ind.Ct.App.2006).

896 [18] [19] [20] Generally, the trial court considers four factors when determining whether to grant injunctive relief:

> (1) whether plaintiff's remedies at law are inadequate; (2) whether the plaintiff can demonstrate a reasonable likelihood of success on the merits; (3) whether the threatened injury to the plaintiff outweighs the threatened harm a grant of relief would occasion upon the defendant; and (4) whether the public interest would be disserved by granting relief.

Ferrell v. Dunescape Beach Club Condos., 751 N.E.2d 702, 712 (Ind.Ct.App.2001). The party seeking the injunction carries the burden of demonstrating an irreparable injury; however, when the acts sought to be enjoined are unlawful, the plaintiff need not make a showing of irreparable harm or a balance of the hardships in his favor. Id. Permanent injunctions are limited to prohibiting injurious interference with rights and must be narrowly tailored so that its scope is not more extensive than is reasonably necessary to protect the interests of the party in whose favor it is granted. Id.

[21] [22] In seeking an injunction for a zoning violation, the moving party must prove the existence of a valid ordinance and a violation of that ordinance. Saurer v. Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 629 N.E.2d 893, 896 (Ind.Ct.App.1994). We have already upheld the constitutionality of the challenged portions of the County's sexually oriented business ordinances. And Plaza violates the ordinances by operating a sexually oriented business on the property in violation of the 1,000–foot restriction. Thus, the County has proven the existence of a valid zoning ordinance and Plaza's violation thereof. We conclude that this evidence is sufficient to sustain the injunction on appeal, given our discretionary review of the trial court's entry of injunctive relief. See Dierckman v. Area Planning Comm'n of Franklin County, 752 N.E.2d 99, 104–05 (Ind.Ct.App.2001) (holding that the trial court's issuance of an injunction was not an abuse of discretion because the defendants violated a zoning ordinance).

As previously noted, the trial court issued an order on June 18, 2007, emphasizing that while the permanent injunction enjoins Plaza from unlawfully operating a sexually oriented business on the property, Plaza is free to operate a commercial establishment that complies with the County's ordinances. We find the injunction to be narrowly tailored and conclude that the trial court's entry of injunctive relief in favor of the County was not an abuse of discretion.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

MAY, J., and CRONE, J., concur.

All Citations

877 N.E.2d 877

596 F.3d 1265
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

FLANIGAN'S ENTERPRISES, INC. OF GEORGIA, a Georgia corporation d.b.a. Mardi Gras, 6420 Roswell Rd., Inc., a Georgia corporation d.b.a. Flashers, et al., Plaintiffs–Appellees–Cross Appellants,
v.
FULTON COUNTY, GA., Defendant–Appellant–Cross Appellee.

No. 08–17035.
|
Feb. 16, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Strip club owners sued county under § 1983, challenging constitutionality of ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, No. 01-03109-CV-RLV-1, Robert L. Vining, Jr., J., 2006 WL 2927532, entered summary judgment for owners. County appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Marcus, Circuit Judge, held that ordinance furthered government interest.

Reversed and remanded.

West Headnotes (22)

[1] Federal Courts
Constitutional rights, civil rights, and discrimination in general

The Court of Appeals' constitutional responsibility to conduct an independent review of constitutional claims when necessary in a free speech case cannot be delegated to the trier of fact. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Constitutional rights, civil rights, and discrimination in general

Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

Ordinarily, the Court of Appeals reviews district court factfindings only for clear error, but First Amendment issues are not ordinary, and where the Free Speech Clause is involved its review of the district court's findings of constitutional facts, as distinguished from ordinary historical facts, is de novo. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Courts
Constitutional rights, civil rights, and discrimination in general

Federal Courts
Presumptions

Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

"Historical facts" are facts about the who, what, where, when, and how of the controversy, and the Court of Appeals reviews them for clear error, but, by contrast, under the assumptions about the law that the Court of Appeals makes for purposes of deciding a free speech case, it must determine the "why facts" itself; those are the core constitutional facts that involve the reasons the government body took the challenged action. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Courts
Constitutional questions in general

In a free speech case, the Court of Appeals finds the core constitutional facts, i.e., the "why" facts, as though the district court had never made any findings about them. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Nude dancing is a form of expression protected by the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

To determine what level of scrutiny applies to a challenge to an ordinance regulating nude dancing, the Court of Appeals must decide whether the state's regulation is related to the suppression of expression; if the governmental purpose in enacting the regulation is unrelated to the suppression of expression, then the regulation need only satisfy intermediate scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

A city ordinance prohibiting nude dancing in establishments licensed to sell liquor is content-neutral and therefore subject to intermediate scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

County ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments was subject to intermediate review in free speech action, since it was content neutral and its enactment was unrelated to suppression of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

Under intermediate review, an ordinance subject to a free speech challenge is valid if: (1) it serves a substantial interest within the power of the government; (2) the ordinance furthers that interest; (3) the interest served is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) there is no less restrictive alternative. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

County ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments served substantial interest within power of government, as required for ordinance to withstand free speech challenge by strip club owners under intermediate scrutiny, where it was passed out of concern over secondary effects of alcohol and live nude dancing on community, specifically increased criminal activity, decreased property values, and urban blight and decay generally. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

County ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments served interest unrelated to suppression of free expression, as required for ordinance to withstand free speech challenge by strip club owners under intermediate scrutiny, in that it focused on secondary effects associated with both alcohol and live nude dancing, and board of commissioners said that it was not its intent deny free speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

County ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments was least restrictive alternative, as required for ordinance to withstand free speech challenge by strip club owners under intermediate scrutiny, in that it did not prohibit all nude dancing, but only restricted nude dancing in those locations where unwanted secondary effects arose. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

For an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments to further a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, a municipality must have some factual basis for the claim that adult entertainment in establishments serving alcoholic beverages results in increased criminal activity and other undesirable community conditions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

For an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments to further a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, the government must show that the municipality's articulated concern had more than merely speculative factual grounds, and that it was actually a motivating factor in the passage of the legislation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

For an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments to further a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, a city need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Although a municipality must rely on at least some pre-enactment evidence in order for an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments to further a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, such evidence can consist of a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

For purposes of determining whether an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments furthers a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, governments are empowered to rely on their own wisdom and common sense, and common sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

While a governmental entity need not support its regulations with voluminous data in order for an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments to further a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, the entity may not rely on shoddy data or reasoning, and its evidence must fairly support its rationale; nevertheless, anecdotal evidence is not shoddy per se. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

To establish that secondary effects pose a threat, such that an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments furthers a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, a city need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses; however, if the entity does perform empirical studies, it cannot later ignore the results. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Ultimately, the test for whether an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments furthers a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, hinges on the reasonableness of the government regulation in light of the available evidence. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

The test for whether an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in adult entertainment establishments furthers a governmental interest, as required for the ordinance to withstand a free speech challenge under intermediate scrutiny, requires deference to the reasoned judgment of a governmental entity; a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and very little evidence is required. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

County ordinance prohibiting sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments furthered government interest, as required for ordinance to withstand free speech challenge by strip club owners under intermediate scrutiny, notwithstanding report indicating that crime was greater problem at county bars without nude dancing, where county relied on voluminous evidence, including report recounting crime occurring around county's strip clubs and describing impact of clubs on county's youth, studies detailing effects of strip clubs in 30 other jurisdictions, and testimony of chief of police and chief judge of juvenile court. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1268 Vincent D. Hyman, Kaye Woodard Burwell, Steven E. Rosenberg, William Shannon Sams, Atlanta, GA, for Plaintiffs–Appellees–Cross Appellants.

Cary Stephen Wiggins, Irma I. Espino, Cook, Youngelson & Wiggins, Atlanta, GA, James N. Cline, Toswell, GA, for Plaintiffs–Appellees–Cross Appellants.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.

Before BLACK, MARCUS and HIGGINBOTHAM, * Circuit Judges.

* Honorable Patrick E. Higginbotham, United States Circuit Judge for the Fifth Circuit, sitting by designation.

Opinion

MARCUS, Circuit Judge:

Defendant Fulton County, Georgia, concerned about the secondary effects on its communities of the mixture of alcohol and live nude dancing, passed an ordinance in 1269 2001 prohibiting the sale, possession, and consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments. Plaintiffs Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc., owner and operator of the Mardi Gras strip club, and other owners and operators of strip clubs in Fulton County brought this First Amendment challenge to the ordinance, arguing that the ordinance infringed on their right to free speech. The district court, concluding that the ordinance failed to further an important governmental interest, granted summary judgment and awarded damages to Flanigan's. The County now appeals the judgment and Flanigan's cross-appeals on several issues not reached by the district court.

This is the second time that we have been asked to consider a First Amendment challenge to a Fulton County ordinance proscribing the sale of alcohol at adult clubs. The County had passed a similar ordinance in 1997, but this Court struck it down, reasoning that the County had ignored the most relevant evidence in enacting the regulation. See Flanigan's Enters., Inc. of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., 242 F.3d 976, 986 (11th Cir.2001). This case is different. This time around, the County relied on ample statistical, surveillance, and anecdotal evidence, the live testimony of the chief of police and the chief judge of the juvenile court, among others, and dozens of foreign studies, all of which support the County's efforts to curb the negative secondary effects of alcohol and live nude dancing in its communities. We are satisfied that the County's reliance on this factual foundation was reasonable, and because we determine that the ordinance furthers an important governmental interest, we reverse.

I.

A.

The essential facts presented in this summary judgment record are these: the plaintiffs in this consolidated action—Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. ("Flanigan's"); 6420 Roswell Road, Inc. ("Roswell"); Harry Freese; Fannies, Inc.; William H. Parks, Jr.; and Ceeda Enterprises, Inc. ("Ceeda") (collectively, "the clubs")—are owners and operators of strip clubs in Fulton County, Georgia. The clubs they operate include Mardi Gras, Flashers, Fannies, and Riley's Restaurant and Lounge ("Riley's"). These clubs sell and serve alcohol, and feature live nude dancing on the premises.

In 1997, Fulton County began to investigate the impact of strip clubs within its borders on crime and property values in the surrounding communities. The County board of commissioners directed the police department to study the issue, which the department did. The resulting police investigation, which considered two and a half years of statistical data, revealed no relationship between alcohol, nude dancing, and crime. In fact, the report suggested that crime was a greater problem in and around bars which did not feature live nude dancing. In response to the County's investigation, the strip clubs commissioned a study of their own, which revealed that there was no relationship between the strip clubs and reduced property values in Fulton County.

The County's investigation continued. It, too, commissioned a study on property values in the area, which confirmed the finding of the clubs' study—that the clubs had no impact on the property values in the surrounding areas. The County also directed its staff to collect a number of studies on the impact of strip clubs in other American cities. These so-called foreign studies, which considered the impact of clubs in Austin, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, and Los Angeles, concluded that strip clubs were indeed a blight on the surrounding communities.

1270 The County held two public meetings to review the results of its investigation. Despite the three local and recent studies indicating no relationship between the clubs, crime, or reduced property values, the County relied on the foreign studies indicating a correlation. As a result, on December 17, 1997, the board of commissioners passed an ordinance forbidding the service and consumption of alcohol in facilities featuring adult entertainment.

The strip clubs sued, and a panel of this Court determined that the ordinance violated the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. Relying on United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), the Court observed that the County was "not required to perform empirical studies," but, "having done so, the Board [could not] ignore the results." Flanigan's Enters., Inc. of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., 242 F.3d 976, 986 (11th Cir.2001) (internal citation omitted).

After this Court struck down the first ordinance, the board commissioned two more studies. The first of these studies, called "Adult and Non–Adult Entertainment Establishments Statist[i]cal Analysis From 1/1/98 To 12/31/00," conducted by the Fulton County police department, and completed in March 2001 ("March 2001 report" or "Adult and Non–Adult Entertainment Establishments Statistical Analysis"), reviewed police data from January 1998 to December 2000. It found "that adult entertainment establishment[s which] served alcoholic beverages did not have a significant impact on the police department as it relates to an increase in calls for police service, nor an increase in crime as a secondary [e]ffect." Moreover, the March 2001 report concluded that bars without nude dancing had higher crime rates than those bars with nude dancing.

The second of the studies commissioned by the County was completed in July 2001 ("July 2001 report"), made a variety of findings, and reached a different result. Titled "Report on Fulton County Adult Entertainment Businesses," it described "Operation Summit Up," a fourteen-day sweep conducted by the Fulton County police department in September 1998. The sting operation, which focused on an industrial area in which the strip clubs Fannies, Riley's and Babes were located, resulted in 167 arrests and 166 convictions. Of the 221 total charges filed, ninety-three were for prostitution and other sex-related crimes, and thirty-four were for drug-related crimes.

The report featured photographic evidence chronicling the same industrial area, and stated that the area was marked by dilapidated buildings, streets in disrepair, and cheap hotels catering to prostitutes and johns. An affidavit from Patrick Stafford, executive director of the Fulton Industrial Business Association, further described the hotels, stating that "[t]hey rent locally, engage in cash transactions with customers, and rent hourly or for portions of days," and that their exteriors are characterized by "out-of-code parking lots, lack of lighting in parking lots, lack of security in parking lots, pandering and general unsafe conditions."

Notably, the July 2001 report contained an extensive discussion of South Fulton Precinct beats 21 and 23, and, in particular, a one square-mile of land within them called grid B43. Grid B43 contains three of the nude clubs, Fannies, Riley's, and Babes. The report stated that, from 1998 to 2000, beats 21 and 23 accounted for a disproportionately high amount of crime within the South Fulton Precinct, and that grid B43 contributed to more than its fair share of crime within those two beats. The report noted that beats 21 and 23 saw an increase in crime during the evening hours, even though most businesses in the area operated during standard business hours. The report also compared incident 1271 data from six strip clubs, five of which served alcohol and one of which did not (but allowed customers to bring their own) ("the BYOB club"). It showed that, from 1998 to 2000, the BYOB club accounted for only fifteen of the 362 reported incidents, or 4.1%.

The report described in great detail the results of surveillance operations conducted by the Fulton County police during May and June of 2001. The surveillance conducted at the adult clubs which served alcohol revealed a number of criminal violations and arrests. [1] The report states, however, that no violations were observed, and no arrests were made, at the BYOB club.

1 On two occasions, undercover officers videotaped dancers and patrons at the strip clubs, concluding that the "videotapes evidence gross violations of the ordinance governing such establishments as they graphically depict contact between dancers and patrons openly and, in some incidences, behind closed-in areas." An analysis of approximately two hours of tape revealed thirty-nine violations of law, which included fondling, caressing, tips other than hand to hand, and dancing someplace other than a fixed stage. See Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–79(8–10) (2001) (prohibiting those activities). The tape also revealed violations of the Georgia criminal law against masturbation for hire. See O.C.G.A. § 16–6–16(a) ("A person, including a masseur or masseuse, commits the offense of masturbation for hire when he erotically stimulates the genital organs of another, whether resulting in orgasm or not, by manual or other bodily contact exclusive of sexual intercourse or by instrumental manipulation for money or the substantial equivalent thereof."); see also id. § 16–6–16(b) (defining masturbation for hire as a misdemeanor). Non-video surveillance revealed the same unlawful behavior and described a number of arrests. One passage reads this way:

> At Flasher's two undercover officers observed a dancer dancing for a customer. After getting entirely naked, she pushed her breasts together and rotated them, making contact with the customer's face. This dancer then turned around, squatted and rotated her body into the customer's groin area. The customer later passed an undetermined amount of money to the dancer. A second dancer at Flasher's was observed by the officers committing the same acts with another customer—pushing her breasts into the customer's face, grinding into his groin area then receiving money. Both of these dancers were arrested and charged with masturbation for hire ....
>
> The underlying documentation recounted a number of similar scenes.

The report also presented what it described as anecdotal evidence. An affidavit from the Honorable Nina R. Hickson, presiding judge for the Juvenile Court of Fulton County, described how some of the girls who had appeared before her in her two years as presiding judge had worked in the adult clubs and had performed sexual acts in their parking lots. Some of these girls got work at private parties, where they performed sexual acts. Judge Hickson also reported her "belief that adult entertainment clubs are a burden on the juvenile justice system." The July 2001 report also contained excerpts from a number of newspaper articles from 1998 to 2001 describing the strip clubs and their negative impact on the community. The articles discuss the clubs, crime, child prostitution, and the prosecution at the Gold Club, an area club of ill repute now closed.

Appended to the July 2001 report were a number of foreign studies, which considered data from and the experiences of a variety of American cities. In particular, the July 2001 report included a summary produced by the National Law Center for Children and Families ("NLC") of studies of the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses across America. [2] 1272 The studies tended to show that sexually-oriented businesses, including strip clubs and adult book stores, had harmful secondary effects on their surrounding communities. Specifically, the foreign studies documented increased crime rates and reduced property values in the neighborhoods near strip clubs. In fact, of the twenty-eight studies discussed in the NLC report—studies that had not been presented to this Court when we reviewed the County's earlier ordinance in Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. of Georgia v. Fulton County, Georgia, 242 F.3d 976 (11th Cir.2001)—thirteen of them suggested that there was a correlation between adult clubs and depressed property values. [3]

2 The jurisdictions studied were: (1) Phoenix, Ariz., (2) Tuscon, Ariz., (3) Garden Grove, Cal., (4) Los Angeles, Cal., (5) Whittier, Cal., (6) Adams County, Colo., (7) Manatee County, Fla., (8) Indianapolis, Ind., (9) Minneapolis, Minn., (10) St. Paul, Minn., (11) Las Vegas, Nev., (12) Ellicottville, N.Y., (13) Islip, N.Y., (14) New York, N.Y., (15) Times Square, N.Y., (16) New Hanover County, N.C., (17) Cleveland, Ohio, (18) Oklahoma City, Okla.,

(19) Oklahoma City, Okla. (a second study), (20) Amarillo, Tex., (21) Austin, Tex., (22) Beaumont, Tex., (23) Cleburne, Tex., (24) Dallas, Tex., (25) El Paso, Tex., (26) Houston, Tex., (27) Houston, Tex. (a second study), (28) Newport News, Va., (29) Bellevue, Wash., (30) Des Moines, Wash., (31) Seattle, Wash., and (32) St. Croix County, Wis.

[3] The studies positing such a correlation were these: (1) Garden Grove, (2) Whittier, (3) St. Paul, (4) Las Vegas, (5) New York, (6) Times Square, (7) Oklahoma City, (8) Dallas, (9) El Paso, (10) Houston, (11) Newport News, (12) Des Moines, and (13) Seattle. Of these thirteen studies, six relied on some sort of statistical evidence (Whittier, St. Paul, Las Vegas, New York, Times Square, and El Paso), while the rest premised their findings on anecdotal evidence, for instance, telephone surveys of real estate appraisers or community residents (Garden Grove, Oklahoma City, Dallas, Newport News, and Des Moines), public complaints filed by local citizens (Seattle), or live testimony (Houston).

For instance, the NLC report summarized the results of a 1988 study of sexually oriented businesses in Adams County, Colo. It "concluded that there was a clearly demonstrated rise in crime and violence, and an increase in the attraction to transients to the area as a result of nude entertainment establishments." In particular, the Adams County crime statistics showed that, in one area featuring two adult establishments, 83% of all crimes occurring in 1987 were linked to the adult businesses, and half involved alcohol. In another area featuring five adult businesses, 65% of crimes committed in 1987 involved alcohol.

A 1979 study of sexually oriented businesses in Phoenix, Ariz., found that "the number of sex offenses was 506% greater in neighborhoods where sexually oriented businesses were located." These sex crimes included indecent exposure, rape, lewd and lascivious behavior, and child molestation. Property crimes and violent crimes were elevated as well (43% and 4%, respectively). A 1994 study conducted in New York "showed that concentration of [sexually oriented businesses] had resulted in significant negative impacts, including economic decline, decreased property values, and deterrence of customers, and significantly increased crime incidence." Likewise, the Newport News study, conducted in 1996, drew this conclusion: "When adjusted for population differences, the study area had 57% higher police calls and 40% higher crimes than the control area."

The July 2001 report also reproduced two foreign studies in their entirety, both of which had been summarized in the NLC report. The first of these studies considered Houston in 1997 and made a variety of findings. It stated that "lewd behavior [and] sexual contact" was occurring at adult entertainment establishments, but that much of the criminal activity was obscured by secluded areas, dim lighting, and private rooms. Moreover, the Houston police had difficulty investigating crime in 1273 the clubs because the refusal of undercover vice officers to "engage in inappropriate behavior (such as removing their clothing)" led strip club employees to assume that they were dealing with the police, thereby curtailing any ongoing or pending criminal behavior.

The other complete foreign study considered Ellicottville, N.Y. Ellicottville did not have any adult businesses in 1998, but the town decided to take a "preemptive approach" to try to "maintain[ ] the character of the community as a family oriented recreation destination" and stave off the negative secondary effects associated with adult businesses. After surveying a variety of other jurisdictions,[4] the Ellicottville study concluded that the negative secondary effects of adult businesses "include[d] crime, decreased market values, public resentment, a general blighting of the commercial district and a negative influence upon community character." The report recommended adopting zoning amendments in order to keep the adult businesses out.

[4] The Ellicottville study considered foreign studies from (1) New York, N.Y., (2) Islip, N.Y., and (3) Hyde Park, N.Y.

On July 18, 2001, Fulton County held another public hearing at which it received the 337–page July 2001 report, and heard live testimony. George Coleman, the chief of police, testified, largely summarizing the criminal findings contained in the July 2001 report. He concluded: "Investigation conducted by the Fulton County Police Department ha[s] resulted in the documentation of various criminal activities occurring both inside and in the outer vicinity of the adult entertainment establishments located within unincorporated Fulton County." Judge Hickson likewise summarized material from the report, concluding, "we are seeing a number of our children involved in the illicit activities through the adult entertainment industry where there is alcohol served and that it does have a negative impact upon the juveniles that I'm seeing in my court on a regular basis." Patrick Stafford testified about the impact of the clubs on the business district. He said of the strip clubs,

> They are not productive. They aren't helping us. The alcoholic beverages served in those establishments lead to secondary approaches to those folks going and doing criminal activity. Those folks moving on and doing things in hotels that accept lots of cash. Stop those predators. Help our image. Help the existing businesses. Help enhance the area of economic vitality. Help this County by passing this resolution.

The County then heard testimony from two County residents in support of the ordinance. Eva Galantos stated that she had "lived with an abomination of one of these clubs in the heart of Sandy Springs for more years than I care to recall," and Graddie Tucker said that the proposed ordinance was "a long time coming." Two lawyers from a pair of clubs (one of which is a plaintiff in this action) then spoke out against the ordinance.

The County, on August 15, 2001, passed a resolution to adopt the adult entertainment establishment ordinance at issue today. The resolution contained a number of findings. It stated "that nudity and sexual conduct and depiction thereof, coupled with alcohol in public places, encourages undesirable behavior and is not in the interest of public health, safety and welfare." Elaborating, the County found "that public nudity and depictions thereof, under certain circumstances, begets criminal behavior and tends to create undesirable community conditions such as community blight and property deterioration." 1274 In support of this proposition, it cited the testimony received at the public hearing, the July 2001 report, the findings incorporated in a number of court cases, [5] and the "experience of other urban counties and municipalities." The board further found that, included > among the undesirable community conditions identified with live nude entertainment are depression of property values in the surrounding neighborhood, increased expenditure for the allocation of law enforcement personnel to preserve law and order, [and] an increased burden on the judicial system as a consequence of the criminal behavior.

The board adopted the ordinance, which provided, among other things, that "[n]o alcoholic beverages of any kind shall be sold, possessed or consumed on the premises of an adult entertainment establishment." Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–79(17) (2001). [6]

[5] The cases cited were Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); and Blue Canary Corp. v. City of Milwaukee, 251 F.3d 1121 (7th Cir.2001).

[6] The ordinance defined "adult entertainment establishment" to > mean[ ] the premises of any facility upon which an adult entertainment business or adult bookstore operates or upon which such defined activities occur. The definition of an adult entertainment establishment shall not apply to nor prohibit the live performance of legitimate plays, operas, ballets, or concerts at a concert house, museum, or educational institution or facility holding an alcoholic beverage license, which derives less than 20 percent of its gross receipts from the sale of alcoholic beverages.

Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–78(3) (2001). It further stated that > "Adult entertainment" means the permitting, performing, or engaging in live acts:

>
> a. Of touching, caressing, or fondling of the breasts, buttocks, anus, vulva, or genitals;
>
> b. Of displaying of any portion of the areola of the female breast or any portion of his or her pubic hair, cleft of the buttocks, anus, vulva, or genitals;
>
> c. Of displaying of pubic hair, anus, vulva, or genitals; or > d. Which simulate sexual intercourse (homosexual or heterosexual), masturbation, sodomy, bestiality, oral copulation, or flagellation.
>

Id. § 18–78(2).

B.

On November 21, 2001, Flanigan's, Roswell, Freese, Fannies, and Parks sued the County and its commissioners in the Northern District of Georgia under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, seeking injunctive relief, a declaratory judgment, damages, and fees. They asserted that this ordinance, like the earlier version, violated their rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. Ceeda sued the County as well, and the cases were consolidated in February of 2002.

The defendant commissioners moved for summary judgment, asserting absolute and qualified immunity. The court determined that the commissioners were entitled to absolute legislative immunity (without reaching the question of qualified immunity) and granted the motion. See Order at 4, Flanigan's Enters., Inc., of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., No. 1:01–CV–3109–RLV (N.D.Ga. Dec. 3, 2002).

The defendant County also moved for summary judgment, and in an order on April 7, 2004, the district court denied the motion. Relying on Flanigan's and O'Brien, it held that the ordinance did not further an important governmental interest. See Order at 18, 1275 Flanigan's Enters., Inc., of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., No. 1:01–CV–3109–RLV (N.D.Ga. Apr. 7, 2004). Specifically, it found that the March 2001 report, which found no relationship between the clubs and crime, was "[t]he most probative evidence regarding the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments." Id. at 15–16. The court noted, conversely, that the July 2001 report was filled with "extensive anecdotal evidence." Id. at 17. It therefore concluded "that it was unreasonable to ignore the most relevant local study in favor of a less comprehensive study and foreign studies." Id. at 17–18. Because the court denied the defense motion under O'Brien, it did "not address the plaintiffs' other arguments as to why the ordinance is unconstitutional." Id. at 18.

The district court also criticized the behavior of the County. It stated, "the court is somewhat skeptical of these self-serving investigations in which the police officers are no doubt aware of the defendant's desired result. It is unclear whether the police investigations on the two dates in May and June 2001 were conducted only after the March 2001 [study] failed to achieve the desired result." Id. at 17. It further chastised the County for its failure to disclose the March 2001 report: "The court is somewhat troubled by the fact that it appears that this report was withheld from the plaintiffs until less than one week prior to the date on which the vote on the ordinance was scheduled." Id. at 16.

The plaintiffs subsequently moved for summary judgment, and the district court, stating that it saw no reason to change its view of the case, granted the motion. See Order at 6–7, Flanigan's Enters., Inc., of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., No. 1:01–CV–3109–RLV, 2006 WL 2927532 (N.D.Ga. Oct. 12, 2006). It again said that it would not address the plaintiff's other arguments as to why the ordinance was unconstitutional. See id. at 9–10. The court subsequently awarded damages to the clubs. Order at 2, Flanigan's Enters., Inc., of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., No. 1:01–CV–3109–RLV (N.D.Ga. Nov. 13, 2008).

The County timely appealed and the clubs timely cross-appealed.

II.

"We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same standards as the district court." Flanigan's Enters., Inc. of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., 242 F.3d 976, 982 (11th Cir.2001) (emphasis added) (citing Harris v. H&W Contracting Co., 102 F.3d 516, 518 (11th Cir.1996)). "We will affirm the district court if the record demonstrates there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Id. (citing Fernandez v. Bankers Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 906 F.2d 559, 564 (11th Cir.1990)).

[1] This Court and the Supreme Court have "explained that 'the reaches of the First Amendment are ultimately defined by the facts it is held to embrace, and we must thus decide for ourselves whether a given course of conduct falls on the near or far side of the line of constitutional protection.' " ACLU of Florida, Inc. v. Miami–Dade County Sch. Bd., 557 F.3d 1177, 1205 (11th Cir.2009) (quoting Hurley v. Irish–Am. Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 567, 115 S.Ct. 2338, 132 L.Ed.2d 487 (1995)).

> Therefore, the conclusion of law as to a Federal right and [the] finding of fact are so intermingled as to make it necessary, in order to pass upon the Federal question, to analyze the facts. In such cases, the Supreme Court has instructed us to make an independent examination of the whole record, and has recognized > our ultimate power ... to conduct an independent review of constitutional claims when necessary.

1276 Id. at 1206 (quotation marks and internal citations omitted) (alterations in original) (quoting Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of U.S., Inc., 466 U.S. 485, 506, 508 & n. 27, 104 S.Ct. 1949, 80 L.Ed.2d 502 (1984)). This "constitutional responsibility ... cannot be delegated to the trier of fact." Id. (quoting Bose, 466 U.S. at 501, 104 S.Ct. 1949); see also Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 986–87 ("[O]ur decision today appears to result in constitutional fact finding.... However, we have no choice.").

[2] Our review of the district court's factfinding is, accordingly, mixed. "Ordinarily, we review district court factfindings only for clear error, but First Amendment issues are not ordinary. Where the First Amendment Free Speech Clause is involved our review of the district court's findings of 'constitutional facts,' as distinguished from ordinary historical facts, is de novo." ACLU v. Miami–Dade, 557 F.3d at 1203 (citing CAMP Legal Def. Fund, Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 451 F.3d 1257, 1268 (11th Cir.2006)) (additional citations omitted).

[3] [4] Historical facts "are facts about the who, what, where, when, and how of the controversy," id. at 1206, and we review them for clear error. "By contrast, under the assumptions about the law that we [make] for purposes of deciding this case, we must determine the 'why' facts. Those are the core constitutional facts that involve the reasons the [defendant] took the challenged action." Id. at 1206; see also Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Fla., 490 F.3d 860, 870–71 (11th Cir.2007) ("[T]he district court's methodology in making that calculation —such as whether a particular site is 'available' and provides a reasonable avenue for communicating an adult business's erotic message—is a legal determination that we review de novo."). We find these core constitutional facts—the "why" facts—"as though the district court had never made any findings about them." ACLU v. Miami–Dade, 557 F.3d at 1207.

III.

[5] [6] Nude dancing is a form of expression protected by the First Amendment. See Krueger v. City of Pensacola, 759 F.2d 851, 854 (11th Cir.1985); Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 985 n. 12. "To determine what level of scrutiny applies, we must decide whether the State's regulation is related to the suppression of expression. If the governmental purpose in enacting the regulation is unrelated to the suppression of expression, then the regulation need only satisfy intermediate scrutiny under O'Brien." Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 983 (citing City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000)).

[7] "[A] city ordinance prohibiting nude dancing in establishments licensed to sell liquor is content-neutral and therefore, subject to review under the O'Brien test." Id. (citing Sammy's of Mobile, Ltd. v. City of Mobile, 140 F.3d 993, 996 (11th Cir.1998), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1052, 120 S.Ct. 1553, 146 L.Ed.2d 459 (2000)). This is the case because the goal of such regulation is not the curtailment of protected expression: "regulations targeting undesirable secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments that serve alcoholic beverages are unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing." Id. at 984 (citing Artistic Entm't, Inc. v. City of Warner Robins, 223 F.3d 1306, 1309 (11th Cir.2000)). Rather, these ordinances attempt to insulate the communities surrounding the adult entertainment establishments from the undesirable elements that tend to accompany those businesses. They are, at their core, social and economic regulations aimed at improving communities and promoting health, safety and welfare.

1277 [8] [9] The Fulton County ordinance considered today does not prohibit nude dancing. Rather, it prohibits the sale, possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages "on the premises of an adult entertainment establishment." Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–79(17) (2001). The ordinance is content neutral and its enactment is unrelated to the suppression of speech. We, therefore, subject it to intermediate review under United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). "Under O'Brien, an ordinance is valid if: (1) it serves a substantial interest within the power of the government; (2) the ordinance furthers that interest; (3) the interest served is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) there is no less restrictive alternative." Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 984 (citing O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673).

[10] Three of the four prongs of the O'Brien test are not at issue in this case. The first prong—a substantial interest within the power of government—is easily met here. "It has been by now clearly established that reducing the secondary effects associated with adult businesses is a substantial government interest 'that must be accorded high respect.' " Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Fla., 490 F.3d 860, 873–74 (11th Cir.2007) (quoting City of L.A. v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 444, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment))[7]; see also Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 984 ("Such interests are substantial government interests that satisfy the first part of the O'Brien test.") (emphasis added) (citing Pap's, 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265).

7 Justice Kennedy's concurrence in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), is considered to be the holding in the case. See Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Fla., 490 F.3d 860, 874 n. 20 (11th Cir.2007) (citing Peek–A–Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee County, Fla., 337 F.3d 1251, 1264 (11th Cir.2003)).

In their resolution to adopt the ordinance, the board of commissioners eleven times discussed the negative secondary effects of live nude dancing.[8] Moreover, the ordinance itself states its purpose in the preamble:

8 The board used different phrasing at different junctures. Its references to the secondary effects were: (1) "undesirable behavior," (2) "disturbances," (3) "undesirable secondary effects," (4) "undesirable secondary effects," (5) "negative secondary effects," (6) "criminal behavior and ... undesirable community conditions," (7) "criminal behavior and ... undesirable community conditions," (8) "undesirable community conditions," (9) "crime and ... property values," (10) "undesirable secondary effects," and (11) "undesirable secondary effects."

> The purpose of this Article is to regulate adult entertainment establishments with the intention that, through this ordinance, many types of criminal activities frequently engendered by such businesses and the adverse effect on property values and on the public health, safety, and welfare of the County, and on its citizens and property, and on the character of its neighborhoods and development, will be curtailed and/or prevented.... This Article is intended to represent a balancing of competing interests: reduced criminal activity and protection of neighborhoods and development through the regulation of adult entertainment establishments versus any legally protected rights of adult entertainment establishments and patrons.
>
> Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–76. Without question, Fulton County passed this ordinance out of a concern over the secondary effects of alcohol and live nude dancing on the community. These effects 1278 are, specifically, increased criminal activity, decreased property values, and urban blight and decay generally. It is undeniable that the government has a substantial interest in curtailing such effects.

[11] The third prong of the O'Brien test—regulation unrelated to the suppression of free expression—is easily met. Both this Court and "the Supreme Court have expressly held that an ordinance focusing on the secondary effects associated with the combination of nude dancing and alcohol consumption is unrelated to the suppression of free expression." Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 984 (citing Pap's, 529 U.S. at 293, 120 S.Ct. 1382, and Wise Enters., Inc. v. Unified Gov't of Athens–Clarke County, Ga., 217 F.3d 1360, 1364 (11th Cir.2000)). As the prior analysis demonstrates, this ordinance focuses on the secondary effects associated with alcohol and live nude dancing. Moreover, the board of commissioners said that it was not its intent "to deny to any person the right to speech or expression protected by the United States or Georgia Constitutions, nor [is it] the intent to deny or restrict the rights of any adult to obtain or view any sexually oriented performance or materials protected by the United States or Georgia Constitutions." The ordinance itself states: "This Article is not intended as a de facto prohibition of legally protected forms of expression." Fulton County, Ga., Code § 18–76. The ordinance is, therefore, unrelated to the suppression of free expression.

[12] The fourth prong—the least restrictive means—is easily met as well. Because the ordinance targets only adult entertainment establishments where alcohol is consumed, it is sufficiently narrow to meet the O'Brien test: "The ordinance does not prohibit all nude dancing, but only restricts nude dancing in those locations where the unwanted secondary effects arise." Wise Enters., 217 F.3d at 1365 (cited in Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 984–85).

[13] [14] We focus our analysis, then, on the second prong of the O'Brien test—whether the ordinance furthers the governmental interest. To meet the furtherance prong, a municipality "must have 'some factual basis for the claim that [adult] entertainment in establishments serving alcoholic beverages results in increased criminal activity' and other undesirable community conditions." Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 985 (alteration in original) (quoting Grand Faloon Tavern, Inc. v. Wicker, 670 F.2d 943, 949 (11th Cir.1982)). "The government must ... show that the articulated concern had more than merely speculative factual grounds, and that it was actually a motivating factor in the passage of the legislation." Krueger, 759 F.2d at 855 (citations omitted).

[15] [16] [17] The factual basis may come from a number of places. "[A] city need not 'conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses.' " Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 875 (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment)). "Although a municipality 'must rely on at least some pre-enactment evidence,' such evidence can consist of 'a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion.' " Id. (quoting Peek–A–Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee County, Fla., 337 F.3d 1251, 1268 (11th Cir.2003)); see also City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion) (discussing the role of prior legal opinions in an O'Brien analysis). Governments are also 1279 empowered to rely on "their own wisdom and common sense," Sammy's of Mobile, Ltd. v. City of Mobile, 140 F.3d 993, 997 (11th Cir.1998), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1052, 120 S.Ct. 1553, 146 L.Ed.2d 459 (2000), and "[c]ommon sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior." Id. (alteration in original) (quoting N.Y. State Liquor Auth. v. Bellanca, 452 U.S. 714, 718, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 (1981)).

[18] While a governmental entity need not support its regulations with voluminous data, it may not "rely on 'shoddy data or reasoning' and its 'evidence must fairly support [its] rationale.' " Peek–A–Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1269 (alteration in original) (citing Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion)); see also Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 880. Nevertheless, "[a]necdotal evidence is not 'shoddy' per se." Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 881.

[19] In order to establish that "secondary effects pose a threat, the city need not 'conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities ... so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses.' " Flanigan's, 242 F.3d at 985 (alteration in original) (quoting Pap's, 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382). However, if a governmental entity does perform empirical studies, it cannot later "ignore the results." Id. at 986.

[20] [21] Ultimately, the test hinges on the reasonableness of the government regulation in light of the available evidence: "Our own cases demonstrate that we require some reasonable justification for legislation which suppresses, albeit incidentally, protected expression." Id. at 985 (citing Sammy's, 140 F.3d at 997, and Wise Enters., 217 F.3d at 1364). The test requires deference to the reasoned judgment of a governmental entity: "a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and ... very little evidence is required." Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 880 (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment)).

A plurality of the Supreme Court has directed that local legislatures receive this latitude because deference > is the product of a careful balance between competing interests. On the one hand, we have an obligation to exercise independent judgment when First Amendment rights are implicated. On the other hand, we must acknowledge that the [governmental entity] is in a better position than the Judiciary to gather and evaluate data on local problems.

Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (citations and quotation marks omitted). As Justice Kennedy stated in the controlling opinion, "[t]he Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion." Id. at 451–52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (citations omitted). In the end, "[o]ur review is designed to determine whether the City's rationale was a reasonable one, and even if [the plaintiff] demonstrates that another conclusion was also reasonable, we cannot simply substitute our own judgment for the City's." Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 882.

[22] With these legal principles in mind, and affording proper deference to the County's expertise on the nature of problems confronting its communities and its citizens, we consider the constitutionality of the Fulton County ordinance. We conclude that it was reasonable for the County to rely on the voluminous evidence 1280 before it—including the many findings of the July 2001 report, the numerous foreign studies appended to it, and the live testimony of the chief of police and the chief judge of the juvenile court—and that the ordinance therefore survives intermediate scrutiny.

The report was full of evidence of crime occurring around the County's strip clubs. Thus, for example, Operation Summit Up, described in the report, established that the areas surrounding the strip clubs are rife with sex and drug crimes. Over a three-week period in 1998, County police made 167 arrests. These arrests arose from 221 total charges, including ninety-three for sex-related crimes and thirty-four for drug-related crimes. And from the 167 arrests, prosecutors secured 166 convictions. Similarly, the report's discussion of beats 21 and 23 shows that those beats accounted for a disproportionate amount of crime in the precinct, and that grid B43, which contains three of the strip clubs, made for a disproportionate amount of crime in those two beats. Moreover, the surveillance operations suggest strongly that crime did occur at the clubs themselves.

The report also described the impact of the clubs on the County's youth. The Hickson affidavit discussed how many prostituted girls worked in the clubs and performed sex acts for money around the clubs and at private parties. The strip clubs, according to Judge Hickson, in addition to contributing to the sexual exploitation of these underage girls, also imposed a burden on the judicial system when the girls were brought before the juvenile court.

The report also addressed the negative secondary effects of the clubs in a non-criminal context. The Stafford affidavit, along with the accompanying photographs, suggest that the areas around the clubs are indeed blighted. The image created is one of deterioration and neglect, an urban landscape dominated by cheap hotels catering to the sex trade. The newspaper articles further portrayed adult entertainment establishments as a drag on property values, neighborhood development, and community safety.

Completing the July 2001 report were the foreign studies. All told, Fulton County considered the experiences of thirty American jurisdictions. These foreign studies, summarized by the NLC and in two cases reproduced in their entirety by the County, painted a moribund picture of the adult business and the communities surrounding them. They told of crime, disease, violence, blight, and depressed property values.

The plaintiff clubs argue, nevertheless, that the principal thesis of the July 2001 report—that the mixture of alcohol and nude dancing leads to crime—is undercut by the March 2001 report, which found that crime was a greater problem at bars without nude dancing. Yet the clubs—and the district court—misapprehend the nature of our inquiry. We cannot simply survey the vast field of literature and declare unconstitutional any ordinance which fails to conform with our own sense of that course which is most prudent. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 881 ("[D]emonstrating the possibility of such an alternative does not necessarily mean that the City was barred from reaching other reasonable and different conclusions."). Rather, we consider the evidence the municipality relied on in passing the ordinance, and determine whether such reliance was reasonable. See id. at 882. Because the July 2001 report established negative secondary effects both criminal and urban, we hold that it was reasonable for the County to rely on it.

Moreover, the March 2001 report championed by the clubs has its own infirmities. 1281 The principal finding of the March 2001 report is that, for a three-year period, bars without nude dancing generated more 911 calls than bars with nude dancing. Yet as the County argues, and as this Court has already noted, sex-related offenses often do not prompt a call to the police:

> The experts' studies are based solely on CAD data, which, in lay terms, is essentially 911 emergency call data. Relying on such data to study crime rates is problematic, however, because many crimes do not result in calls to 911, and, therefore, do not have corresponding records in the City's CAD data. This is especially true for crimes[ ] such as lewdness and prostitution....

> Such crimes are often "victimless," in the sense that all of those involved are willing participants, and, therefore, they rarely result in calls to 911.... [A]n encounter between a prostitute and a "john" rarely leads to a 911 call. By contrast, the City's "anecdotal" evidence may be a more accurate assessment of such crimes because it is not based on a data set that undercounts the incidents of such "victimless" crimes.

Id. at 882–83 (citation omitted).

It was not unreasonable for the County to credit the July 2001 report, which portrayed in great detail the criminal activity that occurs in and around the clubs, over a March 2001 study which relied on police call data, a method notoriously unreliable under these circumstances. See id. at 883 n. 33 ("We also note that at least three other circuits have rejected, for similar reasons, attempts by plaintiffs to use studies based on CAD data to cast direct doubt on an ordinance that the municipality supported with evidence of the sort relied upon by the City of Daytona Beach here." (citing Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 395 F.3d 1114, 1126–27 (9th Cir.2005), G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, Wis., 350 F.3d 631, 639 (7th Cir.2003), and SOB, Inc. v. County of Benton, 317 F.3d 856, 863 & n. 2 (8th Cir.2003))).

We note other drawbacks to the March 2001 report as well. First and foremost, its scope is much narrower than that of the July 2001 report. In focusing exclusively on calls for police service, the March 2001 report fails to cast any doubt on the evidence of community blight, urban decay, exploitation of minors, and increased burdens on the judicial system documented in the July 2001 report. Cf. id. at 875–76. Next, the March 2001 report comes with a disclaimer that its findings are indeed limited: "The data does not address other secondary factors that may influence the calls for services at either type of establishment." Moreover, the March 2001 report makes no attempt to distinguish between types of crime. There is no way to tell from the report, for instance, whether masturbation for hire and other sex crime is lower or higher in and around the adult establishments—we are told, simply, that the non-adult bars generate more calls for service. Even if we were to accept that crime is greater in and around the non-adult establishments—and the record is hotly disputed on this point—a municipality would still be empowered to act in order to check a class of crime it found to be particularly troublesome. [9]

9 The County also argues that a police moratorium on enforcement of the 1997 adult entertainment establishment ordinance reduced the number of 911 calls. We find this argument unpersuasive, as it presupposes that a violation of the ordinance—a prohibited lap dance, for example—would likely give rise to a police call for service. The County next asserts that victims of or witnesses to crime, embarrassed to have been at an adult establishment, are reluctant to call the police from a strip club, so they move off-site before dialing 911. This argument further underscores the unreliability of police call data as an accurate measure of crime rates.

1282 The plaintiff clubs offer the affidavit of Robert Bruce McLaughlin, who criticizes the foreign studies cited in the July 2001 report and challenges the reliability of the report itself. We are aware that there are some shortcomings in the July 2001 report. Some of the statistics are offered here without adequate controls, and when the report does engage in statistical comparison, its methodology begins to fray. For instance, the report notes that the BYOB club accounted for only 4% of the incidents reported at six Fulton County strip clubs. However, the report reveals later that the BYOB club is only open three days a week. If the report reconciles its conclusion with this fact, nowhere does it say so.

These arguable defects, however, when considered alongside the entirety of the record the County considered, do not yield constitutional infirmity. We are called upon today only to consider the constitutionality of an ordinance targeting the incidental effects of expressive activity protected by the Constitution. The foundation upon which the County relied need not be perfect; it need only be reasonable. We emphasize that, in this context, the County need not offer advanced statistical evidence, nor refute every conceivable interpretation of the data, even if those interpretations may be more compelling than the one reached by the municipality. It need only show that it acted reasonably, and here, Fulton County has met this burden.

Plainly, we are not faced here with the same situation we confronted the first time these parties came before this Court. It is one thing to compare foreign studies (in that case, four foreign studies) in support of an ordinance to a chorus of local studies decrying the wisdom of the ordinance. See Flanigan's Enters., Inc. of Ga. v. Fulton County, Ga., 242 F.3d 976, 986 (11th Cir.2001)

(holding that it was unreasonable "to ignore relevant local studies and rely instead upon remote foreign studies"). It is quite another thing entirely to compare a wide-ranging set of statistical, observational, and anecdotal evidence, bolstered by many foreign studies, in support of an ordinance to one study of at least arguable empirical merit in contravention of that ordinance.

While the evidence offered has limitations, it certainly creates a vivid image of a County in which strip clubs that served alcohol played a prominent and unwelcome role. Sex and drug crimes occurred in and around the clubs and the neighborhood's cheap hotels, and required law enforcement and the judiciary (the juvenile court, at least) to invest resources in combating the secondary effects. Moreover, the neighborhoods themselves were dilapidated and in need of repair. It was not unreasonable for the County to rely on this data when passing an ordinance forbidding the sale, consumption, and possession of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments.

We do not share the skepticism of the district court regarding the motives of Fulton County. It is undisputed that the County wished to reduce the secondary effects of alcohol and adult entertainment within its borders: it had passed a similar ordinance, for similar reasons, in 1997, and its board of commissioners ordered a new investigation into the problem just as soon as this Court struck down the 1997 ordinance in 2001. That Fulton County sought to compile empirical evidence of a problem it believed to exist—evidence it assumed was necessary under the law of this Circuit—does not somehow divest the project of all legitimacy.

Moreover, we are not alarmed that the County continued its investigation into the subject after March 2001, when it received the Adult and Non–Adult Entertainment Establishments Statistical Analysis. Local 1283 problems are often complex. They may require careful study and patient resort to sources whose messages are sometimes inconsistent. County commissioners are not bound to abide by the conclusions of the first reports to cross their desks, no matter how clumsy or incomplete. Rather, a county may consider an issue of local governance so that it fully understands the contours of the problem, and the most efficacious ways to combat it. That the County's investigation of the clubs continued after the delivery of the March 2001 report does not render nugatory the totality of what it learned later.

We have explained that the evidence relied on by a municipality in support of an ordinance may not be shoddy, and the process by which it investigates a perceived problem may not be a sham. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 880. The defendant clubs suggest that the fix was in from the start, but we are satisfied that Fulton County's concern for the health and safety of its communities is real, and that its reliance on the evidence it offers is not unreasonable.

Because the challenged ordinance survives intermediate scrutiny, damages should not have been awarded to the clubs, and we need not determine whether the amounts awarded were proper. We express no opinion, however, about the remaining issues in the case—whether the ordinance allows for reasonable alternative channels of communication, whether it imposes an impermissible prior restraint, and whether it unlawfully imposes a tax on conduct protected under the First Amendment —which were raised by the clubs in their cross-appeal but were never reached by the district court. These are best addressed in the first instance by the district court. Accordingly, we REVERSE the judgment of the district court and REMAND for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

REVERSED and REMANDED.

All Citations

596 F.3d 1265, 22 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 530

588 F.3d 360
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

EAST BROOKS BOOKS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
SHELBY COUNTY, TENN.,
et al., Defendants-Appellees,
Robert E. Cooper, Jr., State of Tennessee Attorney General, Intervenor Defendant-Appellee.

No. 08-5958.
|
Argued: April 20, 2009.
|
Decided and Filed: Nov. 25, 2009.

Synopsis

Background: Bookstore that sold sexually-oriented material brought action challenging constitutionality of Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act, which regulated adult bookstores. The United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, S. Thomas Anderson, J., 2008 WL 2558005, denied bookstore's motion for preliminary injunction. Bookstore appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Boggs, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] Act was rationally related to state's legitimate interest in reducing adverse secondary effects;

[2] provision of Act, requiring revocation of adult establishment's license if it served or sold intoxicating beverages on the premises, was not overbroad facially, or as applied to adult bookstore;

[3] Act did not violate Due Process Clause by imposing strict liability upon owner for violations by employees; and [4] penalty provision of Act was not invalid prior restraint on speech.

Affirmed.

Karen Nelson Moore, Circuit Judge, filed opinion, concurring in the judgment only.

West Headnotes (17)

[1] Constitutional Law
Rational Basis Standard; Reasonableness

Under the rational basis standard, a classification must be upheld against an equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Rational Basis Standard; Reasonableness

A law will be sustained against an equal protection challenge under the rational basis standard if it can be said to advance a legitimate government interest, even if the law seems unwise or works to the disadvantage of a particular group, or if the rationale for it seems tenuous. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Differing levels set forth or compared

The rational basis standard for evaluating an equal protection challenge permits a court to hypothesize interests that might support legislative distinctions, whereas the heightened scrutiny standard limits the realm of justification to demonstrable reality. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act, which regulated adult bookstores and defined such bookstores as those restricting admission to adults, was rationally related to state's legitimate interest in reducing the adverse secondary effects of such bookstores targeted by the Act, and thus, did not violate the Equal Protection Clause; although the Act arguably exempted bookstores that did not restrict admission to adults, any bookstore selling adult material that admitted minors ran risk of violating Tennessee law that prohibited the display of such material anywhere minors were lawfully admitted, and Act allowed counties to implement gradual reform to ameliorate adverse secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; West's T.C.A. §§ 7-51-1102(1), 39-17-914.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law

Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Provision of Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act, requiring revocation of adult establishment's license if it served or sold intoxicating beverages on the premises, was not overbroad facially, or as applied to adult bookstore, as would violate the First Amendment protection of free speech; there was no showing that any adult bookstores intended to seek a liquor license, that the threat of license revocation for alcohol use would deter adult bookstore owners from offering adult fare in their establishments, or that the prohibition on the consumption of alcohol would keep out customers wishing to exercise their right to peruse adult-oriented materials offered by such bookstores, and evidence reasonably established that availability of alcohol on the premises of any adult-oriented establishment would magnify adverse secondary effects of such establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7-51-1109.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Substantial impact, necessity of

A law is overbroad under the First Amendment if it reaches a substantial number of impermissible applications relative to the law's legitimate sweep. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Overbreadth

Overbroad laws warrant invalidation to prevent the chilling of future protected expression, and thus, any law imposing restrictions so broad that it chills speech outside the purview of its legitimate regulatory purpose will be struck down. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

While the traditional requirements of standing are relaxed in the context of a facial challenge to a restriction on expression on overbreadth grounds, a plaintiff must show that it suffered an injury that is fairly traceable to the allegedly unconstitutional statute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

In the context of content-neutral time, place, or manner regulations, narrow tailoring under the First Amendment does not require that the chosen measures be the least speech-restrictive means of advancing the government's interests. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

The narrow tailoring requirement for a restriction on expression is satisfied if the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

In selecting the means to advance the legitimate interest in controlling adverse secondary effects of adult entertainment, to satisfy the narrow-tailoring requirement for a restriction on expression, governments are entitled to rely on evidence reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Provision of Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act, requiring revocation of adult establishment's license if it served or sold intoxicating beverages on the premises, did not violate Due Process Clause by imposing strict liability upon owner for violations by employees; a violation by an employee did not imperil the owner's license unless the owner knew or should have known of the violation, and authorized, approved, or failed to take reasonable efforts to prevent the violation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; West's T.C.A. § 7-51-1109.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Penalty provision of Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act, specifying that an operator of an adult-oriented establishment whose license was revoked was disqualified from receiving an adult-oriented establishment license for five years, was not an invalid prior restraint on future protected expression; the Act provided for prompt final judicial review of a license revocation, and it provided for maintenance of the status quo pending the final outcome of judicial proceedings concerning the revocation decision. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. §§ 7-51-1109, 7-51-1110.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Licenses

One has standing to challenge a statute as an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech on the ground that it delegates overly broad licensing discretion to an administrative office, whether or not his conduct could be proscribed by a properly drawn statute, and whether or not he applied for a license. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

Constitutional Law
Time limits for grant or denial

Constitutional invalidity of prior restraints on speech may result from one or both of two evils:(1) the risk of censorship associated with the vesting of unbridled discretion in government officials, and (2) the risk of indefinitely suppressing permissible speech when a licensing law fails to provide for the prompt issuance of a license. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

Prior restraints on speech are not unconstitutional per se. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Availability of judicial review

Where license issuance is based on explicit and objective criteria, a licensing scheme passes constitutional muster, as a valid prior restraint against speech, when it guarantees applicants a prompt final judicial decision on the merits of a license denial and preservation of the status quo while an application or judicial review of a license denial is pending. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

362 ARGUED: Frierson M. Graves, Jr., Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell & Berkowitz, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellant. Robert B. Rolwing, Assistant County Attorney, Shelby County Government, 363 Memphis, Tennessee, Steven A. Hart, Office of The Tennessee Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellees. ON BRIEF: Michael F. Pleasants, Sr., Pleasants Law Firm, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellant. Robert B. Rolwing, Assistant County Attorney, Shelby County Government, Memphis, Tennessee, Steven A. Hart, Office Of The Tennessee Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, Thomas Roane Waring III, City Attorney's Office, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellees.

Before: BOGGS, MOORE, and SUTTON, Circuit Judges.

BOGGS, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which SUTTON, J., joined. MOORE, J. (p. 371-72), delivered a separate opinion concurring only in the judgment.

OPINION

BOGGS, Circuit Judge.

This is the second of two related actions challenging Tennessee's Adult-Oriented Establishment Registration Act of 1998, Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1101 et seq., (the "Act" or "Tennessee Act"), a county-option law adopted by Shelby County, Tenn. Plaintiff-Appellant East Brooks Books, Inc. ("Plaintiff") operates two bookstores that sell non-obscene sexually oriented material and restrict admission to adults only. On February 14, 2008, Plaintiff filed suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, naming Shelby County and the City of Memphis as defendants, seeking preliminary and permanent injunctions, as well as a declaratory judgment, on the grounds that the Act is unconstitutional on its face and as applied to Plaintiff. The Attorney General of Tennessee was granted leave to intervene to defend the constitutionality of the Act. Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction was denied. Plaintiff appeals from the denial of its motion for a preliminary injunction. We now affirm the district court's denial of the preliminary injunction.

I

The Tennessee Act is described in detail in the related action challenging its constitutionality, Entertainment Prod., Inc. v. Shelby County, Tenn., No. 08-5494, 588 F.3d 372, 2009 WL 4061704 (6th Cir.2009). This Plaintiff challenges the Tennessee Act on six grounds, some of which duplicate the substance of the claims made by the plaintiffs in Entertainment Productions. Here we address only those claims that were not resolved by our opinion in that case.

II

A

Plaintiff's first argument is that the definition of "adult bookstore" violates the Equal Protection Clause. The Tennessee Act regulates "adult-oriented establishments," which include "adult bookstore[s]":

> "Adult bookstore" means a business that [1] offers, as its principal or predominate stock or trade, sexually oriented material, devices, or paraphernalia, whether determined by the total number of sexually oriented materials, devices or paraphernalia offered for sale or by the retail value of such materials, devices or paraphernalia, specified sexual activities, or any combination or form thereof, whether printed, filmed, recorded or live, and [2] that restricts or purports to restrict admission to adults or to any class of adults. The definition specifically includes items sexually oriented in nature, regardless of how labeled or sold, such as adult novelties, risqué gifts or marital aids;

Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1102(1) (emphasis and numeration added). A bookstore will 364 be deemed "adult" under the Act only if, first, its "principal or predominate stock" consists of sexually oriented or adult materials, and second, if it "restricts or purports to restrict" its premises to adults. Plaintiff argues that the second criterion makes the Act under-inclusive, in violation of the Equal Protection Clause. While a bookstore with a predominantly adult stock that excludes minors from its premises is subject to the Act, an identical bookstore that does not so restrict admission-by, for example, setting up a "small front room" containing its insignificant stock of non-adult materials-is not subject to the Act. Plaintiff argues that distinguishing between these two types of bookstores constitutes unequal treatment without a rational basis. The rational basis for the distinction is absent, Plaintiff maintains, because both types of bookstores are equally likely to produce the adverse secondary effects targeted by the Act, and no rationale supports exempting from regulation adult bookstores that admit minors. Appellant's Br. at 21-22.

Equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment "must coexist with the practical necessity that most legislation classifies for one purpose or another, with resulting disadvantage to various groups or persons." Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 631, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 134 L.Ed.2d 855 (1996) (citations omitted). The Supreme Court has stated that courts will "uphold the legislative classification," if "a law neither burdens a fundamental right nor targets a suspect class, ... so long as it bears a rational relation to some legitimate end." Ibid.

[1] [2] In this case, no "suspect class" is targeted. Nor does Plaintiff argue that a fundamental right associated with the freedom of expression is burdened. [1] Plaintiff concedes that this classification needs only a rational basis to survive constitutional scrutiny. Appellant's Br. at 21-22. "Under the rational basis standard, a classification 'must be upheld against equal protection challenge if there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the classification.' " Richland Bookmart v. Nichols, 278 F.3d 570, 576 (6th Cir.2002) (quoting Tuan Anh Nguyen v. INS, 533 U.S. 53, 77, 121 S.Ct. 2053, 150 L.Ed.2d 115 (2001)). "[A] law will be sustained if it can be said to advance a legitimate government interest, even if the law seems unwise or works to the disadvantage of a particular group, or if the rationale for it seems tenuous." Romer, 517 U.S. at 632, 116 S.Ct. 1620.

1 Nor could it be successfully argued that a fundamental right is implicated in this context, notwithstanding the fact that the Act obviously regulates expressive activity. This court has explained that:

> Although in some cases the First Amendment is violated because "the underinclusiveness of a law-i.e., the failure of the government to regulate other, similar activity-may give rise to a conclusion that the government has in fact made an impermissible distinction on the basis of the content of the regulated speech," such a conclusion is not possible where the content of the differently regulated speech is "virtually identical."

Richland Bookmart v. Nichols, 278 F.3d 570, 575 (6th Cir.2002) (quoting DLS v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 412 n. 7 (6th > Cir.1997)). Since Plaintiff's claim is predicated on the assumption that the regulated and the unregulated "speech"-i.e., adult merchandise-is "virtually identical," there can be no risk of government's invidious discrimination against particular content of speech.

As an initial matter, we note that the bookstores allegedly advantaged by an exemption from the Act are probably few in number, if any such establishments exist at all. Tennessee law prohibits the display of adult material "anywhere minors are lawfully admitted." 365 Tenn.Code Ann. § 39-17-914; Davis-Kidd Booksellers v. McWherter, 866 S.W.2d 520 (Tenn.1993). Any bookstore "principally or predominantly" devoted to adult merchandise that wishes to avoid regulation as an "adult-oriented establishment" and sets up a small general-merchandise section, to which minors are admitted, runs a high risk of violating this law and incurring criminal penalties. [2] It is unsurprising, therefore, that Plaintiff does not identify any actual bookstores in Shelby County that meet the first, but not the second, criterion of an "adult bookstore" under the Act.

> 2 To be sure, a "high risk" is not a certainty: a store that sells some adult materials and admits minors to its premises may avoid sanctions if the adult material is made inaccessible to minors as specified § 39-17-914(b) (e.g., by taking "[r]easonable steps ... to prevent minors from perusing the material," or by locating the adult material in "an area restricted to adults"). While Defendants may be exaggerating when they assert that such stores do not exist, it does seem difficult for a store that sells enough adult materials to constitute a "principal or predominate" share to take the necessary "reasonable steps" to prevent minors from seeing that material. A bookstore that seeks to avoid the Tennessee Act would find it difficult to comply with § 39-17-914-and in this light, such a bookstore is not truly advantaged by comparison with a similar store that is subject to the Act but does not run a high risk of criminal penalties under § 39-17-914.

[3] Even if the kinds of bookstores Plaintiff describes exist, or, as Plaintiff suggests, will come into existence as operators "scramble to establish a small front room of some minor amount of non-adult materials" into which minors are admitted, Appellant's Br. at 23, the "classification" does not lack a rational basis. "Th[e] [rational-basis] standard permits a court to hypothesize interests that might support legislative distinctions, whereas heightened scrutiny limits the realm of justification to demonstrable reality." Nguyen, 533 U.S. at 77, 121 S.Ct. 2053. We can readily hypothesize the state's interest in confining regulation to bookstores that meet both definitional criteria. As a matter of practice, sexually oriented businesses, including bookstores, commonly restrict admission to adults. Moreover, only those businesses that cater to adults would restrict access in this manner. Restricted access is thus a reliable indicator that the goods offered or displayed on the premises are of an adult or explicit nature. A prominent display advertising an establishment as an "adult store," moreover, is a more objective indicator that the store is of the kind the Act aims to regulate, than the mere share of its stock or trade comprised of adult materials. Hence, it is not irrational for the legislature to use the access restriction as a means of identifying those bookstores that are likely to produce adverse secondary effects targeted by the Act.

[4] Our court has adjudicated an analogous challenge to a restriction of business hours, which applied to adult establishments offering live entertainment but excepted those offering "nonlive entertainment." Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp. Bd. of Trs., 411 F.3d 777, 792 (6th Cir.2005). We explained that so long as a regulation "furthers a substantial government interest ... and there is no evidence of an impermissible motive on the part of" the legislature, such an exception "is not a cause for concern under rational-basis review because a government may implement its program of reform by gradually adopting regulations that only partially ameliorate a perceived evil." Ibid. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); see also Richland Bookmart, 278 F.3d at 577-78 (holding that exempting live cabarets from operating-hour restrictions applicable to adult bookstores was 366 rational because the legislature took a legitimate and "plausible step-by-step approach" to combating secondary effects). The same reasoning is pertinent to this case: even if Plaintiff is correct that the exempted bookstores are as liable to produce pernicious secondary effects as the regulated bookstores, Tennessee and Shelby County are permitted to implement a gradual and incomplete solution "that only partially ameliorate[s]" such effects.

Thus, we hold that the district court did not err in determining that Plaintiff has not shown a substantial likelihood of succeeding on the merits of the challenge to the "adult bookstore" definition.

B

[5] Plaintiff further claims that the prohibition on the sale, use, or consumption of alcoholic beverages is overbroad and/or not narrowly tailored, and violates the Due Process Clause. While alcohol is not explicitly prohibited in the "Prohibited activities" section of the Act, its sale or use is a specified ground for a revocation, suspension or annulment of a license:

> (a) The board shall revoke, suspend or annul a license or permit for any of the following reasons:
>
> ...
>
> (5) Any intoxicating liquor or malt beverage is served or consumed on the premises of the adult-oriented establishment, when an operator, employee, entertainer, or escort knew, or should have known, of the violation and authorized, approved, or, in the exercise of due diligence, failed to take reasonable efforts to prevent the violation;

Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1109. Plaintiff conflates its claims that the provision is overbroad and that it is not narrowly tailored as applied to adult bookstores. While banning alcohol at adult cabarets that present live entertainment is justified by the secondary effects resulting from the "explosive combination of nude dancing and alcohol consumption," Plaintiff argues, there is no evidence connecting alcohol consumption on the premises of an adult bookstore to the targeted secondary effects. Appellant's Br. at 51.

[6] [7] A challenge to this provision on the basis of overbreadth is without merit. "A law is overbroad under the First Amendment if it 'reaches a substantial number of impermissible applications' relative to the law's legitimate sweep." Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 274 F.3d 377, 387 (6th Cir.2001) (citations omitted). Overbroad laws warrant invalidation "to prevent the chilling of future protected expression," and thus, "any law imposing restrictions so broad that it chills speech outside the purview of its legitimate regulatory purpose will be struck down." Ibid. A proscription on alcohol is not in itself a prohibition on any protected expression. Thus, to be persuaded by the claim that prohibiting alcohol in adult bookstores "reaches a substantial number of impermissible applications," we need to believe that the threat of license suspension for alcohol use will deter bookstore owners from offering adult fare in their establishments, or that the prohibition on the consumption of alcohol will keep out customers wishing to exercise their protected right to peruse adult-oriented materials offered by the bookstores. Neither prospect is probable, in view of the likely fact that the primary purpose of adult bookstores is to sell adult materials, and the primary purpose of an average customer in such an establishment is to purchase or view said materials. Plaintiff makes no effort to show that extending the prohibition on alcohol to adult bookstores actually 367 and substantially chills protected expression.

[8] While the traditional requirements of standing are relaxed in the context of a facial challenge on overbreadth grounds, Plaintiff must show that it suffered an injury that is "fairly traceable" to the allegedly unconstitutional statute for the purposes of its claim that the alcohol prohibition is not narrowly tailored as applied to Plaintiff. Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 485 F.3d 343, 348-49 (6th Cir.2007) (citations omitted). Since no provision of the Tennessee Act has been enforced against Plaintiff's bookstores at this time, no injury to Plaintiff is apparent. Plaintiff has not even established that it has or intends to seek a liquor license, or given this court any other reason to suppose that Plaintiff is likely to lose an adult-establishment license on account of its employees' or customers' consumption of alcoholic beverages on the bookstores' premises. Even assuming, arguendo, that standing requirements do not bar the claim that the Act is not narrowly tailored, Plaintiff did not demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on the merits.

[9] [10] [11] In the context of content-neutral time, place, or manner regulations, narrow tailoring does not require that the chosen measures be "the least speech-restrictive means of advancing the Government's interests." Turner Broad. Sys. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 662, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994). This requirement is satisfied if the regulation "promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." Ibid. (quoting Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989)). It requires, "in other words, that the means chosen do not burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government's legitimate interests." Ibid. (internal quotation marks omitted). Moreover, in selecting the means to advance the legitimate interest in controlling adverse secondary effects of adult entertainment, governments are entitled to rely on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem." 729, Inc. v. Kenton County Fiscal Court, 515 F.3d 485, 491 (6th Cir.2008) (citing Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); City of L.A. v. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality); id. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment)).

Both Tennessee and Shelby County relied on numerous reports, studies and judicial decisions with regard to the deleterious secondary effects of adult-oriented establishments. In the Ordinance that adopts the Act in the county, Shelby County notes that the County reviewed, among other evidentiary materials, "a report regarding the adverse health effects of activity commonly occurring in adult bookstores." Ibid. In view of this evidence, which Plaintiff does not call into doubt, Shelby County may "reasonably believe" that the availability of alcohol on the premises of any adult-oriented establishment-not just those that offer live or nude dancing-would magnify the adverse effects. As this court held in Richland Bookmart, "[i]n finding that sexually oriented businesses as a category are associated with numerous adverse secondary effects, the County reasonably relied on a number of prior judicial decisions finding sufficient evidence to support the connection between adverse effects and adult entertainment when combined with alcohol consumption." Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox County, Tenn., 555 F.3d 512, 532 (6th Cir.2009) (emphasis added).

Moreover, this prohibition does not burden substantially more speech than necessary 368 to advance legitimate state interests, if it can be said to burden speech at all. As the Seventh Circuit explained in upholding a ban on alcohol in adult cabarets:

> The regulation has no impact whatsoever on the tavern's ability to offer nude or semi-nude dancing to its patrons; it seeks to regulate alcohol and nude or semi-nude dancing without prohibiting either. The citizens ... may still buy a drink and watch nude or semi-nude dancing. They are not, however, constitutionally entitled to do both at the same time and in the same place. The deprivation of alcohol does not prevent the observer from witnessing nude or semi-nude dancing, or the dancer from conveying an erotic message.

Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 728 (7th Cir.2003) (citation omitted). Likewise, the deprivation of alcohol does not prevent a bookstore employee from offering sexually explicit materials for sale, nor does it prevent customers from enjoying all the merchandise such businesses have to offer.

[12] Plaintiff claims that the prohibition is unconstitutional for yet another reason: it violates the Due Process Clause because it allegedly imposes strict liability on the owner for any violations by employees or customers. The Act states that a license or permit will be revoked "when an operator, employee, entertainer, or escort knew, or should have known, of the violation and authorized, approved, or, in the exercise of due diligence, failed to take reasonable efforts to prevent the violation." Plaintiff asserts that an establishment's license will be revoked if an employee "whose knowledge cannot be imputed to the business itself" fails to take a reasonable effort to prevent alcohol use on the premises. Appellant's Br. at 52 (quoting Wal Juice Bar, Inc. v. City of Oak Grove, Kentucky, No. 5:02CV-252-R, 2008 WL 1730293, at *10 (W.D.Ky.2008)). While the district court did not address this argument, its interpretive premise is without merit. As Shelby County explains, "[a] violation by an employee imperils that employee's permit," but "does not imperil the operator's license, unless [the operator] 'knew, or should have known of the violation and authorized, approved, or, in the exercise of due diligence, failed to take reasonable efforts to prevent the violation.' " Appellees' Br. at 38-39 (citations omitted; emphasis in original). We agree, as this interpretation of the challenged provision is also compelled by the general standard for revocation of operator's licenses and employees' permits. The Act provides for a revocation or suspension of an operator's license on the basis of an employee's actions only if an operator "has a duty to supervise conduct on the premises," and "knew, or should have known, of the violation and authorized, approved, or, in the exercise of due diligence, failed to take reasonable efforts to prevent the violation." Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1109(a)(2). Because the Act does not punish operators of adult establishments on the basis of strict liability, we affirm the district court's determination that no substantial likelihood of success on the merits of this claim was demonstrated.

C

[13] Finally, Plaintiff challenges the Act's provision on "[p]enalties for violation of part," which states:

> (a) (1) A violation of this part shall, for a first offense, be a Class B misdemeanor, punishable by a fine only of five hundred dollars ($500), and shall result in the suspension or revocation of any license.
>
> (2) A second or subsequent violation of this part is a Class A misdemeanor, 369 and shall result in the suspension or revocation of any license.
>
> (b) Each violation of this part shall be considered a separate offense, and any violation continuing more than one (1) hour of time shall be considered a separate offense for each hour of violation.

Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1119. Section 7-51-1109 specifies that an operator whose license is revoked is disqualified from receiving an adult-oriented establishment license for five years. Plaintiff argues that a punitive revocation of a license on the basis of past violations of this Act constitutes an unconstitutional prior restraint on future protected expression.

[14] The district court declined to consider this claim on the merits because it determined that Plaintiff, who has not applied for a license nor had a license revoked, lacked standing to challenge the penalty provision. Plaintiff protests that it need not wait for a license revocation to bring a facial challenge on overbreadth grounds. Appellant's Br. at 54-55. "[I]t is well established that one has standing to challenge a statute on the ground that it delegates overly broad licensing discretion to an administrative office, whether or not his conduct could be proscribed by a properly drawn statute, and whether or not he applied for a license." Nightclubs, Inc. v. City of Paducah, 202 F.3d 884, 889 (6th Cir.2000) (quoting Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 56, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965)); see also Odle v. Decatur County, 421 F.3d 386, 389 n. 2 (6th Cir.2005). Plaintiff does not exactly articulate a challenge on the grounds of overly broad or unbridled discretion. However, the essence of Plaintiff's claim is that the allegedly unconstitutional applications of this provision are substantial relative to legitimate applications because punitive revocation suppresses future protected speech "unconnected to the negative secondary effects cited as legislative justification," Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 849 (7th Cir.2000). Treating Plaintiff's arguments charitably, we hold that Plaintiff does have standing to bring this facial challenge to the Act on the basis of its penalty provision.

[15] [16] [17] Constitutional invalidity of prior restraints may result from one or both of "two evils ...: (1) the risk of censorship associated with the vesting of unbridled discretion in government officials; and (2) 'the risk of indefinitely suppressing permissible speech' when a licensing law fails to provide for the prompt issuance of a license." Nightclubs, Inc., 202 F.3d at 889 (quoting FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 225-27, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990)). The Tennessee Act's licensing scheme is a prior restraint on protected expression. Odle, 421 F.3d at 389; see also Belew, et al. v. Giles County Adult-Oriented Establishment Board, et al., No. 1-01-0139, 2005 WL 6369661 (M.D.Tenn. Sept. 30, 2005). Prior restraints are not unconstitutional per se. Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 533 (citing Odle, 421 F.3d at 389). Where license issuance is based on explicit and objective criteria, a licensing scheme passes constitutional muster when it "guarantee[s] applicants a prompt final judicial decision on the merits of a license denial and preservation of the status quo while an application or judicial review of a license denial is pending." Odle, 421 F.3d at 389 (citing Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58, 85 S.Ct. 734; FW/PBS, Inc., 493 U.S. at 229-30, 110 S.Ct. 596; City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D-4, LLC, 541 U.S. 774, 779-80, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004)). Logically, the same procedural guarantees required for license denials are required for license revocations. Furthermore, "[s]ystems of prior restraint ... [must] also pass [ ] the appropriate level of scrutiny." Deja Vu of 370 Nashville, Inc., 274 F.3d at 391(citing Freedman, 380 U.S. at 58-59, 85 S.Ct. 734).

In Odle, we held that the provisions regarding license denial of this very Act are not unconstitutional because they comply with the procedural requirements of prompt judicial review and maintenance of status quo. 421 F.3d at 390-91. Punitive revocation of a license under § 7-51-1119 likewise complies with the two requirements. The Tennessee Act provides for a prompt final judicial decision on the merits of a license revocation: an entity whose license or permit is to be revoked or suspended is given 10 days to request a hearing before the adult-oriented establishment board ("board") to contest the revocation, § 7-51-1109(b)(2), which shall be held within 15 days of the receipt of the request, and a final decision will be rendered by the board within 22 days of the initial notice of revocation, § 7-51-1109(b)(3). If the revocation or suspension is affirmed, "the county attorney for such county shall institute suit for declaratory judgment in a court of record in such county, within five (5) days of the date of any such affirmation." § 7-51-1109(c)(1). Finally, "[t]he applicant shall be entitled to judicial determination of the issues within two (2) days after joinder of issue, and a decision shall be rendered by the court within two (2) days of the conclusion of the hearing." § 7-51-1109(c)(3). [3] The Act also complies with the second requirement as it provides for the maintenance of the status quo "pending the final outcome of judicial proceedings to determine whether such license or permit has been properly revoked or suspended under the law." § 7-51-1109(b)(2).

[3] We note that the Act provides adopting counties with a choice: a county has the option of making subsection § 7-51-1109(d) applicable in the county, rather than subsection (c). The salient difference between the two sections resides in the identity of the party who initiates judicial review of the administrative action and bears the burden of proof with respect to the revocation; however, the guarantee that a judicial decision will be rendered within two days of the judicial determination on license denial or revocation appears only in subsection (c). Neither party to this lawsuit indicates which section is applicable in Shelby County. Because there is no allegation or affirmative representation that subsection (d) was elected by Shelby County, and (c) appears to be the default option, we will assume that (c) is the applicable standard and express no opinion with regard to subsection (d).

Plaintiff asserts that it is not challenging the constitutionality of the licensing scheme on the grounds of inadequate procedural protections for license revocation. See Appellant's Rep. Br. at 19, 21-22. At the same time, Plaintiff does not appear to attack the substantive grounds for revocation: Plaintiff does not argue, for example, that the criteria for revocation are insufficiently objective and delegate unbridled authority to officials, or that the criteria for revocation are too numerous to be narrowly tailored to the state interest at stake. Instead, Plaintiff argues in general and opaque terms that the Act is unconstitutional because it employs punitive revocation to control protected future expression rather than to punish violators "in the ordinary sense." Appellant's Rep. Br. at 22.

Insofar as we are able to discern a legal theory behind Plaintiff's constitutional attack on the penalty provision, it rests on a misinterpretation of the Tennessee Act. Plaintiff appears to think that the procedural safeguards applicable to license revocations generally, which are set forth in § 7-51-1109, do not apply to a punitive license revocation under § 7-51-1119. Because § 7-51-1119 states that a violation "shall " be a misdemeanor and "shall 371 result in the suspension or revocation of any license," (emphasis added), Plaintiff seems to conclude that a revocation under this section is permanent and not contestable. However, this is not a sustainable reading of the Tennessee Act. Although § 7-51-1119 does not state that the punitive revocation of a license is temporary or subject to the procedural protections required of prior-restraint schemes, the temporal and procedural limitations are clearly spelled out in § 7-51-1109. The latter section lists several grounds for license revocation, including violations of the Act's provisions-the consequences of which are addressed further in § 7-51-1119. Section 7-51-1109 explicitly states that the procedural safeguards governing license revocation contained therein apply "[n]otwithstanding anything in this part to the contrary." § 7-51-1109(b)(1). Thus, it is implausible to maintain that the procedures governing revocations generally are not applicable to punitive revocations for violations of the Act under § 7-51-1119.

We are unable to glean any alternative logic to support Plaintiff's claim that the Act is an unconstitutional prior restraint because it is not "punishment in the ordinary sense." Thus, we hold that the district court did not err in finding that Plaintiff did not show a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of this claim.

D

Plaintiff raises other grounds for its facial attack on the Act, all of which are waived and/or addressed by our opinion in the companion case. Plaintiff's claim that the definition of "adult cabaret," § 7-51-1102(2), renders the Act unconstitutionally overbroad was found to lack merit in Entertainment Productions. Plaintiff's claims that the definition of "specified sexual activities," § 7-51-1102(27), and the prohibition on "fondling," § 7-51-1114(d)(1)(D), are overbroad and/or not narrowly tailored are waived. While Plaintiff identifies these claims in its initial complaint, they are not presented in its Memorandum in Support of Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, and were therefore not addressed by the district court.[4] Lastly, Plaintiff's claim that the prohibition on touching and the buffer-zone requirement are overbroad and/or not narrowly tailored is also waived because it was not presented in its Memorandum in Support of Motion for a Preliminary Injunction and was not addressed by the district court. In any case, we rejected this claim on the merits in Entertainment Productions.

[4] Even if considered on the merits, however, these challenges would fail. Plaintiff misconceives the role that the definition of "specified sexual activities" plays in the Act, treating the term, which is employed in the definition of "adult entertainment," as a prohibition. The claim that the prohibition on fondling in § 7-51-1114(d)(1)(D) unconstitutionally burdens expression would also fail on the merits for the same reasons that the challenge to the no-touching provisions did not succeed in Entertainment Productions. The prohibition on "fondling genitals" is surely less burdensome and easier to justify than the broader, more intrusive provisions challenged by the plaintiffs in Entertainment Productions.

III

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court's denial of the preliminary injunction.

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge, concurring only in the judgment.

I believe that the district court did not abuse its discretion by denying the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. I do not join the majority's opinion, and I concur solely in the judgment affirming the district court's judgment that the plaintiffs have not satisfied the requirements 372 for a preliminary injunction of the challenged provisions.

It is important to emphasize that plaintiff waived any challenge at this time to Tennessee Code Annotated § 7-51-1114(d)(1)(D)'s prohibition on self-touching by not raising the issue in its preliminary-injunction motion or supporting memorandum. Thus, any discussion regarding the merits of a hypothetical challenge to that provision is premature.

All Citations

588 F.3d 360

588 F.3d 372
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

ENTERTAINMENT PRODUCTIONS, INC., et al., Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
SHELBY COUNTY, TENN., et al., Defendants–Appellees,
Robert E. Cooper, Jr., Attorney General, Intervenor Defendant–Appellee.

No. 08–5494.
|
Argued: April 20, 2009.
|
Decided and Filed: Nov. 25, 2009.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Mar. 2, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Operator of adult-oriented entertainment establishment brought action challenging constitutionality of state law regulating such establishments. The United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee Bernice B. Donald, J., 545 F.Supp.2d 734, denied a motion for a preliminary injunction against enforcement of the statute. Operator appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Boggs, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] definition of "adult cabaret" was not overbroad;

[2] definitions of "Adult-oriented establishment" and "Adult entertainment" were not facially overbroad;

[3] prohibition on encouraging contact was not overbroad;

[4] spatial requirements were not overbroad; and

[5] definitions were not impermissibly vague.

Affirmed.

Karen Nelson Moore, Circuit Judge, filed an opinion concurring only in the judgment.

West Headnotes (25)

[1] Federal Courts
Injunction

District court's denial of injunctive relief is normally reviewed for an abuse of discretion.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Injunction
Grounds in general;multiple factors

District court considers and balances four factors in making its decision concerning preliminary injunctive relief; (1) whether the plaintiff has established a substantial likelihood or probability of success on the merits; (2) whether there is a threat of irreparable harm to the plaintiff; (3) whether issuance of the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by granting injunctive relief.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Civil Rights
Preliminary Injunction

Substantial likelihood or probability of success on the merits, as required to entitle a plaintiff to preliminary injunctive relief, is crucial in First Amendment cases because public interest and harm to the parties largely depend on the constitutionality of the challenged law. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Courts
Preliminary injunction;temporary restraining order

On appeal from a district court's denial of preliminary injunctive relief, whether a plaintiff established a substantial likelihood or probability of success on the merits is a purely legal question of whether the district court improperly applied governing law or used an erroneous legal standard, which Court of Appeals reviews de novo.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression
Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Restrictions on sexually explicit expression are constitutionally permissible if they further a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of free expression, specifically, the amelioration of adverse secondary effects associated with adult establishments; they are narrowly tailored; and they do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Invalidation of all enforcement

When a law prohibits a substantial amount of protected speech both in an absolute sense and relative to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep, the overbreadth doctrine dictates wholesale invalidation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

As to adult-oriented business regulations, overbreadth doctrine guards against the suppression of protected speech unconnected to the negative secondary effects cited as legislative justification. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Facial invalidity
Constitutional Law
Facial challenges;facial invalidity

Facial invalidation of a law is strong medicine, as substantial social costs are incurred by preventing the application of a law to constitutionally unprotected speech, or especially to constitutionally unprotected conduct. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Prohibition of substantial amount of speech

Only if a plaintiff demonstrates from the text of the statute and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally as to free speech, is facial invalidation on overbreadth grounds appropriate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Statutes in general
Constitutional Law
Statutes

Generally, vague laws fail to give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, risk trapping the innocent, and create a danger of arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Vagueness in General

When a law implicates First Amendment freedoms, vagueness poses the same risk as overbreadth, as vague laws may chill citizens from exercising their protected rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Reference to nudity as "a principal use" of business, within definition of adult cabaret under Tennessee statute restricting degree of nudity and imposing other limitations on performances at adult cabarets, did not expand the statute's regulatory reach to multi-use and mainstream establishments, as would render the statute facially overbroad in violation of free expression; common definition of term "principal" as most important diminished the significance of the preceding indeterminate article which seemingly included mainstream dramatic or artistic venues, and even if provision was read to include establishments with several principal uses of equal importance, nudity in the course of a performance did not necessarily describe "a principal use" of theatrical, musical, or similar mainstream artistic venues. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(2).

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Definition of "adult cabaret," under Tennessee statute restricting degree of nudity and imposing other limitations on performances at adult cabarets, which listed exotic dancers, strippers, male or female impersonators, or similar entertainers, as kind of entertainment that may fit the definition of an adult cabaret, did not render statute facially overbroad in violation of free expression, even though some performances by entertainers listed bore no relation to the secondary effects that statute sought to control; read naturally, statute included the listed examples as adult cabaret performances only if the entertainment by the performers was a principal use of the business and if their attire exposed specified anatomical areas. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(2).

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Provision of Tennessee statute defining an adult cabaret and imposing limitations on performances at adult cabarets, including by entertainers who were distinctly not nude but clad in "bikinis, swimsuits, and other materials which, while opaque, do not completely cover the entire buttocks, or all portions of the breast below the topmost portion of the areola," did not facially violate free expression, on overbreadth grounds, by regulating performances by "clothed" dancers which were unconnected to adverse secondary effects the statute purported to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(2).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Performers in general
Constitutional Law
Nudity in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Definition of "Adult-oriented establishment" and "Adult entertainment," within Tennessee statute restricting degree of nudity and imposing other limitations on performances at such establishments, was not facially overbroad in violation of free expression; specific language made the statute readily susceptible to meaning that "adult entertainment" would make an establishment

"adult-oriented" only if entertainment was conducted in some kind of compartments separated from common area, thereby reducing the alleged regulatory burden on mainstream artistic performances, since they were not commonly conducted on premises. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(6).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Consideration of limiting construction

Facial invalidation is inappropriate if the statute is readily subject to a narrowing construction by the state courts.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Consideration of limiting construction

Constitutional Law
Rewriting to save from unconstitutionality

Key to application of the narrowing construction principle as to a facial challenge is that the statute must be readily susceptible to the limitation; courts will not rewrite a state law to conform it to constitutional requirements.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Limitations of Rules and Special Circumstances Affecting Them

Municipal Corporations
Presumptions and burden of proof

While courts will not rewrite a state or local law to narrow construction on a facial challenge, neither will they assume that state courts would broaden the reach of a statute by giving it an expansive construction.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Performers in general

Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Inclusion within definition of "adult entertainment," under Tennessee statute restricting degree of nudity and imposing other limitations on performances at adult-oriented establishments, of "pantomime," "modeling," or "any other personal service offered customers," did not render statute facially overbroad in violation of free expression; the phrases when read in context of entire definition clearly pertained and was limited to entertainment which included actual or simulated performance of specified sexual activities or exhibition and viewing of specified anatomical areas. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(6).

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Constitutional Law
Semi-nude dancing in general

A content-neutral time, place, or manner regulation may burden nude or nearly nude dancing so long as the burden is no greater than necessary to advance a legitimate government objective, and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

A ban on nudity does not effect a complete ban on expression, but merely, and not unreasonably, limits one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Contact between performers and patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Provision of Tennessee statute barring owners and operators of adult-oriented entertainment establishments from encouraging or permitting persons on the premises from contact with listed anatomical areas of any entertainer, was not facially overbroad in violation of free expression; prohibition was a prophylactic measure reasonably believed to be necessary to achieve the goal of preventing prohibited contact under the statute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1114(b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Proximity of performers to patrons
Constitutional Law
Contact between performers and patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Provision of Tennessee statute barring contact with entertainers within adult-oriented entertainment establishments and requiring that entertainers and dancers perform at least six feet from nearest entertainer, employee, or customer, was not facially overbroad in violation of free expression; provision enacted a single mandate, the spatial requirements ensuring that no contact occurred between a performer and any other person during a performance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1114(c).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Definition of term "adult cabaret" as including entertainment of an erotic nature, under Tennessee statute restricting degree of nudity and imposing other limitations on performances therein, was not impermissibly vague in violation of free expression, even though statute, in listing examples of adult cabarets, did not define entertainment of an "erotic nature." U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(2).

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law
Performers in general
Constitutional Law
Nudity in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Definition of "adult entertainment" as any exhibition that had as principal theme the actual or simulated performance of specified sexual activities, removal of clothes, or appearing unclothed, under Tennessee statute regulating nudity within adult-oriented entertainment establishments, was not impermissibly vague in violation of free expression rights; under a narrow construction all questions as to conduct prohibited by statute, including what garments were included, were readily answered. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's T.C.A. § 7–51–1102(6).

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

376 ARGUED: J. Michael Murray, Berkman, Gordon, Murray & DeVan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. Robert B. Rolwing, Assistant County Attorney, Shelby County Government, Memphis, Tennessee, Steven A. Hart, Office of the Tennessee Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellees. ON BRIEF: J. Michael Murray, Raymond V. Vasvari, Jr., Berkman, Gordon, Murray & DeVan, Cleveland, Ohio, for Appellants. Robert B. Rolwing, Assistant County Attorney, Shelby County Government, Memphis, Tennessee, Steven A. Hart, Office of the Tennessee

Attorney General, Nashville, Tennessee, Thomas Roane Waring III, City Attorney's Office, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellees.

Before: BOGGS, MOORE, and SUTTON, Circuit Judges.

BOGGS, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which SUTTON, J., joined. MOORE, J. (p. 395–96), delivered a separate opinion concurring only in the judgment.

OPINION

BOGGS, Circuit Judge.

Plaintiffs–Appellants Entertainment Productions, Inc., et al. filed suit to challenge the constitutionality of the Tennessee Adult–Oriented Establishment Registration Act ("Act" or "Tennessee Act") on First Amendment grounds. Plaintiffs appeal from a district court's denial of a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of the Tennessee Act in Shelby County. Plaintiffs claim that the Tennessee Act is unconstitutional on four grounds. First, Plaintiffs contend that the definitions of "adult cabaret," "adult-oriented establishment," and "adult entertainment" render the Act unconstitutionally overbroad, and second, that these definitions are vague. Third, Plaintiffs argue that prohibitions on certain kind of physical contact on the premises of an adult-oriented establishment are overbroad. Fourth, Plaintiffs claim that the Tennessee Act will substantially diminish the availability of adult speech in Memphis, Shelby County. Plaintiffs conclude that the district court erred in determining both that Plaintiffs did not demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of their claims and that the balancing of equities disfavored a preliminary injunction. We affirm the district court's denial of the preliminary injunction.

I

This case presents a constitutional challenge to the Tennessee Adult–Oriented Establishment Registration Act of 1998, Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1101 et seq. The Tennessee Act is a county-option state law, enacted to address the recognized negative secondary effects associated with "adult" or sexually oriented businesses, including crime, spread of sexually transmitted diseases, lowering of property values, and other related public welfare and safety issues. The Act sets up a licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses, prohibits certain activities on the premises of such businesses, and regulates the manner in which entertainment may be presented therein. The Act enters into effect in a particular county after "a two-thirds (2/3) vote of the county legislative body adopting this part." Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1120. On September 13, 2007, Shelby County's Ordinance 344 ("Ordinance") adopted the Tennessee Act in Shelby County. The Ordinance relied on Tennessee's 377 legislative findings of "deleterious secondary effects commonly associated with adult-oriented establishments, including but not limited to an increase in crime, the spread of sexually-transmitted diseases, the downgrading of property values, and other public health, safety, and welfare issues." Pursuant to the Ordinance, the Act entered into effect in Shelby County on January 1, 2008, but provided a 120–day "grace period" to allow businesses and employees to obtain licenses required by the Act.

The Act regulates all establishments that conform to a statutory definition of "adult-oriented establishment" in two general ways. First, all businesses subject to the Act, as well as their employees and entertainers, must obtain a license or a permit. Second, the Act regulates the manner in which entertainment may be provided by adult-oriented establishments: it prohibits nudity, certain sexual activities, certain kinds of physical contact, and requires that all performances take place on a stage at least 18 inches above floor level and that all performers stay at least six feet away from customers, employees and other performers.

Plaintiffs operate a "substantial fraction" of the nightclubs in Memphis, Shelby County. On January 25, 2008—prior to the expiration of the 120–day grace period for obtaining licenses—Plaintiffs filed suit in the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee against Shelby County and the City of Memphis, seeking injunctive relief and a declaratory judgment. Tennessee's Attorney General, Robert E. Cooper, Jr., was granted leave to intervene to defend the constitutionality of the Act (Shelby County, the City of Memphis, and the Attorney General are collectively referred to as "Defendants"). After a preliminary injunction hearing, the district court denied the requested injunction on the basis that Plaintiffs did not demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of their claims.[1] Plaintiffs now appeal from that decision.

[1] However, the district court granted Plaintiffs' subsequent motion for an injunction pending this appeal.

II

A

[1] [2] [3] [4] A district court's denial of injunctive relief is normally reviewed for an abuse of discretion. Hamilton's Bogarts, Inc. v. Michigan, 501 F.3d 644, 649 (6th Cir.2007). The district court considers and balances four factors in making its decision: "(1) whether the plaintiff has established a substantial likelihood or probability of success on the merits; (2) whether there is a threat of irreparable harm to the plaintiff; (3) whether issuance of the injunction would cause substantial harm to others; and (4) whether the public interest would be served by granting injunctive relief." Ibid. (quoting City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D–4, L.L.C., 541 U.S. 774, 784, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004)). The first factor is crucial in First Amendment cases because public interest and harm to the parties largely depend on the constitutionality of the challenged law. The first factor presents a "purely legal question of whether the district court improperly applied governing law or used an erroneous legal standard," which we review de novo. Ibid. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

B

[5] This court has repeatedly faced challenges to the constitutionality of state 378 and local regulations of sexually or adult-oriented establishments. We recognize that such regulations tend to abridge the opportunities for the communication and reception of "at least two protected categories of speech: first, sexually explicit but non-obscene speech, such as adult publications and adult videos, and second, 'symbolic speech' or 'expressive conduct,' such as nude [or nearly nude] dancing." Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox County, Tenn., 555 F.3d 512, 520 (6th Cir.2009); see also Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 274 F.3d 377, 396 (6th Cir.2001). Notwithstanding the protection accorded to erotic expression by the First Amendment, the Supreme Court has held that governments may adopt measures intended to ameliorate the adverse secondary effects of such expression, so long as the restrictions placed on expression survive intermediate scrutiny as set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), and City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Restrictions on sexually explicit expression are constitutionally permissible if: they further a substantial governmental interest "unrelated to the suppression of free expression," O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673—specifically, the amelioration of adverse secondary effects associated with adult establishments; they are narrowly tailored; and they "do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication," Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. See Richland Bookmart, 555 F.3d at 520–22.

In accordance with O'Brien, Renton, and their progeny, we have declined to uphold particular regulatory measures, for which no substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of speech was proffered, that burdened more speech than necessary in a manner unconnected to the interest in controlling secondary effects, and/or which unreasonably limited the avenues of communication for adult-oriented speech. See, e.g., Hamilton's Bogarts, Inc., 501 F.3d at 654; Exec. Arts Studio, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 391 F.3d 783, 798–99 (6th Cir.2004); see also 729, Inc. v. Kenton County Fiscal Court, 515 F.3d 485, 504 (6th Cir.2008).

In the present case, Plaintiffs do not argue that the application of the Tennessee Act to their establishments does not satisfy intermediate scrutiny under O'Brien and Renton.[2] Indeed, because the Act has not yet been enforced against Plaintiffs, they challenge key provisions of the Act as overly broad and/or vague, and maintain that nothing short of facial invalidation will remedy the chilling effect created by the threat of its unconstitutional applications.

[2] Nor would such a claim be likely to meet with success, in light of the decision of the Tennessee Court of Appeals in American Show Bar Series, Inc. v. Sullivan County, 30 S.W.3d 324 (Tenn.Ct.App.2000), app. denied, 2000 Tenn. LEXIS 543 (Tenn. Sept. 25, 2000), which held that the Act was constitutional as applied to similarly situated plaintiffs. That court determined that the Act is a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of adult-oriented establishments, id. at 334, and that a number of challenged provisions survived intermediate scrutiny under O'Brien, including the provisions regarding prohibited activities, to which present Plaintiffs now bring a facial challenge on overbreadth grounds. Id. at 338–39.

[6] [7] In the context of the First Amendment, the chief evil of overly broad laws consists in the chilling effect they produce on protected expression. For this reason, the Supreme Court has relaxed the traditional rules of standing: plaintiffs are permitted "to challenge a statute not because their own rights of free expression 379 are violated, but because of a judicial prediction or assumption that the statute's very existence may cause others not before the court to refrain from constitutionally protected speech or expression." Prime Media, Inc. v. City of Brentwood, 485 F.3d 343, 348 (6th Cir.2007) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973)). Thus, when a law " 'prohibits a substantial amount of protected speech' both 'in an absolute sense' and 'relative to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep,' " the overbreadth doctrine dictates wholesale invalidation. Connection Distrib. Co. v. Holder, 557 F.3d 321, 336 (6th Cir.2009) (quoting United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 1838, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008)). In the context of adult-oriented business regulations, "the overbreadth doctrine guards against the suppression of protected speech unconnected to the negative secondary effects cited as legislative justification." Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 849 (7th Cir.2000) (citing Tunick v. Safir, 209 F.3d 67, 83 (2d Cir.2000); see also Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129, 135 (6th Cir.1994)).

[8] [9] Facial invalidation of a law is, as the Supreme Court and this court repeatedly noted, "strong medicine," as " '[s]ubstantial social costs' are incurred by preventing the 'application of a law to constitutionally unprotected speech, or especially to constitutionally unprotected conduct.' " Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 532 (quoting Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 119, 123 S.Ct. 2191, 156 L.Ed.2d 148 (2003)). Therefore, the Supreme Court has "vigorously enforced the requirement that a statute's overbreadth be substantial," Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1838, and cautioned that invalidation for overbreadth be deployed sparingly and "only as a last resort," Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908. Only if a plaintiff demonstrates "from the text of [the statute] and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally," is facial invalidation on overbreadth grounds appropriate. Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 532 (alteration in original) (quoting N.Y. State Club Ass'n v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 14, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988)).

[10] [11] The void-for-vagueness doctrine and the overbreadth doctrine vindicate overlapping values in First Amendment jurisprudence. In general, vague laws fail to "give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited," risk "trapping the innocent," and create a danger of "arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972). When a law implicates First Amendment freedoms, vagueness poses the same risk as overbreadth, as vague laws may chill citizens from exercising their protected rights. Accordingly, the Supreme Court has indicated that "stricter standards of permissible statutory vagueness may be applied to a statute having a potentially inhibiting effect on speech." Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 151, 80 S.Ct. 215, 4 L.Ed.2d 205 (1959). "Although ordinarily '[a] plaintiff who engages in some conduct that is clearly proscribed cannot complain of the vagueness of the law as applied to the conduct of others,' we have relaxed that requirement in the First Amendment context, permitting plaintiffs to argue that a statute is overbroad because it is unclear whether it regulates a substantial amount of protected speech." Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1845 (quoting Hoffman Estates v. Flipside, Hoffman Estates, Inc., 455 U.S. 489, 494–95 & nn. 6 & 7, 102 S.Ct. 1186, 71 L.Ed.2d 362 (1982)).

380 This court has not shied away from invalidating a regulatory scheme in its entirety when the threat of impermissible applications and the consequent chilling effect unambiguously warranted this remedy. See Odle v. Decatur County, 421 F.3d 386, 395, 399 (6th Cir.2005) (holding that a Decatur County ordinance, which prohibited, inter alia, nudity and the performance of arguably sexually suggestive acts in any place where liquor was sold, served or consumed, was overbroad because "it reache[d] a wide swath of public places likely to present performances not usually attended by harmful secondary effects"); Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 136 (holding that the Akron public indecency ordinance was unconstitutionally overbroad because it prohibited nudity in all public places, without excepting "live performances with serious literary, artistic, or political value"). Our decisions are also in harmony with other circuits' disposition of similar challenges. See, e.g., Conchatta Inc. v. Miller, 458 F.3d 258, 266 (3d Cir.2006) (holding that a Pennsylvania regulation prohibiting "lewd" entertainment is unconstitutionally overbroad because it applied to all venues holding liquor licenses as well as those "operat[ing] in connection" with the licensed premises, sweeping in "a variety of performances that are entitled to the full protection of the First Amendment"); Giovani Carandola, Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507, 510, 516 (4th Cir.2002) (holding that plaintiffs are likely to succeed in their overbreadth challenge to a North Carolina secondary-effects regulation because it applied to all establishments licensed to sell alcohol, "sweep[ing] far beyond bars and nude dancing establishments" and reaching "much other mainstream entertainment," with no evidence offered to connect the proscribed activities in mainstream venues to adverse secondary effects); Ways v. City of Lincoln, 274 F.3d 514, 519 (8th Cir.2001) (holding that an ordinance is unconstitutionally overbroad because it reached beyond adult entertainment establishments to regulate conduct in "any business or commercial establishment," including "theater performances, ballet performances, and many other forms of live entertainment" not recognized to cause harmful secondary effects).

The facial attacks in Odle, Triplett Grille, Conchatta, Carandola, and Ways succeeded because the challenged statutes purported to regulate public venues that stage mainstream performances of artistic value, as well as venues that stage adult-oriented performances. In these cases, the "strong medicine" of facial invalidation was warranted because casting so wide a regulatory net would certainly chill protected artistic expression that was not shown to produce the same adverse secondary effects associated with adult entertainment. Moreover, the challenged statutes were not "readily susceptible" either to a narrowing construction that would limit the regulatory scope to adult-oriented establishments or to a limitation by severance of problematic provisions. See Virginia v. American Booksellers Ass'n, 484 U.S. 383, 397, 108 S.Ct. 636, 98 L.Ed.2d 782 (1988). To demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of the present claims, therefore, the Plaintiffs must establish that the allegedly unconstitutional provisions of the Tennessee Act result in a real and substantial number of impermissible applications that chill protected expression, that the statutory language is not readily susceptible to a limiting construction, and that any problematic provisions may not be severed because they are "an integral part of the [Act] viewed in its entirety," Schultz, 228 F.3d at 853.

C

In their first argument, Plaintiffs assert unconstitutional overbreadth on the basis 381 of the three definitions that identify the set of establishments to which the Act applies. The licensing and other regulations contained in the Act apply to "adult-oriented establishments," which include "adult cabarets." Moreover, Plaintiffs claim that the category of "adult-oriented establishments" also includes any establishment that is open to the public and presents "adult entertainment" for profit. The three definitions—"adult-oriented establishment," "adult cabaret," and "adult entertainment"—render the Act overbroad, according to Plaintiffs, because they serve to prohibit and regulate expression "not only within adult establishments, but also in a wide variety of venues with neither an actual nor an alleged link to the adverse secondary effects attributed to adult expression." Appellants' Br. at 13.

Our "first step in overbreadth analysis is to construe the challenged statute; it is impossible to determine whether a statute reaches too far without first knowing what the statute covers." Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1838. We proceed, therefore, to construe each term challenged by Plaintiffs.

"Adult Cabaret"

An "adult cabaret" is an "adult-oriented establishment" subject to licensing and regulation under the Act, and is separately defined as follows:

> "Adult cabaret" means an establishment that features as a principal use of its business, entertainers, waiters, or bartenders who expose to public view of the patrons within such establishment, at any time, the bare female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola, > human genitals, pubic region, or buttocks, even if partially covered by opaque material or completely covered by translucent material, including swim suits, lingerie, or latex covering. "Adult cabaret" includes a commercial establishment that features entertainment of an erotic nature, including exotic dancers, strippers, male or female impersonators, or similar entertainers;

Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1102(2). Plaintiffs identify three reasons why the set of establishments swept into the Act's regulatory scheme by this definition results in overbreadth.

[12] First, Plaintiffs argue that the statutory reference to "a principal use," rather than "the principal use," expands the Act's regulatory reach to multi-use and mainstream establishments. Appellants' Br. at 34. "Adult cabarets," on Plaintiffs' reading, include cabarets that have several uses, of which presentation of semi-nude entertainment is just one, as well as mainstream dramatic or artistic venues. The latter venues will fall within the definition of "adult cabaret," Plaintiffs insist, because "substantial runs of a drama, music or dance program ...—which contain nudity and thus can make the venue in which they are performed into an adult cabaret—go on for long periods, turning that performance into a substantial, and thus a principal use of the venue." Appellants' Br. at 35.

While article choice ought not be ignored in statutory interpretation, the chosen article is not the only or overriding signal of a statute's meaning. In this case, the common definition of the succeeding term ("principal") diminishes the significance of the indeterminate article. As the district court noted, "principal" means "most important, consequential, or influential." (quoting Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1802 (3d ed.1993) (emphasis added)).[3] In light of this definition, 382 the substantive import of the alleged distinction between "the most important" and "a most important" use of a business is negligible.

[3] Unlike a number of other statutes we have encountered, the Tennessee Act does not define "principal use," which leaves its interpretation to the common definition of the term. Cf. Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Knox County, Tenn., 555 F.3d 512, 519 (6th Cir.2009) (scrutinizing an ordinance that defined "principal business purpose" to mean, inter alia, 35% or more of displayed merchandise or its value, revenues, or interior business space).

Even if this provision is read to include establishments with several "principal uses" of equal importance, we are not persuaded that entertainers' exposure of specified anatomical areas in the course of a performance would ever plausibly describe "a principal use" of theatrical, musical or similar mainstream artistic venues. A "run" of a performance, however long, that contains nudity, does not transform such a venue into an adult cabaret because no specific play, opera or ballet is commonly deemed to be "a principal use" of a venue.[4] With regard to establishments that are devoted to multiple uses of equal importance, one of which is admittedly adult entertainment, their inclusion under the Act's regulatory scheme would not violate the First Amendment. Neither this court nor the Supreme Court has required that regulatory efforts to address secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses must be confined to establishments that accord unequivocal priority to adult entertainment over all other business uses. The crucial inquiry in determining the permissible reach of such regulations is whether the government relied on evidence reasonably believed to be relevant in identifying the set of businesses that generate adverse secondary effects. Given the documented evidence of such effects examined by Tennessee, Shelby County, as well as other jurisdictions, it is not unreasonable to conclude that an establishment with more than one principal use—for instance, semi-nude dancing and food service—is as liable to produce negative externalities as an establishment wholly devoted to presenting semi-nude dancing.[5]

[4] It would be odd to say that a presentation of Salomé, rather than operatic performances generally, is a principal use of an opera house.

[5] We have previously upheld various regulations applicable to similarly defined establishments, even if we did not confront an identical challenge to the definition. In DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, for instance, this court upheld a similar licensing and regulation scheme that applied to "establishment[s] which feature[ ] as a principle [sic] use of its business" entertainers or employees who expose the same anatomical areas specified in the provision at bar. 107 F.3d 403, 406 (6th Cir.1997).

[13] Second, Plaintiffs argue that "the sorts of entertainment listed in the second sentence of § 7–51–1102(2) are intended to augment, and not exemplify, the first," which sweeps in mainstream establishments without requiring that "entertainment of an erotic nature" be their principal use. Appellants' Rep. Br. at 6–7, 35. We disagree. The second sentence merely lists examples of the kind of entertainment that may fit the definition set forth in the first sentence. Plaintiffs object that the list of entertainers in the second sentence "may or may not exemplify the first": "There is no requirement, rule or practice which says that a female impersonator will appear, for example, in lingerie or with bare breasts, or that a bared buttock [ ] is a necessary element of entertainment 'of an erotic nature'." Appellants' Rep. Br. at 7.

It is probably true that some performances by the entertainers listed in the second sentence bear no relation to the secondary effects the Act seeks to control. This, however, presents no difficulties of interpretation of the kind Plaintiffs evoke. Read naturally, a "commercial establishment 383 that features entertainment of an erotic nature" by any of the listed performers is an "adult cabaret" under the Act only if entertainment by these performers is a principal use of the business and if their attire exposes the anatomical areas specified in the first sentence. Read in this manner, the Act does not burden a substantial amount of protected expression unrelated to secondary effects. [6]

6 Because we find that the second sentence does not augment the complete definition of "adult cabaret" contained in the first sentence, we find it unnecessary to address Plaintiffs' further arguments about the inadequacy of the word "feature" as an alternative source of a limiting construction. See Appellants' Rep. Br. at 8.

[14] Third, Plaintiffs claim that the Act impermissibly regulates erotic dance performances by "clothed" dancers, which are unconnected to the adverse secondary effects the Act purports to address. Id. at 39. By "clothed," Plaintiffs mean entertainers who are distinctly not nude, but are clad in "bikinis, swimsuits, and other materials which, while opaque, do not completely cover the entire buttocks, or all portions of the breast below the topmost portion of the areola." Id. at 40. The theory that underlies this claim—that burdening performances put on by entertainers so attired constitutes an unconstitutional application of a secondary-effects regulation—was addressed and rejected by this court in Richland Bookmart, 555 F.3d at 529–30.

In that case, we explained that in view of the evidence of secondary effects relied on by Knox County, as well as numerous other local and state governments promulgating similar regulations, " 'it was reasonable for the City to conclude that establishments featuring performers in attire more revealing than bikini tops pose the same types of problems associated with other [sexually oriented businesses].' " 555 F.3d at 529 (quoting Baby Dolls Topless Saloons, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 295 F.3d 471, 482 (5th Cir.2002)) (alteration in original). We held that the regulation of adult cabarets featuring "semi-nude" performers [7] survived intermediate scrutiny because it did not impose a "substantial portion of the regulatory burden on protected speech without advancing the goals of the Ordinance." Id. at 530. Thus, imposing comparable burdens on a substantially overlapping set of cabarets cannot form a basis for a successful facial challenge. We are persuaded that the term "adult cabaret" does not render the Act overly broad.

7 The Knox County Ordinance applied to establishments that "regularly feature[ ] persons who appear semi-nude," where "semi-nudity" meant "the showing of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola and extending across the width of the breast at that point, or the showing of the male or female buttocks. This definition shall include the lower portion of the human female breast, but shall not include any portion of the cleavage of the human female breasts exhibited by a bikini, dress, blouse, shirt, leotard, or similar wearing apparel provided the areola is not exposed in whole or in part." Richland Bookmart, 555 F.3d at 519.

"Adult-oriented establishment" and "Adult entertainment"

[15] Next, Plaintiffs argue that the definitions of "adult entertainment" and "adult-oriented establishment" jointly render the Act unconstitutionally overbroad in its scope. "Adult-oriented establishment" is given a long, tripartite definition:

> "Adult-oriented establishment" includes, but is not limited to, an adult bookstore, adult motion picture theater, adult mini-motion picture establishment, adult cabaret, escort agency, sexual encounter center, massage parlor, rap parlor, sauna;

384 further, "adult-oriented establishment" means any premises to which the public patrons or members are invited or admitted and that are so physically arranged as to provide booths, cubicles, rooms, compartments or stalls separate from the common areas of the premises for the purpose of viewing adult-oriented motion pictures, or wherein an entertainer provides adult entertainment to a member of the public, a patron or a member, when such adult entertainment is held, conducted, operated or maintained for a profit, direct or indirect.

"Adult-oriented establishment" further includes, without being limited to, any adult entertainment studio or any premises that is physically arranged and used as such, whether advertised or represented as an adult entertainment studio, rap studio, exotic dance studio, encounter studio, sensitivity studio, model studio, escort service, escort or any other term of like import;

§ 7–51–1102(6) (line breaks added). An establishment that conforms to the terms of any one of the three parts is subject to the Act's provisions.

Plaintiffs' complaint centers on the second part of this definition. Plaintiffs contend that a grammatically correct reading requires treating the clause beginning with "or wherein" as a modifier for "any premises to which the public patrons or members are invited or admitted." Appellants' Rep. Br. at 16. This reading breaks up the provision as follows:

Further, "adult-oriented establishment" means [1] any premises to which the public patrons or members are invited or admitted and

[2A] that are so physically arranged as to provide booths, cubicles, rooms, compartments or stalls separate from the common areas of the premises for the purpose of viewing adult-oriented motion pictures, or [2B] wherein an entertainer provides adult entertainment to a member of the public, a patron or a member, when such adult entertainment is held, conducted, operated or maintained for a profit, direct or indirect.

So construed, either [1] & [2A] or [1] & [2B] suffice to make an establishment an adult-oriented one. That means that "[a]ny place which presents adult entertainment is, by virtue of that fact an adult-oriented establishment and subject to the full force of the act...." Appellants' Br. at 36.

Under this interpretation, the definition of "adult entertainment" becomes crucial to determining the scope of the Act. Broken up into its logical components, that definition reads:

"Adult entertainment" means [1] any exhibition of any adult-oriented motion picture, live performance, display or dance of any type,

[A] that has as a principal or predominant theme, emphasis, or portion of such performance,

[i] any actual or simulated performance of specified sexual activities [8] or

[8] "Specified sexual activities" are further defined to mean:
(A) Human genitals in a state of sexual stimulation or arousal;
(B) Acts of human masturbation, sexual intercourse or sodomy; or
(C) Fondling or erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttocks or female breasts.
Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1102(27).

[ii] exhibition and viewing of specified anatomical areas, [9]

[9] "Specified anatomical areas" are further defined to mean:
(A) Less than completely and opaquely covered:
(i) Human genitals;
(ii) Pubic region;
(iii) Buttocks; and
(iv) Female breasts below a point immediately above the top of the areola; and
(B) Human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely opaquely covered;
Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1102(24).

385 [iii] removal of articles of clothing or appearing unclothed,

[iv] pantomime,

[v] modeling, or

[vi] any other personal service offered customers;

§ 7–51–1102(3) (line breaks, numeration, and emphasis added). Plaintiffs point to two problems within this definition that, they claim, render the Act unconstitutionally overbroad when combined with the definition of "adult-oriented establishment."

First, there is no explicit requirement that adult entertainment be regularly presented by or constitute a principal use of an establishment, in order for an establishment to be subject to the Act under the second part of the "adult-oriented establishment" definition. An establishment is subject to the Act if it "invites or admits" "public patrons or members" onto its premises, "wherein an entertainer provides adult entertainment," § 7–51–1102(6), defined as "any exhibition of any adult-oriented motion picture, live performance, display or dance of any type, that has as a principal or predominant theme" any one of the six listed activities [i]—[vi], § 7–51–1102(3). On Plaintiffs' reading, an establishment that offers "any" single performance, whose principal theme involves, for instance, the exhibition of specified anatomical areas, would be subject to the Act's requirements.

Second, Plaintiffs point out that a wide range of expressive conduct suffices to bring a performance or display within the scope of "adult entertainment." Appellants' Br. at 39. The themes that bring a performance under the umbrella of "adult entertainment," Plaintiffs insist, include those that do not describe erotic adult entertainment exclusively but are also characteristic of mainstream artistic expression. At the preliminary injunction hearing, Plaintiffs presented the testimony of Dr. Judith Hanna, a cultural anthropologist at the University of Maryland, who testified that there are "unlimited numbers" of "recognized performances" outside the adult-entertainment setting, whose predominant themes include nudity, simulated sex, and erotic touching between performers, and therefore, fit the definition of "adult entertainment." [10] Plaintiffs further submit that each of the expressive activities listed—including "pantomime," "modeling," or "any other personal services offered customers"—suffices on its own to classify a performance as adult entertainment, so long as that activity constitutes a principal or predominant theme of the performance. Entertainment would 386 be "adult," they argue, even if the removal of some articles of clothing, pantomime act, or modeling at issue did not involve "specified sexual activities" or the exhibition of "specified anatomical areas."

10 Dr. Hanna offered numerous examples of ballet, dance, dramatic, and operatic performances, whose predominant themes conform to the principal or predominant themes listed in the definition of "adult entertainment," such as nudity, simulated sex, and touching between performers. In addition to performances frequently cited in similar law suits such as Oh, Calcutta!, Salomé, and Hair, Dr. Hanna identified and described, inter alia, the following: George Balanchine's Prodigal Son ballet, which culminates in "an erotic encounter ... that's portrayed on stage," involving "touching of the body"; Balanchine's Bugak[u], whose main theme is erotic, and which culminates in a consummation of marriage; a ballet, Mutations, and dance performances, Map Me and Untitled, that are performed in the nude; as well as a number of others.

In sum, Plaintiffs argue that the content of an individual performance determines whether or not the Act is applicable to an establishment staging that performance. As a consequence, numerous mainstream artistic venues that contemplate including in their program even a single film, opera, ballet, or dance performance that fits the letter of the "adult entertainment" definition, are likely to be chilled from engaging in protected expression.

Were Plaintiffs' performance-based interpretation of the Act's scope the only plausible reading, the Act would be overly broad on its face. If "adult entertainment" sweeps in mainstream artistic performances and if the presentation of a single performance suffices to subject an establishment to the Tennessee Act, then the Act applies to precisely the set of establishments that doomed the statutes noted earlier, which were invalidated by this and other circuit courts. See Odle, 421 F.3d at 399; Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 136; Conchatta Inc., 458 F.3d at 266; Carandola, Ltd., 303 F.3d at 516; Ways, 274 F.3d at 519. [11]

11 As noted supra at 380 and as we explained in Odle, a law is overbroad because it fails to "except 'mainstream' artistic or entertainment venues," where protected expression that is "unlikely to spawn harmful secondary effects" is presented—not because it fails to except other public places where no protected expression is featured. 421 F.3d at 396;

> see also Giovani Carandola, Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507, 516 (4th Cir.2002) (explaining that a North Carolina statute was overbroad not because it applied to many sites "far beyond bars and nude dancing establishments," but because it applied specifically to sites where mainstream artistic expression commonly takes place). Thus, the fact that the Act now before us purports to apply only to public venues that provide "adult entertainment"—and not to all public places or all venues that sell liquor—does not mean that this Act threatens fewer potentially impermissible applications than did the statutes in Odle or Carandola.

[16] [17] [18] Facial invalidation is still inappropriate, however, if the statute is "readily subject to a narrowing construction by the state courts," Erznoznik v. Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 216, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975). "The key to application of th[e] [narrowing construction] principle is that the statute must be 'readily susceptible' to the limitation; we will not rewrite a state law to conform it to constitutional requirements." American Booksellers Ass'n, 484 U.S. at 397, 108 S.Ct. 636. While we will not rewrite a state or local law, neither will we "assume that state courts would broaden the reach of a statute by giving it an 'expansive construction.' " Richland Bookmart v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435, 441 (6th Cir.1998). And, as we noted in the context of a related Tennessee statute, the presumption that state courts will favor the narrower of two plausible constructions "is consistent with Tennessee law that provides that such regulation of speech should be construed narrowly." Ibid. (citing Davis–Kidd Booksellers, Inc. v. McWherter, 866 S.W.2d 520, 526 (Tenn.1993)).

Defendants put forth an alternative construction of the challenged provisions and reject Plaintiffs' claim that the Act sets up a performance-based standard for regulating adult-oriented businesses. The second part of the "adult-oriented establishment" definition, Defendants argue, should not be read to mean that an isolated presentation of "adult entertainment" suffices to subject a business to the Act's regulation. Instead, the last clause, beginning with "or wherein" should be read as modifying 387 "booths, cubicles, rooms, compartments or stalls," rather than "premises." Appellees' Br. at 28–9. Shelby County would read the provision as follows:

> Further, "adult-oriented establishment" means [1] any premises to which the public patrons or members are invited or admitted and that are so physically arranged as to provide booths, cubicles, rooms, compartments or stalls separate from the common areas of the premises
>
> [2A] for the purpose of viewing adult-oriented motion pictures,
>
> or [2B] wherein an entertainer provides adult entertainment to a member of the public, a patron or a member, when such adult entertainment is held, conducted, operated or maintained for a profit, direct or indirect.

That is, providing "adult entertainment" [2B] will only make an establishment "adult-oriented" if entertainment is conducted in some kind of compartments separated from the common area [1]. This reading considerably reduces, if not completely eliminates, the alleged regulatory burden on mainstream artistic performances, since such are not commonly conducted on premises with the specified interior arrangement.

We have noted that a limiting or narrowing construction of statutory language is sustainable when "an express exception in the law's text or other specific language made the law 'readily susceptible' " to such a construction. Odle, 421 F.3d at 396–97 (emphasis added). This Act does not have an "express exception" for performances that have serious artistic value or establishments devoted principally to offering such performances. Cf. Farkas v. Miller, 151 F.3d 900, 902 (8th Cir.1998). However, the Act does contain "specific language" that lends itself to two meanings. We agree with Plaintiffs that Defendants' narrowing construction is the less grammatical of the two plausible interpretations of the language. We disagree, however, with the proposition that grammatical inelegance makes an interpretation unfair or unsustainable. Nor does the proposed narrowing construction require this court to trample on the principles of federalism by "rewriting" a state law. On the contrary, principles of federalism lead us to take seriously the declaration of Tennessee courts that regulations of speech are to be construed narrowly. See Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 441(citing Davis–Kidd Booksellers, Inc., 866 S.W.2d at 526). We have explained that it would "be improper for this Court to supply limiting language ... in order to preserve [a law's] constitutionality." Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 136 (emphasis added). The Tennessee Act does not compel us to "supply" limiting language. At most, it requires that we treat the comma between "pictures" and "or wherein" as a drafting oversight, of the kind that would normally be remedied by enclosing it in brackets and denoting it with "sic." [12] Absent any other textual signals that the comma was intended to broaden the reach of the Act, there is no rule of law that compels us to assert the strictest tenets of English grammar over the demonstrable intent of the legislators. [13]

12 As we do with statutory language routinely. See, e.g., DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 406 (6th Cir.1997); Cobb v. Contract Transp., Inc., 452 F.3d 543, 558 (6th Cir.2006).

13 Indeed, established principles of statutory construction counsel that "the strict language" of a statute yields to "the intention of the drafters," should that intention be "demonstrably at odds" with the results obtained by strict interpretation. United States v. Ron Pair Enters., 489 U.S. 235, 242, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 103 L.Ed.2d 290 (1989) (quoting Griffin v. Oceanic Contractors, Inc., 458 U.S. 564, 571, 102 S.Ct. 3245, 73 L.Ed.2d 973 (1982)).

388 The central inquiry in overbreadth analysis is whether protected expression will be burdened by the actual enforcement of the Act or chilled by virtue of its sheer presence on the books. With regard to the former, we are persuaded that the risk of actual enforcement of the Act against mainstream artistic establishments is quite low: unlike the lawmakers of Akron in Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 131, and Decatur County in Odle, 421 F.3d at 396, who conceded that their regulatory schemes applied to mainstream artistic performances, Tennessee and Shelby County disavow such a broad reading of this Act, see Appellees' Br. at 38–39. [14] With regard to the latter risk, we seriously doubt that operators of any mainstream artistic venue are likely to scrutinize the provisions of a regulatory scheme aimed at "adult-oriented businesses," conclude that the scheme will require their venues to obtain a license if certain performances are offered, and be thereby deterred from staging Salomé, Prodigal Son, or Bugaku—on the basis of a single comma.

14 Cases of overzealous enforcement against mainstream artistic venues, moreover, would and should invite litigation by the affected parties on an as-applied basis. New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 773–74, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982) (stating that when overbreadth is not substantial, "whatever overbreadth may exist should be cured through case-by-case analysis of the fact situations to which [a law's] sanctions, assertedly, may not be applied") (quoting Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973)); see also N.Y. State Club Ass'n v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 14, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988).

We think that the definition of "adult-oriented establishment" is "readily susceptible" to the narrowing construction that Defendants advocate. We recognize that this does not automatically address the second problem with the definition of "adult entertainment"—the apparent self-sufficiency of a predominant emphasis on "pantomime," "modeling," or "any other personal service offered customers" to transform a performance or exhibition into "adult entertainment." "[T]he risk that this definition might chill a range of protected speech" may have led us "to find it unconstitutionally overbroad if it stood alone." Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc., 274 F.3d at 388 (emphasis added). If we read "adult entertainment" in conjunction with the narrowly construed definition of "adult-oriented establishment," the hypothesized unconstitutional applications dwindle in number, if not disappear. One cannot readily imagine a non-adult modeling session or non-erotic pantomime performance taking place in individualized booths anymore than one can imagine Balanchine's ballets screened routinely in such a setting.

[19] The domain of expressive activities triggering the "adult entertainment" label may be limited in yet another manner. In two decisions analyzing the Tennessee Act, a federal district court found that the definition of "adult entertainment" is not overbroad when the clause "any other personal service offered customers" is read in context. "The phrase read in context of the entire definition clearly pertains and is limited to that entertainment 'which has a significant or substantial portion of such performance, any actual or simulated performance of specified sexual activities or exhibition and viewing of specified anatomical areas.' " Belew, et al. v. Giles County Adult–Oriented Establishment Board, et al., No. 1–01–0139, 2005 WL 6369661, slip op. at *66 (M.D.Tenn. Sept. 30, 2005) (emphasis added); Friedman, et al. v. Giles County Adult–Oriented Establishment Board, et al., No. 1–00–0065 (M.D.Tenn. Sept. 29, 2005). We find that this is a sensible way to interpret all of the expressive activities contained in the "adult entertainment" 389 definition, which may appear devoid of sexually explicit content in isolation (i.e., removal of indeterminate articles of clothing, pantomime, modeling, or other personal services). Following "the commonsense canon of noscitur a sociis—which counsels that a word is given more precise content by the neighboring words with which it is associated," Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1839, these activities constitute "adult entertainment" only when they implicate "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas." [15]

15 The same "commonsense canon" serves to make more precise the meaning of "rooms" in the challenged portion of the "adult-oriented establishment" definition. At oral argument, Plaintiffs attempted to argue that even if Defendants' narrowing construction is accepted, the Act is still overbroad because it applies to establishments "so physically arranged as to provide ... rooms ... separate from the common areas of the premises," wherein adult entertainment is presented. Plaintiffs argued that the several separate auditoria in mainstream movie theaters, for example, are such "rooms." We disagree, and find that "rooms" must be interpreted by reference to the neighboring terms (i.e., booths, cubicles, compartments, and stalls). See Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1839 (narrowing the meaning of "promotes" and "presents" to activities with a "transactional connotation," by reference to the other verbs in the series—"advertises," "distributes," and "solicits").

We find that the Tennessee Act is readily susceptible to a narrowing construction that would clearly except mainstream artistic venues from the licensing and regulatory scheme. Because we find it improbable that any performances of serious artistic value qualifying as "adult entertainment" would be staged in individualized booths, the number of ostensibly impermissible applications of the Act is negligible and does not rise to the level of real and substantial overbreadth. The district court did not err, therefore, in denying the preliminary injunction on the basis that Plaintiffs did not demonstrate a substantial likelihood of success in their challenges to the definitions of "adult cabaret," "adult-oriented establishment," and "adult entertainment."

D

Plaintiffs' second challenge is to some of the activities prohibited by the Act. The Act contains the following prohibitions:

> (a) No operator, entertainer or employee of an adult-oriented establishment, either on the premises or in relation to the person's role as an operator, entertainer, or employee of an adult-oriented establishment, shall permit to be performed, offer to perform, perform, or allow patrons to perform sexual intercourse or oral or anal copulation or other contact stimulation of the genitalia.
>
> (b) No operator, entertainer or employee of an adult-oriented establishment shall encourage or permit any person upon the premises to touch, caress or fondle the breasts, buttocks, anus or genitals of any operator, entertainer or employee.
>
> (c) No entertainer, employee, or customer shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any other on the premises during any performance and all performances shall only occur upon a stage at least eighteen inches (18#) above the immediate floor level and removed at least six feet (6#) from the nearest entertainer, employee, or customer.
>
> (d)(1) No employee or entertainer, while on the premises of an adult-oriented establishment, may:
>
> (A) Engage in sexual intercourse;
>
> (B) Engage in deviant sexual conduct;
>
> (C) Appear in a state of nudity; or
>
> (D) Fondle such person's own genitals or those of another.
>
> 390 (2) For the purpose of this section, "nudity" means the showing of the human male or female genitals or pubic area with less than a fully opaque covering, the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple, or the showing of the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state.

Tenn.Code Ann. § 7–51–1114. Plaintiffs contend that the prohibitions contained in § 7–51–1114(b) and § 7–51–1114(c) are overbroad, especially in the context of the other prohibitions in § 7–51–1114. The prohibitions are allegedly overbroad because they apply to mainstream performances of artistic value—on Plaintiffs' reading of the Act's "adult-oriented establishment" definition—and would effectively prohibit all the performances about which Dr. Hanna testified. Since we determine that the Act is susceptible to a narrowing construction that excepts mainstream artistic venues from its reach, this line of argument is unavailing.

Further, Plaintiffs claim that the prohibitions are overbroad even if applied only to adult-oriented venues such as their own adult cabarets because the breadth of physical contact prohibited goes beyond what is necessary to address secondary effects and "impermissibly limits the expressive palette available to [erotic] performers." Appellants' Rep. Br. at 14. In particular, § 7–51–1114(b) is allegedly overbroad because it prohibits a performer's "touching" or "caressing" herself or himself in the course of her or his performance. Such restrictions, Plaintiffs assert, "directly circumscribe[ ] the potential message" inherent in erotic dancing: Dr. Hanna testified that, for example, a prohibition on "plac[ing] hands on the person's hip [or] buttocks ... would be silencing part of their artistic expression," as would a prohibition on "calling attention to [one's] body parts ... [by] plac[ing] hands down the sides of [one's] breasts or cup[ping] them." Appellants' Br. at 24. Similarly, the prohibition on any contact, no matter how innocent, between performers during a performance contained in § 7–51–1114(c), ("[n]o entertainer ... shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any other on the premises during any performance"), is alleged to be overbroad for the same reasons. The impact of these measures is claimed to be all the more burdensome because "[n]othing in the Act limits the application of these restrictions to only those occasions when performers are scantily clad": a performer "may not touch a fellow dancer in a beekeeper's suit." Appellants' Rep. Br. at 12. So burdening the expressive elements of erotic dance, Plaintiffs urge, is unrelated to the Act's stated purposes and needlessly suppresses protected erotic expression.

[20] We have consistently recognized that "nude or nearly nude dancing conveys an endorsement of erotic experience, and is a protected form of expression[,] in the absence of some contrary clue." Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 528 (quoting DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 409) (internal quotation marks omitted). Nonetheless, a content-neutral time, place, or manner regulation may burden this form of expression so long as the burden is no greater than necessary to advance a legitimate government objective, O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication, Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Since the challenge to these provisions is brought on the grounds of overbreadth, we must also determine whether the impermissible applications—i.e., those that are unnecessary to advance the interests at hand and/or that excessively limit alternative avenues —are substantial in number, absolutely and relative to permissible applications.

391 [21] Considering the constitutionality of nudity bans in adult establishments, we have invoked the Supreme Court's determination that "nudity itself is not essential to the eroticism that brings dancing under the protection of the First Amendment." Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 530. Therefore, a ban on nudity does not effect a "complete ban on expression," but "merely," and not unreasonably, "limits one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated." Ibid. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 292–93, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000).

The district court, relying on the Tennessee Court of Appeals' decision in American Show Bar Series, Inc. v. Sullivan County, 30 S.W.3d 324 (Tenn.Ct.App.2000), suggested that both nudity and the prohibited touching are "beyond the 'expressive scope of dancing itself' and ... not protected by the First Amendment." (citing Hang On, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 65 F.3d 1248, 1253 (5th Cir.1995)). In other words, the district court and the Tennessee Court of Appeals deemed these restrictions to be constitutional because the expressive elements in the prohibited physical contact are so minor as to be negligible, and do not interfere with a performer's communication of eroticism to its audience. Whatever modicum of expressive conduct is proscribed, "nothing in constitutional jurisprudence ... suggest[s] that patrons are entitled under the First Amendment to the maximum erotic experience possible." American Show Bar, 30 S.W.3d at 340 (quoting Threesome Entertainment v. Strittmather, 4 F.Supp.2d 710, 724 (N.D.Ohio 1998)).

Plaintiffs contest this characterization of the prohibited activities and invoke the Seventh Circuit's reasoning in Schultz. 228 F.3d 831. In that case, the Seventh Circuit determined that a prohibition on the "depiction of specified sexual activities" [16] burdened the protected elements of erotic expression much more than a minimal-attire requirement imposed by a nudity ban. Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847–48 (emphasis added). While requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings "is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message," "restricting the particular movements and gestures of the erotic dancer ... unconstitutionally burdens protected expression[,]" because it "deprives the performer of a repertoire of expressive elements with which to craft an erotic, sensual performance and thereby interferes substantially with the dancer's ability to communicate her erotic message." Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847.

16 Defined to include " 'the fondling or other erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttocks, anus, or female breasts,' sex acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including intercourse, oral copulation, masturbation, or sodomy[,] and excretory functions in connection with sexual activity." 228 F.3d at 836–37.

[22] Before we determine whether and to what extent the challenged prohibitions interfere with the communication of an erotic message, however, we need to identify with greater care what exactly is prohibited. See Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1838 ("[I]t is impossible to determine whether a statute reaches too far without first knowing what the statute covers."). Reading § 7–51–1114 as a whole, we are not persuaded that § 7–51–1114(b) must be interpreted in the manner Plaintiffs proffer. The provision prohibits an "operator, entertainer or employee" from "encourag[ing] or permit[ting] any person upon the premises to touch, caress or fondle" the listed anatomical areas of "any operator, 392 entertainer or employee." (emphasis added). If the drafters intended to prohibit self-touching, the chosen construction is ill-fitted to the task: to forbid an entertainer from touching herself, one would not commonly direct her not to "encourage or permit " herself "to touch or fondle" herself. A straight-forward way to formulate such a prohibition is to mandate, for example, that "no employee or entertainer ... may[ ] [f]ondle such person's own genitals" or other anatomical areas—as the drafters of the Act did in § 7–51–1114(d). The latter section illustrates that the drafters knew how to formulate an unambiguous prohibition on touching or fondling oneself and others. Moreover, there is no good reason to suppose that the direct and unambiguous prohibitions in § 7–51–1114(d) are not exhaustive.

We read the challenged section 1114(b) as an enactment of vicarious liability for operators or employees who encourage or permit patrons or entertainers to touch other entertainers, perhaps without the latter's explicit consent. All the provisions in section 1114 that concern touching or physical contact are intended to further one goal: the elimination of the kind of sexual contact that is typically attended by adverse secondary effects, such as disease or prostitution. The Act advances that goal in more than one way: first, it explicitly prohibits employees and entertainers from certain kind of touching of self and others, § 7–51–1114(d)(1)(D) (no "fondling" of one's "own genitals or those of another"), § 7–51–1114(d)(1)(B) (no engaging in "deviant sexual conduct"), § 7–51–1114(a) (no performing "sexual intercourse or oral or anal copulation or other contact stimulation of the genitalia"). Second, the Act also includes prophylactic measures that diminish the opportunities for the occurrence of prohibited sexual contact. The six-foot buffer zone is one such measure: it obviously makes it difficult for any contact to occur between persons separated by that distance, but does not in itself prohibit contact. See DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 411.

The prohibition on "encouraging or permitting" physical contact is another such measure: it makes it difficult for operators and employees to circumvent the ban on sexual contact by encouraging patrons to initiate sexual contact with entertainers or other employees without the latter's explicit complicity. Section 7–51–1114(b) does not effect any additional prohibitions on physical contact beyond what is already prohibited in other sections. It merely spells out that an employee will be in violation of the Act for encouraging prohibited conduct even if the employee did not engage in it himself, mirroring the general statement of responsibility for violations of the Act. See § 7–51–1113(d) (making an operator responsible for failure to "exercise due diligence in taking reasonable efforts to prevent acts or omissions of any entertainers or employees constituting a violation" of the Act).

That the prohibition on encouraging or permitting contact applies to more anatomical areas than the direct prohibitions on contact in other sections is not problematic: it is no different from "the addition of a buffer zone to the ban on contact" we addressed in DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 411 (emphasis added). Both prophylactic measures are reasonably believed to be "necessary to achieve" the goal of preventing prohibited contact, "given the repeated violations of the no-contact rule," and the "difficult[y] [of] determin [ing] ... who was responsible" for the violations. Ibid. It is not unreasonable to require that an operator refrain from encouraging a patron to touch a performer's breast, for example, because that action is likely to lead to the kinds of sexual contact that is explicitly 393 prohibited.[17] Because we do not interpret this provision as creating any additional constraints on a performer's own movements, we do not think it "regulat[es] nude dancing with such stringent restrictions that the dance no longer conveys eroticism nor resembles adult entertainment," Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847, and is thus distinguishable from the provision considered in Schultz.

17 It is also possible—although not necessary—to read the provision as directing third parties (i.e., operators or non-performing employees) not to encourage or permit an entertainer to touch herself in the course of her performance, even in a manner that the entertainer herself is not directly prohibited from doing. We think that common sense counsels against such an interpretation. Here too, however, any possible unreasonable enforcement of the provision should invite litigation by the affected parties on an as-applied basis. "[W]hatever overbreadth may exist should be cured through case-by-case analysis of the fact situations to which [a law's] sanctions, assertedly, may not be applied." Ferber, 458 U.S. at 773–74, 102 S.Ct. 3348 (citation omitted).

[23] The second prohibition Plaintiffs challenge also warrants more careful construction: "No entertainer, employee, or customer shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any other on the premises during any performance," and to that effect, "all performances shall only occur ... removed at least six feet (6') from the nearest entertainer, employee, or customer." § 7–51–1114(c). This provision should be read in the same manner as we read a similarly-worded provision in Deja Vu of Nashville[18] that concerned entertainer-customer contact:

18 The provision in question read:

> No customer shall be permitted to have any physical contact with any entertainer on the licensed premises while the entertainer is engaged in a performance of live sexually oriented entertainment. All performances of live sexually oriented entertainment shall only occur upon a stage at least eighteen inches above the immediate floor level and removed at least three feet from the nearest customer.

Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 274 F.3d 377, 396 (6th Cir.2001).

Rather than reading the provision as enacting two separate requirements, we read it as a single mandate, with the "no touch" portion setting forth a broad policy statement that no contact between dancers and customers shall occur during performances, and the "buffer zone" rule showing the specific way to implement that policy by prohibiting clubs from allowing customers within three feet of the stage during dances. Therefore, the provision places a duty not on the entertainer to avoid touching customers, but on the owners and operators of clubs to protect entertainers from being touched by customers by requiring customers to stay three feet away from the stage.... It would simply be nonsensical for [the government] to put the onus of customer control on the entertainer who is already removed at least three feet from the customer, is engaged in live entertainment, and is, by definition, incapable of preventing an approaching customer from touching her without engaging in the prohibited touching herself.

Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc., 274 F.3d at 397–98 (emphasis added). Likewise, the provision before us requires only that a six-foot distance between an entertainer and any other entertainer, employee, or customer be assured during performances, and that performances take place on an eighteen-inch stage. These spatial requirements ensure that no contact occurs between a performer and any other person 394 during a performance.[19] Analogous to § 7–51–1114(b), the six-foot buffer-zone and eighteen-inch elevation rules spell out what "due diligence" requires of operators to prevent violations of the explicit prohibitions of the Act. Because the first clause does not impose additional prohibitions or duties beyond the buffer and height requirements contained in the second clause, this provision is identical to the one we upheld in the context of an as-applied challenge in DLS, Inc. 107 F.3d at 413.

19 We do not think the provision intends to prohibit all contact among customers or non-performing employees beyond what is explicitly prohibited in other sections, as an exceedingly literal reading may suggest. In any case, neither Plaintiffs nor Defendants address the possibility that the County may penalize adult establishments for casual contact among their customers or non-performing employees during a > performance. Accordingly, we do not consider this hypothetical possibility sufficiently "actual" to weigh in our overbreadth analysis, and leave any contentious applications of this provision to as-applied adjudication.

Plaintiffs' efforts to distinguish our decision in DLS, Inc. on the basis that we did not adjudicate an overbreadth challenge, Appellants' Rep. Br. at 15, are unpersuasive. In that case, we found that Chattanooga's six-foot buffer requirement survived intermediate scrutiny under O'Brien and Renton: it furthered important content-neutral state interests of crime and disease-prevention, the evidence relied on by Chattanooga made it "reasonable to conclude that the six-foot rule would further the state interests," and it was "sufficiently narrowly tailored to be [a] valid regulation under the First Amendment." DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 410–3. Since Chattanooga's buffer-zone requirement did not impermissibly burden expression in adult cabarets similar to Plaintiffs', such a requirement cannot form a basis for a successful overbreadth attack —at least not without a demonstration of a "substantial number" of unconstitutional applications beyond those considered in DLS, Inc. See Richland Bookmart, Inc., 555 F.3d at 532; see also 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 492 (holding that a requirement "that an entertainer stay at least five feet away from areas being occupied by customers for at least one hour after the entertainer performs semi-nude on stage" survives intermediate scrutiny); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc., 274 F.3d at 396 (holding that a prohibition on customer-entertainer contact during performances and a three-foot buffer zone survives intermediate scrutiny).

Plaintiffs do not bring to our attention any other allegedly unconstitutional applications beyond those deemed insufficient to prevail on an as-applied challenge in DLS, Inc. Therefore, the district court did not err in finding that Plaintiffs did not establish a substantial likelihood of prevailing on the merits of their overbreadth challenge to § 7–51–1114(b) and § 7–51–1114(c).

E

[24] Next, Plaintiffs claim that the definitions of "adult cabaret" and "adult entertainment" render the Act unconstitutionally vague. Plaintiffs complain that they cannot "ascertain[ ] where the outer boundaries of the Act lie," such that they may "shape their conduct so as to avoid them." Appellants' Br. at 48. The complaints of vagueness are coterminous with Plaintiffs' complaints of overbreadth. The definition of "adult cabaret" is vague, Plaintiffs allege, because there is nothing in the Act "to explain[ ] or cabin the phrase 'entertainment of an erotic nature.' " Appellants' Br. at 50. Because we found that the definition of "adult cabaret" is not overbroad, we can readily supply the explanatory or "cabining" language that 395 Plaintiffs assert is wanting. Establishments that "feature entertainment of an erotic nature, including exotic dancers, strippers," and so on, are merely examples, and do not augment the reasonably clear meaning of "adult cabaret" offered in the first sentence of that definition. It is therefore unnecessary to ask the questions to which Plaintiffs intimate there are no answers (e.g., "What is an exotic dancer?"). Ibid.

[25] The definition of "adult entertainment" is the next target of a vagueness charge. Recalling that this term means "any exhibition ... that has as a principal or predominant theme ... any actual or simulated performance of specified sexual activities[,] ... removal of articles of clothing or appearing unclothed," Plaintiffs intend to demonstrate vagueness by posing questions based on that definition: "Would an adult nightclub be subject to the Act if dancers there began their performances in street clothes or evening gowns and stripped to bikini bathing suits?"; "Is it adult entertainment ... [t]o remove one's coat and hat on stage? To shed an outer garment?" Appellants' Br. at 51.

Under the narrowing construction to which the Act is readily susceptible, all these questions are readily answered. If the "stripping to bikini bathing suits" is taking place in "booths, cubicles, rooms, compartments or stalls separate from the common areas of the premises" and is staged for profit "direct or indirect," then the establishment is subject to the Act. In sum, a narrowing construction sufficiently clarifies the parts of this Act allegedly contaminated by vagueness. Thus, the district court did not err in holding that a vagueness challenge is not likely to succeed on the merits.

F

Plaintiffs' last claim—that the Act's requirements will result in a drastic reduction in the "quantity and accessibility of speech," Appellants' Br. at 53—is also predicated on the acceptance of Plaintiffs' overbreadth and vagueness claims. Since we do not accept Plaintiffs' overly literal and expansive reading of the Act's terms, we are equally unpersuaded that the Act's provisions are "so onerous" as to cause the majority of Memphis's nightclubs to "cease presenting adult entertainment entirely."

Finally, Plaintiffs contend that the district court erred in its determination that the balance of equities disfavored a temporary injunction in their favor. Because the district court correctly determined that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits of their claim, the issue of balancing equities is moot. See Hamilton's Bogarts, Inc., 501 F.3d at 649 ("[I]n a First Amendment case, the crucial inquiry is usually whether the plaintiff has demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits. This is so because, as in this case, the issues of the public interest and harm to the respective parties [i.e. balancing equities] largely depend on the constitutionality of the statute" (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

III

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of a preliminary injunction.

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge, concurring only in the judgment.

I believe that the district court did not abuse its discretion by denying the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. I do not join the majority's opinion, and I concur solely in the judgment affirming the district court's judgment that the plaintiffs have not satisfied the requirements 396 for a preliminary injunction of the challenged provisions, Tennessee Code Annotated § 7–51–1114(b) & (c).

All Citations

588 F.3d 372

End of Document

526 F.3d 291
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

SENSATIONS, INC.; Lady Godiva's, Inc., and Litle Red Barn Adult Theatre & Bookstore, Inc., Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS; Michigan Decency Action Council, Inc.; Judy Rose; Dar Vander Ark; Black Hills Citizens for a Better Community, Inc., Defendants–Appellees.

Nos. 06–2168, 06–2508, 06–2510, 07–1504.
|
Argued: Jan. 30, 2008.
|
Decided and Filed: May 20, 2008.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Aug. 14, 2008.

Synopsis

Background: Sexually oriented businesses brought separate actions against city and others alleging that ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses had infringed on their First Amendment rights. Following consolidation, the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan at Kalamazoo, Robert Holmes Bell, Chief Judge, 2006 WL 2504388, denied businesses' motion for preliminary injunction, granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, and, 2007 WL 851268, awarded attorney fees to non–city defendants. Businesses appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Karen Nelson Moore, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] district court did not convert motion for judgment on the pleadings into summary judgment motion;

[2] businesses were not entitled to conduct discovery on issue of negative secondary effects of such businesses;

[3] ordinance did not infringe the First Amendment rights of businesses;

[4] ordinance id not violate businesses' right to freedom of association;

[5] ordinance was not unconstitutionally overbroad;

[6] ordinance was not unconstitutionally vague; but

[7] award of attorney fees was not warranted.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

West Headnotes (14)

[1] Federal Courts
Judgment on the pleadings

Motions for judgment on the pleadings are analyzed under the same de novo standard as motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 12(b)(6), (c), 28 U.S.C.A.

147 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Preliminary injunction;temporary restraining order

Court of Appeals reviews the district court's denial of motion for a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Civil Procedure
Matters considered

Federal Civil Procedure
Motion

Legislative record of city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses was not a "document outside the pleadings" of consolidated actions brought by such businesses alleging that ordinance infringed their First Amendment rights, and, thus, by considering the legislative record attached to motion for judgment on the pleadings brought by city and other defendants, district court did not convert their motion into a motion for summary judgment; by attaching the ordinance to the complaint, business also incorporated the legislative record into the pleadings, given that ordinance incorporated the legislative record. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rules 10(c), 12(c), 56, 28 U.S.C.A.

70 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Civil Procedure

Determination of Motion

Sexually oriented businesses that had brought action alleging that city ordinance regulating their businesses infringed their First Amendment rights were not entitled to conduct discovery that might have yielded evidence enabling them to disprove negative secondary effects of such businesses, which formed city's justification for ordinance, prior to the district court's entering judgment on the pleadings for city and other defendants. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Courts

Number of judges concurring in opinion, and opinion by divided court

A panel of Court of Appeals cannot overturn the decision of a prior panel.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Nude dancing in general

Nude dancing is a form of expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

City ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses by banning total nudity, imposing six-foot distance requirement and prohibiting touching between performer and audience members, requiring open-booths, and limiting hours of operation, did not infringe the First Amendment rights of such businesses; regulating sexually oriented businesses to reduce negative secondary effects was within the scope of city's constitutional powers, secondary effects which city desired to reduce were undeniably important government interests, city aimed at suppressing the secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses and not the speech communicated by those businesses, and ordinance was narrowly tailored to the reduction of secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

When determining whether regulations on the operation of sexually oriented businesses violate the First Amendment, the court must determine whether municipality enacted the ordinance:(1) within its constitutional power, (2) to further a substantial governmental interest that is (3) unrelated to the suppression of speech, and whether (4) the provisions pose only an incidental burden on First Amendment freedoms that is no greater than is essential to further the government interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Freedom of Association

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

City ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses which imposed six-foot distance requirement and prohibited touching between performer and audience members did not violate businesses' right to freedom of association. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance banning total nudity in sexually oriented businesses was not unconstitutionally overbroad; ban was narrower than a similar regulation applicable to the general public. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses by banning total nudity but allowing semi-nudity was not unconstitutionally vague, since ordinance's definition of semi-nudity clearly stated what parts of the female breast could be exposed, provided adequate notice, established standards that would guide enforcement, and did not inhibit First Amendment freedoms. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Civil Rights
Awards to defendants;frivolous, vexatious, or meritless claims

Award of attorney fees was not warranted for citizens who advocated for city ordinance regulating sexually oriented business and who offered and provided funds to defend it against litigation following district court's grant of judgment on the pleadings for citizens and city in action brought by such businesses alleging that ordinance infringed their First Amendment rights; businesses' claim that symbiotic relationship existed between citizens and city, such that citizens were state actors for purposes of § 1983 liability, was neither frivolous nor unreasonable. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 1983, 1988.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Federal Courts
Costs and attorney fees

Court of Appeals reviews a district court's award of attorneys fees in a civil rights action based on an abuse of discretion standard. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1988.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Civil Rights
Awards to defendants;frivolous, vexatious, or meritless claims

A prevailing defendant in a civil rights action should only recover attorney fees upon a finding by the district court that the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation, even though not brought in subjective bad faith; in applying these criteria, it is important that a district court resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that, because a plaintiff did not ultimately prevail, his action must have been unreasonable or without foundation. 42 U.S.C.A. § 1988.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

293 ARGUED: Michael L. Donaldson, Livonia, Michigan, J. Michael Southerland, J. Michael Southerland, P.C., for Appellants. Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, Tennessee, James R. Wierenga, David & Wierenga, P.C., Grand Rapids, Michigan, for Appellees. ON BRIEF: Michael L. Donaldson, Livonia, Michigan, J. Michael Southerland, J. Michael Southerland, P.C., Plymouth, Michigan, for Appellants. Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, Tennessee, James R. Wierenga, David & Wierenga, P.C., Grand Rapids, Michigan, Catherine M. Mish, City Attorney's Office, Grand Rapids, Michigan, for Appellees.

Before: MERRITT, DAUGHTREY, and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

OPINION

KAREN NELSON MOORE, Circuit Judge.

This case concerns a consolidated appeal by Sensations, Inc. et al. ("Sensations") 294 and Little Red Barn Adult Theatre & Bookstore, Inc. ("Little Red Barn") (collectively "Plaintiffs–Appellants"), from the grant of a judgment on the pleadings to the City of Grand Rapids ("Grand Rapids") and various private citizens and citizens' groups (collectively "Defendants"). These private citizens and citizens' groups include Michigan Decency Action Council, Inc., Judy Rose, Dar Vander Ark, and Black Hills Citizens for a Better Community (collectively "Non–City Defendants–Appellees"). Plaintiffs–Appellants filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, seeking a preliminary injunction against an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses on the ground that the ordinance violated Plaintiffs–Appellants' First Amendment and Due Process rights. The district court denied Plaintiffs–Appellants' motion for a preliminary injunction, granted Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, and awarded attorney fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees to be paid by Little Red Barn.

I. FACTS AND PROCEDURE

After learning that a local businessman was planning to open a sexually oriented business in downtown Grand Rapids, Non–City Defendants–Appellees mobilized in favor of a regulatory ordinance. When the Grand Rapids City Council expressed initial reluctance to pass such an ordinance because of the potential costs of defending it against litigation, Non–City Defendants–Appellees promised that they would fund any necessary legal defense with personal and privately raised monies. On April 25, 2006, the Grand Rapids City Council passed Ordinance 2006–23 ("the Ordinance"), entitled Conduct in Sexually Oriented Businesses. Grand Rapids justified the Ordinance on the basis of the negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses.

Pursuant to the Ordinance, a sexually oriented business means "any adult motion picture theater, adult bookstore, adult novelty store, adult video store, adult cabaret or semi-nude model studio as defined in Section 5.284 of [the Grand Rapids] Code." Joint Appendix ("J.A.") at 45 (Ordinance at § 2(5)). The Ordinance contains the following major provisions: (1) a prohibition on total nudity; (2) the requirement that semi-nude adult-entertainment performers maintain a six-foot distance from patrons, on a stage at least eighteen inches from the floor, in a room of at least six-hundred square feet; (3) the configuration of any room where "any mechanical or electronic image-producing device ... display[s] ... specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas ... in such a manner that there is an unobstructed view from an operator[']s station of every area of the premises"; (4) a 180–day compliance allowance; (5) a no-touching rule between sexual performers and audience members; (6) a prohibition on the operation of a sexually oriented business between the hours of two A.M. and seven A.M. J.A. at 45–46 (Ordinance at § 3).

The Ordinance provides the following definitions:

> "Nudity," "nude," or "state of nudity" means the knowing or intentional live display of a human genital organ or anus with less than a fully opaque covering or a female's breast with less than a fully opaque covering of the nipple and areola. Nudity, as used in this section, does not include a woman's breast-feeding of a baby whether or not the nipple or areola is exposed during or incidental to the feeding....
>
> "Semi-nudity," "semi-nude," or in a "semi-nude condition" means the showing of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola and 295 extending across the width of the breast at that point, or the showing of the male or female buttocks. This definition shall include the lower portion of the human female breast, but shall not include any portion of the cleavage of the human female breasts exhibited by a bikini, dress, blouse, shirt, leotard, or similar wearing apparel provided the areola is not exposed in whole or in part.

J.A. at 44–45 (Ordinance at §§ 2(b)(ii), 2(b)(iv)).

Co-plaintiffs Sensations, Inc. and Lady Godiva's, Inc. filed a complaint in the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan, alleging that Grand Rapids had infringed on their First Amendment rights in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The district court consolidated the case filed by Sensations with a suit filed by Little Red Barn against both Grand Rapids and Non–City Defendants–Appellees. Little Red Barn filed a motion for a continuation of a stay of enforcement or for a preliminary injunction, in which Sensations joined. Grand Rapids filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, as did Non–City Defendants–Appellees. Sensations filed a brief in opposition supported by twenty-six exhibits. Little Red Barn filed its Response and Brief in Opposition and attached the affidavit of Dr. Daniel Linz and supporting documents.

The district court denied the motion for a continuation of a stay or for a preliminary injunction. Little Red Barn filed a timely notice of appeal. The district court later issued an opinion granting the Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings. Little Red Barn filed a timely notice of appeal, as did Sensations. The district court awarded attorney fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees to be paid by Little Red Barn, and Little Red Barn filed a timely notice of appeal.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Standard of Review

[1] [2] Motions for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) are analyzed under the same de novo standard as motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6). Penny/Ohlmann/Nieman, Inc. v. Miami Valley Pension Corp., 399 F.3d 692, 697 (6th Cir.2005). We review the district court's denial of Plaintiffs–Appellants' motion for a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. Am. Civil Liberties Union of Ohio, Inc. v. Taft, 385 F.3d 641, 645 (6th Cir.2004). In Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007), the Supreme Court explained that "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.... Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level...." Id. at 1964–65 (internal citations omitted). In Erickson v. Pardus, 550 U.S. ——, 127 S.Ct. 2197, 167 L.Ed.2d 1081 (2007), decided two weeks after Twombly, however, the Supreme Court affirmed that "Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) requires only 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.' Specific facts are not necessary; the statement need only 'give the defendant fair notice of what the ... claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.' " Id. at 2200 (quoting Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1964). The opinion in Erickson reiterated that "when ruling on a defendant's motion to dismiss, a judge must accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint." Id. (citing Twombly, 127 S.Ct. at 1965). We read the Twombly and Erickson decisions in conjunction with one another when reviewing 296 a district court's decision to grant a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim or a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12. [1]

[1] We have previously "noted some uncertainty concerning the scope of" Twombly. Commercial Money Ctr., Inc. v. Illinois Union Ins. Co., 508 F.3d 327, 337 n. 4 (6th Cir.2007). In particular, we have taken note of the Second Circuit's interpretation of Twombly as enacting a "plausibility standard [which] did not significantly alter notice pleading or impose heightened pleading requirements for all federal claims[, and] [i]nstead, ... require[d] more concrete allegations only in those instances in which the complaint, on its face, does not otherwise set forth a plausible claim for relief." Weisbarth v. Geauga Park Dist., 499 F.3d 538, 542 (6th Cir.2007) (citing Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 157–58 (2d Cir.2007)).

B. Did the District Court Err by Converting a Rule 12(c) Motion into a Rule 56 Motion?

[3] Plaintiffs–Appellants argue that by considering the legislative record attached to Defendants' motion the district judge improperly converted a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c) into a motion for summary judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 10(c) provides that "[a] copy of a written instrument that is an exhibit to a pleading is a part of the pleading for all purposes." [2] We have previously held that a district court converts a Rule 12(c) motion into a Rule 56 motion when the district judge merely "fail[s] to exclude presented outside evidence." Max Arnold & Sons, LLC v. W.L. Hailey & Co., 452 F.3d 494, 503 (6th Cir.2006). Thus the question before us is whether the legislative record comes within the scope of Rule 10(c) or is "outside evidence" under Max Arnold.

2 This language became effective December 1, 2007. The new language represents a stylistic change from the former language of Fed.R.Civ.P. 10(c), which provided that: "[a] copy of any written instrument which is an exhibit to a pleading is a part thereof for all purposes." We may apply the new language to proceedings pending as of the effective date insofar as the application is practicable and just. 28 U.S.C. § 2074(a).

In the instant case, we hold that the district court did not convert Defendants' Rule 12(c) motion into a Rule 56 motion. Certainly, the district judge accepted as evidence of secondary effects the legislative record, which Defendants attached to their motion for judgment on the pleadings. Were the legislative record to constitute a document outside the pleadings, then the district judge would have converted a motion for judgment on the pleadings into a motion for summary judgment. The legislative record did not constitute such an external document, however.[3] Sensations attached a copy of the Ordinance to its complaint as Exhibit A; under Rule 10(c), therefore, we treat the Ordinance as 297 part of the pleadings. The Ordinance, in turn, states that "[t]he City hereby adopts and incorporates herein its stated findings and legislative record related to the adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses, including the judicial opinions and reports related to such secondary effects." J.A. at 43 (Ordinance at § 1(a)). By attaching the Ordinance to the complaint, therefore, Sensations also incorporated the legislative record into the pleadings. Because Sensations had notice via its own actions that the legislative record formed part of the pleadings, the district judge acted fairly when he considered the Ordinance and legislative record as part of the pleadings, while excluding outside evidence including the Linz affidavit. The district judge in this case appropriately excluded additional affidavits presented by both sides that went beyond the legislative record; therefore, he did not convert Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings into a motion for summary judgment.

3 Little Red Barn argues that the affidavits and articles contained within the legislative record are not properly considered part of that record because Grand Rapids City Council members received the materials on the day they adopted Ordinance 23 and could not have discussed the materials prior to passage of the Ordinance. It is not within our province, however, to speculate as to how quickly or carefully the Council members might have read the documents that comprise the legislative record. Little Red Barn is correct to point out that Article 37 in the record was published in May 2006, one month after the passage of the Ordinance. At oral argument, counsel for Grand Rapids clarified that the City Council obtained an advance copy of the article, which it included in the legislative record. Counsel for Little Red Barn did not dispute this explanation, which satisfies any concerns we might have had regarding whether the City Council actually could have relied on the evidence it included in the legislative record.

C. Did the District Court Err in Denying Plaintiffs–Appellants' Request to Conduct Discovery?

[4] The crux of this case is whether Plaintiffs–Appellants were entitled to discovery that might have yielded evidence enabling them to disprove negative secondary effects at the local level. In Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metropolitan Government of Nashville, 466 F.3d 391, 398 (6th Cir.2006) (Deja Vu of Nashville III)[4], cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1339, 127 S.Ct. 2088, 167 L.Ed.2d 765 (2007), we held that the plaintiff adult-entertainment business Deja Vu was "not entitled to discovery regarding secondary effects." Plaintiffs–Appellants argue that Deja Vu of Nashville III can be distinguished from the instant case on the basis of its procedural history; that the critical statement regarding discovery amounted to dicta; and, if not, that the Sixth Circuit's decision violates the Supreme Court's decision in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002).[5]

4 The district court opinion refers to this case as Deja Vu II. We have labeled it Deja Vu of Nashville III because of the existence of an intervening decision between it and Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metropolitan Government of Nashville (Deja Vu of Nashville I), 274 F.3d 377 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1073, 122 S.Ct. 1952, 152 L.Ed.2d 855 (2002). The intervening decision, which the Sixth Circuit in Deja Vu of Nashville III refers to as Deja Vu II, was Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metropolitan Government of Nashville, 421 F.3d 417 (6th Cir.2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1206, 126 S.Ct. 2916, 165 L.Ed.2d 917 (2006).

5 In Alameda Books, a plurality (rather than a majority) of the Supreme Court set forth a burden-shifting framework governing the evidentiary standard in secondary-effects cases. The framework involves three steps: (1) the city must put forth evidence of the nexus between the challenged regulation and the reduction of secondary effects; (2) plaintiffs may "cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings"; and (3) "[i]f plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Id., 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

[5] We find Plaintiffs–Appellants' arguments unconvincing and conclude that Deja Vu of Nashville III forecloses their argument regarding entitlement to discovery. In neither Deja Vu of Nashville III nor the instant case did plaintiffs receive a trial on the merits. See Deja Vu of Nashville III, 466 F.3d at 394, 398 (noting that in Deja Vu a trial on the merits was unnecessary because there were no unresolved issues of fact and that plaintiff was not entitled to discovery regarding localized secondary effects). Moreover, the 298 Deja Vu litigation involved a magistrate judge's order insulating the defendant government from discovery regarding secondary effects, an order which the district court never reviewed. Id. at 398. Thus, the procedural history of the Deja Vu case is analogous to the current controversy, where the district court entered judgment on the pleadings without allowing Plaintiffs–Appellants to conduct discovery. In addition, the opinion in Deja Vu of Nashville III did not present its conclusion regarding discovery as dicta but rather stated it was "fundamental[ ]" to the holding of the case. Id. Plaintiffs–Appellants' third contention—that Deja Vu of Nashville III is incorrect under Alameda Books—is similarly unpersuasive. As the district court correctly determined, Deja Vu of Nashville III is a binding interpretation of Alameda Books. Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, No. 1:06–CV–300, No. 4:06–CV–60, 2006 U.S. Dist. Lexis 77159, at *25–*26 (W.D.Mich. Oct. 23, 2006). Because this panel cannot overturn the decision of a prior Sixth Circuit panel, we must conclude that the district court did not err in denying Plaintiffs–Appellants the opportunity for further discovery before entering judgment on the pleadings. See Salmi v. Sec'y of Health & Human Servs., 774 F.2d 685, 689 (6th Cir.1985); 6th Cir. R. 206(c) (a later panel cannot overrule a prior panel's published opinion).

D. Did the District Court Err in Determining that the Ordinance Satisfies the O'Brien test Applicable to the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses?

[6] Nude dancing is a form of expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville (Deja Vu of Nashville I), 274 F.3d 377, 391 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1073, 122 S.Ct. 1952, 152 L.Ed.2d 855 (2002). Nevertheless, in accordance with Supreme Court precedent, the Sixth Circuit treats laws such as the Ordinance, which regulate adult-entertainment businesses, as if they were content neutral. Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435, 438–39 (6th Cir.1998). We have applied the test first set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), to regulations on the operation of sexually oriented businesses. See, e.g., Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp. Bd. of Trs., 411 F.3d 777, 789–90 (6th Cir.2005) (en banc) (applying the O'Brien test to an hours-of-operation provision); Deja Vu of Nashville I, 274 F.3d at 396 (applying the O'Brien test to a regulation requiring a specified buffer zone between the performer and audience); DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 410 (6th Cir.1997) (same). J.A. at 43–44 (Ordinance at § (1)).

[7] [8] The O'Brien test requires us to determine whether Grand Rapids enacted the Ordinance "(1) within its constitutional power, (2) to further a substantial governmental interest that is (3) unrelated to the suppression of speech, and whether (4) the provisions pose only an 'incidental burden on First Amendment freedoms that is no greater than is essential to further the government interest.' " Deja Vu of Nashville I, 274 F.3d at 393. First, Plaintiffs–Appellants argue that Grand Rapids did not have the authority to pass the Ordinance because the city did not show a nexus between the regulations and a reduction in secondary effects. But arguing that the evidentiary basis is weak avoids the question we must decide, which is whether the city enacted the Ordinance within its constitutional powers. We have previously held that regulating sexually oriented businesses to reduce negative secondary effects lies within the scope of a city's authority under the O'Brien test. Id. at 393–94; see also DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 410. Second, the secondary effects 299 which Grand Rapids desires to reduce are "undeniably important" government interests. Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 790 (quoting City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 296, 300, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion)). Third, Grand Rapids aimed at suppressing the secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses and not the speech communicated by those businesses. J.A. at 43–44 (Ordinance at § 1).

Finally, the district court offered sound reasons why the Ordinance is narrowly tailored to the reduction of secondary effects. The prohibition of full nudity has been viewed as having only a de minimis effect on the expressive character of erotic dancing. See City of Erie, 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality opinion). A plurality of the Supreme Court in Pap's A.M. rejected the argument that a ban on total nudity "enacts a complete ban on expression" and instead found that the ban "ha[d] the effect of limiting one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated." 529 U.S. at 292–93, 120 S.Ct. 1382. In addition, the Sixth Circuit has upheld every one of the other regulatory provisions contained in the Ordinance: the six-foot distance requirement between performer and audience members and the no-touching rule; the open-booth requirement; and the limitation on hours of operation. See Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 789–91 (upholding an hours-of-operation limitation on adult businesses); Deja Vu of Nashville I, 274 F.3d at 396 (upholding a three-foot buffer/no-touching regulation); Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 440–41 (upholding limitations on the hours and days that an adult-entertainment business could operate); DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 408–13 (upholding a six-foot buffer/no-touching regulation); Bamon Corp. v. City of Dayton, 923 F.2d 470, 474 (6th Cir.1991) (upholding an open-booth requirement). Given the overwhelming weight of precedent against their case, we asked Plaintiffs–Appellants at oral argument which specific provisions of the Ordinance allegedly violated the First Amendment. Plaintiffs–Appellants could offer no answer except to argue that the sum of the Ordinance's parts placed such a significant burden on speech as to violate the First Amendment, even though each individual provision is constitutional. This argument is unavailing.

Plaintiffs–Appellants also argue that cameras in booths would be a less-restrictive means of reducing illicit sexual activities and that a buffer requirement is not necessary for peep shows. The Supreme Court, however, has found that a regulation narrowly tailored to achieve a government interest "need not be the least restrictive or least intrusive means of doing so." Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989).[6] We therefore affirm the decision of the district court that the Ordinance satisfies the O'Brien test and is thus constitutional.

6 This statement of the standard for a narrowly tailored regulation applies both to cases analyzed under O'Brien and time, place, or manner regulations. Ward, 491 U.S. at 798, 109 S.Ct. 2746 ("[W]e have held that the O'Brien test 'in the last analysis is little, if any, different from the standard applied to time, place, or manner restrictions.' " (quotation omitted)).

E. Did the District Court Err in Concluding that the Ordinance does Not Violate the Rights to Free Association or Due Process, and is Not Unconstitutionally Overbroad or Vague?

[9] [10] [11] We also affirm the district court's well-reasoned explanation why the 300 Ordinance does not violate Plaintiffs–Appellants' right to freedom of association and is neither overbroad, nor vague, nor a violation of due process. Plaintiffs–Appellants' freedom-of-association claim is foreclosed by our prior holding that a mandatory buffer between performer and audience and a no-touching rule do not violate the right to free association. Deja Vu of Nashville I, at 396–97. In support of their overbreadth claim, Plaintiffs–Appellants cite Odle v. Decatur County, 421 F.3d 386, 399 (6th Cir.2005), in which the Sixth Circuit found overbroad a general public-nudity ordinance. But a regulation banning total nudity in sexually oriented businesses is far narrower than a similar regulation applicable to the general public. The overbreadth doctrine is, moreover, "manifestly, strong medicine" and should be employed "only as a last resort." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). In the instant case, there does not exist "a realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the Court." Members of City Council v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). Plaintiffs–Appellants' claim that the Ordinance is vague fails because the Ordinance's definition of semi-nudity, which clearly states what parts of the female breast may be exposed, provides adequate notice, establishes standards that may guide enforcement, and does not inhibit First Amendment freedoms. See Deja Vu of Cincinnati, 411 F.3d at 798. Finally, Plaintiffs–Appellants do not challenge the reasoning of the district court regarding why the Ordinance is not an unconstitutional taking and does not violate procedural or substantive due process. [7]

7 Plaintiffs–Appellants argue only that Grand Rapids needed to consider more evidence regarding secondary effects, citing Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. v. Fulton County, 242 F.3d 976 (11th Cir.2001), cert. denied, 536 U.S. 904, 122 S.Ct. 2356, 153 L.Ed.2d 178 (2002). However, Flanigan's Enterprises actually supports a conclusion that the passage of the Ordinance did not violate due process. In that case, the Eleventh Circuit held that although a county ordinance failed the O'Brien test because the county had not relied on evidence relevant to asserted secondary effects, the passage of the ordinance had not violated plaintiffs' procedural due process rights. Id. at 987–89.

F. Did the District Court Abuse Its Discretion by Awarding Attorney Fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees?

[12] By affirming the district court's conclusion that the Ordinance is constitutional, we also necessarily affirm the dismissal of claims against both Grand Rapids and Non–City Defendants–Appellees. Despite dismissing the claims against Non–City Defendants–Appellees, we conclude that the District Court abused its discretion by awarding attorney fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees and, therefore, we reverse the award of these fees.

In reaching this conclusion, we acknowledge that the question of whether the district court abused its discretion by awarding attorney fees is a close one. The difficulty in resolving the fees issue lies primarily in the fact that even had we found the Ordinance unconstitutional, we might well have dismissed the § 1983 claims against Non–City Defendants–Appellees. We would be required to dismiss these claims if we found that the actions of these private citizens and citizens' groups are not " 'fairly attributable to the state.' " Chapman v. Higbee Co., 319 F.3d 825, 833 (6th Cir.2003) (en banc) (quoting Lugar v. 301 Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 947, 102 S.Ct. 2744, 73 L.Ed.2d 482 (1982)), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 945, 124 S.Ct. 2902, 159 L.Ed.2d 827 (2004).

On appeal, Little Red Barn contends that a symbiotic relationship existed between the city of Grand Rapids and the citizens who advocated for the Ordinance and who offered and provided funds to defend it against litigation. As we have observed, "The Supreme Court has developed three tests for determining the existence of state action in a particular case: (1) the public function test, (2) the state compulsion test, and (3) the symbiotic relationship or nexus test." Id. Little Red Barn argues that the citizens' actions fell within the scope of the third test because the private citizens usurped the government's obligation to propose legislation as well as the government's power to tax and raise money. In Chapman, we held that "[u]nder the symbiotic or nexus test, a section 1983 claimant must demonstrate that there is a sufficiently close nexus between the government and the private party's conduct so that the conduct may be fairly attributed to the state itself." Id. at 834. The inquiry proceeds on a case-by-case basis and is fact-specific. Id.

As a categorical matter, the cooperative relationship between Grand Rapids and the Non–City Defendants–Appellees that arose solely as a result of the citizens' non-monetary mobilization in support of the Ordinance could not rise to the level of a "symbiotic relationship" as defined in Chapman. Merely petitioning a local government to pass specific legislation is the kind of political speech at the heart of First Amendment protection. Furthermore, if advocacy for a piece of legislation established a symbiotic relationship between citizens and the state, then citizen activists would automatically be vulnerable to § 1983 suits arising from constitutionally unsound legislation they supported. This would seriously chill citizen advocacy and burden our democracy, a cornerstone of which is citizen engagement in the legislative process.

The more difficult question is whether in offering to pay for the defense of the Ordinance, and indeed here in actually making substantial payments, Non–City Defendants–Appellees created a symbiotic relationship to the state. We conclude that the offer by private citizens to fund the defense of an ordinance, and acceptance by a local governing body, does not necessarily establish a symbiotic relationship for purposes of a § 1983 claim. [8] We caution, however, that the admonition in Chapman to evaluate the existence or absence of symbiotic relationship on a case-by-case and factually specific basis remains true in the context of an offer by private citizens to fund the defense of legislation and an acceptance by a governmental entity. In the instant case, because we found the Ordinance constitutional we do not need definitively to resolve the question whether by funding the defense of the Ordinance, Non–City Defendants–Appellees created a symbiotic relationship with Grand Rapids.

8 At oral argument, counsel for Non–City Defendants–Appellees stated that they would not dispute evidence submitted by Little Red Barn demonstrating that Grand Rapids had indeed accepted the offer made by Non–City Defendants–Appellees to cover the expense of defending the Ordinance.

We find it important, however, as a precursor to our discussion of whether the district court erred in awarding attorney fees, to show that arguments exist on both sides of the issue respecting the existence of a symbiotic relationship. On the one hand, the idea of citizens being able, effectively, to buy particular ordinances and 302 statutes in service of their private interests, or their own unique vision of the public interest, offends our national ideal of legislators serving the public as a whole. On the other hand, as one judge suggested at oral argument, the reality of our political process already falls far from that ideal. Non–City Defendants–Appellees' offer of funds does not differ significantly from the offer of campaign donations routinely made by lobbyists favoring certain pieces of legislation and opposing others. Furthermore, the Supreme Court has held that government funding of private entities via contracts does not create a symbiotic relationship. Rendell–Baker v. Kohn, 457 U.S. 830, 843, 102 S.Ct. 2764, 73 L.Ed.2d 418 (1982) ("Here the school's fiscal relationship with the State is not different from that of many contractors performing services for the government. No symbiotic relationship ... exists here.") As a corollary, private funding offered in defense of a government ordinance would similarly not create a symbiotic relationship. Although Non–City Defendants–Appellees' offer of funding may have tipped the balance toward passage of the Ordinance, ultimately members of the Grand Rapids City Council and not Non–City Defendants–Appellees made the decision to pass the Ordinance. In the circumstances of this case, therefore, even had we found the Ordinance unconstitutional, we might well have dismissed the claims against Non–City Defendants–Appellees.

[13] [14] Nevertheless, we reverse the district court's award of attorney fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees. "We review a district court's award of attorneys fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 based on an abuse of discretion standard." Wilson–Simmons v. Lake County Sheriff's Dep't, 207 F.3d 818, 823 (6th Cir.2000). " '[A] prevailing defendant should only recover upon a finding by the district court that the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation, even though not brought in subjective bad faith.' " Wolfe v. Perry, 412 F.3d 707, 720 (6th Cir.2005) (quoting Wayne v. Village of Sebring, 36 F.3d 517, 530 (6th Cir.1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1127, 115 S.Ct. 2000, 131 L.Ed.2d 1001 (1995)). "In applying these criteria, it is important that a district court resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that, because a plaintiff did not ultimately prevail, his action must have been unreasonable or without foundation." Christiansburg Garment Co.v. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n, 434 U.S. 412, 421–22, 98 S.Ct. 694, 54 L.Ed.2d 648 (1978). We conclude that the district court abused its discretion because Little Red Barn's claim against Non–City Defendant–Appellees was neither frivolous nor unreasonable.

Little Red Barn sought not only injunctive relief from Grand Rapids but also other forms of relief from Non–City Defendants–Appellees. Most significantly, Little Red Barn sought monetary damages from Non–City Defendants–Appellees to compensate for "emotional and financial injury." J.A. at 69–70 (LRB Compl. at ¶ 56). In addition, Little Red Barn sought declaratory relief that the "City's relationship with the remaining defendants is constitutionally impermissible." J.A. at 68 (LRB Compl. at ¶ 50). Such a declaration would apply to both Grand Rapids and Non–City Defendants–Appellees and would deter both the City Council and private citizens from entering into a similar relationship in the future.

When Little Red Barn brought suit, neither the Supreme Court nor the Sixth Circuit had addressed the question of whether private citizens' offer of funding to defend a statute, were it to pass, creates a symbiotic relationship with the state. 303 The Sixth Circuit affirms awards of attorney fees only when plaintiffs relitigated already-settled legal matters, and we reverse the award of attorney fees when issues of law remained unresolved or when a "plaintiff ha[d] an arguable basis for pursuing his or her claim." Smith v. Smythe–Cramer Co., 754 F.2d 180, 183–84 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 906, 105 S.Ct.

3530, 87 L.Ed.2d 654 (1985). Therefore, even if we were to conclude that a financial relationship, such as the one between Grand Rapids and Non–City Defendants–Appellees, could never create a symbiotic relationship for purposes of § 1983 claims, we must reverse the award of attorney fees because Little Red Barn could not have known of this hypothetical legal conclusion in advance. Penalizing Little Red Barn for bringing a claim, when Little Red Barn was not on notice that such a claim could not succeed in district court, would be inequitable. "[W]hen a district court awards counsel fees to a prevailing plaintiff, it is awarding them against a violator of federal law.... A successful defendant seeking counsel fees ... must rely on quite different equitable considerations." Christiansburg, 434 U.S. at 418–19, 98 S.Ct. 694. For these reasons, we reverse the district court's award of attorney fees against Little Red Barn.

III. CONCLUSION

For the reasons explained above, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of Plaintiffs–Appellants' motion for a preliminary injunction as well as the district court's grant of Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings for both Grand Rapids and Non–City Defendants–Appellees. However, we REVERSE the district court's award of attorney fees to Non–City Defendants–Appellees.

All Citations

526 F.3d 291

End of Document

368 F.3d 1186
United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

WORLD WIDE VIDEO OF WASHINGTON, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CITY OF SPOKANE, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 02-35936.
|
Argued and Submitted Jan. 7, 2004.
|
Filed May 27, 2004.
|
As Amended on Denial of Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc July 12, 2004.

Synopsis

Background: Adult-oriented retail business brought § 1983 suit against city, challenging constitutionality of zoning ordinance preventing their location in close proximity to certain land use categories and reasonableness of amount of time allowed for relocation. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, 227 F.Supp.2d 1143, Alan A. McDonald, Senior District Judge, entered summary judgment for city, and adult-oriented business appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Tallman, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] ordinance was subject to intermediate scrutiny;

[2] ordinance was narrowly tailored to promote significant government interest in reducing undesirable secondary effects of adult stores;

[3] ordinance was not facially overbroad; and

[4] amortization provision in ordinance requiring relocation within one year was constitutional.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (9)

[1] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Laws aimed at controlling the secondary effects of adult businesses are deemed content neutral, thus meriting intermediate scrutiny in determining their constitutionality under First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare
Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

An ordinance aimed at combating the secondary effects of a particular type of speech survives intermediate scrutiny if it is designed to serve a substantial government interest, is narrowly tailored to serve that interest, and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Constitutional Law
Availability of other sites
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Zoning ordinances prohibiting adult-oriented businesses from operating near certain land use categories and allowing one year for relocation were narrowly tailored to serve city's substantial interest in reducing the undesirable secondary effects of adult stores, and thus survived intermediate scrutiny under First Amendment; ordinance provided adequate alternative locations and thus did not substantially reduce speech by forcing stores to close. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Evidence of pornographic litter and public lewdness, and fact that these secondary effects were inexorably intertwined with protected speech, standing alone, were sufficient to show that zoning ordinance that prohibited operation of adult-oriented businesses near certain land uses promoted substantial government interest in eliminating secondary effects of adult-oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

A law is narrowly tailored, for purposes of First Amendment intermediate scrutiny, if it promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Adult-oriented business's claim that citizen complaints were biased and unscientific was insufficient to cast direct doubt on testimonial evidence of secondary effects caused by proximity to adult-oriented retail stores, including litter, harassment of female employees, vandalism, and decreased business, and thus to challenge conclusion that city's enactment of ordinance prohibiting such stores near certain land uses was narrowly tailored to substantial government interest in eliminating those effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use in general
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Zoning ordinance imposing restrictions on location of adult-oriented businesses was not unconstitutionally facially overbroad by reason of its definition of adult retail establishment as one devoting "significant or substantial" portion its stock to adult-oriented merchandise. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Availability of other sites
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Amortization provision in zoning ordinance prohibiting adult retail stores near certain other uses, which required non-conforming adult-oriented businesses to relocate within one year, was not violative of First Amendment because there were sufficient relocation sites in city, and thus adequate alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Zoning and Planning
Nonconforming Uses

Municipalities may, consistent with federal constitution, require non-conforming uses to close, change their business, or relocate within a reasonable time period.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1188 Gilbert H. Levy, Seattle, WA, on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant.

Stephen A. Smith, Todd L. Nunn, Preston Gates & Ellis, LLP, Seattle, WA, on behalf of the defendant-appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington; Alan A. McDonald, District Judge, Presiding. D.C. No. CV-02-00074-AAM.

Before GRABER, TALLMAN, and CLIFTON, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

TALLMAN, Circuit Judge.

This appeal raises two questions. First, whether the City of Spokane's ordinances regulating the location of adult-oriented retail businesses ("adult stores") are constitutional. Second, whether an amortization period is required in this context and, if so, whether a reasonable amount of time was allotted for World Wide Video of Washington, Inc. ("World Wide"), to either relocate its stores or change the nature of its retail operations. Because the record reveals no genuine issue of material fact regarding either of these issues, we affirm the district court's summary judgment for Spokane.

I

In the late 1990s, city leaders in Spokane grew concerned with the opening of several adult stores in residential areas. To develop a legislative response to this situation, the City compiled information-specifically, studies from other municipalities, relevant court decisions, and police records-documenting the adverse secondary effects of adult stores.

On November 29, 2000, Spokane's Plan Commission held a public hearing to consider amending the Municipal Code to combat these documented secondary effects. At this hearing, the City Attorney's office presented the legislative record and gave the Commission an overview of the effect of adult stores on the community. Although a number of citizens testified in favor of amending the Code, World Wide presented no evidence, testimonial or otherwise, at this hearing.

On December 13, 2000, after considering public comments and the legislative record, the Plan Commission voted unanimously to recommend that the City Council amend the Code. Before the vote at this meeting, two individuals testified against the proposed amendment. Once again, however, World Wide did not participate.

On January 29, 2001, the Spokane City Council heeded the Plan Commission's recommendation and unanimously passed Ordinance C-32778.[1] Under Ordinance C-32778, adult stores are subject to Spokane's set-back requirements, which prevent 1189 them from opening in close proximity to certain land use categories.[2] Ordinance C-32778 also amended the Code to provide adult stores with an amortization period of one year either to relocate or change the nature of their operations. See SMC § 11.19.395. A procedure was included whereby the owner of a business could seek an extension of this deadline. See id.

[1] The Code as amended by Ordinance C-32778 reads:

> A. An "adult retail use establishment" is an enclosed building, or any portion thereof which, for money or any other form of consideration, devotes a significant or substantial portion of stock in trade, to the sale, exchange, rental, loan, trade, transfer, or viewing of "adult oriented merchandise".
>
> B. Adult oriented merchandise means any goods, products, commodities, or other ware, including but not limited to, videos, CD Roms, DVDs, computer disks or other storage devices, magazines, books, pamphlets, posters, cards, periodicals or non-clothing novelties which depict, describe or simulate specified anatomical area, as defined in Section 11.19.0355, or specified sexual activities, as defined in Section 11.19.0356.

Spokane Mun.Code ("SMC") § 11.19.03023.

[2] Specifically, the Spokane Municipal Code provides:

> 1. An adult retail use establishment [or] an adult entertainment establishment may not be located or maintained within seven hundred fifty feet, measured from the nearest building of the adult retail use establishment or of the adult entertainment establishment to the nearest building of any of the following pre-existing uses:

a. public library,
b. public playground or park,
c. public or private school and its grounds, from kindergarten to twelfth grade,
d. nursery school, mini-day care center, or day care center,
e. church, convent, monastery, synagogue, or other place of religious worship,
f. another adult retail use establishment or an adult entertainment establishment, subject to the provisions of this section.
2. An adult retail use establishment or an adult entertainment establishment may not be located within seven hundred fifty feet of any of the following zones:
a. agricultural,
b. country residential,
c. residential suburban,
d. one-family residence,
e. two-family residence,
f. multifamily residence (R3 and R4),
g. residence-office.

SMC § 11.19.143(D).

Subsequently, Spokane determined that it needed to establish more sites for the relocation of adult stores. Following four Plan Commission meetings on the issue, on March 18, 2002, Spokane enacted Ordinance C-33001, which increased the number of land use categories permitted to accommodate the operation of adult stores.

Because Ordinance C-32778 became effective on March 10, 2001, all non-conforming uses were required to terminate by March 10, 2002. World Wide applied to Spokane's Planning Director for an extension of the amortization period and was granted an additional six months. World Wide appealed this decision to the city's Hearing Examiner, arguing that a six-month extension was insufficient. The Hearing Examiner affirmed the extension, but held that it would run from the date of his May 15, 2002, decision. World Wide was therefore required to close or change the nature of its businesses by November 15, 2002. [3] Although we were informed at oral argument that the configuration of World Wide's retail services has changed somewhat, the businesses remain open in their original locations.

[3] World Wide appealed the Hearing Examiner's ruling to Spokane County Superior Court under Washington's Land Use Petition Act, RCW 36.70C.005, et seq.

On February 27, 2002, World Wide filed a § 1983 civil rights action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington alleging, inter alia, that Ordinances C-32778 and C-33001 (hereinafter, "the Ordinances") violate the 1190 First Amendment. At the close of discovery, Spokane moved for summary judgment. In support of its motion, the City tendered

(1) more than 1,500 pages of legislative record related to the Ordinances, including studies from other municipalities concerning the adverse secondary effects associated with adult businesses, [4] police reports, relevant court decisions, and evidence submitted by Spokane residents;

[4] Spokane relied on studies from New York City (1994); Garden Grove, California (1991); a coalition of several municipalities in Minnesota (1989); St. Paul, Minnesota (1987); Austin, Texas (1986); Indianapolis, Indiana (1984); Amarillo, Texas (1977); and Los Angeles (1977).

(2) the minutes of the Plan Commission and City Council meetings concerning the Ordinances;

(3) a report from a real estate appraiser stating that hundreds of parcels of land zoned for adult retail remained available; [5] and

[5] When Ordinance C-32778 went into effect, there were a total of seven affected adult stores, six of which were required to relocate. By the time Spokane moved for summary judgment, one affected business had already reopened at a new site. Spokane's appraiser found that 326 properties were available for relocation of adult stores; that 161 of the 326 were best suited for commercial uses; and that 63 of the 161 were actively listed for sale or lease. Applying the set-back requirements of the Ordinances, Spokane determined that 32 of these 63 sites were particularly well-suited to accommodate adult stores.

(4) the declarations of several citizens detailing the secondary effects of the existing adult stores. [6]

[6] Specifically, these declarants stated that they had witnessed various criminal acts in and around World Wide's stores, including prostitution, drug transactions, public lewdness, harassment of citizens by World Wide's clientele, and pervasive litter, including used condoms, empty liquor bottles, and video packaging featuring graphic depictions of sexual acts.

In opposition to Spokane's motion for summary judgment, World Wide offered

(1) the declaration of land use planner Bruce McLaughlin, who opined that the studies relied on by Spokane provided no valid basis for the Ordinances because none dealt exclusively with secondary effects produced by retail-only uses and concluded that adult stores in Spokane neither contributed to the depreciation of property values nor resulted in increased calls for police service;

(2) police reports and call summaries intended to corroborate McLaughlin's conclusion;

(3) the report of a private investigator containing interviews of citizens who claimed that there were no problems related to the adult stores in their neighborhoods; [7]

[7] We note that World Wide's investigator indicated in his deposition that he was instructed not to include information in his report that was unhelpful to his client's legal position.

(4) the declaration of a real estate broker stating that there were only 26 available properties and only one was a plausible relocation site for an adult store; [8] and

[8] Spokane tendered a supplemental declaration from its appraiser with its summary judgment reply, asserting that World Wide's broker ignored 92 qualifying parcels, which were sufficient to allow simultaneous operation of 18 adult stores, and that, even accepting the data contained in World Wide's broker's report, there were sufficient locations to operate 14 adult stores.

Moreover, although World Wide hired a second land use expert, it declined to submit his opinion to the court. World Wide's second expert concluded that there were more than enough possible relocation sites (i.e., 60) for the six stores that needed to move.

1191 (5) evidence that two of World Wide's stores were subject to long-term leases that their landlord was unwilling to dissolve.

Additionally, World Wide suggested in its statement of facts that the citizens who provided declarations in support of Spokane's motion were motivated by their disagreement with the content of World Wide's speech rather than by a desire to combat secondary effects.

On September 11, 2002, the district court granted Spokane's motion for summary judgment. World Wide timely appealed.

II

We review de novo the district court's grant of summary judgment. See Coszalter v. City of Salem, 320 F.3d 968, 973 (9th Cir.2003). Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to World Wide, we must decide whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the district court correctly applied the relevant substantive law. See id.

A

[1] To determine whether Spokane's Ordinances violate the First Amendment, we must first answer the threshold question of whether they are content based, thus meriting strict scrutiny, or content neutral, thus meriting intermediate scrutiny. Under City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), laws aimed at controlling the secondary effects of adult businesses are deemed content neutral. See id. at 48-49, 106 S.Ct. 925. [9]

[9] It merits noting that in the Supreme Court's most recent foray into the law of the First Amendment and secondary effects, City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), Justice Kennedy assailed this categorization as a "fiction," asserting that "whether a statute is content neutral or content based is something that can be determined on the face of it; if the statute describes speech by content then it is content based." Id. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Nevertheless, Justice

> Kennedy ultimately agreed that a "zoning restriction that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny," reasoning that "the zoning context provides a built-in legitimate rationale, which rebuts the usual presumption that content-based restrictions are unconstitutional." Id. at 448-49, 122 S.Ct. 1728; accord G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 637 (7th Cir.2003) ("In light of [Alameda Books], we need not decide whether the ordinances are content based or content neutral, so long as we first conclude that they target not 'the activity, but ... its side effects,' and then apply intermediate scrutiny.' ") (citation omitted).

Here, the challenged Ordinances are explicitly intended to combat the secondary effects of adult stores' speech, not to suppress the speech itself. The district court ruled that the purpose of the Ordinances is to regulate the harmful secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. World Wide Video of Washington, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 227 F.Supp.2d 1143, 1150-51 (E.D.Wash.2002). The summary judgment record permits no other conclusion as to the purpose of the Ordinances. See e.g., Ordinance C-33001, Preamble/Findings, (4)(k) ("It is not the intent of the proposed zoning provisions to suppress any speech activities protected by the First Amendment ..., but to propose content neutral legislation which addresses the negative secondary impacts of adult retail use and entertainment establishments [.]"). Accordingly, we apply intermediate 1192 scrutiny. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 49, 106 S.Ct. 925.

B

[2] An ordinance aimed at combating the secondary effects of a particular type of speech survives intermediate scrutiny "if it is designed to serve a substantial government interest, is narrowly tailored to serve that interest, and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Center for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153, 1166 (9th Cir.2003) (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925 and Colacurcio v. City of Kent, 163 F.3d 545, 551 (9th Cir.1998)), cert. denied, 124 S.Ct. 1879 (2004). World Wide does not appeal the district court's determination that the Ordinances leave open adequate alternative avenues of communication. The issue before us is thus limited to whether the Ordinances are narrowly tailored to serve a substantial government interest.

In Alameda Books, the Supreme Court "clarif[ied] the [Renton] standard for determining whether an [adult-use] ordinance serves a substantial government interest." 535 U.S. at 433, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Thus, the proper starting point for evaluating World Wide's appeal is close consideration of Renton and Alameda Books. Our analysis is also informed by Maricopa County, this court's sole interpretation and application of the Renton / Alameda Books standard to date.

1

The challenged ordinance in Renton prohibited adult movie theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of various zones, such as those intended for schools and churches. An adult theater owner sued, arguing, inter alia, that because the City of Renton improperly relied on another city's experiences with the secondary effects of adult theaters rather than undertaking its own study, the city had failed to establish that its ordinance served a substantial government interest. Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925.

We agreed and held in favor of the theater owner, but the Supreme Court reversed. Noting that "a city's interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect," the Court concluded that we had imposed "an unnecessarily rigid burden of proof." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court held that "[t]he First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem the city addresses." Id. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925.

2

Like Renton, Alameda Books originated in this circuit. In 1977, the City of Los Angeles conducted a study to assess the secondary effects of adult land uses. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 430, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Because that study discovered increased crime in areas with high concentrations of adult businesses, Los Angeles enacted an ordinance regulating their locations. See id.

It soon came to light, however, that there was a loophole in the law: multiple adult businesses could congregate in a single building. See id. at 431, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Accordingly, Los Angeles amended its ordinance to prohibit more than one adult business from operating under the same roof. See id. Two bookstores sued, alleging that the ordinance violated the First Amendment. See id. at 432, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the stores. See id. at 433, 122 S.Ct. 1728. We affirmed, concluding that Los Angeles "failed to present 1193 evidence upon which it could reasonably rely to demonstrate that its regulation of multiple-use establishments [was] designed to serve the city's substantial interest in reducing crime." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

In the Supreme Court, Alameda Books produced four opinions: a plurality opinion by Justice O'Connor (joined by the Chief Justice, Justice Scalia, and Justice Thomas), a brief concurring statement by Justice Scalia, a concurrence in the judgment by Justice Kennedy, and a dissent by Justice Souter (joined by Justices Stevens and Ginsburg and joined in part by Justice Breyer). A five justice majority-the plurality plus Justice Kennedy-reversed our decision.

Given the fractured nature of the Court's disposition, it is difficult to glean a precise holding from Alameda Books. However, under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977), since Justice Kennedy's concurrence was the narrowest opinion joining the Court's judgment, it controls. See Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1161; see also Fly Fish, Inc. v. City of Cocoa Beach, 337 F.3d 1301, 1310 n. 19 (11th Cir.2003); Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Vill. of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 722 (7th Cir.2003). Thus, we are bound by the plurality opinion, but only insofar as its conclusions do not expand beyond Justice Kennedy's concurrence.

All five Justices in the Alameda Books majority affirmed Renton's core principle that local governments are not required to conduct their own studies in order to justify an ordinance designed to combat the secondary effects of adult businesses. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion); id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Further, the majority of the Court stressed the paramount role of local experimentation in developing legislative responses to secondary effects, given local governments' superior understanding of their own problems. See id. at 440, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) ("[W]e must acknowledge that the Los Angeles City Council is in a better position than the Judiciary to gather and evaluate data on local problems."); id. at 451-52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) ("The Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion.") (citations omitted).

Most importantly, Justice Kennedy did not disagree with the key innovation announced by the Alameda Books plurality. To wit:

> The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

Id. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Announcement of this burden shifting approach fulfilled the Alameda Books Court's stated intention in granting certiorari: it "clarif[ied] the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest." Id. at 433, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

At its heart, the limiting principle that Justice Kennedy's concurrence imposes on the plurality opinion concerns the importance of determining and evaluating a 1194 city's "rationale" behind a particular ordinance. While Justice Kennedy did not dispute the plurality's burden-shifting gloss on Renton, he stressed that a city's rationale for passing an ordinance aimed at controlling the secondary effects of adult stores "cannot be that when [the ordinance] requires businesses to disperse (or to concentrate), it will force the closure of a number of those businesses, thereby reducing the quantity of protected speech." Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1163. Justice Kennedy thus concurred with the Alameda Books plurality with the following cautionary caveat: "It is no trick to reduce secondary effects by reducing speech or its audience; but a city may not attack secondary effects indirectly by attacking speech." 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). A secondary-effects ordinance must be designed to leave "the quantity of speech ... substantially undiminished, and [the] total secondary effects ... significantly reduced." Id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

3

Our recent decision in Maricopa County differs slightly from the case before us in that it concerned the constitutionality of a "time" rather than a "place" restriction on adult businesses. See 336 F.3d at 1159. In Maricopa County, operators of a variety of adult businesses, including "sellers of sexually-related magazines and paraphernalia," id. at 1158, challenged an Arizona statute that prohibited them from operating in the early morning hours. The district court upheld the statute and the businesses appealed. Applying Alameda Books-which we described as "reaffirm[ing] the Renton framework," id. at 1159-a divided panel of this court affirmed. [10]

10 In dissent, Judge Canby opined that Arizona's statute could not survive Justice Kennedy's requirement that the quantity of speech remain undiminished because it required adult businesses to close down during certain parts of the day-i.e., it stopped speech-unlike a "dispersal" regulation, which merely moves speech. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1172 (Canby, J., dissenting). Spokane's Ordinances are dispersal ordinances; consequently, Judge Canby's concern does not arise here.

As in the instant case, the legislative record in Maricopa County included both documentary and testimonial evidence. See id. at 1157. For example, the Arizona legislature heard testimony describing problems with pornographic litter and prostitution related to the operation of adult businesses adjacent to a residential area. Id. at 1157-58. The Maricopa County legislative record also included letters discussing reports detailing similar problems in Denver and Minnesota. Id. at 1158. We concluded that the state provided a sufficient basis for the challenged statute, noting that the evidence was "hardly overwhelming, but it does not have to be." Id. at 1168. Because the Arizona legislature relied on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to the targeted problem, we determined that the statute was presumptively constitutional. Id.

Having made this determination, we continued: "Under Alameda Books, the burden now shifts to [the businesses] to cast direct doubt on [the state's] rationale, either by demonstrating that the [state's] evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the[state's] factual findings." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted; first alteration added). Essentially, the Maricopa County businesses argued that "the evidence before the Arizona legislature consisted of 'irrelevant anecdotes' and 'isolated' incidents, and that testimonial evidence is not 'real' evidence." Id. Rejecting this contention as explicitly foreclosed by Alameda Books, we concluded that the businesses had "failed to cast doubt on the state's 1195 theory, or on the evidence the state relied on in support of that theory," and affirmed the district court's decision upholding the statute. Id.

C

[3] Like the statute challenged in Maricopa County, Spokane's Ordinances satisfy the Renton standard as clarified in Alameda Books. We hold that the Ordinances are narrowly tailored to serve Spokane's substantial interest in reducing the undesirable secondary effects of adult stores.

1

Turning first to the substantial interest issue, per Justice Kennedy's Alameda Books concurrence, the initial question is "how speech will fare" under the Ordinances. 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring); see also R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford, 361 F.3d 402, 408 (7th Cir.2004) (noting that under Justice Kennedy's Alameda Books concurrence "[i]t is essential ... to consider the impact or effect that the ordinance will have on speech"). Conceptually, this question dovetails with the requirement that an ordinance must leave open adequate alternative avenues of communication. Again, World Wide does not appeal the district court's conclusion that the Ordinances left open sufficient relocation sites. Given that each of the six remaining affected stores has the opportunity to relocate, it is likely that the Ordinances will reduce secondary effects-by moving the stores from sensitive areas-without substantially reducing speech by forcing stores to close. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

The next step is to determine whether the Ordinances survive the burden-shifting regime announced by the Alameda Books plurality. They do. World Wide does not contend that Spokane failed to satisfy its initial burden of producing evidence that "fairly supports" the Ordinances. Rather, World Wide argues that when it provided contrary evidence the burden shifted back to Spokane, and the City failed to supplement the record.

However, in order to shift the burden back to Spokane, World Wide was required to succeed in "cast[ing] direct doubt" on the rationale behind the Ordinances, either by showing that the City's evidence does not support it or by supplying its own contrary "actual and convincing evidence." Id. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (emphasis added). Like the businesses in Maricopa County, World Wide failed to satisfy this requirement. World Wide's arguments and evidence against the Ordinances were insufficient to trigger the burden shifting contemplated in Alameda Books.

[4] We reach this conclusion primarily because World Wide did not effectively controvert much of Spokane's evidence through McLaughlin's report or otherwise. In holding that the Ordinances promoted a substantial governmental interest, the district court stressed that Spokane only needed " 'some' evidence to support its Ordinances," and correctly concluded that the "elimination of pornographic litter, by itself, represents a substantial governmental interest, especially as concerns protection of minors." World Wide Video, 227 F.Supp.2d at 1157-58. The citizen testimony concerning pornographic litter and public lewdness, standing alone, was sufficient to satisfy the "very little" evidence standard of Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925). Accord Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1168; cf. Stringfellow's of N.Y., Ltd. v. City of New York, 91 N.Y.2d 382, 400, 671 N.Y.S.2d 406, 694 N.E.2d 407, 417 (N.Y.1998) ("[A]necdotal evidence and reported experience can be as telling as statistical 1196 data and can serve as a legitimate basis for finding negative secondary effects...."). [11]

11 In Tollis Inc. v. San Bernardino County, 827 F.2d 1329 (9th Cir.1987), San Bernardino County determined that a single showing of an adult movie was sufficient to subject a theater to regulation under an adult-use zoning ordinance. Id. at 1331. Because the County "presented no evidence that a single showing of an adult movie would have any harmful secondary effects on the community," id. at 1333 (emphasis added), we affirmed an injunction against enforcement of the ordinance. Although Tollis predates Alameda Books, the decisions are consistent; the principle remains that a local government must reasonably rely on at least some evidence. Here, Spokane clearly satisfied this requirement.

The relevant question is "whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Here, the protected speech and the secondary effects described in the citizen testimony are inexorably intertwined: the sexual images in the magazines and on the packaging of the videos sold by adult stores may be protected, but if the stores' products are consistently discarded on public ground, municipal regulation may be-and, in this case, is-justified.

Our conclusion concerning the nature of the post-Alameda Books evidentiary burden is in line with the weight of federal authority. For example, in SOB, Inc. v. County of Benton, 317 F.3d 856 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 820, 124 S.Ct. 104, 157 L.Ed.2d 38 (2003), the Eighth Circuit noted that the adult business's evidence in opposition to Benton County's zoning regulations > addressed only two adverse secondary effects, property values and crime in the vicinity of an adult entertainment establishment.... [The challenged ordinance], on the other hand, may address other adverse secondary effects, such as the likelihood that an establishment > whose dancers and customers routinely violate long-established standards of public decency will foster illegal activity such as drug use, prostitution, tax evasion, and fraud.

Id. at 863. Just so here. Granted, the evidence tendered by World Wide in opposition to Spokane's motion for summary judgment purported to contradict some of the City's secondary effects evidence. Again, however, World Wide failed to present an effective rebuttal to an entire category of evidence: the public testimony. World Wide attempted to counter the citizens' stories by charging bias. However, this tactic is insufficient to defeat summary judgment. See Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Argonaut Ins. Co., 701 F.2d 95, 97 (9th Cir.1983). This failure to cast doubt on Spokane's justification for the Ordinances dooms World Wide's challenge.

2

[5] We also conclude that the Ordinances are narrowly tailored. A law is narrowly tailored if it "promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." 1197 United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985); accord Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). Here, as in Maricopa County, it is self-evident that Spokane's asserted interest would be achieved less effectively absent the Ordinances. See 336 F.3d at 1169.

The crux of World Wide's argument is that, because Spokane's studies do not deal exclusively with retail-only stores, the City impermissibly relied on "shoddy data[and] reasoning" to justify the Ordinances. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). World Wide relies principally on Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 330 F.3d 288 (5th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 982, 124 S.Ct. 466, 157 L.Ed.2d 372 (2003), to support its argument. The Encore Videos court, noting that "[a] time, place, and manner regulation meets the narrow tailoring standard if it 'targets and eliminates no more than the exact source of the evil it seeks to remedy,' " id. at 293 (quoting Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988)), found San Antonio's re-zoning of adult stores unconstitutional because the studies on which the city relied "either entirely exclude[d] establishments that provide only take-home videos and books ... or include[d] them but [did] not differentiate the data collected from such businesses from evidence collected from enterprises that provide on-site adult entertainment," id. at 294-95. [12] Hoping to repeat Encore Videos' success, World Wide presented the district court with an extensive study concluding that problems with increased crime rates and decreased property value were limited to the neighborhood around a store that has preview booths for on-site viewing.

12 The Fifth Circuit recently clarified its Encore Videos opinion, stating that "the ordinance at issue was found not to be narrowly tailored because of both its failure to make an on-site/off-site distinction and its low 20% inventory requirement [i.e., the fact that it covered all stores with at least 20% 'adult' merchandise]." Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 352 F.3d 938, 939 (5th Cir.2003) (emphasis added).

[6] Notwithstanding its proffer, World Wide's reliance on Encore Videos is misplaced. In Encore Videos, San Antonio apparently relied only on other cities' studies to justify its ordinance. See id. at 295. Here, Spokane relied on a wide variety of evidence, including studies, police records, and citizen testimony. Further, in this case we can assume, but need not decide, that the distinction between retail-only stores and stores with preview booths is constitutionally relevant. The Ordinances still survive World Wide's challenge because much of the citizen testimony concerned retail-only stores. To take just one example, a pedodontist working in a building less than a block away from a retail-only store complained of pornographic litter, harassment of female employees, vandalism, and decreased business, all resulting from his proximity to the retail-only store. As Maricopa County teaches, World Wide's claim that citizen complaints such as these are biased and unscientific is insufficient to cast direct doubt on the Spokane's testimonial evidence. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1168 (rejecting the plaintiffs argument "that testimonial evidence is not 'real' evidence").

Among the secondary effects that Spokane sought to curb by enacting the Ordinances are the "economic and aesthetic impacts upon neighboring properties and the community as a whole." Ordinance C-33001, pmbl. at 3. Through testimonial evidence, Spokane has shown that retail-only stores generate these secondary effects and therefore that its interests in enacting 1198 the Ordinances "would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." Albertini, 472 U.S. at 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897. World Wide has offered no evidence that meaningfully challenges that conclusion. We thus conclude that the Ordinances are narrowly tailored.

D

In sum, Alameda Books "does not affect [a municipality's] ability to rely on secondary effects studies and certainly does not mandate a trial in every case where a municipality does so." Bigg Wolf Disc. Video Movie Sales, Inc. v. Montgomery County, 256 F.Supp.2d 385, 393-94 (D.Md.2003). The evidence relied on by Spokane "is both reasonable and relevant," Maricopa County, 336 F.3d at 1168, and the City's regulatory regime "is likely to cause a significant decrease in secondary effects" at the cost of "a trivial decrease in the quantity of speech," Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 445, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Therefore, we hold that Spokane's reliance on this evidence was proper and that the Ordinances are narrowly tailored to address the City's legitimate concerns.

III

[7] We must next decide whether the amended Code-specifically, the language added by Ordinance C-32778-is overbroad.[13] Because "the First Amendment needs breathing space ... [,] statutes attempting to restrict or burden the exercise of First Amendment rights must be narrowly drawn and represent a considered legislative judgment that a particular mode of expression has to give way to other compelling needs of society." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 611-12, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). Nonetheless, the Supreme Court has "repeatedly emphasized that where a statute regulates expressive conduct, the scope of the statute does not render it unconstitutional unless its overbreadth is not only real, but substantial as well, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 112, 110 S.Ct. 1691, 109 L.Ed.2d 98 (1990) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also United States v. Adams, 343 F.3d 1024, 1034 (9th Cir.2003), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 921, 124 S.Ct. 2871, 159 L.Ed.2d 779 (2004) (No. 03-9072).

13 World Wide waived its claim that Ordinance C-32778's definition of "adult retail establishment" is unconstitutionally vague by failing to present it to the district court. See United States v. Flores-Payon, 942 F.2d 556, 558 (9th Cir.1991). This is not a purely legal issue. Had World Wide raised it below, Spokane could have presented evidence in support of its position that the definition is sufficiently precise. Cf. id. (noting that an argument not presented to the district court can still be raised on appeal under certain limited circumstances, including when "the issue presented is purely one of law and the opposing party will suffer no prejudice as a result of the failure to raise the issue in the trial court") (internal quotation marks omitted).

Spokane defines an "adult retail establishment" as > an enclosed building, or any portion thereof which, for money or any other form of consideration, devotes a significant or substantial portion of its stock in trade, to the sale, exchange, rental, loan, trade, transfer, or viewing of "adult oriented merchandise".

SMC § 11.19.03023(A). World Wide claims that this definition is unconstitutional on its face. We disagree.

Cases directly addressing the phrase "significant or substantial" in this context have upheld its validity. See, e.g., Young v. Am. Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 53 n. 5, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 431, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Moreover, this phrase is readily 1199 susceptible to a narrowing construction. "[L]anguage similar to the 'significant or substantial' language used in this ordinance has been interpreted previously by state courts in a sufficiently narrow manner to avoid constitutional problems." Z.J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C. v. City of Littleton, 311 F.3d 1220, 1229 (10th Cir.2002) (collecting cases), cert. granted in part, 540 U.S. 944, 124 S.Ct. 383, 157 L.Ed.2d 274 (2003). We agree and hold that the inclusion of this phrase in Ordinance C-32778 does not render it unconstitutionally overbroad.

World Wide also takes issue with Spokane's "any portion thereof" wording, arguing that as a result of its inclusion the ordinance covers any store with a "portion" that is "significantly" or "substantially" comprised of adult materials. For example, under World Wide's interpretation, a store with a rack of postcards comprising 1% of its stock, 5% of which qualifies as adult material, would fall under the purview of Ordinance C-32778. We read this ordinance differently. The "any portion thereof" clause plainly means that the ordinance is intended to cover stores that occupy only a portion of an enclosed building-e.g., one store in a shopping mall-as distinct from the entire building. This language has nothing to do with the determination whether adult material constitutes a "significant or substantial" portion of a store's stock. [14]

14 World Wide relies on Executive Arts Studio, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 227 F.Supp.2d 731 (W.D.Mich.2002), where the court found overbroad an ordinance that encompassed stores with a "section or segment" of sexually-explicit magazines. See id. at 748. However, that holding was based on a state court's refusal to adopt a limiting construction. See id. No Washington state court has so construed Ordinance C-32778.

Accordingly, mindful that the facial overbreadth doctrine is "strong medicine" that should be employed "sparingly and only as a last resort," Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, we affirm the district court's rejection of World Wide's claim that Ordinance C-32778 is overbroad.

IV

[8] The final issue before us is the adequacy of the amortization provision. This provision reads, in pertinent part: "Any adult retail use establishment located within the City of Spokane on the date this provision becomes effective, which is made a nonconforming use by this provision, shall be terminated within twelve (12) months of the date this provision becomes effective." SMC § 11.19.395. The Ordinance allows for the extension of a business's termination date "upon the approval of a written application filed with the Planning Director no later than [one] (1) month prior to the end of such twelve (12) month amortization period." Id.

Although World Wide applied for and was granted a six-month extension, and received an extra two months via administrative grace, it claims that we should remand for trial because there remains a question of fact whether its hardship outweighs the benefit to the public to be gained from termination of the non-conforming use. See Ebel v. City of Corona, 767 F.2d 635, 639 (9th Cir.1985) (per curiam) (adopting the balancing test set out in Northend Cinema, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 585 P.2d 1153, 1159-60 (Wash.1978)). Given the length of its leases and various other alleged impediments to relocation-e.g., restrictive covenants, the unwillingness of landlords to rent or sell to an adult store, and the prohibitive cost-World Wide claims that it can prevail under Ebel's balancing test.

[9] We are not convinced. Nothing in the Constitution forbids municipalities from requiring non-conforming uses to close, change their business, or relocate 1200 within a reasonable time period. Here, as in Baby Tam & Co. v. City of Las Vegas, 247 F.3d 1003 (9th Cir.2001), World Wide "furnishes no authority for the proposition that a zoning ordinance may not prohibit a use in existence before its enactment," id. at 1006. As a general matter, an amortization period is insufficient only if it puts a business in an impossible position due to a shortage of relocation sites. This issue is conceptually indistinguishable from the First Amendment requirement of alternative avenues of communication. See Jake's, Ltd. v. City of Coates, 284 F.3d 884, 889 (8th Cir.) (holding that application of an amortization provision is constitutional as long as it complies with Renton), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 948, 123 S.Ct. 413, 154 L.Ed.2d 292 (2002). Because the district court held that there are sufficient relocation sites in Spokane and World Wide does not appeal that factual determination, we hold that the amortization provision is not unconstitutional.

Finally, in attempting to extend its right to operate at its present locations, World Wide was afforded-and has availed itself of-the full panoply of due process rights. World Wide requested an extension and received eight months; it appealed this decision to Spokane's Hearing Examiner, claiming the extension was too short, and lost. World Wide then filed a land use action in Spokane County Superior Court challenging the denial of its amortization appeal. We conclude that World Wide received all the process it was due.

V

As conceded by World Wide, municipalities are allowed to "keep the pig out of the parlor" by devising regulations that target the adverse secondary effects of sexually-oriented adult businesses. This is precisely what Spokane did when it enacted the Ordinances. The district court properly entered summary judgment upholding them.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

368 F.3d 1186, 04 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4570, 2004 Daily Journal D.A.R. 8411

End of Document

630 F.3d 1346
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

PEEK–A–BOO LOUNGE OF BRADENTON, INC., a Florida Corporation d.b.a. Peek–A–Boo Lounge, Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
MANATEE COUNTY, FLORIDA, a political subdivision of the State of Florida, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 09–16438.
|
Jan. 21, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Adult dancing establishments brought action alleging that county ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses violated First Amendment. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, No. 05-01707-CV-T-27TBM, James D. Whittemore, J., 2009 WL 4349319, granted summary judgment in favor of county. Establishment appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Marcus, Circuit Judge, held that ordinance did not violate First Amendment.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (10)

[1] Federal Courts
Summary judgment

Federal Courts
Summary judgment

The Court of Appeals reviews a district court's order granting summary judgment de novo, applying the same standard that bound the district court and viewing the evidence and all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party.

82 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Statutes, regulations, and ordinances, questions concerning in general

The constitutionality of a statute is a question of law the Court of Appeals reviews de novo.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Zoning ordinances that regulate the conditions under which sexually oriented businesses may operate are evaluated under First Amendment as time, place, and manner regulations, following a three-part test set forth by the Supreme Court in City of Renton. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Content-neutral public nudity ordinances involve expressive conduct and must therefore be measured against a four-part test set forth in United States v. O'Brien. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Under the Renton test applicable to zoning ordinances regulating sexually oriented businesses, a reviewing court must determine: (1) whether the ordinance amounts to a total ban, presumptively invalid, or merely a time, place, and manner regulation, (2) if it is a time, place, and manner regulation, the court must decide whether the ordinance is subject to strict or intermediate scrutiny, and (3) if it is subject to intermediate scrutiny, then the court must determine whether it is designed to serve a substantial government interest and allows for reasonable alternative channels of communication.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Under the O'Brien-Barnes test for public nudity ordinances, a reviewing court must determine whether: (1) the government acted within the bounds of its constitutional power in enacting the ordinance, (2) the ordinance furthers a substantial government interest, (3) the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, and (4) the ordinance restricts First Amendment freedoms no more than is essential to further the government's interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Zoning and Planning
Regulations in general

In determining whether zoning ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses is reasonably designed to serve a substantial government interest, the county or municipality first bears the initial burden of producing the evidence that it has relied on to reach the conclusion that the ordinance furthers its interest in reducing secondary effects.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Zoning and Planning
Regulations in general

In determining whether zoning ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses was reasonably designed to serve a substantial government interest, if the governmental entity has produced evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to its rationale for enacting the ordinance, then the burden shifts to the plaintiff to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by showing that the evidence does not support its rationale or by producing evidence disputing the local government's factual findings; if the plaintiff sustains its burden, the burden shifts back to the government to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies the ordinance.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Zoning and Planning
Validity of regulations in general

While a county cannot rely on shoddy data or reasoning in enacting a zoning ordinance, it is not required to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the county relied upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the county addresses.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

County zoning ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses furthered county's interest in reducing secondary effects, and thus did not violate First Amendment; in adopting ordinance, county relied on substantial body of evidence which it reasonably believed was relevant to its rationale for enacting ordinance, including vast legislative record that included judicial opinions, reports and studies that had been prepared for other municipalities, testimony from expert witnesses, affidavits from private investigator who visited sexually oriented businesses in county, and newspaper articles. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1347 Luke Charles Lirot, Luke Lirot, P.A., Clearwater, FL, for Plaintiff–Appellant.

Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, TN, James A. Minix, Bradenton, FL, for Defendant–Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

Before HULL and MARCUS, Circuit Judges, and COOKE,[*] District Judge.

[*] Honorable Marcia G. Cooke, United States District Judge for the Southern District of Florida, sitting by designation.

Opinion

MARCUS, Circuit Judge:

At issue today is the constitutionality of an ordinance that the Manatee County, 1348 Florida Board of County Commissioners ("the Board") adopted to regulate sexually oriented businesses in Manatee County ("the County"). Peek–a–Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. ("Peek–a–Boo"), an adult dancing establishment in Manatee County, along with two similar establishments,[1] sued the County claiming that the ordinance violated the First Amendment. Peek–a–Boo appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the County. After thorough review of the ordinance and the extensive record surrounding its codification, we agree with the district court that the County's ordinance was reasonably designed to serve a substantial government interest—reducing the negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. Accordingly, we affirm.

[1] The other two adult dancing establishments, M.S. Entertainment, Inc. and G.T. Management, Inc., originally joined the appeal but abandoned it before the case came before us.

I.

The story begins in 1987, when Manatee County adopted an "Adult Entertainment Code," Ordinance 87–07 (not at issue today), which rendered then-existing adult dancing establishments Peek–a–Boo and M.S. Entertainment, Inc. ("M.S.") nonconforming. Peek–a–Boo and M.S. filed suit in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida challenging the ordinance's constitutionality under the First Amendment. But in 1989, the parties settled their dispute, allowing the two establishments to continue running and enjoining the County from enforcing the ordinance against them for the way they then operated.

In November 1998, the County amended the Adult Entertainment Code, this time enacting a zoning ordinance, Ordinance 98–46 (also not at issue today), which set forth specific physical requirements for the premises of adult dancing establishments. Peek–a–Boo and M.S. again found themselves in violation of the Adult Entertainment Code. Four months later, the County also adopted a generally applicable public nudity ordinance, Ordinance 99–18. This ordinance defined "nudity" broadly, to include the wearing of any opaque swimsuit or lingerie covering less than one-third of the buttocks or one-fourth of the female breast. The ordinance also specifically prohibited erotic dancers and others from appearing in public in "G-strings, T-backs, dental floss, and thongs."

Peek–a–Boo and M.S. again sued the County, challenging the constitutionality of both ordinances on First Amendment grounds. The district court concluded that the ordinances were constitutional and granted summary judgment in favor of the County. A panel of this Court, however, reversed, holding that the zoning ordinance violated the First Amendment and that there were genuine issues of material fact concerning whether the public nudity ordinance furthered the County's interest in curbing the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment. Peek–a–Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee Cnty., 337 F.3d 1251, 1268–69, 1274 (11th Cir.2003) ("Peek–a–Boo I"). Essential to our finding that the ordinance was unconstitutional, we observed that the Board "failed to rely on any evidence whatsoever that might support the conclusion that the ordinance was narrowly tailored to serve the County's interest in combating secondary effects." Id. at 1266. We also found that, while the County relied on some evidence to meet its initial 1349 burden in adopting Ordinance 99–18, the public nudity ordinance, the plaintiffs had then met their burden of submitting evidence sufficient to "cast direct doubt" on the County's rationale. Id. at 1271–72. Accordingly, we remanded the case to the district court for a determination of whether there remained credible evidence upon which the County could reasonably rely to support its stated rationale for the public nudity ordinance. Id. at 1274–75.

After the Peek–a–Boo I decision, the County completely overhauled its Adult Entertainment Code. It enacted Ordinance 05–21[2]—the ordinance at issue today—renaming the code the "Sexually Oriented 1350 Business Code," and establishing a different set of regulations to govern the manner in which sexually oriented businesses operate in the County. The new ordinance contains both zoning and public nudity provisions.[3] The zoning provisions include physical requirements for the premises of sexually oriented businesses, restrictions on their hours of operation, and a prohibition on serving alcoholic beverages. Manatee County, Fla., Code of Ordinances §§ 2–2.5–4—2–2.5–18 (2005). The nudity provisions include an across-the-board ban on appearing in a "state of nudity," id. § 2–2.5–18(a), defined as "the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, or anus with less than a fully opaque covering, or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple and areola," id. § 2–2.5–2. The ordinance allows employees of sexually oriented businesses to appear "semi-nude," id. § 2–2.5–18(b), defined as "a condition in which a person is not nude, but is showing a majority of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola and extending across the width of the breast at that point, or is showing the majority of the male or female buttocks," id. § 2–2.5–2. Employees appearing semi-nude, however, must "remain[ ] at least six (6) feet from any patron or customer and on a stage that is at least eighteen (18) inches from the floor and in a room of at least one thousand (1,000) square feet." Id. § 2–2.5–18(b). Employees are prohibited from touching customers or customers' clothing. Id. § 2–2.5–18(c).

2 The relevant portions of the ordinance provide:

> Sec. 2–2.5–2. Definitions.
>
> ....
>
> "Nude," "Nudity" or "State of Nudity" means the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, or anus with less than a fully opaque covering, or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple and areola.
>
> ....
>
> "Semi–Nude" or "State of Semi–Nudity" means a condition in which a person is not nude, but is showing a majority of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola and extending across the width of the breast at that point, or is showing the majority of the male or female buttocks.
>
> ....
>
> "Sexually Oriented Business" means an "adult bookstore," an "adult video store," an "adult cabaret," an "adult motel," an "adult motion picture theater," a "semi-nude model studio," a "sexual device shop," or a "sexual encounter center."
>
> ....
>
> Sec. 2–2.5–13. Hours of Operation.
>
> No sexually oriented business, other than an adult motel, shall be or remain open for business between 2:00 a.m. and 6:00 a.m. on any day.
>
> ....
>
> Sec. 2–2.5–16. Penalties and enforcement.
>
> (a) A person who knowingly violates, disobeys, omits, neglects, or refuses to comply with any of the provisions of this chapter shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine in an amount not less than $250.00 and not to exceed $500.00, or imprisonment, in the County Jail for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days, or both. Each day a violation is committed, or permitted to continue, shall constitute a separate offense and shall be penalized as such.
>
> ....
>
> Sec. 2–2.5–17. Applicability to existing businesses.
>
> (a) All existing sexually oriented businesses and sexually oriented business employees are hereby granted a De Facto Temporary License to continue operation or employment for a period of ninety (90) days following the effective date of this ordinance. Compliance with this ordinance shall not be required during said ninety (90) days, but by the end of said ninety (90) days, all sexually oriented businesses and sexually oriented business employees must conform to and abide by the requirements of this chapter.
>
> (b) Notwithstanding any language in Manatee County Ordinance No. 99–18 to the contrary, sexually oriented businesses shall be subject to this ordinance and shall not be subject to Ordinance No. 99–18.

> Sec. 2–2.5–18. Prohibited activities.
> It is unlawful for a sexually oriented business licensee to knowingly violate the following regulations or to knowingly allow an employee or any other person to violate the following regulations.
> (a) It shall be a violation of this ordinance for a patron, employee, or any other person to knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appear in a state of nudity.
> (b) It shall be a violation of this ordinance for a person to knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appear in a semi-nude condition unless the person is an employee who, while semi-nude, remains at least six (6) feet from any patron or customer and on a stage that is at least eighteen (18) inches from the floor and in a room of at least one thousand (1,000) square feet.
> (c) It shall be a violation of this ordinance for any employee who regularly appears semi-nude in a sexually oriented business to knowingly or intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, touch a customer or the clothing worn by a customer.
> (d) It shall be a violation of this ordinance for any person to sell, use, or consume alcoholic beverages on the premises of a sexually oriented business. A sexually oriented business currently licensed to sell alcoholic beverages on the premises shall not be required to comply with this requirement until expiration of its current annual alcoholic beverage license.
> A sign in a form to be prescribed by the County Administrator's Office and summarizing the provisions of Subsections (a), (b), (c), and (d) of this Section, shall be posted near the entrance of the sexually oriented business in such a manner as to be clearly visible to patrons upon entry.

[3] The new ordinance replaced the previous zoning ordinance, Ordinance 98–46, and exempted sexually oriented businesses from the generally applicable public nudity ordinance, Ordinance 99–18, rendering the prior action—Peek-a-Boo I—moot.

Unlike when the County adopted Ordinances 98–46 and 99–18, this time the County relied on a voluminous record that included judicial opinions; multiple secondary-effects reports, including land-use studies and crime reports; affidavits from a local private investigator and from local police; newspaper articles; and other materials. The County conducted a four-hour public hearing at which experts testified both for and against the ordinance. In support of the County's proposal, Richard McCleary, Ph.D., a professor of criminology, and Shawn Wilson, a real estate appraiser, testified about the adverse secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. In opposition, the Plaintiffs offered the testimony of four experts: Randy D. Fisher, Ph.D., an associate professor of psychology; Terry A. Danner, Ph.D., a professor of criminal justice; Judith Lynne Hanna, Ph.D., a scholar of anthropology and dance; and Richard Schauseil, a licensed real estate agent. We detail the evidential foundation at some length because it stands at the heart of whether the County relied on a sufficient record.

Dr. McCleary testified that much of the evidence supported the County's rationale. 1351 He explained that the formal criminological literature revealed consistent findings of significant crime-related hazards caused by sexually oriented businesses. These findings led him to conclude that "the relationship between crime and sexually oriented businesses is ... a scientific fact." One reason, he offered, is that sexually oriented businesses attract "soft targets," meaning patrons who are easy crime targets because they often come from far away, do not know the neighborhood, try to remain anonymous, and are less likely to report crimes of borderline seriousness because they do not want anyone to know that they are patronizing such businesses. Another reason Dr. McCleary offered is that features of the physical layout of these businesses—including private rooms and narrow corridors—strongly inhibited surveillance and policing.

Dr. McCleary also explained that there were between one and two dozen studies establishing a correlation between sexually oriented businesses and negative secondary effects that were "scientific to some degree." Dr. McCleary highlighted two such studies that supported the County's findings that sexually oriented businesses cause negative secondary effects. In the first one from Garden Grove, California, Dr. McCleary and a colleague examined locations where new sexually oriented businesses had opened up and compared the crime rates one year before and one year after they opened, using existing sexually oriented businesses as controls. They found a far greater increase in crime during that time period surrounding the new sexually oriented businesses than surrounding the existing similar businesses. In the second study drawn from Greensboro, North Carolina, even though the study's authors concluded that sexually oriented businesses did not cause negative secondary effects, Dr. McCleary said that another look at their data showed significantly higher rates of crime in neighborhoods with sexually oriented businesses.

Shawn Wilson, a real estate appraiser, testified about the negative effects of sexually oriented businesses on property value. Ms. Wilson explained that she had examined studies drawn from other cities on the secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses and that all of the studies addressing the value of real estate concluded that there were, in fact, negative secondary effects. Ms. Wilson also looked at the deeds in her own files, spoke with market participants, and met with other real estate appraisers. Although she acknowledged that these conversations amounted to anecdotal evidence, she concluded that there was a palpable fear in the marketplace that sexually oriented businesses, like other undesirable businesses such as flea markets and bowling alleys, would drive away potential customers and adversely affect business.

Dr. Fisher, an associate professor of psychology, testified on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the foreign studies on which the County had relied were flawed. He said that five of the studies were not empirically grounded, six did not actually find evidence of negative secondary effects, and two involved samples that were too small to be considered. He conceded that five of the foreign studies supported the hypothesis that sexually oriented businesses caused negative secondary effects, but he suggested that each of them contained methodological flaws that rendered the results "virtually uninterpretable." Finally, he critiqued two studies Dr. McCleary had personally conducted—the Garden Grove study, as well as a 2004 study of Centralia, Washington. Dr. Fisher argued that Dr. 1352 McCleary was not actually measuring crime increases surrounding new sexually oriented businesses, because some of these new businesses had opened near existing sexually oriented businesses.

Dr. Danner, a criminal justice professor, testified that a study he conducted concluded that Manatee County's sexually oriented businesses did not cause increases in crime. He evaluated two kinds of crime data in the County: (1) calls for police service, and (2) crimes known to police. He compared crime data for the neighborhoods surrounding Peek–a–Boo Lounge and Cleopatra's (the name of the adult dancing establishment of the former Plaintiff M.S.) with crime data from other parts of the County. He found that Cleopatra's had significantly fewer incidents of the categories of crime he studied compared to the average for Manatee County, and that Peek–a–Boo had significantly more incidents of those crimes compared to the average. Because Peek–a–Boo had more crime than the County average and Cleopatra's had less crime than the County average, and because he found that other kinds of businesses are also correlated with negative secondary effects, Dr. Danner argued that sexually oriented businesses were not "uniquely criminogenic."

Dr. Hanna, an anthropology and dance scholar, also spoke on the Plaintiffs' behalf. She opined that the ordinance was not content neutral and would suppress speech by depriving dancers of "artistic choice." She offered that nudity and the touching of patrons are essential components of adult dance and that the ordinance "stigmatizes women."

Next, Mr. Schauseil, a real estate agent, testified about a study he had conducted regarding property value. He found that from 2000 to 2004, the majority of businesses in the neighborhood of Cleopatra's and Peek–a–Boo Lounge saw no change in traffic pattern and the traffic volume had, in fact, increased.

Finally, Robert Miller, a Manatee County resident who had worked at Cleopatra's for two years and at Peek–a–Boo Lounge for eleven years, testified. He claimed that Peek–a–Boo did not tolerate drugs, prostitution, or violence; that there had been few "legal incidents"; that Peek–a–Boo was in good standing with the community; and that the establishment contributed significantly to the economy.

Based on the evidence and testimony, the Board concluded that sexually oriented businesses were correlated with a variety of negative secondary effects, including personal crimes, property crimes, prostitution and other illicit sexual activity, spread of disease, drug use and drug trafficking, sexual assault and exploitation, negative impacts on surrounding properties, and litter. Manatee County, Fla., Code of Ordinances § 2–2.5–1(b)(1). The Board found that the County had a substantial interest in preventing and abating these secondary effects, and therefore adopted the ordinance "to regulate sexually oriented businesses in order to promote the health, safety, and general welfare of the citizens of the County, and to establish reasonable and uniform regulations to prevent the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses within the County." Id. § 2–2.5–1(a).

On September 12, 2005, three adult dancing establishments filed the instant action: the two plaintiffs from the previous action, Peek–a–Boo and M.S., and G.T. Management, Inc. ("G.T."). Again, the Plaintiffs claimed that the ordinance was unconstitutional on its face and as applied to them. The County moved for summary 1353 judgment, submitting six volumes of evidence, which included the testimony and reports of Dr. McCleary, Shawn Wilson, and the Plaintiffs' witnesses; twenty-five judicial opinions; twenty studies from other jurisdictions; deposition testimony; affidavits; and post-enactment evidence. In particular, the County submitted affidavits from Tom McCarren, who visited Peek–a–Boo Lounge, Paper Moon,[4] and Pandora's Box[5] and described in detail illegal activity taking place in these establishments.[6]

4 The name of the adult dance establishment of the former Plaintiff G.T.

5 The new name of the adult dance establishment of the former Plaintiff M.S., formerly Cleopatra's.

6 At Pandora's Box, Mr. McCarren was able to pay a dancer for a private dance, during which the dancer removed the tape over one of her nipples and allowed Mr. McCarren to touch her breast, buttocks, and genital area. At Paper Moon, Mr. McCarren was able to pay a dancer to go into a back room with him, where she removed all clothing except her G-string and allowed Mr. McCarren to touch her breasts.

The County also submitted an affidavit from Detectives Evelio Perez and Dave Ackerson of the County Sheriff's Office, who conducted an undercover operation at Cleopatra's. They averred that the sting revealed several liquor violations, including serving alcohol after hours, dealing in stolen property, and vending goods with a counterfeit trademark. The County also submitted newspaper articles about stings in North Miami Beach and Pasco County. These articles detailed the illegal acts purportedly taking place in the adult clubs, including exposure of bodily organs on stage, simulation of sexual acts, and drug possession. The County also submitted a report about erotic dancers' experiences in adult clubs, which claimed that there was evidence of physical abuse, sexual abuse, verbal abuse, stalking, and sexual exploitation. In response, the Plaintiffs offered affidavits from the four witnesses whose testimony had been presented to the Board, and argued that their evidence "cast direct doubt" on the County's rationale for the ordinance. Ultimately, the district court granted final summary judgment for the County. All the Plaintiffs timely appealed, and the County cross appealed from the district court's refusal to strike the Plaintiffs' affidavits on the grounds that they contained legal argument and previously undisclosed expert opinion. Two of the Plaintiffs (M.S. and G.T.) have since dropped their appeal, leaving only Peek–a–Boo as a party Plaintiff.

II.

[1] [2] We review a district court's order granting summary judgment de novo, "applying the same standard that bound the district court and viewing the evidence and all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to" the non-moving party. Rodriguez v. Sec'y for Dep't of Corr., 508 F.3d 611, 616 (11th Cir.2007). Summary judgment is appropriate where "there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(a). The moving party bears the burden of production. Fickling v. United States, 507 F.3d 1302, 1304 (11th Cir.2007). The constitutionality of a statute is a question of law we review de novo. Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1255.

[3] [4] [5] [6] In Peek–a–Boo I, a panel of this Court comprehensively summarized the Supreme Court's jurisprudence on the 1354 First Amendment right to freedom of expression in the context of adult entertainment. Id. at 1255–64. Among other things, we held that adult entertainment zoning ordinances and generally applicable public nudity ordinances "must be distinguished and evaluated separately" according to the respective standards established by the Supreme Court. Id. at 1264. Zoning ordinances that regulate the conditions under which sexually oriented businesses may operate are evaluated as time, place, and manner regulations, following a three-part test set forth by the Supreme Court in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 46–50, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) and reaffirmed in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002).[7] Content-neutral public nudity ordinances, by contrast, involve expressive conduct and must therefore be measured against a four-part test set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376–77, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), and applied in the context of adult entertainment in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 567, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), and in City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). Manatee County Ordinance 05–21 contains provisions that regulate zoning and portions that are generally applicable public nudity restrictions. In this case, however, it's unnecessary to analyze these provisions separately because Peek–a–Boo challenges on appeal only whether the ordinance is "designed to serve a substantial government interest."[8] Therefore, we measure the zoning and nudity 1355 portions of the ordinance against the same standard: is the ordinance reasonably designed to serve a substantial government interest?

7 There was no majority opinion in Alameda Books, but because Justice Kennedy's concurrence reached the judgment on the narrowest grounds, his opinion represents the Supreme Court's holding in that case. See Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977) ("When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgment on the narrowest grounds" (internal quotation marks omitted)).

8 Under the Renton test applicable to zoning ordinances, a reviewing court must determine: (1) whether the ordinance amounts to a total ban (presumptively invalid) or merely a time, place, and manner regulation; (2) if it is a time, place, and manner regulation, the court must decide whether the ordinance is subject to strict or intermediate scrutiny; and (3) if it is subject to intermediate scrutiny, then the court must determine whether it is "designed to serve a substantial government interest" and allows for reasonable alternative channels of communication. Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1264 (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–50, 106 S.Ct. 925; Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment)). But under the O'Brien-Barnes test for public nudity ordinances, a reviewing court must determine whether: (1) the government acted within the bounds of its constitutional power in enacting the ordinance; (2) the ordinance furthers a "substantial government interest"; (3) "the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression"; and (4) the ordinance restricts First Amendment freedoms no more than is essential to further the government's interest. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673; Barnes, 501 U.S. at 567, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (quoting O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 376–77, 88 S.Ct. 1673). We have concluded that the same standard is used to determine whether an ordinance "is designed to serve" the government's interest (Renton step 3) or "furthers" the government's interest (O'Brien step 2). Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1264–65. On appeal, Peek–a–Boo only disputes whether the County satisfies Renton step 3; notably, Peek–a–Boo does not deny that combating negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment is a substantial government interest. Because Peek–a–Boo only challenges the requirement that is common to both tests, there is no need to analyze the zoning and nudity portions of the ordinance separately.

[7] [8] In determining whether the ordinance meets this standard, the county or municipality first bears the initial burden of producing the evidence that it has relied on to reach the conclusion that the ordinance furthers its interest in reducing secondary effects. Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d 860, 875 (11th Cir.2007) (citing Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1269). If the governmental entity has produced "evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to its rationale for enacting the ordinance," then the burden shifts to the plaintiff to "cast direct doubt on this rationale," either by showing that the evidence does not support its rationale or by producing evidence disputing the local government's factual findings. Id. at 875–76 (internal quotation marks omitted). If the plaintiff sustains its burden, the burden shifts back to the government to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies the ordinance. Id. at 876.

[9] On this record, we are satisfied that the County has met its initial burden and that Peek–a–Boo has failed to cast direct doubt. While the County "cannot rely on shoddy data or reasoning," Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1269, it is not required to "conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the [County] relie[d] upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the [County] addresses," Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Nor was the County required to produce empirical evidence or scientific studies as long as it "advance[d] some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). Here, the County relied on a vast legislative record that included judicial opinions, reports and studies that had been prepared for other municipalities, testimony from expert witnesses, affidavits from a private investigator who visited sexually oriented businesses in Manatee County, and newspaper articles. It is undeniable that the County has made a substantial showing, relying on as thorough a record as we have seen in these cases, and far more than the "very little evidence" required under Alameda Books. 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). Moreover, Peek–a–Boo has failed to cast direct doubt on the totality of the County's evidence.

A. The County's Initial Burden

[10] To begin with, Manatee County has produced a substantial body of evidence, which it reasonably believed to be relevant to combating negative secondary effects. The County explained that its rationale was to reduce a variety of negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses:

> Sexually oriented businesses, as a category of commercial uses, are associated with a wide variety of adverse secondary effects including, but not limited to, personal and property crimes, public safety risks, prostitution, potential spread of disease, lewdness, public indecency, illicit sexual activity, illicit drug use and drug trafficking, undesirable and criminal behavior associated with alcohol consumption, 1356 negative impacts on surrounding properties, litter, and sexual assault and exploitation .... Each of the foregoing negative secondary effects constitutes a harm which the County has a substantial government interest in preventing and/or abating in the future.

Manatee County, Fla., Code of Ordinances § 2–2.5–1(b)(1)–(2). In support of its rationale, the County first has cited to the findings and interpretations of eight Supreme Court decisions and seventeen other federal and state court decisions.[9] Many of the cases upheld ordinances containing restrictions similar to those found in Ordinance 05–21, and many of them accepted legislative findings concerning the negative secondary effects of adult businesses. See, e.g., Barnes, 501 U.S. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (upholding requirement that dancers in adult establishments wear pasties and a G-string); California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 118–19, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972) (upholding prohibitions on nude dancing in establishments that serve alcohol); Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358, 1365–66 (11th Cir.1999) (upholding a requirement that adult establishments have an area of at least 1,000 square feet). Indeed, the Supreme Court has suggested in Pap's A.M. that a municipality may meet its initial burden solely by relying on relevant Supreme Court cases. 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382.

9 Manatee County has specifically referenced these cases: City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D–4, L.L.C., 541 U.S. 774, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004); Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670; Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265; Barnes, 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990); Renton, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29; Young v. Am. Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972); Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 395 F.3d 1114 (9th Cir.2005); World Wide Video of Wash., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir.2004); Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d 1251; Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702 (7th Cir.2003); Gary v. City of Warner Robins, 311 F.3d 1334 (11th Cir.2002); BZAPS, Inc. v. City of Mankato, 268 F.3d 603 (8th Cir.2001); Artistic Entm't, Inc. v. City of Warner Robins, 223 F.3d 1306 (11th Cir.2000); Wise Enters. v. Unified Gov't of Athens–Clarke Cnty., 217 F.3d 1360 (11th Cir.2000); Ward v. Cnty. of Orange, 217 F.3d 1350 (11th Cir.2000); David Vincent, Inc. v. Broward Cnty., 200 F.3d 1325 (11th Cir.2000); Boss Capital, Inc. v. City of Casselberry, 187 F.3d 1251 (11th Cir.1999); Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358 (11th Cir.1999); Sammy's of Mobile, Ltd. v. City of Mobile, 140 F.3d 993 (11th Cir.1998); Int'l Food & Beverage Sys. v. City of Ft. Lauderdale, 794 F.2d 1520 (11th Cir.1986);

Grand Faloon Tavern, Inc. v. Wicker, 670 F.2d 943 (11th Cir.1982); Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 973 F.Supp. 1428 (M.D.Fla.1997); and Bd. of Cnty. Comm'rs v. Dexterhouse, 348 So.2d 916 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1977).

Here, however, the County has also relied on twenty studies (many of which were empirical) conducted in other cities, again examining the nexus between sexually oriented businesses and negative secondary effects.[10] The studies found, among other things: a higher incidence of 1357 arrests for sex offenses in neighborhoods surrounding sexually oriented businesses as compared with control areas (Phoenix, Arizona 1979); a higher incidence of sex-related crimes near sexually oriented businesses as compared with control areas (Indianapolis, Indiana 1984; Austin, Texas 1986); a real association between sexually oriented businesses and elevated crime levels (Minneapolis, Minnesota 1980; Indianapolis, Indiana; Amarillo, Texas 1977; Whittier, California 1978; Seattle, Washington 1989); a correlation between sexually oriented businesses and lower property values (Seattle, Washington); survey data from real estate appraisers who opined that sexually oriented businesses would have a negative effect on property values (Los Angeles, California 1977; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 1986; Dallas, Texas 1997); and testimony from citizens who were afraid to walk the streets in areas with a high concentration of sexually oriented businesses (Los Angeles, California).

10 These studies were conducted in Phoenix, Arizona 1979; Minneapolis, Minnesota 1980; Houston, Texas 1997; Indianapolis, Indiana 1984; Amarillo, Texas 1977; Garden Grove, California 1991; Los Angeles, California 1977; Whittier, California 1978; Austin, Texas 1986; Seattle, Washington 1989; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 1986; Dallas, Texas 1997; Newport News, Virginia 1996; New York, New York 1994; Phoenix, Arizona 1995–1998; Centralia, Washington 2004; Greensboro, North Carolina 2003; Houston, Texas 1983; Louisville, Kentucky 2004; and the State of Minnesota 1989.

The County also referenced findings that dancers at sexually oriented businesses experience physical and sexual abuse, drawn from a paper entitled "Stripclubs According to Strippers: Exposing Workplace Sexual Violence" by Kelly Holsopple, the Program Director of the Freedom and Justice Center for Prostitution Resources in Minneapolis, Minnesota; the affidavits of Tom McCarren, detailing illegal activity taking place inside sexually oriented businesses in Manatee County, including illegal touching in private rooms; an affidavit from Detectives Evelio Perez and Dave Ackerson of the Manatee County Sheriff's Office, who conducted an undercover operation at Cleopatra's revealing several liquor violations, including serving alcohol after hours, dealing in stolen property, and vending goods with a counterfeit trademark; and newspaper articles about stings conducted in North Miami Beach and Pasco County, which detailed a variety of illegal acts taking place in sexually oriented businesses. This ample foundation is more than enough to sustain the County's initial burden under the second prong of the O'Brien test and the third prong of the Renton test.

B. Peek–a–Boo's Burden to Cast Direct Doubt

Since the County has produced evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to its rationale, the burden shifts to Peek–a–Boo to cast direct doubt on the County's rationale, either by showing that the County's evidence does not actually support its rationale or by producing evidence disputing the County's factual findings. Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 875. Peek–a–Boo has not met this burden.

In the first place, Peek–a–Boo argues that it was "extremely problematic" to use judicial opinions as evidence because of "the unreliability of judicial decisions as proof of facts," citing to Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 570, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 156 L.Ed.2d 508 (2003), as well as a Fifth Circuit decision, H & A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, 480 F.3d 336 (5th Cir.2007), which Peek–a–Boo claims misstated a fact regarding a study it had cited. But the suggestion that the County may not reasonably rely on judicial opinions as evidence has been squarely rejected by this Court in Peek–a–Boo I, where we held that "any evidence ... including a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion—may form an adequate predicate to the adoption of a secondary effects ordinance." 337 F.3d at 1268 (emphasis added).

1358 Second, Peek–a–Boo faults the County for omitting pages from two of the documents it submitted. However, Peek–a–Boo has raised this argument only for the first time on appeal. We generally do not consider arguments raised for the first time on appeal, and we decline to do so here. Harrison v. Benchmark Elecs. Huntsville, Inc., 593 F.3d 1206, 1215 n. 8 (11th Cir.2010).

Third, Peek–a–Boo claims that four of the studies prepared for other cities—those conducted in Indianapolis in 1984, Austin in 1986, Oklahoma City in 1986, and Los Angeles in 1977—contained opinion surveys and were "problematic, if not inadmissible before the Courts." Peek–a–Boo does not explain this, however, only citing to a 1978 Third Circuit opinion, Pittsburgh Press Club v. United States, 579 F.2d 751, 759 (3d Cir.1978), and a 1963 opinion from the Southern District of New York, Zippo Manufacturing Co. v. Rogers Imports, Inc., 216 F.Supp. 670, 681–82, 684 (S.D.N.Y.1963). We remain unpersuaded. There is no precedent that bars a county from relying on studies that are not empirical in nature. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 881 ("[Plaintiff's argument] essentially asks this Court to hold today that the City's reliance on anything but empirical studies based on scientific methods is unreasonable. This was not the law before Alameda Books, and it is not the law now.") What's more, the cases Peek–a–Boo cites are inapposite because they address the admissibility in court of opinion polls under the hearsay rule. See Pittsburgh Press Club, 579 F.2d at 759–60; Zippo Mfg. Co., 216 F.Supp. at 681–84. In this case, the question is whether the County reasonably believed the evidence to be relevant to its rationale in adopting the ordinance. Cf. Peek–a–Boo I, 337 F.3d at 1268.

The heart of Peek–a–Boo's attack is found in the affidavits proffered by its experts Dr. Fisher, Dr. Danner, and Mr. Schauseil. Dr. Fisher's affidavit claimed that the foreign studies on which the County relied are defective. Dr. Fisher, however, only challenged the findings of seventeen of the foreign studies. Neither Dr. Fisher nor any of the Plaintiff's experts say anything about three foreign studies—namely, Houston, Texas 1983; the State of Minnesota 1989; and Louisville, Kentucky 2004. The 1983 Houston report details the findings the Houston City Council reached after a total of eight public hearings. The City Council found that sexually oriented businesses were associated with negative secondary effects such as a detrimental effect on property value and quality of life, increased prostitution in at least one area, intrusive signage, and ancillary criminal activity. The State of Minnesota report includes the findings of an empirical study conducted in St. Paul in 1978 of sexually oriented businesses and businesses serving alcohol. The study found a statistically significant correlation between the location of these types of businesses and neighborhood deterioration, as well as an association with higher crime rates and reduced housing values. Minnesota's working group on sexually oriented businesses also heard testimony that neighborhoods with a concentration of sexually oriented businesses suffered adverse effects such as finding pornographic materials and condoms in the streets, sex acts with prostitutes occurring in plain view of families and children, and harassment of neighborhood residents, including the propositioning of young girls and women on their way to school and work. Finally, the study from Louisville included police reports about prostitution and the promotion of prostitution, and the 1359 possession of methamphetamines, marijuana, and unknown white pills at or about adult entertainment establishments.

Beyond failing to challenge these studies at all, neither Dr. Fisher nor the Plaintiff's other experts has directly addressed the twenty-five judicial opinions relied upon by the County. Nor do the Plaintiff's experts attempt to cast any direct doubt on the affidavits submitted by the private investigator and two police officers detailing illegal activities found in the County's sexually oriented businesses, or comment at all about the report detailing sexual violence against dancers in sexually oriented businesses. Finally, the Plaintiff's experts have not addressed the newspaper articles regarding stings at Florida strip clubs. In short, a substantial body of evidence remains wholly unaddressed by the Plaintiff.

Moreover, Dr. Fisher's criticism of seventeen studies neither invalidates them nor renders the County's reliance on them unreasonable. Dr. Fisher criticizes some of the studies (Phoenix, Whittier, Austin, and Dallas) for not matching the control area closely enough to the study area in demographic terms. This does not undermine the County's ability to rely on them, inasmuch as we have rejected the argument that a municipality may only rely on studies employing the scientific method. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 881. For this reason, we are also unpersuaded by Dr. Fisher's criticism that some of the studies have small sample sizes (Indianapolis; Oklahoma City), only measure data over the course of one or two years (Phoenix; Austin), or lack empirical data (Houston 1997; Amarillo; Seattle). See id. [11]

11 Indeed, in Dr. McCleary's opinion, none of these criticisms is sufficient to wholly invalidate any of the studies, and taken together, they constitute "a very, very compelling literature that shows a consistent consensus finding; sexually oriented businesses pose crime-related secondary effects."

Dr. Fisher also pointed out that a few of the studies offer some findings that are inconclusive. Again, we are unpersuaded because these studies still draw other findings that are conclusive. We repeat that "[a]lthough the burden lies with the municipality, a court should be careful not to substitute its own judgment for that of the municipality" and should remember that "the municipality's legislative judgment should be upheld provided that it can show that its judgment is still supported by credible evidence, upon which it reasonably relies." Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 876 (internal quotation marks omitted). At best, Dr. Fisher has pointed to some problems with some of the studies, but on this ample record this is not enough to carry the day.

Dr. Danner's affidavit, also filed on behalf of Peek–a–Boo, attempts to cast direct doubt on the County's case by undermining the County's rationale for adopting the ordinance, which, among other things, is that sexually oriented businesses cause increases in crime rates. Dr. Danner examined crime rates in the County based on crimes known to police in the following offense categories: rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, larceny, and motor vehicle theft. He also tracked calls for police service, comparing two sexually oriented businesses with twelve non-adult businesses in the same area. Dr. Danner opined that the evidence was insufficient to conclude that the two adult establishments caused crime-related secondary effects "beyond what would be normally expected" for non-adult alcohol-serving establishments.

Dr. Danner's affidavit, however, did not address the County's findings regarding 1360 the correlation between sexually oriented businesses and other crimes, such as prostitution, lewdness, public indecency, illicit sexual activity, illicit drug use, and drug trafficking. What's more, there are serious methodological problems with Dr. Danner's findings. This Court has found that wholesale reliance on data based on crimes that are reported to the police may lead to an underestimation of the total number of crimes, since certain crimes, such as lewdness and prostitution, are rarely reported. See Daytona Grand, 490 F.3d at 882–83. Likewise, there are methodological problems with estimating crime rates simply based on calls for police services: Dr. McCleary opined that there are far more calls than there are actual incidents of crimes, and most crimes do not in fact come to the attention of the police through calls from victims or witnesses.

There are also problems with Richard Schauseil's affidavit, which avers that the County's sexually oriented businesses do not negatively affect commercial property value. First, Mr. Schauseil measured the assessed value of properties, and the County's expert Shawn Wilson cautioned that assessed values are far less accurate than appraisal values. Second, Ms. Wilson observed that Mr. Schauseil's study drew a comparison of listing prices, which may not be closely related to market value at all. Third, Mr. Schauseil's study analyzed the difference between sale and resale value, which may be explained by generally rising neighborhood property values or improvements to the property itself. Without knowing what improvements took place, it would not be proper to assume that a higher resale value meant that property values in the neighborhood were rising.

The bottom line is that the County has presented a substantial body of evidence to support its rationale for adopting the ordinance. Peek–a–Boo has failed even to address much of that evidence at all, and it has failed to show that the County's rationale or this body of evidence was unreasonable.

III.

Peek–a–Boo also claims that in deciding Daytona Grand and Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. of Georgia v. Fulton County, 596 F.3d 1265 (11th Cir.2010) ("Flanigan's II"), this Court impermissibly overruled Krueger v. City of Pensacola, 759 F.2d 851 (11th Cir.1985), Flanigan's Enterprises, Inc. of Georgia v. Fulton County, 242 F.3d 976 (11th Cir.2001) ("Flanigan's I"), and Peek–a–Boo I. We are bound to follow our precedent, and we have done so in Daytona Grand and Flanigan's II. Cases involving the regulation of sexually oriented businesses are of necessity fact-specific, and the answer in each one is largely driven by the nature of the record.

Thus, for example, in Krueger, we found that a Pensacola ordinance banning topless dancing was unconstitutional because the city produced no evidence that crime was a problem at topless bars in the city. 759 F.2d at 854–55. In Flanigan's I, we found it unreasonable for the county to rely on foreign studies concerning secondary effects when the county had conducted its own empirical studies that conclusively undermined its reliance on the foreign studies' findings. 242 F.3d at 986. In contrast, in Daytona Grand, the city of Daytona Beach relied on a significant record of evidence in adopting its ordinance. This record included police reports of criminal activity in and around adult theaters; undercover reports finding violations of city ordinances; specific documentation from the police chief of criminal 1361 activity in and around the theaters; data from police dispatchers regarding police calls; expert testimony; studies conducted for other cities that found that adult businesses tend to increase urban blight; studies of urban blight in Daytona Beach itself; controlled laboratory studies of the connection between alcohol and sexual conduct; anecdotal accounts from local business owners of increased crime; and newspaper articles. 490 F.3d at 882.

Similarly, in Flanigan's II, Fulton County relied on the findings of a 337–page report describing a fourteen-day sting operation of strip clubs in the county that resulted in 167 arrests and 166 convictions. 596 F.3d at 1280. The report also included affidavits regarding the impact of the strip clubs on young people in the county; affidavits regarding the clubs' non-criminal negative secondary effects, such as urban blight; and foreign studies. Id. The facts addressed in Daytona Grand and Flanigan's II were significantly different than those found in Krueger and Flanigan's I, so not surprisingly, the outcomes in these cases were different, although the legal principles were the same. [12]

12 Peek–a–Boo is also wrong in suggesting that the tool of summary judgment is always inappropriate when analyzing ordinances that attempt to regulate adult dancing establishments. We rejected summary judgment in Peek–a–Boo I because the plaintiffs had met their burden of casting direct doubt on the evidence the County had presented in support of its public nudity ordinance. 337 F.3d at 1271–72.

The County has produced a very substantial body of evidence, which it reasonably believed was relevant to its rationale for enacting the ordinance, and Peek–a–Boo has failed to cast direct doubt on this rationale.

Accordingly, the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the County is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

630 F.3d 1346, 22 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 1703

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Disagreed With by TJS of New York, Inc. v. Town of Smithtown, 2nd Cir.(N.Y.), March 10, 2010

490 F.3d 860
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

DAYTONA GRAND, INC., a Florida corporation doing business as Lollipop's Gentlemen's Club, Miles Weiss, Plaintiffs-Appellants Cross-Appellees,
v.
CITY OF DAYTONA BEACH, FLORIDA, a municipal corporation, Defendant-Appellee Cross-Appellant.

No. 06-12022.
|
June 28, 2007.

Synopsis

Background: Owners and operators of an adult theater sued the city claiming that zoning and public nudity ordinances violated the First Amendment. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, No. 02-01469-CV-ORL-28-KRS, John Antoon, II, J., 410 F.Supp.2d 1173, upheld the zoning ordinances, but struck down the nudity ordinances, and parties cross-appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Marcus, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] zoning ordinance limiting the locations where adult businesses may be located provided for a constitutionally sufficient number of sites to satisfy requirements of First Amendment, and

[2] public nudity ordinances did not violate First Amendment.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

West Headnotes (9)

[1] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use in general

Constitutional Law
Availability of other sites

Zoning ordinances limiting the locations where adult businesses may be located are evaluated under First Amendment under the three-part test for time, place, and manner regulations established in City of Renton; under that test, a new zoning regime must leave adult businesses with a reasonable opportunity to relocate, and the number of sites available for adult businesses under the new zoning regime must be greater than or equal to the number of adult businesses in existence at the time the new zoning regime takes effect. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use in general

Simply because adult businesses must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not establish that a zoning ordinance limiting the locations where adult businesses may be located violates First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Availability of other sites

Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Zoning ordinance limiting the locations where adult businesses could be located provided for a constitutionally sufficient number of sites to satisfy requirements of First Amendment; twenty-four sites in the district were available for First Amendment purposes, notwithstanding that all of the land in the district was owned by a single private landowner who could be reluctant or unwilling to develop or sell the land, and it was not constitutionally significant that the land was mostly vacant where the city had provided sufficient infrastructure for a private developer to commence development, including a paved road, telephone and power lines, and water and sewer lines. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Zoning and Planning
Nonconforming Uses

Constitution does not require a "grandfathering" provision for existing nonconforming adult businesses, and any vested right to continue operating as a lawful nonconforming use derives from state law.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use

Zoning and Planning
Legality or illegality of use

Adult business failed to establish a vested right under Florida law to continue operating under new zoning ordinance as a lawful nonconforming use; when business began operating, it violated the zoning ordinances as then written, and consequently it could not have relied on existing law because it began operating plainly in contravention of that law, and there was no evidence of bad faith or arbitrary behavior by the city.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Public nudity ordinances that incidentally impact protected expression should be upheld under First Amendment if they (1) are within the constitutional power of the government to enact; (2) further a substantial governmental interest; (3) are unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) restrict First Amendment freedoms no greater than necessary to further the government's interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

For purposes of First Amendment analysis, reducing the secondary effects associated with adult businesses is a substantial government interest that must be accorded high respect. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

In showing that an ordinance challenged under First Amendment furthers a substantial, independent government interest, a city need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses; although a municipality must rely on at least some pre-enactment evidence, such evidence can consist of a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Theaters in general

Constitutional Law
Performers

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Public nudity ordinances, which required at least G-strings and pasties in all adult theaters regardless of location, and which required slightly more modest clothing at establishments that either served alcohol or were located within 500 feet of an establishment that served alcohol, did not violate First Amendment; city showed that nudity ordinances furthered its interest in reducing the negative secondary effects associated with adult theaters, the ordinances were narrowly tailored, and police calls for service (CAD) data relied on by business owners could have substantially undercounted incidents of many of the types of crime that the city sought to reduce. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

862 Daniel R. Aaronson, Banjamin & Aaronson, P.A., Ft. Lauderdale, FL, Gary S. Edinger, Gary S. Edinger, P.A., Gainesville, FL, for Plaintiffs-Appellants Cross-Appellees.

Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, TN, Marie Hartman, Daytona Beach, FL, for Defendant-Appellee Cross-Appellant.

Anthony Angelo Garganese, Brown, Garganese, Weiss & D'Agresta, P.A., Orlando, FL, for Florida League of Cities, Inc., Amicus Curiae.

James Michael Johnson, Alliance Defense Fund of Louisiana, Shreveport, LA, for Citizens for Community Values, Amicus Curiae.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

Before HULL and MARCUS, Circuit Judges, and BARZILAY, [*] Judge.

[*] Honorable Judith M. Barzilay, Judge, United States Court of International Trade, sitting by designation.

Opinion

MARCUS, Circuit Judge:

At issue today is the constitutionality of several zoning and public nudity ordinances adopted by the City of Daytona Beach ("the City") to regulate adult theaters. The owners and operators of Lollipop's Gentlemen's Club ("Lollipop's"), an adult theater in Daytona Beach, sued the City claiming that these ordinances violate the First Amendment. The district court upheld the zoning ordinances, finding that the City had provided a constitutionally sufficient number of available sites for adult theaters, and also denied Lollipop's claim that it was "grandfathered in" under Florida law. However, the district court struck down the nudity ordinances, concluding that they did not further the substantial government interest in reducing negative secondary effects associated with adult theaters.

After thorough review, we affirm the district court's determination that the zoning ordinances pass constitutional muster, as well as its ruling that, under Florida law, Lollipop's is not entitled to grandfather status. But as for the nudity ordinances, we conclude that the City has indeed carried its evidentiary burden of establishing their constitutionality because 863 the ordinances further substantial government interests, and, accordingly, we reverse and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I. Background

A. Zoning Ordinances

In 1981, after years of increasing urban blight and economic decline, the City of Daytona Beach adopted various zoning ordinances in an effort to reduce the perceived secondary effects of adult businesses by limiting the locations where they could open and operate.[1] Among other things, the zoning ordinances permitted adult theaters[2] to open only in the City's Business Automotive ("BA") zoning districts, and even there prohibited them from locating within certain distances of churches, schools, parks, playgrounds, or other adult businesses.[3]

1 See Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 81-292 (Sept. 16, 1981); see also Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 82-67 (Feb. 17, 1982) (amending the definition of "adult theater").

2 The zoning ordinances define "adult theater," in relevant part, as "[a] use which exhibits any motion picture, exhibition, show, live show, representation, or other presentation which, in whole or in part, depicts nudity, sexual conduct, [or] sexual excitement." Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 82-67 § 1 (Feb. 17, 1982), codified at Daytona Beach, Fla., Land Dev.Code art. II, § 3.1 (2001).

3 Ordinance 81-292 added new provisions to and amended existing provisions of the City's zoning ordinances then in effect in order "[t]o reduce the adverse impacts of adult bookstores and adult theaters upon the City's neighborhoods." Ordinance 81-292 § 4. The Ordinance added definitions for "adult theater" and "adult bookstore," amended various provisions of the existing zoning ordinances for consistency, and, most importantly, added new sections to limit the locations where these adult businesses could open and operate. Those sections provided:

> 51.2.1 Adult bookstores and adult theaters shall be permitted as a matter of right in BA, BA-1, and BA-2 Districts. These adult uses shall not pyramid into or be allowed within the BW Districts.
>
> 51.2.2 It shall be unlawful to locate any adult theater and adult bookstore within 400 feet of any area of the City zoned R-1aa, R-1a, R-1a(1), R-1b, R-1c, R-2, R-2a, RA, R-2b, RP, R-3, PUD, T-1 or T-2.
>
> 51.2.3 It shall be unlawful to locate any adult bookstore and adult theater within 1,000 feet of any other such adult bookstores or adult theaters.
>
> 51.2.4 It shall be unlawful to locate any adult bookstore and adult theater within 400 feet of any church, school, public park or playground, or any other public or semi-public place or assembly where large numbers of minors regularly travel or congregate.
>
> 51.2.5 Distances in 51.2.3 and 51.2.4 shall be measured from property line to property line, without regard to the route of normal travel.

Ordinance 81-292 § 4. The Ordinance also limited adult businesses' use of outside advertising signs, prohibited them from painting their buildings in "garish colors," and required that all windows and doors be "blacked or otherwise obstructed" to block visibility of the inside from outside. Id.

In the mid-1980s, the zoning ordinances were challenged on various grounds in Function Junction, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 705 F.Supp. 544 (M.D.Fla.1987), aff'd, 864 F.2d 792 (11th Cir.1988) (table). Gerald Langston, the City's Director of Planning and Redevelopment and a key participant in formulating the zoning ordinances, testified in that case as an expert in urban planning and about the legislative process that led to their enactment. Langston said that, before enacting the zoning ordinances, the City had conducted a local study of urban blight and decay that identified two blighted areas: the old downtown and the beachside. Langston explained that the identification of these areas as blighted was based on characteristics such as: "a significant percentage of deteriorating structures; a large number of small ... lots, which did not allow cars; 864 a notable parking problem; a high incidence of crime, particularly, on the beachside; and a large percentage of antiquated, underground utility systems, such as drainage, water and sewer systems." Id. at 547. Langston testified that the blight deterred investment-hotel development ceased in 1975, and in the late 1970's, Daytona Beach was denominated the "City of Sleaze." Id.

Langston explained that the City of Daytona Beach then created a Redevelopment Design and Review Board to deal with the blight problem. Id. Langston worked with the Board and testified that it "considered studies of blight in Boston and Detroit by the American Society of Planning Officials in 1979-1980. These studies show strong evidence that the central location of adult uses, like the 'Combat Zone' in Boston, causes the blighted area to grow and creates blight in fringe areas." Id. Langston also opined, "[b]ased upon his education, experience, knowledge of blight in Daytona Beach and his participation in drafting the subject ordinance," that live nude and seminude entertainment businesses "promote and perpetuate urban decay" and that "adult businesses have impacted on crime in the area surrounding Daytona Beach." Id.

David Smith, an assistant state attorney who had prosecuted drug and prostitution offenses in Daytona Beach, also testified that " 'most definitely' there were more drug and prostitution offenses in topless bars than in other bars." Id. at 548. Based in part on this testimony by Langston and Smith, the district court in Function Junction upheld the zoning ordinances. Id. at 552.

In 1993, the City enacted several amendments to the zoning ordinances that, among other things, required adult theaters to obtain pre-approval from a Technical Review Committee before being able to open and operate in the BA districts. In a First Amendment challenge brought by several adult theaters, the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida entered a preliminary injunction preventing the City from enforcing the 1993 amendments because, the court found, the plaintiffs were likely to prevail at trial on their claims. Red-Eyed Jack, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 165 F.Supp.2d 1322, 1330 (M.D.Fla.2001) [hereinafter Red-Eyed Jack I].

While the Red-Eyed Jack litigation was still pending, the City amended its zoning ordinances still again to eliminate the constitutional infirmities identified by the district court. [4] Relevant here, the City once 865 again allowed adult theaters to open in the BA districts without pre-approval. [5] The City also created a new zoning district category, the M-5 Heavy Industrial Zoning District ("M-5"), [6] and ultimately applied it to 210 acres in the western part of the City. [7] Within this new M-5 district, adult theaters were permitted to open without the distance requirements that applied in BA districts. Although the M-5 district consisted mostly of undeveloped land, the City ensured that telephone and power lines were installed in the district's interior, the county paved a previously dirt road through it, and the City approved a preliminary plat for a fifty-five-acre subdivision straddling that road. [8] As a result of these changes, the district court concluded that the zoning ordinances were constitutional. Red-Eyed Jack, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 322 F.Supp.2d 1361, 1362 (M.D.Fla.2004) [hereinafter Red-Eyed Jack II]. The court found that twenty-four new sites were available in the M-5 district and that, in concert with one site already found to be available in the BA district, this created a constitutionally sufficient number of sites for the ten adult businesses that were operating or seeking to operate in Daytona Beach at that time. Id. at 1375.

4 Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 01-367 § 1 (Sept. 5, 2001). Ordinance 01-367 enacted the substantive provisions that are currently in force in the BA districts:

> Adult bookstores and adult theaters are permitted as of right in BA districts. The purpose of the conditions is to reduce the adverse impacts of adult bookstores and adult theaters upon neighborhoods by avoiding the concentration of uses which cause or intensify physical and social blight; improving visual appearance of adult uses; reducing negative impacts of adult uses upon other business uses, neighborhood property values, residential areas, and public and semi-public uses; insuring that adult uses do not impede redevelopment and neighborhood revitalization efforts; and avoiding adult uses in heavily used pedestrian areas. The following conditions must be met:
>
> (a) It shall be unlawful to locate any adult bookstore or adult theater within 400 feet of any residential, R-PUD, T-1, or T-2 district.
>
> (b) It shall be unlawful to locate any adult bookstore or adult theater within 1,000 feet of any other adult theater or adult bookstore.
>
> (c) It shall be unlawful to locate any adult bookstore or adult theater within 400 feet of any church, school, public park, or playground, or any other public or semi-public place of assembly where large numbers of minors regularly travel or congregate.
>
> (d) Distances shall be measured from property line to property line, without regard to the route of normal travel.
>
> (e) Outside advertising shall be limited to one identification sign, not to exceed 20 square feet. Advertisements, displays, or other promotional materials shall not be shown or exhibited to be visible to the public from a pedestrian sidewalk or walkway or from other public or semi-public areas; and such displays shall be considered signs.
>
> (f) Buildings shall not be painted in garish colors or such other fashion as will effectuate the same purpose as a sign. All windows, doors, and other apertures shall be blacked or otherwise obstructed so as to prevent viewing of the interior of the establishment from without.

Daytona Beach, Fla., Land Dev.Code art. XI, § 3.2 (2001).

5 The distance requirements between adult theaters and churches, schools, parks, playgrounds, and other adult businesses remain in effect.

6 Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinances 01-456 & 01-457 (Oct. 17, 2001).

7 Initially, the City zoned twenty acres as M-5, but after the district court entered still another injunction based on its finding that the City still did not provide a sufficient number of sites where adult theaters could open and operate, the City zoned as M-5 an additional 190 acres adjacent to the original twenty acres. Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 03-195 (May 7, 2003); see also Red-Eyed Jack, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 322 F.Supp.2d 1361, 1364-65 (M.D.Fla.2004).

8 Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 03-196 (May 7, 2003).

B. Nudity Ordinances

In conjunction with the zoning ordinances adopted in 1981, the City enacted Ordinance 81-334 to prohibit nudity and sexual conduct in establishments that serve alcohol.[9] Specifically, in any establishment 866 that deals in alcoholic beverages, Ordinance 81-334 prohibits: the "expos[ure] to public view [of a] person's genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage or buttocks"; the "expos[ure] to public view [of] any portion of [a woman's] breasts below the top of the areola"; a wide variety of sexual activities; and any "simulation" or "graphic representation, including pictures or the projection of film, which depicts" any of the conduct prohibited by the Ordinance. In addition, Ordinance 81-334 provides that no person "maintaining, owning, or operating an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages shall suffer or permit" any of the proscribed conduct.

[9] In relevant part, Ordinance 81-334 provides:

> (a) No person shall expose to public view such person's genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage or buttocks or any simulation thereof in an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.
>
> (b) No female person shall expose to public view any portion of her breasts below the top of the areola or any simulation thereof in an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.
>
> (c) No person maintaining, owning, or operating an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages shall suffer or permit any person to expose to public view such person's genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage or buttocks or simulation thereof within the establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.
>
> (d) No person maintaining, owning, or operating an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages shall suffer or permit any female person to expose to public view any portion of her breasts below the top of the areola or any simulation thereof within the establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.
>
> (e) No person shall engage in and no person maintaining, owning, or operating an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages shall suffer or permit any sexual intercourse; masturbation; sodomy; bestiality; oral copulation; flagellation; sexual act which is prohibited by law; touching, caressing or fondling of the breasts, buttocks, anus or genitals; or the simulation thereof within an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.
>
> (f) No person shall cause and no person maintaining, owning or operating an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages shall suffer or permit the exposition of any graphic representation, including pictures or the projection of film, which depicts human genitals; pubic area; vulva; anus; anal cleft or cleavage; buttocks; female breasts below the top of the areola; sexual intercourse; masturbation; sodomy; bestiality; oral copulation; flagellation; sexual act prohibited by law; touching, caressing or fondling of the breasts, buttocks, anus, or genitals; or any simulation thereof within any establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages.

Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 81-334 § 1 (Oct. 21, 1981), codified at Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 10-6 (2001). Section 2 of Ordinance 81-334, although not codified in the City's Code of Ordinances, provides the City's rationale for Ordinance 81-334's enactment:

> It is hereby found that the acts prohibited in Section 1 above encourage the conduct of prostitution, attempted rape, rape, murder, and assaults on police officers in and around establishments dealing in alcoholic beverages, that actual and simulated nudity and sexual conduct and the depiction thereof coupled with alcohol in public places begets undesirable behavior, that sexual, lewd, lascivious, and salacious conduct among patrons and employees within establishments dealing in alcoholic beverages results in violation of law and dangers to the health, safety and welfare of the public, and it is the intent of this ordinance to prohibit nudity, gross sexuality, and the simulation and depiction thereof in establishments dealing in alcoholic beverages.

Id. § 2.

By 2001, the City of Daytona Beach became concerned that some bars were exploiting a loophole in Ordinance 81-334 by separating alcohol and nudity within a single structure but allowing for ready access between the two areas. The City also became increasingly concerned that lewd and lascivious conduct within adult theaters was increasing and that nudity in streets, parks, and other public places was especially a problem during events such as Spring Break and Black College Reunion.

Motivated by these perceived concerns, the City enacted Ordinance 02-496 to reduce "lewd and lascivious behavior, prostitution, sexual assaults and batteries, ... other criminal activity, ... [the] degradation of women, and ... activities which break down family structures and values." [10] In fact, Ordinance 02-496 was enacted as a general public nudity ordinance and prohibited any person over ten years of age from "recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally" 867 appearing in any public place with "anything other than a full and opaque covering" over the following areas: "[t]he male or female genitals, pubic area, or anal cleavage"; "[t]he nipple and areola of the female breast"; "at least one-half of that outside surface area of the breast located below the top of the areola, which area shall be reasonably compact and contiguous to the areola"; "[o]ne-third of the male or female buttocks centered over the cleavage of the buttocks for the length of the cleavage"; and, even if covered, the "male genitals in a discernibly turgid state." [11] Ordinance 02-496 also provided a non-exhaustive list of items of clothing that are not sufficient to comply with its provisions: "items commonly known as G-strings, T-backs, dental floss, and thongs." [12]

10 Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 02-496 § 5 (Oct. 2, 2002).

11 Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 62-183(a), (b), enacted by Ordinance 02-496 § 14.

12 Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 62-183(c), enacted by Ordinance 02-496 § 14. Ordinance 02-496 added Article VI, "Public Nudity," to Chapter 62 of the City's Code of Ordinances. Article VI first states the City's purpose for adding a public nudity prohibition to the City's Code of Ordinances:

> (a) It is the intent of this article to protect and preserve the health, safety and welfare of the people of The City of Daytona Beach by prohibiting any person from recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally appearing nude in a public place, or recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally causing or permitting another person to appear nude in a public place within the City, subject to the exceptions provided in § 62-[184].
>
> (b) The City Commission has further expressed its intent and findings in Ordinance 02-496, adopting this article.

Daytona Beach Code § 62-181. After defining the terms "breast," "buttocks," "public place provided or set apart for nudity," and "public place," see id. § 62-182, Article VI then lists the following substantive prohibitions:

> (a) It shall be unlawful for any person ten years of age or older to recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally appear in a public place, or to recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally cause or permit another person ten years of age or older to appear in a public place in a state of dress or undress such that any of the following body parts or portions thereof are exposed to view or are covered with anything other than a full and opaque covering which completely covers all of the described area:
>
> (1) The male or female genitals, pubic area, or anal cleavage.
>
> (2) The nipple and areola of the female breast; and in addition at least one-half of that outside surface area of the breast located below the top of the areola, which area shall be reasonably compact and contiguous to the areola.
>
> (3) One third of the male or female buttocks centered over the cleavage of the buttocks for the length of the cleavage. This area is more particularly described as that portion of the buttocks which lies between the top and bottom of the buttocks, and between two imaginary straight lines, one on each side of the anus and each line being located one-third of the distance from the anus to the outside perpendicular line defining the buttocks, and each line being perpendicular to the ground and to the horizontal lines defining the buttocks.
>
> (b) It shall be unlawful for any person to recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally appear in a public place, or to recklessly, knowingly, or intentionally cause or permit another person to appear in a public place in a manner as to show or display the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state.
>
> (c) Attire which is insufficient to comply with these requirements includes but is not limited to those items commonly known as G-strings, T-backs, dental floss, and thongs.
>
> (d) Body paint, body dye, tattoos, latex, tape, or any similar substance applied to the skin surface, any substance that can be washed off the skin, or any substance designed to simulate or which by its nature simulates the appearance of the anatomical area beneath it, is not full and opaque covering as required by this section.

Id. § 62-183. Article VI then provides that "[t]he offense of public nudity or exposure as set forth in section 62-183 shall not occur in any of the following instances:"

(1) When a person appears nude in a public place provided or set apart for nudity, and such person is nude for the sole purpose of performing a legal function that is customarily intended to be performed within such public place, and such person is not nude for the purpose of obtaining money or other financial gain for such person or for another person or entity; or

(2) When the conduct of being nude cannot constitutionally be prohibited by this section because it constitutes a part of a bona fide live communication, demonstration, or performance by such person wherein such nudity is expressive conduct incidental to and necessary for the conveyance or communication of a genuine message or public expression, and is not a guise or pretense utilized to exploit nudity for profit or commercial gain; or

(3) When the conduct of being nude cannot constitutionally be prohibited by this section because it is otherwise protected by the United States Constitution or the Florida Constitution.

Id. § 62-184(a) (citations omitted).

868 In July 2003, less than a year after the City enacted Ordinance 02-496, a panel of this Court decided Peek-A-Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee County, 337 F.3d 1251 (11th Cir.2003). That decision suggested that an ordinance that does not leave an erotic dancer "free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings" would violate the First Amendment because it would significantly affect the dancer's "capacity to convey [an] erotic message." Id. at 1274 (quotation marks omitted). About five weeks later, the City enacted Ordinance 03-375, which amended Ordinance 02-496 to allow erotic dancers to wear G-strings and pasties "within a fully enclosed structure legally established as an adult theater" that is more than 500 feet from an establishment that serves alcohol. [13] Within 500 feet of an alcohol-serving establishment, however, Ordinance 02-496 applies and, as described above, requires clothing somewhat more modest than G-strings and pasties. [14]

13 Daytona Beach, Fla., Ordinance 03-375 § 9 (Aug. 20, 2003), codified at Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 62-184(b). Ordinance 03-375 added the following exception to the City's Code of Ordinances:

(1) In the course of the presentation of erotic dance or other artistic expression which is entitled to first amendment protection within a fully enclosed structure legally established as an adult theater as defined in the Land Development Code:

a. The breast covering required by subsection 62-183(a)(2) shall not be required, except that nipples and areolae shall be covered.

b. The buttocks covering required by subsection 62-183(a)(3) shall not be required, and subsection 62-183(c) shall not apply.

Daytona Beach Code § 62-184(b)(1), enacted by Ordinance 03-375 § 9.

14 Specifically, the more modest clothing requirements apply to an adult theater that:

a. is located in the same structure as an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ... unless the closest point of the premises of the alcoholic beverage establishment is more than 500 feet from the boundary line of the adult theater use; or

b. is located under the same roof as an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ... unless the closest point of the premises of the alcoholic beverage establishment is more than 500 feet from the boundary line of the adult theater use; or

c. shares any wall, floor, or ceiling with an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ...; or

d. shares an entry area with an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ...; or

e. provides for or permits the interior passage of customers directly or indirectly between it and an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ..., whether or not a separate cover or admission fee is charged; or

f. is located adjacent or next door to an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ...; or

g. is located within 500 feet of an establishment dealing in alcoholic beverages ..., measured from property line of one use to property line of the other use, including parking areas and other appurtenances associated with each use; or

h. is not legally authorized to operate as an adult theater.

Daytona Beach Code § 62-184(b)(2), enacted by Ordinance 03-375 § 9.

869 C. Lollipop's Lawsuit

On December 10, 2003, Lollipop's brought this suit challenging the constitutionality of the zoning ordinances and of Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375. First, Lollipop's claimed that the zoning ordinances do not offer reasonable alternative venues for adult theaters to communicate their erotic message because an insufficient number of sites are available for adult theaters. Alternatively, Lollipop's claimed that it was "grandfathered in" as a lawful nonconforming use under Florida law. The district judge, who also presided over the Red-Eyed Jack litigation, granted summary judgment to the City of Daytona Beach on both claims, noting that the City had made no changes to the zoning ordinances since his decision in Red-Eyed Jack II and that Lollipop's provided no evidence that warranted a departure from the earlier decision.

Second, Lollipop's challenged Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375, urging that they neither further a substantial government interest nor are narrowly tailored. The district court granted final summary judgment to the City on Lollipop's narrow tailoring claim, but concluded that there was a genuine issue of material fact about whether the three nudity ordinances furthered a substantial government interest. Thereafter, at a six-day bench trial, Lollipop's presented expert testimony in an effort to cast direct doubt on the City's rationale for enacting the nudity ordinances. The experts explained at trial that they had conducted two empirical studies using data provided by the City. They concluded based on the data they examined that adult theaters in Daytona Beach had no statistically significant effect on crime rates, and that the City's evidence offered to the contrary was "shoddy" and "meaningless."

The district court agreed and concluded that Lollipop's evidence cast direct doubt on the City's rationale for enacting the nudity ordinances:

> Plaintiffs have succeeded in their attempt to cast direct doubt on the City's rationales for its ordinances. As persuasively demonstrated by Plaintiffs' expert studies, the City's pre-enactment evidence consists either of purely anecdotal evidence or opinions based on highly unreliable data. Most notably, the City's evidence lacks data which would allow for a comparison of the rate of crime occurring in and around adult entertainment establishments with the rate of crime occurring in and around similarly situated establishments. Absent the context that such a comparison might provide, the City's data is, as Plaintiffs assert, "meaningless."

The court also determined that the additional evidence provided by the City in an effort to renew support for the ordinances was similarly flawed. The district court, therefore, held that Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375 did not further a substantial government interest and declared that they violated the First Amendment. In fact, the district court struck all three nudity ordinances in their entirety, except for subsection 10-6(e) of the Daytona Beach Code (enacted by Ordinance 81-334) because that subsection regulates non-expressive conduct.

These appeals followed: Lollipop's argued that the district court had improvidently entered summary judgment for the City on its challenge to the zoning ordinances, as well as on its claim to grandfather status. The City, in turn, cross-appealed the court's determination that the three nudity ordinances were unconstitutional. 870 Lollipop's also appealed from the grant of final summary judgment to the City on its claim that the nudity ordinances are not narrowly tailored. [15]

15 Lollipop's also claimed in the district court that it is exempt from Ordinance 02-496 by its own terms, but the district court had no occasion to rule on this claim because it declared Ordinance 02-496 unconstitutional. Because Lollipop's does not raise this argument on appeal, the claim is deemed abandoned. See Access Now, Inc. v. Southwest Airlines Co., 385 F.3d 1324, 1330 (11th Cir.2004).

II. Zoning Ordinances

The City's zoning ordinances do not ban adult theaters altogether but do restrict them to the BA and M-5 zoning districts and, in the BA districts, impose distance requirements between adult theaters and churches, schools, parks, playgrounds, and other adult businesses. [16] We review the constitutionality of a city ordinance de novo. See Peek-A-Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee County, 337 F.3d 1251, 1255 (11th Cir.2003).

16 In BA districts, an adult theater must be located at least 400 feet from "any residential, R-PUD, T-1, or T-2 district," 400 feet from any church, school, park, playground, or "any other public or semi-public place of assembly where large numbers of minors regularly travel or congregate," and 1000 feet from other adult businesses. Daytona Beach, Fla., Land Dev.Code art. XI, § 3.2 (2001).

[1] It is by now well-established that zoning ordinances limiting the locations where adult businesses may be located are evaluated under the three-part test for time, place, and manner regulations established in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and reaffirmed in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1264; see also David Vincent, Inc. v. Broward County, 200 F.3d 1325, 1333 (11th Cir.2000). We have summarized the Renton framework this way:

> first, the court must determine whether the ordinance constitutes an invalid total ban or merely a time, place, and manner regulation; second, if the ordinance is determined to be a time, place, and manner regulation, the court must decide whether the ordinance should be subject to strict or intermediate scrutiny; and third, if the ordinance is held to be subject to intermediate scrutiny, the court must determine whether it is designed to serve a substantial government interest and allows for reasonable alternative channels of communication.

Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1264; see also Renton, 475 U.S. at 46-50, 106 S.Ct. 925. Because neither party disputes that the first two prongs have been satisfied or that the zoning ordinances serve a substantial government interest, our analysis under Renton focuses solely on whether the zoning ordinances provide adult theaters with reasonable alternative channels of communication. We hold that they do.

A new zoning regime must leave adult businesses with a "reasonable opportunity to relocate," and "the number of sites available for adult businesses under the new zoning regime must be greater than or equal to the number of adult businesses in existence at the time the new zoning regime takes effect." Fly Fish, Inc. v. City of Cocoa Beach, 337 F.3d 1301, 1310-11 (11th Cir.2003) (quoting David Vincent, 200 F.3d at 1337 n. 17). Although a district court's calculation of the number of sites that a zoning ordinance makes available for adult businesses is a factual finding that we review only for clear error, the district court's methodology in making that calculation-such as whether a particular 871 site is "available" and provides a reasonable avenue for communicating an adult business's erotic message-is a legal determination that we review de novo. David Vincent, 200 F.3d at 1333; see also Fly Fish, 337 F.3d at 1309.

[2] We have enumerated several "general rules" to aid in deciding whether a particular site is available for First Amendment purposes:

> First, the economic feasibility of relocating to a site is not a First Amendment concern. Second, the fact that some development is required before a site can accommodate an adult business does not mean that the land is, per se, unavailable for First Amendment purposes. The ideal lot is often not to be found. Examples of impediments to the relocation of an adult business that may not be of a constitutional magnitude include having to build a new facility instead of moving into an existing building; having to clean up waste or landscape a site; bearing the costs of generally applicable lighting, parking, or green space requirements; making [do] with less space than one desired; or having to purchase a larger lot than one needs. Third, the First Amendment is not concerned with restraints that are not imposed by the government itself or the physical characteristics of the sites designated for adult use by the zoning ordinance. It is of no import under Renton that the real estate market may be tight and sites currently unavailable for sale or > lease, or that property owners may be reluctant to sell to an adult venue.

David Vincent, 200 F.3d at 1334-35. As the Supreme Court explained in Renton, simply because adult businesses "must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation." 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925.

[3] Here, the district court relied on its earlier finding in Red-Eyed Jack II that twenty-five sites-twenty-four in the M-5 district and one in the BA district-are available for adult theaters. 322 F.Supp.2d at 1372-75. Because the Red-Eyed Jack II court found that, at most, ten adult theaters were operating or seeking to operate in the City of Daytona Beach, id. at 1367, it held that the zoning ordinances provide for a constitutionally sufficient number of sites, id. at 1375. In the instant case, the district court concluded that Lollipop's had presented no evidence to warrant a departure from its earlier ruling in Red-Eyed Jack II.

Lollipop's vigorously disagrees, contending that the M-5 district is no more than "unimproved industrial property" and that, therefore, the twenty-four lots in the M-5 district cannot count as being "available" under Renton. The undisputed historical facts concerning the M-5 district are these: (1) telephone and power lines extend through the interior of the M-5 district along a now-paved road; (2) water and sewer lines have been installed up to the boundary of the M-5 district; (3) a preliminary plat has been approved for fifty-five acres of the M-5 district that would create at least twenty-four one-acre sites fronting the now-paved road; and (4) the entire M-5 district is owned by a single private landowner, not by the City. Id. at 1372, 1374.

Under the applicable case law, these undisputed facts yield the conclusion that the twenty-four sites in the M-5 district are available for First Amendment purposes. It is irrelevant for our purposes that all of the land in the M-5 district is owned by a single private landowner who may be reluctant or unwilling to develop or sell the land. See 872 David Vincent, 200 F.3d at 1335 (holding that "[i]t is of no import under Renton that the real estate market may be tight and sites currently unavailable for sale or lease, or that property owners may be reluctant to sell to an adult venue," and finding sites available even though there was "no evidence that any of the land is for sale"). Nor is it constitutionally significant that the land is mostly vacant where, as here, the City has provided sufficient infrastructure for a private developer to commence development, including a paved road, telephone and power lines, and water and sewer lines. See id. at 1334 ("Examples of impediments to the relocation of an adult business that may not be of a constitutional magnitude include having to build a new facility instead of moving into an existing building....").

Although we have acknowledged that "the physical characteristics of a site or the character of current development could render relocation by an adult business unreasonable," examples of such unavailable sites are "land under the ocean, airstrips of international airports, and sports stadiums." Id. at 1335. Here, the land in the M-5 district is hardly comparable to such sites, where relocation is, for all practical purposes, untenable. Finally, the City has removed the legal obstacles that might have prevented adult theaters from relocating to the M-5 district, and has gone so far as to approve a preliminary plat for a fifty-five-acre subdivision straddling the main road in the M-5 district. Cf. id. at 1335 ("[T]he First Amendment is not concerned with restraints that are not imposed by the government itself...."). In short, we agree with the district court that the twenty-four sites in the M-5 district are available under Renton. And because the record shows that no more than ten adult theaters are operating or seeking to operate in Daytona Beach, the zoning ordinances are constitutional; reasonable alternative channels of communication are available.

[4] Lollipop's also claims that, even if the zoning ordinances are constitutional, Lollipop's is otherwise "grandfathered in" under Florida law.[17] Lollipop's argument is grounded on the contention that the zoning ordinances were unconstitutional at the time that Lollipop's began operating as an adult theater. Although the City may now have cured the earlier constitutional defects, Lollipop's argues that no valid law made Lollipop's unlawful when it opened. Thus, according to Lollipop's, its right to operate at its current location "vested" at that time, and it may continue to operate there despite any subsequent changes to the zoning ordinances that rendered it a nonconforming use.[18] The district court granted summary judgment to the City on this claim too, and we review the district court's determination de novo. See Reserve, Ltd. v. Town of Longboat Key, 17 F.3d 1374, 1377 (11th Cir.1994).

17 The Constitution does not require a "grandfathering" provision for existing nonconforming adult businesses, David Vincent, 200 F.3d at 1332, and any vested right to continue operating as a lawful nonconforming use derives from state law, see Coral Springs St. Sys., Inc. v. City of Sunrise, 371 F.3d 1320, 1333 (11th Cir.2004).

18 Lollipop's is located at 639 Grandview Avenue in Daytona Beach, Florida, and has been operating as an adult theater there since October 2000. Although the City disputes when Lollipop's began operating as an adult theater, Lollipop's claim to grandfather status was decided in the district court on the City's motion for summary judgment, and therefore we construe the record in the light most favorable to Lollipop's.

[5] "Not surprisingly, vested rights are not created easily" under 873 Florida law. Coral Springs St. Sys., Inc. v. City of Sunrise, 371 F.3d 1320, 1333 (11th Cir.2004). "The overarching pattern in Florida's case law is that vested rights can be created ... only in two circumstances." Id. at 1334. The first occurs "when a party has reasonably and detrimentally relied on existing law, creating the conditions of equitable estoppel," while the second occurs "when the defendant municipality has acted in a clear display of bad faith." Id. Here, neither circumstance applies. It is undisputed that when Lollipop's began operating as an adult theater, it violated the zoning ordinances as then written. As a matter of logic, then, Lollipop's cannot have relied on existing law because it began operating plainly in contravention of that law. Nor is there any record evidence of bad faith or arbitrary behavior by the City. Therefore, on this record, the district court correctly concluded that Lollipop's has failed to establish a vested right to continue operating as a lawful nonconforming use.

III. Nudity Ordinances

[6] We analyze the three nudity ordinances challenged here under the four-part test for expressive conduct set forth by the Supreme Court in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), and employed in City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). As we have explained:

> According to this test, public nudity ordinances that incidentally impact protected expression should be upheld if they (1) are within the constitutional power of the government to enact; (2) further a substantial governmental interest; (3) are unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) restrict First Amendment freedoms no greater than necessary to further the government's interest.

Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1264. Here, our analysis focuses on the second and fourth prongs because there is no dispute between the parties as to the first and third prongs.

A. Substantial Government Interest

[7] Under O'Brien 's second prong, a city must establish that the challenged ordinance furthers a substantial government interest. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion).[19] It has 874 been by now clearly established that reducing the secondary effects associated with adult businesses is a substantial government interest "that must be accorded high respect." City of L.A. v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 444, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (quotation marks omitted);[20] see also Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) ("[C]ombating the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing [is] undeniably important."); Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153, 1166 (9th Cir.2003) ("It is beyond peradventure at this point in the development of the doctrine that a state's interest in curbing the secondary effects associated 875 with adult entertainment establishments is substantial.").

19 In Pap's A.M., like some of the Supreme Court's other decisions in this area, there was no majority opinion on the First Amendment issue before the Court. Justice O'Connor wrote a plurality opinion, joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Kennedy and Breyer, which upheld under O'Brien the constitutionality of the nudity ordinance at issue. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289-302, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion). Relevant here, the plurality concluded that O'Brien 's second prong was satisfied because "[t]he asserted interests of regulating conduct through a public nudity ban and of combating the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing are undeniably important," and because the evidence that the city produced established that "it was reasonable for [the city] to conclude that ... nude dancing was likely to produce the[se] secondary effects." Id. at 296-97, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Justice Scalia wrote a separate opinion, joined by Justice Thomas, concurring in the judgment. They agreed that the ordinance should be upheld, "not because it survives some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny [i.e., O'Brien], but because, as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Id. at 307-08, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment) (quotation marks omitted). Justice Souter concurred in part and dissented in part. He agreed with the plurality that the nudity ordinance at issue should be analyzed under O'Brien. Id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). But he dissented from the judgment because, unlike the plurality, he concluded that the city failed to carry its evidentiary burden to show that its ordinance furthered a substantial government interest. Id. at 313-17, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Justice Stevens also wrote a dissenting opinion, joined by Justice Ginsburg.

For our purposes, a majority of the Court-the four-Justice plurality along with Justice Souter-held that nudity ordinances that are designed to combat the secondary effects associated with nude dancing are analyzed under the O'Brien framework. See id. at 289-91, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). As for the Court's judgment that the ordinance at issue was constitutional-supported by the plurality and by Justices Scalia and Thomas's concurrence in the judgment-no rationale explaining that result gained the support of a majority of the Court. "When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds." Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977) (quotation marks omitted). In Pap's A.M., the plurality upheld the ordinance on the rationale that it survived First Amendment scrutiny under the O'Brien framework, and although the votes of Justices Scalia and Thomas were necessary for the judgment, their grounds for concurring in the judgment were far broader than the plurality's, namely, that the First Amendment did not apply "at all." See Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 307-08, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment). As such, the plurality's holding with respect to the application of O'Brien is the narrowest ground supporting the judgment in Pap's A.M. and, therefore, represents the holding of that case under Marks. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1261-62; accord Heideman v. S. Salt Lake City, 348 F.3d 1182, 1198 (10th Cir.2003); SOB, Inc. v. County of Benton, 317 F.3d 856, 862 n. 1 (8th Cir.2003); Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 719 (7th Cir.2003).

20 Alameda Books addressed the constitutionality of a zoning ordinance under the Renton framework, rather than a public nudity ordinance under the O'Brien framework. We have explained, however, that the third step of the Renton analysis, which asks whether an ordinance "is designed to serve" a substantial government interest, is "virtually indistinguishable" from the second prong of the O'Brien test, which asks whether an ordinance "furthers" a substantial government interest. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1264-65. Therefore, although we are addressing the constitutionality of the City's nudity ordinances under O'Brien, our analysis also relies on cases that addressed the constitutionality of zoning ordinances under Renton.

There was no majority opinion in Alameda Books. Justice O'Connor wrote a plurality opinion, joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas, that applied Renton and concluded that the zoning ordinance at issue was constitutional. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 429-43, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Justice Kennedy wrote a separate opinion concurring in the judgment. He agreed with the plurality that the zoning ordinance at issue should be analyzed under Renton, but he concurred in the judgment because he believed that "the plurality's application of Renton might constitute a subtle expansion, with which [he did] not concur." Id. at 445, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment). Justice Souter dissented, and his opinion was joined by Justices Stevens, Ginsburg, and, in part, Breyer. Id. at 453-66, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Souter, J., dissenting). Because Justice Kennedy concurred in the judgment in Alameda Books on the narrowest grounds, his opinion represents the Supreme Court's holding in that case under Marks. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1264; accord SOB, Inc., 317 F.3d at 862 n. 1; Ben's Bar, Inc., 316 F.3d at 722.

[8] As for whether an ordinance "furthers" this interest, a city bears the initial burden of producing evidence that it relied upon to reach the conclusion that the ordinance furthers the city's interest in reducing secondary effects. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1269. To that end, a city need not "conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925); see also id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) ("[A] municipality may rely on any evidence that is reasonably believed to be relevant for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." (quotation marks omitted)); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (quoting Renton 's "reasonably believed to be relevant" language). Although a municipality "must rely on at least some pre-enactment evidence," such evidence can consist of "a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion." Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1268; see, e.g., Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 300, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (finding sufficient that "the city council relied on this Court's opinions detailing the harmful secondary effects caused by [adult] establishments ..., as well as on its own experiences"); Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) [21] (permitting a municipality to rely on prior judicial opinions); Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (holding that the city was entitled to rely on the experiences of other cities and on a judicial opinion).

21 Just as in Alameda Books and Pap's A.M., a majority of the Court in Barnes did not support a single rationale explaining the result. The plurality opinion written by Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices O'Connor and Kennedy, upheld the regulation under the O'Brien framework. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 569-72, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion). Relevant here, the plurality found O'Brien 's second prong satisfied by evidence that the regulation at issue "furthers a substantial government interest in protecting order and morality," which the plurality considered to be an interest "unrelated to the suppression of free expression." Id. at 569-70, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Justice Scalia concurred in the judgment because, in his view, a general public nudity prohibition "is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment). Justice Souter also concurred in the judgment. Unlike Justice Scalia, he agreed with the plurality that the regulation should be analyzed under O'Brien. But Justice Souter "[wrote] separately to rest [his] concurrence in the judgment, not on the possible sufficiency of society's moral views to justify the limitations at issue, but on the State's substantial interest in combating the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments." Id. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment). As we have explained, "[b]ecause Justice Souter provided the narrowest grounds for the judgment of the Court in Barnes, his concurrence constitutes the holding of that case" under Marks. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1260; accord Heideman, 348 F.3d at 1197-98.

Once a city has provided evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to its rationale for enacting the ordinance, plaintiffs must be given the opportunity to "cast direct doubt on this rationale," either by demonstrating that the city's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the city's factual findings. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1265 (quoting 876 Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion)); see, e.g., Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (rejecting claim when plaintiff "never challenged the city council's findings or cast any specific doubt on the validity of those findings"). "If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (citing Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion)); see also Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1269.

Although the burden lies with the municipality, a court "should be careful not to substitute its own judgment for that of the [municipality,]" and the municipality's "legislative judgment should be upheld provided that [it] can show that its judgment is still supported by credible evidence, upon which [it] reasonably relies." Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1273.

[9] Here, the City of Daytona Beach plainly carried its initial burden to show that the three challenged nudity ordinances furthered its interest in reducing the negative secondary effects associated with adult theaters. The City has produced a substantial body of evidence that it reasonably believed to be relevant to combating those problems. Ordinance 81-334 prohibits nudity and sexual conduct in establishments that serve alcohol. As the Ordinance itself says, the City's rationale was to reduce the negative secondary effects associated with adult theaters:

> It is hereby found that the acts prohibited in [this ordinance] encourage the conduct of prostitution, attempted rape, rape, murder, and assaults on police officers in and around establishments dealing in alcoholic beverages, that actual and simulated nudity and sexual conduct and the depiction thereof coupled with alcohol in public places begets undesirable behavior, that sexual, lewd, lascivious, and salacious conduct among patrons and employees within establishments dealing in alcoholic beverages results in violation of law and dangers to the health, safety and welfare of the public....

Ordinance 81-334 § 2. To support this rationale, Ordinance 81-334 cites two Supreme Court decisions, New York State Liquor Authority v. Bellanca, 452 U.S. 714, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 (1981) (per curiam), and California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), both of which upheld prohibitions on nude dancing in establishments that serve alcohol. See Bellanca, 452 U.S. at 718, 101 S.Ct. 2599 (upholding statute where the legislature had found that "[c]ommon sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior"); LaRue, 409 U.S. at 118-19, 93 S.Ct. 390 ("The ... conclusion ... that certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur at premises that have licenses was not an irrational one.").

Although the City's reliance on these cases may be sufficient to carry the City's initial burden, see Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296-97, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (suggesting that a city can carry its initial burden by relying solely on relevant Supreme Court cases), the legislative history of Ordinance 81-334 shows that the City also relied on its own experiences to support its rationale. That legislative history includes: a document describing the difficulties faced by law enforcement in arresting and successfully prosecuting crimes relating to prostitution and pornography and listing arrests for prostitution and other crimes that occurred in or near many Daytona 877 Beach adult businesses; a short memorandum written by the City's police chief that provides "a partial list of situations, offenses and incidents which have occurred within the areas of topless bar establishments .... [that] can be substantiated by police reports and testimony of various police officers"; police dispatch records of calls for service ("CAD data"[22]) from areas around adult businesses from November 1980 to July 1981, which were attached to the police chief's memorandum; police reports of eighty-three prostitution arrests; police reports of seven arrests for assault and battery of a police officer in or near an adult theater; and the minutes of a public hearing summarizing local business owners' firsthand accounts of criminal activity in and around adult businesses.

22 "CAD" stands for Computer Automated Dispatch.

This legislative history supporting the enactment of Ordinance 81-334 is more than sufficient to carry the City's initial burden under O'Brien 's second prong. See, e.g., Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 452, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (concluding that the city carried its initial burden with "a single study and common experience"); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 297-98, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (holding that the city's legislative findings were sufficient because "city council members, familiar with [the city's] commercial downtown ..., are the individuals who would likely have had firsthand knowledge of what took place at and around nude dancing establishments"); see also Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1269-70.

As for Ordinances 02-496 and 03-375, the City likewise carried its initial burden of proof. Ordinance 02-496 was enacted as a general public nudity ordinance "to protect and preserve the health, safety and welfare" of the City's residents. Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 62-181(a), enacted by Ordinance 02-496 § 14. The Ordinance sets forth the following findings: "The appearance of persons in the nude in public places ... increases incidents of lewd and lascivious behavior, prostitution, sexual assaults and batteries, attracts other criminal activity to the community, encourages degradation of women, and facilitates other activities which break down family structures and values." Ordinance 02-496 § 5. To support these findings, the City relied on, among other things, newspaper articles describing incidents of public nudity and other criminal activity during Spring Break and Black College Reunion,[23] narrative reports by undercover detectives describing instances of sexual conduct, nudity, and violations of Ordinance 81-334 by 878 dancers at adult theaters,[24] and the Supreme Court's decisions in Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, and Barnes, 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504. As with Ordinance 81-334, the pre-enactment evidence for Ordinance 02-496 is sufficient for the City to carry its initial burden under O'Brien's second prong.

23 See Henry Frederick, Police Chief: Spring Break, BCR Hurt Family Tourism, Daytona Beach News-Journal, Apr. 16, 2002 (" 'Youth-oriented street festivals like BCR and Spring Break keep family tourism away.' "); Anne Geggis, Barter on the Beach: Beads for Breasts, Daytona Beach News-Journal, Mar. 24, 2002 ("Daytona Beach police confirm they've been seeing more than usual this year-and issuing more $104 tickets for exposure of female breasts than at previous Spring Breaks.... 'Even the chief this (past) weekend witnessed it and moved to make an arrest of a mother and daughter on Atlantic Avenue,' says [a] spokesman for the Daytona Beach police." ... "Some are concerned the atmosphere is ripe for an incident like the New York City 'wilding' of 2000 during which women's clothes were torn off their bodies."); Audrey Parente, BCR "Shocking" for Pennsylvania Sisters, Daytona Beach News-Journal, Apr. 15, 2002, at 6A (" 'I saw guys exposing themselves,' Miller said. Schubert said she saw '... women in small clothes-thongs and very exposing bras....' Worse than the exposure, she said she saw drug use and drug sales. 'I saw a young man in a car in front of me smoking a joint and passing it from car to car. They were walking around on the road.' ").

24 For example, on March 8, 2002, several undercover investigators went to Lollipop's "to conduct a covert inspection of the activities" there:

> During this inspection, alcoholic beverages were being sold and consumed.... This writer observed bare breasted dancers performing "lap" dances involving simulated intercourse by the female dancer [who placed] her buttocks in the lap of the patron and began to manipulate her hips back and forth and up and down. While engaged in the previous activities, dancers would rub their bare breasts in the faces of the patrons and allow the patrons to lick and suck the breasts.... This writer observed every dancer to be in violation of the exposed breasts ordinance while alcohol was being served and consumed.

Daytona Beach Police Department, Florida Offense/Incident Report No. 0203103, at 1-2 (Mar. 11, 2002).

Ordinance 03-375 amended Ordinance 02-496 to allow erotic dancers to wear G-strings and pasties within an adult theater located more than 500 feet from an establishment that serves alcohol, but Ordinance 02-496's somewhat more restrictive clothing requirements[25] remain applicable within 500 feet of such an establishment. Daytona Beach, Fla., Code § 62-184(b), enacted by Ordinance 03-375 § 9. In support of Ordinance 03-375, the City relied on Mr. Langston's and Mr. Smith's testimony from Function Junction, Inc., 705 F.Supp. 544.[26] As we have noted, Langston testified that live nude and seminude entertainment businesses "promote and perpetuate urban decay" and that "adult businesses have impacted on crime in the area surrounding Daytona Beach." Id. at 547. Smith, who as an assistant state attorney had prosecuted drug and prostitution offenses in Daytona Beach, concurred that "there were more drug and prostitution offenses in topless bars than in other bars." Id. at 548.

25 See supra note 12.

26 Although Function Junction was a challenge to the City's zoning ordinances, 705 F.Supp. at 545, the City relied on testimony from that case in support of Ordinance 03-375.

The City also relied on several controlled studies conducted by Dr. William George about the relationship between drinking alcohol and sexual conduct. Thus, for example, one study found that exposure to erotica led male subjects to drink more alcohol than did exposure to non-erotic materials.[27] Another study found that young men who believed they had consumed alcohol-regardless of whether they had in fact done so-displayed greater interest in viewing violent and/or erotic images and reported increased sexual arousal than young men who believed they had not consumed alcohol.[28] Still another study found that study participants perceived a woman they believed had consumed alcohol as being "significantly more aggressive, impaired, sexually available, and as significantly more likely to engage in foreplay and intercourse" than a woman whom study participants believed had not consumed alcohol.[29] 879 Finally, Ordinance 03-375 expressly incorporates all of the evidence that the City previously had relied on to support Ordinances 81-334 and 02-496. The City's pre-enactment evidence for Ordinance 03-375 is sufficient to carry the City's initial burden under O'Brien's second prong.

27 William H. George et al., The Effects of Erotica Exposure on Drinking, 1 Annals Sex Res. 79 (1988).

28 William H. George & G. Alan Marlatt, The Effects of Alcohol and Anger on Interest in Violence, Erotica, and Deviance, 95 J. Abnormal Psych. 150 (1986).

29 William H. George et al., Perceptions of Postdrinking Female Sexuality: Effects of Gender, Beverage Choice, and Drink Payment, 1988 J. Applied Soc. Psych. 1295, 1295.

Because the City carried its initial burden, the district court properly gave Lollipop's the opportunity to "cast direct doubt" on the City's rationale, either by demonstrating that the City's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the City's factual findings. See Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion); Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1265; see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). To this end, as we have noted, two expert witnesses testified that the City's pre-enactment evidence consisted of "shoddy," "meaningless," and "unreliable" data and that its reasoning was equally "shoddy." The experts explained that the City provided no empirical data to support the conclusion that prostitution and other crimes occurred more frequently in and around adult theaters than elsewhere, and that the CAD data and police reports lacked reliability because they did not cover all of the areas where adult theaters are located in Daytona Beach and contained no comparison data from other areas of the City against which the incidents occurring in and around adult theaters could be measured. Similarly, Lollipop's experts said that the narrative reports of undercover law enforcement and the testimony from Function Junction about urban blight and crime being found around adult theaters lacked comparative data, did not cover a sufficient period of time to rule out momentary fluctuations, and were merely the result of stepped-up law enforcement. (Experts' Report 62-63, 161-63.) The experts also observed that Dr. George's studies were conducted in controlled laboratory settings, and, therefore, the experts opined, the studies' conclusions could not be generalized to the "real world situation of alcoholic beverage consumption in an adult nightclub that features topless or nude entertainment." (Id. at 167-68.)

To buttress their critique of the City's evidence, Lollipop's experts conducted two empirical studies. The first study analyzed CAD data provided by the City for the forty-four months preceding Ordinance 81-334's enactment "to examine the relationship between the presence of adult cabarets in areas and the rates of crime in those areas." (Id. at 3.) The experts compared CAD data from areas that had adult theaters to control areas that did not and "found no statistically significant differences in overall rates of crime between study and control areas." (Id. at 4.) They concluded that their empirical study "cast grave doubt on the findings of the City Commission that the combination of nude (topless) dancing and alcohol increase[s] 'rape, attempted rape, murder, and assaults on police officers.' " (Id. at 2 (quoting Ordinance 81-334 § 2).)

The second empirical study focused on the City's rationale for Ordinances 02-496 and 03-375 and examined CAD data from March 1999 to April 2003. This study compared the presence of an adult theater to other "demographic variables previously used by criminologists and found to be related to criminal activity, such as a local area's population, age structure (especially the presence of young adults)," "race/ethnic composition," "housing vacancies," "female-headed households," and "the number of alcohol retail sale establishments." (Id. at 56; see also id. at 186.) Based on their statistical analysis, Lollipop's experts concluded that these other variables "were statistically strongly related to crime events," whereas the presence of an adult 880 theater "accounted for an insubstantial amount" of crime in the relevant area. (Id. at 56 (emphasis omitted); see also id. at 186-87.) The experts concluded that only 1-3.5% of the criminal activity within a 1000-foot radius of adult theaters could be attributed to the theaters, and that adult theaters accounted for zero or near-zero percent of the sex crime activity in their near vicinity. (Id. at 57.)

The district court agreed with Lollipop's experts that the City's pre-enactment evidence for all three nudity ordinances was "shoddy" and "meaningless." It concluded that Lollipop's had succeeded in casting direct doubt on the City's rationale for each ordinance and declared all three nudity ordinances unconstitutional. The district court said that Lollipop's experts' "scientific" studies cast direct doubt on the City's "anecdotal" evidence primarily because the court read the Supreme Court's decision in Alameda Books and our opinion in Peek-A-Boo Lounge to have "raised the bar somewhat" on Renton 's "reasonably believed to be relevant" standard. (Dist. Ct. Am. Order 9-10.)

In Alameda Books, the plurality explained the Renton standard this way:

> In Renton, we specifically refused to set such a high bar for municipalities that want to address merely the secondary effects of protected speech. We held that a municipality may rely on any evidence that is "reasonably believed to be relevant" for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest.

Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925). But the plurality then warned: "This is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance." Id. Although Justice Kennedy's opinion, not the plurality, is the holding in Alameda Books, we quoted the plurality's "shoddy data" and "fairly supports" language several times in Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1262-63, 1265, 1266, 1269.

We do not agree, however, with Lollipop's claim that either Alameda Books or Peek-A-Boo Lounge raises the evidentiary bar or requires a city to justify its ordinances with empirical evidence or scientific studies. Justice Kennedy's Alameda Books concurrence, which all parties agree states the holding of that case under the rationale explained in Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977), emphasized that the evidentiary standard announced in Renton remained sound:

> [W]e have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required. "The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses."

Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis added)). [30]

30 Even if the plurality had constituted the actual holding in Alameda Books, the plurality also reaffirmed Renton 's continued validity and explicitly refused to raise cities' evidentiary burden. To the contrary, the plurality criticized Justice Souter's dissent for "rais [ing] the evidentiary bar" by "ask[ing] the city to demonstrate, not merely by appeal to common sense, but also with empirical data, that its ordinance will successfully lower crime." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439-41, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (emphasis added). The plurality explicitly rejected this requirement because it "would go too far in undermining our settled position that municipalities must be given a 'reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions' to address the secondary effects of protected speech." Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

881 Our opinion in Peek-A-Boo Lounge is consistent with Justice Kennedy's concurrence in Alameda Books and with Renton. There, a panel of this Court held that "[t]o satisfy Renton, any evidence 'reasonably believed to be relevant'-including a municipality's own findings, evidence gathered by other localities, or evidence described in a judicial opinion-may form an adequate predicate to the adoption of a secondary effects ordinance," Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1268, and we remanded that case with specific instructions to uphold the ordinance "provided that the County['s] ... judgment is still supported by credible evidence, upon which [it] reasonably relies," id. at 1273 (emphasis added).

Here, Lollipop's argument that the City's evidence is flawed because it consists of "anecdotal" accounts rather than "empirical" studies essentially asks this Court to hold today that the City's reliance on anything but empirical studies based on scientific methods is unreasonable. This was not the law before Alameda Books, and it is not the law now. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) (reiterating that a city need not "conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities" (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925)); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 300, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (criticizing the dissent for "ignor[ing] Erie's actual experience and instead requir[ing] ... an empirical analysis"). Rather, the City of Daytona Beach could reasonably rely upon "[c]ommon sense," see Bellanca, 452 U.S. at 718, 101 S.Ct. 2599, "its own experiences," see Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 300, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion), "the experiences of ... other cities," Renton, 475 U.S. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925, or city officials' local knowledge, see Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451-52, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) ("The Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge ...." (citations omitted)); see also Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 297-98, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion).

To be sure, as the Alameda Books plurality admonished, the City cannot "get away with shoddy data or reasoning," and its evidence must "fairly support" its rationale. See 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). But this is simply another way of saying that the City's reliance on evidence supporting its rationale must be reasonable. Anecdotal evidence is not "shoddy" per se. At most, Lollipop's experts' studies suggest that the City could have reached a different conclusion during its legislative process about the relationship between adult theaters and negative secondary effects. But demonstrating the possibility of such an alternative does not necessarily mean that the City was barred from reaching other reasonable and different conclusions. See G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639 (7th Cir.2003) ("Although this evidence shows that the [town] might have reached a different and equally reasonable conclusion regarding the relationship between adverse secondary effects and sexually oriented businesses, it is not sufficient to vitiate the result reached in the [town's] legislative process."); see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437, 122 S.Ct. 1728 882 (plurality opinion) (noting that a city "does not bear the burden of providing evidence that rules out every theory ... that is inconsistent with its own").

Our review is designed to determine whether the City's rationale was a reasonable one, and even if Lollipop's demonstrates that another conclusion was also reasonable, we cannot simply substitute our own judgment for the City's. See Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1273; see also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 583, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) ("At least as to the regulation of expressive conduct, '[w]e decline to void [a statute] essentially on the ground that it is unwise legislation ....' " (quoting O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 384, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (alterations in original))); Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("It is not our function to appraise the wisdom of [the city's] decision to [regulate] adult theaters ...." (second alteration added and quotation marks omitted)); cf. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) ("[C]ourts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners.").

The City of Daytona Beach relied on, among other things, the Supreme Court's decisions in Bellanca, LaRue, Barnes, and Pap's A.M.; numerous police reports of criminal activity-including prostitution and assaults on police officers-in and around adult theaters; undercover police investigations that revealed numerous violations of City ordinances by adult theaters; the City's police chief's documentation of criminal activity in and around adult theaters; CAD data showing calls-for-service to police dispatchers from areas near adult theaters; extensive testimony taken in Function Junction, 705 F.Supp. at 547-48; studies conducted by Boston and Detroit showing that adult businesses tend to increase urban blight; studies of urban blight and decay in Daytona Beach; controlled laboratory studies showing a correlation between alcohol and sexual conduct; anecdotal accounts from local business owners about increased crime in and around adult theaters; and newspaper articles describing increases in problems related to nudity and alcohol surrounding events such as Spring Break and Black College Reunion. Because Lollipop's has failed to cast direct doubt on the aggregation of evidence that the City reasonably relied upon when enacting the challenged ordinances, we hold that the ordinances further a substantial government interest under O'Brien.

Moreover, a close examination of Lollipop's experts' studies calls into question their stated conclusion that they "cast grave doubt" on the City's evidence that adult theaters increase crime, and, equally important, the studies do not even purport to address the City's evidence that adult theaters tend more generally to perpetuate urban blight and decay. First, one underlying methodological problem with both studies suggests that they cast little or no doubt on the City's evidence that nudity in establishments that serve alcohol encourages "prostitution, ... undesirable behavior ..., [and] sexual, lewd, lascivious, and salacious conduct among patrons and employees ... in violation of law and [en]dangers ... the health, safety and welfare of the public." See Ordinance 81-334 § 2. The experts' studies are based solely on CAD data, which, in lay terms, is essentially 911 emergency call data. Relying on such data to study crime rates is problematic, however, because many crimes do not result in calls to 911, and, therefore, do not have corresponding records in the City's CAD data. [31] This is especially true 883 for crimes, such as lewdness [32] and prostitution, that the City sought to reduce by enacting the challenged ordinances. See Ordinance 02-496 § 5 (seeking to reduce "lewd and lascivious behavior, prostitution, sexual assaults and batteries, ... other criminal activity, [and the] degradation of women"); Ordinance 81-334 § 2 (seeking to reduce "prostitution, ... undesirable behavior, ... [and illegal] sexual, lewd, lascivious, and salacious conduct among patrons and employees" of adult theaters); see also Ordinance 03-375 § 4 (relying on legislative record for Ordinances 81-334 and 02-496).

31 See Richard McCleary & James W. Meeker, Do Peep Shows "Cause" Crime? A Response to Linz, Paul, and Yao, 43 J. Sex Res. 194, 196 ("Modern criminologists do not use CFSs [i.e., calls for service or CAD data,] to measure crime or crime risk. In 2000-2004, the official journals of the two national criminology professional associations, Criminology and Justice Quarterly, published 245 articles. Of the 100 that analyzed a crime-related statistic, ... [only] two analyzed CFSs, but even in these two cases, CFSs were not used to measure crime or crime risk.").

32 Under Florida law, lewdness is at least a second-degree misdemeanor. See Fla. Stat. § 796.07.

Such crimes are often "victimless," in the sense that all of those involved are willing participants, and, therefore, they rarely result in calls to 911. College students on Spring Break are unlikely to call 911 after a wild night out on the town despite having participated in exactly the sort of activity that the City's nudity ordinances were enacted to reduce. Likewise, an encounter between a prostitute and a "john" rarely leads to a 911 call. By contrast, the City's "anecdotal" evidence may be a more accurate assessment of such crimes because it is not based on a data set that undercounts the incidents of such "victimless" crimes. Cf. World Wide Video of Wash., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186, 1195-96 (9th Cir.2004) ("Anecdotal evidence and reported experience can be as telling as statistical data and can serve as a legitimate basis for finding negative secondary effects." (citation and alteration omitted)). [33]

33 We also note that at least three other circuits have rejected, for similar reasons, attempts by plaintiffs to use studies based on CAD data to cast direct doubt on an ordinance that the municipality supported with evidence of the sort relied upon by the City of Daytona Beach here. See Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 395 F.3d 1114, 1126-27 (9th Cir.2005); G.M. Enters., Inc., 350 F.3d at 639; SOB, Inc., 317 F.3d at 863 & n. 2. Interestingly, Daniel Linz, one of the experts hired by Lollipop's, also co-authored the studies found to be insufficient in two of these cases. See G.M. Enters., Inc., 350 F.3d at 635-36, 639; SOB, Inc., 317 F.3d at 863.

A second problem with Lollipop's experts' studies is that, even if the underlying CAD data fully reflected all of the conduct that Daytona Beach sought to reduce, the experts appear to draw conclusions that overstate the underlying data. For example, the study that focuses on Ordinance 81-334 concludes that "crimes against persons, crimes against property, and sex crimes, including both rape and prostitution[,] are not more common in areas with adult businesses than they are in similar control areas." (Experts' Report 2.) But the experts' own underlying data suggests otherwise-for three of the six pairs of study and control areas that the experts examined, "the study areas [i.e., areas with adult theaters,] do show significantly higher rates of crime than the control areas." (Id. at 29-30 (emphasis added).)

The experts attempt to explain away this result by pointing to the other three pairs-two show no "significant" difference between study and control areas, and one shows a significantly higher crime rate in the control area than the study area. The 884 experts assert, without much discussion, that "[t]his mixed pattern" shows that "factors other than the presence of a nude cabaret are affecting rates of crime." (Id. at 30.) The experts are no doubt correct that factors other than the presence of adult theaters affect crime rates in Daytona Beach; crime is plainly caused by many factors. But that does little to undermine the City's conclusion that adult theaters also affect crime rates, especially when the experts' own analysis shows a statistically significant correlation between adult theaters and increased crime in half of the areas in the study. [34]

34 In addition to crimes against persons, crimes against property, and sex crimes, the study that focused on Ordinance 81-334 also analyzed "miscellaneous incidents that share in common that they involve violations of social norms ...., includ[ing] drunkenness, disorderly conduct, drug offenses, liquor law violations, and weapons complaints." (Experts' Report 27.) The study found a statistically significant increase in these so-called "norm violations" in areas with adult theaters compared to control areas, (id. at 33-34), which could be read to support part of the City's rationale for Ordinance 81-334. See Ordinance 81-334 § 2 (seeking to reduce "undesirable behavior" and "dangers to the health, safety and welfare of the public"). Similarly, the study that focused on Ordinance 02-496 found a statistically significant increase in drug related offenses in areas with adult theaters compared to control areas. (Experts' Report 80, 105 tbl.10.)

Finally, both studies focus only on criminal activity and do not even purport to address the connection between adult theaters and urban blight. Ordinance 03-375, which amended Ordinance 02-496, was supported by testimony from Function Junction that adult theaters promote and perpetuate urban blight, which in Daytona Beach was characterized by "a significant percentage of deteriorating structures; a large number of small ... lots, which did not allow cars; a notable parking problem; a high incidence of crime, particularly, on the beachside; and a large percentage of antiquated, underground utility systems, such as drainage, water and sewer systems." 705 F.Supp. at 547. Lollipop's experts' studies examine only one of these conditions-high crime rates-and, notably, do not address at all the City's evidence that adult theaters tend to perpetuate these other features of urban blight. Although Lollipop's experts argue that the testimony provided in Function Junction was based on unreliable data and methodologically unsound analysis, we repeat that the City's reliance on such evidence need only have been reasonable, and it was.

In short, the CAD data relied on by both studies may substantially undercount incidents of many of the types of crime that the City sought to reduce; the data that the studies did analyze show some statistically significant correlations between adult theaters and increased criminal activity; and the studies completely fail to address evidence of increased urban blight and decay that the City reasonably relied on when enacting Ordinance 03-375. Thus, Lollipop's has failed to cast direct doubt on all of the evidence that the City reasonably relied on when enacting the challenged ordinances. See Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1268 (noting that "the government must rely on at least some pre-enactment evidence" (emphasis in original)); Wise Enters., Inc. v. Unified Gov't of Athens-Clarke County, 217 F.3d 1360, 1364 (11th Cir.2000) (noting that a municipality "must have some factual basis" for its rationale (emphasis in original) (quotation marks omitted)); see also World Wide Video, 368 F.3d at 1195 (explaining that a city needs only "some" evidence to support its ordinances); Baby Dolls Topless Saloons, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 295 F.3d 471, 481 (5th Cir.2002) ("Renton teaches us that the government must produce some evidence 885 of adverse secondary effects ...." (emphasis in original) (citation omitted)). Accordingly, we hold that Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375 further a substantial government interest under O'Brien. [35]

35 Inasmuch as the district court concluded that Lollipop's had cast direct doubt on the City's evidence, it allowed the City to present post-enactment evidence in an effort to renew support for a theory justifying its ordinances. But because we have concluded that Lollipop's failed to cast direct doubt on the City's evidence, there is no need to consider the City's post-enactment evidence. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) ("If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on [the city's] rationale ..., the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton.").

B. Narrow Tailoring

Under the fourth prong of the O'Brien test, an ordinance that imposes a reasonable time, place, or manner restriction on nudity must be "no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest." Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion). The Supreme Court has made clear, however, that O'Brien does not impose strict scrutiny's familiar "least restrictive means" requirement:

> Lest any confusion on the point remain, we reaffirm today that a regulation of the time, place, or manner of protected speech must be narrowly tailored to serve the government's legitimate, content-neutral interests but that it need not be the least restrictive or least intrusive means of doing so. Rather, the requirement of narrow tailoring is satisfied "so long as the ... regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation."

Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798-99, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (footnote and citation omitted) (alteration in original); see also Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301-02, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (noting that "least restrictive means analysis is not required" under O'Brien).

Here, the combined effect of Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375 is that at least G-strings and pasties are required in all adult theaters regardless of location, and that Ordinance 02-496's slightly more modest clothing requirements apply at establishments that either serve alcohol or are located within 500 feet of an establishment that serves alcohol. Lollipop's argues that requiring more than G-strings and pasties at establishments that serve alcohol imposes a greater restriction than is necessary to further the City's substantial interest in reducing negative secondary effects:

> Appellants are claiming, at a minimum, that adults have a right to perform in pasties and G-strings where alcohol is served. Appellants further argue that the City's ordinances are unduly restrictive because they should allow pasties and G-strings at more locations. Appellants' claim should be understood in the broadest terms: government simply has no business telling adults what they can and cannot wear beyond a simple prohibition against nudity.

(Appellants'/Cross Appellees' Resp. & Reply Br. 22-23 (emphasis in original).)

We break no new ground in rejecting Lollipop's argument. It is well-established that a nudity ordinance that imposes a minimum requirement of G-strings and pasties is narrowly tailored under O'Brien. See Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) ("The requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey 886 the dancer's erotic message."); Barnes, 501 U.S. at 587, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment) ("Pasties and a G-string moderate the expression to some degree, to be sure, but only to a degree. Dropping the final stitch is prohibited, but the limitation is minor when measured against the dancer's remaining capacity and opportunity to express the erotic message."); id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion) ("Indiana's requirement that the dancers wear at least pasties and G-strings is modest, and the bare minimum necessary to achieve the State's purpose."); cf. Peek-A-Boo Lounge, 337 F.3d at 1274 (suggesting that the ordinance at issue, which did not leave erotic dancers free to perform wearing G-strings and pasties in any location in the county, was not narrowly tailored).

So too, the First Amendment does not prevent a city from limiting the venues where dancers may communicate their erotic message. An ordinance that "does not prohibit all nude dancing, but only restricts nude dancing in those locations where the unwanted secondary effects arise," is narrowly tailored. Wise Enters., 217 F.3d at 1365. And an ordinance that defines those locations by reference to the presence of establishments that serve alcohol does not unduly restrict the ability to communicate an erotic message. See Grand Faloon Tavern, Inc. v. Wicker, 670 F.2d 943, 948 (11th Cir.1982) ("[N]ude entertainment necessarily involves a substantial degree of conduct, and ... any artistic or communicative elements present in such conduct are not of a kind whose content or effectiveness is dependent upon being conveyed where alcoholic beverages are served."). Thus, both the requirement that dancers wear G-strings and pasties in all adult theaters, and the additional requirement of clothing somewhat more modest [36] within 500 feet of establishments that serve alcohol, are narrowly tailored under O'Brien.

36 Lollipop's characterizes the additional required clothing as a "modest bikini," (Appellant's Initial Br. 46), or a "full bathing suit [ ]" (Appellant's Reply Br. 23). The City disputes this characterization, observing that "[a] 'modest bikini' certainly does not expose half of the lower female breast and two thirds of the buttocks." (Appellee's Initial Br. 52-53.) Regardless of whether the term "modest" accurately describes Ordinance 03-375's precise requirements, which are quoted above, see supra note 12, the City of Daytona Beach could impose those requirements within 500 feet of establishments that serve alcohol.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, we hold that all of the City's ordinances challenged in this lawsuit are constitutional. We AFFIRM the district court's decision upholding the City's zoning ordinances; we REVERSE the district court's decision striking down Ordinances 81-334, 02-496, and 03-375; and we REMAND for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, and REMANDED.

All Citations

490 F.3d 860, 20 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 778

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Called into Doubt by Predator Intern., Inc. v. Gamo Outdoor USA, Inc., D.Colo., October 22, 2009

348 F.3d 1182
United States Court of Appeals,
Tenth Circuit.

Flona M. HEIDEMAN; Mariea M. Berryman; Crystal Dieringer; Heather R. Liljenquist; Jennifer Goff; Amber Blanke; Stacy Lamb; Bobbie Gleason; Amy Woods; Janeen Bickerstaff, Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
SOUTH SALT LAKE CITY, A Utah Municipal Corporation, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 02–4030.
|
Nov. 4, 2003.

Dancers brought action raising First Amendment challenge to ordinance banning nudity within sexually oriented businesses. The United States District Court for the District of Utah, Bruce S. Jenkins, J., denied their application for preliminary injunctive relief against enforcement of ordinance, and they appealed. The Court of Appeals, McConnell, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance was not subject to strict scrutiny under First Amendment, and (2) dancers failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits of their First Amendment challenge.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (12)

[1] Federal Courts
Preliminary injunction;temporary restraining order

District court's decision to deny a preliminary injunction is reviewed for abuse of discretion; court's factual findings are examined for clear error and its legal determinations are reviewed de novo. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Injunction
Extraordinary or unusual nature of remedy

Injunction
Entitlement to Relief

Preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy, and it should not be issued unless the movant's right to relief is clear and unequivocal. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

45 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Injunction
Evidence

Injunction
Hearing procedure

Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply to preliminary injunction hearings. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

22 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Injunction
Irreparable injury

To constitute irreparable harm warranting preliminary injunction, an injury must be certain, great, actual and not theoretical. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

200 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Injunction
Irreparable injury

Injunction
Recovery of damages

Simple economic loss usually does not, in and of itself, constitute irreparable harm warranting preliminary injunction since such losses are compensable by monetary damages. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

68 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Civil Rights
Preliminary Injunction

Requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings while challenging ordinance banning nudity within sexually oriented businesses was sufficient loss of First Amendment freedom to constitute irreparable harm for purposes of their application for preliminary injunctive relief against enforcement of ordinance during the pendency of the litigation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

88 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Civil Rights
Preliminary Injunction

Loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, constitutes irreparable injury for purposes of application for preliminary injunctive relief. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

37 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Injunction
Injunctions Against Enforcement of Laws and Regulations

Ability of a city to enact and enforce measures it deems to be in the public interest is an equity to be considered in balancing hardships for purposes of ruling on an application for preliminary injunctive relief against enforcement of ordinance. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 65, 28 U.S.C.A.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality

Ordinance banning nudity within sexually oriented businesses was not subject to strict scrutiny under First Amendment as a "content-based" restriction on speech; prohibition was on a form of conduct, and applied to all "sexually oriented businesses," including establishments such as "adult motels" and "adult novelty stores," which were not engaged in expressive activity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

Where expressive activities are not singled out for special regulation, O'Brien's intermediate scrutiny applies in determining validity of alleged restriction on First Amendment freedom of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Civil Rights
Preliminary Injunction

Dancers failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits of their First Amendment challenge to ordinance banning nudity within sexually oriented businesses, and were therefore not entitled to preliminary injunctive relief against enforcement of ordinance during the pendency of the litigation; dancers failed to show that ban did not served a substantial governmental interest, that government interest was not unrelated to the suppression of free expression, and that restriction was greater than essential to the furtherance of the government interest, since requirement that dancers wear "G-strings" and "pasties" had a "de minimis " effect on their ability to communicate their message. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

23 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City did not have to produce new studies and was permitted to rely on the evidentiary foundation in earlier cases in establishing that its ban on nudity within sexually oriented businesses served a substantial governmental interest, and thus did not restrict freedom of speech in violation of First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1184 W. Andrew McCullough, McCullough & Associates, LLC, Midvale, UT, for Plaintiffs–Appellants.

Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Scottsdale, AZ (and David M. Carlson and Janice Frost, South Salt Lake, UT, with him on the briefs), for Defendant–Appellee.

Before LUCERO, HARTZ and McCONNELL, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

McCONNELL, Circuit Judge.

South Salt Lake City is a municipality of some 9,800 people, located immediately south of Utah's capital. The City's main artery, State Street or U.S. Highway 89, was the primary north-south highway in the area prior to construction of Interstate–15. State Street is the locus of a virtually uninterrupted string of gas stations, retail outlets, fast food restaurants, pawn shops, used car dealerships, old-fashioned drive-up motels, and the like; much of the City is occupied by light industry and the remaining area by modest single-family residences and apartments. The City's Chamber of Commerce touts the municipality as "Utah's Center of Industry." [1] Almost hidden among the warehouses and workshops of light industrial South Salt Lake City are—or were—three establishments featuring nude dancing.

1 South Salt Lake Chamber of Commerce, at http://www.southsaltlakechamber.com.

The City Council recently enacted an ordinance prohibiting nudity within sexually oriented businesses. South Salt Lake City, Utah, Ordinance No.2001–04 (the "Ordinance") (effective May 7, 2001) (codified as South Salt Lake City, Utah, Code, ch. 5.56 (the "Code")). Under the Ordinance, dancers at the establishments mentioned above may no longer drop the last stitch. Id. § 5.56.3100.

The Plaintiffs–Appellants in this case, female dancers who object to the requirement of wearing "G-strings" and "pasties" during their performances, brought suit to enjoin the enforcement of the Ordinance, and filed a motion for a preliminary injunction in district court.

The district court denied their request for a preliminary injunction, commenting:

> The specific proposition stated by Plaintiffs, that nude dancing is a protected form of expression not subject to any limitation, has not been passed upon by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals. It is this Court's opinion that if and when they consider this proposition, the modest limitations imposed by the ordinance will not be considered a burden on expression of erotic dancing in a sexually oriented business.

Order Upon Pls.' Mot. for Prelim. Inj. and Def.'s Mot. to Dismiss ("Order"), at 2 (Jan. 29, 2002), App. at 191. In response to a question from Plaintiffs' counsel regarding what issues would be open in the litigation on the merits, the district court declined to provide guidance beyond what was said in the ruling on the preliminary injunction.

The district court's reluctance to elaborate the law applicable to nude dancing is understandable. Twice in the past fifteen years, the United States Supreme Court has considered the constitutionality of ordinances banning commercial nude dancing under the Free Speech Clause, and both times the Court produced fractured decisions with no majority opinion and no clear statement of controlling doctrine. 1185 See Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). This is because, as discussed below, it is far from clear how prohibitions of nude dancing "fit" within the conceptual structure of First Amendment law. [2] Despite the theoretical uncertainties, however, the results themselves in these cases have been consistent: the practitioners of nude dancing have lost and the ordinances have been upheld.

2 The best account of the theoretical difficulties may be found in Vincent Blasi, Six Conservatives in Search of the First Amendment: The Revealing Case of Nude Dancing, 33 Wm. & Mary L.Rev. 611 (1992).

In their briefs and arguments in this Court, the Plaintiffs devote much of their attention to issues beyond the propriety of the denial of a preliminary injunction. In particular, they argue that they are entitled to trial on certain of their claims, which the Defendants stoutly deny. The procedural posture of this case, however, is not a direct challenge to the Ordinance or even a motion for summary judgment. It is an appeal from the district court's denial of a preliminary injunction against enforcement of the Ordinance. Our appellate review is limited by this posture. See, e.g., Hawkins v. City & County of Denver, 170 F.3d 1281, 1292 (10th Cir.1999) (emphasizing narrow scope of appellate review of denial of a motion for preliminary injunction); Southwest Voter Reg. Educ. Project v. Shelley, 344 F.3d 914, 917–18 (9th Cir.2003) (en banc) (noting that appellate review of the denial of a preliminary injunction is "limited and deferential"). The proper means for testing whether a trial is required is for one or both parties to move for summary judgment or judgment on the pleadings. No such motion has been made. The issue before us is simply whether the district court abused its discretion in denying a motion for preliminary relief on this record. The answer to that question is no.

Background

Under South Salt Lake City's prior Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance, originally enacted in February, 1991, commercial nude dancing was permitted, subject to regulation and licensing. The three establishments at which Plaintiffs work, or wish to work, provided nude entertainment for more than ten years under this licensing scheme. Around 1999, the City Council became concerned about what are called "negative secondary effects"—such as crime, prostitution, and lowered property values—thought to be associated with sexually oriented businesses. For approximately a year, City officials gathered police reports and studies from around the country regarding the connection between sexually oriented commercial business and these secondary effects.

The Ordinance was amended on January 10, 1996, and, after the studies, again on May 2, 2001. As currently formulated, the Ordinance forbids employees of such businesses[3] to "[a]ppear in a state of nudity before a patron on the premises of a sexually oriented business." Code § 5.56.310, 310(G).[4] The Ordinance also forbids patrons 1186 of these establishments to "[a]ppear in a state of nudity before another person on the premises of a sexually oriented business." Code § 5.56.320, 320(C). The Ordinance continues to permit semi-nude commercial dancing; dancers may perform wearing "pasties" and "G-strings." Plaintiffs maintain that these new restrictions violate their freedom of expression under the First Amendment, as applied to state and local governments through the Fourteenth Amendment.

3 The Code defines a "Sexually oriented business" as "an adult arcade, adult bookstore, adult motion picture theater, adult novelty store, adult theater, adult video store, adult cabaret, and adult motel[,]" each of which is defined in the Code's "Definitions" section. Code § 5.56.050.

4 The Code defines "[n]udity or state of nudity" as "the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, or anal cleft with less than a fully opaque covering, or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple." Code § 5.56.050.

Plaintiffs originally filed this action in the Third Judicial District Court for Salt Lake County, Utah. It was removed to federal district court on May 7, 2001. In their Complaint, filed April 30, 2001, and by motion, Plaintiffs requested a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction against the enforcement of the Ordinance. The City filed a motion to dismiss on the pleadings.

The City argued that the Ordinance is justified by the City's interest in curtailing what it found to be the negative secondary effects of establishments featuring totally nude dancing. The targeted secondary effects the City identified included: venereal disease, prostitution, general poor sanitation, criminality, and offenses against minors, among others. See Preamble to Ordinance; Ordinance, "Purpose and Findings," (1)-(25). The City based its findings and conclusions on a number of sources cited in the Ordinance, including findings incorporated in decisions of the Supreme Court and this Court, as well as numerous other studies and statistics from the City police department and other municipalities.[5]

5 The cases and studies on which the City relied include the following:

City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000); City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Young v. American Mini Theatres, [Inc.], 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); California v. La Rue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972); O'Connor v. City and County of Denver, 894 F.2d 1210 (10th Cir.1990); Z.J. Gifts D–2, L.L.C. v. City of Aurora, 136 F.3d 683 (10th Cir.1998); Dodger's Bar & Grill, Inc. v. Johnson County, 98 F.3d 1262 (10th Cir.1996); Dodger's Bar & Grill, Inc. v. Johnson County Bd. of County Com'rs, 32 F.3d 1436 (10th Cir.1994); American Target Advertising, Inc. v. Giani, 199 F.3d 1241 (10th Cir.2000); MS News Co. v. Casado, 721 F.2d 1281 (10th Cir.1983); Cortese v. Black, 87 F.3d 1327, (10th Cir.1996); Salt Lake City v. Wood, 1999 Utah App. 323, 991 P.2d 595 (Utah Ct.App.1999); Salt Lake City v. Roberts, 7 P.3d 789 (Utah Ct.App.2000); United States v. Freedberg, 724 F.Supp. 851 (D.Utah 1989); reports of the South Salt Lake Police Department; and documents concerning the secondary effects occurring in and around sexually oriented businesses, including, but not limited to, Phoenix, Arizona—1984; Minneapolis, Minnesota—1980; Houston, Texas—1997; Indianapolis, Indiana—1984; Amarillo, Texas; Garden Grove, California—1991; Los Angeles, California—1977; Whittier, California—1978; Austin, Texas—1986; Seattle, Washington—1989; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma—1986; Cleveland, Ohio—; and Dallas, Texas—1997; St. Croix County, Wisconsin—1993; Bellevue, Washington—1998; Newport News, Virginia—1996; New York Times Square study—1994; Phoenix, Arizona—1995–98; and also on findings from the paper entitled "Stripclubs According to Strippers: Exposing Workplace Sexual Violence," by Kelly Holsopple, Program Director, Freedom and Justice Center for Prostitution Resources, Minneapolis, Minnesota, and from "Sexually Oriented Businesses: An Insider's View," by David Sherman, presented to the Michigan House Committee on Ethics and Constitutional Law, Jan. 12, 2000; crime statistics of the City of South Salt Lake for the past seven years; and the Report of the Attorney General's Working Group On The Regulation Of Sexually Oriented Businesses, (June 6, 1989, State of Minnesota). Ordinance, sec. I(B) ("Findings").

1187 The district court held a hearing on January 3, 2002, on the Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunctive relief and the City's motion to dismiss. The only evidence before the district court at the time of the hearing was the Ordinance itself, the preamble of which contained citations to the studies and reports on which the City relied, and affidavits and testimony of four of the Plaintiffs regarding their perceptions of future economic harm that they would suffer absent an injunction. Although the nude dancing establishments, represented by Plaintiffs' counsel, had presented certain contrary studies and evidence to the City Council during its deliberations, Plaintiffs did not submit this or any other evidence contrary to the City's findings to the district court for consideration on their motion for a preliminary injunction.

In denying both motions from the bench, the district court observed:

> I'll deny the motion for a preliminary injunction....
>
> It would appear to me that the modest effort at limitations provided by the ordinance as enacted by South Salt Lake City requiring the use of G strings and pasties in no way in my opinion limits expression. It would appear to me that expression allowed is at the outer limits that counsel has referred to and that the modest requirements set forth in the ordinance as to semi-nude vers[u]s nude is an appropriate exercise of municipal power.
>
> I think that the issue presented, I hate to say the naked proposition but the specific proposition asserted by counsel for plaintiffs does indeed present an interesting question. That specific proposition as far as I know has never been passed on by the Tenth Circuit but my opinion is that if and when they consider it that the modest limitations imposed by the ordinance will not be considered a burden on expression of erotic dancing in a sexually oriented business establishment.
>
> It would appear to me that the justification set forth in the ordinance as to the secondary questions are legitimate questions for a city to be concerned with and that the modest limitations imposed in no way deprive > the artist, the performer, the dancer from expression which is violative of the First Amendment....

Tr. of Hearing dated Jan. 3, 2002 ("Tr."), at 102–04, App. at 184–86.

After the hearing, the district court entered a short order memorializing its observations from the bench. Four of these observations are relevant to our review here:

4. The South Salt Lake City ordinance requiring the use of G strings and pasties in sexually oriented businesses does not limit expression.

5. The modest requirement of the ordinance permitting semi-nudity and prohibiting nudity in sexually oriented businesses is an appropriate exercise of municipal power.

6. The specific proposition stated by Plaintiffs, that nude dancing is a protected form of expression not subject to any limitation, has not been passed upon by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals. It is this Court's opinion that if and when they consider this proposition, the modest limitations imposed by the ordinance will not be considered a burden on expression of erotic dancing in a sexually oriented business.

7. The secondary harmful effects of nudity in a sexually oriented business are concerns that a municipality may legitimately address.

Order at 2, App. at 191. After making these findings, the order memorialized the 1188 denial of the motion for preliminary injunction which the district court had made from the bench.

Analysis

I. Standards of Review

[1] We review the district court's decision to deny a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. Utah Licensed Beverage Ass'n v. Leavitt, 256 F.3d 1061, 1065 (10th Cir.2001). In doing so, we examine the district court's factual findings for clear error and review its legal determinations de novo. Davis v. Mineta, 302 F.3d 1104, 1111 (10th Cir.2002); see also Prairie Band of Potawatomi Indians v. Pierce, 253 F.3d 1234, 1243 (10th Cir.2001); Tri–State Generation & Transmission Ass'n v. Shoshone River Power, Inc., 805 F.2d 351, 354 (10th Cir.1986). The abuse of discretion standard commands that > we give due deference to the district court's evaluation of the salience and credibility of testimony, affidavits, and other evidence. We will not challenge that evaluation unless it finds no support in the record, deviates from the appropriate legal standard, or follows from a plainly implausible, irrational, or erroneous reading of the record.

United States v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 1115, 1116 (10th Cir.1994) (citation omitted).

[2] It is well settled that a preliminary injunction is an extraordinary remedy, and that it should not be issued unless the movant's right to relief is "clear and unequivocal." Kikumura v. Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 955 (10th Cir.2001); see also SCFC ILC, Inc. v. Visa USA, Inc., 936 F.2d 1096, 1098 (10th Cir.1991).

> But while the standard to be applied by the district court in deciding whether a [party] is entitled to a preliminary injunction is stringent, the standard of appellate review is simply whether the issuance [or denial] of the injunction, in light of the applicable standard, constituted an abuse of discretion.

Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 931–32, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975).

[3] We must be mindful, therefore, as the Supreme Court has cautioned, that "a preliminary injunction is customarily granted on the basis of procedures that are less formal and evidence that is less complete than in a trial on the merits." University of Texas v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 395, 101 S.Ct. 1830, 68 L.Ed.2d 175 (1981). A hearing for preliminary injunction is generally a restricted proceeding, often conducted under pressured time constraints, on limited evidence and expedited briefing schedules. The Federal Rules of Evidence do not apply to preliminary injunction hearings. See, e.g., SEC v. Cherif, 933 F.2d 403, 412 n. 8 (7th Cir.1991); Asseo v. Pan Am. Grain Co., 805 F.2d 23, 25–26 (1st Cir.1986); United States v. O'Brien, 836 F.Supp. 438, 441 (S.D.Ohio 1993). Thus, as a prudential matter, it bears remembering the obvious: that when a district court holds a hearing on a motion for preliminary injunction it is not conducting a trial on the merits.

II. Preliminary Injunction Factors

Before a preliminary injunction may be entered pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 65, the moving party must establish that:

> (1) [the movant] will suffer irreparable injury unless the injunction issues; (2) the threatened injury ... outweighs whatever damage the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; (3) the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest; and (4) there is a substantial likelihood [of success] on the merits.

Resolution Trust Corp. v. Cruce, 972 F.2d 1195, 1198 (10th Cir.1992); Kikumura, 242 F.3d at 955. It is the movant's burden to 1189 establish that each of these factors tips in his or her favor. Id. However, "[t]he Tenth Circuit has adopted the Second Circuit's liberal definition of the 'probability of success' requirement." Otero Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Federal Reserve Bank, 665 F.2d 275, 278 (10th Cir.1981). Accordingly, we have held that where the moving party has established that the three "harm" factors tip decidedly in its favor, the "probability of success requirement" is somewhat relaxed. Prairie Band, 253 F.3d at 1246; Continental Oil Co. v. Frontier Ref. Co., 338 F.2d 780, 781–82 (10th Cir.1964) (same); see also, e.g., Boucher v. School Bd., 134 F.3d 821, 825 n. 5 (7th Cir.1998). In such cases, "[t]he movant need only show 'questions going to the merits so serious, substantial, difficult and doubtful, as to make them a fair ground for litigation.' " Resolution Trust, 972 F.2d at 1199 (citing Tri–State, 805 F.2d at 358); Otero, 665 F.2d at 278. However, the Second Circuit has held, and we agree, that "[w]here ... a preliminary injunction 'seeks to stay governmental action taken in the public interest pursuant to a statutory or regulatory scheme,' the less rigorous fair-ground-for-litigation standard should not be applied." Sweeney v. Bane, 996 F.2d 1384, 1388 (2d Cir.1993) (quoting Plaza Health Labs. v. Perales, 878 F.2d 577, 580 (2d Cir.1989)). With this in mind, we consider whether the district court abused its discretion in the present case.

III. Application of Preliminary Injunction Factors: The Equities

A. Irreparable Harm

[4] [5] To constitute irreparable harm, an injury must be certain, great, actual "and not theoretical." Wisconsin Gas Co. v. FERC, 758 F.2d 669, 674 (D.C.Cir.1985); accord Prairie Band, 253 F.3d at 1250. Irreparable harm is not harm that is "merely serious or substantial." Prairie Band, 253 F.3d at 1250 (quoting A.O. Smith Corp. v. FTC, 530 F.2d 515, 525 (3d Cir.1976)). "[T]he party seeking injunctive relief must show that the injury complained of is of such imminence that there is a clear and present need for equitable relief to prevent irreparable harm." Id. (emphasis in original) (brackets, citations, and internal quotation marks omitted). It is also well settled that simple economic loss usually does not, in and of itself, constitute irreparable harm; such losses are compensable by monetary damages. 11A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure § 2948.1, at 152–53 (2d ed.1995).

[6] The Plaintiffs presented no evidence that enforcement of the Ordinance during the time it will take to litigate this case in district court will have an irreparable effect in the sense of making it difficult or impossible to resume their activities or restore the status quo ante in the event they prevail. See, e.g., Greater Yellowstone Coalition v. Flowers, 321 F.3d 1250 (10th Cir.2003) (irreparable harm found when there was danger of actual death of eagles and destruction of their breeding grounds if developer were allowed to proceed); Ohio Oil Co. v. Conway, 279 U.S. 813, 814, 49 S.Ct. 256, 73 L.Ed. 972 (1929) (irreparable harm found in payment of an allegedly unconstitutional tax when state law did not provide a remedy for its return should the statute ultimately be adjudged invalid). At oral argument, Plaintiffs' counsel asserted that at least one of the establishments had been forced out of business, but no such evidence was presented in district court. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we assume that Plaintiffs will be able to resume their nude dancing in the event they prevail on the merits. The only question, then, is whether the requirement that they wear pasties and G-strings in the meantime is sufficient injury to warrant preliminary injunctive relief.

1190 [7] The Supreme Court has made clear that "the loss of First Amendment freedoms, for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury." Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373, 96 S.Ct. 2673, 49 L.Ed.2d 547 (1976) (plurality op.); see also Utah Licensed Beverage, 256 F.3d at 1076 (noting presumption when infringement of First Amendment rights is alleged); Homans v. City of Albuquerque, 264 F.3d 1240, 1243 & n. 2 (10th Cir.2001); ACLU v. Johnson, 194 F.3d 1149, 1163 (10th Cir.1999); Community Communications Co. v. City of Boulder, 660 F.2d 1370, 1380 (10th Cir.1981). It is necessary, however, to consider the specific character of the First Amendment claim. The Supreme Court has observed that the requirement that dancers wear G-strings and pasties "is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message." Pap's, 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality op.); id. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382 ("Any effect on the overall expression [on account of requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings] is de minimis."). In reliance on Pap's, the district court found that the "modest limitations" of requiring G-strings and pasties, would "not be considered a burden on expression of erotic dancing." Tr. at 103, lns. 14–16, App. at 185. Thus, while the harm to the Plaintiffs may arguably be imminent and irreparable, it is not "great" or "substantial."

For First Amendment purposes, the important point is that the Plaintiffs are able to convey their chosen message —not that they are able to do so in a state of undress. Appearing nude is not a First Amendment interest in the abstract, but only insofar as nudity is a means by which some message is conveyed. See Pap's, 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality op.) ("Being 'in a state of nudity' is not an inherently expressive condition."). The Supreme Court has held—and it stands to reason—that there are "ample" alternative means by which the Plaintiffs' erotic message might be conveyed.

But to say that a harm is "minimal" is not to say it is nonexistent. In the realm of performance art—to which the activity here is at least a distant cousin—the manner of presentation is part of the artistic enterprise. To tell Mahler he could not convey the message of thunder using the kettle drum might leave open ample alternative means for communicating the desired message, but no one would say that the restriction was of no artistic consequence. Because our precedents dictate that we treat alleged First Amendment harms gingerly, we find that this element tips slightly in favor of the Plaintiffs. See, e.g., Kikumura, 242 F.3d at 963; Utah Licensed Beverage, 256 F.3d at 1076.

B. Balance of Harms

[8] To be entitled to a preliminary injunction, the movant has the burden of showing that "the threatened injury to the movant outweighs the injury to the other party under the preliminary injunction." Kikumura, 242 F.3d at 955. The record is nearly devoid of any finding by the district court regarding the injury to the City of not enforcing the Ordinance during the pendency of the litigation. Presumably, however, the court's conclusion that the harmful secondary effects of nudity in a sexually oriented business are concerns that a municipality may legitimately address has application to the short run as well as the long. Assuming for sake of argument that the Ordinance serves legitimate purposes and ultimately will be sustained, the interests of the City would be injured by postponing the day of its enforcement. In the context of constitutional challenges to Acts of Congress, Chief Justice Rehnquist has stated: "The presumption 1191 of constitutionality which attaches to every Act of Congress is not merely a factor to be considered in evaluating success on the merits, but an equity to be considered in favor of applicants in balancing hardships." Walters v. Nat'l Ass'n of Radiation Survivors, 468 U.S. 1323, 1324, 105 S.Ct. 11, 82 L.Ed.2d 908 (1984) (Rehnquist, J., in chambers); Bowen v. Kendrick, 483 U.S. 1304, 1304, 108 S.Ct. 1, 97 L.Ed.2d 787 (1987) (Rehnquist, C.J., in chambers). Although the presumption of constitutionality accorded a municipal ordinance is less than that accorded an Act of Congress, especially in a case involving an explicitly enumerated constitutional right, the ability of a city to enact and enforce measures it deems to be in the public interest is still an equity to be considered in balancing hardships. See Plaza Health Labs., 878 F.2d at 580–83.

As with Plaintiffs' claim of hardship, however, the City's interest is less than substantial. Much of the City's professed concern about negative secondary effects arises from sexually oriented businesses in general rather than commercial nude entertainment in particular. The City offers no specific evidence that the requirement of pasties and G-strings will produce a significant incremental improvement with respect to the negative secondary effects. Moreover, the City has tolerated nude dancing establishments for many years, and even after embarking on a different policy took over a year to put the restrictions into effect. This invites skepticism regarding the imperative for immediate implementation.

Thus, the balance of hardships in this case is fairly even: neither party has shown that it will suffer grievous harm if it loses on the preliminary injunction motion.

C. Public Interest

A movant also has the burden of demonstrating that the injunction, if issued, is not adverse to the public interest. Kikumura, 242 F.3d at 955. The Plaintiffs cite the public's interest in ensuring that freedom of expression is not unconstitutionally curtailed. They also argue that there is a historic value to the businesses where the Plaintiffs work, in which, they contend, the public also has an interest. On the other hand, the democratically elected representatives to the City Council are in a better position than this Court to determine the public interest with respect to questions of social and economic policy. The courts' peculiar function is to say what the law is, not to second-guess democratic determinations of the public interest. In this case, where the Plaintiffs' claim of the public interest is largely a restatement of their own constitutional interest, and the City's claim of public interest is largely a restatement of its own interest in regulating the conduct in question, the "public interest" prong of the preliminary injunction inquiry is nothing more than a restatement of the "balance of hardships" prong. This factor, therefore, also favors neither party.

IV. Application of Preliminary Injunction Standards: Likelihood of Success on the Merits

The final question before the district court was whether Plaintiffs demonstrated that they were likely to meet their burden of showing that the City's ordinances are facially unconstitutional infringements on their First Amendment rights to expression.

A. Constitutional Standards: The Appropriate Level of Scrutiny

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the 1192 press, or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

U.S. Const. amend. I. Since Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138 (1925), the Supreme Court has held that the liberty of expression which the First Amendment guarantees against abridgment by the federal government is within the liberty safeguarded by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from invasion by state action.

The Supreme Court has held that nude dancing "falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality op.); see also Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality op.) (nude dancing "is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so"). The Court has been less clear about the reasons why this is the case. It has not treated nude dancing as among the "well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem," such as bribery, obscenity, and fighting words, which play "no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality." Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 572, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942).

Rather, the Supreme Court's analysis of restrictions on nude dancing combines two lines of First Amendment doctrine that, while in principle distinct, have become effectively merged. The first line of doctrine rests on the distinction between "speech" and "conduct." While the Court has recognized that conduct is often expressive in character—burning a flag or sitting in at a segregated lunch counter are well-known examples of expressive conduct—the state has broad latitude to regulate expressive conduct if its interest in doing so is "unrelated to the suppression of free expression," if the regulation furthers "an important or substantial government interest," and if the "incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." United States

v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). This line of cases applies here because, as the Court has explained, "[b]eing 'in a state of nudity' is not an inherently expressive condition," yet nude dancing is expressive conduct. Pap's, 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382. The Court has held that a general prohibition on nudity is "unrelated to the suppression of free expression" because such a law prohibits a class of conduct, the act of appearing nude in public, without reference to any element of expression. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 570–71, 111 S.Ct. 2456.

The second line of doctrine rests on the distinction between the prohibition of certain messages based on their content and the enforcement of reasonable time, place, or manner restrictions—such as requiring that street demonstrations occur at times other than rush hour, that billboards be located away from scenic highways, or that sound trucks not exceed a certain decibel level. See Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984); Metromedia, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 101 S.Ct. 2882, 69 L.Ed.2d 800 (1981); Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513 (1949). Such regulations warrant relatively relaxed, or "intermediate," scrutiny not only if they are "content neutral" in the classic sense, but 1193 also if the government's regulatory purpose is not based on the communicative impact of the speech. See City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 445–47, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (Kennedy, J., concurring).

In City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the Court noted that a zoning ordinance which attempted to locate theaters featuring "adult" films was "content based" to the extent that it identified the regulated activity by the content of the films shown. Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Focusing on the purpose of the regulation, however, the Court determined that it merely aimed to impose time, place, or manner restrictions on account of the theaters' "secondary effects," meaning effects other than communicative impact on the audience. Id. "The ordinance by its terms is designed to prevent crime, protect the city's retail trade, maintain property values, and generally protect and preserve the quality of the city's neighborhoods, commercial districts, and the quality of urban life, not to suppress the expression of unpopular views." Id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). The Court thus carved out a category of speech regulations that are "content-neutral" not because they apply to conduct on a generally applicable basis without regard to expressive content, but because the regulatory purpose is unrelated to that content. In Ward v. Rock Against Racism, the Court stated that "[t]he principal inquiry in determining content neutrality ... is whether the government has adopted a regulation of speech because of disagreement with the message it conveys." 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). This Court has held that restrictions based on the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses are "content-neutral" in this sense. Z.J. Gifts D–2, L.L.C. v. City of Aurora, 136 F.3d 683, 686 (10th Cir.1998).

The principal conceptual distinction between the two lines of doctrine is that the former—the "O'Brien test"—applies to generally applicable regulations of both non-expressive and expressive conduct, not targeting or singling out expressive conduct, while time, place, or manner regulations can be directed specifically at expression (such as billboards or street demonstrations), so long as the governmental purpose is unrelated to disagreement with the message and there are adequate alternative channels of communication.

In Pap's, a majority of the Court held that general prohibitions on public nudity, including commercial nude dancing, are subject to scrutiny "under the framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech." 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality op. per O'Connor, J., joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and Kennedy and Breyer, JJ.); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring). The Court also, however, relied heavily on the Renton line of cases. Id. at 295–96, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality op.); id. at 312–13, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring). The resulting doctrine thus seems to be a combination of the two lines of cases.

This case does not involve a general prohibition on public nudity, like that in Barnes and Pap's. Rather, it is a more narrowly tailored ban on nudity of either employees or patrons within sexually oriented businesses. Accordingly, it might be argued that the case is most accurately analyzed as a "manner" regulation. This would seem to have been the Court's point in Pap's when it noted: "The public nudity ban certainly has the effect of limiting one means of expressing the erotic message being disseminated at Kandyland. But simply to define what is being banned as the 'message' is to assume the conclusion." 1194 529 U.S. at 292–93, 120 S.Ct. 1382. See also Fly Fish, Inc. v. City of Cocoa Beach, 337 F.3d 1301, 1308 (11th Cir.2003) (applying Pap's and treating the G-string and pasties requirement as a "manner" restriction). Nudity, after all, is not a message in itself, but is a mode of conveying any number of different messages. It can be humorous (as when "Hotlips" Houlihan is exposed in the movie *M*A*S*H*); it can be dehumanizing (as in the registration scene in Schindler's List); it can be an act of self-affirmation (as in The Full Monty); it can symbolize unrighteousness (as in the Book of Hosea); it can symbolize innocence (as in Botticelli's Birth of Venus), or the loss of innocence (as in the movie The Last Picture Show); it can convey cruelty or disgust or freedom or —as Plaintiffs claim as their message—eroticism. [6] Often nudity is not communicative at all. By banning nudity in sexually oriented businesses, South Salt Lake City has not precluded the expression of any particular set of ideas, but has prohibited one particular manner of conveying those ideas, which the City Council is convinced has negative secondary effects.

6 We are not troubled by the fact that this reasoning runs counter to Marshall McLuhan's iconic dictum that "the medium is the message." Marshall McLuhan, Understanding the Media: The Extensions of Man 23–35 (1964). Whatever might have been its merits in its own pop cultural context, McLuhan's dictum is incompatible with the basic thrust of modern First Amendment law, in which distinctions based on content ("the message") are subject to a different mode of analysis than distinctions based on time, place, or manner ("the medium"). See Geoffrey R. Stone, Content–Neutral Restrictions, 54 U. Chi. L.Rev. 46 (1987); Content Regulation and the First Amendment, 25 Wm. & Mary L.Rev. 189 (1983). That would be nonsensical if the medium really were the message. Other scholars have long maintained that media, or modes of expression, do not inherently convey a particular meaning, but generate meaning through the way they are used in particular settings. See, e.g., John Dewey, Art as Experience 60–64 (Perigree, 1980) (1934); Stanley Fish, Is There a Text in This Class? The Authority of Interpretive Communities 317–18 (1980); Clifford Geertz, Local Knowledge: Further Essays in Interpretive Anthropology 119 (1983) ("It is, after all, not just statues (or poems or paintings) that we have to do with but the factors that cause these things to seem important-that is, affected with import-to those who make or possess them, and these are as various as life itself.").

In one important sense, the South Salt Lake Ordinance is less constitutionally problematic than the general public nudity bans upheld in Barnes and Pap's: it is more narrowly tailored. In Barnes and Pap's, there was dispute regarding the applicability of the prohibitions to legitimate theater or dance involving nudity, such as the plays Equus or Hair or the ballet Salome. The broad sweep of the public nudity prohibition seemed to present a dilemma: either the prohibition would apply to such performances and thus appear overbroad, or it would not apply and thus appear to be administered in a content-discriminatory manner. By limiting its nudity ban to sexually oriented businesses—a classification that itself is "content-neutral" within the meaning of this Court's cases, see Z.J. Gifts, 136 F.3d at 686–87—the City here has avoided both horns of the dilemma.

We turn now to Plaintiffs' arguments that the district court abused its discretion in finding that they had not demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits.

B. Plaintiffs' Arguments for Heightened Scrutiny

[9] Plaintiffs argue against application of the relatively relaxed standard of review employed in Barnes and Pap's. They point out that Barnes and Pap's involved general prohibitions on public nudity, while the South Salt Lake Ordinance bans nudity only within sexually oriented businesses. 1195 Accordingly, they argue that the South Salt Lake Ordinance is subject to strict scrutiny as a "content-based" restriction on speech. Their argument finds some support in two district court decisions, Nakatomi Investments, Inc. v. City of Schenectady, 949 F.Supp. 988, 998–99 (N.D.N.Y.1997), and Books, Inc. v. Pottawattamie County, 978 F.Supp. 1247, 1257 (S.D.Iowa 1997). But the argument—or at least the ultimate conclusion—has also been rejected by the only two courts of appeals to consider it. Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 846–47 (7th Cir.2000); Fly Fish, Inc. v. City of Cocoa Beach, 337 F.3d 1301, 1306–10 (11th Cir.2003).

[10] We reject Plaintiffs' argument for two independent reasons. First, the narrower scope of the South Salt Lake Ordinance, as compared with the general public nudity prohibitions of Barnes and Pap's, does not necessarily make the Ordinance "content-based." The prohibition is still on a form of conduct, and unless the category of businesses to which it applies is defined by their expressive content, the Ordinance remains "unrelated to the suppression of free expression." O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. Plaintiffs inform us that "[t]he ordinance at issue here applies only to adult businesses featuring nude dancing as expressive conduct," Appellants' Br. at 16, but they point to nothing in the Ordinance that supports that interpretation. On its face, the Ordinance applies to all "sexually oriented businesses," which include establishments such as "adult motels" and "adult novelty stores," which are not engaged in expressive activity. Although the "sexually oriented business" category certainly encompasses some expressive activities—adult cabarets and theaters, for example—this does not mean that the Ordinance targets them. The nudity ban applies across the board to all sexually oriented businesses, expressive and non-expressive alike. It is typical of conduct restrictions evaluated under O'Brien to include some expressive, as well as some non-expressive, activities within their reach. Where, as here, expressive activities are not singled out for special regulation, O'Brien applies. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 447, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (justifying application of lesser scrutiny to an ordinance that "is not limited to expressive activities [but] extends, for example, to massage parlors"); Z.J. Gifts, 136 F.3d at 686–87 (holding that an ordinance restricting sexually oriented business is content-neutral within the meaning of Renton).

Second, even if the South Salt Lake Ordinance must be distinguished from that in Barnes and Pap's, and cannot be justified as a generally applicable regulation of conduct, it still is subject to no more than intermediate scrutiny under the Renton line of cases, because the governmental purpose is based on the secondary effects of nudity in sexually oriented businesses rather than on disagreements with the content of the message. Schultz, 228 F.3d at 845–46. To be sure, as Plaintiffs point out, the ordinance upheld in Renton was a restriction on the locations within the city in which the sexually oriented businesses could locate, rather than, as here, a restriction on the manner in which they are permitted to operate. But we think Plaintiffs are wrong to characterize this as a "total ban" on the speech. Plaintiffs are not prohibited from communicating their supposedly erotic message through dance; they are merely prohibited from doing so in a state of total nudity. See Fly Fish, 337 F.3d at 1307–08.

In Pap's, the plurality explicitly rejected the dissent's characterization of a nudity prohibition as a "complete ban on expression." 529 U.S. at 292, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality op.). The plurality explained: "The public nudity ban certainly has the 1196 effect of limiting one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated.... But simply to define what is being banned as the 'message' is to assume the conclusion." Id. at 292–93, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Indeed, the plurality found that "[a]ny effect on the overall expression is de minimis." Id. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Thus, far from being a "complete ban," the plurality found that the prohibition on nudity had a "de minimis " effect on the performers' ability to convey their desired message. Id.; see also Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847 (concluding that a requirement that dancers in sexually oriented businesses wear pasties and G-strings does not violate the First Amendment).

The fallacy in Plaintiffs' argument is to assume that the "adequate alternative avenues of expression" required under the Renton line of cases refers exclusively to location. Time, place, or manner regulations all are partial limitations, but each is partial in a different way. "Place" limitations require alternative locations; "time" limitations require alternative times; and "manner" limitations require alternative ways in which a message may be communicated. A ban on nudity within sexually oriented businesses is a "manner" regulation, Fly Fish, 337 F.3d at 1308–09, and Plaintiffs have provided no reason to believe that there do not exist other ways to get their message across. See Pap's, 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 ("the requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings ... leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message."); Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847 (same). While "there may be cases in which banning the means of expression so interferes with the message that it essentially bans the message, that is not the case here." Pap's, 529 U.S. at 293, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Fly Fish, 337 F.3d at 1308.

C. Plaintiffs' Argument Regarding Evidence of Secondary Effects and the Record Before the District Court

Plaintiffs complain vigorously regarding the supposed inadequacy of the factual record in this case to support the City's claim that the Ordinance is justified by the need to control the negative secondary effects of commercial nude dancing. Indeed, they assert that "[t]here is no evidence that such effects have occurred, or are in imminent danger of occurring, in South Salt Lake. Plaintiffs believe that all evidence is to the contrary." Appellants' Br. at 24. However, as counsel conceded at oral argument before this Court, at the hearing in the district court on their motion for preliminary injunctive relief, the Plaintiffs did not present any evidence in support of their position. In their briefs in this Court, Plaintiffs refer to various studies that they submitted to the City Council, but did not trouble to present to the district court, and to other evidence that they submitted in unrelated litigation in state court, but likewise did not see fit to introduce below. See Appellants' Br. at 24–26. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that the district court did not abuse its discretion in denying their motion. Plaintiffs simply had not met their burden of showing that their right to relief was "clear and unequivocal." Kikumura, 242 F.3d at 955.

[11] We turn, nevertheless, to the four elements of intermediate scrutiny, as set forth in O'Brien, [7] to determine whether 1197 the district court abused its discretion in concluding, on this one-sided record, that Plaintiffs did not have a substantial likelihood of success on the merits. Under intermediate scrutiny, a restriction on speech must: (1) be within the constitutional power of government to adopt; (2) further an important or substantial governmental interest; which (3) is unrelated to the suppression of expression; and (4) be no greater restriction on First Amendment freedom than is essential to furtherance of the government's purpose. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673; Pap's, 529 U.S. at 296, 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382.

7 The elements of intermediate scrutiny for time, place, or manner regulations are only slightly different. In such a case, we ask simply whether the regulation is "narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and

... leave[s] open ample alternative channels for communication of the information." Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065.

There is no doubt that the Ordinance is within the lawful powers of South Salt Lake City. See Pap's, 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (the city's "efforts to protect public health and safety are clearly within the city's police powers").

[12] The second factor is probably the most important and contested. To survive intermediate scrutiny, the government must be able to demonstrate that the challenged speech restriction serves a "substantial governmental interest." O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. The burden of proof is on the government to "demonstrate that the recited harms are real, not merely conjectural, and that the regulation will in fact alleviate these harms in a direct and material way." Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 664, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994). [8] On the other hand, the Court has repeatedly emphasized that "municipalities must be given a 'reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions' to address the secondary effects of protected speech." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728, quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925, quoting Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality op.) (internal quotation marks omitted). The standards for the quantity and nature of the empirical evidence needed to uphold a city ordinance based on the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented speech in general, or nude dancing in particular, are continuing to evolve.

8 It is not obvious that intermediate scrutiny cases from other contexts are necessarily applicable to nude dancing or other sexually oriented speech, in light of the Court's position that "society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring) (quoting Young, 427 U.S. at 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440). Nonetheless, the Court's recent decisions in the context of sexually explicit speech confirm that the government bears the burden of providing evidence of secondary effects, where it relies on those secondary effects as the justification for restricting speech. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 437, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality op.).

In Renton, a six-Justice majority of the Supreme Court held that "[t]he First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem the city addresses." 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Accordingly, it is common in these cases for cities to cite and rely on seemingly pre-packaged studies, as well as the findings of courts in other cases. Here, South Salt Lake invoked a typical set of such studies and findings in support of its Ordinance.

In Barnes, the three-Justice plurality (Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices O'Connor and Kennedy) sustained a prohibition on public nudity, as applied to nude dancing, on the basis of the "substantial government interest in protecting order and morality," without the need for any empirical evidence regarding secondary effects. 1198 Barnes, 501 U.S. at 569, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality op.). Justice Scalia concurred on the ground that a general public nudity prohibition "is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring). The decisive fifth vote was cast by Justice Souter, whose opinion is controlling under the rule of Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977) ("When a fragmented Court decides a case and no single rationale explaining the result enjoys the assent of five Justices, the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds." (internal quotation marks omitted)). Justice Souter concluded, contrary to the plurality, that the city was required to show secondary effects of the sort canvassed in Renton, and not merely an interest in order and morality. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 583–86, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring). But he maintained that it was not necessary for cities to "litigate this issue repeatedly in every case," and thus that previous court findings in Renton and other cases provided sufficient evidentiary support. Id. at 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456.

In Pap's, a four-Justice plurality (Justice O'Connor, joined by the Chief Justice, Justice Kennedy, and Justice Breyer) voted to uphold a general public nudity ban almost identical to that upheld in Barnes, but did so on the basis of secondary effects. The Court emphasized that the city did not have to produce new studies and was permitted to rely on the evidentiary foundation in earlier cases. Pap's, 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382. The Court also treated the judgments of city council members regarding the need for the ordinance as evidence. "The city council members, familiar with commercial downtown Erie, are the individuals who would likely have had firsthand knowledge of what took place at and around nude dancing establishments in Erie, and can make particularized, expert judgments about the resulting harmful secondary effects." Id. at 297–98, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Indeed, the Court observed that "O'Brien, of course, required no evidentiary showing at all that the threatened harm was real." Id. at 299, 120 S.Ct. 1382; see also id. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 ("On this point, O'Brien is especially instructive. The Court there did not require evidence that the integrity of the Selective Service System would be jeopardized...."). The plurality also noted that the plaintiffs had "ample opportunity to contest the council's findings about secondary effects—before the council itself, throughout the state proceedings, and before this Court," but had failed to do so. Id. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382. "In the absence of any reason to doubt it," the plurality stated, "the city's expert judgment should be credited." Id.

Two Justices concurred on the ground that a regulation of conduct is unconstitutional only where the "government prohibits conduct precisely because of its communicative attributes," making it unnecessary to inquire into the empirical basis for the secondary effects justification (about which these Justices were skeptical). Id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Scalia, J., joined by Thomas, J., concurring). Accordingly, under the rule of Marks, the plurality opinion constitutes the holding of the Court. This suggests that the City's initial burden to present empirical support for its conclusions is minimal, but that plaintiffs must have an opportunity to present their own evidence, to which the city is then entitled to respond.

In Alameda Books, the Court granted certiorari to "clarify the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton." 535 U.S. at 433, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Again, however, the Court failed to produce a majority opinion. The four-Justice 1199 plurality (Justice O'Connor, joined by the Chief Justice, Justice Scalia, and Justice Thomas) reaffirmed the basic approach taken in Renton and Barnes. The Court explained that "the city certainly bears the burden of providing evidence that supports a link between concentrations of adult operations and asserted secondary effects," but it did not require the city to "bear the burden of providing evidence that rules out every theory for the link between concentrations of adult establishments that is inconsistent with its own." Id. at 437, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The plurality distinguished between two parts of the Renton intermediate scrutiny framework: whether an ordinance is content-neutral and whether it serves a substantial governmental interest while leaving open alternative avenues of communication. Only with regard to the latter would the courts "examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects." Id. at 440–41, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

Even as to that connection, the plurality reiterated that the Court had "refused to set such a high bar for municipalities that want to address merely the secondary effects of protected speech." Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. It stated that cities are entitled to rely, in part, on "appeal to common sense," rather than "empirical data," at least where there is no "actual and convincing evidence from plaintiffs to the contrary." Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. In so holding, the Alameda plurality provided the following observation regarding the deference properly accorded to legislative findings under the second prong of the O'Brien test:

> This is not to say that the municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

Id. at 438–39 (citing Pap's, 529 U.S. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382). The plurality described its "deference to the evidence presented by the city" as "the product of a careful balance between competing interests." Alameda, 535 U.S. at 440, 122 S.Ct. 1728. On the one hand, courts have an obligation to exercise independent judgment in First Amendment cases, but on the other hand the plurality acknowledged "that the Los Angeles City Council is in a better position than the Judiciary to gather and evaluate data on local problems." Id.

Justice Kennedy concurred separately. However, he did not criticize the plurality's approach to the evidence necessary to support a secondary effects justification. If anything, Justice Kennedy's comments on that issue appear somewhat more deferential to the cities: "As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners." Id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring). "The Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do.... It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion." Id. at 452, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

Applying these precedents, we cannot say that the district court abused its discretion in concluding that the Plaintiffs failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits. The evidentiary record compiled by South Salt Lake City is similar to 1200 the record on which the Court affirmed the ordinance in Pap's. Presumably, the City Council of South Salt Lake is entitled to as great a degree of deference as that of any other. The Plaintiffs failed to submit any evidence in district court that might call the City's empirical judgments into question. Without "actual and convincing evidence from plaintiffs to the contrary," Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality op.), there was no reason for the district court to inquire any further.

The third O'Brien factor, that the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, follows from the second. As explained above, from Renton onward, the Court has consistently held that the control of negative secondary effects, such as those invoked by South Salt Lake City, is unrelated to the suppression of free expression.

Finally, the district court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the Ordinance satisfies the fourth and final O'Brien factor—that the restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest—for the same reason that factor was satisfied in Pap's: the requirement that dancers wear "G-strings" and "pasties" has a "de minimis " effect on their ability to communicate their message. Pap's, 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 ("The requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message."). Plaintiffs evidently disagree with that conclusion, but offer no basis for distinguishing the Supreme Court's conclusion.

In summary, as the case is now postured, the Plaintiffs put on no evidence before the district court to establish a likelihood that O'Brien factors two, three and four favored their case on the merits. Because they failed to put on such evidence, the Plaintiffs have not demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success on the merits.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reason, the decision of the district court denying the Plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction is AFFIRMED. However, because the record before us is very limited, we note specifically that we express no opinion on the ultimate merits of this case. Plaintiffs' motion to supplement the record with materials not before the district court is DENIED.

All Citations

348 F.3d 1182

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Disagreed With by Reliable Consultants, Inc. v. Earle, 5th Cir.(Tex.), February 12, 2008

478 F.3d 1316
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

Sherri WILLIAMS, B.J. Bailey, Alice Jean Cope, Jane Doe, Deborah L. Cooper, Benny Cooper, Dan Bailey, Jane Poe, Jane Roe, Plaintiffs–Appellants, Betty Faye Haggermaker, et al., Plaintiffs,
v.
Tim MORGAN, in his official capacity as the District Attorney of the County of Madison Alabama, Defendant, Troy King, in his official capacity as the Attorney General of Alabama, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 06–11892.
|
Feb. 14, 2007.

Synopsis

Background: Civil liberties group, on behalf of various individual users and vendors of sexual devices, brought action challenging constitutionality of Alabama statute prohibiting commercial distribution of any device primarily used for stimulation of human genitals. Following remand, 378 F.3d 1232, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama, No. 98-01938-CV-5, C. Lynwood Smith, Jr., J., 420 F.Supp.2d 1224, entered summary judgment for State of Alabama. Civil liberties group appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Wilson, Circuit Judge, held that Lawrence v. Texas, holding that Texas sodomy statute was unconstitutional, was distinguishable from instant action, and thus could not overcome law of the case in instant action.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (8)

[1] Constitutional Law
Sex and Procreation

Because there was no fundamental right to sexual privacy, rational basis scrutiny would be applied to challenge to constitutionality of Alabama statute prohibiting commercial distribution of any device primarily used for stimulation of human genitals. Ala.Code 1975, § 13A-12-200.2a(1).

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness or rationality

Rational basis review is a highly deferential standard that proscribes only the very outer limits of a legislature's power.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness or rationality

A statute is constitutional under rational basis scrutiny so long as there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the statute.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Constitutional Rights in General

Constitutional Law
Overbreadth in General

State legislatures are allowed leeway to approach a perceived problem incrementally, even if its incremental approach is significantly over-inclusive or under-inclusive.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Federal Courts
Former decision as law of the case

Federal Courts

Effect of Decision in Lower Court

Under the law-of-the-case doctrine, the findings of fact and conclusions of law by an appellate court are generally binding in all subsequent proceedings in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Courts

Previous Decisions in Same Case as Law of the Case

When deciding an issue of law, the only means by which the law-of-the-case doctrine may be overcome is if: (1) the prior decision resulted from a trial where the parties presented substantially different evidence from the case at bar; (2) subsequently released controlling authority dictates a contrary result; or (3) the prior decision was clearly erroneous and would work manifest injustice.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Courts

Previous Decisions in Same Case as Law of the Case

Lawrence v. Texas, holding that Texas sodomy statute furthered no legitimate state interest that could justify its intrusion into personal and private life of the individual, was distinguishable from holding of subsequent action that Alabama statute prohibiting commercial distribution of devices primarily used for stimulation of human genitals did not violate Fourteenth Amendment privacy rights, and, thus, Lawrence could not overcome law of the case in subsequent action, inasmuch as Texas statute criminalized private sexual conduct, while Alabama statute criminalized commerce in sexual devices, which was inherently public activity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; Ala.Code 1975, § 13A-12-200.2a(1).

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Privacy and Sexual Matters

Obscenity

Physical articles deemed obscene, possession and sale of Alabama statute prohibiting commercial distribution of devices primarily used for stimulation of human genitals did not violate Fourteenth Amendment privacy rights, inasmuch as public morality provided rational basis for statute. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; Ala.Code 1975, § 13A-12-200.2a(1).

6 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1317 Sharon M. McGowan, Mark J. Lopez, Am. Civ. Liberties Union Found., New York City, Michael L. Fees, Fees & Burgess, P.C., Huntsville, AL, for Plaintiffs–Appellants.

Kevin Christopher Newsome, Winfield J. Sinclair, Montgomery, AL, Amy Louise Herring, Huntsville, AL, for King.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama.

Before DUBINA and WILSON, Circuit 1318 Judges, and HODGES,* District Judge.

* Honorable Wm. Terrell Hodges, United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida, sitting by designation.

Opinion

WILSON, Circuit Judge:

This case comes to us for the third time, arising from a constitutional challenge to a provision of the Alabama Code prohibiting the commercial distribution of devices "primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs." Ala.Code § 13A–12–200.2(a)(1). The only question remaining before us is whether public morality remains a sufficient rational basis for the challenged statute after the Supreme Court's decision in Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 123 S.Ct. 2472, 156 L.Ed.2d 508 (2003). The district court distinguished Lawrence and held, following our prior precedent in this case, Williams v. Pryor, 240 F.3d 944 (11th Cir.2001) (Williams II), that the statute survives rational basis scrutiny. Because we find that public morality remains a legitimate rational basis for the challenged legislation even after Lawrence, we affirm.

BACKGROUND

The American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU")[1] filed suit on behalf of individual users and vendors of sexual devices[2] to enjoin enforcement of Ala.Code § 13A–12–200.2(a)(1), which prohibits the distribution of "any device designed or marketed as useful primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs."[3] Plaintiffs in this case include both married and unmarried users of prohibited sexual devices, as well as vendors of sexual devices operating both in typical retail storefronts and in "tupperware"-style parties where sexual aids and novelties are displayed and sold in homes. The stipulated facts establish that sexual devices have many medically and psychologically therapeutic uses, recognized by healthcare professionals and by the FDA. The statute exempts sales of sexual devices "for a bona fide medical, scientific, educational, legislative, judicial, or law enforcement purpose." § 13A–12–200.4. Also, there are a number of other sexual products, such as ribbed condoms and virility drugs, that are not prohibited by the statute. The statute does not prohibit the use, possession, or gratuitous distribution of sexual devices. See § 13A–12–200.2 ("for anything of pecuniary value").

1 "The ACLU" will be used to refer collectively to appellants, as that organization was "the driving force" behind this litigation. Williams v. Att'y Gen. of Ala., 378 F.3d 1232, 1233 n. 1 (11th Cir.2004) (Williams IV)

2 We will use the shorthand term "sexual device" in place of the phrase "any device designed or marketed as useful primarily for the stimulation of the human genital organs."

3 The statute reads in pertinent part: "It shall be unlawful for any person to knowingly distribute, possess with intent to distribute, or offer or agree to distribute any obscene material or any device designed or marketed as useful primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs for any thing of pecuniary value." Ala.Code § 13A–12–200.2(a)(1).

The ACLU has argued throughout this litigation that the statute burdens and violates sexual-device users' right to privacy and personal autonomy under the Fourteenth Amendment. Alternatively, it has argued that there is no rational relationship between a complete ban on the sale of sexual devices and a proper legislative purpose.

Our second opinion in this case (Williams IV) provides a thorough summary of the procedural history of the case:

> 1319 Following a bench trial, the district court concluded that there was no currently recognized fundamental right to use sexual devices and declined the ACLU's invitation to create such a right. Williams v. Pryor, 41 F.Supp.2d 1257, 1282–84 (N.D.Ala.1999) (Williams I). The district court then proceeded to scrutinize the statute under rational basis review. Id. at 1284. Concluding that the statute lacked any rational basis, the district court permanently enjoined its enforcement. Id. at 1293.
>
> On appeal, we reversed in part and affirmed in part. [Williams II, 240 F.3d 944.] We reversed the district court's conclusion that the statute lacked a rational basis and held that the promotion and preservation of public morality provided a rational basis. Id. at 952. However, we affirmed the district court's rejection of the ACLU's facial fundamental-rights challenge to the statute. Id. at 955. We then remanded the action to the district court for further consideration of the as-applied fundamental-rights challenge. Id. at 955.
>
> On remand, the district court again struck down the statute. Williams v. Pryor, 220 F.Supp.2d 1257 (N.D.Ala.2002) (Williams III). On cross motions for summary judgment, the district court held that the statute unconstitutionally burdened the right to use sexual devices within private adult, consensual sexual relationships. Id. After a lengthy discussion of the history of sex in America, the district court announced a fundamental right to "sexual privacy," which, although unrecognized under any existing Supreme Court precedent, the district court found to be deeply rooted in the history and traditions of our nation. Id. at 1296. The district court further found that this right "encompass[es] the right to use sexual devices like the vibrators, dildos, anal beads, and artificial vaginas" marketed by the vendors involved in this case. Id.

The district court accordingly applied strict scrutiny to the statute. Id. Finding that the statute failed strict scrutiny, the district court granted summary judgment to the ACLU and once again enjoined the statute's enforcement. Id. at 1307.

Williams v. Att'y Gen. of Ala., 378 F.3d 1232, 1234 (11th Cir.2004) (Williams IV).

In Williams IV we again reversed the judgment of the district court, holding that there was no pre-existing, fundamental, substantive-due-process right to sexual privacy triggering strict scrutiny. Id. at 1238. In so holding, we determined that Lawrence, which had been decided after the district court's decision in Williams III, did not recognize a fundamental right to sexual privacy. Id. Furthermore, we declined to recognize a new fundamental right to use sexual devices. Id. at 1250. With strict scrutiny off the table, we remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with the opinion. Id. We advised that on remand, the district court should "examine whether our holding in Williams II that Alabama's law has a rational basis (e.g., public morality) remains good law" after Lawrence overruled Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 92 L.Ed.2d 140 (1986). Id. at 1238 n. 9 (internal quotations omitted); see also id. at 1259 n. 25 (Barkett, J., dissenting) ("On remand, the district court must consider whether our holding in Williams II ... remains good law now that Bowers has been overruled."). We thus "save[d] for a later day" the question of whether public morality still serves as a rational basis for legislation after Lawrence. Id. at 1238 n. 9.

1320 On remand, the district court decided "not to invalidate the Alabama law in question here simply because it is founded on concerns over public morality." Williams v. King, 420 F.Supp.2d 1224, 1250 (N.D.Ala.2006) (Williams V). In so concluding, the district court opined: "To hold that public morality can never serve as a rational basis for legislation after Lawrence would cause a 'massive disruption of the social order,' one this court is not willing to set into motion." Id. at 1249–50 (quoting Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 590, 123 S.Ct. at 2491 (Scalia, J., dissenting)). The district court also addressed "whether this case fits squarely within the mold of Lawrence, such that Lawrence's holding—that public morality was not a sufficiently rational basis to support the Texas [sodomy statute]—applies to strike down the Alabama law here." Id. at 1250. The district court concluded that the cases are distinguishable, and Lawrence does not compel striking down the Alabama law in this case. [4] Id. at 1253–54

4 The district court distinguished this case from Lawrence in part on the basis that Lawrence implicates equal protection concerns—the Texas statute targeted a "discrete and insular minority," while this statute does not. Williams V, 420 F.Supp.2d at 1250–53. We need not address whether the district court is correct that Lawrence employs an equal protection analysis. Here, we apply a substantive due process analysis and distinguish Lawrence on other grounds.

The ACLU now appeals the district court's decision in Williams V granting the State's summary judgment motion and denying the ACLU's summary judgment motion.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

We review a summary judgment decision de novo and apply the same legal standard that bound the district court. Cruz v. Publix Super Markets, Inc., 428 F.3d 1379, 1382 (11th Cir.2005).

DISCUSSION

[1] In Williams IV we held that the Supreme Court in Lawrence "declined the invitation" to recognize a fundamental right to sexual privacy, which would have compelled us to employ strict scrutiny in assessing the constitutionality of the challenged statute. Williams IV, 378 F.3d at 1236. Thus, because there is no fundamental right at issue, we apply rational basis scrutiny to the challenged statute. See Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 631, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 1627, 134 L.Ed.2d 855 (1996) ("[I]f a law neither burdens a fundamental right nor targets a suspect class, we will uphold the [law] so long as it bears a rational relation to some legitimate end."). For the reasons stated below, we find that the State's interest in preserving and promoting public morality provides a rational basis for the challenged statute.

[2] [3] [4] Rational basis review is "a highly deferential standard that proscribes only the very outer limits of a legislature's power." Williams II, 240 F.3d at 948. A statute is constitutional under rational basis scrutiny so long as "there is any reasonably conceivable state of facts that could provide a rational basis for the [statute]." FCC v. Beach Commc'ns, Inc., 508 U.S. 307, 313, 113 S.Ct. 2096, 2101, 124 L.Ed.2d 211 (1993) (emphasis added). Furthermore, the Supreme Court has held:

> On rational-basis review, ... a statute ... comes to us bearing a strong presumption of validity, and those attacking the rationality of the legislative classification have the burden to negative every conceivable basis which might support it. Moreover, because we never require a 1321 legislature to articulate its reasons for enacting a statute, it is entirely irrelevant for constitutional purposes whether the conceived reason for the challenged distinction actually motivated the legislature.

Id. at 314–15, 113 S.Ct. at 2101–02 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In addition, state legislatures are "allowed leeway to approach a perceived problem incrementally, even if its incremental approach is significantly over-inclusive or under-inclusive." Williams II, 240 F.3d at 948 (internal quotation marks omitted).

We previously addressed the constitutionality of the challenged Alabama law under rational basis scrutiny and held that "[t]he State's interest in public morality is a legitimate interest rationally served by the statute." Id. at 949. We noted that "[t]he crafting and safeguarding of public morality has long been an established part of the States' plenary police power to legislate and indisputably is a legitimate government interest under rational basis scrutiny." Id. at 949; see also Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 569, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2462, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (citing Bowers, 478 U.S. at 196, 106 S.Ct. at 2846; Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 61, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2637, 37 L.Ed.2d 446 (1973); Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 485, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1309, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957)). Further, we held that "a statute banning the commercial distribution of sexual devices is rationally related to this interest." Williams II, 240 F.3d at 949.

[5] [6] [7] Ordinarily, we would be bound by our holding in Williams II according to the law-of-the-case doctrine. Under the law-of-the-case doctrine, "the findings of fact and conclusions of law by an appellate court are generally binding in all subsequent proceedings in the same case in the trial court or on a later appeal." This That & The Other Gift And Tobacco, Inc. v. Cobb County, Ga., 439 F.3d 1275, 1283 (11th Cir.2006) (per curiam) (internal quotation marks omitted). When deciding an issue of law, the only means by which the law-of-the-case doctrine may be overcome is if "(1) our prior decision resulted from a trial where the parties presented substantially different evidence from the case at bar; (2) subsequently released controlling authority dictates a contrary result; or (3) the prior decision was clearly erroneous and would work manifest injustice." Alphamed, Inc. v. B. Braun Med., Inc., 367 F.3d 1280, 1286 (11th Cir.2004); see also This That & The Other, 439 F.3d at 1283. The ACLU impliedly argues that Lawrence is controlling authority that compels a contrary result, because it dictates that public morality no longer constitutes a rational basis for government intrusion on private decisions about sexual intimacy—which is precisely what it argues the Alabama statute does. [5]

5 Judge Barkett expressly makes the argument that the law-of-the-case doctrine does not apply to Williams II because Lawrence is subsequently released controlling authority dictating a contrary result. See Williams IV, 378 F.3d at 1259 n. 25 (Barkett, J., dissenting); see also id. at 1259 (Barkett, J., dissenting) ("Williams II ... rel[ied] on the now defunct Bowers to conclude that public morality provides a legitimate state interest .... Obviously now that Bowers has been overruled, this proposition is no longer good law and we must, accordingly, revisit our holding in Williams II.").

In Lawrence the Supreme Court held that the Texas sodomy statute challenged in that case "further[ed] no legitimate state interest which can justify its intrusion into the personal and private life of the individual." 1322 539 U.S. at 578, 123 S.Ct. at 2484. In so holding, the Lawrence majority relied on Justice Stevens's analysis in his Bowers dissent: "[T]he fact that the governing majority in a State has traditionally viewed a particular practice as immoral is not a sufficient reason for upholding a law prohibiting the practice ...." Id. at 577, 123 S.Ct. at 2483 (quoting Bowers, 478 U.S. at 216, 106 S.Ct. at 2857 (Stevens, J. dissenting)). The Court applied Justice Stevens's analysis in overruling Bowers and in holding that the Texas sodomy statute was unconstitutional.

The ACLU argues that the Alabama statute at issue in this case, like the Texas sodomy statute at issue in Lawrence, intrudes into personal and private decisions about sexual intimacy. It argues that "this law intrudes just as deeply into the sphere of individual decision-making about sexuality as the law struck down in Lawrence." Appellant's Br. 29. Thus, the ACLU argues, this case is indistinguishable from Lawrence—just as in that case, in this case there is no legitimate state interest, including public morality, that supports the challenged Alabama statute. Therefore, it argues that the statute cannot survive constitutional scrutiny under Lawrence.

However, while the statute at issue in Lawrence criminalized private sexual conduct, the statute at issue in this case forbids public, commercial activity. To the extent Lawrence rejects public morality as a legitimate government interest, it invalidates only those laws that target conduct that is both private and non-commercial. Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 578, 123 S.Ct. at 2484 ("The present case does not involve minors. It does not involve persons who might be injured or coerced or who are situated in relationships where consent might not easily be refused. It does not involve public conduct or prostitution.") (emphasis added). Unlike Lawrence, the activity regulated here is neither private nor non-commercial. [6]

6 The ACLU emphasizes language in Williams IV where we stated that "for purposes of constitutional analysis, restrictions on the ability to purchase an item are tantamount to restrictions on the use of that item." 378 F.3d at 1242. However, the Williams IV court connected the sale of sexual devices with their use only in the limited context of framing the scope of the liberty interest at stake under the fundamental rights analysis of Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 117 S.Ct. 2258, 138 L.Ed.2d 772 (1997). Williams IV, 378 F.3d at 1242. We were clear in Williams IV, that the challenged statute did not implicate private or consensual activity. Id. at 1237 n. 8, 1241.

This statute targets commerce in sexual devices, an inherently public activity, whether it occurs on a street corner, in a shopping mall, or in a living room. As the majority in Williams IV so colorfully put it: "There is nothing 'private' or 'consensual' about the advertising and sale of a dildo." 378 F.3d at 1237 n. 8; see also id. at 1241. The challenged statute does not target possession, use, or even the gratuitous distribution of sexual devices. In fact, plaintiffs here continue to possess and use such devices. States have traditionally had the authority to regulate commercial activity they deem harmful to the public. See, e.g., Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Ass'n, 436 U.S. 447, 456, 98 S.Ct. 1912, 1919, 56 L.Ed.2d 444 (1978) ("[T]he State does not lose its power to regulate commercial activity deemed harmful to the public whenever speech is a component of that activity."). Thus, while public morality was an insufficient government interest to sustain the Texas sodomy statute, because the challenged statute in this case does not target private activity, but public, commercial activity, the state's interest in promoting 1323 and preserving public morality remains a sufficient rational basis.

Furthermore, we do not read Lawrence, the overruling of Bowers, or the Lawrence court's reliance on Justice Stevens's dissent, to have rendered public morality altogether illegitimate as a rational basis. The principle that "[t]he law ... is constantly based on notions of morality," Bowers, 478 U.S. at 196, 106 S.Ct. at 2846, was not announced for the first time in Bowers and remains in force today. As we noted in Williams IV, the Supreme Court has affirmed on repeated occasions that laws can be based on moral judgments. Williams IV, 378 F.3d at 1238 n. 8; see Barnes, 501 U.S. at 569, 111 S.Ct. at 2462 (upholding a public indecency statute, stating, "[t]his and other public indecency statutes were designed to protect morals and public order. The traditional police power of the States is defined as the authority to provide for the public health, safety, and morals, and we have upheld such a basis for legislation."); id. (noting that "a legislature could legitimately act ... to protect 'the social interest in order and morality' "); Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 183, 96 S.Ct. 2909, 2930, 49 L.Ed.2d 859 (1976) (upholding the death penalty, noting that "capital punishment is an expression of society's moral outrage at particularly offensive conduct"); Paris Adult Theatre I, 413 U.S. at 61, 93 S.Ct. at 2637 (holding that Georgia had a legitimate interest in regulating obscene material because the legislature "could legitimately act ... to protect 'the social interest in order and morality' ") (quoting Roth, 354 U.S. at 485, 77 S.Ct. at 1309); United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 348, 92 S.Ct. 515, 522, 30 L.Ed.2d 488 (1971) (noting that "criminal punishment usually represents the moral condemnation of the community").

Also, we have discussed the post-Lawrence viability of public morality as a rational basis for legislation with approval. See Lofton v. Sec'y of the Dept. of Children and Family Servs., 358 F.3d 804, 819 n. 17 (2004). In Lofton, upholding a law prohibiting homosexual couples from adopting, we indicated that public morality likely remains a constitutionally rational basis for legislation:

> Florida also asserts that the statute is rationally related to its interest in promoting public morality both in the context of child rearing and in the context of determining which types of households should be accorded legal recognition as families. Appellants respond that public morality cannot serve as a legitimate state interest .... [I]t is unnecessary for us to resolve the question. We do note, however, the Supreme Court's conclusion that there is not only a legitimate interest, but a substantial government interest in protecting order and morality, and its observation that [i]n a democratic society legislatures, not courts, are constituted to respond to the will and consequently the moral values of the people.

Id., 358 F.3d at 819 n. 17 (internal quotations and citations omitted). We have also noted: "One would expect the Supreme Court to be manifestly more specific and articulate than it was in Lawrence if now such a traditional and significant jurisprudential principal has been jettisoned wholesale ...." Williams IV, 378 F.3d at 1238 n. 8.

[8] Accordingly, we find that public morality survives as a rational basis for legislation even after Lawrence, and we find that in this case the State's interest in the preservation of public morality remains a rational basis for the challenged statute. By upholding the statute, we do not endorse the judgment of the Alabama legislature. As we stated in Williams II:

> 1324 However misguided the legislature of Alabama may have been in enacting the statute challenged in this case, the statute is not constitutionally irrational under rational basis scrutiny because it is rationally related to the State's legitimate power to protect its view of public morality. "The Constitution presumes that ... improvident decisions will eventually be rectified by the democratic process and that judicial intervention is generally unwarranted no matter how unwisely we may think a political branch has acted." Vance v. Bradley, 440 U.S. 93, 97, 99 S.Ct. 939, 942–43, 59 L.Ed.2d 171 (1979). This Court does not invalidate bad or foolish policies, only unconstitutional ones; we may not "sit as a super-legislature to judge the wisdom or desirability of legislative policy determinations made in areas that neither affect fundamental rights nor proceed along suspect lines." New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303, 96 S.Ct. 2513, 2517, 49 L.Ed.2d 511 (1976).

Williams II, 240 F.3d at 952.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we reaffirm our holding in Williams II that the challenged statute is constitutional and we affirm the judgment of the district court.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

478 F.3d 1316, 20 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 333

635 F.3d 1266
United States Court of Appeals,
Eleventh Circuit.

JACKSONVILLE PROPERTY RIGHTS ASSOCIATION, INC., a Florida non-profit corporation, Horton Enterprises, Inc., a Florida corporation d.b.a. The New Solid Gold, Hartsock Enterprises, Inc., a Florida corporation d.b.a. Doll House, Plaintiffs–Appellants Cross–Appellees,

v.

CITY OF JACKSONVILLE, FL, a Florida municipal corporation, Defendant–Appellee Cross–Appellant.

No. 09–15629.
|
March 25, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Operators of adult entertainment establishments brought § 1983 action against city, alleging that the city's adult zoning scheme violated their right under the First Amendment to present nude dancing. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, No. 05-01267-CV-J-34-JRK, Marcia M. Howard, J., granted in part and denied in part both parties' motions for summary judgment. Both parties appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Tjoflat, Circuit Judge, held that the parties' appeals were moot.

Appeals dismissed; vacated, and remanded with instructions to dismiss.

West Headnotes (5)

[1] Federal Courts
Available and effective relief

If events that occur subsequent to the filing of a lawsuit deprive the court of the ability to give the plaintiff meaningful relief, then the case is "moot" and must be dismissed.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Voluntary cessation of challenged conduct

The voluntary cessation of challenged conduct will only moot a claim when there is no reasonable expectation that the accused litigant will resume the conduct after the lawsuit is dismissed.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Courts
Weight and sufficiency

Generally, the party asserting mootness bears the heavy burden of persuading the court that the challenged conduct cannot reasonably be expected to start up again.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Courts
Presumptions and burden of proof

In asserting mootness, government actors enjoy a rebuttable presumption that the objectionable behavior will not recur.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Federal Courts
Particular cases

In § 1983 action brought by operators of adult entertainment establishments against city, alleging that the city's adult zoning scheme was an invalid time, manner, and place restriction under the First Amendment because it did not leave the operators with adequate alternative avenues for their protected activities, appeals from district court order granting in part and denying in part both parties' motions for summary judgment were moot, after the city deleted the provisions from the zoning scheme that the operators claimed foreclosed their ability to relocate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1267 G. Randall Garrou, Weston, Garrou & Mooney, Los Angeles, CA, for Jacksonville Property Rights Association, Inc.

Lawrence G. Walters, Walters Law Group, Altamonte SPG, FL, for Horton Enterprises, Inc.

Cindy Ann Laquidara, Office of Gen. Counsel, Jacksonville, FL, for City of Jacksonville, FL.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

Before TJOFLAT, HILL and ALARCÓN, [*] Circuit Judges.

[*] Honorable Arthur L. Alarcón, United States Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit, sitting by designation.

Opinion

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

This appeal stems from a city's attempt to control the location of nude dancing establishments operating within its borders. While both the city and the nude dancing establishments appeal the district court's order granting in part and denying in part both parties' motions for summary judgment, [1] the city has, during the pendency of this appeal, legislatively removed the two provisions underlying the dancing clubs' claims. Based on this subsequent action, we cannot entertain the merits of the parties' arguments.

[1] The district court's order was a final judgment, and we have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

I.

A.

Horton Enterprises, Inc. and Hartstock Enterprises, Inc. (collectively, the "Plaintiffs") [2] operate adult entertainment establishments in Jacksonville, Florida. Horton has operated its club, "The New Solid Gold," since 1982, and Hartstock has operated "The Doll House" since 1986. These two establishments constitute two of Jacksonville's 1268 three fully nude dancing establishments.

[2] Jacksonville Property Rights Association (the "Association") is the third plaintiff in this case. This group is an association of businesses providing live entertainment in Jacksonville with one or more members who want to establish adult establishments in Jacksonville. All references to the Plaintiffs apply to the Association as well.

To lawfully operate in the City of Jacksonville (the "City"), a business's physical location must satisfy three separate zoning criteria: (1) geographic zoning district; (2) land-use designation (i.e., commercial or heavy industrial); and, for certain establishments, such as adult businesses, (3) minimum distances—termed "buffer" restrictions—from other locations, such as churches and schools.

The City creates these zoning criteria in two ways. First, the City's Comprehensive Plan (the "Plan") acts as the zoning "constitution" [3]; the Plan is an overarching planning document that is not easily changed and with which all subsequent zoning and land-use legislation must comply. [4] Second, the City passes zoning ordinances that amend its municipal code; these ordinances and the municipal code enforce—and must be consistent with—relevant portions of the Plan.

[3] See Citrus Cnty. v. Halls River Dev., Inc., 8 So.3d 413, 420–21 (Fla. 5th Dist.Ct.App.2009).

[4] The general procedures for amending a comprehensive plan are found in Fla. Stat. § 163.3184. Larger cities, such as Jacksonville, may also amend their comprehensive plans under a pilot program providing limited State oversight. See id. § 163.32465; see also infra, note 18. As described in part I.C, infra, the City used these pilot procedures to amend the Plan in 2010.

Prior to 2005, the Plan permitted adult establishments like those operated by the Plaintiffs to operate in the Commercial/Community General–2 zoning district

("CCG–2") and, within CCG–2 districts, only on plots designated for Heavy Industrial land use ("HI"). Adult establishments must also comply with various buffer restrictions established by the City and the State of Florida.[5] The Plaintiffs' locations did not comply with some of these requirements, but were allowed to operate as lawful non-conforming uses because their use predated the restrictions.

5 The specific buffer restrictions for adult entertainment business can be found in the Jacksonville Municipal Code § 656.1103(a), which requires adult businesses to be at least (1) 1,000 feet from another adult entertainment business; (2) 500 feet from the boundary of a residential district; (3) 1,000 feet from a school or a church; and (4) 500 feet from any business licensed to serve liquor. Florida state law also prohibits an adult business from locating within 2,500 feet of an elementary school, a middle school, or a secondary school unless given prior approval by the relevant county or city government. Fla. Stat. § 847.0134(1).

The City's adult zoning scheme[6]—as written—also subjected adult entertainment businesses to another regulatory wrinkle. A section of the City's municipal code—not the Plan—required adult businesses to obtain discretionary exceptions from the local sheriff before commencing operations. Jacksonville Municipal Code § 656.725(a)-(j). Thus, as written, the City's adult zoning scheme did not permit adult businesses to relocate or commence operations in any area—even the CCG–2 district zoned for HI—as of right.[7] Similar discretionary exceptions imposed by the City, though not the exceptions in § 656.725(a)-(j), were declared unconstitutional by this court in Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358 (11th Cir.1999), where we held that adult businesses must be permitted some areas 1269 in which they could operate as of right. Id. at 1361–63.[8] The City has never enforced the § 656.725(a)-(j) exceptions, however. It has not received a new business permit for an adult entertainment establishment in over a decade and therefore has had no occasion to enforce the provisions.

6 We refer to the City's various land use regulations for adult businesses as the "adult zoning scheme."

7 In the zoning context, "as of right" means that, provided the land owner meets all other criteria, the local government administering the zoning scheme must permit a land owner to operate without seeking any discretionary exceptions.

8 The City removed the offending exceptions at issue in Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358 (11th Cir.1999). A 2007 ordinance amended the City's municipal code to classify "adult entertainment" as a "permitted" use in the CCG–2 zoning district.

In 2005, the City altered its adult zoning scheme in two ways. First, it amended the Plan to remove references to adult entertainment in the description of HI land use. Prior to 2005, the description of HI included the following language: "[a]dult entertainment facilities are allowed by right." The 2005 amendments deleted this passage and placed a similar reference in the description of Community/General Commercial land use ("C/GC"): "[a]dult entertainment facilities are allowed by right only in Zoning District CCG–2." The implication of this change was that adult entertainment would be permitted in all CCG–2 districts, not just those districts with HI land use designations.

However, the City left in place a statement under the broader description of "commercial" uses, which preceded the more specific description of C/GC: "Adult entertainment facilities are allowed by right in the heavy industrial land use category, but not in commercial." The reference to "commercial" included the C/GC land use designation. Until February 2009, the City interpreted the Plan as permitting adult entertainment only in CCG–2 zoned for HI. J. Final Pre–Trial Statement 14.

Second, the City passed Ordinance 2005–743–E (the "Ordinance"), amending Jacksonville's Municipal Code. Pertinent to this appeal, the Ordinance included a mandatory amortization provision requiring any adult business that did not conform to the City's adult zoning scheme—i.e., the Plaintiffs—to cease operation at that non-conforming location by November 10, 2010. Jacksonville Municipal Code § 656.725(k). If the Plaintiffs wished to continue operating, they would have to move to a new location in compliance with the adult zoning scheme. Neither of these changes eliminated the discretionary exceptions found in § 656.725(a)-(j), and those provisions remained on the books.

B.

The Plaintiffs sued the City in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida on December 14, 2005.[9] After over two years of settlement negotiations, the Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint on May 28, 2008. The amended complaint sought relief under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that the City's adult zoning scheme violated their right under the First Amendment to present nude dancing.[10]

9 The initial complaint challenged a number of other provisions regulating adult businesses which are not at issue in this appeal. That complaint also included two additional plaintiffs: E.M.R.O Corp., a Florida corporation also operating a fully nude dancing establishment; and Simone Kelcher, an individual who works as a nude dancer regulated under Jacksonville's adult business laws. Neither party appears in the amended complaint and they presumably have abandoned their claims.

10 See Barnes v. Glen Theatre Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2460, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) ("[N]ude dancing of the kind sought to be performed here is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so."). Here, the Plaintiffs only alleged that the City's adult zoning scheme violated the First Amendment. Thus, anytime we refer to something as "unconstitutional," we are referring to the First Amendment and no other provision of the United States Constitution.

1270 The Plaintiffs alleged that the City's adult zoning scheme was an invalid time, manner and place restriction because it did not leave the Plaintiffs with adequate alternative avenues for their protected activities as required by City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 50, 53–54, 106 S.Ct. 925, 930, 932, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986).[11] They argued that, although the amortization provision would force them to move, the City's adult zoning scheme did not provide any locations where they could relocate as of right.

11 Under City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), content-neutral laws that infringe on speech are acceptable as "time, manner, and place" regulations if "they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. at 928.

The Plaintiffs pointed to two provisions establishing the violation. First, § 656.725(a)-(j)'s requirements that adult businesses receive discretionary zoning exceptions rendered any available locations effectively unavailable for the purpose of counting alternative locations. See Lady J, 176 F.3d at 1361–63. Second, the Plaintiffs argued that the combined effect of the Plan and various buffer restrictions completely foreclosed all alternative locations. For this second theory, the Plaintiffs pointed to the Plan's requirements that adult businesses locate in CCG–2 districts zoned for HI land use. According to the Plaintiffs, none of the locations satisfying these criteria also complied with the various buffer restrictions.[12] Therefore, the City's adult zoning scheme effectively zoned adult businesses out of existence.

12 The Plaintiffs also alleged that the City's zoning scheme—particularly the mandatory amortization provision—was unconstitutional for three other reasons. First, the City's "constant changes" to its adult business regulations "effectively denie[d] anyone considering the establishment or relocation of an adult entertainment business of the 'reasonable opportunity' to do so." Am. Compl. ¶ 40. Second, "the primary purpose of amortization of the plaintiffs' businesses is content-based, and such changes [to the City's zoning scheme] and amortizations are not driven by predominantly content-neutral reasons." Id. ¶ 45. Third, the amortization provision impermissibly discriminated against the Plaintiffs' businesses because the City imposed the mandatory amortization only on adult entertainment businesses. Id. ¶ 47. These three arguments were not raised on appeal.

The allegations described above and in the text constituted only Count One of the two counts brought in the amended complaint. Count Two was brought by the Association, which alleged that one or more of its members "wish[ed] to acquire and establish a new site in Jacksonville for operation of an adult entertainment establishment" but, because of the violations described above, were "both chilled and directly prevented from doing so." Id. ¶ 60. Because this argument requires the same analysis as does the Plaintiffs' arguments detailed in the text, we will not independently discuss Count Two.

To remedy these violations, the Plaintiffs requested a declaratory judgment that the City's adult zoning scheme—including the mandatory amortization provision—was unconstitutional. They also sought a permanent injunction barring the City from either enforcing the amortization provision against the Plaintiffs at their current locations or preventing them from moving to new locations. [13]

13 The Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief against prohibitions on "new location[s]" for adult entertainment businesses was directed primarily at the Association's Count Two claim for relief on behalf of one or more of its members. Id. Prayer for Relief ¶ 2. The Plaintiffs also requested attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1988.

1271 The City's amended answer asserted that the City's adult zoning scheme provided the Plaintiffs with available sites to which they could relocate. First, the City denied that the exception requirements in § 656.725(a)-(j) were enforceable or had been enforced. Am. Answer ¶ 30. It claimed that, because the Plan permitted adult businesses "as of right" in CCG–2 districts, the exception requirements were invalid as to locations within CCG–2 districts. Second, the City admitted that the adult zoning scheme confined adult businesses to CCG–2 districts zoned for HI, but it denied that these requirements left no permissible locations for adult businesses. Id. ¶ 53(b)(3)-(8).

In January 2009, both sides filed cross-motions for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56. The City's motion maintained that the adult zoning scheme—locating adult businesses within CCG–2 districts zoned for HI—permitted 372 alternative sites, which provided sufficient alternative locations under Renton's time, manner and place requirements.

However, on February 17, 2009, the City completely changed its theory of the case. In its response to the Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, the City asserted for the first time that the Plan allowed adult businesses to locate in CCG–2 districts zoned for C/GC and not in areas zoned for HI. This new interpretation produced ninety-one available locations to which the Plaintiffs could relocate; again, the City argued that these sites satisfied the time, manner, and place test.

Noting the confused issues, the district court ordered the parties to re-file their motions for summary judgment, and each again filed cross-motions for summary judgment. In this round of briefing, the parties agreed that the only issue for the district court was whether the City's adult zoning scheme permitted an adequate number of alternative sites for the Plaintiffs' businesses.

The City argued that the adult zoning scheme provided sufficient alternative locations for adult businesses. It pointed to the Plan's C/GC land use designation, which states that adult uses are permitted as of right in the CCG–2 zoning district. Emphasizing this point, the City noted that, within the Plan's section describing HI land use, adult businesses are nowhere mentioned; the 2005 amendment eliminated the requirement that adult businesses locate in HI zones. The remaining reference to HI under the general description of "commercial" uses was a "clerical oversight" and the City asked the court to treat it as such. To prove this point, the City pointed to legislative history demonstrating that the 2005 amendments to the Plan were intended to remove the HI requirement for adult businesses. Regarding the exception requirement, the City argued that the Plan explicitly permitted adult establishments in CCG–2 districts as of right; the provisions requiring exceptions, § 656.725(a)-(j), conflicted with the Plan and were thus unenforceable.

The Plaintiffs maintained that the Plan required adult businesses to locate in CCG–2 districts zoned for HI and that no such locations also satisfied the various buffer requirements. [14] Reading the Plan as the City did, the Plaintiffs argued, violated Florida's norms of statutory construction because it would "render a nullity" the Plan's statement that "[a]dult entertainment facilities are allowed by 1272 right in the heavy industrial land use category, but not in commercial." Regarding the exceptions, the Plaintiffs maintained that their existence rendered all otherwise permissible locations unavailable for the purpose of time, manner, and place regulations.

14 The City stipulated that there were no sites within the CCG–2 district zoned for HI that also met the buffer restrictions.

The Plaintiffs did not ask the court to strike down the obstacles prohibiting their relocation. They instead argued that, because the adult zoning scheme provided no available locations, the amortization provision was unconstitutional. They took a similar tact when discussing the zoning exceptions. The Plaintiffs argued that the zoning exception requirements created no available locations, rendering the amortization provision unconstitutional. It was only in the alternative that the Plaintiffs asked the district court to declare the exceptions unconstitutional under Lady J.

On September 30, 2009, the district court granted in part and denied in part each side's motion. The court accepted the parties' main stipulations: (1) the City's adult zoning scheme should be reviewed as a time, manner, and place restriction under Renton; and (2) the only issue under Renton was whether the adult zoning scheme—the conflicting sentences within the Plan and § 656.725(a)-(j)'s exception requirements—actually permitted the Plaintiffs to relocate to any of the ninety-one sites the City claimed were available.

Regarding the Plan, the district court agreed with the City and found that the Plan did not require adult businesses to locate in HI zones and that the Plan permitted adult businesses to operate as of right in CCG–2 districts zoned for C/CG. To reach this conclusion, the court first found that the Plan was ambiguous on its face. The Plan's statement that adult businesses must locate in HI zones conflicted with its subsequent statement that adult businesses may locate as of right in CCG–2 districts. The two statements were, in the court's view, irreconcilable.

To solve this ambiguity, the court turned to the legislative history of the 2005 amendments to the Plan. According to the district court, the 2005 amendments were designed to change the land use designation from HI to C/GC. The prior version of the Plan mentioned adult entertainment businesses in the section dealing with HI land usage; the 2005 revisions deleted those provisions and inserted the relevant text under the C/GC section. The remaining reference to HI was, the court agreed, a scrivener's error. That language arose in a general description of commercial land uses and, in the court's view, the most likely explanation for this error was that the City Council simply overlooked this reference while it focused narrowly on the relevant land use categories.

Regarding the exceptions, the district court found the provisions invalid under two alternative theories. First, the provisions requiring an exception conflicted with the Plan's pronouncement that adult businesses were permitted as of right in CCG–2 districts. Because the Plan is akin to a constitution, the conflicting ordinance provisions, § 656.725(a)-(j), were invalid. Second, the court determined that, if the Plan did not invalidate the exception requirements, those provisions were unconstitutional under Lady J. To remedy those failings, the court found the exception provisions severable from the rest of the City's zoning scheme.

With these rulings in place, the district court found that the amortization requirement was constitutional. The Plaintiffs would be required to move to one of the ninety-one available locations in a CCG–2 district zoned for C/GC land use. None of those ninety-one sites would be subject to the exception requirements. The district 1273 court entered judgment to that effect on October 5, 2009, declaring the exception requirements unconstitutional under the First Amendment and upholding the remainder of the City's adult zoning scheme.

Both parties appealed the judgment. The Plaintiffs appealed the district court's ruling upholding the mandatory amortization provision. They argued that the district court violated Florida's norms of statutory construction by essentially deleting the Plan's references to HI. In the alternative, the Plaintiffs claimed that the district court did not have jurisdiction to render an "authoritative" reading of the Plan, and therefore could not "rewrite" the Plan in the manner it did; the court's only choice was to declare the entire scheme unconstitutional and permit the Plaintiffs to remain at their locations. The City also appealed the district court's ruling declaring the exceptions unconstitutional and enjoining their enforcement.[15] To preserve the status quo, the district court enjoined enforcement of the amortization provision until the resolution of this appeal.

15 During the briefing to this court, the Plaintiffs moved for leave to file a surreply to the City's reply brief in its cross-appeal, or in the alternative to strike the City's reply brief. This motion was carried with the case. Having considered the arguments, the Plaintiffs' motion is denied.

C.

While this appeal remained pending, the City passed legislation consistent with their legal position. First, the City amended § 656.725(a)-(j) to remove all references to discretionary exceptions; this amendment became law on November 30, 2009.[16]

16 The amendment was passed as Ordinance No. 2009–835–E. It passed the Jacksonville City Council on November 24, 2009, and was approved by the mayor on November 30, 2009.

Second, the City passed an amendment to the Plan on February 26, 2010, deleting the remaining suggestion that adult businesses must locate in HI zones.[17] This enactment did not automatically take effect, however.[18] The Plaintiffs challenged the amendments in a state administrative hearing, alleging that the amendments failed to comply with various procedural and substantive requirements. On January 11, 2011, the administrative law judge found no such errors and ruled that the amendment to the Plan was in compliance 1274 with Florida law. The amendments took effect on February 21, 2011 when the Florida Department of Community Affairs issued its order accepting the administrative law judge's recommendations.[19]

17 The amendment was passed as Ordinance 2010–35–E. It passed the City Council on February 23, 2010, and was approved by the mayor on February 26, 2010.

18 As stated above, supra, note 4, the City amended the Plan pursuant to Florida's pilot program for larger cities, Fla. Stat. § 163.32465. This pilot program applies to all amendments to these cities' comprehensive plans unless the amendments concern one of several enumerated topics. See id. § 163.32465(3)(b)-(e). Under the pilot program, a city must first hold a public hearing on the amendment and then pass the proposed amendment through its legislative body. After passage, the city must transmit the proposed changes to the relevant State agency for comment, which the agency must provide to the city within thirty days. Id. § 163.32465(4)(a)-(b). After holding a second hearing and again receiving approval from the city's legislative body, see id. § 163.32465(5)(a), the amendment will become final in thirty-one days, id. § 163.32465(6)(g), unless an "affected person" or a State planning agency requests a formal hearing before an administrative law judge to determine whether the amendments comply with relevant state laws, id. § 163.32465(6)(a)-(b). If the judge approves the plan, then the State planning agency has thirty days to: (1) approve the plan, id. § 163.32465(6)(f)(2); or (2) refer the amendment to a separate State agency if the State planning agency finds the amendment not in compliance, id. § 163.32465(6)(f)(1).

19 Although the Plaintiffs have appealed this decision to Florida's First District Court of Appeal, the Plaintiffs acknowledge that the Department of Community Affairs's approval means that the City's amendments to the Plan are now in effect. Their March 2, 2011 letter to this court implies, however, that this approval might not affect our jurisdiction: "it will not be clear until after that appeal is resolved whether [the amendment] will remain in effect." Whatever the outcome of the appeal, the Plaintiffs have acknowledged that the City completed its effort to amend the Plan to remove the conflicting passages.

II.

A.

[1] This subsequent legislation impacts this court's jurisdiction. Under Article III of the Constitution, federal courts may only hear live "cases" and "controversies." U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. " 'If events that occur subsequent to the filing of a lawsuit ... deprive the court of the ability to give the plaintiff ... meaningful relief, then the case is moot and must be dismissed.' " Sheely v. MRI Radiology Network, P.A., 505 F.3d 1173, 1183 (11th Cir.2007) (quoting Troiano v. Supervisor of Elections, 382 F.3d 1276, 1281–82 (11th Cir.2004)) (omissions in original).

[2] "The doctrine of voluntary cessation provides an important exception to the general rule" of mootness. Troiano, 382 F.3d at 1282. "It is well settled that 'a defendant's voluntary cessation of a challenged practice does not deprive a federal court of its power to determine the legality of the practice.' " Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 189, 120 S.Ct. 693, 708, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (quoting City of Mesquite v. Aladdin's Castle, Inc., 455 U.S. 283, 289, 102 S.Ct. 1070, 1074, 71 L.Ed.2d 152 (1982)). "Otherwise, a party could moot a challenge to a practice simply by changing the practice during the course of the lawsuit, and then reinstate the practice as soon as the litigation was brought to a close." Jews for Jesus, Inc. v. Hillsborough Cnty. Aviation Auth., 162 F.3d 627, 629 (11th Cir.1998). Accordingly, the voluntary cessation of challenged conduct will only moot a claim when there is no "reasonable expectation" that the accused litigant will resume the conduct after the lawsuit is dismissed. Id.

[3] [4] Generally, the "party asserting mootness" bears the "heavy burden of persuading the court that the challenged conduct cannot reasonably be expected to start up again." Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 189, 120 S.Ct. at 708 (internal citations and alteration omitted). We also recognize, however, that "government actor[s enjoy] a rebuttable presumption that the objectionable behavior will not recur." Troiano, 382 F.3d at 1283 (emphasis in original); see also Harrell v. The Fla. Bar, 608 F.3d 1241, 1266 (11th Cir.2010) ("[W]e have applied a 'rebuttable presumption' in favor of governmental actors ...."); Sheely, 505 F.3d at 1184 ("[G]overnment actors receive the benefit of a rebuttable presumption that the offending behavior will not recur."). Hence, "the Supreme Court has held almost uniformly that voluntary cessation [by a government defendant] moots the claim." Beta Upsilon Chi Upsilon Chapter v. Machen, 586 F.3d 908, 917 (11th Cir.2009) (citations omitted) (collecting cases). And "this Court has consistently held that a challenge to government policy that has been unambiguously terminated will be moot in the absence of some reasonable basis to believe that the policy 1275 will be reinstated if the suit is terminated." Troiano, 382 F.3d at 1285.

[5] Here, the City has removed § 656.725's exceptions and deleted from the Plan the provisions the Plaintiffs claim foreclose their ability to relocate. Therefore, the district court's order enjoining enforcement of the exceptions currently enjoins nothing and the Plaintiffs appeal the district court's interpretation of a sentence in the Plan that no longer exists.

After reviewing the record, we are satisfied that the City has not passed this legislation to manipulate our jurisdiction. Regarding the § 656.725(a)-(j) exceptions, the City maintained throughout the litigation that these provisions were inapplicable, and the district court based its ruling in part on the conflict between these provisions and the Plan's insistence that adult businesses belonged in CCG–2 districts as of right. Combined with the fact that this court has already declared similar exceptions unconstitutional, see Lady J. Lingerie, Inc. v. City of Jacksonville, 176 F.3d 1358, 1361–63 (11th Cir.1999), we see nothing in the record suggesting that the City will re-enact the discretionary exceptions.

We are similarly convinced that the City will not re-insert the HI reference into the Plan. First, this amendment is consistent with the City's—albeit brand new—position in the district court. The City argued that the Plan's reference to HI should have been deleted in the 2005 amendments and remained merely as a scrivener's error; deleting the provision legislatively treats it as such. Second, amending the Plan is a time-consuming endeavor that requires approval of a State agency—in this case, the Florida Department for Community Affairs. The City is unlikely to jump through those bureaucratic hoops again in order to re-insert a provision—the HI reference—that it claims remained on the books in error. These appeals are therefore moot and the parties' appeals must be dismissed. See Thomas v. Bryant, 614 F.3d 1288, 1294 (11th Cir.2010) ("Where a case becomes moot after the district court enters judgment but before the appellate court has issued a decision, the appellate court must dismiss the appeal, vacate the district court's judgment, and remand with instructions to dismiss as moot." (citation and internal quotations omitted)). [20] 20 Pending in the district court are the Plaintiffs' motions for attorneys' fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988. We note that our decision to dismiss each parties' appeal, vacate the judgment, and instruct the district court to dismiss the case will not deprive the Plaintiffs of the opportunity to seek those § 1988 attorneys' fees. See Thomas v. Bryant, 614 F.3d 1288, 1294 (11th Cir.2010) (" '[W]hen plaintiffs clearly succeeded in obtaining the relief sought before the district court and an intervening event rendered the case moot on appeal, plaintiffs are still "prevailing parties" for the purposes of attorney's fees for the district court litigation.' " (quoting Diffenderfer v. Gomez–Colon, 587 F.3d 445, 454 (1st Cir.2009))); Kimbrough v. Bowman Transp., Inc., 929 F.2d 599, 599 (11th Cir.1991) (vacating the judgment and instructing the district court to dismiss the case following the parties' settlement, but remanding to determine attorneys' fees).

B.

Our decision above does not address fully the Plaintiffs' concerns. They argue that they are entitled to a declaration that, from November 2005 to February 17, 2009, their businesses constituted lawful conforming uses under the City's zoning laws. This time range refers to the period between the date the Ordinance took effect, thereby imposing the mandatory amortization provision, and the date that City interpreted the Plan to allow adult businesses in CCG–2 districts zoned for C/GC uses. The Plaintiffs' argument is not intuitive 1276 and requires explanation before it can be disposed of.

The Plaintiffs' argument proceeds as follows. First, the City's position until February 2009 was that the Plaintiffs must relocate to CCG–2 districts zoned for HI. Second, the parties agree that no such locations existed that also complied with various buffer restrictions. Third, these conditions made the entire scheme unconstitutional because the City was forcing the Plaintiffs to cease their constitutionally protected conduct at their current locations while offering no alternate means of communication. See City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 50, 106 S.Ct. 925, 930, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) (holding that governments may regulate the location of adult entertainment, which is protected under the First Amendment, provided that the zoning ordinances "serve a substantial government interest and allow[ ] for reasonable alternative avenues of communication"). Fourth, because the adult zoning scheme was unconstitutional during those three and a half years, the Plaintiffs' property could not be non-conforming because, as the Plaintiffs say, "non-conformity can [not] be created by non-compliance with an unconstitutional law." Appellant's Opening Br. 43. Finally, this declaration could be useful to the Plaintiffs because, as they claim, "it is not entirely clear that the amortization ordinance would apply (or that the City would even attempt to enforce it) if the City were told that the plaintiffs' uses did not become non-conforming until long after enactment of the amortization ordinance." Id. at 43–44. In short, the declaration might prevent the City from forcing the Plaintiffs to move.

While this argument is conceptually interesting, two defects prohibit us from deciding this issue. First, it is not clear that the Plaintiffs' argument presents us with a live case or controversy. The Plaintiffs argue that a declaration might affect their rights because the mandatory amortization provision might not apply, or the City might choose not to enforce the amortization provision, against uses that became non-conforming in 2009. In short, the Plaintiffs ask this court to issue a declaration on an issue that might never impact their substantive rights. They therefore ask this court either to issue an impermissible advisory opinion, see Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 516, 127 S.Ct. 1438, 1452, 167 L.Ed.2d 248 (2007) (citing Hayburn's Case, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 408, 1. L.Ed. 436 (1792)), or to decide a case that is not yet ripe for decision, see Mulhall v. UNITED HERE Local 355, 618 F.3d 1279, 1291 (11th Cir.2010) ("The function of the ripeness doctrine is to 'protect[ ] federal courts from engaging in speculation or wasting their resources through the review of potential or abstract disputes.' " (quoting Harrell, 608 F.3d at 1257–58) (alteration in original)). Neither doctrine permits us to opine on the merits of the Plaintiffs' argument.

Alternatively, the Plaintiffs waived this argument because they never raised this issue in the district court. Their motion for summary judgment reads:

> Because the City's adult zoning scheme is, in its entirety, a facially unconstitutional prior restraint on expression, the businesses of plaintiffs Horton and Hartsock cannot properly be deemed non-conforming uses, as they are in conformance with all constitutional zoning restrictions. Consequently, these plaintiffs seek a declaration that their uses are fully conforming uses and are not subject to the restrictions and amortization provisions otherwise applicable to non-conforming uses.

Pls.' New Mot. for Summ. J. 13–14. Although this passage refers to a declaratory 1277 judgment, it did not present the more esoteric argument pressed on appeal. Notwithstanding their claims to the contrary, see Appellants' Reply/Cross–Appellees' Br. 17 n.9, the Plaintiffs were aware that they might require this peculiar form of relief. The City changed its interpretation to the Plan during the first round of summary judgment briefing; the Plaintiffs therefore knew that the district court was being asked to, in the Plaintiffs' words, "re-write" the Plan. During the revised summary judgment briefing, the Plaintiffs could have requested this more specific relief.

III.

For the foregoing reasons, the parties' appeals are DISMISSED, the judgment is VACATED, and the case is REMANDED to the district court with instructions to dismiss this action.

SO ORDERED.

All Citations

635 F.3d 1266, 22 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 1915

480 F.3d 336
United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

H AND A LAND CORP.; et al., Plaintiffs,
Reliable Consultants, Inc., doing business as Dreamer's, Intervenor Plaintiff-Appellee,
v.
CITY OF KENNEDALE, TEXAS, Defendant-Intervenor Defendant-Appellant.

Nos. 05-11474, 06-10304.
|
Feb. 22, 2007.

Synopsis

Background: Sexually-oriented store brought action against city, challenging ordinance regulating sexually-oriented businesses. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Terry R. Means, J., granted store's motion for permanent injunction, and city appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Benavides, Circuit Judge, held that evidence upon which city relied for ordinance was not shoddy, and thus, it was evidence city could have reasonably believed was relevant.

Reversed.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Constitutional Law
Zoning and Land Use in General
Constitutional Law
Secondary Effects

Zoning regulations restricting the location of adult entertainment businesses are considered time, place, and manner restrictions if they do not ban adult-entertainment businesses throughout the whole of a jurisdiction and are designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects of such businesses rather than to restrict the content of their speech per se. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Time, place, and manner restrictions on speech violate the First Amendment unless they are content-neutral, are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest, do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication, and are narrowly tailored. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Geographic Restrictions in General
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Evidence upon which city relied for ordinance regulating sexually-oriented businesses was not shoddy, and thus, it was evidence city could have reasonably believed was relevant, for purposes of determination of whether ordinance was narrowly tailored, as required to avoid violation of right to free speech; although seven of the nine studies of harmful secondary effects of sexually-oriented businesses upon which city relied failed to differentiate between on-site and off-site businesses, two studies included surveys of real estate appraisers that focused strictly on adult bookstores, and overwhelming majority of survey respondents in both studies predicted that presence of adult bookstore would negatively affect real estate value in surrounding area. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

337 Wayne K. Olson (argued), April Marie Virnig, Taylor, Olson, Adkins, Sralla & Elam, Fort Worth, TX, for City of Kennedale.

H. Louise Sirkin, Jennifer Marie Kinsley (argued), Sirkin, Pinales, Mezibov & Schwartz, Cincinnati, OH, Samuel Gary Polozola, Law Office of Gary Polozola, Fort Worth, TX, for Reliable Consultants, Inc.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Before SMITH, BENAVIDES and PRADO, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

BENAVIDES, Circuit Judge:

Kennedale, Texas, appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment. We reverse and remand.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This appeal raises a single question: Does the evidence offered by the city of Kennedale sufficiently support its ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses?

In 1999, Kennedale annexed land that included multiple sexually oriented businesses, thereby subjecting those businesses to the city's ordinances. The ordinances prohibit the operation of sexually oriented businesses within 800 feet of churches, schools, residences, day care centers, parks, and other sexually oriented businesses, as well as within specified overlay districts. Additionally, the ordinances require sexually oriented businesses to obtain a license to operate. In justifying its ordinances, Kennedale relied on (1) studies from nine other cities, (2) an opinion survey of land use appraisers conducted by the city's attorney, and (3) citizen commentary from public meetings, all regarding the harmful secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses on surrounding land uses.

338 Following annexation, the ordinances allowed affected businesses three years to recoup their investments and relocate. Following criticism that the regulations failed to leave a sufficient number of alternative locations for already existing sexually oriented businesses, the city amended the ordinances to identify specific parcels of land upon which sexually oriented businesses may locate.

Reliable Consultants, Inc., d/b/a "Dreamers" (hereinafter "Reliable") is an off-site store, meaning that it sells video tapes, DVD's, magazines, and other print materials, but that none of the materials can be viewed or consumed on the premises, and the store offers no live entertainment, viewing booths, or theaters. [1]

[1] Originally, there were five affected sexually oriented businesses/plaintiffs, but all but one settled during the course of litigation, leaving Reliable as the lone plaintiff-appellee.

After finding the ordinances were content neutral, the district court relied on Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 330 F.3d 288 (5th Cir.2003), to find that the City's evidence of secondary effects failed to show that the ordinances were narrowly tailored to further a substantial government interest. The court declined to consider additional evidence Kennedale offered, and granted Reliable's motion for a permanent injunction. Kennedale appealed.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

We review a district court's summary judgment ruling and other legal issues de novo. N.W. Enters. Inc. v. City of Houston, 352 F.3d 162, 172 (5th Cir.2003). We review a district court's factual findings for clear error. Kona Tech. Corp. v. S. Pac. Transp. Co., 225 F.3d 595, 601 (5th Cir.2000). The Supreme Court's admonition that cities not justify ordinances by relying on "shoddy data or reasoning," City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (plurality opinion), requires factual findings, but turns on the legal interpretation of what the Supreme Court meant by "shoddy." Therefore, we review a district court's findings as to the existence of a city's evidence for clear error, but we review de novo whether that evidence falls within the Supreme Court's admonition.

III. DISCUSSION

[1] [2] "Zoning regulations restricting the location of adult entertainment businesses are considered time, place, and manner restrictions ... if they do not ban [adult-entertainment] businesses throughout the whole of a jurisdiction and are 'designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects of such businesses' rather than to restrict the content of their speech per se." Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 291 (quoting City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)) (citing Lakeland Lounge v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1255, 1257-58 (5th Cir.1992)). Time, place, and manner restrictions on speech violate the First Amendment unless they are content-neutral, are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest, do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication, and are narrowly tailored. See Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 291-92.

Kennedale's ordinances meet the narrow tailoring standard if they "target [ ] and eliminate[ ] no more than the exact source of the evil [they] seek [ ] to remedy." Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 293; Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988). Thus, an ordinance meant to deter property depreciation may only regulate businesses for which a connection to property depreciation can be demonstrated.

339 To show that an ordinance advances its goals, a city "may rely on any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant.' " Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. However, "[t]his is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance." Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. [2]

2 Though this was a plurality opinion, a review of the concurrences and dissent demonstrates that the Court would unanimously support this admonishment.

On-site businesses (i.e., adult theaters or strip clubs) pose a greater threat of secondary effects than off-site sexually oriented businesses (i.e., adult bookstores). [3] Therefore, a city that enforces an ordinance meant to prevent harmful secondary effects associated with the operation of an off-site business must rely on evidence showing that off-site businesses, rather than the broader category of sexually oriented businesses that includes on-site businesses, cause harmful secondary effects. Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 295 (requiring city to "provide at least some substantial evidence of secondary effects specific to adult businesses that sell books or videos solely for off-site entertainment" to meet narrow tailoring requirement).

3 See Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 295 ("Off-site businesses differ from on-site ones, because it is only reasonable to assume that the former are less likely to create harmful secondary effects. If consumers of pornography cannot view the materials at the sexually oriented establishment, they are less likely to linger in the area and engage in public alcohol consumption and other undesirable activities.")

In Encore Videos, we invalidated San Antonio's ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses because the city failed to present adequate evidence showing a connection between off-site businesses and harmful secondary effects. San Antonio's evidence consisted of three studies conducted in other cities showing a connection between sexually oriented businesses, without isolating off-site businesses and secondary effects. Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 294-95. Those studies did not provide any information exclusive to off-site businesses, so a substantial portion of the ordinance's burden on speech did not serve to advance its goals, and it failed the narrow tailoring prong. Id. at 295.

[3] This case differs from Encore Videos because Kennedale, unlike San Antonio, offers evidence that purports to show a connection between purely off-site businesses, or "bookstores," and harmful secondary effects. To determine whether the ordinance at issue is narrowly tailored, we must determine whether Kennedale could reasonably believe that the evidence is relevant to show the requisite connection to harmful secondary effects. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. In other words, we ask whether that evidence "fairly support[s] the [city's] rationale for its ordinance." Id. Applying our holding from Encore Videos, Kennedale cannot reasonably believe its evidence is relevant unless it sufficiently segregates data attributable to off-site establishments from the data attributable to on-site establishments. Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 294-95.

Kennedale's evidence consisted of studies from nine cities, as well as an opinion survey of land use appraisers conducted by the city's attorney, and citizen commentary from public meetings. Seven of Kennedale's nine studies from other cities fail to differentiate between on-site and off-site businesses. The 1984 Indianapolis and 1986 Oklahoma City studies, however, included surveys of real estate appraisers that focused strictly on "adult bookstores." The overwhelming majority of survey respondents 340 in both studies predicted that the presence of an adult bookstore would negatively affect real estate value in the surrounding area. The Indianapolis survey, conducted by the City of Indianapolis in conjunction with Indiana University School of Business, Division of Research, polled 20% of the national membership of the American Institute of Real Estate

Appraisers.[4] Eighty percent of the respondents predicted that an adult bookstore would negatively impact residential property values, and seventy-two percent believed commercial property value would also be negatively effected. The Oklahoma City study, which surveyed one hundred Oklahoma City real estate appraisers, produced similar results: Seventy-four percent predicted a negative impact on real estate value in the surrounding area.

4 In the Indianapolis study, 1527 questionnaires were mailed, and 507 (33%) were returned.

Appellee Reliable argues that the term "bookstore," used in both surveys, is a term of art and does not sufficiently specify off-site premises. They argue instead that adult bookstores often include peep shows, arcades, and other forms of on-site entertainment, rendering them on-site establishments. However, the Supreme Court has previously used the term "bookstore" as distinguishable from "adult video arcades." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 442, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (discussing city's prohibition on "combination of adult bookstores and arcades"). This was a survey sent to and completed by real estate appraisers, and so what matters is how those appraisers would have understood the survey's reference to an adult bookstore.

Standing alone, it is reasonable to infer that the survey respondents interpreted "bookstore" as signifying an off-site establishment. Webster's Dictionary defines "bookstore" as "a place of business where books are the chief stock in trade." WEBSTER'S NEW INT'L DICTIONARY 253 (3d ed.1981). There is no reason to expect that simply adding the word "adult" to the term would completely transform the nature of the business activity described. Moreover, the Indianapolis survey also asked respondents to explain their prediction that an adult bookstore would negatively impact property value: 29% believed such an establishment would attract "undesirables" to the neighborhood, 14% felt it would create a bad image of the area, and 15% felt that it offended prevailing community attitudes. These reasons are equally applicable to an on-site or off-site establishment, and are distinguishable from the problems we have found to be unique to on-site businesses. See Encore Videos, 330 F.3d at 295 ("If consumers of pornography cannot view the materials at the sexually oriented establishment, they are less likely to linger in the area and engage in public alcohol consumption ...."). It is reasonable for Kennedale to believe that the appraisers responding to the survey understood the term "adult bookstore" to mean off-site businesses, such as that operated by the plaintiff-appellee.

Kennedale's ordinances purport to protect against harmful secondary effects. The Indianapolis and Oklahoma City studies support the belief that off-site sexually oriented businesses cause harmful secondary effects to the surrounding area in the form of decreased property value. So long as they are not relying on shoddy data or reasoning, we afford substantial deference to cities with regards to the ordinances they enact. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (noting that "a city must have 341 latitude to experiment" and "courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners"). The Indianapolis survey, in particular, was drafted by experts, pretested, and administered to a large, national pool of respondents. It is not "shoddy." We therefore find that Kennedale has produced evidence that it could have reasonably believed was relevant, and thus could have properly relied upon. The ordinances are narrowly tailored to advance a substantial governmental interest.

The other evidence produced by Kennedale to justify its ordinance-an opinion survey of land use appraisers conducted by the city's attorney, and citizen commentary from public meetings-has also been hotly debated by the parties. Given our findings above, however, we need not reach that additional evidence. Similarly, our finding moots the question of whether the district court erred in excluding additional evidence of secondary effects.

By finding that Kennedale's ordinances were not narrowly tailored, the district court never reached the final element of the time, place, and manner analysis: whether the ordinances unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. We therefore remand this case to the district court to make those findings.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we REVERSE the district court's summary judgment and remand for findings as to whether the ordinances leave open sufficient alternative channels of communication.

All Citations

480 F.3d 336

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Called into Doubt by DFW Vending, Inc. v. Jefferson County, Tex., E.D.Tex., January 7, 1998

65 F.3d 1248
United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

HANG ON, INC., d/b/a Hardbody's of Arlington, Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
CITY OF ARLINGTON, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 94–10959.
|
Sept. 20, 1995.

Topless bar sued city, alleging that city ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited touching between nude performers and customers in adult cabarets, violated First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments to United States Constitution, Equal Rights Amendment of Texas Constitution, and Texas Alcohol Beverage Code. After city removed case to federal court, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, John H. McBryde, J., granted city's motion for summary judgment. Bar appealed. The Court of Appeals, Patrick E. Higginbotham, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) bar had standing to assert its employees' and patrons' rights; (2) ordinance did not criminalize accidental or inadvertent touching; (3) ordinance did not violate equal protection by criminalizing touching in adult cabarets but not in other adult entertainment establishments; (4) ordinance did not violate Equal Rights Amendment by excluding male breasts from its definition of nudity; and (5) ordinance did not violate Alcoholic Beverage Code.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (12)

[1] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Topless bar had standing to challenge city ordinance's "no touch" provision as violating First Amendment rights of bar's employees and customers; bar's employees and customers could encounter practical difficulties in asserting their own rights, which, at minimum, reinforced close relationship prerequisite to surrogate standing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Civil Procedure
Rights of third parties or public

Assuming that case or controversy requirements of Article III are met, Constitution does not universally forbid party from asserting rights of others; rather, general rule prohibiting such surrogate claims is prudential. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Labor and Employment

Topless bar had standing to assert its employees' rights with respect to claim that city ordinance's "no touch" provision violated Equal Rights Amendment of Texas Constitution by excluding male breasts from definition of nudity; there was no suggestion that bar's dancers did not wish litigation to go forward and no indication that bar's interest in litigation diverged from that of its dancers, and city could not dispute that its ordinance had direct financial impact on bar, as well as bar's employees. Vernon's Ann.Texas Const. Art. 1, § 3a; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Civil Procedure
Particular Cases

Claims that ordinance is facially invalid are better candidates for summary disposition than claims that ordinance was unconstitutionally applied. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Contact between performers and patrons

City ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited touching between nude performer and customer, was not unconstitutionally overbroad in violation of First Amendment; such contact was beyond expressive scope of dancing itself, patrons had no First Amendment right to touch nude dancer, and even though ordinance applied to all employees in state of nudity, not just dancers, employees not engaged in expressive conduct such as dancing had no First Amendment right to appear in nude. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

41 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Performers

Topless-bar patrons have no First Amendment right to touch nude dancer. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Nonperforming nude employees of topless bar could not claim First Amendment protection solely by virtue of their nudity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Performers

City ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited touching between nude performer and customer, did not burden more protected expression than was essential to further city's interest in preventing prostitution, drug dealing, and assault, and ordinance was thus not unconstitutionally overbroad, despite topless bar's claim that, because ordinance did not specify requisite mental state, it criminalized accidental or inadvertent touching; under Texas law, ordinance required culpable mental state and, thus, did not criminalize inadvertent or negligent touching. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; V.T.C.A., Penal Code § 6.02(b, c); Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Public amusement and entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited touching between nude performer and customer, did not violate equal protection clause of Federal Constitution, even though it applied to adult cabarets but not to other adult entertainment establishments; city could rationally conclude that adult cabarets, which typically serve alcohol and attract large crowds, were more likely venue than nude modeling studios for evils of prostitution, drug dealing, and sexual violence that "no touch" provision sought to eliminate. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

12 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Licenses in general

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Municipal Corporations
Construction and operation

Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

City ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited intentional touching between nude performer and customer, did not violate Equal Rights Amendment of Texas Constitution, even though ordinance excluded male breasts from its definition of nudity; evidence showed that city council considered physiological and sexual distinctions between female and male breasts, and topless bar that challenged ordinance presented no evidence that ordinance discriminated against women solely on basis of gender. Vernon's Ann.Texas Const. Art. 1, § 3a; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Intoxicating Liquors

Concurrent and conflicting regulations by state and municipality

City ordinance's "no touch" provision, which prohibited touching between nude performer and customer, did not violate Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code, even though "no touch" provision applied to adult cabarets which normally have alcoholic beverage licenses but not to nude modeling studios (which do not have such licenses); ordinance did not impose stricter standards on alcohol-related businesses than on nonalcohol-related businesses, as businesses with alcohol beverage licenses that did not qualify as adult cabarets were not subject to "no touch" provision, while adult cabarets not required to have alcoholic beverage licenses were still subject to ordinance. V.T.C.A., Alcoholic Beverage Code § 109.57; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Searches and Seizures

Administrative inspections and searches; regulated businesses

Adult cabaret failed to show that city's enforcement of "no touch" ordinance, which precluded intentional touching between nude performer and customer, was conducted in harassing and offense manner in violation of its Fourth Amendment rights; although bar presented evidence of pattern or practice by city of conducting allegedly unconstitutional searches, bar failed to present any evidence that policy-making officials in city had any knowledge, actual or constructive, of police officers' actions during investigative searches of cabaret. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 4; Arlington, Tx., Ordinance No. 92–117.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1250 John L. Gamboa, Acuff, Gamboa & Moore, Ft. Worth, TX, for appellant.

Thomas Phillip Brandt, Sharon Hauder, Fanning, Harper & Martinson, Dallas, TX, for appellee.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Before REYNALDO G. GARZA, KING and HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

PATRICK E. HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

Hang On, Inc. appeals from the judgment of the United States District Court dismissing Hang On's federal constitutional, state constitutional, and state law challenges to the City of Arlington's Adult Entertainment Ordinance No. 92–117.

I.

After amassing studies describing noxious secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments, the Arlington city council passed Ordinance No. 92–117 on November 17, 1992. The Ordinance's stated purpose was "to regulate Adult Entertainment Establishments 1251 to promote the health, safety, morals and general welfare of the citizens of the City." The Ordinance expressly disclaimed intent to "restrict or deny access by adults to sexually oriented materials protected by the First Amendment or to deny access by the distributors and exhibitors of sexually oriented entertainment to their intended market."

The Ordinance created a comprehensive regulatory scheme for adult entertainment establishments in the City of Arlington. Among its provisions, the Ordinance provided:

Section 5.01 Additional Regulations for Adult Cabaret

A. An employee of an adult cabaret, while appearing in a state of nudity, commits an offense if he touches a customer or the clothing of a customer.

B. A customer at an adult cabaret commits an offense if he touches an employee appearing in a state of nudity or clothing of the employee.

The Ordinance defined a "state of nudity" as a state of dress that fails to opaquely cover a human buttock, anus, male genitals, female genitals, or female breast.

On December 17, 1993, Hang On, which operates a topless bar in Arlington, filed suit against Arlington in Texas state court pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that the Ordinance violates the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. In particular, Hang On charged that the Ordinance's "no touch" provision is unconstitutionally overbroad because it criminalizes casual or inadvertent touching and unconstitutionally vague because it does not define "touches". In addition, Hang On argued that Arlington's enforcement of the Ordinance had been conducted in a harassing and discriminatory manner. Finally, Hang On alleged that the Ordinance's exclusion of male breasts from the definition of nudity violates the Equal Rights Amendment of the Texas Constitution, Tex. Const. art. I, § 3a, and that the Ordinance violates the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code by discriminating against business with alcoholic beverage licenses. Tex.Alco.Bev.Code Ann. § 109.57.

Arlington removed the case to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. On September 21, 1994, the district court granted summary judgment for Arlington on all of Hang On's claims and awarded costs and attorney's fees to Arlington. Hang On has timely appealed, and we now affirm the judgment of the district court.

II.

We first examine whether Hang On has standing to bring these claims. "The federal courts are under an independent obligation to examine their own jurisdiction, and standing 'is perhaps the most important of [the jurisdictional] doctrines.' " United States v. Hays, 515 U.S. 737, ——, 115 S.Ct. 2431, 2435, 132 L.Ed.2d 635 (1995) (quoting FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 231, 110 S.Ct. 596, 607, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (citations omitted)).

A party seeking to enlist the court's jurisdiction "must assert his own legal rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the legal rights or interests of third parties." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975). Hang On asserts that the intrusive searches by the Arlington police have violated its own right to be free from unreasonable searches. Similarly, Hang On asserts its own rights when it claims that Arlington's ordinance violates the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code. Its standing to assert these two claims is plain.

Hang On's claim that the "no touch" provision violates the First Amendment implicates the general requirement that a litigant assert its own rights. Hang On does not claim any denial of its own First Amendment rights. The specific prohibition of the ordinance at issue in this case is part of a general regulation of adult cabarets, including Hang On, but the "no touch" provision regulates dancers and customers, not the bar itself.

[1] [2] Assuming that the case or controversy requirements of Article III are met, the Constitution does not universally forbid a party from asserting the rights of others. Rather, the general rule prohibiting such surrogate claims is prudential. 1252 Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 161 n. 2, 110 S.Ct. 1717, 109 L.Ed.2d 135 (1990). Accordingly, we examine exceptions to this general rule. One exception allows a litigant to assert the rights of individuals with whom she has a close relationship. See Pierce v. Society of the Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925) (holding that organization's interest in preserving its own business permitted it to assert rights of patrons). The history of this exception is checkered. Compare McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 429–30, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961) with Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397 (1976) and Secretary of State of Md. v. Joseph H. Munson Co., Inc., 467 U.S. 947, 954–58, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 81 L.Ed.2d 786 (1984). Ordinarily, a business like Hang On may properly assert its employees' or customers' First Amendment rights where the violation of those rights adversely affects the financial interests or patronage of the business. That Hang On's employees and customers could encounter practical difficulties in asserting their own rights may place this case within a distinct exception; at minimum, this fact reinforces the close relationship prerequisite to surrogate standing here. See Spiegel v. City of Houston, 636 F.2d 997, 1001 (5th Cir. Unit A Feb. 1981); Gajon Bar & Grill, Inc. v. Kelly, 508 F.2d 1317, 1322 (2d Cir.1974) (upholding standing of corporation to assert First Amendment rights of its employees and patrons); Black Jack Distributors, Inc. v. Beame, 433 F.Supp. 1297, 1303 (S.D.N.Y.1977) (upholding vendor's standing to assert First Amendment right of patrons' to purchase sexually explicit material). We are persuaded that this exception is applicable and that Hang On has standing to challenge the "no touch" provision as violative of the First Amendment rights of its employees and customers.

[3] We are also persuaded that Hang On may assert its employees' rights under the Texas Equal Rights Amendment. Tex. Const. art. I, § 3A. We are cognizant of our holding in MD II Entertainment, Inc. v. City of Dallas, Tex., 28 F.3d 492, 497 (5th Cir.1994), that a dance hall did not have standing to raise its employees' rights under the Texas Equal Rights Amendment to challenge a municipal ordinance that excluded male breasts from its definition of "seminudity" and "simulated nudity". In MD II, we distinguished SDJ, Inc. v. City of Houston, 837 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir.), reh'g denied, 841 F.2d 107 (5th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1052, 109 S.Ct. 1310, 103 L.Ed.2d 579 (1989), on the ground that SDJ did not purport to hold that club owners "must be allowed to raise their dancer's rights." MD II, 28 F.3d at 498 (emphasis added). Prudential considerations such as the failure of MD II to explain the absence of its dancers from the litigation led us in MD II to conclude that "[g]ranting standing to MD II may, however, result in the unnecessary litigation of a question those parties most immediately affected may not dispute." Id. at 497.

Here, unlike in MD II, there is no suggestion that Hang On's dancers do not wish this litigation to go forward, and there is no indication that Hang On's interest in this litigation diverges from that of its dancers. See 13 Wright, Miller & Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure: Jurisdiction 2d § 3531.9, at 579 (arguing that employers may assert rights of their employees where there is "a congruence rather than conflict of interests"); see also Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. at 195, 97 S.Ct. at 456 (noting "vendors and those in like positions have been uniformly permitted to resist efforts at restricting their operations by acting as advocates of the rights of third parties who seek access to their market or function"). Significantly, Arlington cannot dispute that its ordinance has a direct financial impact on Hang On, as well as Hang On's employees. Injury is essential to meeting the threshold case or controversy requirement of Article III, and injury of this type is usually a component of a relationship sufficiently "close" to meet prudential standing requirements.

By contrast, the causal link between the injury to the club owners in MD II and the Dallas ordinance's exclusion of male breasts from its definition of semi-nudity was attenuated at best. It was difficult to see any injury to MD II from the underinclusive character of the challenged regulations. The asserted defect was a failure to regulate the exposure of male breasts. We are persuaded that Hang On has standing to assert its 1253 dancers' First Amendment and state constitutional rights.

There is much to be said for shifting the analysis from judicial justifications for asserting the rights of others to a direct inquiry into the rights of the plaintiffs in those relationships, but we do not reach those questions today. See Henry P. Monaghan, "Third Party Standing," 84 Colum.L.Rev. 277, 299 (1984).

III.

Hang On urges that summary judgment was inappropriate because facial constitutional challenges "require a review of the application of a statute to the conduct of the party before the court" and this review "is a fact question for the trier of fact to evaluate at time of trial." We disagree.

[4] We note that claims that an ordinance is facially invalid are better candidates for summary disposition than claims that an ordinance was unconstitutionally applied. Claims of facial invalidity do not depend upon the development of a "complex and voluminous" factual record. Keystone Bituminous Coal Ass'n v. DeBenedictis, 480 U.S. 470, 493, 107 S.Ct. 1232, 94 L.Ed.2d 472 (1987). The essence of a facial challenge usually is that the statute on its face—without regard to how it affects the particular litigants—violates the law. See, e.g., Johnson v. American Credit Co. of Georgia, 581 F.2d 526, 533 (5th Cir.1978).

Likewise, Hang On's argument that further discovery and trial are necessary to permit it to develop its claims of facial invalidity misses the mark. Claims of statutory overbreadth like that alleged by Hang On do not present fact disputes regarding the effects of an allegedly overbroad statute on a plaintiff. See Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 634, 100 S.Ct. 826, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980) (affirming summary judgment on overbreadth challenge while noting that such a challenge was "a question of law that involved no dispute about the characteristics of [the plaintiff]"). Hang On does not tell us how further time and proceedings are necessary to the adjudication of its facial challenges.

A.

[5] Hang On argues that the "no touch" provision is unconstitutionally overbroad in violation of the First Amendment. Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2460, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), held that nude dancing itself "is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment." It does not inevitably follow, however, that touching between a nude performer and a customer is protected expression.

We recognize that the theater of expressive dancing may be limited only by the art and creativity of the performers. "It is possible to find some kernel of expression in almost every activity a person undertakes ... but such a kernel is not sufficient to bring the activity within the protection of the First Amendment." City of Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 25, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 1595, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989). This said, intentional contact between a nude dancer and a bar patron is conduct beyond the expressive scope of the dancing itself. The conduct at that point has overwhelmed any expressive strains it may contain. That the physical contact occurs while in the course of protected activity does not bring it within the scope of the First Amendment. Cf. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 577, 111 S.Ct. at 2466 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment) (noting that the Court has "never invalidated the application of a general law simply because the conduct that it reached was being engaged in for expressive purposes").

[6] Similarly, patrons have no First Amendment right to touch a nude dancer. Cf. Geaneas v. Willets, 911 F.2d 579, 586 (11th Cir.1990) (holding that bar patrons have no First Amendment right to wear revealing clothing), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 955, 111 S.Ct. 1431, 113 L.Ed.2d 484 (1991); Dodger's Bar & Grill, Inc. v. Johnson Cty. Bd. of Comm'rs, 32 F.3d 1436, 1443 (10th Cir.1994) (same).

[7] Hang On's argument that the "no touch" provision is overbroad because it applies 1254 to all employees in a state of nudity, not just dancers, is without merit. It is true that dancers possess First Amendment rights, and we have discussed their limits. Nonperforming nude employees, however, cannot claim First Amendment protection solely by virtue of their nudity. Rather, "nudity is protected as speech only when combined with some mode of expression which itself is entitled to first amendment protection." South Florida Free Beaches, Inc. v. City of Miami, Fla., 734 F.2d 608, 610 (11th Cir.1984) (alteration and internal quotes omitted). Since employees not engaged in expressive conduct such as dancing have no First Amendment right to appear in the nude, applying the "no touch" provision to non-performing nude employees does not make it overbroad.

[8] Even if intentional contact between a topless dancer and a customer is not inevitably and always beyond the umbrella of the First Amendment, Arlington's "no touch" provision is not facially overbroad. The First Amendment "does not guarantee the right to [engage in protected expression] at all times and places or in any manner that may be desired." Heffron v. International Soc'y for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 647, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 2564, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981). The Court held in Barnes that content-neutral regulations of time, place, or manner are permissible where the regulations satisfy the four-part test announced in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). The regulation is valid "if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. at 1679.

Hang On does not dispute nor is there any doubt that Arlington possessed the authority to enact the "no touch" provision as part of its adult entertainment ordinance. See MJR's Fare of Dallas, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 792 S.W.2d 569, 576 (Tex.App.—Dallas 1990, writ denied) (holding municipality's police power encompassed authority to enact ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses). Similarly, there is no dispute that the "no touch" provision furthers a substantial governmental interest and is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. Although the Arlington city council did not make specific legislative findings regarding the "no touch" provision, it now suggests that the Ordinance serves to prevent prostitution, drug dealing and assault. These justifications were offered for a similar "no touch" provision upheld in Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 793 F.2d 1053 (9th Cir.1986), and Hang On does not suggest that any alternative, content-oriented interest motivated Arlington. To the contrary, the Ordinance disclaims any intent to infringe upon protected expression.

The essence of Hang On's overbreadth claim appears to be that Arlington's "no touch" provision is unconstitutionally overbroad because the ordinance criminalizes accidental or inadvertent touching and, therefore, burdens more protected expression than is necessary to further the city's interest in preventing prostitution, drug dealing, and assault. This argument rests on a premise that we reject, namely that Arlington's "no touch" provision criminalizes any contact between nude employees and customers. The State of Texas has provided that "[i]f the definition of an offense does not prescribe a culpable mental state, a culpable mental state is nevertheless required unless the definition plainly dispenses with any mental element." Tex.Penal Code Ann. § 6.02(b). Texas law further provides that "[i]f the definition of an offense does not prescribe a culpable mental state but one is nevertheless required [under the foregoing provision], intent, knowledge, or recklessness suffices to establish criminal responsibility." Tex.Penal Code Ann. § 6.02(c). The Arlington ordinance does not specify a requisite mental state, but the Ordinance does not dispense with any mental element. Under Texas law, the Ordinance requires a culpable mental state and, therefore, does not criminalize inadvertent or negligent touching. See Pollard v. State, 687 S.W.2d 373, 374 (Tex.App.—Dallas 1985, writ ref'd) (applying § 6.02 to city ordinance that 1255 did not specify a required mental state). No evidence suggests that the City of Arlington has sought to enforce the Ordinance against persons unintentionally touching one another.

Given the limiting construction imposed by Texas law, [1] we conclude that Arlington's "no touch" provision does not burden more protected expression than is essential to further substantial governmental interests. [2] We perceive no material difference between Arlington's "no touch" provision and the "no touch" provision upheld against a similar attack in Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 793 F.2d 1053 (9th Cir.1986). In Kitsap County, the Ninth Circuit upheld an ordinance that, in addition to prohibiting topless dancers and customers from fondling or caressing one another, required dancers to remain at least ten feet from the customers and prohibited patrons from tipping dancers. Referring to the "no touch" provision, the court concluded that "because of the County's legitimate and substantial interest in preventing the demonstrated likelihood of prostitution occurring in erotic dance studios, the County may prevent dancers and patrons from sexually touching each other while the dancers are acting in the scope of their employment." Id. at 1061 n. 11. Arlington's "no touch" provision does not criminalize more conduct than Kitsap County's. We are persuaded that Arlington's ordinance burdens no more protected expression than is essential to further Arlington's interest in preventing prostitution, drug dealing, and assault.

1 We express no opinion on the constitutionality of an ordinance prohibiting all touching between patrons and nude dancers. We do not offer narrowing interpretations of a state regulation. That is the task of the state courts. See Gooding v. Wilson, 405 U.S. 518, 520, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 31 L.Ed.2d 408 (1972); United States v. Thirty–Seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 369, 91 S.Ct. 1400, 1404–1405, 28 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971). We parse no words or otherwise engage in the interpretive enterprise. Rather, we simply apply all the relevant statutes. See also City of Houston, Tex. v. Hill, 482 U.S. 451, 462 n. 10, 468, 107 S.Ct. 2502, 2510 n. 10, 96 L.Ed.2d 398 (1987) (holding, without prior state court decisions for guidance, that provision of state criminal code preempts parts of city ordinance).

2 In Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798–99, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2757, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), the Court noted that a time, place, or manner restriction "need not be the least restrictive or least intrusive means" of serving the government's interest. Rather, the restriction is no greater than essential where the governmental interest "would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." Id. at 799, 109 S.Ct. at 2758 (internal quotation marks omitted).

B.

Hang On's contention that Arlington's "no touch" provision is void for vagueness is without merit. Hang On has not specified which terms in Arlington's ordinance are vague. Hang On appears to claim that Arlington's ordinance is unconstitutionally vague because it fails to define "dancer", which the Kitsap County ordinance did define. The significance of this allegation eludes us, particularly given that Arlington's ordinance criminalizes touching between a customer and an "employee", which includes dancers.

C.

[9] Hang On argues that Arlington's decision to criminalize touching in adult cabarets but not in other adult entertainment establishments renders the ordinance unconstitutional on its face. Hang On does not specify whether this feature of the ordinance violates state or federal law.

To the extent that Hang On relies upon equal protection rights guaranteed by the state constitution, its argument is without merit. The Texas Court of Appeals in 2300, Inc. v. City of Arlington, Tex., 888 S.W.2d 123, 129 (Tex.App.—Fort Worth 1994, no writ), held that Arlington's decision to apply the "no touch" provision only to adult cabarets did not violate the cabarets' equal protection rights guaranteed by the state constitution. Tex. Const. art. I, § 3.

The district court did not address the merits of this argument because Hang On failed to include it in its complaint and raised this claim for the first time in its response to Arlington's motion for summary judgment. Although Hang On renews this allegation on appeal, we agree with the district court that, because Hang On did not raise the state constitutional claim in its complaint nor provide 1256 any authority for its allegation, we should not address its merits.

To the extent that Hang On asserts a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, it has failed to demonstrate that Arlington's decision to apply the "no touch" provision only to adult cabarets is an invidious classification or burdens a fundamental right. Here, Arlington could rationally conclude that adult cabarets, which typically serve alcohol and attract large crowds, are a more likely venue than nude modeling studios for the evils of prostitution, drug dealing, and sexual violence that the "no touch" provision seeks to eliminate.

Nor does the Equal Protection Clause require Arlington to prohibit touching between nude employees and customers in every field in which it occurs. Cf. SDJ, Inc. v. City of Houston, 837 F.2d 1268, 1279 (5th Cir.) (rejecting similar underinclusive argument), reh'g denied, 841 F.2d 107 (5th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 489 U.S. 1052, 109 S.Ct. 1310, 103 L.Ed.2d 579 (1989). Rather, "reform may take one step at a time, addressing itself to the phase of the problem which seems most acute to the legislative mind." Williamson v. Lee Optical of Oklahoma, Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 489, 75 S.Ct. 461, 465, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955).

IV.

A.

[10] Hang On contends that excluding male breasts from the ordinance's definition of nudity violates the Equal Rights Amendment of the Texas Constitution. [3] Under Texas law, we must first determine whether the ordinance discriminates against one sex "simply on the basis of gender." Williams v. City of Fort Worth, 782 S.W.2d 290, 296 (Tex.App.—Fort Worth 1989, writ denied).

[3] "Equality under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, race, color, creed, or national origin." Tex. Const. art. I, § 3a.

In MJR's Fare of Dallas v. City of Dallas, 792 S.W.2d 569, 575 (Tex.App.—Dallas 1990, writ denied), the Texas Court of Appeals held that the exclusion of male breasts from the definition of nudity did not constitute discrimination against women "solely on the basis of gender." The court noted that the city introduced evidence showing that physiological and sexual distinctions exist between male and female breasts; that female breasts differ internally and externally from male breasts; and that the female breast, unlike the male breast, is a mammary gland. Id. The court concluded that the definition of nudity excluded male breasts on grounds other than simply gender.

Similarly, Arlington presented evidence to the district court showing that the Arlington city council considered the physiological and sexual distinctions between the female and male breasts. In sworn testimony presented to the city council, Dr. J. Douglas Crowder concluded that distinguishing between male and female breasts in defining nudity is "certainly consistent with what we know medically about human sexual response." Moreover, the preamble of the Ordinance itself proclaimed that the city council reviewed "[c]onvincing documented evidence regarding the physiological and sexual distinctions between male and female breasts." By contrast, Hang On presented no evidence to the district court that Arlington's ordinance discriminated against women solely on the basis of gender.

Hang On relies heavily on the Texas Court of Appeals' holding in Williams that the exclusion of male breasts from the definition of nudity discriminated against women solely on the basis of gender. In Williams the court of appeals noted that the plaintiff successfully carried its burden of proof to show that the definition discriminated against women solely on account of gender because the city offered "no evidence about the differences in physical characteristics or how such differences relate to the ordinance's goal of preventing secondary neighborhood effects." 782 S.W.2d at 296 n. 2. Hang On's failure to offer any evidence regarding Arlington's decision to exclude male breasts from the definition of nudity, coupled with Arlington's introduction of evidence showing that Arlington's decision was not motivated by gender 1257 animus, distinguishes this case from Williams.

We cannot let pass without comment the energy expended in the "trial" of such issues. Courts need no evidence to prove self-evident truths about the human condition—such as water is wet. Nor should they tarry long with such foolishness and, in the process, trivialize constitutional values intrinsic to our society. The district court correctly concluded that Arlington's definition of nudity did not discriminate against women solely on the basis of gender.

B.

[11] Hang On also claims that the application of the "no touch" provision to adult cabarets violates § 109.57 of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code because Arlington's "no touch" provision applies to adult cabarets, which normally have alcoholic beverage licenses, but does not apply to nude modeling studios, which do not have such licenses. Holding that Hang On never presented evidence to substantiate its claim, the district court granted summary judgment to Arlington on this issue. We agree that Arlington is entitled to summary judgment, not because Hang On failed to produce any evidence indicating a genuine issue of material fact, but because Hang On's legal theory is without merit.

In Dallas Merchant's & Concessionaire's Ass'n v. City of Dallas, 852 S.W.2d 489, 492 (Tex.1993), the Texas Supreme Court held that § 109.57 preempted a municipal ordinance prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages within 300 feet of a residential area. The court was quick to point out that municipalities retained the power to regulate businesses with alcoholic beverage licenses as long as those regulations did not discriminate against such businesses. The court explained:

> [A]n ordinance requiring all businesses with the same kind of premises to have a fire extinguisher on their premises would not violate section 109.57(a). On the other hand, an ordinance requiring an alcohol related business to have two fire extinguishers and only requiring a non-alcohol related business with the same kind of premises to have one fire extinguisher would violate section 109.57(a).

Id. at 492 n. 5.

Arlington's "no touch" provision does not run afoul of § 109.57(a) because, unlike the fire extinguisher example from Dallas Merchants, its coverage of the set of businesses with alcoholic beverage licenses is both underinclusive and overinclusive. Application of Arlington's "no touch" provision to adult cabarets is underinclusive in that there are many businesses with alcoholic beverage licenses that do not qualify as adult cabarets and, therefore, are not subject to the "no touch" provision. The scope of Arlington's "no touch" regulation is also overinclusive in that adult cabarets not required to have alcoholic beverage licenses are still subject to Arlington's "no touch" provision. This loose fit between the regulatory scope of the "no touch" provision and businesses serving alcohol leads us to conclude that Arlington's ordinance does not impose stricter standards on alcohol-related businesses than it does on non-alcohol related businesses. Indeed, this loose fit is a far cry from the Dallas ordinance invalidated in Dallas Merchants, which regulated businesses if and only if they were in the business of selling alcohol. Arlington's decision to limit the application of the "no touch" provision to adult cabarets does not violate § 109.57(a) of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code. [4]

4 Arlington's reliance on § 109.57(d) is unavailing since that provision only permits a municipality to regulate the location of a sexually oriented business. It does not purport to permit the regulation of the manner in which a sexually oriented business operates.

V.

[12] Finally, Hang On argues that Arlington's enforcement of the Ordinance has been conducted in a harassing and offensive manner in violation of its Fourth Amendment rights. The district court rejected Hang On's claim, holding that Hang On presented no evidence that it was the policy of Arlington to enforce the Ordinance in a manner that violates Hang On's constitutional rights. We review the district court's grant of summary 1258 judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Hang On. Richardson v. Oldham, 12 F.3d 1373, 1376 (5th Cir.1994).

Hang On does not claim that it is the official policy of Arlington to harass adult cabarets and their patrons. Indeed, Arlington's ordinance expresses the exact opposite policy. "[I]t is not the intent nor effect of this Chapter to restrict or deny access by adults to sexually oriented materials protected by the First Amendment or to deny access by the distributors and exhibitors of sexually oriented entertainment to their intended market." Instead, Hang On claims that Arlington's policy may be inferred from the police officers' repeated visits on a nightly basis.

Although the district court found that Hang On had presented evidence of a pattern or practice by Arlington of conducting the allegedly unconstitutional searches, the court correctly concluded that Hang On failed to present any evidence that policy-making officials in Arlington had any knowledge, actual or constructive, of the police officers actions during the investigative searches of Hang On's cabaret. The only evidence presented by Hang On to rebut Arlington's motion for summary judgment was the affidavit of Andy Anderson, alleging that "defendant's agents" have entered its business "on multiple occasions" and that the officers' manners and actions became "more disruptive and abusive". [5] Mr. Anderson's affidavit noticeably omits any allegation that the principal of the "defendant's agents," i.e., the City of Arlington, had any knowledge of the action and behavior of its "agents". We find no record evidence that Arlington knew of and was deliberately indifferent to its police officers' conduct.

5 The district court did not rule on Arlington's numerous objections to the Anderson affidavit. On appeal, Arlington renews its objections. Given our disposition of the matter, we do not reach the issue whether the district court abused its discretion in considering the Anderson affidavit.

Hang On responds that the district court's grant of summary judgment to Arlington dismissing Hang On's harassment claim was erroneously based on the heightened pleading requirement invalidated in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 122 L.Ed.2d 517 (1993). Hang On fails to grasp the difference between a motion to dismiss and a motion for summary judgment.

VI.

We agree with the district court that Hang On's facial challenges to Arlington's "no touch" provision are without merit and that there was no genuine issue of material fact. We AFFIRM the judgment of the district court, including its award of costs and attorney's fees to Arlington.

All Citations

65 F.3d 1248

End of Document

459 F.3d 546
United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

FANTASY RANCH INC., doing business as Fantasy Ranch, Plaintiff–Appellant, Cowtown Exposition, Inc., doing business as X.T.C. Tan; Tazz Man Inc., doing business as Hardbody's of Arlington, Texas, doing business as Peep–N–Tom's; Harry Freeman, doing business as Flash Dancer, Intervenor–Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF ARLINGTON, TEXAS, Theron Bowman, Chief of Police, Defendants–Appellees.

No. 04–11337.
|
Aug. 2, 2006.

Synopsis

Background: Sexually oriented businesses (SOBs) brought action against city and its police chief, challenging several provisions of city's sexually oriented business ordinance as an unconstitutional restriction of their expressive liberties. The parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Jerry L. Buchmeyer, J., 2004 WL 1779014, granted defendants' motion and denied plaintiffs' motion. Plaintiffs appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Garwood, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] an ordinance regulating SOBs is content-neutral, and will be subjected to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny, so long as its predominant concern is for secondary effects;

[2] in the case at bar, the ordinance's proximity provisions targeted secondary effects and so were entitled to intermediate scrutiny;

[3] the ordinance's proximity provisions satisfied the O'Brien test for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech;

[4] the ordinance's license-revocation provision did not impose an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech;

[5] plaintiff's due-process challenge to the pre-amendment ordinance was moot; and

[6] plaintiff's due-process challenge to the post-amendment ordinance was moot.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (18)

[1] Federal Courts
Summary judgment

Court of Appeals reviews the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard as the district court.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

While nonobscene nude dancing is protected by the First Amendment, even if only marginally so, the government can regulate such activity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Nude dancing falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Level of scrutiny applicable to government restrictions on public nudity depends on whether the government's predominate purpose in enacting the regulation is related to the suppression of expression itself; if the government's interest is related to the suppression of content, then that regulation of symbolic speech is subject to strict scrutiny, but if the government's predominate purpose is unrelated to the suppression of expression, such that the regulation can be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, then intermediate scrutiny applies. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality

Ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses is "content-neutral," and will be subjected to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny, so long as its predominant concern is for secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Performers in general

Constitutional Law
Proximity of performers to patrons

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Proximity provisions of city's sexually oriented business (SOB) ordinance, including buffer zone, stage height, and tipping requirements, were predominantly targeted to the prevention of secondary effects, not to the suppression of symbolic expression, and so were content-neutral restrictions entitled to intermediate scrutiny, where stated purpose of provisions was to better enforce city's previously enacted "no touch" rule at SOBs, that rule itself targeted the same negative secondary effects that continued to trouble city, including prostitution, assault, and drug dealing, and ordinance attempted to control secondary effects while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Proximity of performers to patrons

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Proximity provisions of city's sexually oriented business (SOB) ordinance satisfied the O'Brien test for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech; ordinance was aimed at protecting the health and safety of citizens and so fell within city's police powers, city expert's report, studies, and findings concerning ineffectiveness of city's prior "no touch" ordinance demonstrated connection between dancer-patron touching and unsavory secondary effects, city's substantial, independent interest in enacting ordinance was in targeting negative secondary effects and was unrelated to the suppression of free expression, ordinance's six-foot buffer zone, 18-inch stage height, and six-foot tipping requirements were no greater than were essential to furtherance of city's interest, and provisions' effect on overall expression was de minimis, as city only muted that expression that occurred when six-foot line was crossed while leaving the erotic message largely intact. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Under the Supreme Court's O'Brien test, a public nudity ordinance that incidentally impacts protected expression should be upheld if: (1) it is within the constitutional power of the government, (2) it furthers an important or substantial government interest, (3) the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, and (4) the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Municipal Corporations
Public safety and welfare
Municipal Corporations
Public health

Ordinances aimed at protecting the health and safety of citizens are squarely within a city's police powers.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Pursuant to the Renton evidentiary standard, a municipality may rely on any evidence that is reasonably believed to be relevant for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest, as required under the second prong of the O'Brien test for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

To satisfy the second prong of the O'Brien test for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech, which requires a regulation to further an important or substantial governmental interest, a municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

If party challenging a municipality's content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech fails to cast direct doubt on municipality's rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the evidentiary standards set forth in Renton, but if the party succeeds in casting doubt on the municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Under the second prong of the O'Brien test for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech, which requires a regulation or statute to further an important or substantial governmental interest, court's appropriate focus is not an empirical inquiry into the actual intent of the enacting legislature but, rather, the existence or not of a current governmental interest in the service of which the challenged application of the statute may be constitutional. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

License-revocation provision of city's sexually oriented business (SOB) ordinance did not impose an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech; SOB was not prohibited from obtaining another license, for another location, during the pendency of any license suspension or revocation, the revocation was not related to an advance determination that the contents of SOB's speech would be prohibited, but to the adverse secondary effects generated by SOB at its particular extant location, and any burden on SOB's expressive liberties was justified, as ordinance contained all three applicable safeguards, providing for a stay of suspension pending the appeals process and a hearing before an administrative law judge with an appeal to a Texas district court, as well as placing the burden of proof on the city. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Federal Courts

Voluntary cessation of challenged conduct

Court may conclude that voluntary cessation has rendered a case moot if the party urging mootness demonstrates that there is no reasonable expectation that the alleged violation will recur, and that interim relief or events have completely and irrevocably eradicated the effects of the alleged violation.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Federal Courts

Change in law

Statutory changes that discontinue a challenged practice are usually enough to render a case moot, even if the legislature possesses the power to reenact the statute after the lawsuit is dismissed.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

Mootness

Sexually oriented business's (SOB's) due-process challenge to city's pre-amendment SOB ordinance was moot where city's amended ordinance addressed all the issues raised by SOB's pre-amendment complaint, leaving SOB only with the claim that city council might one day amend the ordinance to reenact the offending provisions.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law

Mootness

Sexually oriented business's (SOB's) due-process challenge to city's post-amendment SOB ordinance, specifically, its provision for revoking an SOB license after four suspensions, was moot where, although SOB already had one pre-amendment suspension in its name, city promised in open court to neither enforce that three-day suspension imposed under the pre-amendment scheme, nor apply it toward the four total that were necessary to revoke an SOB license, and SOB's counsel agreed that this satisfied its concerns.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

549 Arthur F. Selander (argued), Quilling, Selander, Cummiskey & Lownds, Dallas, TX, for Cowtown Exposition, Inc. and Tazz Man Inc.

Thomas Phillip Brandt (argued), Robert Harris Fugate, Stephen Douglas Henninger, Joshua Alan Skinner, Fanning, Harper & Martinson, Dallas, TX, for Defendants–Appellees.

Paul J. Cambria, Jr., Roger W. Wilcox, Jr. (argued), Lipsitz, Green, Fahringer, Roll, Salisbury & Cambria, Buffalo, NY, for Fantasy Ranch, Inc. and Harry Freeman.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Before GARWOOD, BENAVIDES and OWEN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

GARWOOD, Circuit Judge:

Appellants challenge the City of Arlington's recently enacted Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance as an unconstitutional restriction of their expressive liberties. We affirm the trial court's judgment sustaining the ordinance.

FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS BELOW

A. Plaintiff-appellant Fantasy Ranch, Inc. ("Fantasy Ranch"), and intervenor plaintiffs-appellants, Cowtown Exposition, Inc., Tazz Man Inc., and Harry Freeman, are sexually oriented businesses ("SOBs") that feature topless dancing and operate under renewable licenses granted by defendant-appellee the City of Arlington, Texas ("the City"). Defendant-appellee Theron Bowman is the City's Chief of Police; as such, he is charged with enforcing the ordinances that the Arlington SOBs claim violate the Constitution. In October 2002, Bowman, acting pursuant to the City's Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance ("the SOB Ordinance") as it then-existed, notified Fantasy Ranch by letter of his intent to suspend its license to operate as a SOB for three days. According to the letter, Fantasy Ranch's license was subject to a temporary suspension under § 4.05 of the SOB Ordinance, which at that time required suspension of a SOB's license if "the [City's] Chief of Police determine[d] that [a SOB] licensee, operator or an employee ... ha[d] ... on five (5) or more occasions within any one (1) year period of time, violated [the City's prohibition on touching between topless dancers and patrons] and ha[d] been convicted or placed on deferred adjudication or probation for the violations." Although Fantasy Ranch requested and received a hearing on the proposed suspension, its objections failed, and in December 2002 the Deputy Chief of Police (before whom the hearing was conducted) ordered that the three-day license suspension go forward beginning January 26, 2003. Before the suspension took effect, Fantasy Ranch filed this lawsuit in the Northern District of Texas.

B. The City's Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance

Like many cities, Arlington maintains a series of ordinances that regulate SOBs 550 through a combination of zoning restrictions, licensing requirements, and criminal laws. The appellants' claims focus on two groups of provisions in the City's current SOB Ordinance: (1) the "Proximity Provisions," which consist of (a) a buffer zone and stage height provision, (b) a floor demarcation provision, and (c) a tipping provision; and (2) the "Licensing Provisions," which define the procedure and substance governing suspension and revocation of a SOB's business license.

1. The Proximity Provisions

First among the Proximity Provisions are buffer zone and stage height requirements, which prohibit a "licensee, operator or employee" of a SOB from:

> "knowingly allow[ing], in a Sexually Oriented Business another to appear in a state of nudity, unless the person is an employee [of the SOB] who, while in a state of nudity, is on a stage (on which no customer is present) at least eighteen (18) inches above the floor, and is: (1) at least six (6) feet from any customer ...; or (2) physically separated from customers by a solid clear transparent unbreakable glass or plexiglass wall with no openings that would permit physical contact with customers."

Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, § 6.03(B) (April 15, 2003). Second is the SOB Ordinance's demarcation provision, which mandates that a "licensee, operator or employee [of a SOB] ... prominently and continuously display a two inches wide glow-in-the-dark line on the floor of the [SOB] marking a distance of six feet from each unenclosed stage on which an employee in a state of nudity may appear." Id. § 6.04(B). Third, the SOB Ordinance regulates the tipping of nude dancers by prohibiting customers or patrons from tipping a nude SOB employee "directly" but permitting tipping of a nude SOB employee through either "a tip receptacle, located more than six (6) feet from the nearest point of the performance stage where [the SOB] employee is in a state of nudity, or ... an employee that is not in a state of nudity, as part of the customer's bill." Id. § 6.03(C).

The City contends that the Proximity Provisions are designed to alleviate the negative secondary effects that flow from violations of its no-touch ordinance, which has long prohibited touching between nude SOB employees and SOB customers. According to the City's findings listed in the ordinance enacting the Proximity Provisions, the no-touch provision, standing alone, did not effectively prevent touching between nude SOB employees and their customers. The City explains that the Proximity Provisions were intended to address the no-touch provision's inadequacy by further limiting activities that allow and often result in a close proximity between nude SOB employees and their customers. In support of the Proximity Provisions, the City amassed the following evidentiary record which included: (1) references respecting the Proximity Provisions to (a) judicial decisions addressing similar ordinances from other cities and discussing the adverse secondary effects addressed by those ordinances, and (b) studies conducted in other jurisdictions on the adverse secondary effects of SOBs; (2) reports of numerous no-touch violations at SOBs within the City; (3) testimony regarding the effectiveness of stage height requirements in enforcing a no-touch rule; and (4) a report prepared by the City's expert witness, Dr. Goldsteen, concluding that the Proximity Provisions would effectively prevent touching between nude employees and patrons.

2. The Licensing Provisions

The Licensing Provisions set out the procedural and substantive scheme governing 551 suspension and revocation of a SOB's license to do business. See Arlington, Tex., Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance § 4.01. It is the alleged procedural and substantive invalidity of these provisions that originally prompted this lawsuit. Since initiation of this case, however, the City has amended the Licensing Provisions significantly. Because of these amendments, the district court concluded that all of Fantasy Ranch's challenges to the previous Licensing Provisions are moot. To review the district court's judgment on this point, then, requires an understanding of how the pre-amendment version of the Licensing Provisions compares with the post-amendment version.

a. The Pre-amendment Licensing Provisions

Prior to their amendment by the City, and at the time that Fantasy Ranch originally filed this suit, the Licensing Provisions required that a SOB's license be temporarily suspended

> "if the [City's] Chief of Police determine[d] that a licensee(s), operator(s), or employee(s) of a licensee ha[d] ... [o]n five (5) or more occasions within any one (1) year period of time, violated [the no-touch] provisions [of the SOB Ordinance] and ha[d] been convicted or placed on deferred adjudication or probation for the violations."

Arlington, Tex., Sexually Oriented Business Ordinance § 4.05(A)(1), amended by Arlington, Tex. Ordinance 03–041, § 4.05(A)(1) (April 1, 2003). Following the fourth such temporary suspension, the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions required that the City revoke the SOB's license. Id. § 4.06(A)(1). Once a SOB received notice that the Chief of Police had determined that its license was subject to a temporary suspension for five no-touch violations, the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions granted the SOB the right to challenge that notice of suspension either in writing to the City's "Chief of Police" or by requesting a hearing before the "Chief of Police"—a term that the Licensing Provisions defined to include, inter alia, the "Deputy Chief of Police." Id. § 4.07. The pre-amendment Licensing Provisions did not define the procedural or substantive rules and standards according to which the Chief of Police (or his deputy) was to render his decision. If the Chief of Police ordered a temporary suspension of the SOB's license to proceed, the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions permitted that SOB to appeal the suspension to a Texas state court, and the suspension would not go into effect until after the conclusion of that appeal. Id. §§ 4.05(A), 4.09.

b. The Post-amendment Licensing Provisions

On April 1, 2003, after Fantasy Ranch filed this lawsuit to challenge the constitutionality of the SOB Ordinance's pre-amendment Licensing Provisions, the City enacted Ordinance No. 03–041, which significantly amended the Licensing Provisions to incorporate more substantive and procedural protections for SOBs. Specifically, under the post-amendment Licensing Provisions, the Chief of Police could suspend a SOB's license because of that SOB's employees having been convicted of five violations within any one year of the no-touch or Proximity Provisions only if the SOB had been given notice of the citations for those violations within three business days following the issuance of the citation. Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–041, § 4.05(A)(1). In addition, the amended Licensing Provisions created an affirmative defense for SOBs faced with such a possible license suspension: "It shall be an affirmative offense [sic] to [a] suspension [arising out of five violations of the no-touch or Proximity provisions] if [the SOB] 552 shows by a preponderance of the evidence that it was powerless to prevent [the no-touch or Proximity] violation[s]." Id. § 4.05(B). Moreover, the post-amendment Licensing Provisions more clearly delineate the procedural and substantive rules governing the Chief of Police's resolution of a SOB's challenge to a notice of suspension. Specifically, the amended Licensing Provisions (1) provide for an evidentiary hearing before an administrative law judge (rather than before the Chief of Police or his deputy) and grant that judge the responsibility of ruling on procedural and evidentiary questions that arise during the hearing; and (2) define what evidence the Chief of Police may consider when deciding whether to suspend the SOB's license. Id. §§ 4.07. Finally, certain aspects of the Licensing Provisions were unaffected by Ordinance No. 03–041. Namely, the post-amendment Licensing Provisions continue to permit an aggrieved SOB to appeal its license suspension to state court, and the provisions still provide that the license suspension is stayed pending the outcome of that appeal. Id. § 4.09. In addition, under the post-amendment Licensing Provisions, four temporary license suspensions still result in revocation of a SOB's license on the fifth violation. Id. § 4.06(A)(1).

C. Procedural History

In January 2003, after Fantasy Ranch's administrative challenge to the City's proposed suspension of its license failed, but before the three-day suspension ordered by Chief Bowman was to go into effect, Fantasy Ranch filed suit in the Northern District of Texas seeking declaratory judgment that the license suspension and revocation scheme created by the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions (1) violated the First Amendment by (a) operating as a prior restraint, and (b) failing to satisfy the requirements for content-neutral speech-inhibiting regulations set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); and (2) violated the procedural component of the Due Process Clause. Two months later, in March 2003, Fantasy Ranch moved for summary judgment on all of these claims.

On April 1, 2003, before the City responded to Fantasy Ranch's motion for summary judgment, the City enacted the first of four amendments to the SOB Ordinance that directly impact this case. The City first enacted Ordinance No. 03–041, which, as explained supra, amended the Licensing Provisions by enhancing the procedural and substantive protections afforded to SOBs during the license suspension and revocation process. Based on these enhanced protections, the City filed its first amended answer to Fantasy Ranch's original complaint, asserting that Ordinance No. 03–041's changes to the Licensing Provisions rendered all of Fantasy Ranch's claims challenging the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions moot. In addition, the City's first amended answer asserted that it would not ever enforce the temporary suspension of Fantasy Ranch's license that it had ordered under the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions. [1]

1 During oral argument before this court, the City repeated this promise, and also expressly agreed that it would not only not try to enforce this suspension but also that it would not ever try to use it as one of the four predicate temporary suspensions necessary under the ordinance to permanently suspend an SOB's license.

On April 15, 2003, just two weeks after enacting Ordinance No. 03–041, the City again amended its SOB Ordinance by enacting Ordinance No. 03–044. That amendment established the above described Proximity Provisions of which the Arlington SOBs now complain. Prior to the enactment of the ordinance, the City's 553 SOB Ordinance only (1) prohibited touching between nude dancers and their customers, and (2) required that signs be placed at the entrances to SOBs informing customers of the no-touch rule. Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, §§ 6.03(B)-(C), 6.04(B). As discussed supra, the City found the additional Proximity Provisions to be necessary because the existing no-touch and signage rules did not effectively prevent touching between nude dancers and patrons. Specifically, the City, in enacting these additional provisions, expressly found that SOBs "have not complied with the 'no touch' provisions, [and] have flagrantly disregarded them and/or encouraged employees and customers to violate the 'no touch' provision." Id. § 1.03 ¶ 29. Moreover, according to these formal findings of the City, "[c]ompelling signage at the entrances of [SOBs] has not been effective in halting 'no touch' violations." Id. § 1.03 ¶ 31.

On May 1, 2003, in response to the amendment of the Licensing Provisions and the addition of the Proximity Provisions, Fantasy Ranch filed an amended complaint in which it (1) disputed the City's assertion that all of its claims attacking the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions were moot, and (2) asserted new claims challenging the post-amendment Licensing Provisions, arguing essentially that those provisions suffer from the same constitutional infirmities as the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions. The next month, on June 23, 2003, Fantasy Ranch filed a supplemental complaint in which it again asserted new claims, this time challenging the Proximity Provisions, arguing that those provisions violate the First Amendment.

With the enactment of the Proximity Provisions, other SOBs became interested in the litigation and, on June 27, 2003, the district court granted intervenor Plaintiffs–Appellants Tazz Man, Inc., Cowtown Exposition, Inc., and Harry Freeman leave to intervene. The intervenor SOBs limited their challenges to the constitutionality of the Proximity Provisions and, therefore, are not parties to Fantasy Ranch's due process and related First Amendment challenges to the Licensing Provisions.

When the dust settled, the district court had before it constitutional claims challenging the pre- and post-amendment Licensing Provisions and the Proximity Provisions.[2] Fantasy Ranch alone challenged the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions, arguing (1) that those provisions (a) effected a prior restraint in violation of the First Amendment, and (b) prior to Fantasy Ranch's license being temporarily suspended, failed to provide Fantasy Ranch with the process it was constitutionally due; and (2) that its claims were not mooted by either the City's amendment of the Licensing Provisions or the City's pledge not to enforce its temporary suspension of Fantasy Ranch's license. Also alone, Fantasy Ranch challenged the post-amendment Licensing Provisions, essentially arguing that those provisions failed for the same reasons as the pre-amendment Licensing Provisions. Finally, all of the Arlington SOBs challenged the Proximity Provisions, arguing that those provisions are unconstitutional restrictions on symbolic speech.

2 Other claims by the Arlington SOBs were also before the district court, but those claims are not relevant to this appeal.

In February 2004, the Arlington SOBs moved for summary judgment on all of their claims, and in March 2004 the City cross-moved for summary judgment. Five months later, in August 2004, the district 554 court issued a memorandum opinion and order granting summary judgment to the City, denying the Arlington SOBs' motion for summary judgment, and holding the Proximity Provisions constitutional. The district court's August 2004 opinion did not, however, address Fantasy Ranch's constitutional claims directed at the pre- and post-amendment versions of the Licensing Provisions; rather, the district court waited until its final judgment, which was issued in September 2004, to resolve those claims. In that judgment, the court held (without further elaboration) that "[i]n regards to ... Fantasy Ranch's causes of action attacking the Constitutionality of § 4.05 and § 4.07 [the Licensing Provisions], as set forth in its pleadings ..., the claims are moot and ... the statutory provisions at issue are Constitutional."

DISCUSSION

I. The Proximity Provisions

We first address the appellants' First Amendment challenge to the ordinance's Proximity Provisions, and hold that those provisions satisfy the four-part test set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech.

[1] We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, applying the same legal standard as the district court. Vela v. City of Houston, 276 F.3d 659, 666 (5th Cir.2001). "Summary judgment is appropriate only if 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,' when viewed in the light most favorable to the non-movant, 'show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact.' " TIG Ins. Co. v. Sedgwick James of Washington, 276 F.3d 754, 759 (5th Cir.2002) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986)).

[2] [3] "While it is now beyond question that nonobscene nude dancing is protected by the First Amendment, even if 'only marginally so,' it is also clear that the government can regulate such activity." LLEH, Inc. v. Wichita County, Texas, 289 F.3d 358, 365 (5th Cir.2002) (citations omitted). Indeed, nude dancing falls only "within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 1391, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion); see also Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality opinion).

A. Strict or Intermediate Scrutiny

[4] We must first determine, then, what level of scrutiny applies, a question that depends on whether the government's predominate purpose in enacting the regulation is related to the suppression of expression itself. Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1391 (plurality opinion). If the government's interest is indeed related to the suppression of content, then that regulation of symbolic speech is subject to strict scrutiny. See Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989). If, however, the government's predominate purpose is unrelated to the suppression of expression, such that the regulation can be "justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech," then intermediate scrutiny applies. Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984); see also O'Brien.

The City of Arlington contends that its ordinance is "content neutral," arguing that it targets only negative secondary effects of speech, not content. The appellants counter that the ordinance is "content based," arguing that the ordinance's 555 predominate interest is, in fact, the suppression of their erotic message, a message which, they further contend, has never been shown by the City to produce any negative secondary effects.

[5] Courts routinely apply intermediate scrutiny to government regulation of sexually oriented businesses, and we again do so today. See Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1391 ("government restrictions on public nudity ... should be evaluated under the framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech."); see also N.W. Enterprises Inc. v. City of Houston, 352 F.3d 162, 173 (5th Cir.2003); LLEH v. Wichita County, Tex., 289 F.3d 358, 364 (5th Cir.2002); Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 330 F.3d 288, 291 (5th Cir.2003). In LLEH v. Wichita County, for example, this court applied O'Brien's intermediate scrutiny to a public lewdness ordinance that was nearly identical to the one at issue here, reversing the district court's bench-trial judgment in favor of a sexually oriented business, and holding that a six-foot buffer requirement, an 18–inch stage height requirement, and a demarcation requirement were all constitutional under O'Brien. [3] And, in Pap's A.M., a divided Supreme Court upheld an ordinance that banned all public nudity and, as a consequence, required the City's erstwhile nude dancers to wear pasties and g-strings during their performances. 120 S.Ct. at 1383 (2000). In deciding to apply O'Brien's intermediate scrutiny, the Court reasoned that the ordinance was "on its face a general prohibition on public nudity," and noted that the City of Erie's "asserted interest in combating the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments ... is unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing." Id. at 1391–92, 1394.

3 We acknowledge that in LLEH none of the parties challenged on appeal the O'Brien intermediate scrutiny standard applied by the district court. Id., 289 F.3d at 366.

We acknowledge that in Pap's A.M. the Court was persuaded of the ordinance's content neutrality by two related considerations, only one of which is present here. First, the Court noted that "the ordinance ... is aimed at combating crime and other negative secondary effects caused by the presence of adult entertainment establishments ... and not at suppressing the erotic message conveyed by this type of nude dancing," a consideration which is also present here, since, as we discuss below, the City of Arlington's ordinance is also aimed predominately at secondary effects. The second consideration relied upon in Pap's A.M., however, was that the City of Erie's ordinance banned "all public nudity," and that the ordinance was therefore content neutral because it was facially neutral. Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1391 ("The ordinance here ... is on its face a general prohibition on public nudity.... It does not target nudity that contains an erotic message."); see also Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2461, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) ("Indiana's public indecency statute ... predates barroom nude dancing and was enacted as a general prohibition."). By this second consideration, facial neutrality, the City of Arlington's ordinance is not content neutral, because it targets only sexually oriented businesses.

We understand, of course, that the City of Arlington's targeted ordinance "might simply reflect the fact that [Arlington] had recently been having a public nudity problem not with streakers, sunbathers or hot dog vendors ... but with lap dancers." Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1401 (Scalia, J. concurring). Indeed, it would seem mere pretext if the City of Arlington, in the 556 name of facial neutrality, also required nude-ballet buffer zones, thereby invoking and eradicating a non-existent public nuisance.

We therefore hold that an ordinance such as the one before us is content neutral so as long as the ordinances's predominate concern is for secondary effects, a holding supported by our sister circuits and a careful reading of a fractured Court.[4] The Sixth and Ninth Circuits, for example, while upholding buffer-zone and stage-height requirements similar to the one here, have classified such provisions as content neutral. In Deja Vu, Inc. v. Nashville, the Sixth Circuit held that a three-foot buffer zone and an eighteen-inch stage-height requirement were subject to intermediate scrutiny, explaining that "[w]e have previously recognized that ordinances aimed at regulating adult entertainment businesses constitute content-based regulations, but that 'a distinction may be drawn between adult [businesses] and other kinds of [businesses] without violating the government's paramount obligation of neutrality' when the government seeks to regulate only the secondary effects of erotic speech, and not the speech itself.". 274 F.3d 377, 391 (6th Cir.2001) (citations omitted). Likewise, in Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, the Ninth Circuit held that (1) a ten-foot buffer zone, (2) a two-foot stage-height requirement, and (3) a no tipping rule were all subject to intermediate scrutiny, explaining that "[t]he stated purpose of the County's ordinance is to alleviate undesirable social problems that accompany erotic dance studios, not to curtail the protected expression—namely, the dancing.... Thus, we conclude that the ordinance is content-neutral because it is justified without 'reference to the content of the regulated speech.' " 793 F.2d 1053, 1059 (9th Cir.1986).

4 In City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), at least five Justices acknowledged that SOB zoning ordinances were actually content based, yet nevertheless applied intermediate scrutiny, explaining, in Justice Kennedy's concurrence, that "the ordinance is not so suspect that we must employ the usual rigorous analysis that content-based laws demand in other instances." The reasons given for the ordinance there being "not so suspect," however, may be unique to zoning regulations. See Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1740–41 (explaining that zoning regulations merit a presumption of validity since they have historically targeted secondary effects, not content). Cf. G.M. Enterprises, Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 637 (7th Cir.2003) (suggesting that intermediate scrutiny might apply to similar content-based restrictions on symbolic speech).

Indeed, Pap's A.M. itself provides support for this approach. For although the court there emphasized that "Erie's ordinance is on its face a content-neutral restriction on conduct," the plurality also remarked, "Even if the City thought that nude dancing ... constituted a particularly problematic instance of public nudity, the regulation is still properly evaluated as a content-neutral restriction because the interest in combating the secondary effects associated with those clubs is unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing." Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1394. (emphasis added). And, in a separate concurrence, Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, made a similar point, noting that "even were I to conclude that the City of Erie had specifically singled out the activity of nude dancing, I still would not find that this regulation violated the First Amendment unless I could be persuaded ... that is was the communicative character of nude dancing that prompted the ban." Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1402 (Scalia, J. concurring). Finally, while discussing the secondary effects doctrine in the context of zoning ordinances, 557 Justice Kennedy has explained, "The ordinance may identify the speech based on content, but only as a shorthand for identifying the secondary effects...." City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 1742, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). See also R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 2546, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992) (noting that a "valid basis for according differential treatment to even a content-defined subclass of proscribable speech is that the subclass happens to be associated with ... 'secondary effects' of the speech, so that the regulation is 'justified without reference to the content of the ... speech.' ").

[6] Applying this result to our case, we agree with the district court's ruling that because the City of Arlington's SOB ordinance is predominately targeted to the prevention of secondary effects, not to the suppression of symbolic expression, it is entitled to intermediate scrutiny. The purpose of Ordinance No. 03–044, even as the appellant sees it,[5] is to better enforce the City's previously enacted "no touch" rule, a rule that itself targeted the very same secondary effects that continue to trouble the City today—prostitution, assault, drug dealing, and even the touching itself. The content of the erotic speech affected by this ordinance (that message which is allegedly conveyed by dancing nude within six feet of a person) is, according to the appellant's expert, a message of "comfort/support, friendliness, trust, inclusion, immediacy, humanity, play, affection, sensuality, desirability, [and] love." It is easy to imagine a regulation that might directly target such a message, especially when it is communicated between strangers for a fee; however, this particular ordinance's stated purpose is to eradicate certain negative secondary effects that flow from this particular form of symbolic speech,[6] particularly the physical contact between dancer and patron that we have already held to be unprotected by the First Amendment, see Hang On, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 65 F.3d 1248 (5th Cir.1995), and the crimes which that touching encourages and facilitates. As the Pap's A.M. plurality explained, "If States are to be able to regulate secondary effects, then de minimis intrusions on expression such as those at issue here cannot be sufficient to render the ordinance content based." Pap's A.M, 120 S.Ct. at 1394. Here, the ordinance attempts to control secondary effects while leaving the "quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1742.[7]

5 The appellants argue in their brief to this court that "[t]he predominate concern of Ordinance No. 03–044 was, and remains today, the conduct-generated adverse effects of touching."

6 See Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, § 1.02 ("Purpose and Intent It is the purpose of this Chapter to regulate Sexually Oriented Businesses to promote the health, safety, morals and general welfare of the citizens of the City.... The provisions of this Chapter have neither the purpose nor effect of imposing a limitation or restriction on the content of any communicative materials ...."); see also id. § 1.03 ("Findings Based on evidence concerning the adverse secondary effects of Sexually Oriented Businesses on the community....").

7 As proof of the City's content-based motives, appellants draw our attention to the ordinance as originally enacted, which included a provision allowing City officials to ban particular dance movements. We disagree that such a provision suffices as to proof of illicit motive of the later enacted ordinance. The provision in question was ultimately rejected. Moreover, the provision might have been understood as an attempt to enforce the "no-touch" rule through the elimination of dance movements that might result in incidental contact between dancer and patron. More importantly, "this [c]ourt will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit motive." Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1392; see also Barnes, 111 S.Ct. at 2469 ("At least as to the regulation of expressive conduct, 'we decline to void [a statute] essentially on the ground that it is unwise legislation which [the legislature] had the undoubted power to enact and which could be reenacted in its exact form if the same or another legislator made a "wiser" speech about it.' ") (Souter, J., concurring) (quoting O'Brien, 88 S.Ct. at 1683). For example, the O'Brien court ignored the following legislative history which, if credited, may have called into question the relevant statute's content neutrality: "The [Senate] committee has taken notice of the defiant destruction and mutilation of draft cards by dissident persons who disapprove of national policy. If allowed to continue unchecked this contumacious conduct represents a potential threat to the exercise of the power to raise and support armies." O'Brien, 88 S.Ct. at 1673, 1684 (1968) (appendix).

558 The appellants urge, however, that because the alleged secondary effects result only from actual physical contact, not from mere proximity, the City could not realistically hope to eradicate them by going, literally, above and beyond the "no-touch" rule and enacting buffer zone and stage-height requirements.

The appellants' argument is flawed. This stage of the analysis—whether there is content neutrality—is simply the wrong place to dispute either the existence of the secondary effects or the efficacy of the challenged ordinance. Presently, we are concerned only with the ordinance's stated purpose; if the government's interest is unrelated to expression, then intermediate scrutiny applies. See Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1396 ("O'Brien, of course, required no evidentiary showing at all that the threatened harm was real."). Application of O'Brien's intermediate scrutiny, however, gives those challenging the ordinance an opportunity to convince the court that the ordinance does not actually further any substantial government interests, or, relatedly, that no substantial government interests exist. See N.W. Enterprises, 352 F.3d at 176 ("[T]he constitutional standard of review depends only upon the City's predominate legislative concern, not its pre-enactment proof that the ordinance would work....").

B. Applying O'Brien

[7] [8] Because we conclude that Ordinance No. 03–044 is content neutral, it is a constitutional restriction on symbolic speech if it satisfies the four factor test from O'Brien. Applying the O'Brien standard here, we conclude that the City of Arlington's ordinance passes the test. A public nudity ordinance that incidentally impacts protected expression should be upheld if (1) it is within the constitutional power of the government; (2) it furthers an important or substantial government interest; (3) the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) the incidental restriction on first amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest.

[9] The first prong of O'Brien, which is unchallenged by appellants, is whether the ordinance is within the constitutional power of the Arlington City Council. Even if challenged, this prong would easily be satisfied, since ordinances aimed at protecting the health and safety of citizens are squarely within the City's police powers. Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1395. The second prong of O'Brien is whether the regulation furthers an important or substantial government interest. The Court has identified two distinct questions packaged within this second prong. See Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1397 (describing the two questions as, first, "whether there is a substantial government interest ... i.e. whether the threatened harm is real," and, second, 559 "whether the regulation furthers that interest"). The appellants challenge the ordinance on both grounds, arguing first that a question of material fact exists as to whether "prostitution transactions, narcotics transactions, and assault result from proximity between dancer and patron during performances," and second that, even if these do exist, a question of material fact exists as to whether Ordinance No. 03–044 will ameliorate the problem.

[10] [11] [12] Both of these challenges raise questions of evidence that we evaluate using the standard described in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), as modified by Alameda Books. See Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1395 ("[T]he evidentiary standard described in Renton controls here...."); Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 1733, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 ("We granted certiorari to clarify the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton.") (citations omitted). The Renton evidentiary standard, as reaffirmed in Alameda Books, provides that "a municipality may rely on any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1736 (quoting Renton, 106 S.Ct. at 931); see also N.W. Enterprises Inc. v. City of Houston, 352 F.3d 162, 180 (5th Cir.2003). Justice Kennedy's concurrence noted that "[t]he First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities...." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1743 (quoting Renton, 106 S.Ct. at 931).[8] However, the plurality cautioned that the government cannot rely on "shoddy data or reasoning," explaining that:

> "the municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale.... If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standards set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance."
>
> Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1736 (plurality opinion) (citing Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1395–96); see also Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1742–44 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

The City of Arlington's summary-judgment evidence fairly supports its rationale by demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest. The record before us includes a report by the City's expert, Dr. Joel B. Goldsteen; several studies, conducted both within the City of Arlington and in other communities; as well as data cited in numerous courts opinions, all of which demonstrate a connection between dancer-patron touching and unsavory secondary effects. Also in the record are findings that the City's prior "no touch" ordinance had been consistently flouted and that attempts to enforce it had been costly and not adequately effective.

Faced with the "no touch" ordinance's failure to achieve its purpose, the City enacted the current version of the Ordinance, 560 including proximity provisions,

8 In Pap's A.M., the Court held that a municipality's own findings and "reasonable belief that the experience of other jurisdictions is relevant to the problem it is addressing" were a sufficient evidentiary basis. 120 S.Ct. at 1395.

demarcation requirements, and a no tipping rule, which the City believes are necessary to insure compliance with the "no touch" rule and to thereby eliminate the secondary effects that it targets. The City supports this belief with a Los Angeles Police Department study of criminal acts that are associated with close proximity between dancer and patron. Indeed, the appellants' own expert, Dr. Hanna, admits the very fact upon which the City's inference rests, noting that "[c]loseness and interaction between a performer and an individual patron permit the dancer to show special interest in the patron.... This occurs through eye contact, pupil dilation and ... incidental touch ...." (emphasis added).

The appellants respond, however, that the ordinance's pre-enactment record contains no empirical support for the City's alleged link between proximity and the targeted secondary effects. They point to their deposition of the City's expert, Dr. Goldsteen, who conceded that, pre-enactment, he was unaware of "any empirical studies which gauge the level of secondary effects which occur inside a gentlemen's club which is correlated to the distance between dancer and patron," and that he had not read "any report ... of that nature prior to [his] report to the city council...." Further, appellants note that their own expert, Bruce McLaughlin, concluded that "[n]othing in Goldsteen's report or in the materials which he could have examined establishes a correlation between dancer-patron proximity, let alone a causal relationship between such proximity, and adverse secondary effects." Echoing the appellant's concern for pre-enactment justification, McLaughlin concluded, "The Arlington City Council had before it nothing whatsoever with respect to proximity of dancers and patrons other than Goldsteen's conjecture and speculation."

[13] The appellant's focus on the City Council's pre-enactment rationale is misplaced, since "[o]ur appropriate focus is not an empirical enquiry into the actual intent of the enacting legislature, but rather the existence or not of a current governmental interest in the service of which the challenged application of the statute may be constitutional." LLEH, 289 F.3d at 368 (emphasis added) (quoting Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2469, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (Souter, J., concurring)); see also N.W. Enterprises, 352 F.3d at 175 ("[T]he City need not demonstrate that the City Council actually relied upon evidence of negative secondary effects.... A local government can justify a challenged ordinance based both on evidence developed prior to the ordinance's enactment and that adduced at trial.").

The appellants further argue, in the alternative, that the post-enactment rationale offered by the City is "shoddy," and contend that even if the City has met its burden of demonstrating a rationale for regulating proximity, they've cast sufficient doubt upon that rationale, as described in Alameda Books, to shift the burden back to the City to supplement the record and thereby preclude summary judgment. See, e.g., Peek–A–Boo Lounge v. Manatee County, 337 F.3d 1251, 1270–71 (11th Cir.2003) (reversing a summary judgment in favor of the County because the Peek–A–Boo Lounge had "successfully cast doubt on the County's rationale by placing into the record substantial and unanswered factual challenges."). In support of this claim, the appellants point to an affidavit by their expert, Joe Morris, who, after collecting data from open records requests to the Arlington police department and the municipal court, reported that there were no arrests, citations, or police calls for prostitution, solicitation, assault, or narcotics at any of the City of 561 Arlington's adult cabarets from July 1, 2002 through July 1, 2003.

We find this evidence, even when viewed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, plainly insufficient to preclude summary judgment. Indeed, "[a]lthough this evidence shows that [the City] might have reached a different and equally reasonable conclusion regarding the relationship between adverse secondary effects and sexually oriented businesses, it is not sufficient to vitiate the result reached in the [City's] legislative process." G.M Enterprises, Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639 (7th Cir.2003) (affirming summary judgment in favor of the Town's five-foot buffer and eighteen-inch stage-height requirement despite meaningful countervailing evidence presented by the plaintiffs). At best, Joe Morris's report suggests that no arrests at strip clubs had occurred for prostitution, drugs, or assault, a fact that is likely of little comfort to the City of Arlington, which passed this ordinance at least in part because dancer-patron proximity in a dimly-lit room made such crimes difficult to police. Ultimately, we are not empowered by Alameda to second-guess the empirical assessments of a legislative body, nor are we expected to submit such assessments to a jury for re-weighing; instead, the relevant "material fact" that must be placed at issue is whether the ordinance is supported by evidence that can be "reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem." See Renton, 106 S.Ct. at 931 (emphasis added); see also N.W. Enterprises, 352 F.3d at 180; Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1743 (Kennedy, J., concurring) ("[T]he Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do."). Because no such issue of material fact exists, we hold that Ordinance No. 03–044 satisfies the second prong of O'Brien.

The Ordinance also satisfies the third prong of O'Brien because, as discussed supra, the City's interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. See Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1397.

The fourth and final prong of O'Brien is also satisfied here, since the restriction on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the City's interest. In reaching this conclusion, we are largely bound by (and in any event agree with) our prior opinion in LLEH, in which we held that an ordinance with identical buffer-zone, stage-height, and demarcation requirements satisfied O'Brien's fourth prong. The LLEH court explained that "such regulations are not invalid simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech" so long as the "regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." LLEH, 289 F.3d at 367 (quoting United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 2906, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985)) (emphasis omitted). The only relevant difference between this ordinance and the one at issue in LLEH is that the Arlington ordinance also contains a six-foot tipping restriction. This restriction also satisfies prong four, however, because it "is simply a manifestation of the buffer provision; it furthers the same substantial interests.... [I]t imposes no further restriction on speech." LLEH, 289 F.3d at 368–69 (discussing the demarcation requirement).

Appellants respond, first, that LLEH 's narrow-tailoring standard was overruled by Justice Kennedy's concurrence in Alameda Books, and, second, that under either standard the ordinance is unconstitutional, since it completely bans a unique form of expression, proximate nude dancing.

562 We disagree with the appellants' contention that LLEH is no longer good law. The question of narrow tailoring was not before the Court in Alameda Books; rather, the Court "granted certiorari to clarify the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1733 (citations omitted). That question is relevant only to issues discussed above respecting O'Brien prongs two and three.

But even if Justice Kennedy's concurrence has tightened the narrow tailoring standard of Renton, [9] it is not clear that this purportedly new standard, which was formulated for zoning cases, would apply here, in a symbolic-speech case. Indeed, only two years before Alameda Books, in a symbolic-speech case, a plurality that included Justice Kennedy applied the very same "loose" narrow-tailoring requirement that we do today, holding "[t]he fourth O'Brien factor [is] that the restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest," and concluding "since this is a content-neutral restriction, least restrictive means analysis is not required." Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1386, 1397. In any event, the ordinance before us satisfies even the more strict standard proposed by appellants.

9 The appellants refer to the following language from Justice Kennedy's concurrence: "[A] city must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact.... [A] city may not attack secondary effects indirectly by attacking speech." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1742.

Thus we also disagree with the appellants' second argument, presented through their expert witness, Dr. Hanna, that the ordinance enacts a complete ban on proximate nude dancing. [10] The Supreme Court rejected a very similar argument when it was made by the dissenters in Pap's A.M., who argued that a pasties and G-string requirement completely silenced the erotic message associated with fully nude dancing. The plurality responded, "[S]imply to define what is being banned as the 'message' is to assume the conclusion.... Any effect on the overall expression is de minimis." Pap's A.M, 120 S.Ct. at 1393. Moreover, in Colacurcio, the Ninth Circuit rejected an identical argument, made through the very same Dr. Hanna, while holding that a ten-foot buffer zone, a two-foot stage-height requirement, and a tipping ban were all sufficiently narrow-tailored. Colacurcio v. City of Kent, 163 F.3d 545, 555–57 (9th Cir.1998), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1053, 120 S.Ct. 1553, 146 L.Ed.2d 459 (2000).

10 Dr. Hanna's "proximate nude dancing" theory could presumably not validly preclude a touching ban, as such bans having been universally upheld, but would (in appellants' view) preclude any distance restriction, so that nude dancers could not constitutionally be forbidden from coming within even an inch (or less) from patrons so long as they did not actually touch them.

Here too we hold that the effect on the overall expression is de minimis, as the City of Arlington has muted only that portion of the expression that occurs when the six-foot line is crossed, while leaving the erotic message largely intact. Indeed, in Barnes, all nine members of the Supreme Court agreed that a buffer zone would meet narrow tailoring requirements. Writing for the dissent, Justice White argued that the ordinance at issue, which banned all public nudity, was "not narrowly drawn." Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 2475, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991). The dissenters continued, "If the State is genuinely concerned with prostitution and associated evils ... it can adopt restrictions that do not 563 interfere with the expressiveness of nonobscene nude dancing performances. For instance, the State could perhaps require that, while performing, nude performers remain at all times a certain minimum distance from spectators...." Id. (emphasis added). Accordingly, we hold that the proximity provisions of the challenged ordinances satisfy all four prongs of O'Brien, and thus are a constitutional regulation of symbolic speech.

II. Prior Restraint

[14] Fantasy Ranch also contends that the ordinance's license-revocation provision is incompatible with the First Amendment because it imposes a prior restraint on symbolic speech. In Universal Amusement Co., Inc. v. Vance, this court held that a Texas nuisance statute, which authorized the one-year revocation of an adult theater's license on the basis of a prior finding of obscenity, constituted an impermissible prior restraint, "since the state would be enjoin[ing] the future operation of [a business] which disseminates presumptively First Amendment protected materials solely on the basis of the nature of the materials which were sold ... in the past." 587 F.2d 159, 166 (5th Cir.1978) (en banc) (internal quotations omitted). [11]

11 See also, e.g., Entertainment Concepts, Inc. III v. Maciejewski, 631 F.2d 497, 506 (7th Cir.1980).

The license revocation provision in this case differs from a prior restraint in two respects. "First, the [revocation] would impose no restraint at all on the dissemination of particular materials, since respondents are free to carry on their ... business at another location, even if such locations are difficult to find," and, "second, the closure order sought would not be imposed on the basis of an advance determination that the distribution of particular materials is prohibited—indeed, the imposition of the closure order has nothing to do with any expressive conduct at all." Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 106 S.Ct. 3172, 3177 n. 2, 92 L.Ed.2d 568 (1986).

Unlike the provision in Vance, which prohibited the showing of any film for one year, Fantasy Ranch is not prohibited from obtaining another SOB license (for another location) during the pendency of any license suspension or revocation. This is because Fantasy Ranch's license revocation would have been related, not to an advance determination that the content of its speech would be prohibited, but to the adverse secondary effects generated by Fantasy Ranch at its particular extant location.

To the extent that the license revocation provision does burden Fantasy Ranch's expressive liberties, we find that burden justified. In Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), the Supreme Court established three procedural safeguards to protect against the suppression of constitutionally protected speech by a censorship board. "First, any restraint before judicial review occurs can be imposed only for a specified brief period during which the status quo must be maintained; second, prompt judicial review of that decision must be available; and third, the censor must bear the burden of going to court to suppress the speech and must bear the burden of proof in court." N.W. Enterprises, 352 F.3d at 193–94 (citing Freedman, 85 S.Ct. at 739).

The Arlington Ordinance contains all three safeguards, first, providing for a stay of suspension pending the appeals process, §§ 4.07(B)(3), 4.09; second, providing a hearing before an administrative law judge 564 with an appeal to a Texas district court, §§ 4.07(B)(5), 4.09; and third, placing the burden of proof on the City, § 4.07(A). In fact, by this last provision, the City has provided for more procedural protection than our case law requires. Indeed, in N.W. Enterprises we held that the burden of proof need not be placed upon the City in cases where the licensing involved "the ministerial, nondiscretionary act of reviewing the general qualifications of license applicants" and not the "presumptively invalid direct censorship of expressive material." 352 F.3d at 194 (citing FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (plurality opinion)); see also Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 310 F.3d 812, 823 (5th Cir.2002); TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, Texas, 24 F.3d 705 at 707, 708 (5th Cir.1994); MacDonald v. City of Chicago, 243 F.3d 1021, 1035–36 (7th Cir.2001). The presumption of censorship does not apply here because the City of Arlington's revocation procedures do not require it to pass judgment on the content of an SOB's speech; rather, the procedures enumerate non-speech related criminal violations on which a license revocation or suspension must be predicated. Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, § 4.06.

Moreover, these enumerated violations are " 'plainly correlated with the side effects that can attend [adult] businesses, the regulation of which was the legislative objective ... [E]nds and means are substantially related [,] ... assur[ing] a level of scrutiny appropriate to the protected character of the activities and sluic[ing] regulation away from content, training it on business offal.' " N.W. Enterprises, 352 F.3d at 196 (quoting TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710). Accordingly, we hold that the Ordinance's license revocation provision does not impose an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech.

III. Due Process

[15] Fantasy Ranch appeals the district court's dismissal as moot of its due process claims against the City's pre-amendment ordinance. A court may conclude that voluntary cessation has rendered a case moot if the party urging mootness demonstrates that "there is no reasonable expectation ... that the alleged violation will recur," and that "interim relief or events have completely and irrevocably eradicated the effects of the alleged violation." County of Los Angeles v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 99 S.Ct. 1379, 1383, 59 L.Ed.2d 642 (1979).

[16] [17] The City's amended ordinance addresses all the issues raised by Fantasy Ranch's pre-amendment complaint, leaving Fantasy Ranch only with the claim that the Arlington City Council might one day amend the ordinance to reenact the offending provisions. As the Fourth Circuit has noted, however, "statutory changes that discontinue a challenged practice are 'usually enough to render a case moot, even if the legislature possesses the power to reenact the statute after the lawsuit is dismissed.' " Valero Terrestrial Corp. v. Paige, 211 F.3d 112, 116 (4th Cir.2000) (quoting Native Village of Noatak v. Blatchford, 38 F.3d 1505, 1510 (9th Cir.1994)); see also National Black Police Ass'n v. District of Columbia, 108 F.3d 346, 349 (D.C.Cir.1997) ("the mere power to reenact a challenged law is not a sufficient basis on which a court can conclude that a reasonable expectation of recurrence exists"). We hold, therefore, that Fantasy Ranch's challenge to the pre-amendment ordinance is moot.

[18] Fantasy Ranch also challenges the post-amendment ordinance, specifically, its provision for revoking an SOB license after four suspensions, because that revocation provision does not expressly exclude 565 from its four-suspension limit any suspensions that were imposed under the pre-amendment ordinance. Indeed, Fantasy Ranch notes that it already has one (and only one) such pre-amendment suspension in its name. However, in open court, the City has promised to neither enforce that three-day suspension imposed under the pre-amendment scheme, nor apply it toward the four total that are necessary to revoke an SOB license, and Fantasy Ranch's counsel agreed that this satisfied its concerns in that particular respect. We accordingly also hold that this due-process challenge to the post-amendment ordinance is likewise moot. To the extent that Fantasy Ranch makes other due process challenges to the post-amendment ordinance we reject them, essentially for the reasons stated in part II above. [12]

12 We also note that Fantasy Ranch has identified nothing in the ordinance that deprives them of notice or a hearing, although they allege, incorrectly, that the ordinance provides no notice to the club when a dancer has been cited for a violation. In fact, the ordinance provides that "[t]he City shall send to a Sexually Oriented Business written notice of each citation issued to an operator or employee of the business.... The notice will be sent within three (3) business days of the issuance of the citation...." Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, § 7.02. Moreover, contrary to Fantasy Ranch's claim, the ordinance provides an adequate tribunal, consisting of a hearing before an administrative law judge and an appeal before a Texas district court. Arlington, Tex., Ordinance 03–044, §§ 4.07, 4.09. See also part B2b above (The Post–Amendment Licensing Provisions).

The judgment of the district court is accordingly

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

459 F.3d 546

555 F.3d 512
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

RICHLAND BOOKMART, INC. d/b/a Town and Country Bookstore; Knoxville Adult Video Superstore, Inc.; and Greg Turner, d/b/a Raymond's Place, Plaintiffs-Appellants/Cross-Appellees,
v.
KNOX COUNTY, TENNESSEE,
Defendant-Appellee/Cross-Appellant.

Nos. 07-6469, 08-5036.
|
Argued: Dec. 11, 2008.
|
Decided and Filed: Feb. 12, 2009.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied April 23, 2009.

Synopsis

Background: Three sexually-oriented businesses filed suit to challenge the constitutionality of a county ordinance that established licensing requirements and regulations for sexually-oriented businesses. Upon motions by both parties, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, Thomas W. Phillips, J., 529 F.Supp.2d 868, granted summary judgment in favor of county and denied in part and granted in part businesses' motion for partial summary judgment. Businesses appealed and county cross-appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Boggs, Chief Judge, held that:

[1] ordinance was a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of First Amendment expression;

[2] ordinance served substantial government interest of combating harmful secondary effects of sexually-oriented business establishments;

[3] ordinance's definition of adult cabaret, insofar is it incorporated ordinance's definition of semi-nudity, was sufficiently narrowly tailored under free speech clause;

[4] ordinance's definition of prohibited nudity was sufficiently narrowly tailored under free speech clause;

[5] definitions of semi-nudity and nudity did not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication to engage in protected expression;

[6] prohibition on sale or consumption of alcohol on premises of sexually-oriented businesses in ordinance was sufficiently narrowly tailored under free speech clause;

[7] ordinance's licensing scheme was not an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech; and

[8] state law did not preempt ordinance's limitation on hours of operation for sexually-oriented businesses.

Summary judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

West Headnotes (30)

[1] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

A regulation of sexually-oriented businesses implicates at least two constitutionally-protected categories of speech: first, sexually explicit but non-obscene speech, such as adult publications and adult videos, and second, symbolic speech or expressive conduct, such as nude dancing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Time, place, and manner regulations of constitutionally-protected speech will survive constitutional scrutiny so long as they are content neutral, designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Unlike content-based regulations of speech that are subject to the most exacting scrutiny under free speech clause, regulations unrelated to the content of speech are subject to an intermediate level of scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

The kind of evidence required to establish that a content-neutral regulation of First Amendment expression furthers a substantial government interest depends on the character of the interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Constitutional Law
Selective service and the draft

Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

A content-neutral regulation of conduct, such as the prohibition on public nudity or on the destruction of draft cards, requires no evidentiary showing that the harm threatened is real in order to establish that the regulation furthers a substantial government interest, as required under free speech clause. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

The initial evidentiary burden on the government to establish the connection between a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of First Amendment expression and its purported impact on harmful secondary effects is not a heavy one: government must have had a reasonable evidentiary basis for concluding that its regulation would have the desired effect. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Although not extraordinarily high, the evidentiary burden on the government to establish the connection between a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of First Amendment expression and its purported impact on harmful secondary effects requires that the government show that the evidence upon which it relied was reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the government sought to address. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

County ordinance, which regulated sexually-oriented businesses by means of licensing scheme and other regulations, and which prohibited certain activities in such establishments, was a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation of First Amendment expression; ordinance's stated aim was to prevent the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses within the county and did not attempt to regulate a general category of conduct. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting a content-neutral ordinance regulating the time, place, and manner of First Amendment expression, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities to demonstrate the adverse secondary effects of such expression, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Local governments are not required to demonstrate empirically that proposed content-neutral ordinances regulating the time, place, and manner of First Amendment expression will or are likely to successfully ameliorate adverse secondary effects from such expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Freedom of speech, expression, and press

Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

If plaintiffs challenging a content-neutral ordinance regulating the time, place, and manner of First Amendment expression fail to cast direct doubt on a municipality's rationale that such restriction will ameliorate the harmful secondary effects of such expression, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets its burden of establishing that the ordinance serves a substantial government interest; if plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Constitutional Law
Bookstores

Constitutional Law
Video Stores

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

County's content-neutral time, place, and manner ordinance, which regulated sexually-oriented businesses by means of licensing scheme and other regulations including prohibition of certain activities in such establishments, served substantial government interest of combating harmful secondary effects of such establishments, and therefore did not violate free speech clause, despite claim that evidence of secondary effects cited in ordinance was not germane to off-site consumption bookstores or video stores and combination adult-mainstream stores; cumulative evidence of secondary effects documented in ordinance, including lower property values and higher crime rates, supported county's rationale in regulating sexually-oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest

Evidence suggesting that a different conclusion is also reasonable does not prove that a local government's findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable, in the government's adoption of a content-neutral ordinance regulating the time, place, and manner of First Amendment expression in the interest of combating harmful secondary effects of that expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law

Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

"Narrow tailoring" in the context of time, place, and manner regulations of protected speech means that the government may not regulate expression in such a manner that a substantial portion of the burden on speech does not serve to advance its goals, but it does not require that the means chosen be the least restrictive or least intrusive means of serving its goals. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law

Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

The requirement of "narrow tailoring" in the context of time, place, and manner regulations of protected speech is satisfied so long as the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law

Performers

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Definition of adult cabaret, insofar is it incorporated the definition of semi-nudity in county's content-neutral time, place, and manner ordinance regulating sexually-oriented businesses, was narrowly tailored to serve substantial government purpose of limiting adverse secondary effects from semi-nude dancing, and therefore ordinance did not violate free speech clause, despite claim that ordinance unreasonably imposed licensing and regulatory requirements on businesses whose performers wore more than pasties and g-strings; county's legislative determination that regular semi-nude performances were as liable to produce unwanted secondary effects as other sexually-oriented businesses was reasonable in view of the secondary-effects evidence the county examined, and ordinance did not impose substantial regulatory burden on protected speech without advancing goal of limiting secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

Performers

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Definition of prohibited "nudity" in county's content-neutral time, place, and manner ordinance regulating sexually-oriented businesses, which definition included the showing of male of female genitals or anus or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of the nipple and areola, was narrowly tailored to county's objective of limiting harmful secondary effects of nude dancing, and therefore did not violate free speech clause, as claimed by adult cabaret, where county consistently maintained that pasties and G-strings constituted sufficient covering to take a performer out of the state of nudity as defined in ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law

Nudity in general

While erotic dancing, whether performed in the nude or nearly so, is a protected expressive activity under the First Amendment, the state of nudity itself is not inherently expressive. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Because nudity itself is not essential to the eroticism that brings dancing under the protection of the First Amendment, a ban on public nudity merely limits a particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Performers

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Definitions of semi-nudity and nudity in county's content-neutral time, place, and manner ordinance regulating sexually-oriented businesses did not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication to engage in protected expression embodied in erotic dance, and therefore ordinance did not violate free speech clause, as claimed by adult cabaret; ordinance left ample means of conveying the message contained in erotic dancing by giving adult cabaret choice to opt for pasties and g-strings for dancers and compliance with reasonable restrictions of ordinance, or to outfit dancers in sufficient cloth to escape regulation altogether. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Prohibition on the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises of sexually-oriented businesses in county's content-neutral time, place, and manner ordinance was a reasonable restriction narrowly tailored to limit the secondary effects of crime, and therefore ordinance did not violate free speech clause, as claimed by adult cabaret; county's finding that sexually-oriented businesses as a category were associated with numerous adverse secondary effects reasonably relied on a number of prior judicial decisions finding sufficient evidence to support the connection between adverse effects and adult entertainment when combined with alcohol consumption. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Prohibition of substantial amount of speech

A law that is overly broad proscribes a substantial amount of constitutionally protected speech judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Overbreadth

Overbroad laws warrant the dramatic remedy of invalidation to allay the concern that the threat of enforcement of such a law may deter or chill constitutionally protected speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Prohibition of substantial amount of speech

To succeed in a facial-overbreadth challenge on First Amendment speech grounds, plaintiffs must demonstrate from the text of the statute and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law

Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Constitutional Law

Licenses and permits in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

County ordinance that established licensing requirements and regulations for sexually-oriented businesses was not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face, as claimed by three such businesses, in absence of any arguments or evidence in support of overbreadth claims beyond those proffered in support of businesses' unsuccessful as-applied free speech challenges. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law

Licenses and permits in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

County's licensing scheme for sexually-oriented businesses and their employees was a prior restraint on protected First Amendment expression, where ordinance prohibited license to applicant convicted of specified criminal activity, and provided for revocation of business's license if business knowingly hired someone who committed specified crime within previous five years. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Constitutional Law

Prior Restraints

Prior restraints on protected expression are not unconstitutional per se. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law

Licenses and permits in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Prior restraint on speech imposed by county ordinance's licensing scheme for sexually-oriented businesses, which restraint consisted of license prohibition or revocation in relation to prior crime by an applicant, did not violate free speech clause, where ordinance provided for prompt judicial review of a revoked license and also provided for the preservation of the status quo while a license application was pending and while an appeal from a revocation of the license was pending. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Counties

Legislative control of acts, rights, and liabilities

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Preemption

State adult-oriented establishment statute did not preempt county ordinance's limitation on hours of operation for sexually-oriented businesses; statute clearly allowed county to enact and enforce restrictions concerning business operations of adult-oriented establishments and sexually-oriented businesses. West's T.C.A. §§ 7-51-1402(b), 7-51-1406.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Sexually-oriented businesses lacked standing to challenge civil disability provisions of county ordinance which prohibited applicant from receiving sexually-oriented business license if applicant had been convicted of specified criminal activity, where none of businesses or anyone affiliated with them were ever convicted of any of the specified crimes.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

517 ARGUED: Frierson M. Graves, Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell & Berkowitz, Memphis, Tennessee, for Appellants. Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, Tennessee, for Appellee. ON BRIEF: Frierson M. Graves, Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell & Berkowitz, Memphis, Tennessee, Michael F. Pleasants, Sr., Pleasants Law Firm, Memphis, Tennessee, Joseph J. Levitt, Jr., Knoxville, Tennessee, for Appellants. Scott D. Bergthold, Bryan Allen Dykes, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, Tennessee, for Appellee.

Before: BOGGS, Chief Judge; KETHLEDGE, Circuit Judge; and THAPAR, District Judge. [*]

[*] The Honorable Amul R. Thapar, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Kentucky, sitting by designation.

518 OPINION

BOGGS, Chief Judge.

Three sexually oriented businesses, Richland Bookmart, Inc., Adult Video Superstore, Inc., and Raymond's Place filed suit to challenge the constitutionality of a Knox County Ordinance that establishes licensing requirements and regulations for sexually-oriented businesses. Plaintiffs attacked several provisions of the Ordinance, on the theory that the Ordinance is unconstitutional as applied to them and on its face. Upon motions by both parties, the district court granted summary judgment in favor of Knox County and denied Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment, with one small exception: the court ordered the severance of two crimes, "racketeering" and "dealing in controlled substances," from the list of crimes that triggered the Ordinance's civil disability provision. Plaintiffs' appeal raises four main issues. First, Plaintiffs claim that the Ordinance is an unconstitutional infringement on First Amendment freedoms that is not justified by adequate evidence that local sexually oriented businesses produce adverse "secondary effects" or that the Ordinance is designed to remedy such effects. Second, Plaintiffs claim that the definitions of "nudity," "semi-nudity," and "adult motel," as well as the prohibition on the sale and consumption of alcohol are not narrowly tailored and are unconstitutionally overbroad. Third, they claim that the Ordinance enacts an unconstitutional prior restraint. Fourth, they claim that the Ordinance's regulation of business hours is preempted by Tennessee law. Knox County cross-appeals, arguing that the district court erroneously ordered the severance of "racketeering" and "dealing in controlled substances" from the Ordinance's civil disability provision. With regard to the issues presented by Plaintiffs' appeal, we affirm the district court's decision; with regard to the cross-appeal, we reverse the order to sever.

I

Richland Bookmart, Inc. ("Richland") and Adult Video Superstore, Inc. ("Adult Video") are adult stores that sell and rent books, magazines and videos to adults. Both Richland and Adult Video are "off-site consumption" or "retail only" businesses-they do not operate on-site facilities for viewing of films or for other adult entertainment. Richland has operated for over twenty years; Adult Video opened in 2004. Greg Turner operates Raymond's Place ("Raymond's"), an adult cabaret that provides "adult entertainment to consenting adults," including female dancers performing in the nude or clad in pasties and g-strings.

In the fall of 2004, the Knox County Commission ("County") began to update its regulation of sexually oriented businesses, culminating in Ordinance O-05-2-102 ("Ordinance"). The Ordinance enacted licensing requirements and other regulations applicable to "sexually oriented businesses," which include adult arcades, adult bookstores or adult video stores, adult cabarets, adult motels, adult motion picture theaters, semi-nude model studios, sexual device shops, and sexual encounter centers.

An "adult bookstore or adult video store" is defined as "a commercial establishment which, as one of its principal business purposes, offers for sale or rental for any form of consideration any one or more of the following: books or [visual representations] which are characterized by their emphasis upon the display of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical 519 areas'." In reaction to a June 29, 2005 decision by the Tennessee Supreme Court, which invalidated a zoning ordinance on the basis of its vague definition of "adult bookstore," see City of Knoxville v. Entertainment Resources, LLC, 166 S.W.3d 650 (Tenn.2005), the County amended its definition of adult bookstore or video store. The amended Ordinance specifies that a "principal business purpose" is defined to mean 35% or more of any one of the following: (a) displayed merchandise, (b) wholesale or (c) retail value of the displayed merchandise, (d) revenues derived from sale or rental, or (e) interior business space (we shall refer to this provision as the "35% threshold"). In addition, (f) a business that "regularly features" the "specified sexual activities" or "anatomical areas" and "prohibits access by minors, because of age, to the premises, and advertises itself as offering 'adult' or 'xxx' or 'x-rated' or 'erotic' or 'sexual' or 'pornographic' material on signage visible from a public right of way," is also defined to have the principal business purpose sufficient to bring it within the scope of the Ordinance.

An adult cabaret is defined as "a nightclub, bar, juice bar, restaurant, bottle club, or similar commercial establishment, whether or not alcoholic beverages are served, which regularly features persons who appear semi-nude." "Semi-nude or state of semi-nudity" is further defined to mean "the showing of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola and extending across the width of the breast at that point, or the showing of the male or female buttocks. This definition shall include the lower portion of the human female breast, but shall not include any portion of the cleavage of the human female breasts exhibited by a bikini, dress, blouse, shirt, leotard, or similar wearing apparel provided the areola is not exposed in whole or in part." [1]

[1] The word "bikini" was added into the definition at the same time as the definition of "adult bookstore or adult video store" was amended.

The Ordinance regulates sexually oriented businesses in three general ways: it requires that such businesses and all employees thereof be licensed on an annual basis, Secs. 4-12; it regulates business hours, the manner in which sexually explicit films or videos may be exhibited, and interior configuration requirements, Secs. 13-15; and it prohibits certain activities, Sec. 18. With regard to licensing, the Ordinance provides that a license "shall" be issued to both businesses and employees unless one of the specified conditions is met. One such condition is the applicant's conviction, a plea of guilty or of nolo contendere to a "specified criminal activity," namely "rape, aggravated rape, aggravated sexual assault, public indecency, statutory rape, rape of a child, sexual exploitation of a minor, indecent exposure," "dealing in controlled substances," or "racketeering." Sec. 5(a)(6), (b)(5). A business can also lose its license if it knowingly hires someone who committed one of these specified crimes within the previous five years. Sec. 10.

The Ordinance prohibits nudity and the "sale, use or consumption" of alcoholic beverage on the premises of a sexually oriented business. "Nudity or a state of nudity" is defined to mean "the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage with less than a fully opaque covering, or the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple and areola."

In May 2005, Richland and Adult Video filed suit seeking a preliminary injunction, a permanent injunction, and declaratory judgment against the Ordinance. After 520 the Ordinance was amended as noted above and Raymond's motion to intervene was granted, the court denied the County's motion to dismiss. Plaintiffs moved for partial summary judgment, arguing that four provisions of the Ordinance are overbroad and not narrowly tailored, and the County moved for summary judgment in November 2007. On December 17, 2007, the district court denied Plaintiffs' motion and granted the County's motion for summary judgment with one exception: the court ordered that "racketeering" and "dealing in controlled substances" be severed from the Ordinance's definition of "specified criminal activity."

II

We review a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Trustees of the Mich. Laborers' Health Care Fund v. Gibbons, 209 F.3d 587, 590 (6th Cir.2000). The decision below may be affirmed only if the pleadings, affidavits, and other submissions show "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c). In determining whether a genuine issue of material fact exists, we draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986).

III

Plaintiffs' first argument attacks the relevance and sufficiency of the evidence relied on by the County to justify the regulation of adult stores selling for off-site consumption only and of stores barely meeting the 35% threshold. Furthermore, Plaintiffs claim to have produced their own evidence that puts the County's factual findings and rationale in sufficient doubt to render summary judgment for the County inappropriate. In order to evaluate the merits of Plaintiffs' first claim, we must first determine how much and what kind of evidence is required to justify a regulation such as the present Ordinance, and how much and what kind of evidence is required to mount a successful challenge thereto.

A

[1] [2] A regulation of sexually oriented businesses, such as the Knox County Ordinance, implicates at least two protected categories of speech: first, sexually explicit but non-obscene speech, such as adult publications and adult videos, and second, "symbolic speech" or "expressive conduct," such as nude dancing. The Supreme Court has held that a restriction on protected speech is "sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Similarly, "time, place, and manner" regulations of protected speech will survive constitutional scrutiny "so long as they are [content neutral,] designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986).

The Supreme Court has indicated that "the [O'Brien] standard for judging the validity of restrictions on expressive conduct ... in the last analysis is little, if any, different from the standard applied to time, place, or manner restrictions." 521 Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 797-98, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) ("In Clark [v. Cmty. for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984),] we observed that this [time, place, or manner] test has been interpreted to embody much the same standards as those set forth in United States v. O'Brien ...."). Accordingly, we have previously treated the two standards as sufficiently similar to be applied interchangeably. See, e.g., Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 526 F.3d 291, 299 n. 6 (6th Cir.2008); DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 410 n. 6 (6th Cir.1997). Yet, the two formulations were penned in different contexts and employ different language; neither the Supreme Court nor this court has made explicit whether and when the differences have any legal significance. We continue to adhere to the position that the O'Brien and Renton inquiries "embody much the same standards," Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456. DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 410 n. 6. At the same time, a clear resolution of Plaintiffs' first claim is aided by an understanding of the difference between O'Brien and its progeny and Renton and its progeny.

[3] Unlike content-based regulations that are subject to the "most exacting scrutiny," regulations "unrelated to the content of speech are subject to an intermediate level of scrutiny." Turner Broad. Sys. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 642, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994). In O'Brien, the Supreme Court set out the intermediate scrutiny standard for the constitutionality of content-neutral regulations of expression and applied it to a regulation of general conduct (a prohibition on the destruction of Selective Service draft cards) that incidentally burdened "symbolic speech" or "expressive conduct" (the burning of a draft card to protest the war). 391 U.S. at 376-77, 88 S.Ct. 1673. In Renton, the Supreme Court confronted another kind of content-neutral law: a time, place, or manner regulation aimed at negative "secondary effects" of protected speech. [2]

[2] We have acknowledged that, to some extent, the classification of restrictions on sexually explicit establishments as content-neutral is a legal fiction-but one that has been generally followed. Richland Bookmart v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435, 440 (6th Cir.1998). As we have noted, "[a]lthough five members of the Court abandoned the premise that such restrictions are content-neutral sixteen years later in City of Los > Angeles v. Alameda Books, [535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002)] the Court continued to apply intermediate scrutiny to laws targeting 'secondary effects.' " 729, Inc. v. Kenton County Fiscal Court, 515 F.3d 485, 490-91 (6th Cir.2008).

In Renton, the Supreme Court reformulated the requirements of the O'Brien test and made them more specific as applied to the subset of content-neutral regulations then before the Court. Renton's standard applies to time, place, and manner regulations rather than to prohibitions of speech, thereby limiting its application to laws that satisfy O'Brien's first requirement that regulations be within the government's constitutional power. Renton closely mirrors O'Brien's second requirement that the regulation "further" a substantial government interest by requiring that it be "designed to serve" the same. Renton requires that such regulations be content-neutral, thereby satisfying O'Brien's third requirement that the interest be unrelated to the suppression of speech.

O'Brien's final demand that a restriction be "no greater than is essential to the furtherance" of the government interest is a requirement that the law be narrowly 522 tailored. See Turner Broad. Sys., 512 U.S. at 662, 114 S.Ct. 2445 (stating that a law needs to be narrowly tailored to satisfy the O'Brien standard, and that narrow tailoring "in this context requires ... that the means chosen do not burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government's legitimate interests." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). While Renton does not explicitly require narrow tailoring, we agree with the Seventh Circuit that a narrow-tailoring requirement is implicit in the Renton standard. Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 714 n. 16 (7th Cir.2003). That circuit noted that "the Supreme Court does not always spell out the 'narrowly tailored' step as part of its standard for evaluating time, place, and manner restrictions." Ibid. However, "a close examination of Renton reveals that the Court did consider whether the zoning ordinance at issue was narrowly tailored," ibid. (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925), and that the Court has required narrow tailoring in other cases involving time, place, and manner regulation. See Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (holding that to pass constitutional scrutiny, time, place, or manner restrictions must be " 'justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, ... narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and ... leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information' ") (quoting Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065). Renton's final requirement that alternative avenues of communication are not to be unreasonably restricted is the only one that finds no reflection in O'Brien: it may fairly be said that this additional requirement exists to guard against the peculiar risks of time, place, and manner regulations that are not presented by general-conduct regulations.

[4] [5] The choice between the O'Brien and Renton doctrines takes on some significance mainly when we must determine what evidence is sufficient to satisfy the substantially equivalent intermediate-scrutiny standards. See also Peek-A-Boo Lounge of Bradenton, Inc. v. Manatee County, 337 F.3d 1251, 1264-65 (11th Cir.2003). Importantly, the kind of evidence required to establish that a regulation furthers a substantial government interest depends on character of the interest. A content-neutral regulation of conduct, such as the prohibition on public nudity or on the destruction of draft cards, "require[s] no evidentiary showing at all that the threatened harm was real." City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 299, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (emphasis added). It was enough, for example, that Congress took "official notice, as it were, that draft card destruction would jeopardize the [Selective Service] system," and no further evidence or studies were required. Ibid. (citing O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 378-80, 88 S.Ct. 1673). See also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 567-68, 111 S.Ct. 2456. However, as the Supreme Court cautioned, "[t]he fact that this sort of leeway is appropriate in a case involving conduct says nothing whatsoever about its appropriateness in a case involving actual regulation of First Amendment expression." Ibid. (emphasis added); see also Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 73, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) (holding that plaintiffs' convictions for violation of a zoning ordinance prohibiting all live entertainment in the Borough of Mount Ephraim ran afoul of the First and Fourteenth Amendments, because "the Borough has presented no evidence ... that live entertainment poses problems ... more significant than those associated with various permitted uses" (emphasis added)).

523 [6] [7] The burden governments must carry to establish the connection between "actual regulation of First Amendment expression" and its purported impact on secondary effects was further elaborated in Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670. The initial evidentiary burden on the government is not a heavy one: the entity issuing the regulation "must have had a reasonable evidentiary basis for concluding that its regulation would have the desired effect. Although not extraordinarily high, this evidentiary burden requires that the entity show that the evidence upon which it relied was 'reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem' that the entity sought to address." 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491 (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925; Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality); Id. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment)). No comparable "evidentiary basis" has been demanded to establish that a general-conduct regulation further such an interest. See Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 298-99, 120 S.Ct. 1382 ("The Court [in O'Brien] did not require evidence that the integrity of the Selective Service System would be jeopardized by the knowing destruction or mutilation of draft cards.... There was no study documenting instances of draft card mutilation or the actual effect of such mutilation on the Government's asserted efficiency interests."). For this reason, our first step is to determine whether the Knox County Ordinance purports to be a regulation of conduct that incidentally burdens expression (as in O'Brien), a time, place, or manner regulation targeting secondary effects (as in Renton), or a regulation comprising both (as in Pap's A.M.). [3]

3 It is, of course, possible that the government interest comprises both a regulation of general conduct and control of secondary effects:

> While the doctrinal theories behind "incidental burdens" and "secondary effects" are, of course, not identical, there is nothing objectionable about a city passing a general ordinance to ban public nudity (even though such a ban may place incidental burdens on some protected speech) and at the same time recognizing that one specific occurrence of public nudity-nude erotic dancing-is particularly problematic because it produces harmful secondary effects.

Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 295, 120 S.Ct. 1382; see also Clark, 468 U.S. at 294, 104 S.Ct. 3065 (agreeing with petitioners' justification of a regulation forbidding sleeping in a park "either as a time, place, or manner restriction or as a regulation of symbolic conduct").

[8] The Knox County Ordinance is a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation. Its stated aim is to "prevent the deleterious secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses within the County." Sec. 1(a). To combat the secondary effects identified in the Preamble to the Ordinance, the County chose to regulate sexually oriented businesses by means of a licensing scheme and other regulations that are applicable to such establishments only, and a prohibition on only certain activities in such establishments. The County does not attempt to regulate a general category of conduct as in O'Brien or Barnes; instead, it expressly seeks to regulate protected expression in order to ameliorate adverse secondary effects. Cf. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289-90, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (holding that Erie's ordinance is on its face a general prohibition on public nudity that does not target expressive nude dancing). Thus, we find it prudent to conduct our analysis in terms set forth in Renton and Alameda Books-or, equivalently, to apply the O'Brien test, incorporating evidentiary standards articulated in 524 Renton and its progeny. [4]

4 This is in accord with our prior decisions, in which we have applied the O'Brien test and required that regulations meet the evidentiary burden set forth in Renton. E.g., Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp. Bd. of Trs., 411 F.3d 777, 789, 791 (6th Cir.2005) (en banc).

B

The next question is whether the Ordinance serves a substantial government interest. It is now recognized that governments have a substantial interest in controlling adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented establishments, which include violent, sexual, and property crimes as well as blight and negative effects on property values. E.g., Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Richland Bookmart, 137 F.3d at 440. Plaintiffs argue that the Ordinance does not advance that admittedly important interest and that summary judgment in favor of the County was improper because Plaintiffs adduced facts demonstrating that at least a subset of the businesses regulated by the Ordinance has not in fact generated any adverse secondary effects in Knox County. Under Renton, the County had to provide "a reasonable evidentiary basis for concluding that its regulation would have the desired effect." 729, Inc. v. Kenton County Fiscal Court, 515 F.3d 485, 491 (6th Cir.2008). Plaintiffs submit that the County failed to carry its initial evidentiary burden, "however slight," because the evidence cited in the Ordinance is not "germane" to at least two categories of adult businesses in Knox

County-namely, "off-site consumption" bookstores or video stores such as Richland and Adult Video, and "combination" adult-mainstream stores that barely meet the Ordinance's 35% threshold. Appellants' Br. at 22, 26.

[9] [10] The Supreme Court and this court have repeatedly held that local governments need not conduct their own studies demonstrating that adverse secondary effects result from the operation of sexually oriented businesses or that the measures chosen will ameliorate these effects. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion); id. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925; Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 466 F.3d 391, 398 (6th Cir.2006); Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C. v. Union Twp., 411 F.3d 777, 791 (6th Cir.2005) (en banc). "The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton, 475 U.S. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis added). Nor are local governments required to demonstrate empirically that its proposed regulations will or are likely to successfully ameliorate adverse secondary effects. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Thus, insofar as Plaintiffs merely dispute the relevance of "foreign" and outdated studies, they fail to create a genuine issue of material fact to survive summary judgment.

[11] This is not to say that, provided that the now-standard list of studies and judicial opinions is recited, no plaintiff could ever successfully challenge the evidentiary basis for a secondary-effects regulation. Albeit light, the burden on the government is not non-existent, and a 525 plaintiff may put forth sufficient evidence to further augment that burden:

> This is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. As we have recently noted, the Alameda Books plurality thus "set forth a burden-shifting framework governing the evidentiary standard in secondary-effects cases." Sensations, Inc. v. City of Grand Rapids, 526 F.3d 291, 297 n. 5 (6th Cir.2008). [5]

5 Because Justice Kennedy concurred in the judgment of the Court on the narrowest grounds, his concurrence represents the Court's holding in Alameda Books. 729, Inc., 515 F.3d at 491. Justice Kennedy's concurrence seems to endorse the evidentiary standard set forth by the plurality, and departs from the plurality on a different point. See 535 U.S. at 451, 453, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (stating that "very little evidence" is required to justify a secondary effects regulation "at least at the outset," but that the regulation may not withstand intermediate scrutiny if the evidentiary "assumptions" are later "proved unsound").

[12] Plaintiffs contend that not only has the County failed to carry its initial burden, but that they have "raised the doubt required by Alameda," Appellants' Br. at 31, shifting the burden back to the County to proffer further evidence in support of its rationale, which makes summary judgment for the County at this stage improper. As an initial matter, Plaintiffs are incorrect to suggest that the County cited no findings relevant to the secondary effects of the contested types of businesses (off-site and combination stores). In fact, the Ordinance relied on a number of judicial decisions, which held that evidence of secondary effects produced by off-site or retail-only sexually oriented businesses was sufficient to justify their regulation. For example, in H & A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, the Fifth Circuit stated that the City of Kennedale "cannot reasonably believe its evidence [of secondary effects] is relevant unless it sufficiently segregates data attributable to off-site establishments from the data attributable to on-site establishments." 480 F.3d 336, 339 (5th Cir.2007). That Circuit considered the evidence offered by the City and found that a 1984 Indianapolis study and a 1986 Oklahoma City study indeed isolated the effects of off-site establishments on property values, which sufficiently "support[ed] the belief that off-site sexually oriented businesses cause harmful secondary effects." Ibid. Similarly, in World Wide Video of Wash., Inc. v. City of Spokane, the Ninth Circuit upheld Spokane's regulation of retail-only stores on the basis of testimonial evidence from residents complaining of a variety of negative effects associated with this category of businesses. 368 F.3d 1186, 1197 (9th Cir.2004). The Indianapolis and Oklahoma studies relied on by Kennedale and the testimonial evidence relied on by Spokane were also included among the findings made by the County in enacting the Ordinance.

While some courts have presumed that the distinction between off- and on-site 526 consumption may be constitutionally relevant, H & A Land Corp., 480 F.3d at 339, it is difficult to maintain the same about Plaintiffs' suggested distinction between "combination" stores that just barely meet one of the 35% thresholds and those that meet it by some larger margin. Requiring local governments to produce evidence of secondary effects for all categories created by every articulable distinction is a misapprehension of the Supreme Court's holding that governments may rely on any evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438-39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (stating that the city need not demonstrate that "adult department stores" produce the same secondary effects as "adult minimalls"); see also G.M. Enters. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639 (7th Cir.2003) ("The plurality [in Alameda Books] did not require that a regulating body rely on research that targeted the exact activity it wished to regulate, so long as the research it relied upon reasonably linked the regulated activity to adverse secondary effects."). While the 35% threshold may be arbitrarily chosen, and it very well may be that this threshold sweeps in some relatively benign establishments, it is not for us to decide that some higher, equally arbitrary percentage would lessen the burden on expression without compromising the efficacy of the Ordinance in controlling secondary effects. See DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 413 ("The City Council determined that a six-foot zone struck the appropriate balance; while it is probable that each marginal foot of the buffer zone achieves each of these goals somewhat less efficiently, it is not for us to say that a seven-foot zone or a five-foot zone would strike a better balance."). Thus, we find that the cumulative evidence of secondary effects documented in the preamble to the Ordinance "fairly supports" the County's rationale in regulating off-site and combination establishments, along with other sexually oriented businesses, as required by Alameda Books.

Because we find that the County met its initial evidentiary burden, only if Plaintiffs succeed in casting "direct doubt" on the County's rationale or factual findings would the County need additional support for its decision to regulate the contested business categories. We conclude that Plaintiffs' efforts to cast such doubt are unsuccessful. Assuming for the sake of argument that the evidence offered by the Plaintiffs is not inadmissible on summary judgment, as the County argues it is, Appellee's Br. at 36-38, it is of dubious substantive import. Unlike most plaintiffs challenging similar regulations, e.g., J.L. Spoons, Inc. v. Dragani, 538 F.3d 379, 381-82 (6th Cir.2008), Plaintiffs do not introduce their own expert findings or studies, but rely on a private investigator and their own or their attorney's summaries of police incident reports and property value assessments. Even if we were to accept this information as authoritative, its probative value is minimal because elementary rules of logic and empirical inference preclude the conclusions Plaintiffs urge.

Plaintiffs argue that an affidavit signed by their attorney contains evidence that no decrease in property values was caused by some of the businesses. The affidavit contains property values set by the Knox County Tax Assessor for properties around Richland and Raymond's, and for properties around "various establishments which provide and distribute adult videos as well as provide adult dancing" for years 1997, 2001, and 2005. However, we are told nothing about how the 13% increase in property values over the period of eight years around Richland and Raymond's shown in the affidavit compares to the changes in property values elsewhere in Knox County. An absolute increase in property values says nothing about Richland's 527 or Raymond's impact on those property values, because we do not observe the counterfactual (i.e., what those values would be if Richland were not located there), nor do we observe the changes in property values in similar locations, or in any location, not near a sexually oriented business. Nor can we conclude anything about the trends in property values prior to 1997-and Plaintiff

Richland has been in operation at its present site for over twenty years, operating as an off-site consumption establishment since about 1990. Appellants' Br. at 6. Likewise, we cannot know whether the proffered "various establishments which provide and distribute adult videos as well as provide adult dancing" are representative of all such establishments in Knox County, and therefore, we can conclude nothing about the impact on property values of the whole category of businesses.

Further, Plaintiffs submit a summary of "[p]olice incident reports from the period January 1, 2000 through May 2005 of video stores with large adult sections of sexually explicit videos described in the Affidavit of [Plaintiffs'] investigator to demonstrate the lack of any negative secondary effects on [sic] video stores with as little as 35% [of inventory consisting of sexually-explicit materials] as defined in the Ordinance." Appellants' Br. at 11. The affidavit composed by a private investigator hired by Plaintiffs contains only general descriptions of the businesses, such as would be readily observable by a customer. There is little in the affidavit that allows us to conclude that all or most businesses selected meet any one of the 35% thresholds in the Ordinance or whether each or any of them barely clears, or vastly exceeds, the 35% threshold. Merely stating that a video store had an inventory of "approximately 4,000 sexually explicit videos," for example, says nothing about the percentage of the total inventory these videos comprise.

[13] It is unnecessary for us to go through every piece of evidence Plaintiffs offer in an attempt to cast doubt on the County's findings and rationale. While the County may rely on evidence from other locations and anecdotal evidence, Plaintiffs' burden is heavier and cannot be met with unsound inference or similarly anecdotal information. Giving Plaintiffs' evidence the most charitable treatment, it suggests merely that the County "could have reached a different conclusion during its legislative process" with regard to the need to regulate some categories of sexually oriented businesses. See Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, 490 F.3d 860, 881 (11th Cir.2007). As the district court and the County point out, evidence suggesting that a different conclusion is also reasonable does not prove that the County's findings were impermissible or its rationale unsustainable. Ibid.; Turner Broad. Sys., 520 U.S. at 211, 117 S.Ct. 1174 (stating that in the context of intermediate scrutiny, conflicting evidence should not lead the court to "re-weigh the evidence de novo"); G.M. Enters., 350 F.3d at 639 ("Although this evidence shows that the [town government] might have reached a different and equally reasonable conclusion regarding the relationship between adverse secondary effects and sexually oriented businesses, it is not sufficient to vitiate the result reached in the ... legislative process."). While Plaintiffs claim to have produced evidence disproving that their establishments are associated with lower property values or higher crime rates, the Ordinance is supported by evidence to the contrary. For example, contra Plaintiffs' claim that Raymond's cabaret is not associated with higher crime, the County relied on several studies and judicial decisions attesting to such an association: e.g., a 1997 Houston study, a 1977 Los Angeles study, police investigations 528 of crimes and unsanitary conditions at adult cabarets in nearby Chattanooga, and judicial findings of prostitution at same, DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 894 F.Supp. 1140, 1146 (E.D.Tenn.1995), aff'd 107 F.3d 403. Contra Plaintiffs' claim that Richland and Adult Video produce no adverse secondary effects, the County relied on several studies and testimonial evidence, such as those we noted above. Plaintiffs' unsystematic and eclectic collection of information is insufficient to cast direct doubt on the relevance of the evidence relied on by the County, or the County's rationale in enacting the Ordinance. For these reasons, we conclude Plaintiffs did not meet their burden of casting direct doubt on the factual findings or rationale underlying the County's Ordinance.

C

Plaintiffs' second argument combines an as-applied and a facial challenge to the Ordinance's regulatory reach. Plaintiffs challenge the definition of "semi-nudity," which is part of the definition of "adult cabaret," the definition of "nudity," the prohibition on the sale or consumption of alcohol, and the definition of "adult motel" as not narrowly tailored and/or overbroad.

[14] [15] As we discussed above in section III.A, time, place, and manner regulations of speech must be narrowly tailored to serve the government's legitimate, content-neutral interests. Narrow tailoring means that the "[g]overnment may not regulate expression in such a manner that a substantial portion of the burden on speech does not serve to advance its goals," but it does not require that the means chosen "be the least restrictive or least intrusive means" of serving its goals. Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746. "Rather, the requirement of narrow tailoring is satisfied so long as the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation." DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 412 (quoting Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746).

[16] Adult Cabaret. Plaintiffs argue that the definition of "adult cabaret," insofar is it incorporates the definition of "semi-nudity," is not narrowly tailored, and that the district court erred in denying their motion for partial summary judgment on this issue. Plaintiff Raymond's is an adult cabaret under the Ordinance and has standing to challenge this provision.

Plaintiffs claim that the definition of "semi-nudity" unreasonably subjects to the licensing and regulatory requirements businesses, whose performers wear more than pasties and g-strings. Plaintiffs explain that pasties show "the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola" and a g-string shows buttocks, which makes a pasties-and-g-string ensemble insufficient to avoid the definition of semi-nudity-and thus, the regulatory reach of the Ordinance. Appellants' Br. at 41. Subjecting such performances to regulation, Plaintiffs argue, does not serve the government's legitimate interest in controlling secondary effects and needlessly abridges the erotic expression communicated by the performers.

We recognize that "nude or nearly [nude]" dancing conveys "an endorsement of erotic experience," and is a protected form of expression "in the absence of some contrary clue." DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 409 (quoting Barnes, 501 U.S. at 581, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring in the judgment)). We need not adopt the district court's determination that "the Ordinance goes no further than regulating businesses in which dancers wear pasties and g-strings," in order to conclude that the Ordinance is narrowly tailored.

529 We have previously upheld various time, place, and manner regulations of businesses featuring performers clad in revealing garments that nonetheless cover more than the pubic area and areolae. In DLS, Inc., this court considered a Chattanooga City ordinance that defined "adult cabaret" in a similar, if not even more far-reaching manner:

> an establishment which features as a principle [sic] use of its business, entertainers and/or waiters and/or bartenders who expose to public view of the patrons within said establishment, at any time, the bare female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola, human genitals, pubic region, or buttocks, even if partially covered by opaque material or completely covered by translucent material; including swim suits, lingerie or latex covering. Adult cabarets shall include commercial establishments which feature entertainment of an erotic nature including exotic dancers, strippers, male or female impersonators, or similar entertainers.

DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 406 (emphasis added). In Sensations, Inc., this court upheld a Grand Rapids regulation of sexually oriented businesses that restricted the activities of semi-nude performers, where semi-nudity was defined in terms identical to the ones under consideration. 526 F.3d at 294. True, the plaintiffs in those cases did not emphasize the same argument Plaintiffs here make-namely, that "adult cabarets should be allowed to decide whether they want to be licensed and offer dancers wearing g-strings and pasties," or "be free of licensing requirements and the other regulations in the Ordinance ... by wearing slightly more clothing." Appellants' Br. at 43. However, in the course of validating licensing and other regulations, we necessarily affirmed the constitutionality of burdening establishments that feature similarly defined "semi-nude" erotic dancing. DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d 403 (upholding a licensing requirement and a requirement of a "six-foot buffer zone" between performers of adult cabarets and customers, employees, or other entertainers); Sensations, Inc., 526 F.3d at 294 (upholding, inter alia, a "six-foot buffer zone," a "no-touching" rule between performers and audience, and a limitation on business hours).

Plaintiffs' proposition that the County cannot constitutionally regulate expressive conduct involving performers who wear more cloth than pasties and g-strings is unsupported. Plaintiffs' appeal to R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford is misplaced. 361 F.3d 402 (7th Cir.2004). R.V.S. is distinguishable on a number of grounds: there, the court invalidated a zoning and licensing regulation of establishments featuring "clothed" exotic dancers. Moreover, the ordinance before that court did not rely on any evidence, local or not, and it did not contain any legislative findings or reasoning to support the connection between "exotic dancing nightclubs," as distinct from sexually oriented businesses, and secondary effects. Id. at 411. By contrast, the County relied on, inter alia, our decision in DLS, Inc. and a Fifth Circuit decision that considered a challenge to a zoning ordinance as applied to an adult cabaret whose dancers performed semi-nude-wearing more than nothing, but less than a bikini. Baby Dolls Topless Saloons, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 295 F.3d 471 (5th Cir.2002). That court determined that in view of the secondary effects studies relied on by Dallas-and now by Knox County, "it was reasonable for the City to conclude that establishments featuring performers in attire more revealing than bikini tops pose the same types of problems associated with other [sexually oriented businesses]." Id. at 482. Similarly, the County's legislative determination that regular semi-nude performances (as defined 530 by the Ordinance) are as liable to produce unwanted secondary effects as other sexually oriented businesses was reasonable, in view of the secondary effects evidence the County examined. Because that determination is reasonable, the regulation of cabarets featuring semi-nude performers does not impose a "substantial portion of the [regulatory] burden" on protected speech without advancing the goals of the Ordinance; on the contrary, the Ordinance promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.

Finally, Plaintiffs' invocation of the Supreme Court's jurisprudence regarding public nudity and nude dancing is inapposite: both Barnes and Pap's A.M. upheld bans on "nudity" and the concomitant requirement that erotic performers wear at least pasties and g-strings, reasoning that this limitation effected a minimal restriction on the erotic expression contained in nude dancing. Neither case may be read to suggest the unconstitutionality of regulating semi-nude performances as defined by the Ordinance, or to suggest that pasties and g-strings are the most intrusive requirement that may be constitutionally imposed.

[17] Nudity. Next, Plaintiffs claim that the definition of prohibited "nudity" is not narrowly tailored because, in their interpretation of the Ordinance's terms, a person wearing only a g-string and pasties would violate that prohibition. Appellants' Br. at 48-49. Plaintiff Raymond's is an adult cabaret that has featured nude dancing in the past, and therefore has standing to challenge this provision.

[18] [19] We have previously upheld a similar, if not identically-worded, prohibition on nudity in sexually oriented establishments. In Sensations, Inc., we upheld a prohibition on nudity defined as "the knowing or intentional live display of a human genital organ or anus with less than a fully opaque covering or a female's breast with less than a fully opaque covering of the nipple and areola." 526 F.3d at 294. This court explained that "[t]he prohibition of full nudity has been viewed as having only a de minimis effect on the expressive character of erotic dancing." Id. at 299 (citing Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Barnes, 501 U.S. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion)). While erotic dancing, whether performed in the "nude or nearly so," is a protected expressive activity, the state of nudity itself is not inherently expressive. See DLS, Inc., 107 F.3d at 409. Because nudity itself is not essential to the eroticism that brings dancing under the protection of the First Amendment, the plurality in Pap's A.M. rejected Justice Stevens's position that a ban on public nudity effects a "complete ban on expression" by incidentally banning nude dancing. Sensations, 526 F.3d at 299 (quoting Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 292-93, 120 S.Ct. 1382). Instead, it merely "limit[s] one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated." Ibid.

Because the City of Erie justified its ordinance both as a regulation of general conduct incidentally restricting expression and as a restriction of expression aimed at its secondary effects, the Supreme Court scrutinized both rationales. The Court conceded that banning nudity and nude dancing may not be the most effective or the least restrictive means of combating secondary effects of adult establishments, but that the Constitution requires neither to survive intermediate scrutiny. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301-02, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (holding that the "restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest," and that it "leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic 531 message," even if it is not the least restrictive means to address the problem).

Plaintiffs seem to suggest that the definition of nudity in the Ordinance is broader than constitutionally permissible because donning a g-string, which they claim does not cover the "anal cleft," does not take a performer out of the state of nudity. The County on the other hand, "has consistently maintained that pasties and G-strings ... constitute sufficient covering to comply" with the Ordinance. Appellee's Br. at 51. We need not weigh in on the dispute between the parties as to the amount of fabric required to cover the "anal cleft"; however, we see no reason not to accept the County's limiting construction of its own regulation and we presume that the County will continue to abide by its stated interpretation in its enforcement efforts.[6] We are unconvinced that defining nudity in terms of exposing the "anus, anal cleft or cleavage," however anatomically or linguistically awkward, takes us beyond the territory controlled by our holding in Sensations. Moreover, the Erie ordinance upheld by the Supreme Court contained an even broader definition of nudity. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 284, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Ordinance defined nudity to mean, inter alia, "the showing of the human male or female genital [sic], pubic hair or buttocks with less than a fully opaque covering." (emphasis added)).[7] We conclude that the prohibition on "nudity" in sexually oriented establishments, as defined in the Ordinance, does not burden substantially more expression than necessary to advance the County's objective, and is thus narrowly tailored.

6 It is worth noting that a rigidly literal interpretation may be stretched unreasonably-and surely beyond what the County intends. For example, it could be extended to keep out patrons who are wearing the currently commonplace low-rise jeans that tend to reveal the top of the "anal cleft or cleavage" in a seated position, not to mention an occasional plumber. We do not intend to approve such an interpretation of the regulation.

7 It is also worth noting that notwithstanding a comparatively broad definition of nudity that applies whenever "buttocks" are uncovered, the plurality in Pap's A.M. interpreted the ordinance narrowly-as the County and the district court do in the present case-to allow performances in pasties and g-strings. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (stating that "dancers at Kandyland and other such establishments are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings").

[20] Moreover, the provisions involving semi-nudity and nudity survive intermediate scrutiny because they do not serve to restrict unreasonably the capacity to engage in the protected expression embodied in erotic dance. Under the Ordinance, adult cabarets have a choice: establishments may opt for pasties and g-strings, which the Supreme Court has described as having a minimal effect on the message conveyed by completely nude dancing, Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382, and comply with the reasonable restrictions of the Ordinance. Or, establishments may outfit their employees in sufficient cloth to cover "the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola" and the buttocks-which appears to be easily accomplished by most bikinis-and escape regulation altogether. This choice leaves adult cabarets with ample means of conveying the message contained in erotic dancing, even if it is not the least restrictive means to target adverse secondary effects.

Adult motel. Plaintiffs also challenge the definition of "adult motel" as not narrowly tailored. However, none of the Plaintiffs have standing to bring an as-applied challenge to this provision.

[21] Prohibition on the sale or consumption of alcohol. Finally, Plaintiffs 532 argue that the prohibition on the sale, use or consumption of alcohol on the premises of sexually oriented businesses is not narrowly tailored. The County submits that Plaintiffs also lack standing to challenge this prohibition because the record does not establish that any of them have a liquor license or intend to seek a liquor license. Assuming without deciding that Raymond's, being representative of most adult cabarets, has standing to challenge this provision, we agree with the district court's conclusion that this prohibition is "a reasonable restriction narrowly tailored to limit the secondary effects of crime." In finding that sexually oriented businesses as a category are associated with numerous adverse secondary effects, the County reasonably relied on a number of prior judicial decisions finding sufficient evidence to support the connection between adverse effects and adult entertainment when combined with alcohol consumption. E.g., Ben's Bar, Inc., 316 F.3d at 725 (holding that prohibition of alcohol in adult entertainment venues "is, as a practical matter, the least restrictive means of furthering the Village's interest in combating the secondary effects resulting from the combination of adult entertainment and alcohol consumption").

[22] [23] [24] [25] Facial Challenge on Overbreadth Grounds. Plaintiffs next challenge the Ordinance on grounds that any one or combination of the same provisions attacked as not narrowly tailored render the Ordinance unconstitutionally overbroad. A law that is overly broad "proscribe[s] a 'substantial' amount of constitutionally protected speech judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." J.L. Spoons, Inc., 538 F.3d at 383 (quoting Virginia v. Hicks, 539 U.S. 113, 118-19, 123 S.Ct. 2191, 156 L.Ed.2d 148 (2003)). Overbroad laws warrant the dramatic remedy of invalidation to "allay the concern that the threat of enforcement of [such a] law may deter or chill constitutionally protected speech." Ibid. However, the Supreme Court has been explicit that the overbreadth doctrine is not to be "casually employed." United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 1838, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008). "Substantial social costs" are incurred by preventing the "application of a law to constitutionally unprotected speech, or especially to constitutionally unprotected conduct." Hicks, 539 U.S. at 119, 123 S.Ct. 2191. Thus, the Court has "vigorously enforced the requirement that a statute's overbreadth be substantial, not only in an absolute sense, but also relative to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." Williams, 128 S.Ct. at 1838. To succeed in a facial-overbreadth challenge, Plaintiffs must "demonstrate from the text of [the statute] and from actual fact that a substantial number of instances exist in which the law cannot be applied constitutionally." N.Y. State Club Ass'n v. City of New York, 487 U.S. 1, 14, 108 S.Ct. 2225, 101 L.Ed.2d 1 (1988). This Plaintiffs fail to do. Plaintiffs offer no arguments or evidence in support of their overbreadth claims beyond those proffered in support of their as-applied challenges. Since we find that Plaintiffs failed to show that protected speech is impermissibly burdened by any of the provisions challenged as applied, these same provisions cannot form the basis for a successful overbreadth attack.

D

[26] [27] [28] Third, Plaintiffs argue that the Ordinance is an unconstitutional prior restraint because it "denies access in the future to non-obscene material based on a past conviction." Appellants' Rep. Br. at 38. A licensing scheme such as the Ordinance is indeed a prior restraint on protected expression. FW/PBS, Inc. v. City 533 of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 225, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (plurality opinion); Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 554, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975); Odle v. Decatur County, 421 F.3d 386, 389 (6th Cir.2005); Deja Vu of Nashville, Inc. v. Metropolitan Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 274 F.3d 377, 400 (6th Cir.2001). However, prior restraints are not unconstitutional per se. Odle, 421 F.3d at 389. Where, as here, license issuance, suspension, and revocation are based on explicit and objective criteria, see Secs. 5(a), 9, 10, and are not left to unbridled discretion, a licensing scheme does "not present the grave dangers of a censorship system." City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C, 541 U.S. 774, 783, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). We recently summarized the inquiry into the constitutionality of such regulations:

> The Supreme Court has long required prior restraint licensing schemes to guarantee applicants a prompt final judicial decision on the merits of a license denial and preservation of the status quo while an application or judicial review of a license denial is pending. Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965); FW/PBS, Inc., 493 U.S. at 229-30, 110 S.Ct. 596; City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D-4, LLC, 541 U.S. 774, 779-80, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004). In the seminal Freedman decision, the Supreme Court suggested that a licensing scheme must place the burden of proof as to whether an applicant's form of expression is protected on the government. 380 U.S. at 58, 85 S.Ct. 734. However, it now appears that prompt judicial review and preservation of the status quo are the only constitutionally indispensable procedural safeguards. FW/PBS, Inc., 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596; Deja Vu of Nashville, 274 F.3d at 400-401....

Odle, 421 F.3d at 389-90 (emphasis added) (parallel citations omitted). The Ordinance satisfies both requirements. The Ordinance provides for prompt judicial review of a revoked license. Sec. 11. The Ordinance also provides for the preservation of the status quo while a license application is pending and while an appeal from a revocation of the license is pending: Sec. 5(a) states that a Temporary License shall be issued to an applicant within 24 hours, valid until a decision to grant or deny a license has been made, which is to occur within 20 days of application; and Sec. 11(b) states that a Provisional License shall be issued to any business initiating court action to challenge a license denial, suspension or revocation. Even if we presume that Plaintiffs have standing to challenge the standards for license revocation or suspension, their challenge fails. We affirm the district court's determination that the Ordinance is not an unconstitutional prior restraint.

E

[29] Fourth, Plaintiffs argue that the limitation on hours of operation enacted by the Ordinance is preempted by state law. The Ordinance provides that sexually oriented businesses cannot do business before 8 a.m. or after midnight Monday through Saturday, and they cannot do business on Sundays or legal holidays. The Tennessee Adult-Oriented Establishments statute ("Tennessee Statute") sets identical business-hour limitations, Tenn.Code Ann. § 7-51-1402, but exempts "establishment[s] that offer[ ] only live, stage adult entertainment in a theatre, adult cabaret, or dinner show type setting," § 7-51-1405. The Tennessee Statute also allows local ordinances to further limit opening hours but disallows local ordinances that "extend" business hours. § 7-51-1402(b). 534 Plaintiffs argue that because adult cabarets were exempted from the state limitations on business hours, the County cannot nullify that exemption by enacting its Ordinance. Plaintiffs' argument is without merit. Prior to July 1, 2007, the Tennessee Statute, in a section entitled "Local laws not preempted," stated:

> Nothing in this chapter shall preempt or prevent political subdivisions in this state from enacting and enforcing other lawful and reasonable restrictions, regulations, licensing, zoning and other civil or administrative provisions concerning the location, configuration, code compliance or other business operations or requirements of adult-oriented establishments and sexually-oriented businesses. [8]

[8] The 2007 amendments to this section do not alter the provision in a manner material to the issue.

§ 7-51-1406. The Tennessee statute clearly allows the County to enact and enforce restrictions concerning business operations of "adult-oriented establishments and sexually-oriented businesses." Plaintiffs' reading of "other lawful and reasonable restrictions" and "other civil or administrative provision" to mean "[other than] local restrictions on hours of operations for adult cabarets," Appellants' Br. at 50, is untenable, as it twists a non-preemption clause into a preemption clause. We affirm the conclusion of the district court that the County Ordinance is consistent with and is not preempted by the Tennessee Statute.

IV

[30] On cross-appeal, the County argues that the district court erroneously ordered the severance of two crimes from the civil disability provisions of the Ordinance. The court held that the denial of a license to persons convicted of dealing in controlled substances and racketeering is unjustified because these crimes "are not related to the crime-control intent of the Ordinance which is to reduce crimes of a sexual nature."

The County argues that Plaintiffs lack standing to challenge the civil disability provisions of the Ordinance because none of the Plaintiffs were ever convicted of any of the specified crimes. Plaintiffs make no allegations to the contrary; in fact, Plaintiffs themselves state that no one affiliated with them has been convicted of any of the specified crimes. Appellants' Rep. Br. at 8. Because this claim was litigated and adjudicated as an as-applied challenge, we conclude that the County's argument is sound. See FW/PBS, Inc., 493 U.S. at 235, 110 S.Ct. 596 (concluding that "no petitioner has shown standing to challenge ... the civil disability provisions" of an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, and that therefore, "the courts below lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate petitioners' claims with respect to those provisions"); Deja Vu of Cincinnati, L.L.C., 411 F.3d at 794-95 (holding that plaintiffs cannot challenge a civil disability provision of an Ohio licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses because they have not alleged sufficient injury in fact to establish standing). For these reasons, we reverse the district court's decision as to the severance of the two crimes from the civil disability provision.

V

Therefore, we AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the County, and REVERSE the grant of partial summary judgment in favor of Plaintiffs.

All Citations

555 F.3d 512

137 F.3d 435
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

RICHLAND BOOKMART, INC., d/b/a Town and Country, Plaintiff–Appellee,
v.
Randall E. NICHOLS, Defendant–Appellant.

No. 96–6472.
|
Argued Dec. 1, 1997.
|
Decided Feb. 27, 1998.
|
Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing
En Banc Denied April 23, 1998.

Adult bookstore operator brought action challenging Tennessee Adult-Oriented Establishment Act, alleging violation of First Amendment and equal protection clause. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, Leon Jordan, J., permanently enjoined enforcement of statute, and county attorney appealed. The Court of Appeals, Merritt, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) statute, which limited hours and days that adult entertainment establishments could be open was not subject to strict scrutiny even though it was content-based; (2) statute did not violate First Amendment; and (3) statute was not impermissibly vague.

Vacated and remanded.

West Headnotes (6)

[1] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation

Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Statute which limited hours and days that adult entertainment establishments could be open, and required such establishments to eliminate closed booths, was content-based regulation, for purpose of First Amendment challenge, as law singled out certain establishments for regulation based only on type of literature they distributed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Tenn.Code, § 7–51–1401 et seq.

17 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

First Amendment offers nonobscene, sexually-explicit speech protection of wholly different, and lesser magnitude than other types of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Print Publications

Erotic or sexually-explicit literature is in unique category, category unto itself that may be regulated without subjecting regulation to so-called "strict scrutiny" with its accompanying presumption of unconstitutionality. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Sexual Expression

Question in reviewing First Amendment challenge to regulation of nonobscene, sexually-explicit speech is one of reasonableness; appropriate inquiry is whether law is designed to serve substantial government interest and allows for alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation

Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Statute which limited hours and days that adult entertainment establishments could be open did not violate First Amendment, as reducing crime, open sex, and solicitation of sex and preserving aesthetic and commercial character of neighborhoods surrounding adult establishments was "substantial government interest," statute was reasonable means of furthering that interest, and statute left open alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Tenn.Code, § 7–51–1401 et seq.

21 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Statute which limited hours and days of operation for establishments having, as their principal or predominant stock or trade, sexually-oriented materials, devices, or paraphernalia, and which restricted admission to adults only, was not impermissibly vague as to adult book store, which clearly fell within purview of statute, and was not vague generally, as terms used in statute were understandable common terms. West's Tenn.Code, § 7–51–1401 et seq.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

436 Frierson M. Graves, Jr. (argued and briefed), Baker, Donelson, Bearman & Caldwell, Memphis, TN, for Plaintiff–Appellee.

Steven A. Hart (argued and briefed), Office of the Attorney General, Criminal Justice Division, Michael J. Fahey, II (briefed), Asst. Atty. Gen., Office of the Attorney General, Nashville, TN, for Defendant–Appellant.

Before: MERRITT, BATCHELDER, and FARRIS,* Circuit Judges.

* The Honorable Jerome Farris, Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, sitting by designation.

OPINION

MERRITT, Circuit Judge.

The defendant below, Randall E. Nichols, District Attorney for Knox County, Tennessee, 437 appeals a permanent injunction entered by the district court against enforcement of statutory amendments to the Tennessee Adult–Oriented Establishment Act. The new statute limits the hours and days during which adult entertainment establishments can be open and requires such establishments to eliminate the closed booths in which patrons watch sexually-explicit videos or live entertainment.

The injunction was entered after plaintiff, Richland Bookmart, Inc., an adult bookstore in Knox County, Tennessee, challenged the constitutionality of the state law on the grounds that it violates the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the United States Constitution. The district court held that although the statute was content-neutral, the hours and days limitation violated the First Amendment because it was not narrowly tailored to address the stated goal of the statute—the alleged deleterious "secondary effects" on neighborhoods and families caused by the presence of adult establishments. Having decided the case on the First Amendment ground, the district court did not reach plaintiff's equal protection argument. For the reasons stated below, the judgment of the district court is reversed and the case is remanded to the district court with instructions to vacate the permanent injunction.

I. The Statute in Question

On June 26, 1995, plaintiff, Richland Bookmart, Inc., a seller of sexually-explicit books, magazines and videos, filed a complaint for preliminary injunction, permanent injunction and declaratory judgment requesting that the district court declare Tennessee's Adult Oriented Establishment Act (1995 Tenn. Pub. Act 421, codified at Tenn.Code Ann. §§ 7–51–1401 et seq.) to be unconstitutional on its face or as applied to plaintiff. After a hearing on the preliminary injunction, the district court issued a preliminary injunction enjoining enforcement of the act. The injunction was made permanent on September 26, 1996, and defendant, District Attorney General for Knox County Randall Nichols, appealed to this Court.

Presumably in anticipation of expected First Amendment challenges, the act contains a lengthy preamble. Because the district court carefully summarized the long preamble, we will highlight only relevant portions here.

The preamble discusses the need to outlaw closed video booths because these booths are often used by patrons to stimulate themselves sexually, creating a public health problem. This provision does not apply to plaintiff. It does not have closed booths on its premises. Plaintiff sells adult books and magazines and sells and rents adult videos for off-premises viewing only. The preamble also lists detrimental health, safety and welfare problems caused by shops selling graphic sexual material—the so-called "secondary effects," of the establishments on the communities that surround them—and cites specific land-use studies done by other cities on the subject. The "secondary effects" identified include "increased crime, downgrading of property values and spread of sexually transmitted and communicable diseases."

The preamble continues with a list of "unlawful and/or dangerous sexual activities" associated with adult-oriented establishments and ends with a list of citations to judicial decisions supporting such legislation.

The act defines "adult-oriented establishment" as "any commercial establishment ... or portion thereof" selling as its "predominant stock or trade ... sexually oriented material." [1]

[1] The complete definition is as follows:

> any commercial establishment, business or service, or portion thereof, which offers, as its principal or predominant stock or trade, sexually oriented material, devices, or paraphernalia or specified sexual activities, or any combination or form thereof, whether printed, filmed, recorded or live and which restricts or purports to restrict admission to adults or to any class of adults.

Chapter 421, Section 2(4).

"Sexually-oriented material" is defined as any publication "which depicts sexual activity ... or which exhibits uncovered human genitals or pubic region in a lewd or lascivious manner or which exhibits human male genitals 438 in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely covered." [2]

[2] The complete definition of "sexually oriented material" is as follows:

> any book, article, magazine, publication or written matter of any kind, drawing, etching, painting, photograph, motion picture film or sound recording, which depicts sexual activity, actual or simulated, involving human beings or human beings and animals, or which exhibits uncovered human genitals or pubic region in a lewd or lascivious manner or which exhibits human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely covered.

Chapter 421, Section 2(10).

Section 3 prohibits adult-oriented establishments from opening before 8 a.m. or after midnight Monday through Saturday, and from being open at all on Sundays or the legal holidays listed in the Tennessee Code Annotated.

Section 4 prevents the use of private booths, stalls or partitioned rooms for sexual activity. Because plaintiff here does not have any private booths, the district court did not address this portion of the act.

Section 5 describes the criminal penalties under the act. A first offense for a violation is a Class B misdemeanor punishable by a fine of $500. Subsequent violations are Class A misdemeanors with no penalty specified in the statute. The Tennessee Code provides that Class A misdemeanors carry a penalty for a fine not to exceed $2500, imprisonment not to exceed 11 months and 29 days or both, unless the statute provides otherwise. Tenn.Code Ann. § 40–35–111.

Section 6 states that live stage shows, adult cabaret and dinner theatre are excepted from the closing hours requirement. Section 7 allows local governments to impose other "lawful and reasonable" restrictions on adult-oriented establishments.

Plaintiff contends that the law violates both its First Amendment rights through the closing hours requirement and its equal protection rights by exempting certain other establishments that sell or trade in adult-oriented goods or services as at least part of their business.

The district court granted a preliminary injunction, later made permanent, against enforcement of the act, finding that the closing hours restrictions violate the First Amendment. The district court concluded that plaintiff was likely to succeed on the merits of its constitutional challenge because the act (1) goes beyond what is necessary to further the state's legitimate interest in regulating the secondary effects described in the act's preamble, (2) is overbroad and (3) is vague. The district court did not reach plaintiff's equal protection argument.

II. Analysis of Facial Validity of the Statute

This case arises from the tension between two competing interests: free speech protection of erotic literature and giving communities the power to preserve the "quality of life" of their neighborhoods and prevent or clean up "skid-rows." The tension arises because the First Amendment offers some protection for "soft porn," i.e., sexually-explicit, nonobscene material—although "society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate...." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2452, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976). The Supreme Court most recently restated this view that "porn-type" speech is generally afforded less-than-full First Amendment protection in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (nude dancing).

[1] The normal starting point for a discussion of the facial validity of statutory regulation of speech requires an analysis of the so-called "content-neutrality" of the regulation. Here, the bookstore contends that the act is a "content-based" regulation and therefore presumptively unconstitutional and subject to "strict scrutiny." The defendant prosecutor argues that the act is content-neutral and that the closing requirements are permissible "time, place and manner" regulation subject to the less exacting "intermediate scrutiny."

We agree with plaintiff that the legislation at issue here is obviously not content-neutral. The statute focuses on and regulates only 439 "sexually-explicit" or porn-type speech. This is no more content neutral than a statute designed to regulate only political campaign advertising, newspaper want ads or computer graphics. The law singles out certain establishments for regulation based only on the type of literature they distribute. But see Barnes, 501 U.S at 585, 111 S.Ct. at 2470 (Souter, J., concurring) and Mitchell v. Commission on Adult Entertain. Estabs., 10 F.3d 123 (3d Cir.1993) (describing regulation of such sex literature as content neutral because it is designed to counter bad behavior in the neighborhood where it is sold).

[2] The fact that such regulation is based on content does not necessarily mean that regulation of nonobscene, sexually-explicit speech is invalid. The law developed under the First Amendment offers such speech protection "of a wholly different, and lesser magnitude." Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 70, 96 S.Ct. at 2452. In American Mini Theatres, the Court expressly ruled that the City of Detroit may legitimately use the content of adult motion pictures as the basis for treating them differently from other motion pictures. In order to prevent and clean up skid-rows, the ordinance confined theatres showing sex movies to a few areas of the city. A plurality of the Court upheld a content-based zoning ordinance restricting the location of adult movie theatres. The Court held that even though such sexually-explicit literature, unlike obscenity, is protected from total suppression, "the State may use the content of these materials as the basis for placing them in a different classification from other motion pictures." Id. at 70–71, 96 S.Ct. at 2452. Justice Steven's opinion is straightforward and clear. It says that "there is surely a less vital interest in the uninhibited exhibition of material that is on the borderline between pornography and artistic expression than in the free dissemination of ideas of social and political significance." Id. at 61, 96 S.Ct. at 2448. The Court concluded that the classification made by the City of Detroit was justified by the City's interest in preserving its neighborhoods from deterioration—the now so-called "secondary effects" of erotic speech. The ordinance was upheld because it did not unduly suppress access to lawful speech. American Mini Theatres recognized that regulation based on content may be necessary to protect other legitimate interests. The Court did not try to maintain that the ordinance was, in fact, content-neutral; it stated only that it might be treated as if it were content-neutral because, like commercial speech, it is less than fully protected.

[3] Justice Powell, concurring in American Mini Theatres, elaborated on the special circumstances presented when reviewing regulation of erotic or sexually-explicit speech:

> Moreover, even if this were a case involving a special government response to the content of one type of movie, it is possible that the result would be supported by a line of cases recognizing that the government can tailor its reaction to different types of speech according to the degree to which its special and overriding interests are implicated.

American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 82 n. 6, 96 S.Ct. at 2458 n. 6 (cases omitted). Justice Powell specifically pointed out that sexually-explicit speech is different from other kinds of speech and, although protected to a certain degree, is offered less protection because other important social interests are at stake when sexually-explicit speech is at issue. Erotic or sexually-explicit literature is in a unique category, a category unto itself that the Supreme Court has decided may be regulated without subjecting the regulation to so-called "strict scrutiny" with its accompanying presumption of unconstitutionality.

Many have severely criticized the holding and rationale of American Mini Theatres,[3] 440 including initially the four dissenters led by Justice Stewart, but a majority of the Court has adhered to its view allowing anti-skidrow, content-based regulation of establishments selling pornographic literature, movies, dancing and other hard-core erotic material. In a subsequent case, City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the Court upheld a content-based zoning ordinance enacted by the City of Renton, Washington, that prohibited adult motion picture theatres from locating within 1,000 feet of family dwellings, churches, parks or schools.

[3] Criticism of the analysis used in American Mini Theatres and later in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), is extensive in the legal literature. For a representative sample, see, e.g., Laurence Tribe, American Constitutional Law § 12–3 (2d ed.1988); Ashutosh Bhagwat, Purpose Scrutiny in Constitutional Analysis, 85 Cal. L.Rev. 297, 351–53 (1997); Elena Kagan, Private Speech, Public Purpose: The Role of Governmental Motive in First Amendment Doctrine, 63 U. Chi. L.Rev. 413, 483–91 (1996); Marjorie Heins, Viewpoint Discrimination, 24 Hastings Const. L.Q. 99, 125–28 & n.137 (1996); Robert Post, Recuperating First Amendment Doctrine, 47 Stan. L.Rev. 1249, 1265–67 (1995); Keith Werhan, The Liberalization of Freedom of Speech on a Conservative Court, 80 Iowa L.Rev. 51, 68–70 (1994); Geoffrey R. Stone, Content–Neutral Restrictions, 54 U. Chi. L.Rev. 46, 104, 114–17 (1987).

The intervening years had reduced the number of dissenters on the Court from four to two. Now it was only Justices Brennan and Marshall in dissent. Relying primarily on American Mini Theatres, the Court in Renton analyzed the ordinance as a form of time, place and manner regulation, although recognizing that a law that focuses on such films is obviously not content neutral. The Court acknowledged candidly that both ordinances treated adult theatres differently than other types of theatres, the traditional touchstone of content-based legislation.

The Court went on in City of Renton to explain that the ordinance did not contravene the fundamental principles that underlie concerns about content-based speech regulations because its stated purpose is to curb the "secondary effects" of adult establishments. Accordingly, the Court in City of Renton, like the Court in American Mini Theatres, decided that the zoning ordinances at issue could be reviewed under the standard applicable to content-neutral regulations, even though the ordinances were plainly content-based. The stated rationale is that a distinction may be drawn between adult theatres and other kinds of theatres "without violating the government's paramount obligation of neutrality in its regulation of protected communication" because it is seeking to regulate the secondary effects of speech, not the speech itself. City of Renton, 475 U.S. at 49, 106 S.Ct. at 929–30 (quoting American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 70, 96 S.Ct. at 2452).

Over the last decade, some courts reviewing these type of regulations started simply referring to them as content-neutral without explaining, as the Supreme Court carefully did in both American Mini Theatres and City of Renton, that they are in fact content-based but are to be treated like content-neutral regulations for some purposes. See, e.g., North Ave. Novelties, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 88 F.3d 441, 444 (7th Cir.1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1056, 117 S.Ct. 684, 136 L.Ed.2d 609 (1997); 11126 Baltimore Blvd., Inc. v. Prince George's County, Md., 58 F.3d 988, 995 (4th Cir.1995); ILQ Investments, Inc. v. City of Rochester, 25 F.3d 1413, 1416 (8th Cir.1994); TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, Tx., 24 F.3d 705, 707 (5th Cir.1994); Mitchell v. Commission on Adult Entertain. Estabs., 10 F.3d 123, 128–31 (3d Cir.1993). Thus, in some cases, a kind of legal fiction has been created that calls regulation of such literature "content neutral" when what is meant is only that the regulation is constitutionally valid.

[4] Under present First Amendment principles governing regulation of sex literature, the real question is one of reasonableness. The appropriate inquiry is whether the Tennessee law is designed to serve a substantial government interest and allows for alternative avenues of communication. Does the law in question unduly restrict "sexually explicit" or "hard-core" erotic expression?

[5] Reducing crime, open sex and solicitation of sex and preserving the aesthetic and commercial character of the neighborhoods surrounding adult establishments is a "substantial government interest." The Tennessee legislature reasonably relied on the experiences of other jurisdictions in restricting the hours of operation. It is not unreasonable to believe that such regulation of hours of shops selling sex literature would tend to deter prostitution in the neighborhood at night or the creation of drug "corners" on the surrounding streets. By deterring 441 such behavior, the neighborhood may be able to ward off high vacancy rates, deteriorating store fronts, a blighted appearance and the lowering of the property values of homes and shopping areas. Such regulation may prevent the bombed-out, boarded-up look of areas invaded by such establishments. At least that is the theory, and it is not unreasonable for legislators to believe it based on evidence from other places.

The legislation leaves open alternative avenues of communication. Access to adult establishments is not unduly restricted by the legislation. Adult establishments may still be open many hours during the week.

III. Overbreadth and Vagueness

[6] Plaintiff contends, and the district court agreed, that the act is also unconstitutionally vague in that certain terms are not defined. We believe the terms are sufficiently defined so that a reasonable person would understand them.

Specifically, the district court found that the act's alleged vagueness may have a "chilling effect" on erotic literature that has "literary, artistic or political value." It also found that the word "paraphernalia" as used in the act might include places such as lingerie shops.

First, the plaintiff's establishment here clearly falls within the purview of the statute. In American Mini Theatres, the Court found that it was unnecessary to consider vagueness when an otherwise valid ordinance indisputably applies to the plaintiff—when there is no vagueness as to him. 427 U.S. at 58–59, 96 S.Ct. at 2446–47. See also City of Renton, 475 U.S. at 55 n. 4, 106 S.Ct. at 933 n. 4. Plaintiff is clearly an "adult-oriented establishment" as defined in the act. Any element of vagueness in the act does not affect this plaintiff.

Second, the law is not as vague as the bookstore contends. To be included within the purview of the act, an establishment must (1) have as its "principal or predominant stock or trade" sexually-oriented materials, devices or paraphernalia and (2) restrict admission to adults only. The terms used in the act are understandable common terms. Most buyers, sellers and judges know what such materials are and who are adults and who are children.

The Supreme Court examined overbreadth in detail in New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 773–74, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 3363–64, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982). In Ferber, the Court refused to find as unconstitutionally overbroad a state statute prohibiting persons from knowingly promoting sex by children under 16 by selling such material. The Court held that the mere possibility that some protected expression, some erotic literature, could arguably be subject to the statute was insufficient reason to find it unconstitutionally overbroad. The Court said that we should not assume that state courts would broaden the reach of a statute by giving it an "expansive construction." This is consistent with Tennessee law that provides that such regulation of speech should be construed narrowly. Davis–Kidd Booksellers, Inc. v. McWherter, 866 S.W.2d 520, 526 (Tenn.1993).

* * *

Plaintiff also contends that the act violates its equal protection rights because the act exempts from regulation establishments offering "only live, stage adult entertainment in a theatre, adult cabaret, or dinner show type setting." The district court did not reach this issue and did not issue an injunction on this ground. We express no opinion on whether the act violates plaintiff's equal protection rights because this argument has not been fully developed or reviewed in the district court.

Accordingly, the preliminary injunction issued by the district court is vacated and set aside and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

All Citations

137 F.3d 435, 1998 Fed.App. 0070P

75 F.3d 663
United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

SPOKANE ARCADE, INC.; and World Wide Video of Washington, Inc., Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF SPOKANE, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 94–35931.
|
Argued and Submitted Dec. 7, 1995.
|
Decided Jan. 24, 1996.

Adult entertainment businesses brought action against city, alleging that city ordinances which required that interior of adult video arcade booths be visible to employees in adjacent public room and that at least one employee be situated in that room whenever customer was present were invalid restrictions on manner in which protected speech could be expressed. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, Wm. Fremming Nielsen, Chief Judge, rejected claim that ordinances were unconstitutional. Businesses appealed. The Court of Appeals, D.W. Nelson, Circuit Judge, held that ordinances were constitutional since they did not prohibit adult entertainment businesses from engaging in that protected speech which would allow them to compete in adult entertainment market, but merely provided that costs of doing so might increase.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (4)

[1] Federal Courts
Credibility and impeachment

Federal Courts
"Clearly erroneous" standard of review in general

Following bench trial, judge's findings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given opportunity of trial court to judge credibility of witnesses.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Federal Courts
Questions of Law in General

District court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Booths

Adverse economic impact caused to adult entertainment business as result of complying with city ordinances, which required that interior of adult video arcade booths be visible to employees in adjacent public room and that at least one employee be situated in that room whenever customer was present, was irrelevant in determining whether ordinances were invalid restrictions on manner in which protected speech could be expressed but, rather, issue was whether challenged ordinances prohibited entry into adult entertainment market. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Spokane, Wash., Code §§ 10.08.100(D), 10.08.110(A).

18 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Booths

City ordinances, which required that interior of adult video arcade booths be visible to employees in adjacent public room and that at least one employee be situated in that room whenever customer was present, did not unconstitutionally prohibit adult entertainment business from engaging in that protected speech which would allow it to compete in adult entertainment market, but merely provided that costs of doing so might increase. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Spokane, Wash., Code §§ 10.08.100(D), 10.08.110(A).

11 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

664 Gilbert H. Levy, Seattle, Washington, for plaintiffs-appellants Spokane Arcade and World Wide Video.

Patricia Connolly Walker, Assistant City Attorney, Spokane, Washington, for defendant-appellee City of Spokane.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington.

Before: D.W. NELSON and JOHN T. NOONAN, Jr., Circuit Judges, and TANNER, District Judge [*].

[*] The Honorable Jack E. Tanner, Senior District Judge for the Western District of Washington, sitting by designation.

Opinion

D.W. NELSON, Circuit Judge:

Appellants Spokane Arcade and World–Wide Video ("World Video") brought this action against Appellee City of Spokane, alleging that ordinances promulgated by the city which regulated adult arcades were invalid restrictions on the manner in which protected speech may be expressed. World Video maintains that in order to comply with the ordinances it will have to hire more employees, thus increasing its payroll expenses and decreasing its profits; it contends that because of this alleged inability to make an adequate profit, it will in effect be denied access to the adult entertainment market. The district court, however, rejected its claim, and held that in determining whether the First Amendment had been violated, the relevant inquiry turned on whether the plaintiffs were free to engage in their protected speech and not on whether the regulation at issue resulted in decreased profits. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

Appellants Spokane Arcades and World Wide Video ("World Video") operate adult arcades in the City of Spokane. In the arcades, patrons enter booths and insert tokens or coins to watch sexually explicit videos. World Video also sells sexually explicit books, videotapes, magazines and novelties; these materials are located in a retail room off the entrance of the stores, while the viewing booths are in a video viewing room in the back. There is only one clerk on duty at a time, and s/he is stationed in the retail room.

In the spring of 1993, the Mayor of Spokane appointed a task force to study the problems associated with adult arcades, some of which included drug usage and sexual conduct between patrons in the video booths. These problems were compounded by the fact that police officers were unable to conduct walk-through inspections due to safety concerns. The Task Force presented evidence to the City Council that the configuration of the arcades and the lack of adequate 665 staffing "creat[ed] the risk of officers encountering in progress criminal activity." Moreover, the Task Force maintained that "due to the maze-type design currently in place, it would be difficult for officers to tactically retreat should the need arise."

The Task Force suggested that a clear view into the arcades and doorways that opened into an adjacent public room would reduce the potential for crime. Accordingly, the city promulgated ordinances which provided, inter alia, that all arcade booths be "open to an adjacent public room so that the area inside is visible by direct line of sight to persons in the adjacent public room," and that "[t]here must be at least one employee on duty and situated in the public room adjacent to the adult arcade stations or booths at all times that any patron ... is present inside the premises." S.M.C. §§ 10.08.100(D), 10.08.110(A).

World Video challenged the ordinances in the district court, alleging that under the test enunciated by the Supreme Court in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), reh'g denied, 475 U.S. 1132, 106 S.Ct. 1663, 90 L.Ed.2d 205 (1986), they were invalid restrictions on the manner in which speech may be expressed. The challenge relevant to this appeal centered on those sections of the ordinances which required that the interior of the booths be visible to employees in an adjacent public room and that at least one employee be situated in that room whenever a customer was present. World Video maintained that it would have to hire additional employees in order to ensure that the booths were visible to employees in the adjacent room, and argued that because of the revenue that would be lost as a result of the open booth requirement, the additional payroll expense would severely decrease the arcades' profitability and would unduly restrict World Video's ability to engage in protected expression. The district court disagreed, effectively dismissing World Video's economic impact arguments as it held that the ordinances did not deny World Video reasonable alternative avenues of communication.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

[1] [2] Following a bench trial, the judge's findings of fact, whether based on oral or documentary evidence, shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given the opportunity of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witnesses. Fed.R.Civ.P. 52(a). See Price v. United States Navy, 39 F.3d 1011, 1021 (9th Cir.1994); Saltarelli v. Bob Baker Group Medical Trust, 35 F.3d 382, 384 (9th Cir.1994). The district court's conclusions of law are reviewed de novo. Price, 39 F.3d at 1021.

DISCUSSION

As an initial matter, we take note of the fact that World Video's contention that additional employees would have to be hired in order to comply with the ordinances is not well-supported by the record. Except for the requirement that "[t]here must be at least one employee on duty and situated in the public room adjacent to the adult arcade stations or booths at all times that any patron ... is present," S.M.C. § 10.08.110(A), the ordinances do not regulate the number of employees that must be present in an establishment. In addition, the city presented evidence that there were design options available to World Video which would permit it to conduct retail sales and arcade viewing in the same room.

[3] Even if World Video demonstrated that the hiring of additional employees was unavoidable, the adverse economic impact it posits is irrelevant to First Amendment analysis. Addressing the constitutionality of a municipal zoning ordinance which strictly regulated the establishment of adult businesses, this court in Topanga Press Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 989 F.2d 1524 (9th Cir.1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1030, 114 S.Ct. 1537, 128 L.Ed.2d 190 (1994), discussed the extent to which economic considerations could inform the analysis of time, place and manner restrictions. The appellants in Topanga, a group of adult businesses, argued that the city provided an insufficient number of sites for the businesses and that enforcement of the ordinance would thus cause irreparable 666 injury. We held that the relevant inquiry was whether the government denied the businesses the opportunity to open and operate their establishments, and suggested that in order to so determine, it was appropriate "to consider economics when evaluating whether a particular relocation site is in fact part of the real estate market." Id. at 1530. However, we emphasized that a "question of purely economic injury is not relevant to the issue of whether a moving party faces hardship if a restrictive zoning ordinance is enforced." Id. at 1528. We thus made the important distinction between "consideration of economic impact within an actual business real estate market and consideration of cost to determine whether a specific relocation site is part of the relevant market," id., noting that only the latter was permissible in the examination of alleged First Amendment violations.

[4] Accordingly, the Topanga test requires an examination of whether a challenged provision prohibits entry into a market where the aggrieved party might exercise her rights, and distinguishes this inquiry from any examination of success within the market at issue. A review of the restrictions in this matter demonstrates that they do not serve as such an absolute bar to market entry. The ordinances do not prohibit World Video from engaging in that protected speech which will allow it to compete in the adult entertainment market, but merely provide that the costs of doing so may increase. This type of "injury," however, should not inform First Amendment analysis: in Topanga, we cautioned against inquiring into the costs of continued market participation, and limited the scope of permissible economic analysis to an examination of whether one is permitted to enter or participate in the market in the first instance.

World Video attempts to distinguish the instant matter from this court's holding in Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 793 F.2d 1053, 1061 (9th Cir.1985), where we held that an ordinance which required that exotic dancers perform at least 10 feet away from patrons, and on a stage raised at least 2 feet from the floor, did not deny the dancers "reasonable access to their market." Id. at 1061. Unlike the ordinance there at issue, World Video contends that the contested provisions in this case will deny it access to the adult entertainment market "by making it totally unprofitable for them to operate their businesses."

Not only does this argument erroneously assume that the only determinant of profitability is payroll costs, an assumption we will not indulge, but it also reflects a deep misunderstanding of the market access/market success distinction articulated in Topanga. In Topanga, we maintained that in the absence of any absolute bar to the market (in that case, relocation to a site that would deny a business the opportunity to open and operate), it is irrelevant whether "[a regulation] will result in lost profits, higher overhead costs, or even prove to be commercially unfeasible for an adult business." 989 F.2d at 1531. See also Walnut Properties v. City of Whittier, 861 F.2d 1102, 1109 (9th Cir.1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S.Ct. 1641, 104 L.Ed.2d 157 (1989), (distinguishing between intrinsic limitations and limitations resulting from the imposition of market forces). Thus, an absolute bar in this matter would be a regulation that prohibited arcade owners from engaging in their protected speech, and not one that merely prohibited them from realizing the profits to which they were accustomed.

Furthermore, World Video attempts to rely upon the Supreme Court's recent opinion in United States v. National Treasury Employees Union, 513U.S. 454, 115 S.Ct. 1003, 130 L.Ed.2d 964 (1995) in support of its economic impact argument. In Treasury Employees, the Court held that § 501(b) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, which prohibited the receipt of honoraria by government employees, violated the First Amendment. The court held that the prohibition on compensation unduly burdened "expressive activity": "Publishers compensate authors because compensation provides a significant incentive toward more expression. By denying respondents that incentive, the honoraria ban induces them to curtail their expression if they wish to continue working 667 for the government." Id. at ——, 115 S.Ct. at 1014.

Treasury Employees, however, is entirely consistent with the test articulated by this court in Topanga and can be distinguished easily from the instant matter. The prohibition at issue in Treasury Employees had the effect of not merely reducing the value of the employees' speech, but rather of barring them from the market in which that speech might be expressed. That they could have engaged in such acts of expression without compensation was irrelevant; Treasury Employees suggests that they must not be denied the opportunity to enter into a market where they might be compensated for such expression. See also Topanga, 989 F.2d at 1529 ("The test for determining whether the Adult Businesses' First Amendment rights are threatened is whether a local government has 'effectively den[ied] [them] a reasonable opportunity to open and operate.' ")

The ordinances promulgated by the city in this case do not deny World Video the opportunity to operate its establishments, but merely (or rather, allegedly) increase the costs of its doing so. Even if the costs of compliance were so great that World Video would be forced out of business, the ordinances do not pose any intrinsic limitation on the operation of the arcades, but merely increase World Video's vulnerability to such market forces as the increased costs of labor and the decreased or stagnant demand for pornography. Accordingly, we hold that the ordinances constitute valid manner restrictions.

The judgement of the district court is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

75 F.3d 663, 24 Media L. Rep. 1475, 96 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 490, 96 Daily Journal D.A.R. 797

92 Wash.App. 660
Court of Appeals of Washington,
Division 2.

DCR, INC., a Washington corporation;
and Kathy T. Johnson, Appellants.
v.
PIERCE COUNTY, Respondent.

No. 21416-4-II.
|
Oct. 2, 1998.

Operator of erotic dance studio, and dancer at studio, brought action challenging constitutionality of county ordinance regulating such studios, which contained provision requiring dancers to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances. The Superior Court, Pierce County, Thomas R. Sauriol, J., granted county's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs appealed, and the Court of Appeals, Hunt, J., held that: (1) physical proximity of erotic dancer to viewers of dance is not an expressive component of erotic dance entitled to constitutional protection; (2) ordinance thus did not violate First Amendment or State Constitution, and was not impermissible prior restraint; (3) ordinance was valid time, place, and manner restriction on protected speech; (4) ordinance did not violate due process clause; and (5) provisions of ordinance governing administrative review of adverse decisions satisfied constitutional requirements.

Affirmed.

Armstrong, J., dissented and filed opinion.

West Headnotes (32)

[1] Appeal and Error
Extent of Review Dependent on Nature of Decision Appealed from

On review of summary judgment, appellate court determines whether affidavits, facts, and record have created issue of fact, and if so, whether it is material.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Construction of an ordinance is a question of law, which is reviewed de novo.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Appeal and Error
Cases Triable in Appellate Court

Whether certain conduct is constitutionally protected is a question of law which is reviewed de novo.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Presumption of Invalidity

Governmental attempt to restrict content of future speech, which is deemed a "prior restraint", bears a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity under First Amendment, and is unconstitutional per se under State Constitution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

Regulation of constitutionally protected speech may not rise to the level of impermissible prior restraint, for purposes of First Amendment and State Constitution, if it merely restricts the time, place, or manner of expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Nudity in General

Constitutional Law
Public Nudity or Indecency

Constitutional Law
Nude Dancing in General

Nude dancing receives constitutional protection under free speech guarantees of First Amendment and State Constitution, although nudity itself is conduct subject to police powers of State. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Nude Dancing in General
Constitutional Law
Semi-Nude Dancing in General

State Constitution does not provide greater constitutional protection in context of sexually explicit nude and seminude dancing than does First Amendment to Federal Constitution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Nude Dancing in General

Nude dancing is afforded lesser protections under First Amendment and State Constitution than other types of speech, such as political speech, and is expression that clings to the edge of constitutional protection. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Performers

Although arguably "expressive," illegal conduct associated with nude or semi-nude table dancing, such as customers' digital penetration of dancers, oral copulation, and insertion of tips into dancers' orifices, falls outside edge of constitutional protection under free speech guarantees of First Amendment and State Constitution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Proximity of Performers to Patrons

Physical proximity of erotic dancer to viewers of dance is not an expressive component of erotic dance entitled to protection under free speech guarantees of First Amendment and State Constitution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance requiring dancers at erotic dance studios to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances did not infringe on component of expressive activity which was protected under First Amendment, or State Constitution; while distance requirement diminished erotic experience, because patrons could not smell breath, perfume, or scent of dancer's body, or touch dancer, rule did not restrict expressive conduct of dance itself. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Nude Dancing in General
Constitutional Law
Semi-Nude Dancing in General

With respect to governmental regulations on nude or semi-nude dancing, there is no entitlement under First Amendment, or State Constitution, to the "maximum erotic experience possible." U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

"Prior restraint" is an administrative or judicial order forbidding communications prior to their occurrence. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

Simply stated, a prior restraint prohibits future speech, as opposed to punishing past speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Proximity of Performers to Patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance requiring dancers at erotic dance studios to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances did not infringe on protected expression, and thus was not impermissible prior restraint under State Constitution. West's RCWA Const. Art. 1, § 5.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions
Constitutional Law
Narrow Tailoring Requirement; Relationship to Governmental Interest
Constitutional Law
Existence of Other Channels of Expression

Government may impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on speech that are (1) content neutral, (2) narrowly tailored to serve substantial governmental interest, and (3) leave open alternative channels for communication, without violating First Amendment's free speech guarantee. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Secondary Effects

Ordinance which regulates protected speech is content-neutral, and thus may potentially be valid under First Amendment as time, place, and manner restriction on protected speech, if its predominant purpose is the amelioration of deleterious secondary effects of sexually explicit businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

In determining whether ordinance with regulates protected speech is content-neutral, and thus may qualify as valid time, place, and manner restriction under First Amendment, court considers all objective indicators of statutory intent from face of statute, effect of statute, comparison to prior law, facts surrounding enactment of statute, its stated purpose, and record of hearings concerning its enactment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Proximity of Performers to Patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance requiring dancers at erotic dance studios to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances was valid time, place, and manner restriction on protected speech under First Amendment; distance requirement was content-neutral, as primary purpose was amelioration of secondary effects of erotic dancing, ordinance was narrowly tailored to serve substantial government interest of prohibiting public sexual contact, and dancers, who could perform same dance ten feet away from customers, had alternative channels of communication, even though requirement might cause decrease in profitability of such activities. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Ordinance which restricts protected speech is "narrowly tailored", and thus may constitute valid time, place, and manner restriction under First Amendment, if it promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Ordinances restricting protected speech are not invalid, on basis that they are not narrowly tailored and thus do not constitute valid time, place, and manner restriction, simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Courts
Dicta

Statements in case that do not relate to issue before court and are unnecessary to decide case constitute "obiter dictum", and need not be followed.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Only a denial of access to the market for adult businesses constitutes unconstitutional elimination of alternative channels of communications, and where government actions have not overtly denied adult businesses ability to open and to operate, but have merely made it more difficult to earn profit, there has been no governmental elimination of alternative channels, and consequently, no denial of First Amendment right of free speech or expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Public Amusement and Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance requiring dancers at erotic dance studios to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances did not violate due process rights of owner and dancers; ordinance was aimed at achieving legitimate public purpose and used means reasonably related to achieve that purpose, and was not unduly oppressive, even though less burdensome measures might theoretically be available. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance requiring dancers at erotic dance studios to be at least ten feet away from any patron while performing dances was not overbroad; no danger existed that ordinance would be used to criminalize innocent dances, as it was clear that ordinance applied only to "erotic dance" that "seeks to arouse or excite the patrons." U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 1, 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law
Performers

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance which prohibited patrons at erotic dance studios from giving direct tips to dancers, and prevented dancers from soliciting tips directly from patrons, was not impermissible prior restraint on expressive activity in violation of First Amendment; ordinance did not prohibit indirect receipt of tips, and did not give county unfettered discretion in determining what constitutes "direct" tip, as it provided narrow, objective, and definite standards for its application. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Municipal Corporations

Proceedings to Determine Validity of Ordinances

Court has duty, if possible, to construe ordinance so as to uphold its constitutionality.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law

Time Limits for Grant or Denial

First Amendment requires that governmental license to engage in expressive activity must be issued within a reasonable period of time, because undue delay results in suppression of protected speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Constitutional Law

Time Limits for Grant or Denial

Governmental licensing scheme for expressive activity that fails to provide definite time limitations for decision is constitutionally infirm, because delay compels speaker's silence, in violation of First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Constitutional Law

Cabarets, Discotheques, Dance Halls, and Nightclubs in General

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and Other Performances

County ordinance under which auditor was required to issue erotic dance studio license within 30 days of receipt of properly completed application and fee, and upon finding that business complied with applicable codes, placed reasonable and definite time limit on decision to issue license, and thus was not impermissible restriction on protected speech in violation of First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[31] Constitutional Law

Cabarets, Discotheques, Dance Halls, and Nightclubs in General

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and Other Performances

Provision of county ordinance governing licensing of erotic dance studios which granted right to appeal from adverse determination, under which filing of appeal by applicant would stay action of county auditor, provided for stay during appeal of hearing examiner's decision, as required to comply with First Amendment; appeal from hearing examiner's decision stays decision, as well as action of county auditor that is subject of both hearing and appeal. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[32] Constitutional Law

Cabarets, Discotheques, Dance Halls, and Nightclubs in General

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and Other Performances

Fact that county ordinance governing licensing of erotic dance studios did not place time limit for hearing examiner to issue decision with respect to action by county auditor under ordinance did not result in violation of First Amendment rights of applicants, since ordinance provided for stay of adverse administrative decision during pendency of appeal, and thus preserved status quo. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

384 *665 Gilbert H. Levy, Seattle, for Appellants.

Frank H. Krall, Pierce County Prosecutors Office, Tacoma, for Respondent.

Stephen A. Smith, Preston Thorgrimson et al., Seattle, Amicus Curiae on behalf of Cities of Lakewood & Kent et al.

Opinion

HUNT, Judge.

An adult entertainment corporation and a dancer challenge the constitutionality of a Pierce County (the County) ordinance regulating erotic dance studios. DCR, Inc., and table dancer Kathy Johnson (DCR) appeal the trial court's dismissal of their lawsuit on the County's *666 motion for summary judgment. Finding no unconstitutional restraint on protected expressive conduct, we affirm.

I

BACKGROUND

A. The Current Ordinance

Pierce County, Wash. Ordinance 94-5 (1994), codified as Pierce County Code (PCC) sec. 5.14 (1994) (the Ordinance), regulates erotic dance studios, managers, dancers, and employees. Its stated purpose is to eliminate the "historical" and regular occurrence of "prostitution, narcotics, breaches of the peace, and the presence within the industry of individuals with hidden ownership interests and outstanding arrest warrants." Ordinance 94-5.

Section 5.14.010(D) defines "erotic dance studio" and thus determines which businesses must comply with the Ordinance.[1] Sections 5.14.030 through .090 establish licensing requirements for operators. Sections 5.14.100 through .170 establish licensing requirements for managers and dancers. Sections 5.14.220 and .230 establish standards for denial and revocation of licenses. Section 5.14.190(H) requires all dancing to occur on a platform raised at least 18 inches from the floor and no closer than 10 feet to any patron. Sections 5.14.190(K) and (L) prohibit direct tipping. Section 5.14.250 imposes penalties for violations of the Ordinance.

1 PCC sec. 5.14.010(D) states: " 'Erotic dance studio' means a fixed place of business which emphasizes and seeks, through one or more dancers, to arouse or excite the patrons' sexual desires."

B. Enforcement Problems with Former Ordinance

The County presented evidence that law enforcement authorities conducted investigations in 1992 and 1993, which revealed erotic dance studio[2] problems with prostitution, narcotics transactions, and sexual contact. The sexual *667 contact included: mutual fondling; dancers sitting on customers' laps while simulating intercourse; dancers rubbing customers' faces, legs, and genitalia with their own genitalia and breasts; customers orally contacting the dancers' breasts and genitalia, including inserting monetary tips 385 into the dancers' vaginas by mouth; and customers digitally penetrating the dancers' vaginas. With the club owners' knowledge, prostitution occurred between dancers and customers both inside and outside the premises. Narcotics transactions were prevalent and included the sale of cocaine and methamphetamines.

2 Fox's, New Players, Deja Vu, RB's Show Bar, and another business now known as Lipstix.

The County also presented evidence that erotic dance studio operators and performers ignored the former ordinance's prohibition of physical contact between dancers and customers, because such contact was lucrative and courts were lenient. Narcotics violations were difficult to curb because police could not find dancers willing to work undercover, for fear of retribution from club owners.

C. Summary Judgment

DCR, Inc., which operates an erotic dance studio called Fox's, and one of Fox's employees, dancer Kathy Johnson, filed suit to have the current Ordinance declared unconstitutional, to enjoin the County from enforcing the Ordinance, and to obtain damages. The County moved for summary judgment dismissal.

In support of its motion for summary judgment, the County presented a transcript of the Pierce County Council public hearing. At this hearing, law enforcement officers testified concerning sexual contact between patrons and dancers at adult nightclubs in Pierce County. In a declaration, Pierce County Sheriff's Lieutenant Larry Gibbs stated that he had personally observed the occurrence of sexual contact in adult entertainment studios and that the 10-foot setback between entertainers and patrons "will greatly reduce the number of occurrences of illegal sexual conduct."

The County presented a video tape depicting sexual contact 668 at two adult nightclubs in Pierce County. It also presented crime statistics indicating the number of occasions on which entertainers had been charged with violating the existing adult entertainment ordinance. The County presented arrest reports and police reports documenting such violations.

DCR presented evidence that many adult nightclubs throughout the country, including Fox's, feature nude or semi-nude dancing on stage and on tables. The clubs charge an admission fee and sell non-alcoholic drinks. The dancers are not employees of the business but instead pay rent to the business for using space on the dance floor. Table dancers are paid directly by the customers. Dancers testified that the Ordinance would deprive them of the ability to earn a living. The business derives some revenue from entrance fees and the sale of beverages, but the primary source of revenue is rent from the dancers.

DCR presented the declaration of Steve Fueston, part owner of Papagayo's, an adult nightclub in the City of Bellevue. Fueston stated that after his business began complying with Bellevue's four-foot minimum distance restriction for adult cabarets,[3] entertainers were no longer willing to work there and the business was forced to close. DCR also presented the declaration of Paul Bem, comptroller for the Deja Vu nightclub in Federal Way, which began operating at a loss once it complied with Federal Way's four-foot separation requirement for adult entertainment.

[3] The Bellevue ordinance imposes a four-foot distance requirement for clothed individual table dances, but requires all nude or semi-nude dances to be performed at least eight feet from customers on an 18-inch raised platform. Ino Ino v. City of Bellevue, 132 Wash.2d 103, 110-11, 937 P.2d 154 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1077, 118 S.Ct. 856, 139 L.Ed.2d 755 (1998).

To support its contention that the Ordinance will destroy the market for alcohol-free erotic dance clubs, DCR submitted Richard Wilson's declaration that prohibition of table dancing will eliminate the market for such clubs. Wilson is an attorney who has represented several adult nightclubs across the United States. He has been a legal and business consultant for several adult entertainment companies, is 669 familiar with the business format of many clubs featuring live adult entertainment, and has spent considerable time in such clubs. His declaration states:

> Based on my experience in the industry, as well as my personal knowledge, it is my opinion and belief that table dancing is the *386 primary entertainment activity provided by adult nightclubs, and that attracts customers to the clubs. Without table dances, entertainers would not be able to earn a living, and adult nightclubs would suffer seere financial losses and be forced to close, thus terminating their presentation of entertainment which is protected by the First Amendment.

The Pierce County Superior Court held the Ordinance constitutional as a matter of law, granted summary judgment to the County, and dismissed the case.

D. Appeal

On appeal, DCR and Johnson claim the trial court erred in summarily dismissing their case, because there are genuine issues of material fact concerning the constitutionality of Pierce County Ordinance 94-5, involving the First, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and Article I, Sections 3 and 5, of the Washington Constitution. Specifically they argue that: (1) the 10-foot rule will force all erotic dance clubs out of business; and (2) a rule that thus destroys the market for erotic dancing is unconstitutional.

II

ANALYSIS

A. Summary Judgment

[1] [2] [3] A trial court may dismiss a case on summary judgment if the moving party establishes that there are no genuine issues of material fact. Olympic Fish Prods., Inc. v. Lloyd, 93 Wash.2d 596, 602, 611 P.2d 737 (1980). On review, we determine whether the affidavits, facts, and record have created an issue of fact and, if so, whether it is material. 670 Seven Gables Corp. v. MGM/UA Entertainment Co., 106 Wash.2d 1, 12, 721 P.2d 1 (1986). We view the evidence and offers of proof in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Wilson v. Steinbach, 98 Wash.2d 434, 437, 656 P.2d 1030 (1982). Construction of an ordinance [4] and whether certain conduct is constitutionally protected are questions of law, [5] which we review de novo.

4 Rettkowski v. Department of Ecology, 128 Wash.2d 508, 515, 910 P.2d 462 (1996); Trueax v. Ernst Home Ctr., Inc., 70 Wash.App. 381, 853 P.2d 491 (1993), rev'd on other grounds, 124 Wash.2d 334, 878 P.2d 1208 (1994).

5 Dicomes v. State, 113 Wash.2d 612, 624, 782 P.2d 1002 (1989).

B. Regulation of Distance Between Dancer and Patron

Pierce County Code Section 5.14.190(H) requires all erotic dancers to perform on a stage 18 inches high and 10 feet from the closest patron. [6] DCR contends that this restriction violates free speech rights and infringes on its right to substantive due process. More specifically, DCR argues that: (1) the 10-foot rule effectively bans table dancing and does not leave open "practically available" alternative avenues of communication; (2) allowing dancers to perform on stage is not a comparable alternative; and (3) no one will pay to see erotic dancers on a stage 10 feet away, as compared to nearby on table tops. DCR contends that the Ordinance thus constitutes an unconstitutional prior restraint, the effect of which will be eradication of the erotic dance studio market.

6 "All dancing shall occur on a platform intended for that purpose which is raised at least eighteen inches from the level of the floor and no closer than ten feet to any patron." PCC sec.5.14.190(H).

[4] [5] A governmental attempt to restrict the content of future speech, deemed "prior restraint," bears "a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity" under the First Amendment to the federal constitution, and unconstitutional per se under Article I, Section 5, of the state constitution. JJR Inc. v. City of Seattle, 126 Wash.2d 1, 6 n. 4, 891 P.2d 720 (1995) (quoting 671 Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70, 83 S.Ct. 631, 639, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 1963)). But "a regulation may not rise to the level of a prior restraint if it merely restricts the time, place, or manner of expression." Ino Ino, Inc. v. City of Bellevue, 132 Wash.2d 103, 126, 937 P.2d 154 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1077, 118 S.Ct. 856, 139 L.Ed.2d 755 (1998) (citing State v. *387 Coe, 101 Wash.2d 364, 373, 679 P.2d 353 (1984)). The threshold question here is whether table dancing is constitutionally protected expressive conduct.

1. Dance as Expression

In an abstract sense, all conduct "expresses" something. That alone cannot justify treating all conduct as speech. As the Supreme Court explained in City of Dallas v. Stanglin, [490 U.S. 19, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989)], while freedom of speech "means more than simply the right to talk and to write," it does not embrace all human activity. "It is possible," the Court observed, "to find some kernel of expression in almost every activity a person undertakes for example, walking down the street, or meeting one's friends at a shopping mall but such a kernel is not sufficient to bring the activity within the protection of the First Amendment." 1 Rodney A. Smolla, Smolla and Nimmer on Freedom of Speech, sec. 11.3, at 11-5 (3d Ed.1997) (footnotes omitted).

[6] [7] [8] [9] Nude dancing "receives constitutional protection, although nudity itself is conduct subject to the police powers of the state." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 125, 937 P.2d 154. Contrary to DCR's position, the Washington Supreme Court recently held that "the differences in texts of art. I sec. 5, [of the state Constitution] and the First Amendment" do not "justif[y] greater state constitutional protection in the context of sexually explicit nude and seminude dancing." [7] 672 Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 119-20, 937 P.2d 154. Courts have acknowledged that "[n]ude dance ... is afforded lesser protections than other types of speech, such as political speech." See DFW Vending, Inc. v. Jefferson County, 991 F.Supp. 578, 590 (E.D.Tex., 1998) (citations omitted). Rather nude dancing is expression that " 'clings to the edge of constitutional protection.' " Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 116, 937 P.2d 154 (quoting JJR, 126 Wash.2d at 9, 891 P.2d 720). Although arguably "expressive," illegal conduct associated with table dancing, such as customers' digital penetration, oral copulation, and insertion of tips into dancers' orifices, [8] falls outside this edge of constitutional protection.

7 In reaching this conclusion, the court first analyzed the Gunwall factors relative to nude dancing. State v. Gunwall, 106 Wash.2d 54, 61-62 720 P.2d 808, 76 A.L.R.4th 517 (1986), cited in Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d 103, 937 P.2d 154. Its Gunwall analysis did not cause the court to change its view of nude dancing in the context of free speech protections. After weighing the Gunwall factors, the court concluded that greater protection was not warranted under the state constitution. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 116-22, 937 P.2d 154.

Specifically, the first Gunwall factor, the text of Article I, Section 5, did not require greater protection of nude dancing because nude dancing is "expression" and the Constitution's text refers only to speech and writing. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 117, 937 P.2d 154. Nor did the fourth factor, preexisting state law, require greater protection because our state has a history of outlawing or severely restricting nude dancing. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 120-21, 937 P.2d 154. For the same reason, i.e., historically strict local regulation, the sixth factor, local concern, did not warrant greater protection under our state constitution. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 122, 937 P.2d 154.

8 DCR has not asserted that such activities have an "expressive" element. In any case, even if these pernicious secondary-effects had expressive elements, "intentional contact between a nude dancer and a bar patron is conduct beyond the expressive scope of the dancing itself." Hang On, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 65 F.3d 1248, 1253 (5th Cir.1995). "The conduct at that point has overwhelmed any expressive strains it may contain." Hang On, 65 F.3d at 1253 (upholding "no touch" ordinance in nude dancing establishment).

[10] [11] The issue here is whether proximity of the erotic dance, as contrasted to the movements of the dance, constitutes communicative "expression" in the nature of constitutionally protected speech, or whether it is unprotected mere conduct. The evidence adduced by the County established that proximity of table dancers to customers promotes lucrative illegal conduct, and that a predecessor ordinance prohibiting such illegal conduct in adult entertainment businesses was ineffective.

The majority in Ino Ino noted that Bellevue's four-foot rule "does regulate expression" but did not squarely address whether table dancing near customers is constitutionally *388 protected conduct, differing materially from more distant stage dancing. [9] Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 125, 937 P.2d 154. But the 673 court did note that the "eight-foot requirement limits only proximity and does not restrict the expressive aspect of stage dancing...." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 132, 937 P.2d 154. Thus the court implies that the proximity component of dancing is mere conduct that is not constitutionally protected. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 132, 937 P.2d 154. The court rejected a prior restraint analysis and instead found the four-foot distance requirement between dancer and patron to be a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction. The court ruled that the four-foot rule does not ban the expression of table dancing, but rather "allows dancers to engage in all types of movement, with the exception of pure sexual conduct, in order to convey eroticism." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 130, 937 P.2d 154.

9 The Bellevue ordinance at issue in Ino Ino included two distance requirements: (1) a four-foot distance between dancers and patrons during individual performances (such as table dancing); and (2) an eight-foot distance between stage dancers and patrons. Moreover, all nude or partially nude dancing was required to be at least eight feet from the nearest member of the public on a stage at least 18 inches above the floor. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 132 n. 8, 937 P.2d 154 (citing BCC sec. 5.08.070(A)(1), (6) (1995)).

This reading of Ino Ino conforms to federal constitutional law, which Ino Ino acknowledges is consistent with state constitutional law regarding the extent to which free speech protection applies to sexually explicit or nude dancing. For example, Chief Justice Rehnquist, writing for the plurality in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, reasoned that requiring nude dancers to wear pasties and G-strings does not deprive the dance of is erotic message, but rather "simply makes the message slightly less graphic." Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 571, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991). Similarly in Colacurcio v. City of Kent, 944 F.Supp. 1470 (W.D.Wash.1996),[10] a local federal court noted that 674 table dancing provides customers with a "more intense, more personal, more erotic" experience because the customer can see and hear the dancer more clearly and has better opportunity to smell the "breath, perfume and the scent of the body." Colacurcio, 944 F.Supp. at 1476. Nevertheless, the court ruled that "there is nothing in [federal] constitutional jurisprudence to suggest that patrons are entitled under the First Amendment to the maximum erotic experience possible." Colacurcio, 944 F.Supp. at 1476.

10 In Colacurcio v. City of Kent, 944 F.Supp. 1470, 1476-77 (W.D.Wash.1996), an adult entertainment corporation contended that a 10-foot setback was unconstitutional because it banned table dancing. The federal district court agreed that the 10-foot setback baned table dancing, but nevertheless concluded that the ban did not violate the First Amendment of the federal constitution because it left open alternative avenues of communication: It still allowed dancers to perform on stage.

> The court noted that the proper focus is not on the customer's experience but on the dancer's ability to express herself. The court found that the rule did "not prevent the dancers from performing their erotic dance, or limit the manner in which the dancers may express themselves." Colacurcio, 944 F.Supp. at 1477. Since dancers could still perform their erotic dances, the court analyzed the regulation as a reasonable time, place, and manner restriction. Colacurcio, 944 F.Supp. at 1477.
>
> Similarly, in upholding a 10-foot setback and direct tipping prohibition in Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 793 F.2d 1053 (9th Cir.1986), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals focused on the dancer's ability to express herself rather than on the customer's erotic experience, noting: "While the dancer's erotic message may be slightly less effective from ten feet, the ability to engage in the protected expression is not significantly impaired." Kev, 793 F.2d at 1061.

[12] Here, the 10-foot distance requirement diminishes the erotic experience because customers cannot smell the breath, perfume, and scent of the body or touch the dancer's body so intensely as they can with close-quarters table dancing. The 10-foot rule minimizes opportunity for illegal activities, which are not protected conduct. But the 10-foot rule does not restrict expressive content of the dance itself: The dancer can perform the same dance 10 feet away. "Indeed, that distance is closer than distances at which artistic dance performances at theaters and concert halls generally are viewed. An eighteen-inch elevated platform only enhances visibility." *389 DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 594. Reiterating Colacurcio, there is no constitutional entitlement to the "maximum erotic experience possible." Colacurcio, 944 F.Supp. at 1476.

We therefore hold that proximity is not an expressive component of erotic dance entitled to protection under either the First Amendment or the State Constitution.

Having found that proximity of table dancing is not constitutionally protected expression, aside from performance of the dance itself, we need not address DCR's prior restraint argument. Nevertheless, because Ino Ino considered a prior restraint analysis before rejecting it and because the Ordinance does regulate the place or manner 675 of erotic dance by controlling the distance between dancer and patron, we present the following additional analysis.

2. Prior Restraint

[13] [14] "A prior restraint is an administrative or judicial order forbidding communications prior to their occurrence. Simply stated, a prior restraint prohibits future speech, as opposed to punishing past speech." Soundgarden v. Eikenberry, 123 Wash.2d 750, 764, 871 P.2d 1050, 30 A.L.R. 5th 869 (1994) (citation omitted). If an ordinance constitutes a "prior restraint" on protected speech, the Washington Constitution confers greater protection than the Federal Constitution. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 122, 937 P.2d 154. But "[i]n the context of adult entertainment ... the court has declined to afford the full protection of art. I, sec. 5" to "expressive conduct or sexually explicit dance." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 117, 937 P.2d 154.

[15] DCR contends that the 10-foot setback is a prior restraint under the Washington Constitution, arguing that Article I, Section 5 offers greater protection to nude table dancing. The Washington Supreme Court majority has specifically rejected this argument with respect to Bellevue's fourfoot setback for erotic dance: "[A]rt. I, sec. 5 mentions only the right to speak, write and publish. In the absence of language relating to expressive conduct, we do not find that the text of art. I, sec. 5 justifies extending greater protection to the adult performances at issue here." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 117, 937 P.2d 154.

The Washington State Supreme Court has held that Bellevue's requirement, that individual table dancers perform at least four-feet from customers, does not rise to the level of a prior restraint. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 127, 937 P.2d 154. Because we have held that proximity of a dance is not protected expression, the County's 10-foot regulation similarly does not constitute a prior restraint.

3. Time, Place, and Manner Restriction

The United States Supreme Court has noted that the O'Brien [11] test for regulation of expressive conduct " 'in the 676 last analysis is little, if any, different from the standard applied to time, place, and manner restrictions.' " Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2757, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (quoting Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3071, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984)). See also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456. We examine the regulation here at issue under the time, place, and manner test enunciated in Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746. [12]

11 United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968).

12 Both parties here assert that the 10-foot rule should be analyzed as a time, place, and manner restriction. We agree, though we note that we would reach the same result under the O'Brien test used by the majority in Ino Ino. Both tests require a content-neutral regulation (prong 1 of the Ward test, prong 3 of the O'Brien test), which is supported by a significant government interest (prong 2 of the Ward test, prong 2 of the O'Brien test), and which is narrowly tailored to further that interest (prong 2 of the Ward test, prong 4 of the O'Brien test). In addition, the Ward test requires that regulations leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the expression.

> Commentators and courts have noted that, in establishing the O'Brien test, the United States Supreme Court specifically addressed the test to general regulations on conduct that have the incidental effect of restricting expression. SMOLLA, supra sec. 9:13 at 9-14; sec. 11:7 at 11-16. See also Collin v. Smith, 578 F.2d 1197, 1209 (7th Cir.1978). See, e.g., O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (general ban on mutilation/destruction of draft cards applied to expressive burning of draft card); Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (general ban on public nudity applied to expressive exotic dancing). The present case, however, does not involve a statute of general applicability that has an incidental effect on speech, but rather a statute that was specifically drafted to limit the place and manner of expressive conduct. As such, the Ward test is best suited to our analysis. But see DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 593 n. 14.

*390 [16] Government may impose reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on speech that are (1) content neutral, (2) narrowly tailored to serve a substantial governmental interest, and (3) leave open alternative channels for communication. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (citing Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065). As explained above, in electing to apply federal constitutional law, the Washington Supreme Court has ruled that "sexually explicit dance" does not warrant "application of the more protective time, place, and manner analysis developed under art. I, sec. 5 of the state constitution." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 122, 937 P.2d 154.

a. Content Neutral

[17] [18] An ordinance is content-neutral if its predominant purpose is the amelioration of deleterious secondary effects of sexually explicit businesses. City of Renton v. Playtime 677 Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49, 106 S.Ct. 925, 929-30, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Expressive conduct, such as dance, is more likely than "pure" speech to "become ensnared by contentneutral regulations passed for reasons unrelated to the suppression of expression." Smolla, supra sec. 11:7 at 11-16. A court considers all objective indicators of statutory intent from the face of the statute, the effect of the statute, comparison to prior law, facts surrounding enactment of the statute, its stated purpose, and the record of hearings concerning its enactment. City of Las Vegas v. Foley, 747 F.2d 1294, 1297 (9th Cir.1984).

[19] Pierce County Ordinance No. 94-5 states that its purpose is to curb "significant criminal activity" that has "historically and regularly occurred in the adult entertainment industry." Thus, it shows a legitimate purpose on its face. The County conducted a public hearing, studied the secondary effects of table dancing, and relied on the results to formulate the 10-foot distance requirement. The County concluded that regulation of the distance between dancer and patron was necessary to prevent significant criminal activity that has historically and regularly occurred in adult entertainment establishments, including prostitution, narcotics transactions, breaches of the peace, and organized crime.

The County produced ample evidence that its predominant purpose in enacting the Ordinance was the amelioration of deleterious secondary effects of erotic dancing.[13] The Ordinance neither prohibits nor circumscribes the content of erotic dancing. It merely regulates distance between dancer and patron. Moreover, the distance is not so great as to obscure the dance; on the contrary, audiences for many other dance performances are generally seated more than 10 feet back from a stage. DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 594. Thus the Ordinance is content neutral.

13 See Bolser v. Washington State Liquor Control Bd., 90 Wash.2d 223, 228, 580 P.2d 629 (1978) (upholding confinement of topless dancing to elevated platform six feet from customers in order to prevent secondary effects, similar to those involved here: "The goal of the regulation is not censorship of expression, but the prevention of crime and disorderly conduct which is concomitant with the consumption of liquor in such situations.").

678 b. Narrowly Tailored To Serve a Substantial Government Interest

i. Substantial Government Interest

The law is well settled that government has a substantial interest in eliminating deleterious secondary effects of nude dancing. The Supreme Court in Ino Ino, affirmed that "the governmental interest in preventing illegal contact is a rational basis for extending the minimum distance to eight feet," citing an experiment performed by the City of Bellevue that "a very tall customer could reach a nude stage dancer with only a separation of six feet." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 132-33, 937 P.2d 154. As in Ino Ino, the distance restriction here "facilitates the detection of public sexual contact and discourages *391 contact from occurring in the first place." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 128, 937 P.2d 154. Thus the County has satisfied the substantial governmental interest requirement. See also Barnes, 501 U.S. 560 at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (Souter, J., concurring).

ii. Narrowly Tailored

[20] [21] The United States Supreme Court explained the meaning of "narrowly tailored" in Ward. An ordinance is narrowly tailored if it promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the ordinance. Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (citing United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 2906, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985)). Ordinances are not invalid "simply because there is some imaginable alternative that might be less burdensome on speech." Ward, 491 U.S. at 797, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (citing Albertini, 472 U.S. at 675, 105 S.Ct. 2897).

The County has also satisfied the requirement that the Ordinance is narrowly tailored to promote a governmental interest: It produced a factual record of narcotics and prostitution transactions and other substantial evidence to support its conclusion that separation of more than an arm's length between dancer and customer is necessary to control these secondary effects. The County's previous, narrower attempt to curb secondary effects, with an ordinance declaring them illegal, proved ineffective.

Moreover, the law is clear that a regulation need not be 679 the minimum restriction conceivable in order to meet the "narrowly tailored" prong. In Ward, the United States Supreme Court held that "a regulation of the time, place, or manner of protected speech must be narrowly tailored to serve the government's legitimate content-neutral interests but that it need not be the least restrictive or least intrusive means of so." Ward, 491 U.S. at 798, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (emphasis added). Here the County's 10-foot rule is narrowly tailored because the prevention of illegal sexual conduct, prostitution, and narcotics transactions would be achieved less effectively absent this restriction.

c. Alternative Channels of Communications

Under the third pron, the burden is on the government to show that the Ordinance leaves open practical and available alternative channels of communication. Ward, 491 U.S. at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746. That dancing 10 feet away might not be as lucrative as dancing closer to patrons (a likely result of proximity's opportunity for illegal contact) [14] does not mean that an alternative locus for the protected expression of the dance is unavailable. To the contrary, alternatives for the protected expressive content of table dancing are available under the Ordinance: Dancers may perform the identical dance on a stage 10 feet away from the customers and 18 inches off the floor, closer to their audience than many other dancers engaged in artistic performances in theaters and concert halls. DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 594. But alternatives for constitutionally unprotected components of table dancing, e.g., illegal sexual contact and narcotics transactions, are appropriately constrained by the Ordinance.

14 In Ino Ino, the Supreme Court noted: "Decreased opportunity for illegal sexual contact could be one cause of customers' dissatisfaction," resulting in lower revenues for dancers. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 131, 937 P.2d 154.

We have held that the proximity element of erotic dance does not constitute protected expression. Thus, the focus for examining availability of alternative avenues of expression here is not close-by erotic dance confined to table tops, but rather erotic dance in general.

680 i. Ban on Table Dancing; Inevitable Destruction of Business

Supported by expert testimony, DCR claims that enforcement of the 10-foot rule will eliminate table dancing, which will render erotic dance clubs so unprofitable that all such businesses will inevitably fail. DCR thus argues that marketplace response to the 10-foot rule will eliminate all alternative avenues for the constitutionally protected expression that is erotic dance. Dicta in Ino Ino suggests that, under such circumstances, *392 as DCR contends, "the distance requirement would be unconstitutional." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 130, 937 P.2d 154 (citing Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339, 340-41, 81 S.Ct. 125, 126-27, 5 L.Ed.2d 110 (1960)).

But Gomillion does not support this dicta. Rather Gomillion is a voting rights case involving redistricting, alleged to have the " 'inevitable effect' of depriving a racial group of their constitutional right to vote." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 130-31, 937 P.2d 154. Not all speech and conduct are constitutionally protected; rather there is a continuum of First Amendment protection, ranging from the most highly protected political speech and speech-like conduct (e.g. the flag-burning cases) [15] to the least protected expressive conduct of nude dancing, which " 'clings to the edge' " of constitutional protection. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 117, 937 P.2d 154 (quoting JJR, 126 Wash.2d at 9, 891 P.2d 720). See also Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456; DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 590.

15 United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310, 110 S.Ct. 2404, 110 L.Ed.2d 287 (1990); Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989).

Yet Ino Ino also acknowledges that federal court decisions, especially those of the United States Supreme Court, are controlling on the issue of constitutionally protected free speech and expressive conduct. But the federal courts have ruled contrary to Ino Ino's dicta when addressing economic impacts relative to nude or erotic dance and alternative venues.

ii. Diminished Commercial Viability Without Limiting Alternatives

Although raised in the context of a zoning case, the 681 Supreme Court's analysis in Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925, is applicable here. Both Playtime Theatres and the instant case involve the issue of whether government regulations that diminish commercial viability of a business would thereby eliminate alternative avenues of protected communication. In Playtime Theatres, the United States Supreme Court held that the action of the market does not limit alternative avenues of communication; only government's prevention of entry into the market can be characterized as eliminating such alternatives. See also DLS, Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 413 (6th Cir.1997) ("if the ordinance were intended to destroy the market for adult cabarets, it might run afoul of the First Amendment") (emphasis added); DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 595 (summarizing economic impact cases in the context of the "narrow tailoring" element of the O'Brien test).

In Playtime Theatres the United States Supreme Court confronted zoning regulations that forced certain adult establishments to relocate. While there was a sufficient quantity of sites available to provide "alternative avenues of communication," the respondents argued that these sites did not provide real alternatives because the sites were not "commercially viable," because either the land was already owned and developed or the undeveloped land was not for sale. The argument, in essence, was that the prohibitive cost of relocating adult businesses effectively foreclosed all alternative avenues of communication.

The Supreme Court rejected this argument, stating,

> That respondents must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation. And although we have cautioned against the enactment of zoning regulations that have "the effect of suppressing, or greatly restricting access to, lawful speech," we have never suggested that the First Amendment compels the Government to ensure that adult theaters, or any other kinds of speech-related 682 businesses for that matter, will be able to obtain sites at bargain prices. ("The inquiry for First Amendment purposes is not concerned with economic impact.") In our view, the First Amendment requires only that Renton refrain from effectively denying respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city....

Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925 (citations omitted).

*393 Similarly, in the context of adult businesses, lower federal courts have consistently rejected financial feasibility as a consideration in determining whether alternative avenues of expression are available. See, e.g., Spokane Arcade, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 75 F.3d 663, 665-66 (9th Cir.1996) (an ordinance requiring open booths for viewing sexually explicit material did not violate the First Amendment, even though it reduced profitability).

> Ultimately, all of plaintiff's arguments boil down to a complaint that the ordinance reduces their audience and adversely affects profits. To the extent they claim the ordinance denies them total access to their market, this contention is rejected. More likely, however, plaintiffs argue that the ordinance reduces their market from an economic perspective that it will no longer be profitable as before the ordinance. Whether or not this proves to be the case, it does not show lack of narrow tailoring.

DFW Vending, 991 F.Supp. at 595. The only relevant inquiry is whether the plaintiffs are politically free to engage in protected speech, not whether the regulation will cause a decrease in profits. See also Mitchell v. Commission on Adult Entertainment Establishments, 10 F.3d 123, 132 n. 10 (3d Cir.1993) (finding that the First Amendment does not guarantee anyone a profit); International Food & Beverage Sys. v. City of Fort Lauderdale, 794 F.2d 1520, 1526 (11th Cir.1986), aff'd, 838 F.2d 1220 (11th Cir.1988); Movie & Video World, Inc. v. Board of County Comm'rs, 723 F.Supp. 695, 700 (S.D.Fla.1989).

683 iii. Controlling Precedent

[22] [23] Paramount to the dicta in Ino Ino, [16] we must apply the economic effects analysis of the United States Supreme Court in the Playtime Theatres, as followed by the Ninth Circuit in Spokane Arcade. DCR argues that the 10-foot rule will render unprofitable, and thereby force closure of, all Pierce County adult dancing establishments, thus effectively eliminating all avenues of communication for constitutionally protected erotic dancing. But only a denial of access to the market constitutes an unconstitutional elimination of alternative channels. [17] Where government actions have not overtly denied adult businesses the ability to open and to operate, but have merely made it more difficult to earn a profit, there has been no governmental elimination of alternative channels, and consequently, no denial of the First Amendment right of free speech or expression. See Spokane Arcade, 75 F.3d at 664-65; Mitchell, 10 F.3d at 132; International Food & Beverage Sys., 794 F.2d at 1526; Movie & Video World, 723 F.Supp. at 700.

16 "Statements in a case that do not relate to an issue before the court and are unnecessary to decide the case constitute obiter dictum, and need not be followed." State v. Potter, 68 Wash.App. 134, 150, 842 P.2d 481 (1992) (citation omitted). Dicta is not controlling precedent. Noble Manor v. Pierce County, 133 Wash.2d 269, 289, 943 P.2d 1378 (1997) (concurring opinion).

17 Denial of access to the market would also most likely be viewed as a prior restraint.

Here, the Ordinance restricts only the place and manner of the dance, but not its content. Rather, it restricts the opportunity for illegal activity that proximity enhances; such illegal activity is not sheltered by the First Amendment simply because it is incorporated into a dance that is otherwise entitled to such protection. [18] Accordingly, in restricting the location of erotic dance performance, the County's 10-foot rule meets the Ward time, place, and manner test.

18 See Hang On, 65 F.3d at 1253 ("That the physical conduct occurs while in the course of protected activity does not bring it within the scope of the First Amendment.").

C. Due Process; Overbreadth

[24] DCR's additional due process and overbreadth challenges 684 to the Ordinance's constitutionality are essentially duplicative of their other arguments and fail for similar reasons. As already explained, the distance regulation is aimed at achieving a legitimate public purpose; it uses means that are reasonably related to achieve that purpose; and it is not unreasonably oppressive to DCR. Sintra, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 119 Wash.2d 1, 829 P.2d 765 (1992) (due process). The fact that less burdensome measures, such as higher fines, might be theoretically available to control the deleterious secondary effects of *394 erotic dancing, does not render the Ordinance violative of due process. Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

[25] "Application of the overbreadth doctrine is strong medicine ... and should be employed by a court sparingly and only as a last resort." State v. Halstien, 122 Wash.2d 109, 122, 857 P.2d 270 (1993) (citations omitted). We do not find convincing DCR's argument that the Ordinance is overbroad, especially in light of Ino Ino's (1) refusal to extend to sexually explicit dancing the Washington Constitution's generally lower tolerance for overly broad restrictions on speech, and (2) rejection of an analogous overbreadth claim as applied to Bellevue's similar four-foot rule. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 117-20, 937 P.2d 154.

DCR argues that the Ordinance sweeps too broadly and could encompass other types of dance not shown to be accompanied by deleterious secondary effects. We faced and rejected an analogous argument in State v. Stephenson, 89 Wash.App. 794, 800, 950 P.2d 38 (1998),

> Although it is possible to conceive of circumstances in which application of the statute would be unreasonable, that alone will not render it unconstitutional. Members of City Council v. Taxpayers [for Vincent], 466 U.S. 789, 800, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2126, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). Unless there is a realistic danger that the statute will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the court, we will not declare it facially invalid on overbreadth grounds. Taxpayers, [466 U.S. at 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118]. We do not see that danger here.

Stephenson, 89 Wash.App. at 804, 950 P.2d 38 (emphasis added). Similarly, we see no danger 685 here that the Ordinance will be used to criminalize innocent dance of the type DCR hypothesizes. Although PCC 5.14.190 subsection Huses the term "all dancing," the surrounding subsections, as well as Pierce County's Adult Entertainment Ordinance read as a whole, PCC chapter 5.14, clearly apply only to "erotic dance" that "seeks to arouse or excite the patrons' sexual desires." PCC 5.14.010(B), (D); 5.14.020.

D. Tipping Restrictions

DCR next challenges the constitutionality of the Ordinance's restrictions on tipping. Section (K) of PCC sec. 5.14.190 prevents patrons from giving direct tips to dancers. Section (L) prevents dancers from soliciting tips directly from patrons. DCR contends the tipping rules are prior restraints because (1) they prevent dancers from earning compensation, and (2) they give County officials unbridled discretion to decide what constitutes a direct tip. [19]

19 DCR analogizes the instant case to United States v. National Treasury Employees Union, 513 U.S. 454, 115 S.Ct. 1003, 1014, 130 L.Ed.2d 964 (1995), in which the Court held that Congress had enacted an unconstitutional prior restraint when it precluded federal employees from accepting honoraria for their speeches. The Supreme Court distinguished National Treasury by noting that distance regulations do not place "restrictions on the amount of payment dancers may receive and thus, does not effectively foreclose a reasonable means of earning a living." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 131, 937 P.2d 154.

[26] DCR produced evidence that the industry practice is for dancers to pay the studio for the opportunity to dance; the dancer's sole compensation is direct tips. The tipping restriction does not prohibit erotic dancers from working, from receiving tips indirectly, or from being compensated by customers or dance studio operators for their work. Rather, the Ordinance merely halts the current practice of customers paying dancers directly,[20] resulting in lessened opportunity for prostitution and other illegal activity that has contributed to the profitability of table dancing.

20 The record reflects many abuses of direct tipping in erotic dance studios.

[27] DCR also argues that the tipping restriction is a prior restraint 686 because it vests the County with unfettered discretion to decide what constitutes a "direct" tip.[21] *395 We have a duty, if possible, to construe an ordinance so as to uphold its constitutionality. State ex rel. Herron v. Browet, Inc., 103 Wash.2d 215, 219, 691 P.2d 571 (1984). Here it is possible to construe the tipping portion of the Ordinance to uphold its constitutionality.

21 A licensing scheme containing vague terms gives the government unfettered discretion to issue or to deny a license and thus presents a danger that the decision maker may exercise its judgment to suppress speech based on content. FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 225-26, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990).

The Ordinance does not give County officials unfettered discretion to decide what constitutes a direct tip. "Direct" is defined as "proceeding from one point to another in time or space without deviation or interruption." WEBSTER'S THIRD NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY 640 (1969). This construction satisfies DCR's vagueness concerns by eliminating any inappropriate discretion that might have been vested in the County official. As so construed, the Ordinance rovides narrow, objective, and definite standards for application and thus, passes constitutional muster.

E. Licensing Scheme

DCR contends that the licensing scheme constitutes an unconstitutional prior restraint on its freedom of expression because: (1) it gives the auditor unlimited time in which to issue a licensing decision; (2) it gives the hearing examiner unlimited time to decide an appeal of an adverse auditor's decision; and (3) it does not provide for a stay of an adverse auditor's decision pending judicial review. We analyze each contention in turn.

1. Time Limit on Licensing Decision

DCR contends PCC sec. 5.14.070 is unconstitutional. It reads as follows: "The Auditor shall issue an erotic dance studio license within thirty days of receipt of both a properly-completed application and application fee, and upon finding that the business complies with all applicable fire, building, 687 and zoning codes." DCR argues that the Ordinance infringes on its free speech rights because it allows the auditor to delay indefinitely a licensing decision as follows: Even though the Ordinance requires the auditor to issue a license within 30 days of finding that the applicant complies with health, fire, and building codes, the auditor has unlimited time in which to make such a finding.

[28] [29] A license must be issued within a reasonable period of time, because undue delay results in the suppression of protected speech. FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 227, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990). A licensing scheme that fails to provide definite time limitations for a decision is constitutionally infirm because the delay compels the speaker's silence. Riley v. National Fed'n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 802, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 2680, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988).

[30] Again, we must construe an ordinance to uphold its constitutionality, if possible. Browet, 103 Wash.2d at 219, 691 P.2d 571. Although the above language is not a model of clarity, the only logical construction is that the Ordinance requires the auditor to make a licensing decision within 30 days of receipt of a complete application and fee, where it is readily ascertainable that the business complies with safety codes and zoning restrictions. But where, for example, the building or proposed seating arrangements violate the fire code, then the license would issue within 30 days after such violations were shown to have been corrected. Similarly, if the complete application proposed an erotic dance studio in a zone in which such business was prohibited or restricted, the auditor would issue a license within 30 days after either removal of the zoning restriction or a change in location to a zone in which this type of business is a permitted use. Such construction renders the Ordinance constitutional.

Accordingly, we hold that the Ordinance's licensing scheme is constitutional because it provides a reasonable and definite time limit on the County's discretion to issue a license to an erotic dance studio.

688 2. Stay Pending Judicial Review

[31] DCR next argues that Section 5.14.240 does not provide for a stay of an adverse hearing examiner's decision pending judicial review, as required by JJR, 126 Wash.2d at 10, 891 P.2d 720. We disagree.

The pertinent section of the Ordinance is set forth below:

> *396 [PCC Section] 5.14.240. Appeal and Hearing.
>
> A. Any applicant/licensee that has had a license denied, revoked or suspended by the Auditor shall have the right to appeal such action to the Pierce County Hearing Examiner, by filing a notice of appeal with the Auditor within ten working days after receiving notice of the action. The matter shall be heard within ninety days by the Hearing Examiner, unless the parties agree otherwise.
>
> B. The filing of an appeal by an applicant/licensee shall stay the action of the Auditor, pending a resolution of the matter.
>
> C. The decision of the Hearing Examiner shall be based upon a preponderance of the evidence.
>
> D. The burden of proof shall be on the Auditor.
>
> E. The decision of the Hearing Examiner shall be final unless appealed to Superior Court within ten working days from the date the decision is entered by filing an appropriate action and serving all necessary parties.

Section B provides that an appeal stays an auditor's action "pending resolution of the matter." Since a matter is not resolved until the appeal process is completed, it follows that an appeal from a hearing examiner's decision stays an appealed hearing examiner's decision, as well as the auditor's action that is the subject of both hearing examiner and judicial review. In light of our duty to construe the Ordinance to uphold its constitutionality, we interpret the Ordinance as providing for a stay during the appeal of a hearing examiner's decision.

3. Time Limit on Appeal

[32] DCR next objects that the Ordinance gives the hearing examiner unlimited time in which to issue a decision. 689 Because the Ordinance provides for a stay of an adverse administrative decision, it assures that an applicant's ability to exercise constitutionally protected rights of expression are not unreasonably restrained. By thus preserving the status quo, DCR is not harmed by an adverse decision. See FW/PBS, 493 U.S. at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596. See also National Socialist Party of America v. Village of Skokie, 432 U.S. 43, 44, 97 S.Ct. 2205, 2206, 53 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977). It is therefore irrelevant that the Ordinance does not place a time limit on the hearing examiner's decision.

F. Attorney Fees

We deny DCR's request for attorney fees.

CONCLUSION

We hold the Ordinance constitutional and affirm the trial court.

HOUGHTON, C.J., concurs.

ARMSTRONG, Judge (dissenting).

I respectfully dissent. DCR presented the trial court with the declarations of two experts. One testified that: "It is my professional opinion that requiring dancers to maintain such distance [10 feet] directly and unmistakably effects (sic) the content of the erotic message sought to be conveyed by the performer." [22] The other expert concluded that distance is an expressive component of the dance, and that requiring a 10-foot separation between a dancer and a patron regulates the content of the dance. [23]

22 Clerk's Papers, at 383 (Declaration of Dr. Judith Hanna).

23 Clerk's Papers, at 320-21 (Declaration of Edward Donnerstein).

In the face of this, the majority holds as a matter of law that the "proximity" of the dance is not an element of the "content" of the dance. This is not only contrary to the 690 rules of summary judgment, but inconsistent with Ino Ino, Inc. v. City of Bellevue, 132 Wash.2d 103, 937 P.2d 154 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1077, 118 S.Ct. 856, 139 L.Ed.2d 755 (1998), which treated the issue as one of fact. [24]

24 Ino Ino stood in a different procedural posture than the present case. Ino Ino came before the Washington Supreme Court after a trial on the merits, which was tried in the King County Superior Court. The trial court found that "distance restrictions did not prevent patrons from perceiving the eroticism of the dancers' performance" and "that a dancer can convey eroticism from a distance of four feet from the patron's torso." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 113-14, 937 P.2d 154. These findings of fact were upheld by the Supreme Court as supported by substantial evidence. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 114, 937 P.2d 154.

*397 DCR also presented the trial court with the declaration of Richard L. Wilson, an attorney and business consultant for adult entertainment establishments in several states. [25] Wilson testified that: "Without table dances, entertainers would not be able to earn a living, and adult nightclubs would suffer severe financial losses and be forced to close, thus terminating their presentation of entertainment which is protected by the First Amendment." [26]

25 DCR also presented the declarations of Steve Fueston, a general partner in the corporation which ran the Papagayos adult club in Bellevue which was the subject of the Ino Ino case, and the declaration of Paul E. Bern, the Director of Operations for the management company of the Deja-Vu adult nightclub located in Federal Way. The principal thrust of both declarations was that regulation of the distance between the dancers and the patrons caused the establishments to operate at a loss, caused dancers to cease their dancing at establishments covered by distance regulations, and caused these clubs to sustain economic losses which had, or would, result in their closure.

26 Clerk's Papers, at 413 (Declaration of Richard L. Wilson).

DCR thus presents us with the proposition, which we must accept on summary judgment, that enforcement of the 10-foot rule will inevitably close the businesses and stop the dancing. In Ino Ino, the Washington Supreme Court said, "[i]f such a failure [of the adult cabarets] was inevitable, then the distance requirement would be unconstitutional." Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 130, 937 P.2d 154. Ino Ino cited Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339, 340-41, 81 S.Ct. 125, 126-27, 5 L.Ed.2d 110 (1960), for the proposition. But the majority believes it is not bound by this because the statement 691 is "dicta," [27] and because Gomillion does not support the statement. I disagree. Although Gomillion was a voting rights case, not a nude dancing case, the Supreme Court cited it for the proposition that any ordinance that totally deprives one of a constitutionally guaranteed right must fail. I agree. It is not an answer to attempt to distinguish nude dancing from voting rights because nude dancing is "the least protected expressive conduct" as the majority does. [28] If nude dancing is entitled to some First Amendment protection, then any ordinance that totally eliminates the dancing is unconstitutional. Ino Ino, 132 Wash.2d at 130, 937 P.2d 154. DCR is entitled to a hearing on whether enforcement of the 10-foot rule will inevitably close the business and thus prevent any dancing. If the trial court finds such failure inevitable, then the Ordinance is unconstitutional.

27 Majority Opinion at 393.

28 Majority Opinion at 392.

I also question the majority's conclusion, under its time, place, and manner analysis that ample alternative avenues of communication remain. If the dancers are correct that the Ordinance will stop them from dancing, clearly no alternative channels of communication will be open.

I further disagree with the majority's discussion of the economic impact of the ordinance. The majority relies primarily upon City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and Spokane Arcade, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 75 F.3d 663 (9th Cir.1996). Neither case faced the issue we have here: The validity of an ordinance that will totally stop the dancing. Playtime Theatres dealt with a zoning ordinance and the trial court found that under the challenged ordinance, the adult theaters had "ample, accessible real estate," on which to put their theaters. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. at 53, 106 S.Ct. 925. The Supreme Court concluded that the city had not effectively denied "respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city...." Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925. But the court reiterated its concern 692 about any zoning regulation that had "the effect of suppressing, or greatly restricting access to, lawful speech...." Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925. Here, if the dancers are correct, the Ordinance will totally suppress their protected expression.

*398 In Spokane Arcade, the court discussed the appropriate consideration to be given to the economic impact of a regulation. The court distinguished between an impact that prevents entry into the market place and one that only makes success in the market more difficult. Spokane Arcade, 75 F.3d at 666. Only the former, according to Spokane Arcade is an appropriate consideration in a First Amendment challenge. The court upheld the ordinances in question because they "do not deny World Video the opportunity to operate its establishments, but merely (or rather, allegedly) increase the costs of its doing so." Spokane Arcade, 75 F.3d at 667. I find no meaningful distinction between an ordinance that prohibits entry to the market and one that allows entry, but dooms the business to inevitable failure. But assuming such a distinction to exist, here, if the dancers are correct, the ordinance will close the present dance clubs and prevent the opening of new clubs, thus denying the dancers access to the market.

In short, DCR and the dancers have raised issues of material fact as to whether proximity is part of the content of their dance and whether the ordinance will inevitably cause economic failure and, thus, closing of the clubs. They are entitled to a hearing on these issues.

All Citations

92 Wash.App. 660, 964 P.2d 380

End of Document

505 F.3d 996
United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

FANTASYLAND VIDEO, INC., Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
COUNTY OF SAN DIEGO, Defendant–Appellee.
Fantasyland Video, Inc., Plaintiff–Appellant, and Tollis, Inc.; 1560 N. Magnolia Avenue, LLC, Plaintiffs,
v.
County of San Diego, Defendant–Appellee.

Nos. 05–56026, 07–55033.
|
Argued and Submitted July 11, 2007.
|
Submission Withdrawn Aug. 7, 2007.
|
Resubmitted Oct. 5, 2007.
|
Filed Oct. 15, 2007.

Synopsis

Background: Operators of two adult entertainment establishments sued county for declaratory and injunctive relief, alleging that amendments to county ordinances regulating adult entertainment businesses violated their state and federal constitutional rights. The United States District Court for the Southern District of California, Larry A. Burns, J., 373 F.Supp.2d 1094, granted in part and denied in part cross-motions for summary judgment, and denied one operator's motion for relief from judgment. Operators appealed, and, after certifying question, 496 F.3d 1040, the Court of Appeals, 505 F.3d 935, 2007 WL 2937012, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded case in appeal by one operator.

Holdings: Addressing appeal of second operator, the Court of Appeals, Silverman, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] ordinance's hours-of-operation restriction withstood intermediate scrutiny, as required to be valid under California Constitution;

[2] ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths served substantial county interests unrelated to expression;

[3] county established requisite nexus between its ordinance imposing open-door requirement for peep show booths and its interest in curtailing sexual activity at adult entertainment establishments;

[4] open-door requirement for peep show booths was not substantially broader than necessary to curtail targeted sexual activity within such booths; and [5] relief from judgment was not warranted.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Federal Courts
Altering, amending, modifying, or vacating judgment or order;proceedings after judgment

Court of Appeals reviews denial of motion for relief from judgment for an abuse of discretion. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 60(b), 28 U.S.C.A.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

To be valid regulation of adult entertainment businesses under First Amendment, ordinance cannot be a complete ban on protected expression, must be content-neutral or, if content-based with respect to sexual and pornographic speech, must have as its predominate concern secondary effects of such speech in community, and must pass intermediate scrutiny, in that it must serve a substantial government interest, be narrowly tailored to serve that interest, and allow for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

To enact secondary effects ordinance regulating adult entertainment businesses that is valid under First Amendment, municipality must rely on evidence that demonstrates connection between speech regulated and the secondary effects which motivated adoption of ordinance; any material that is reasonably believed to be relevant can be used. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Federal Civil Procedure
Civil rights cases in general

To avoid summary judgment in action asserting free speech challenge to ordinance regulating secondary effects of adult entertainment businesses, after municipality has demonstrated connection between speech regulated and secondary effects motivating adoption of ordinance, plaintiffs must cast direct doubt on municipality's rationale for ordinance, either by demonstrating that municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes municipality's factual findings; such evidence must be actual and convincing, and if plaintiffs are successful, burden shifts back to municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Operator of adult entertainment establishment failed to cast direct doubt on county's rationale for barring operation of adult entertainment businesses between 2:00 and 6:00 a.m., which was to regulate secondary effects of those businesses, including crime, disorderly conduct, traffic, and noise during late-night hours, and therefore ordinance imposing hours-of-operation restriction withstood intermediate scrutiny, as required to be valid under California Constitution's free speech provision, given that county relied on studies and reports, reported court decisions, and anecdotal testimony to establish correlation between adult establishments and targeted secondary effects, and that operator's expert did not rebut county's evidence with regard to noise and traffic. West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 2(a).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

County ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths at adult entertainment establishments served substantial county interests unrelated to expression, as required for ordinance to be valid restriction on speech under First Amendment intermediate scrutiny, inasmuch as ordinance served objectives of reducing instances of prostitution and solicitation at such businesses, preventing certain private sexual acts occurring within booths, including activities constituting lewd conduct under state law, and addressing sanitary concerns raised by rampant masturbation at commercial properties open to the public. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal.Penal Code § 647(a).

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Physical layout and staging requirements

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

County established nexus between its ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths at adult entertainment establishments and its interest in curtailing sexual activity at such establishments, as required for ordinance to be valid restriction on speech under First Amendment intermediate scrutiny, given county's reliance, in enacting ordinance, upon anecdotal reports of sexual activity occurring within peep show booths of other jurisdictions and findings from court decisions pertaining to open-booth ordinances adopted by other municipalities in response to drug use and sexual conduct by booth patrons, and given operator's failure to cast direct doubt on county's conclusions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Booths

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

As required to be valid restriction on speech under First Amendment intermediate scrutiny, county ordinance imposing open-booth requirement for peep show booths at adult entertainment establishments was not substantially broader than necessary to curtail targeted sexual activity within such booths, notwithstanding declaration submitted by establishment operator indicating that peep show patronage generally declined by 60 percent after removal of booth doors, inasmuch as there was no evidence showing that such decline was unconnected to secondary effects being targeted by ordinance, and ordinance, which did not limit content of videos being displayed, number of booths available for viewing videos, or availability of videos, did not restrict protected speech occurring within booths. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Narrow tailoring

Narrow tailoring requirement of intermediate scrutiny of restrictions on speech is satisfied so long as the regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation and the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Federal Civil Procedure

Further evidence or argument

Declaration in which vice president for operator of adult entertainment business indicated that peep show business had declined by 91 percent since operator had begun complying with county ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths was not "newly discovered evidence," since declaration discussed evidence that was not in existence at time of judgment, and thus did not support relief from judgment upholding ordinance under First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 60(b)(2), 28 U.S.C.A.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Federal Civil Procedure

Judgments satisfied, released, or discharged;prospective application no longer equitable

Judgment upholding, under First Amendment, county ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths lacked prospective application, precluding relief from judgment under provision of rule allowing for such relief when it was no longer equitable for judgment to have prospective application. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 60(b)(5), 28 U.S.C.A.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Federal Civil Procedure
Catch-all provisions

Catch-all provision of rule governing motions for relief from judgment is to be used only when extraordinary circumstances prevented a party from taking timely action to prevent or correct an erroneous judgment. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 60(b)(6), 28 U.S.C.A.

12 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Federal Civil Procedure
Catch-all provisions

Relief from judgment upholding, under First Amendment, county ordinance prohibiting doors or other obstructions at entrances to peep show booths was not required, pursuant to catch-all provision of rule governing motions for relief from judgment, to prevent manifest injustice or due to extraordinary circumstances which prevented operator of adult entertainment establishment from taking timely action to prevent or correct erroneous judgment, notwithstanding declaration in which operator's vice president indicated that peep show business had declined by 91 percent since operator had begun complying with ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 60(b)(6), 28 U.S.C.A.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

999 Clyde DeWitt, Weston, Garrou, DeWitt, & Walters, Los Angeles, CA, for plaintiff-appellant.

Thomas D. Bunton and John J. Sansone, County Counsel, San Diego, CA, for the defendant-appellee.

Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, TN, for the amicus.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of California; Larry A. Burns, District Judge, Presiding. D.C. No. CV–02–01909–LAB.

Before: BARRY G. SILVERMAN, W. FLETCHER, and RICHARD R. CLIFTON, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

SILVERMAN, Circuit Judge:

In June 2002, the San Diego County Board of Supervisors adopted a comprehensive zoning ordinance to govern the operation of adult entertainment businesses within its jurisdiction, which covers the unincorporated portions of the county. The ordinance restricts the hours in which such businesses can operate, requires the removal of doors on peep show booths, and limits adult entertainment establishment to areas of the county zoned for industrial use. San Diego County's stated rationale for the ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects—crime, disorderly conduct, blight, noise, traffic, property value depreciation, and unsanitary behavior—that concentrate in and around adult businesses.

The two adult entertainment establishments presently operating in the unincorporated portions of San Diego County filed suit. (The City of San Diego and the other incorporated municipalities in the County are not governed by this ordinance.) In this appeal, the operator of one of the establishments, Fantasyland Video, Inc., appeals the district court's decision to uphold the ordinance's hours restriction and open-booth requirement. In its briefing to us, Fantasyland also contended that the hours of operation restriction violated both the First Amendment and the California Constitution. After oral argument, we certified to the California Supreme Court the question of what the proper standard of review is under the California Constitution. Fantasyland Video, Inc. v. County of San Diego, 496 F.3d 1040, 1041 (9th Cir.2007). The California Supreme Court responded that hours-of-operation ordinances for adult businesses are subject to intermediate scrutiny. Fantaemail received-Thank yousyland Video, Inc. v. County of San Diego, No. 05–56026, S155408 (Cal. Sept. 25, 2007) (order denying request to decide a question of California law). In the meantime, Fantasyland advised us of its decision to withdraw its claim that the hours of operation restriction violates the First Amendment, while retaining its claim under the California Constitution. The federal issue has thus been taken off the table regarding the hours restriction, but it remains a basis for the challenge to the open-booth requirement.

We affirm the district court's decision to uphold the ordinance's hours-of-operation restriction as surviving intermediate scrutiny under the California Constitution. 1000 Fantasyland fails to cast direct doubt on the County's rationale for the hours restriction. With respect to the open-booth requirement, we affirm the district court's ruling that the County's requirement of open booths at peep shows does not violate the First Amendment. Similar to the ordinances in other cases upholding open-booth requirements, the County's open-booth ordinance is supported by evidence of the nexus between closed booths and adverse secondary effects such as prostitution and pandering, matters in which the County has a substantial interest in regulating. Further, the ordinance is narrowly tailored. The content, number, and availability of peep shows are untouched; the ordinance deals only with the doors. We further reject Fantasyland's argument that the provision is invalid under Justice Kennedy's concurring opinion in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). That concurrence is not applicable to open-booth requirements.

I. Background

In June 2002, citing to concerns about the surrounding neighborhood, the County Board of Supervisors adopted a comprehensive set of regulations and licensing procedures governing adult entertainment establishments within its jurisdiction. Among these regulations, the County prohibited any "door, curtain, or obstruction of any kind [to] be installed within the entrance to a peep show booth." San Diego County, Cal., Ordinance No. 9479, § 21.1816 (June 19, 2002). In addition, the County made it unlawful "for any owner, operator, manager or employee of an adult entertainment establishment to remain open for business between the hours of 2:00 a.m. and 6:00 a.m. of any day excepting herefrom an adult hotel/ motel." San Diego County Ordinance No. 9479, § 21.1809. The ordinance took effect the following month.

Fantasyland operates an adult arcade, bookstore, novelty shop, and video store. It initiated federal and state constitutional challenges against the new ordinance, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

The district court granted summary judgment to the County, upholding the ordinance's requirement that adult establishments close between the hours of 2:00 a.m. and 6:00 a.m. and its restriction on doors at the entranceway to private peep show booths.[1] See Fantasyland Video, Inc. v. County of San Diego, 373 F.Supp.2d 1094, 1106–1116(S.D.Cal.2005). Later, Fantasyland filed a Rule 60(b) motion for relief from judgment, which the district court denied.

1 The other adult establishment in the unincorporated portion of the County, Déjà Vu, appealed the district court's judgment on other grounds not relevant to this appeal. Tollis Inc. v. County of San Diego, 505 F.3d 935, No. 05–56300, 2007 WL 2937012 (9th Cir. Oct. 2, 2007).

These timely appeals followed.

II. Jurisdiction

The district court had subject matter jurisdiction over Fantasyland's constitutional claims under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1343(a), and over its state claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a). We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

III. Standard of Review

[1] We review de novo the district court's grant of summary judgment and, viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, determine whether there are any genuine issues of material fact for trial. See 1001 Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 395 F.3d 1114, 1122 (9th Cir.2005). We review the district court's denial of Fantasyland's Rule 60(b) motion for an abuse of discretion. See United States v. Asarco, Inc., 430 F.3d 972, 978 (9th Cir.2005).

IV. Discussion

[2] The constitutionality of the challenged provisions is governed by the framework announced in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and refined in the plurality opinion of Alameda Books, 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670. As recounted by Center for Fair Public Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir.2003), the Renton inquiry proceeds in three steps: First, the ordinance cannot be a complete ban on the protected expression. Id. at 1159. Second, the ordinance must be content-neutral or, if content-based with respect to sexual and pornographic speech, its predominate concern must be the secondary effects of such speech in the community. Id. at 1159, 1161. Third, the regulation must pass intermediate scrutiny. It must serve a substantial government interest, be narrowly tailored to serve that interest, and allow for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. Id. at 1159.

[3] With respect to this third step, the Supreme Court has adopted a specialized burden-shifting framework. When enacting a secondary effects ordinance, the municipality must rely on evidence that "demonstrate[s] a connection between the speech regulated ... and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality). Any material that is "reasonably believed to be relevant" can be used. Id. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728(quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925).

[4] To avoid summary judgment, the plaintiffs must then "cast direct doubt on [the municipality's] rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings." Id. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Such evidence must be "actual and convincing." Id. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. If successful, "the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Id.

A. Hours–of–Operation Restriction

[5] Fantasyland argues that the hours-of-operation restriction should be invalidated under the California Constitution based on People v. Glaze, 27 Cal.3d 841, 166 Cal.Rptr. 859, 614 P.2d 291 (1980), which struck down a similar hours-of-operation restriction under a test that was stricter than what the First Amendment requires. Indeed, as noted above, Fantasyland formally dropped its claim against this provision under the First Amendment and limited its challenge to the California Constitution. However, the California Supreme Court indicated in its response to our certified question that hours-of-operation restrictions are reviewed under intermediate scrutiny as applied by the United States Supreme Court. See Fantasyland Video, Inc. v. County of San Diego, No. 05–56026, S155408 (Cal. Sept. 25, 2007) (order denying request to decide a question of California law). That is the same standard identified in Renton, and the response to our certified question, including its citations to Los Angeles Alliance for Survival v. City of Los Angeles, 22 Cal.4th 352, 357, 364, 93 Cal.Rptr.2d 1, 993 P.2d 334 (2000); City of National City v. Wiener, 3 Cal.4th 832, 841–43, 12 Cal.Rptr.2d 701, 838 P.2d 223 (1992); and 1002 People v. Superior Court (Lucero), 49 Cal.3d 14, 26, 259 Cal.Rptr. 740, 774 P.2d 769 (1989), suggests to us that the standard under the California Constitution is the same in this situation as that applied by the United States Supreme Court in Renton. Under Renton, Fantasyland failed to supply sufficient evidence to "cast direct doubt" on the County's asserted secondary-effects rationale. We conclude that the challenge under the California Constitution fails for the same reason.

At the legislative stage, the County relied on studies and reports, reported court decisions, and anecdotal testimony to establish a correlation between adult establishments and negative secondary effects. [2] Based on this evidence, the County could reasonably infer that restricting the hours of operations for adult businesses would have the purpose and effect of reducing crime, disorderly conduct, traffic, and noise during late-night hours. Fantasyland's attempt to cast doubt on the County's conclusions fails as a matter of law because its expert, Daniel Linz, Ph.D., a professor in the Department of Communication's Law and Society Program at the University of California Santa Barbara, did not rebut the County's evidence with regard to noise and traffic. The evidence presented by Dr. Linz addressed only late night crime and property values. The County considered these factors, but its purported rationale for requiring adult businesses to close from 2:00am to 6:00am also included combating increased noise and traffic. Fantasyland's failure to address these considerations is fatal under the second step of the Renton intermediate scrutiny analysis. See Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. With regard to noise and traffic, Fantasyland failed as a matter of law "to cast direct doubt on [the County's] rationale ... by demonstrating that the [County's] evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes [its] factual findings." Id. Thus, the County's hours-of-operation ordinance withstands intermediate scrutiny and Fantasyland's challenge under the California Constitution fails.

2 Fantasyland conceded that this evidence satisfied the County's initial evidentiary burden. See Fantasyland, 373 F.Supp.2d at 1107.

B. Open–Booth Requirement

Fantasyland argues that San Diego County Ordinance No. 9479 is invalid under several facets of Renton intermediate scrutiny and under Justice Kennedy's concurring opinion in Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 444–53, 122 S.Ct. 1728. [3] Fantasyland alleged that the ordinance violated both the First Amendment and the California Constitution.

[3] Justice Kennedy did not join the plurality opinion in Alameda Books. As "his concurrence is the narrowest opinion joining in the judgment of the Court," it is the controlling opinion. Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1161.

We have previously upheld open-booth requirements similar to the one adopted by the County. Spokane Arcade, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 75 F.3d 663 (9th Cir.1996); Ellwest Stereo Theatres, Inc. v. Wenner, 681 F.2d 1243 (9th Cir.1982). In both Spokane Arcade and Ellwest we found that the open-booth requirements were narrowly tailored to a substantial interest. See Spokane Arcade, 75 F.3d at 666–67; Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1246–47. Other circuits have also upheld such ordinances, concluding that the alternatives would less effectively serve the municipality's substantial interest in deterring sexual activity in peep-show booths. See Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 1003–04 (7th Cir.2002); Mitchell 1003 v. Comm'n on Adult Entm't Establishments, 10 F.3d 123, 141–44 (3d Cir.1993); Bamon Corp. v. City of Dayton, 923 F.2d 470, 473–74 (6th Cir.1991); Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 898 F.2d 612, 617–19 (8th Cir.1990); Wall Distributors, Inc. v. City of Newport News, 782 F.2d 1165, 1169–70(4th Cir.1986).

1. Renton Analysis

a. Substantial interest unrelated to expression

[6] Fantasyland first contends that the County has no substantial governmental interest under Renton in preventing private sexual conduct within an enclosed booth. We disagree.

The conduct at issue is not private at all. It is occurring at a retail establishment. The "curtailing [of] public sexual criminal offenses" is a significant state interest. Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1246. The County's objective in reducing instances of prostitution and solicitation at businesses that operate peep show booths is valid. Furthermore, the County has a substantial interest in preventing certain private sexual acts occurring within peep show booths, notably the use of so-called "glory holes"—the placement of a peep show patron's genitals through holes or gaps in the wall partition between the booths. Such activities constitute lewd conduct under California Penal Code § 647(a). See People v. Rylaarsdam, 181 Cal.Rptr. 723, 727–28 (App. Dep't Super. Ct.1982).

Moreover, there is no requirement under Renton that the asserted secondary effects be criminal. See, e.g., Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166(reducing late night noise and traffic). One may therefore accept Fantasyland's proposition that masturbation in a fully-enclosed booth is legal in California and still find a substantial governmental interest in curtailing the activity. Rampant masturbation at a commercial property open to the public may rationally trigger sanitation concerns and impair the right of other patrons to view their materials or read the accompanying articles in peace. See Deluxe Theater & Bookstore, Inc. v. City of San Diego, 175 Cal.App.3d 980, 221 Cal.Rptr. 100, 102 (Ct.App.1985) (finding that city had an interest in regulating peep show booths due to the potential for unlawful, offensive, and unsanitary behavior).

b. Nexus between the speech and secondary effects

[7] Fantasyland next suggests that the County failed to show a nexus between the peep show booths and its interest in curtailing sexual activity.

When enacting the open-booth requirement, the County Board of Supervisors referenced anecdotal reports of sexual activity occurring within peep show booths of other jurisdictions. The County also incorporated the findings from Spokane Arcade, 75 F.3d at 664–65, and Deluxe Theater & Bookstore, 221 Cal.Rptr. at 102, where municipalities enacted open-booth ordinances in response to drug use and sexual conduct by booth patrons. Reliance on the experiences of other jurisdictions is sufficient to satisfy the County's minimal burden at the legislative stage. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 50–52, 106 S.Ct. 925.

To avoid summary judgment, Fantasyland must produce contrary evidence that casts direct doubt on the County's conclusions. It offered the lone declaration of John M. Goldenring, a medical doctor and public health expert. In his declaration, Dr. Goldenring stated that infection from sexually transmitted diseases could only occur through sexual contact, and not through seminal fluid left on the surfaces of the peep show booths.

1004 The district court correctly found that Dr. Goldenring's declaration was insufficient as a matter of law. See Fantasyland, 373 F.Supp.2d at 1114–15. The County did not adopt the open-booth requirement to curtail the transmission of disease through bodily fluids left in the booths. Rather, it enacted the requirement to reduce the instances of sexual activity, solicitation, and pandering occurring within those spaces. Nothing in Dr. Goldenring's declaration challenges the County's evidentiary conclusions regarding the prevalence of those activities. [4]

4 Fantasyland also references the declaration of its vice president, who speculated that the open-booth requirement would facilitate contact between customers "culminating in relatively anonymous sexual encounters after they leave the business" (emphasis added). This declaration does nothing to cast doubt on the County's rationale to curb sexual activity occurring inside the business.

c. Narrowly tailored

[8] Finally, Fantasyland suggests that there are far less drastic means of accomplishing the County's stated objective. They include reducing the size of the booth, requiring that there be a space between the floor and the bottom of the door to allow verification that only one person is in the booth, and monitoring the spaces around the booths.

[9] The issue is not whether Fantasyland can posit less restrictive alternatives. The narrow tailoring requirement "is satisfied 'so long as the ... regulation promotes a substantial government interest that would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation' " and "the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest." Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799–800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (citation omitted, omission in original).

Fantasyland has not shown that the open-booth requirement is substantially broader than necessary to curtail the targeted sexual activity. It did present a declaration that peep show patronage generally declines by 60% after removal of the doors. However, such decline in business, standing alone, is not determinative.

Fantasyland has not produced any evidence showing that the decline was unconnected to the County's asserted secondary effects—i.e., that the 60% were there just to watch the movie. See Ellwest, 681 F.2d at 1247(finding nothing in the record to substantiate plaintiff's "suggestion that, because of the open booth requirement, potential viewers forgo their right to watch films of their choice").

Furthermore, the ordinance does not restrict protected speech occurring in the booths. The ordinance does not in any way limit the content of the videos, the number of booths available for viewing the videos, or the availability of the videos. The videos are as available as ever.

2. Justice Kennedy's Alameda Books Concurrence

To justify a content-based zoning ordinance that restricts sexual and pornographic speech, Justice Kennedy wrote in Alameda Books that "a city must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." 535 U.S. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The city must have some basis to think that its ordinance will suppress secondary effects, but not also the speech associated with those effects. Id. at 449–50, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

1005 We have said that Justice Kennedy's concurrence did nothing "to precipitate a sea change in this particular corner of First Amendment law." Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1162. Furthermore, we determined that his proportionality language was designed for "a classic erogenous zoning ordinance whereby the city was restricting certain land uses," and that it was never intended to apply to an hours-of-operation ordinance. Id. at 1163(noting that the proportionality analysis, if applied to a time restriction, would invalidate all such laws).

We now hold that Justice Kennedy's concurrence is also inapplicable to an open-booth requirement. Under the County's rationale, the patron watching a private peep show often seeks to masturbate, solicit sexual acts, or engage in sexual acts while in the booth. Any regulation that deters these activities will necessarily make the forum for the speech less attractive, but only because the speech and sexual acts originate with the same person and occur at the same time. The overall quantity of the protected expression must be reduced, but only because the patron is chilled from also contemporaneously engaging in the unprotected behavior. Justice Kennedy's proportionality language was not designed for situations where the protected speech and the unprotected conduct merge in the same forum.

Fantasyland is of course entitled to cast doubt on the County's reasoning. It could attempt to prove an absence of the asserted unlawful or illicit sexual activity in the booths, thereby defeating the County's inference of correlation between the speech at issue and the secondary effects. Alternatively, Fantasyland could produce evidence that the open-booth requirement does little to deter the sexual activity while, at the same time, substantially chills the protected speech. It has done neither here.

The County's open-booth requirement is valid under prevailing Ninth Circuit authority and nothing in Alameda Books undermines that conclusion. As a result, the district court correctly granted summary judgment to the County on this claim.

C. Rule 60(b) Appeal

On June 16, 2006, Fantasyland filed a motion for relief from the district court's judgment pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b). The motion referenced a declaration by Fantasyland's vice president stating that peep show business had declined by 91% since Fantasyland began complying with the County's open-booth restriction.

[10] [11] There was no abuse of discretion in the district court's decision to deny the motion. The declaration is not "newly discovered evidence" under Rule 60(b)(2) because it discusses evidence that was not in existence at the time of the judgment. See Corex Corp. v. United States, 638 F.2d 119, 121 (9th Cir.1981). Further, the district court's judgment did not have any prospective application, thereby precluding relief under Rule 60(b)(5). See Maraziti v. Thorpe, 52 F.3d 252, 254 (9th Cir.1995).

[12] [13] Finally, Rule 60(b)(6)'s catch-all provision is unavailable. This rule "has been used sparingly as an equitable remedy to prevent manifest injustice" and "is to be utilized only where extraordinary circumstances prevented a party from taking timely action to prevent or correct an erroneous judgment." United States v. Alpine Land & Reservoir Co., 984 F.2d 1047, 1049 (9th Cir.1993). That standard has not been satisfied.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

505 F.3d 996, 07 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 12,216, 2007 Daily Journal D.A.R. 15,758

End of Document

98 S.Ct. 1635
Supreme Court of the United States

William M. SEWELL
v.
State of GEORGIA

No. 76-1738
|
April 24, 1978

On appeal from the Supreme Court of Georgia.

Facts and opinion, 238 Ga. 495, 233 S.E.2d 187.

Appellant, William M. Sewell, appeals from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Georgia which affirmed his conviction on a one-count accusation framed under the Georgia obscenity statute, Ga.Code § 26-2101 (1975). In July 1975, a police officer bought a magazine, "Hot and Sultry," and a device said to be an "artificial vagina," from appellant, an employee of the Stewart Avenue Adult Book Store. Shortly after this sale, the officer, joined by two others, entered the store, arrested appellant, and seized various vibrators, rubber devices shaped like penises, and other items alleged to be devices for sexual stimulation. After attempting unsuccessfully to have the seized material suppressed, appellant was convicted by a jury of selling the magazine and artificial vagina and of possessing the other material and was sentenced to 12 months in jail and a fine of $4,000.

Opinion

The appeal is dismissed for want of a substantial federal question.

*1636 Mr. Justice BRENNAN, with whom Mr. Justice MARSHALL joins, dissenting.

Georgia Code § 26-2101(a) provides that "A person commits the offense of distributing obscene materials when he sells . . . or otherwise disseminates to any person any obscene material of any description, knowing the obscene nature thereof, or offers to do so, or possesses such material with the intent to do so, provided that the word 'knowing,' as used herein, shall be deemed to be either actual or constructive knowledge of the obscene contents of the subject matter, and a person has constructive knowledge of the obscene contents if he has knowledge of facts which would put a reasonable and prudent person on notice as to the suspect nature of the material."

Sections 26-2101(b) through 26-2101(d) define the term "obscene materials" used in § 26-2101(a). Section 26-2101(b) covers published material alleged to be obscene and generally tracks the guidelines set out in Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973). Section 26-2101(c) states that, in addition to material covered in subsection (b), "any device designed or marketed as useful primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs is obscene material under this section."

The jury was instructed that it should determine the obscenity 984 of "Hot and Sultry" under the standards set out in §§ 26-2101(a) and 2101(b) and that the sale of the artificial vagina and the possession of the other material should be considered under §§ 26-2101(a) and 26-2101(c). The trial judge further charged the jury on the meaning of "knowing" in the words set out in § 26-2101(a). A general verdict of guilty was returned.

In this Court, appellant raises constitutional objections to a number of features of § 26-2101. First, he argues that an obscenity statute which defines scienter in a manner which authorizes obscenity convictions on mere "constructive" knowledge impermissibly chills the dissemination of materials protected under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Jurisdictional Statement 3. Second, he argues that there is no rational basis for § 26-2101(c) and, in addition, that it is unconstitutionally vague. Id., at 3, 9-10. Third, appellant contends that "Hot and Sultry" is not obscene as a matter of law. Id., at 3. And, finally, appellant challenges the warrantless mass seizure of the sexual devices on First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendment grounds. Id., at 3, 17.

This is an appeal and I cannot agree with the Court that the first and second questions presented can be dismissed as not presenting substantial federal questions. [1]

[1] Although I agree with my Brother STEWART, post, at 1639, that § 26-2101 is unconstitutional as applied to the magazine involved in this case, I recognize that a majority of this Court does not agree with this view and, accordingly, I would hear argument on the scienter issue.

1637 I

In Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 98 S.Ct. 1029, 55 L.Ed.2d 234 (1978), we granted certiorari to consider, but did not reach, the precise scienter issue now raised by appellant. See Pet. for Cert. in Ballew v. Georgia, O.T.1977, No. 76-761, p. 2. I see no basis for concluding that a federal constitutional question sufficiently substantial *985 to be granted review on certiorari is now so insubstantial as not to require exercise of our mandatory appellate jurisdiction in this case. Moreover, even if others do not agree that the void-for-vagueness issue is substantial, the fact that appellant might have been convicted for sale or possession of the seized devices is irrelevant to consideration of the obscenity issue. As we said in Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 367-368, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 (1931):

"The verdict against the appellant was a general one. It did not specify the ground upon which it rested. . . . [I]t is impossible to say under which clause of the statute the conviction was obtained. . . . It follows that instead of its being permissible to hold, with the state court, that the verdict could be sustained if any one of the clauses of the statute were found to be valid, the necessary conclusion from the manner in which the case was sent to the jury is that, if any of the clauses in question is invalid under the Federal Constitution, the conviction cannot be upheld."

See also Bachellar v. Maryland, 397 U.S. 564, 90 S.Ct. 1312, 25 L.Ed.2d 570 (1970).

II

Appellant's second argument, that § 26-2101(c) is void for vagueness, also raises a substantial federal question-one of first impression in this Court-even though appellant fundamentally misapprehends the reach of the First Amendment in his argument that the protections of that Amendment extend to the sexual devices involved in this case. [2] As we said in Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972):

[2] Even if devices might in some circumstances be protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments, this is not the case here since no claim is made that the devices are in any way expressive or that their possession and sale is in any way related to appellant's right to speak.

"It is a basic principle of due process that an enactment *986 is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined. Vague laws offend several important values. First, because we assume that man is free to steer between lawful and unlawful conduct, we insist that laws give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly. Vague laws may trap the innocent by not providing fair warning. Second, if arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement is to be prevented, laws must provide explicit standards for those who apply them. A vague law impermissibly delegates basic policy matters to policemen, judges, and juries for resolution on an ad hoc and subjective basis, with the attendant dangers of arbitrary and discriminatory application." (Footnotes omitted.)

See also Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156, 92 S.Ct. 839, 31 L.Ed.2d 110 (1972); Cline v. Frink Dairy Co., 274 U.S. 445, 47 S.Ct. 681, 71 L.Ed. 1146 (1927); Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385, 46 S.Ct. 126, 70 L.Ed. 322 (1926).

Section 26-2101(c) at least arguably offends both principles enunciated in 1638 Grayned. Even conceding that a jury could properly infer from the shapes of the seized devices that some could be used for sexual stimulation, the fact that some people might use the devices for that purpose scarcely suffices to show that they are designed or marketed primarily for sexual stimulation. As one commentator has noted, statutes couched in such terms of "judgment and degree" contain seeds of "inherent discontrol" over the law enforcement process and have been "virtually [the] exclusive target of void-for-vagueness nullification." Note, The Void-for-Vagueness Doctrine in the Supreme Court, 109 U.Pa.L.Rev. 67, 92-93 (1960). Moreover, "it is in this realm, where the equilibrium between the individual's claims of freedom and society's demands upon him is left to be struck ad hoc on the basis of a subjective evaluation, . . . that there exists the risk of continuing irregularity *987 with which the vagueness cases have been concerned." Id., at 93. [3]

[3] Moreover, the facial vagueness of § 26-2101(c) is enhanced by its interpretation by law enforcement personnel. Although § 26-2101(c) by its terms applies only to devices that are "designed or marketed > as useful primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs," the accusation against appellant nonetheless charged appellant with possession of "3 anal stimulators." Clark's Transcript, at 3. So far as I know, no dictionary includes the human anus among the genital organs. See also Balthazar v. Superior Court, 573 F.2d 698 (CA1 1978). The packaging of another item states quite clearly on the back that the item is a "doggy dong." Whether this item, in the shape of a rubber candlestick, is to be used with dogs or humans-or simply as a "novelty," for whatever ribald humor it may give rise to-it is impossible to discover how appellant or a jury could conclude that this item is primarily used for stimulation of human genitals.

In addition, although vague statutes may be saved from constitutional infirmity if they require specific intent as an element of an offense, see Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, supra, 405 U.S. at 163, 92 S.Ct. 839, the constructive scienter requirement of § 26-2101(a), at least as applied in appellant's trial, provides no reasonable assurance that persons will know or ought to know when they are likely to violate § 26-2101(c).

The record here is very clear: Appellant was convicted solely on the basis of the guesses and assumptions of the single witness at trial-a policeman who had never used the devices, Reporter's Transcript, at 24, never seen them used, id., at 25, and who knew of no one who used them for sexual stimulation, id., at 26-that the seized devices were used primarily for the stimulation of human genitals. See id., at 22, 24. In explaining how he had reached his guesses and assumptions notwithstanding a total lack of personal familiarity with the seized devices, that witness stated that he had seen, in the course of his investigations, "newspapers that are printed and catalogs that are sent out to different people pertaining to these things." Id., at 32. No catalogs were introduced into evidence and no evidence was given to show that the unidentified 988 catalogs would likely have been sent to appellant. Thus, how the proverbial "reasonable man," or even a "reasonable clerk in an adult book store," would have been put on notice of the primary use to which the seized devices would be put is simply not apparent.

It is therefore hard to imagine a more stark prima facie case of a "vague law [which] impermissibly delegates basic policy matters to policemen, judges, and juries for resolution on an ad hoc and subjective basis." Grayned v. City of Rockford, supra, 408 U.S. at 108, 92 S.Ct. 2294. In a society where the rule of law is paramount, it simply will not do to allow persons, however *1639 ignoble their trade-or perhaps because their trade is ignoble, cf. Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, supra -to be convicted of crimes solely because policemen and juries, encouraged by the State can conjure up scenes of sexual stimulation in which devices play a major role.

For the reasons set out above, I would set this case for argument.

Mr. Justice STEWART, dissenting.

The appellant stands convicted of the single crime of distributing obscene material in violation of Ga.Criminal Code § 26-2101. Cf. Robinson v. State, 143 Ga.App. 37, 237 S.E.2d 436, 438, vacated and remanded on other grounds, post. The one-count indictment charged that he had sold both sexual devices, alleged to be obscene material as defined in § 26-2101(c), and a magazine, alleged to be obscene under the definition in § 26-2101(b).

While the appellant does not claim that the definition of obscenity in subsection (b) is unconstitutional, he does ask this Court to examine the magazine in question and to determine that it is constitutionally protected as a matter of law. I continue to believe that "at least in the absence of distribution to juveniles or obtrusive exposure to unconsenting adults, the First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the state and 989 federal governments from attempting wholly to suppress sexually oriented materials on the basis of their allegedly 'obscene' contents." Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 113, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 37 L.Ed.2d 446 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). I therefore believe that the appellant's conviction cannot constitutionally rest on the sale of an allegedly obscene magazine.

Because it cannot be determined that the jury in this case did not convict the appellant on the basis of the magazine sale alone, I would reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of Georgia. [*] See Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 368, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117.

[*] Like my Brother BRENNAN, ante, at 1637 n. 1, I recognize that a majority of the Court does not share this view, and since I also agree with Part I of his dissenting opinion, I would alternatively note probable jurisdiction and hear argument in this case on the scienter issue, if three other Members of the Court were like-minded.

All Citations

435 U.S. 982, 98 S.Ct. 1635 (Mem), 56 L.Ed.2d 76, 3 Media L. Rep. 2161

238 Wis.2d 842
Unpublished Disposition
See Rules of Appellate Procedure, Rule 809.23(3), regarding citation of unpublished opinions. Unpublished opinions issued before July 1, 2009, are of no precedential value and may not be cited except in limited instances. Unpublished opinions issued on or after July 1, 2009 may be cited for persuasive value.
NOTE: THIS OPINION WILL NOT APPEAR IN A PRINTED VOLUME. THE DISPOSITION WILL APPEAR IN A REPORTER TABLE.
Court of Appeals of Wisconsin.

EAST OF THE RIVER ENTERPRISES II, L.L.C., Plaintiff-Appellant, Melissa Soman and Donald Busch, Plaintiffs,
v.
CITY OF HUDSON, Defendant-Respondent.

No. 99-2667.
|
Aug. 1, 2000.

Appeal from a judgment of the circuit court for St. Croix County: Eric J. Lundell, Judge. Affirmed.

Before CANE, C.J., HOOVER, P.J., AND PETERSON, J.

Opinion

PER CURIAM.

1 East of the River Enterprises II(ERE) appeals a declaratory judgment rejecting its First Amendment challenge to a city ordinance that regulates sexually oriented businesses. ERE operates Centerfolds Cabaret, a business featuring live nude dance entertainment. The ordinance prohibits physical contact between the dancers and patrons, requires all performances to occur on a stage or table at least eighteen inches above floor level, creates a five-foot buffer zone between the dancers and patrons, and restricts the operating hours, requiring the cabaret to close at 2 a.m. on week days, 2:30 a.m. on Saturdays and Sundays.

¶ 2 ERE argues that (1) no contact and five-foot buffer regulations constitute content-based censorship; (2) even if the regulations were content-neutral, they constitute an unlawful prior restraint on freedom of expression because they would have the effect of totally suppressing a distinct medium of communication; (3) the regulations are not narrowly tailored to prevent adverse secondary effects; and (4) the hours of restriction cannot be justified as content-neutral time, place and manner regulations under the First Amendment. We reject these arguments and affirm the judgment.

¶ 3 After the parties submitted their briefs in this appeal, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision in City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000), reiterating and clarifying First Amendment principles as they apply to nude entertainment. The Court upheld an ordinance prohibiting public nudity, the effect of which was to require exotic dancers to wear, at a minimum, pasties and a G-string. The Court reiterated that nude dancing is expressive conduct that falls only within the "outer ambit" of the First Amendment's protection. See id. at 1391. To determine the level of scrutiny that applies to an ordinance, the courts must consider whether the regulation relates to the suppression of expression. See id. If the governmental purpose is unrelated to the suppression of expression, such as combating negative secondary effects, the regulation need only satisfy the less stringent standard set out in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968).[1] See id. Even if the regulation has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting a portion of the expression, the regulation is not deemed unconstitutional if it has merely a de minimis or incidental effect. See id. at 1393-94.

1 The four-factor test set out in O'Brien requires that: (1) the regulation is within the constitutional power of the government to enact, such as protecting public health or safety and deterring crime; (2) the regulation must further an important or substantial government interest, although the municipality need not conduct new studies or produce independent evidence to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects and is allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions; (3) the government interest must be unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) the restriction must be no greater than is essential to further the governmental interest. See City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 120 S.Ct. at 1394-97.

¶4 The City of Hudson's ordinance does not prohibit nude dancing or any expression of eroticism arising from the dance. Therefore, it is deemed a content-neutral regulation measured by intermediate scrutiny, and subject to the traditional time, place and manner doctrine. See Turner Broadcasting System v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622, 642, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994).

¶ 5 The ordinance satisfies the O'Brien test. Its stated intent and the City's legislative findings show that the ordinance is aimed at the undesirable secondary effects of sexually oriented business, particularly crime, decreased property values and public health risks. The City has the constitutional power to pass ordinances that relate to these traditional police powers. See Erie, 120 S.Ct. at 1386. The regulation furthers the City's interest in combatting crime. [2] It is supported by numerous studies that establish undesirable secondary effects that arise from the nude dancing industry. Affidavits of police officers presented to the city counsel establish that contact between the dancers and patrons during the performance entailed either acts of prostitution or sexual assault. Requiring a five-foot buffer assists law enforcement in determining whether the dancer or the patron initiated the contact. See DLS Inc. v. City of Chattanooga, 107 F.3d 403, 411 (6th Cir.1997). Further, maintaining a five-foot buffer only minimally interferes with any expression or communication. The no touching and five-foot buffer restrictions do not have the effect of banning individual, patron-focused exotic dance. Therefore, the ordinance is sufficiently narrowly tailored to achieve the municipality's legitimate interest in preventing crime.

2 Because the ordinance furthers the government's interest in combatting crime, we need not review its other stated intentions of protecting property values and promoting public health.

2 ¶ 6 The restrictions on the cabaret's operating hours do not infringe on ERE's First Amendment rights. Similar and more restrictive restrictions have been upheld in numerous other cases. See, e.g., Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nicols, 137 F.3d 435 (6th Cir.1998); Star Satellite, Inc. v. City of Biloxi, 779 F.2d 1074 (5th Cir.1986); Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 26 F.Supp.2d 1128 (W.D.Wis.1998). Restricting the hours of operation can promote public safety by permitting local law enforcement to focus its limited resources on other matters. See Schultz, 26 F.Supp.2d at 1145. Operating hours may be restricted during times when people are generally sleeping and when peaceful enjoyment of the home is most important. See Tee & Bee, Inc. v. City of West Allis, 936 F.Supp. 1479, 1492 (E.D.Wis.1996).

¶ 7 ERE argues that all of the restrictions have the effect of destroying its business and excluding nude dancing in the city. The test for determining whether a sexually oriented business's First Amendment rights are threatened is whether the City has effectively denied the business a reasonable opportunity to open and operate within the city. See City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 54, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Patron-focused erotic performances are allowed in the City of Hudson 127 hours per week. The City is not obligated to design its attack on the secondary effects of nude entertainment in a manner that insures the business's economic viability. See id.

By the Court.-Judgment affirmed.

3 This opinion will not be published. See WIS. STAT. RULE 809.23(1)(b) 5.

All Citations

238 Wis.2d 842, 618 N.W.2d 274 (Table), 2000 WL 1116372, 2000 WI App 214

End of Document

Amended on Denial of Rehearing by Gammoh v. City of La Habra, 9th Cir.(Cal.), April 1, 2005

395 F.3d 1114
United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

Bill Badi GAMMOH, dba Taboo Theater aka Pelican Theater; Leslie West; Armine Michelle Bedrosian; Christine Johanna Fener; Charbonesse Garrett; Heather Eloise Elam; Stacy Joy Andre; Meghann Lara Ann Onselen, Plaintiffs–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF LA HABRA, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 04–56072.
|
Argued and Submitted Nov. 1, 2004.
|
Filed Jan. 26, 2005.

Synopsis

Background: Owner of adult entertainment club and dancer-employees brought action challenging constitutionality of city ordinance that required adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances. The United States District Court for the Central District of California, Gary L. Taylor, J., dismissed certain claims, and granted summary judgment in favor of city on others. Plaintiffs appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Tallman, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] ordinance was not void for vagueness;

[2] ordinance was not overbroad;

[3] plaintiffs failed to demonstrate that ordinance violated Takings Clause;

[4] ordinance was not complete ban on protected expression;

[5] ordinance regulated expression that was sexual or pornographic in nature, as would support application of the intermediate scrutiny standard, for purpose of First Amendment challenge;

[6] secondary effects of adult cabarets were city's primary concern in enacting ordinance, as would support application of the intermediate scrutiny standard;

[7] ordinance was narrowly tailored to serve substantial government interest of preventing secondary effects of adult businesses; and

[8] ordinance did not violate First Amendment guarantee of freedom of expression.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (22)

[1] Federal Courts
Statutes, regulations, and ordinances, questions concerning in general

Court of Appeals reviews the district court's ruling on the constitutionality of a city ordinance de novo.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Rules and regulations

To survive a vagueness challenge, a regulation must define the criminal offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Vagueness in General

Constitutional Law
Ordinances

A greater degree of specificity and clarity is required in the language of a municipal ordinance when First Amendment rights are at stake than would otherwise be required to survive a vagueness challenge. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, and defining "adult cabaret dancer" as a dancer performing at an adult cabaret, who was sexually-oriented dancer, exotic dancer, stripper, or similar dancer, who focused the performance on or emphasized the dancer's breasts, genitals, or buttocks, on a regular and substantial basis, was not void for vagueness; although some terms were subjective, the definition used a combination of terms, which provided sufficient clarity, to give dancers notice as to who qualified as an "adult cabaret dancer," for purpose of determining application of the two-foot rule.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, and defining "adult cabaret dancer" as a dancer performing at an adult cabaret, who was sexually-oriented dancer, exotic dancer, stripper, or similar dancer, who focused the performance on or emphasized the dancer's breasts, genitals, or buttocks, on a regular and substantial basis, was not overbroad; performances occurring outside of an adult cabaret or that did not have a sexual emphasis were unaffected by ordinance, and there was no realistic danger that ordinance would significantly compromise rights protected under the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Statutes in general

The mere fact that one can conceive of some impermissible applications of a statute is not sufficient to render it susceptible to an overbreadth challenge.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Eminent Domain
Property and Rights Subject of Compensation

In order to state a claim under the Takings Clause, a plaintiff must first demonstrate that he possesses a property interest that is constitutionally protected. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Eminent Domain
Property and Rights Subject of Compensation

Owner of adult entertainment club and club dancers failed to demonstrate that city ordinance requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances violated the Takings Clause, absent identification of a property interest with which the ordinance interfered. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Federal Courts
Summary judgment
Federal Courts
Summary judgment

Court of Appeals reviews the district court's decision to grant summary judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Fed.Rules Civ.Proc.Rule 56, 28 U.S.C.A.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, was not a complete ban on protected expression, for purpose of determining if ordinance violated First Amendment's guarantees of freedom of speech and expression; ordinance required that dancers project their erotic message from a slight distance, but did not ban erotic dancing altogether. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Strict or exacting scrutiny;compelling interest test

Content-based regulations are normally subject to strict scrutiny, for purpose of determining if regulations violate the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Content-based regulations may be analyzed under intermediate scrutiny, rather than strict scrutiny, for purpose of determining violation of the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression, if two conditions are met: (1) the ordinance regulates speech that is sexual or pornographic in nature, and (2) the primary motivation behind the regulation is to prevent secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Performers

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, and defining "adult cabaret dancer" as a dancer performing at an adult cabaret, who was sexually-oriented dancer, exotic dancer, stripper, or similar dancer, who focused the performance on or emphasized the dancer's breasts, genitals, or buttocks, on a regular and substantial basis, regulated expression that was sexual or pornographic in nature, as would support application of the intermediate scrutiny standard, rather than the strict scrutiny standard, for purpose of First Amendment challenge to ordinance; although dancers wore minimal clothing when performing for individual patrons off stage, dancers performed nude on stage, and the focus of the performance was sexual. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Court of Appeals generally accepts that the purpose of a regulation on adult businesses is to combat secondary effects, as would warrant application of intermediate scrutiny standard for purpose of First Amendment challenge, if the enactment can be justified without reference to speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

To determine the purpose of a municipal ordinance regulating adult businesses, in order to decide whether to apply strict scrutiny or intermediate scrutiny, the Court of Appeals looks to objective indicators of intent.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Performers

Secondary effects of adult businesses were city's primary concern in enacting ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, as would support application of the intermediate scrutiny standard, rather than the strict scrutiny standard, for purpose of First Amendment challenge to ordinance; ordinance stated that it was necessary for protection of the welfare of the public, as result of potential negative secondary effects, including crime, protection of retail trade, and maintenance of property values, and the two-foot rule was logically linked to preventing such secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare
Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

A statute will survive intermediate scrutiny, in a First Amendment challenge, if it: (1) is designed to serve a substantial government interest, (2) is narrowly tailored to serve that interest, and (3) leaves open alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City demonstrated connection between its ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, and the secondary effects that the ordinance was intended to address, including crime, protection of retail trade, maintenance of property values, demonstrating that ordinance was designed to serve substantial government interest, for purpose of intermediate scrutiny analysis of First Amendment challenge; city was presented with 17 studies on secondary effects of adult businesses, declarations from vice officers, interviews with nude dancers, and a presentation on the harmful effects of pornography, and there was no requirement that city rely only on evidence targeting the exact problem of exotic dancing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

So long as whatever evidence the city relies upon to demonstrate that an ordinance regulating adult businesses serves substantial government interests is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses, it is sufficient to support the ordinance, for purpose of First Amendment challenge under intermediate scrutiny standard. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Proximity of performers to patrons
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, was narrowly tailored to serve substantial government interest of preventing secondary effects of adult businesses, including crime, protection of retail trade, maintenance of property values, for purpose of intermediate scrutiny analysis of First Amendment challenge; ordinance would prevent exchange of money or drugs and touching of patrons. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, left open alternative avenues of expression, for purpose of determining if ordinance violated First Amendment's guarantees of freedom of speech and expression, under intermediate scrutiny standard; dancers could still convey their erotic message from a slight distance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Performers
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

City ordinance, requiring adult cabaret dancers to remain two feet away from patrons during performances, did not violate First Amendment guarantee of freedom of expression; ordinance was thoroughly researched and narrowly-tailored to address substantial government interest of preventing secondary effects of adult businesses, such as crime, and ordinance left alternative channels of communication open by allowing dancers to perform at slight distance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1118 Scott W. Wellman and Stuart Miller, Wellman & Warren, Laguna Hills, CA, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Deborah J. Fox and Dawn A. McIntosh, Fox & Sohagi, Los Angeles, CA, for the defendant-appellee.

Scott D. Bergthold, Chattanooga, TN, for Amicus Curiae League of California Cities.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California; Gary L. Taylor, District Judge, Presiding. D.C. No. CV–03–00911–GLT.

Before: TASHIMA, FISHER, and TALLMAN, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

TALLMAN, Circuit Judge.

This case involves constitutional challenges to a city ordinance requiring "adult cabaret dancers" to remain two feet away from patrons during performances. The district court rejected these challenges by dismissing some of the Appellants' claims on the pleadings and granting summary judgment as to other claims. We denied emergency motions for a stay of enforcement of the Ordinance pending appeal and now affirm.

I

The City of La Habra's (City's) Municipal Ordinance 1626 ("Ordinance") regulates adult businesses. The first section of the Ordinance contains extensive findings that adult businesses generate crime, economic harm, and the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. These findings are based on studies and police declarations from other jurisdictions, federal and state judicial opinions, and public health data from surrounding southern California counties. Ordinance, § 1. Other sections of the Ordinance contain regulations purporting to address the secondary effects described in the first section, including a prohibition of physical contact between patrons and performers (the "no-touch rule") and a requirement that adult cabaret dancers perform at least two feet away from their patrons (the "two-foot rule"). Ordinance, §§ 4, 7. The Appellants are Bill Badi Gammoh, the owner of an adult establishment in the City, several dancers at Gammoh's club, and a dancer who has been offered employment at Gammoh's club but has not yet accepted it. Gammoh's establishment, which does not serve alcoholic beverages, features entertainment by dancers who perform nude on stage and then dress in minimal clothing before offering one-on-one offstage dances.[1] The Appellants do not challenge the provisions of the Ordinance governing on-stage dancing and other aspects of the 1119 operation of an adult cabaret; they challenge only the two-foot rule.

[1] Early in this litigation before the district court the Appellants used the term "lap dance" to refer to these performances. They later distanced themselves from this term, preferring "clothed proximate dancing" instead. We reference these individual, close-up performances using the term "offstage dancing" because the City regulates nude on-stage performances separately from partially-clothed offstage performances and it is the latter set of regulations that are challenged here.

Three weeks after the City Council passed the Ordinance, the Appellants filed their constitutional challenge in the Superior Court of California for Orange County. The case was subsequently removed to the United States District Court for the Central District of California. The Appellants were unsuccessful before the district court. In addition to other rulings that the Appellants do not challenge on appeal, the district court dismissed the Appellants' overbreadth argument and part of their vagueness challenge with prejudice, and entered summary judgment in favor of the City on their regulatory takings claim, a First Amendment challenge, and the remaining vagueness argument. The Appellants pursue their vagueness, overbreadth, takings, and free speech and expression claims on appeal.

II

[1] The Ordinance's two-foot rule applies exclusively to "adult cabaret dancers." The Ordinance defines an "adult cabaret dancer" as:

> any person who is an employee or independent contractor of an "adult cabaret" or "adult business" and who, with or without any compensation or other form of consideration, performs as a sexually-oriented dancer, exotic dancer, stripper, go-go dancer or similar dancer whose performance on a regular and substantial basis focuses on or emphasizes the adult cabaret dancer's breasts, genitals, and or buttocks, but does not involve exposure of "specified anatomical areas" or depicting or engaging in "specified sexual activities." Adult cabaret dancer does not include a patron.

Ordinance, § 4. The district court rejected the Appellants' assertion that this definition is vague and overbroad because it contains subjective terms. We review the district court's ruling de novo. See United States v. Rodriguez, 360 F.3d 949, 953 (9th Cir.2004); United States v. Linick, 195 F.3d 538, 541 (9th Cir.1999).

A

[2] [3] To survive a vagueness challenge, a regulation must "define the criminal offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited and in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement." Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 357, 103 S.Ct. 1855, 75 L.Ed.2d 903 (1983); see also United States v. Adams, 343 F.3d 1024, 1035 (9th Cir.2003), cert. denied, 542 U.S. 921, 124 S.Ct. 2871, 159 L.Ed.2d 779 (2004). A greater degree of specificity and clarity is required when First Amendment rights are at stake. Kev, Inc. v. Kitsap County, 793 F.2d 1053, 1057 (9th Cir.1986).

The Appellants argue that the subjective language used to define an "adult cabaret dancer" makes the definition, and thus the Ordinance, unconstitutionally vague. Cf. City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 56–64, 119 S.Ct. 1849, 144 L.Ed.2d 67 (1999) (holding a provision criminalizing loitering, which is defined as "to remain in any one place with no apparent purpose," void for vagueness because the provision was "inherently subjective because its application depends on whether some purpose is 'apparent' to the officer on the scene"); Tucson Woman's Clinic v. Eden, 379 F.3d 531, 554–55 (9th Cir.2004) (holding a statute requiring physicians to treat patients "with consideration, respect, and full recognition of the patient's dignity and individuality" void for vagueness because it "subjected physicians to sanctions based not on their own objective behavior, but on the subjective viewpoint of others") (internal quotation and citation omitted); Free Speech Coalition v. Reno, 198 F.3d 1083, 1095 (9th Cir.1999), aff'd sub nom. Ashcroft 1120 v. Free Speech Coalition, 535 U.S. 234, 122 S.Ct. 1389, 152 L.Ed.2d 403 (2002) (holding a provision that criminalized sexually explicit images that "appear[ ] to be a minor" or "convey the impression" that a minor is depicted unconstitutionally vague because it was unclear "whose perspective defines the appearance of a minor, or whose impression that a minor is involved leads to criminal prosecution").

Several of the terms within the Ordinance's definition of "adult cabaret dancer"—"sexually oriented dancer," "exotic dancer," "similar dancer," "regular basis," and "focuses on or emphasizes"—are unarguably subjective. However, two main factors distinguish the Ordinance from cases such as Morales, Tucson Woman's Clinic, and Free Speech Coalition, where the regulations were held to be too subjective to give notice to ordinary people or guidance to law enforcement: 1) the subjective terms in the Ordinance are used in combination with other terms, and 2) the subjective terms do not define prohibited conduct.

[4] This circuit has previously recognized that otherwise imprecise terms may avoid vagueness problems when used in combination with terms that provide sufficient clarity. See Kev, 793 F.2d at 1057 (holding that an ordinance prohibiting dancers from "caressing" and "fondling" patrons was not vague "in the context of the other definitions provided in the ordinance" at issue). In this case, the district court recognized that the two-foot rule applies only to "adult cabaret dancers" who meet the following five qualifications: 1) the individual must perform at an "adult cabaret";[2] 2) the performer must perform as a sexually-oriented dancer, exotic dancer, stripper, or similar dancer; 3) the performance must focus on or emphasize the performer's breasts, genitals, and/or buttocks; 4) the performance must have this focus or emphasis on a regular basis; and 5) the performance must have this focus or emphasis on a substantial basis. Thus, an "adult cabaret dancer" is defined by a combination of features, not by any one subjective term. The combined terms outline the performer, the place of the performance, and the type of performance. Each of the five limitations provides context in which the other limitations may be clearly understood. The definition as a whole gives notice to performers and ample guidance to law enforcement officers as to who is and who is not an "adult cabaret dancer."

2 The City of La Habra Code defines "adult cabaret" as:

> a nightclub, bar or other establishment (whether or not serving alcoholic beverages) which features live performances by topless and/or bottomless dancers, go-go dancers, exotic dancers, strippers, or similar entertainers, and where such performances are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas."

City of La Habra Code § 18.60.010.

Furthermore, although the definition of an "adult cabaret dancer" contains subjective terms, the prohibited conduct is defined objectively. It is not illegal to be an adult cabaret dancer; only to be an adult cabaret dancer performing within two feet of a patron. This distinction introduces additional objectivity into the Ordinance because the act that is prohibited—being within two feet of a patron—is certainly not vague.[3]

3 The appellant dancers argue that they will not relinquish their proximity to patrons, and thus need to know how not to be "adult cabaret dancers." In other words, they assert that they need to know how to continue their sexually expressive performances within two feet of their patrons. This, however, is exactly what the Ordinance prohibits. The fact that the regulation will necessarily alter the dancers' conduct does not make it vague.

1121 Vagueness doctrine cannot be understood in a manner that prohibits governments from addressing problems that are difficult to define in objective terms. See Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 110, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972) ("we can never expect mathematical certainty from our language"). In this case, a combination of subjective and objective terms is used to give a clear picture of an "adult cabaret dancer" and the conduct prohibited of such a dancer is defined objectively. Thus, the definition of "adult cabaret dancer" is sufficiently clear to give notice to performers and guidance to law enforcement. See Cal. Teachers Ass'n v. State Bd. of Educ., 271 F.3d 1141, 1150 (9th Cir.2001) ("perfect clarity is not required even when a law regulates protected speech").

B

[5] The Appellants claim that the definition of "adult cabaret dancer" is overbroad because it could apply to mainstream or avant-garde performances as well as adult entertainment. The Supreme Court and this circuit have emphasized that "where a statute regulates expressive conduct, the scope of the statute does not render it unconstitutional unless its overbreadth is not only real, but substantial as well, judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." World Wide Video of Washington, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 368 F.3d 1186, 1198 (9th Cir.2004) (quoting Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 112, 110 S.Ct. 1691, 109 L.Ed.2d 98 (1990) (internal quotations omitted)). In this case, potentially overbroad applications of the Ordinance are minimal because performances occurring outside of an adult cabaret are unaffected by the Ordinance, and those occurring in an adult cabaret and containing the sexual emphasis that defines an "adult cabaret dancer" are within the Ordinance's legitimate sweep.

The Appellants were unable to cite any example of a performance that would fall within the Ordinance to which application of the Ordinance's restrictions would be overbroad. The examples proffered—including a duet, a tango, and an Elvis impersonator—are unpersuasive. A pas de deux, a ballroom dance, and an impersonation of the King each escapes the two-foot limitation unless performed in an establishment which features live performances by "topless and/or bottomless dancers, go-go dancers, exotic dancers, strippers or similar entertainers" characterized by an emphasis on " 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' " See supra note 2 (quoting City of La Habra Code § 18.60.010(C)). However, if they occur within an adult cabaret and the performer meets all five prongs of the definition of "adult cabaret dancer," these performances fall within the statute's legitimate sweep.

Regardless of whether the dance is a tango or more typical adult entertainment, requiring a two-foot separation between dance partners in this highly-charged sexual atmosphere may reasonably advance the City's legitimate goal of reducing secondary effects of adult entertainment. The two-foot rule may, for example, provide a line of sight for enforcement of the "no touch" rule and prevent exchanges of money and drugs. When performed in an adult cabaret, these performances, even if done in an Elvis costume, are thus within the statute's legitimate reach.

[6] Even if the Appellants were able to identify performances that fulfill all aspects of an "adult cabaret dancer" but are not tied to the secondary effects the statute is designed to address, "the mere fact that one can conceive of some impermissible applications of a statute is not sufficient to render it susceptible to an overbreadth challenge." Members of City 1122 Council of City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 800, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). Although we recognize that "the First Amendment needs breathing space," World Wide Video, 368 F.3d at 1198, in this situation there is no "realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the Court." Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. at 801, 104 S.Ct. 2118. If an overbroad application of the Ordinance exists, it is insubstantial when "judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep." See Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612–15, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973).

III

The district court dismissed the Appellants' regulatory takings claim on summary judgment. We review this decision de novo. Cal. First Amend. Coalition v. Calderon, 150 F.3d 976, 980 (9th Cir.1998). We "must determine, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the district court correctly applied the substantive law." Id.

[7] [8] The takings clause of the Fifth Amendment protects private property from being taken for public use without just compensation. U.S. CONST. amend. V (emphasis added). "In order to state a claim under the Takings Clause, a plaintiff must first demonstrate that he possesses a 'property interest' that is constitutionally protected." Schneider v. Cal. Dep't Corr., 151 F.3d 1194, 1198 (9th Cir.1998) (internal citation omitted). The Appellants have not here pointed to a "property interest" interfered with by the City of La Habra's regulation of the dancers' conduct.[4] The district court thus properly dismissed the Appellants' takings claim.

4 Certainly Mr. Gammoh and the dancers may suffer economic losses if patrons are unwilling to pay for dances that must be at least two feet away from customers. Their claim of right to this stream of income was essentially the basis of the vested rights argument that the Appellants made before the district court. The district court rejected this argument on summary judgment, and Appellants did not appeal that ruling.

IV

[9] The Appellants argue that the Ordinance violates the First Amendment's guarantees of freedom of speech and expression. The district court evaluated the Ordinance under intermediate scrutiny and determined that the Appellants' First Amendment rights had not been violated. We review the district court's decision to grant summary judgment de novo, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the Appellants and looking for genuine issues of material fact. See Calderon, 150 F.3d at 980.

A

[10] First, we must determine whether the Ordinance is a complete ban on protected expression. See Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy v. Maricopa County, 336 F.3d 1153, 1164 (9th Cir.2003) (plurality opinion) (citing City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), and Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 46, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)). We conclude that it is not.

The two-foot rule merely requires that dancers give their performances from a slight distance; it does not prohibit them from giving their performances altogether. The rule limits the dancers' freedom to convey their erotic message but does not prohibit them from performing erotic one-on-one-dances for patrons. See 1123 Renton, 475 U.S. at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925. Because the dancers' performances may continue, albeit from a slight distance, this case stands in sharp contrast to our recent decision in Dream Palace v. County of Maricopa, where we applied strict scrutiny to an ordinance regulating adult businesses because even the county conceded that the ordinance was a complete ban on nude and semi-nude dancing. 384 F.3d 990, 1018 (9th Cir.2004). Here, the Ordinance prescribes where offstage dancing can occur (at least two feet away from patrons) but it does not ban any form of dance.

The Appellants argue that close propinquity to patrons is a key element of the dancers' expressive activity, and that the Ordinance is therefore a complete ban on a form of expression: "proximate dancing." This argument has been made and rejected in this circuit. See Colacurcio v. City of Kent, 163 F.3d 545, 549, 555 (9th Cir.1998) (rejecting the argument that because "table dancing" is a unique form of dancing requiring proximity, a ten-foot separation requirement is a complete ban on this form of expression). It is true that if the dancers' expressive activity is considered "erotic dance within two feet of patrons" and not merely "erotic dance," this activity is completely banned. However, virtually no ordinance would survive this analysis: the "expression" at issue could always be defined to include the contested restriction. See id. at 556 (rejecting the idea that the applicable "forum" for a table dance is the area within ten feet of the performer). Protected expression is not so narrowly defined. See Dream Palace, 384 F.3d at 1019–20 (recognizing that the regulations in Renton and its progeny did not "proscribe absolutely certain types of adult entertainment" and instead enacted regulations that "avoid[ed] a total ban on protected expression").

"While the dancer's erotic message may be slightly less effective from [two] feet, the ability to engage in the protected expression is not significantly impaired." Kev, 793 F.2d at 1061. We hold that the Ordinance is not a complete ban on a protected form of expression.

B

Next, we must determine what level of scrutiny properly applies. See Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1164. Traditionally, the Court has utilized a distinction between content-based and content-neutral regulations to determine the appropriate level of scrutiny. See e.g., Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Time, place, and manner restrictions on adult businesses were considered content-neutral. Id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925.

[11] Recently, however, the Supreme Court has recognized that virtually all regulation of adult businesses is content-based. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring); see also Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1161 (recognizing Justice Kennedy's opinion in Alameda Books as controlling because it is the narrowest opinion joining the plurality's judgment). Content-based regulations are normally subject to strict scrutiny. See Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N. Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 118, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991) (describing the "necessary to serve a compelling state interest" strict scrutiny test).

[12] However, designating regulation of adult establishments as content-based does not end the inquiry as to the appropriate standard of review. Content-based regulations may be analyzed under intermediate scrutiny if two conditions are met: 1) the ordinance regulates speech that is sexual or pornographic in nature; and 2) the primary motivation behind the regulation is to prevent secondary effects. Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1164–65 1124 (citing Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728).

1

[13] The Appellants differ from plaintiffs in previous cases regarding the regulation of adult businesses in that they wear minimal clothing for their offstage performances (although they perform nude on stage). The Appellants argue that the dancers' expressive activity is not sexual or pornographic because the dancers are "fully clothed." However, the appellant dancers testified that their outfits for offstage dancing include bikinis and g-strings, sometimes paired with a sheer skirt or top; at the very least, these accouterments stretch the term "fully-clothed." The dancers do cover their breasts and genitalia, but their argument that this removes their performances from the sphere of "sexual speech" ignores the context in which their offstage performances occur —in an adult cabaret, minutes after the dancers have performed nude on stage. See Kev, 793 F.2d at 1061 n. 12 (noting that "consideration of a forum's special attributes is relevant to the constitutionality of a regulation since the significance of the governmental interest must be assessed in light of the characteristic nature and function of the particular forum involved") (quoting Heffron v. Int'l Soc'y for Krishna Consciousness, 452 U.S. 640, 650–51, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981)).

There is certainly a point along the continuum where suggestive speech no longer falls within the "sexual or pornographic" exception to the requirement of strict scrutiny. We are mindful that this case pushes us closer to that point than those cases where performers are nude or topless. "Sexual speech" has never been explicitly defined, but the appellant dancers' performances, which "focus[ ] on or emphasize[ ] ... breasts, genitals, and or buttocks," occur in adult establishments, are conducted by dancers who also perform nude, and involve minimal clothing, are certainly within the limits of "sexual speech." We therefore review the Ordinance as a regulation of "sexual or pornographic speech" and proceed to consider whether reducing the secondary effects of adult establishments is the Ordinance's primary purpose.

2

[14] We generally accept that a regulation's purpose is to combat secondary effects if the enactment can be justified without reference to speech. See Colacurcio, 163 F.3d at 551–52 (citing Kev, 793 F.2d at 1058–59). We have recognized that "so long as the regulation is designed to combat the secondary effects of [adult] establishments on the surrounding community, namely[ ] crime rates, property values, and the quality of the city's neighborhoods ... then it is subject to intermediate scrutiny." Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1164–65 (internal citation and quotation omitted); see also Colacurcio, 163 F.3d at 551 (9th Cir.1998) (noting that an ordinance is subject to intermediate scrutiny if its "predominant purpose" is combating secondary effects). For plaintiffs, this is "a difficult standard to overcome." Colacurcio, 163 F.3d at 552.

[15] [16] To determine the purpose of the Ordinance, we look to "objective indicators of intent." Id. at 552; see also Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1165. In this case we have the materials that the City Council considered in determining whether to enact the Ordinance and the Ordinance itself. These indicators demonstrate that secondary effects were the City Council's concern.

The record indicates that the City Council was presented with several volumes of materials prior to enacting the Ordinance. These included studies of secondary effects, declarations from police officers, reports on sexually transmitted diseases, and 1125 various other evidence.

In a report to the City Council, the City Attorney recommended action to address the secondary effects reported in these resources: "[i]n reviewing the City's existing regulations and in light of the extensive existing case law and supporting studies, we conclude that this Ordinance is necessary to reduce and/or preclude these secondary effects." Our review of the materials that the City Council considered indicates that concern about secondary effects, as opposed to the content of the dancers' expression, motivated the challenged Ordinance.

The Ordinance itself also demonstrates that the City Council's purpose was to combat secondary effects. The Ordinance states that it is:

> necessary for the protection of the welfare of the people, as a result of the potential negative secondary effects of adult businesses, including crime, the protection of the city's retail trade, the prevention of blight in neighborhoods and the maintenance of property values, protecting and preserving the quality of the city's neighborhoods and the city's commercial districts, the protection of the city's quality of life, the increased threat of the spread of sexually transmitted diseases, and the protection of the peace, welfare and privacy of persons who patronize adult businesses.

Ordinance, § 1(A). This statement of purpose is supported by regulatory provisions that are logically linked to the secondary effects, such as solicitation of prostitution and drug transactions, that the City identified: the Ordinance forbids contact between patrons and performers and, to make this rule enforceable, requires a two-foot separation between patrons and performers. Both the two-foot rule and the no-touching rule are reasonably linked to the secondary effects that the City identifies as its purpose in enacting the Ordinance.

We are not persuaded by the Appellants' argument that a speech-reducing motive is demonstrated by the fact that proximity between patrons and dancers is allowed when the dancers are not performing. The City may reasonably have decided that such regulations were impractical or unnecessary. The Appellants presented no evidence to support their speculation that the City chose only to regulate dancers when they are performing because it wished to regulate the performances' expressive content.

We are also unpersuaded by the Appellants' argument that a speech-reducing motive is demonstrated by a City employee's testimony that he overheard someone in staff meetings say that they wanted to drive appellant Gammoh out of business. The Appellants presented no evidence that the person who made these comments was on the City Council or affected the Council's decision to pass the Ordinance. Nothing connects this testimony to the process by which the Ordinance was passed. The testimony therefore does not create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the City's stated goal of preventing secondary effects of adult businesses was its true purpose in enacting the Ordinance.

The Appellants have not raised a genuine issue as to the City's motivation in enacting the Ordinance. As Justice Kennedy wrote in Alameda Books, "[t]he ordinance may be a covert attack on speech, but we should not presume it to be so." 535 U.S. at 447, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The objective indicators of the City's intent demonstrate a desire to combat secondary effects, and the Appellants have adduced no evidence that draws this motivation into question. The Ordinance must therefore be evaluated using intermediate scrutiny.

C

[17] A statute will survive intermediate scrutiny if it: 1) is designed to serve a 1126 substantial government interest; 2) is narrowly tailored to serve that interest; and 3) leaves open alternative avenues of communication. Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166; see also Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925.

1

Reducing the negative secondary effects of adult businesses is a substantial governmental interest. See Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166 ("It is beyond peradventure at this point in the development of the doctrine that a state's interest in curbing the secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments is substantial."). The Appellants concede that preventing secondary effects is a substantial government interest, but argue that the City's evidence of secondary effects is flawed and inapplicable. We disagree.

[18] The pre-enactment record in this case is substantial. Cf. id. at 1167–68 (describing the record as "a slim one" and "hardly overwhelming" but concluding that the studies and public hearings relied on by the legislature were sufficient to demonstrate a connection between the regulated activity and secondary effects). The City Council was presented with, inter alia, seventeen studies on secondary effects of adult businesses, a summary of some of these studies, the 1986 Attorney General's Report on Pornography, declarations from investigating vice officers, an interview with nude dancers, a presentation on the harmful effects of pornography in nearby Los Angeles, numerous reports on AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, and thirty-nine judicial decisions in the area of regulation of adult businesses. These studies and reports meet the City's burden to produce evidence demonstrating a connection between its regulations and the secondary effects that the Ordinance is intended to address. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728; Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166.

Because the City has met this burden, "[i]f plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728, cited in Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1160. The Appellants attempt to cast doubt by arguing that the studies on which the City relies are flawed and irrelevant.

[19] The Appellants' proffered expert declared that the City's evidence was flawed because "systematically collecting police call-for-service information" and adhering to the Appellants' suggested methodological standards were "the only reliable information" that could have supported the City's concern. This is simply not the law. "[S]o long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses [,]" it is sufficient to support the Ordinance. Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. [5] While we do not 1127 permit legislative bodies to rely on shoddy data, we also will not specify the methodological standards to which their evidence must conform. See id. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring) ("As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners."). The Appellants have failed to create a genuine issue of material fact as to the reliability of the collection of evidence upon which the City relied.

5 The Seventh Circuit has succinctly explained why clear proof of secondary effects is not required:

> A requirement of Daubert [v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993)]—quality evidence would impose an unreasonable burden on the legislative process, and further would be logical only if Alameda Books required a regulating body to prove that its regulation would—undeniably—reduce adverse secondary effects. Alameda Books clearly did not impose such a requirement.

G.M. Enters., Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, Wis., 350 F.3d 631, 640 (7th Cir.2003).

The Appellants also argue that even if the City's evidence is reliable, it is irrelevant because it does not measure the secondary effects of clothed performances. No precedent requires the City to obtain research targeting the exact activity that it wishes to regulate: the City is only required to rely on evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant" to the problem being addressed. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The studies upon which the City relied evaluate the secondary effects of a variety of adult businesses—a category encompassing any business that would be affected by the Ordinance—and are therefore unquestionably relevant.

The presence or absence of minimal clothing is not relevant to whether separation requirements fulfill the stated purpose of the Ordinance. This circuit recognizes that municipalities may reasonably find that separation requirements serve the interest of reducing the secondary effects of adult establishments. "Buffers" between patrons and performers prevent the exchange of money for prostitution or drug transactions and allow enforcement of "no touching" provisions, which would otherwise be virtually unenforceable. See Colacurcio, 163 F.3d at 554. There is no reason to believe that minimal clothing obviates the need for these measures when the atmosphere is equally charged—money exchanges and touching are no more difficult if the dancer is wearing minimal clothing than if she is partially or fully nude. [6]

6 The City Council was presented with a report documenting an interview with former adult dancers from another jurisdiction in which the dancers indicated that solicitations for sexual favors occurred "whether the club is nude or not" and that drugs were frequently passed during tipping.

The Appellants have not presented evidence sufficient to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the two-foot rule is designed to serve a substantial governmental interest in preventing the secondary effects of adult establishments. The Ordinance therefore survives the first prong of the Renton test.

2

[20] Our next consideration is whether the City's two-foot rule is narrowly tailored to address the problem of secondary effects from adult entertainment. See Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166. The Ordinance's two-foot separation requirement is more narrow than other separation requirements that the Ninth Circuit has upheld. See Colacurcio, 163 F.3d at 553–54 (upholding a ten-foot separation requirement); BSA, Inc. v. King County, 804 F.2d 1104, 1110–11 (9th Cir.1986) (upholding a six-foot separation requirement); Kev, 793 F.2d at 1061–62 (upholding a ten-foot separation requirement). These earlier cases involved nude or topless dancing, and therefore differ from the case before us. Nonetheless, they guide us in now holding that in the context of a club that features on-stage nude dancing and offstage minimally clothed dancing, the City's two-foot separation requirement is narrowly tailored to prevent the exchange of money 1128 or drugs and to allow enforcement of the "no touching" provisions.

3

[21] Finally, we consider whether the Ordinance leaves open alternative avenues of communication. See Ctr. for Fair Pub. Policy, 336 F.3d at 1166. This inquiry is analogous to that in Section IV(A), supra, which concluded that the Ordinance is not a complete ban on protected expression. The challenged Ordinance leaves dancers free to convey their erotic message as long as they are two feet away from patrons. Although the message may be slightly impaired from this distance, it cannot be said that a dancer's performance "no longer conveys eroticism" from two feet away. Dream Palace, 384 F.3d at 1021 (internal citation and quotation omitted). Because the dancer's erotic message may still be communicated from a slight distance, the Ordinance survives this final prong of the Renton analysis.

[22] As detailed above, the Ordinance's two-foot rule is narrowly tailored to address the City's concerns about the secondary effects of adult establishments and leaves alternate channels of communication open by allowing dancers to perform at a two-foot distance. The Ordinance survives intermediate scrutiny.

V

The Ordinance was thoroughly researched and narrowly tailored to combat the negative side-effects of adult businesses that the City's research identified. Regulating adult businesses will always place the City's concerns in tension with First Amendment protections. In this case, however, the City of La Habra designed an Ordinance that falls within what has previously been accepted as constitutional in this circuit, despite the minimal amount of clothing that the appellant dancers wear when performing. The Ordinance is not vague or overbroad, and the Appellants have raised no genuine issue of material fact regarding their takings or First Amendment claims. The judgment of the district court is therefore AFFIRMED.

All Citations

395 F.3d 1114, 05 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 718, 2005 Daily Journal D.A.R. 999

End of Document