STUDY OF THE EFFECTS OF THE CONCENTRATION OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

DEPARTMENT OF CITY PLANNING

CITY OF LOS ANGELES

JUNE 1977

CITY PLAN CASE NO. 26475
Council File No. 74-4521-S.3

STUDY OF THE EFFECTS OF THE CONCENTRATION OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES

Prepared for:

Planning Committee of the Los Angeles City Council

Prepared by:

Los Angeles City Planning Department

June, 1977

Exhibit D

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF CONTENTS (cont'd)

TABLES

EXHIBITS

APPENDICES

MMARY AND RECOMMENDATIONS

A. Types of Ordinances to Control "Adult Entertainment" Uses

Two methods of regulating adult entertainment business via land use regulations have developed in the United States. They are: 1) the concentration of such uses in a single area of the city as in Boston; and 2) the dispersal of such uses, as in the City of Detroit. The Detroit ordinance has been challenged and upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court (Young vs. American Mini-Theaters, 96 S. Ct. 771, 1976).

B. Effect of "Adult Entertainment" Businesses on the Community

There has been some indication that the concentration of "adult entertainment" uses results in increased crime and greater police enforcement problems. In the City of Los Angeles, the Los Angeles Police Department has found a link between the concentration of such businesses and increased crime in the Hollywood community. (The major portion of a Police Department report on this subject is herein contained.) While several major cities have adopted ordinances similar to the Detroit ordinance, no other major city has, to our knowledge, adopted a Boston-type ordinance.

Testimony received at two public meetings on this subject has revealed that there is serious public concern over the proliferation of adult entertainment businesses-particularly in the Hollywood area. Citizens have testified of being afraid to walk the streets; that some businesses have left the area or have modified their hours of operation; and that they are fearful of children being confronted by unsavory individuals or of being exposed to sexually explicit material. A representative of an adult theater chain testified in support of the manner in which this business was run and in support of the type of clientele which attend the theaters. The Planning Department staff is of the opinion that the degree of deleterious effects of adult entertainment businesses depend largely on the particular type of business and on how any such business is operated.

A mail survey questionnaire conducted by the Planning Department has tended to emphasize general public concern over the proliferation of sex-oriented businesses and has indicated further, that appraisers, realtors and representatives of lending institutions are generally of the opinion that concentration of adult entertainment businesses exerts a negative economic impact on both business and residential properties. They feel that the degree of negative impact depends upon the degree of concentration and on the specific type of adult entertainment business.

The 1970-76 change in the assessed value of residential and commercial properties containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses was compared with other areas without such concentrations, and with the City as a whole. On the basis of this comparison, it cannot be concluded that properties containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses have directly influenced the assessed valuations of such properties.

Data and analysis based on the U.S. Census of 1970 and certain trend data from the censuses of 1960 and 1970 as applied to areas of the City containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses are included in the body of the report and in the Appendix.

C. Scope of the Ordinances Enacted by Other Jurisdictions

The scope of "adult entertainment" ordinances encompases a variety of adult activities. For example, the Los Angeles Study has considered "adult entertainment" establishments to include adult bookstores and theaters, massage parlors, nude modeling studios, adult motels, arcades, and certain similar businesses. Many other ordinances studied, however, are less broad in their coverage. The Detroit ordinance, for instance does not regulate massage parlors or adult motels, nor does it provide for the closing of any such businesses by amortization, which would be necessitated by the retroactive application of such an ordinance. Table I on page 11 indicates the ordinances reveiwed and the major categories of uses they regulate.

Effect of Ordinances Enacted by Other Jurisdictions: The U.S. Supreme Court in Young vs. American Mini-Theaters pointed out, as one of the bases for upholding the Detroit ordinance, that the regulation did not limit the number of "adult entertainment" businesses. Our study has indicated that the practical effect of literal adoption of "Detroit" language without modification in the City of Los Angeles would be to limit the potential locations for such businesses rather severely. Due to the predominance of commercial zoning in "strips" along major and secondary streets, an ordinance preventing "adult entertainment" business from locating within 500 feet of residentially zoned property would, in effect, limit such businesses to those areas of the City where there is commercial zoning of greater than 500 feet in depth. Areas with such commercial frontage would include downtown Los Angeles , a small part of Hollywood, Westwood, and Century City. A few industrial areas would also afford a separation of this distance from residential properties. The limitation of 1,000 feet between establishments (as provided in the Detroit ordinance) would likely be inappropriate in the City of Los Angeles inasmuch as commercial zoning is located in a strip pattern along most of the City's approximate 1,400 miles of major and secondary highways. (It is estimated that approximately 400 miles of such "strip" commercial zoning exists in the City.)

D. Recommendations

1. If the City Council should find it advisable in light of the findings of this report to recommend the preparation of an ordinance to control adult entertainment businesses, such an ordinance should be of a dispersal type rather than a concentration type. (To build a planning policy basis for such regulation, the Council may also wish the Planning Department to consider the development of appropriate policies for incorporation within the Citywide Plan.)

2. If a dispersal type ordinance is recommended by the City Council, the Planning Department is of the opinion that such an ordinance should be designed for specific application in the City of Los Angeles, rather than the direct adoption of the Detroit model. If such a dispersal type ordinance is recommended for enactment locally, it should consider:

   a. distance requirements between adult entertainment establishments. The Planning Department recommends that a separation between establishments greater than 1,000 feet is necessary and desirable.

   b. distance requirements separating adult entertainment establishments from churches, schools, parks, and the like. The Planning Department suggests that a separation of at least 500 feet is necessary. A similar distance separating adult entertainment uses from single-family residential development should also be considered.

   c. the possibility of enacting additional provisions to regulate signs and similar forms of advertising should also be considered.

3. If the City Council should find it advisable to recommend all of the types of "adult entertainment" businesses included in this study, it should consider whether all such uses should be in the same class and subject to the same regulations.

4. Should the City Council recommend the preparation of a zoning ordinance to regulate adult entertainment businesses, other sections of the Municipal Code relating to the subject, including police permit requirements, should also be amended in order to be consistent with the zoning regulations and to facilitate the administration and enforcement of such regulations.

5. The Planning De rtment recommends that i' he instructed to review existing zoning regulations applying to the C4 zone which currently prohibits "strip tease shows" and that the Zoning Administrator, through interpretation, consider expanding the list of prohibited uses in said zone to include additional adult entertainment uses as herein indentified.

6. To assist in the regulation of "adult entertainment" businesses, the City should continue to vigorously enforce all existing provisions of the Municipal Code relating to the subject, including Zoning regulations.

I.

FINDINGS

1. A Boston-type ordinance (concentration) to control adult entertainment businesses would not be acceptable nor desirable in the City of Los Angeles.

2. In the event legislation is enacted in the City of Los Angeles there is adequate basis for a Detroit-type ordinance (dispersion) which requires a distance of 1000 feet between establishments and 500 feet from residential zones.

   -- Existing locational patterns of adult entertainment businesses (in Hollywood, Studio City, North Hollywood) actually represent a concentration rather than a dispersion of establishments. (Such patterns are contrary to the Detroit concept and are due, in fact, to the City's strip commercial zoning pattern.)

3. If dispersion is desired in Los Angeles, an ordinance should be designed specifically for the City. (Direct application of the Detroit ordinance would not be desirable or appropriate in Los Angeles and would, in part, tend to result in a concentration of such businesses.)

4. Statistics provided by the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD) indicate a proportionally larger increase in certain crimes in Hollywood from 1965-75, as compared with the City of Los Angeles as a whole. (Hollywood has the largest concentration of adult entertainment businesses in the City.)

5. Statistics provided by the LAPD indicate that there has been a large increase in adult entertainment enterprises since 1969, particularly in Hollywood. From December 1975 to December 1976, however, there has been a decrease in such establishments.

6. Testimony obtained at two public meetings on the Adult Entertainment study conducted on April 27 and 28, 1977 indicated that:

   - Many persons, including the elderly, are afraid to walk the streets in Hollywood.

   - Concern was expressed that children are being exposed to sexually explicit materials and unsavory persons.

   - Some businesses no longer remain open in the evenings and others have left the area allegedly directly or indirectly due to the establishment of adult entertainment businesses.

   - In Hollywood, some churches drive the elderly to services and others provide private guards in their parking lots.

   - Nearly all persons opposed the concentration of adult entertainment activities.

7. Responses to questionnaires of the City Planning Department have indicated that:

   - Appraisers, realtors, lenders, etc. believe that the concentration of adult entertainment establishments has had adverse economic effects on both businesses and residential property in respect to market value, rental value and rentability/saleability; that the adverse economic effects diminish with distance but that the effects extend even beyond a 1000-foot radius; and that the effects are related to the degree of concentration and to the specific type of adult entertainment business.

   - Businessmen, residents, etc. believe that the concentration of adult entertainment establishments has adverse effects on both the quality of life, and on business and property values. Among the adverse business effects cited are: difficulty in retaining and attracting customers to non- "adult entertainment" businesses; difficulty in recruiting employees; and difficulty in renting office space and keeping desirable tenants. Among the adverse effects on the quality of life cited are increased crime; the effects on children; neighborhood appearance, litter and graffiti.

8. A review of the percentage changes in the assessed value of commercial and residential property between 1970 and 1976 for the study areas containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses have indicated that:

   - The three study areas in Hollywood containing such businesses have increased less than the Hollywood Community, and less than the City as a whole. Two of the three study areas in Hollywood have increased less than their corresponding "control areas"; however, one such study area increased by a greater amount than its corresponding control area.

   - The study area in Studio City has increased by a greater percentage than its corresponding "control area", by a slightly lower percentage than the Sherman Oaks-Studio City Community; and by a considerably greater percentage than the entire city.

   - The study area in North Hollywood has increased by a considerably lower percentage than its corresponding control area, the North Hollywood Community, and the City as a whole.

   - On the basis of the foregoing it cannot be concluded that adult entertainment businesses have directly influenced changes in the assessed value of commercial and residential properties in the areas analyzed.

9. There are various existing laws and regulations (other than zoning) available to effect proper regulation of adult entertainment businesses.

10. There is a high degree of turnover in individual adult entertainment businesses as evidenced on page 51 (Much of this change is probably due to Police enforcement.)

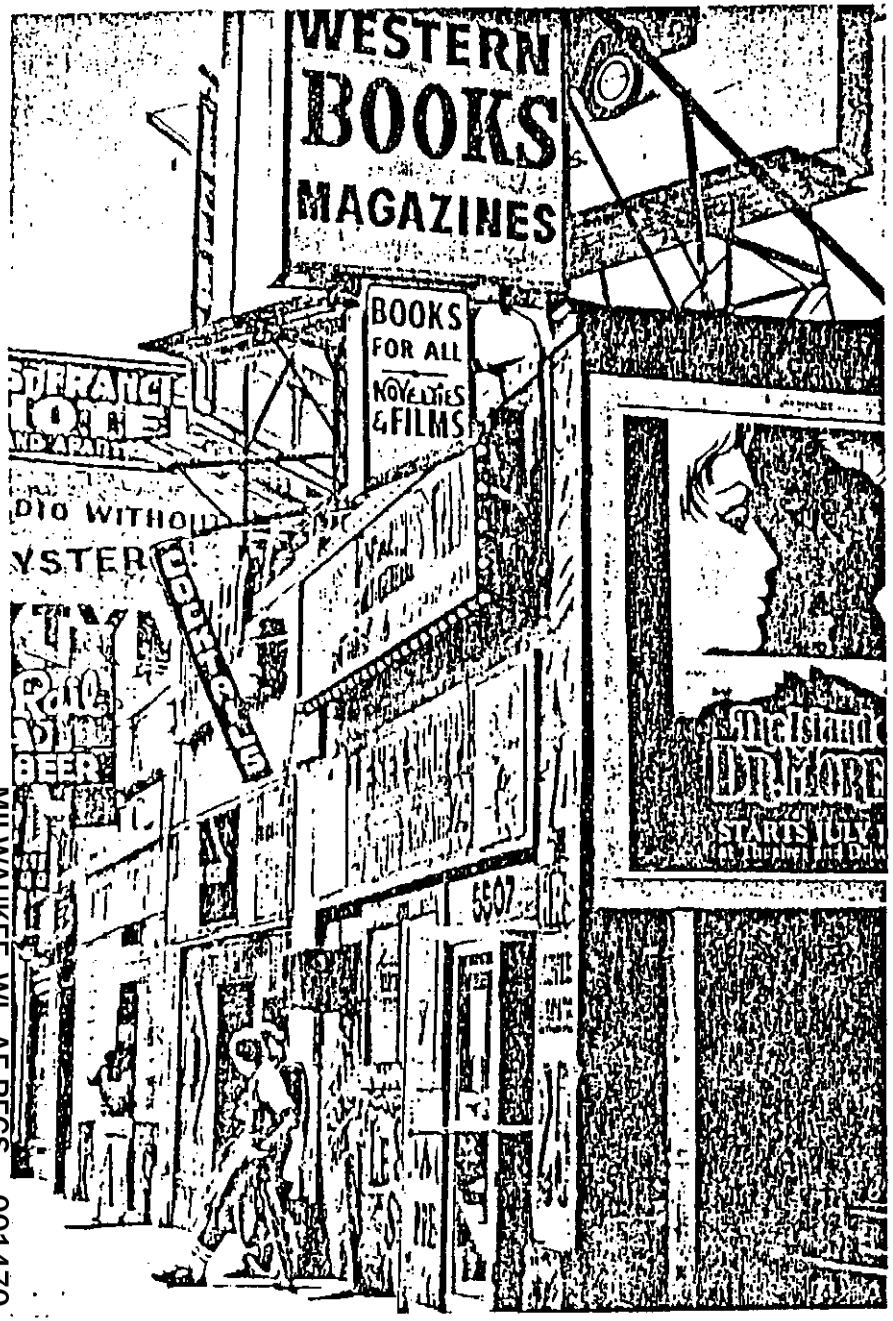
11. The Los Angeles City Council, both on its own initiative and at the urging of numerous citizens groups, has proposed a variety of approaches to limiting the possibly deleterious effects of "adult entertainment" business on neighborhoods.

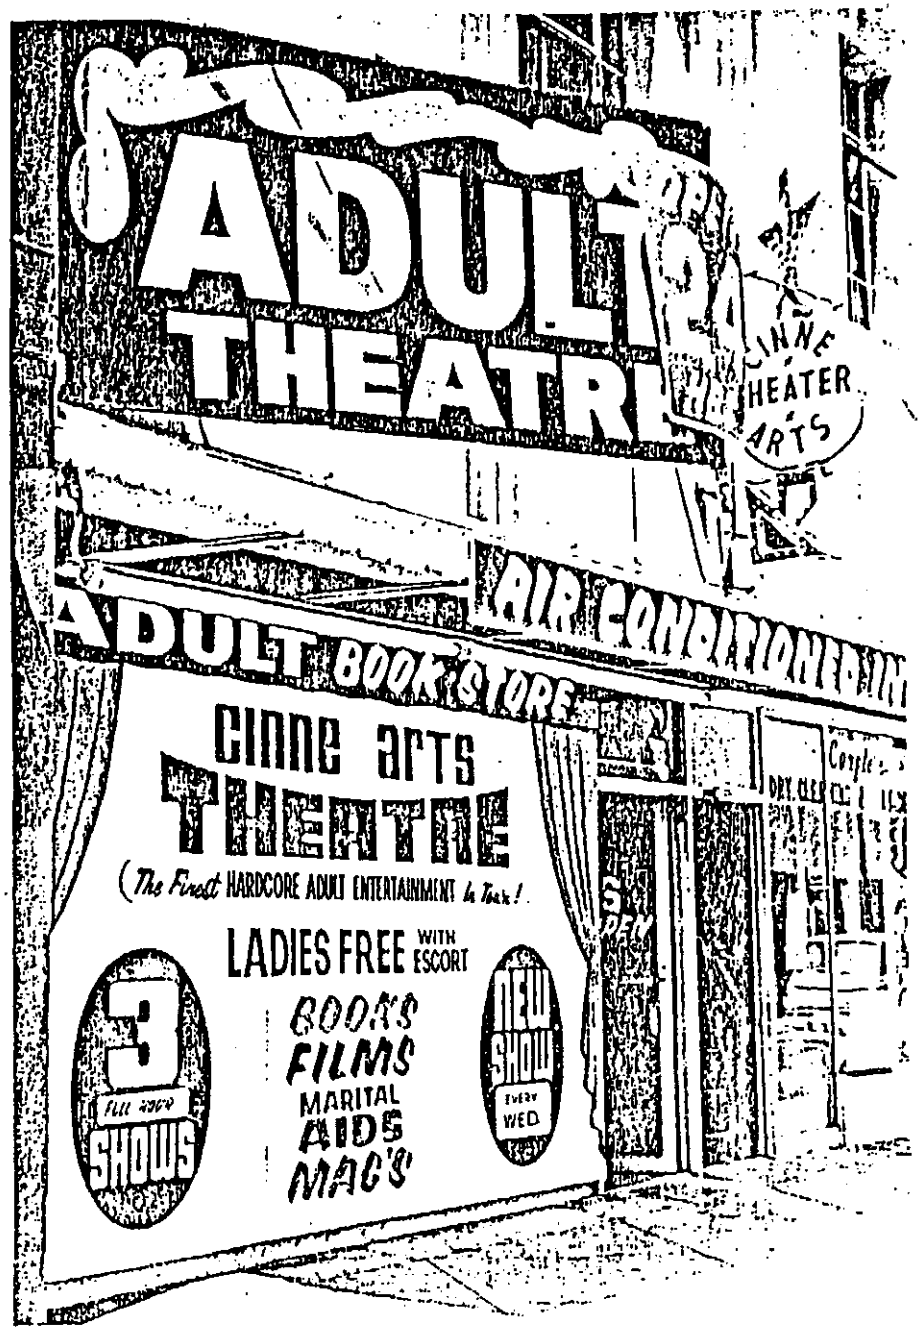
12. At least 10 cities have adopted ordinances similar to the Detroit dispersal ordinance. Several other cities have enacted other forms of regulations.

13. The Detroit ordinance does not regulate massage parlors. Of the cities with regulations, three have included massage parlors within the purview of their zoning ordinance.

14. None of the cities surveyed call out or regulate adult motels as a part of their "adult entertainment" ordinance.

15. The Detroit Ordinance is prospective in its application and therefore does not include an amortization provision, i.e. provide for a time period for the removal of existing businesses. Although other such ordinances have included such provisions, none had been validated by the courts at the time of this study.





RICHARD'S #1
ADULT THEATRE
ADULT
MOVIES
3 HR.
SHOW
OPEN 24 HOURS

FREE ADULT
MOVIES
DELI
BEER
DANCERS
WANTED!
BEER
IS BACK
LIVE
ON STAGE
FOXY
LADY
DANCING Girls
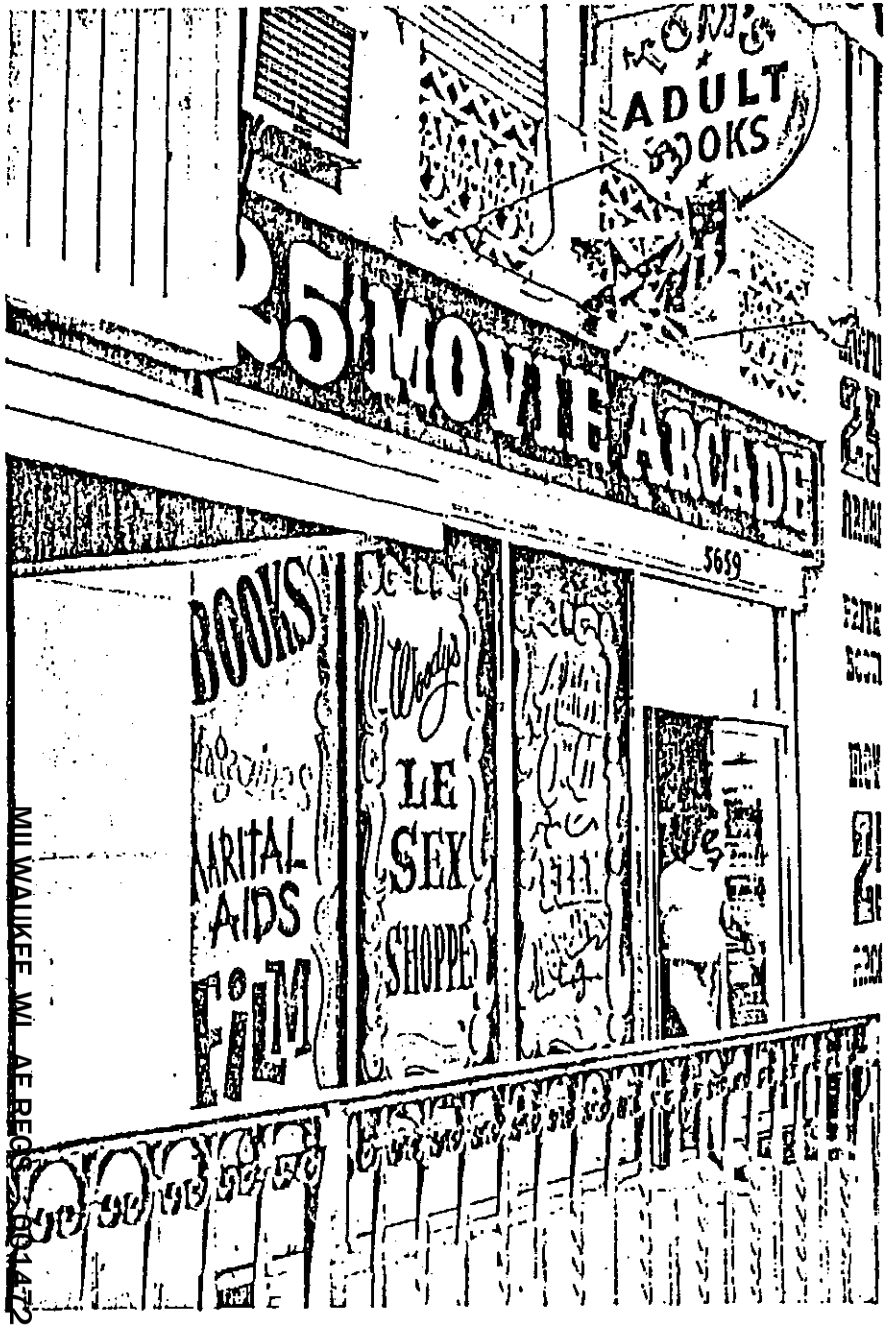
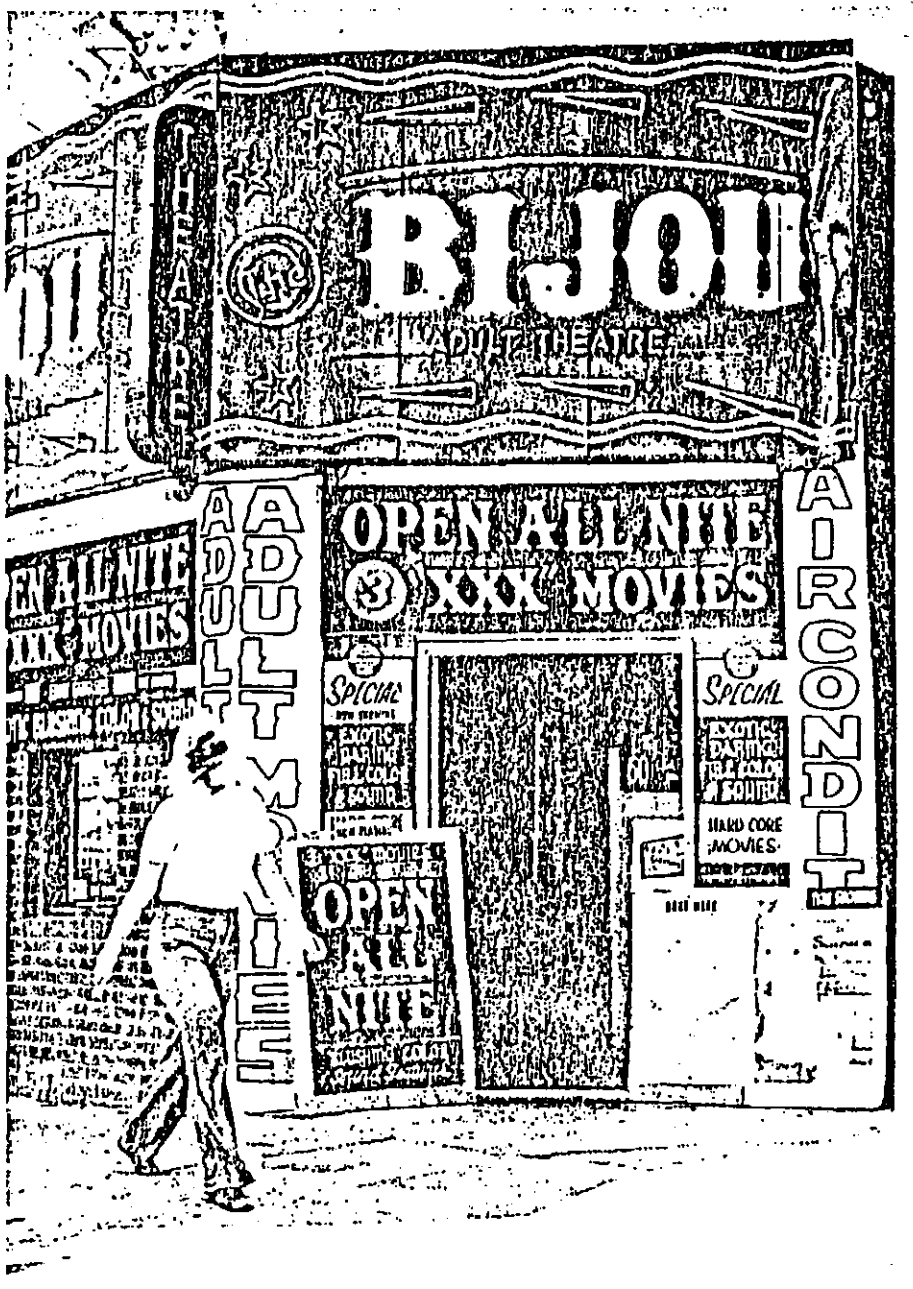
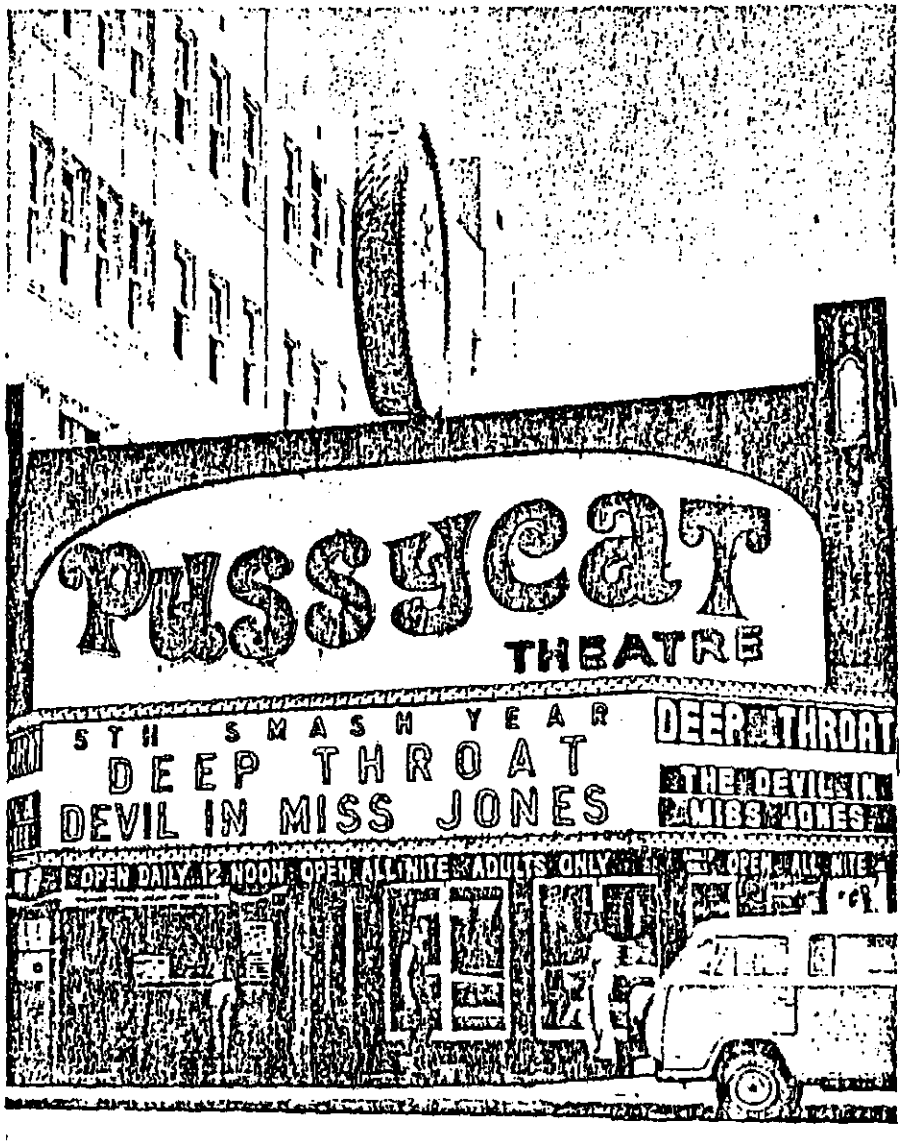
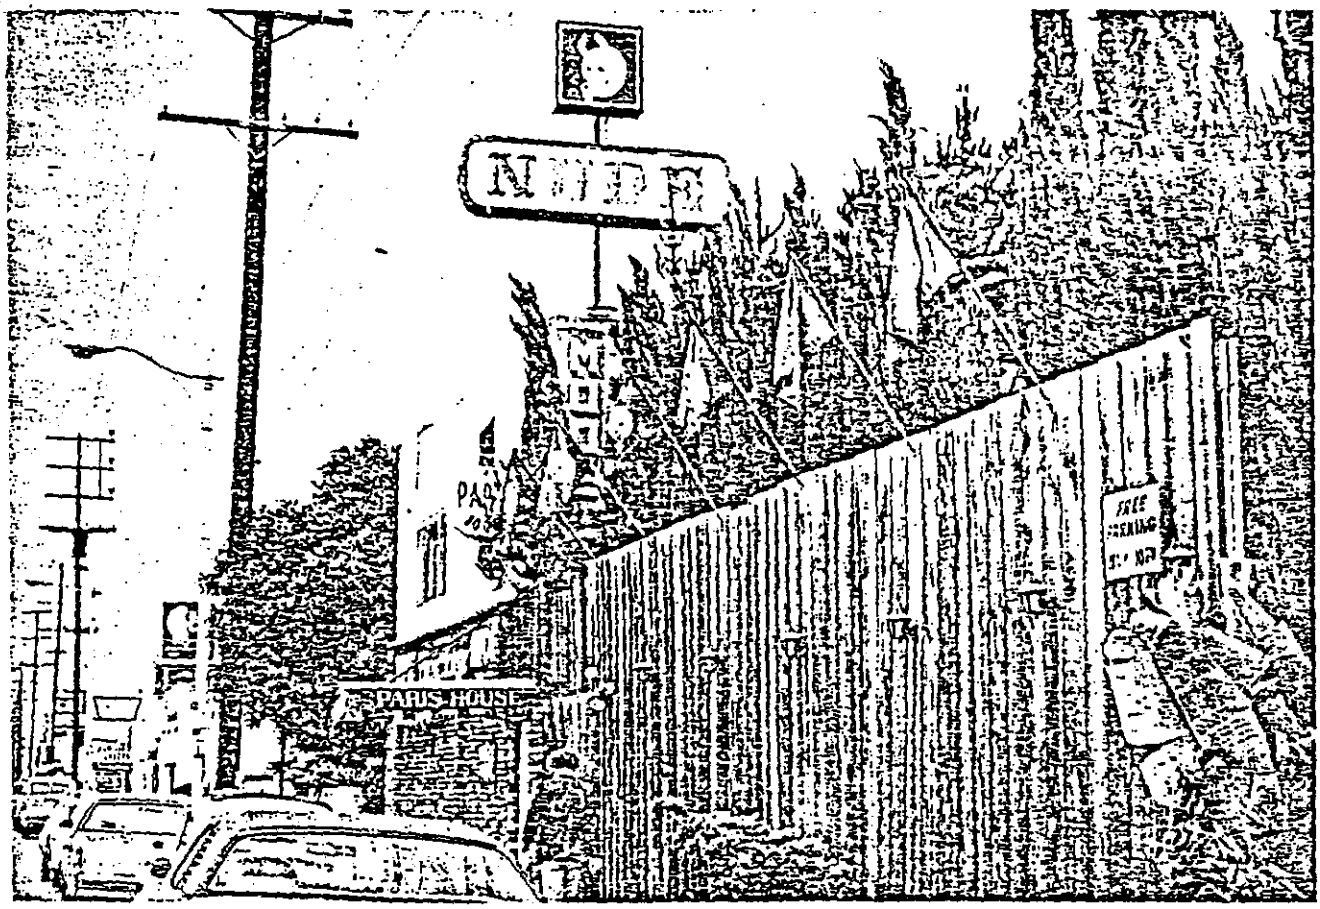
NO
COVER CHARGE
LIVE
SEMI
NUDE
GIRLS
AMUS

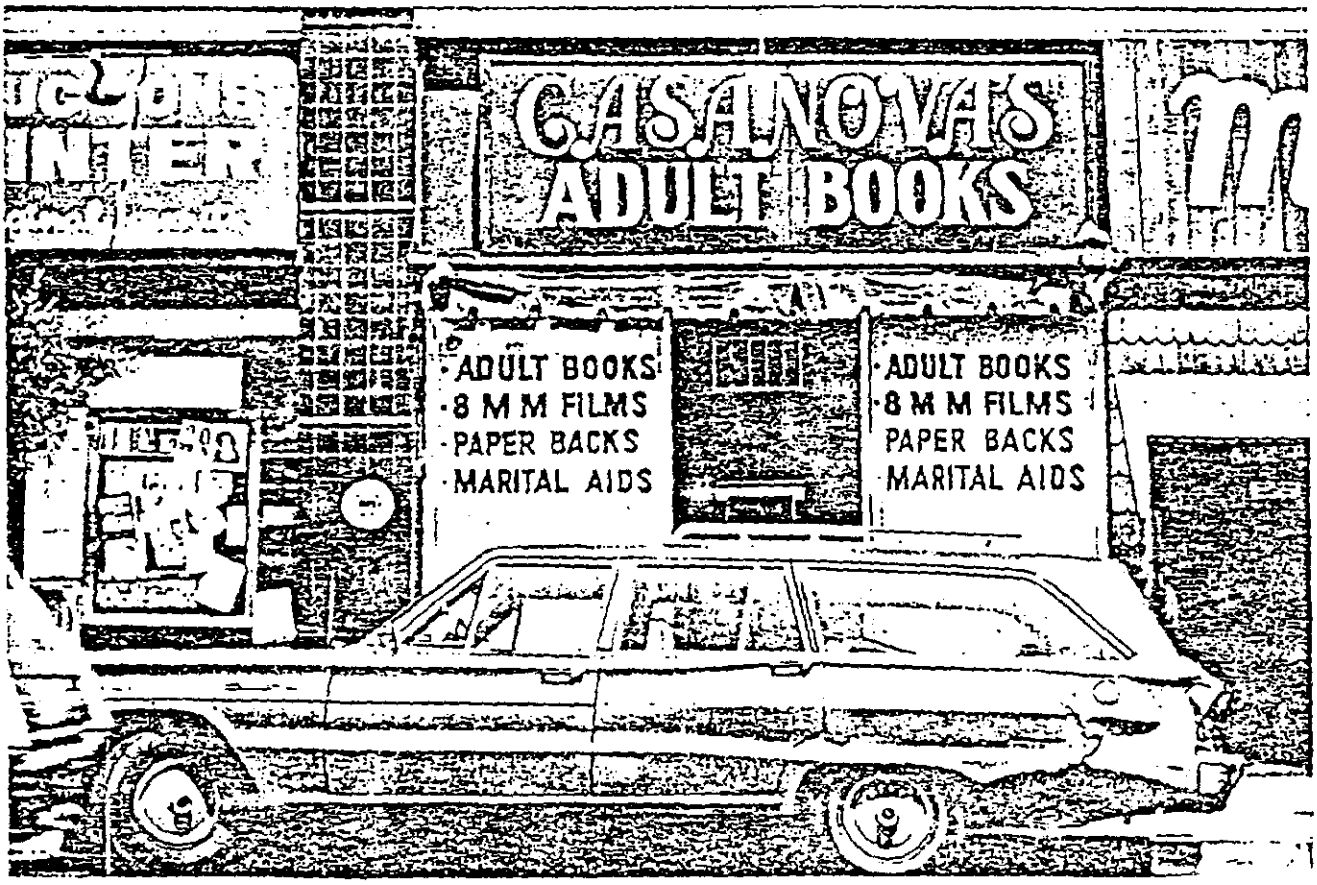








PARIS HOUSE



CASANOVAS
ADULT BOOKS
·ADULT BOOKS
·8 M M FILMS
·PAPER BACKS
·MARITAL AIDS
·ADULT BOOKS
·8 M M FILMS
PAPER BACKS
MARITAL AIDS

II.

PURPOSE AND SCOPE

On January 12, 1977, the Los Angeles City Council instructed this Department, with the assistance of other City agencies, to conduct a comprehensive study to determine whether the concentration of so-called "adult entertainment" establishments has a blighting or degrading effect on nearby properties and/or neighborhoods. The term "adult entertainment" is a general term utilized by the Planning staff to collectively refer to businesses which primarily engage in the sale of material depicting sex or in providing certain sexual services. These would include the following: adult bookstores; X-rated theaters; adult motels with X-rated entertainment; massage parlors; sexual therapy establishments (other than those operated by a licensed psychologist, psychiatrist, etc.); and nude, topless or bottomless bars and restaurants.

During the past few years, there has been increasing concern in Los Angeles over the proliferation of such sexually oriented businesses. The derivation of such concern is varied--religious, moral, sociological and economic. The positions advocated by the public range from a "laissez faire" attitude to outright moral indignation and demand for prohibition.

It should be noted at this time that the topic of newsracks, was not dealt with in this study. The primary reason for not considering newsracks is that, in addition to the absence of a specific Council request for this Department to deal with that subject, this matter has been and continues to be a topic of litigation in our state courts. Additionally, other public agencies, including the City Attorney, Bureau of Street Maintenance, and Building and Safety, are presently pursuing assignments regarding newsracks, and it is premature to determine whether newsracks could feasibly be studied as "adult entertainment" businesses, from a practical or constitutional standpoint.

In giving the Planning Department this assignment, the City Council essentially called for a fact-finding process to determine whether adult entertainment establishments, where they exist in concentration, cause blight and deterioration. When this question has been posed to the public, there have frequently been anguished retorts to the effect that "the answer is so obvious it is ridiculous to even ask the question," and "what is the City waiting for before it takes action to eliminate these scourges of society?"

On the other side of the spectrum, certain parties who are against the adoption of any regulations regarding "adult entertainment" question the legitimacy of the government's interest in the subject; and they have noted that magazines as "scurrilous" as those sold in adult bookstores are also available in the markets and drugstores where the likelihood of perusal by youngsters is obviously greater than within the confines of an adult bookstore (where no person under 18 years of age is allowed).

In completing this study, the Planning Department has made every effort to ensure a fair and unbiased analysis of "adult entertainment." The staff has been instructed to objectively review information of a factual nature; and, although the personal feelings of organized groups and the public at large were forcefully expressed at the two public meetings and in the study questionnaires, the staff has maintained independence from such strong emotions in evaluating the data gathered.

As noted above, the staff has specifically been given the charge to determine whether the concentration of "adult entertainment" establishments has any blighting or degrading effect on the neighborhoods in which they reside. We did not consider the specific nature or content of the materials or services rendered, advertised or promised, for this would have constituted a censor-like role for the Department which was neither desired nor requested by the Council.

This study has focused on the Hollywood community as well as portions of Studio City and North Hollywood as those areas of Los Angeles having the greatest concentration of "adult entertainment" establishments. In order to assess the effect of the concentration of "adult entertainment" establishments in these areas, the staff has analyzed such factors as changes in assessed property values, and reviewed various crime statistics as well as other demographic and related data as available from the U.S. Census. In addition, the Department has reviewed various established approaches to the regulation of "adult entertainment" business, including legislation already enacted by other jurisdictions, and earlier efforts of the City of Los Angeles to regulate such businesses.

By means of two public meetings on the subject conducted by representatives of the City Planning Commission, and through the use of a mail survey questionnaire, the Department has also attempted to provide additional documentation relative to the actual or perceived impact of adult entertainment businesses on the community. Current information on crime statistics has been provided in a separate report prepared by the Los Angeles Police Department, major portions of which are herein included.

III.

METHODS CURRENTLY USED TO REGULATE "ADULT ENTERTAINMENT" BUSINESSES

A. APPROACHES TO THE REGULATION OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT BY LAND USE REGULATION

Two primary methods of regulating "adult entertainment" businesses via land use regulations have developed in the United States: the concentration approach, as evidenced by the "Combat Zone" in Boston, and the dispersal approach, initially developed by Detroit.

1. Boston Approach

In Boston the "Combat Zone" was officially established by designation of an overlay Adult Entertainment District in November of 1974. The purpose of the overlay district was to create an area in which additional special uses would be permitted in designated Commercial Zones which were not permitted in these zones on a citywide basis.

The "Combat Zone" had existed unofficially for many years in Boston, as the area in question contained a majority of the "adult entertainment" facilities in the City. The ordinance was adopted in response to concern over the spreading of such uses to neighborhoods where they were deemed to be inappropriate. Other considerations included facilitating the policing of such activities and allowing those persons who do not care to be subjected to such businesses to avoid them.

Under the Boston ordinance, adult bookstores and "commercial entertainment businesses" are considered conditional or forbidden uses except in the Business Entertainment District. Existing "adult entertainment" businesses are permitted to continue as non-conforming uses, but, if discontinued for a period of two years, may not be re-established. Establishment of uses in areas of the city other than the "Combat Zone" requires a public hearing before the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The effectiveness and appropriateness of the Boston approach is a subject of controversy. There has been some indication that it has resulted in an increase in crime within the district and that there is an increased vacancy rate in the surrounding office buildings. Due to complaints of serious criminal incidents, law enforcement activities have been increased and a number of liquor licenses in the area have been revoked. Since the "Combat Zone" and most of the surrounding area are part of various redevelopment projects, however, the change in character of the area cannot be attributed solely to the existence of "adult entertainment" businesses.

In Los Angeles, the Police Department has investigated the effect of "adult entertainment" businesses in Hollywood and found a link between the clustering of these establishments and an increase in crime. (See Section V, pages 51 to 55). For this reason, and due to the enforcement problems created by such concentrations, the Police Department is not in favor of a concentration approach in the City of Los Angeles. Public testimony at hearings and through Planning Department questionnaires has indicated an overwhelming public disapproval of this approach for the City of Los Angeles.

2. Detroit Approach

The City of Detroit has developed a contrasting approach to the control of "adult entertainment" businesses. The Detroit Ordinance attempts to disperse adult bookstores and theaters by providing that such uses cannot, without special permission, be located within 1000 feet of any other "regulated uses" or within 500 feet of a residentially zoned area.

This ordinance was an amendment to an existing anti-skid row ordinance which attempted to prevent further neighborhood deterioration by dispersing cabarets, motels, pawnshops, billiard halls, taxi dance halls and similar establishments rather than allowing them to concentrate.

The ordinance was immediately challenged and eventually was upheld by the United States Supreme Court. (Young vs American Mini Theaters 96 Supreme Ct. 771, 1976.)

In response to our request, data supplied by the City of Detroit Police Department indicates that the combination of the dispersal ordinance and a related ordinance prohibiting the promotion of pornography have been an effective tool in controlling adult businesses. To date, 18 adult bookstores and 6 adult theaters have been closed. There are 51 such businesses still in operation in Detroit and 38 pending court cases for various ordinance violations.

3. Variations Adopted by Other Cities

The success of the Detroit ordinance has spurred attempts by a number of other cities to adopt similar ordinances. The uses controlled and the types of controls established by these ordinances are summarized in Tables I and II, infra.

While the current study of the effect of "adult entertainment" businesses on neighborhoods in Los Angeles has encompassed all forms of "adult entertainment", the ordinances reviewed and the Detroit Ordinance specifically, are less encompassing in scope. Table I on the following page, lists and reviews a number of ordinances, which regulate various specified adult uses.

TABLE I

TABLE I

Number of Zoning Ordinances Regulating Specified Adult Entertainment Uses

(11 Ordinances Reviewed-1 not adopted)

USE	No. of Cities Regulating*
Adult Theaters	11
Adult Bookstores	9
Mini-theaters and coin operated facilities	5
Massage Parlors (includes "physical culture establishments)
Modeling Studios/Body Painting	2
Pool/Billiard Halls	2
Topless Entertainment	2
Newsracks	1
Adult Motels	0

* (Numbers have incorporated-where appropriate-uses entitled "physical culture establishments" and "businesses to which persons under 18 could not be admitted".)

The Detroit dispersal ordinance does not regulate massage parlors, nor does it require any existing business to close by amortization. Many of the more recent ordinances include amortization provisions and several of these are currently in varying stages of litigation.

Perhaps the most comprehensive ordinance proposed to date (although not adopted) is that of New York City. The proposed ordinance creates five classes of controlled uses, one of which is entitled "physical culture establishments" and is defined as a general class including any establishment which offers massage or other physical contact by members of the opposite sex. The ordinance would also apply to clubs where the primary activity of such club constitutes one of the five defined classes of adult uses.

The ordinance also provides for a special permit exempting individual adult uses from amortization requirements when the Board of Standards and Appeals makes findings regarding:

1. The effect on adjacent property;

2. Distance to nearest residential district;

3. The concentration that may remain and its effect on the surrounding neighborhood;

4. That retention of the business will not interfere with any program of neighborhood preservation or renewal; or

5. In the case of an adult bookstore or motion picture theater, the Board finds that the harm created by the use is outweighed by its benefits.

Locally, the cities of Bellflower and Norwalk have enacted ordinances requiring adult bookstores and theaters to obtain a conditional use permit. As a part of their study, the City of Bellflower surveyed over 90 cities in Southern California to determine how other cities were controlling adult bookstores. Of the cities which responded to the Bellflower survey, 12 require a conditional use permit for new bookstores. The conditions for obtaining such a permit generally include dispersal and distance requirements based upon the Detroit model. Bellflower also includes parking requirements and the screening of windows to prevent a view of the interior; it prohibits the use of loudspeakers or sound epuipment which can be heard from public or semi-public areas.

Other cities impose such controls as design review, prohibition of obscene material on signs and required identification of the business as "adult". Such controls are a possible alternative or addition to regulation of adult uses by location.

Exterior controls affect the aspects of adult businesses which are most offensive to some citizens. The basis for such controls stems from the recognition of privacy as a constitutional right and the right to be "left alone" as a part of that right.[1] (See Paris Adult Theatre I v Slayton, 93 S.Ct. 2628 1973.)

Table II, following, provides a comparison and description of ordinances from various cities which are regulating "adult entertainment" businesses by dispersal.

---

1 The theory that there should be no first amendment bar to sign controls is discussed by Charles Rembar, in "Obscenity--Forget It", Atlantic Monthly, May 1977, pgs. 37-41.

ORDINANCES REGULATING ADULT ENTERTAINMENT USES BY DISPERSAL

CITY	USES CONTROLLED	DISTANCE FROM RESIDENTIAL	DISTANCE FROM CHURCHES SCHOOLS	CONCEN-TRATION	AMORTI-ZATION	APPEALS PROCEDURE	OTHER CONTROLS
Seattle	Adult theaters				yes-90 days		Allow only in BM, CM, & CMT Zones; terminate such uses in all other zones
Denver	Entertainment to which persons under 18 could not be lawfully admitted	500'
allas	Adult shows or theaters	1000'	1000'
leveland	Adult bookstores, adult movies and mini-motion picture theaters, pool or billiard halls			1/1000'
troit	Adult bookstores, adult motion picture theater, mini-motion picture theaters, cabarets, hotels, motels, pawnshops, pool or billiard halls, public lodging houses, secondhand stores, shoeshine parlors, taxi-dance halls	500'		2/1000'		Waiver by petition of 51% of persons owning/ residing or doing business within 500'	Ordinance prohibiting promotion of pornography

(cont'd.)

CITY	USES CONTROLLED	DISTANCE FROM RESIDENTIAL	DISTANCE FROM CHURCHES SCHOOLS	CONCEN-TRATION	AMORTI-ZATION	APPEALS PROCEDURE	OTHER CONTROLS
New York (not adopted)	Adult bookstores, motion picture theaters, "topless" entertainment facilities, coin-operated entertainment facilities, physical culture establishments	500'		2-3/ 1000'	1 year closest to R-zone first to go	Special permit exception must make findings	.Sign regulat .Applies to c .Adult use al a primary us
Oakland	Adult bookstores, adult movies, peep shows, massage parlors	1000'		1/1000'	1-3 yrs. if no use permit		All require C. permit
Kansas City	Adult bookstores and motion picture theaters, bath houses, massage shops, modeling studios, artists-body painting studios	1000'	1000'			Waiver, if petition of 51% of persons residing or owning property within 1000' of proposed use	Confined to ove lay C-X zone within C-2, 3,
Santa Barbara	Adult newsracks, bookstores, motion picture theaters		1000' (& from parks or recreation facilities)	1/500'			Public displa defined materia prohibited
ellflower	Adult bookstores, theaters or mini-theaters, massage parlors	1000'	1000' (& from parks or playgrounds)	1/1000'			By C.U. all bui ing openings, entries, windo covered or screened to pre vent view into the interior
	Model studios		500'				No loud speaker

CITY	USES CONTROLLED	DISTANCE FROM RESIDENTIAL	DISTANCE FROM CHURCHES SCHOOLS	CONCEN-TRATION	AMORTI-ZATION	APPEALS PROCEDURES	OTHER CONTROLS
Atlantic City	Adult motion picture theaters, mini-theater, adult bookstores	500'		2/1000'		Waiver of 500' from residential with petitions signed by 51% of parties within 500'	Requires public hearing prior to grant of permit Licensing of massage parlors; no treatment of a person of the opposite sex

B. ALTERNATE OR SUPPLEMENTARY FORMS OF REGULATION CURRENTLY AVAILABLE UNDER STATE AND MUNICIPAL LAW

1. Red Light Abatement Procedure

Red light abatement is a mechanism authorized by state law which allows local government to control criminal sexual behavior by controlling the places in which such behavior occurs.

Sec. 11225 of the California Penal Code generally provides that every building or place used for illegal gambling, lewdness, assignation, or prostitution, or where such acts occur, is a nuisance which shall be enjoined, abated, and prevented. There are three basic steps involved in the City's application of the Red Light Abatement Procedures:

(a) A complaint is filed by the City Attorney based upon the declarations of police officers of instances of prostitution taking place on the premises.

(b) The City attempts to obtain a preliminary injunction to shut down the business until completion of the scheduled trial. If the City succeeds, the premises may only be re-opened as a legitimate business until the time of the trial.

(c) At the trial, the burden is on the City to prove that prohibited acts occurred on the premises. The remedy may be closure of the premises for all purposes for one year, placing the building in the custody of the court, or an order preventing the use of the premises for prostitution forever.

Complaints may be filed by citizens, and Sec. 11228 of the Code provides that in Red Light Abatement Actions "evidence of the general reputation of a place is admissible for the purpose of proving the existence of a nuisance".

This method has been used successfully by the City to abate adult entertainment establishments in Hollywood along Western Avenue. Although Red Light Abatement is directed at regulating sites, a Red Light Abatement conviction can affect the ability of an owner or operator to obtain a permit for a similar business at another site (see permit requirements supra). Due to the requirement of a court proceeding, however, this method of control is both time consuming and expensive.

2. Police Permit Requirements

Section 103 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code provides for the regulation and control of a variety of businesses by permits issued by the Board of Police Commissioners. Permittees are subject to such additional requirements as may be imposed by law or by the rules and regulations of the Board.

Those businesses for which the City of Los Angeles requires a police permit and which may also be oriented towards adult entertainment include:

- Arcades (Sec. 103.101)
- Bath and Massage (103.205)
- Cafe Entertainment and Shows (103.102)
- Dancing Academies, Clubs, Halls (103.105, 106, 106.1)
- Motion Picture Shows (103.108)

In some cases, the specific regulations applied to a business, if enforced, preclude adult entertainment activities as a part of, the operation of the business, with revocation of the operating permit an available remedy for violation of the regulation.

The most detailed regulations are applied to cafe entertainment (Sec. 103.102 LAMC) and are summarized as follows:

a. Businesses Subject to the Regulations

Operation of cafe entertainment or show for profit, and the operation of public places where food or beverages are sold or given away and cafe entertainment, shows, still or motion pictures are furnished, allowed or shown. The regulation does not apply to bands or orchestras providing music for dancing.

b. Cafe Entertainment Defined

"Every form of live entertainment, music solo band or orchestra, act, play, burlesque show, revue, pantomime, scene, song or dance act". The presence of any waitress, hostess, female attendant or female patron or guest attired in a costume of clothing that exposes to public view any portion of either breast at or below the areola is included with the purview of the ordinance.

c. Summary of Activities Prohibited

Allowing any person for compensation or not, or while acting as an entertainer or participating in any live act or demonstration to:

(1) Expose his or her genitals, pubic hair, buttocks or any portion of the female breast at or below the areola.

(2) Wear, use, or employ, or permit, procure, counsel or assist another person to wear use or employ, any device, costume or covering which gives the appearance of or simulates the genitals, pubic hair, natal cleft, perineum or any portion of the female breast at or below the areola.

The above provisions do not apply to a theatrical performance in a theater, concert hall or similar establishment which is primarily devoted to theatrical performances.

The permit may also be revoked for conviction of the permittee, his employee, agent or any person associated with permittee as partner, director, officer, stockholder, associate or manager of:

(1) An offense involving the presentation, exhibition or performance of an obscene production, motion picture or play;

(2) An offense involving lewd conduct;

(3) An offense involving use of force and violence upon the person or another;

(4) An offense involving misconduct with children;

(5) An offense involving maintenance of a nuisance in connection with the same or similar business operation; or, if the permittee has allowed or permitted acts of sexual misconduct to be committed within the licensed premise.

Massage businesses have traditionally been regulated by licensing. The latest changes in the massage regulations became effective in November of 1976. The application for a permit now requires:

(1) detailed information regarding the applicant;

(2) name, address of the owner and lessor of the property upon or in which the business is to be conducted, and a copy of the lease or rental agreement;

(3) requirement of a public hearing prior to issuance of a permit for the operation of a massage business.

Operating requirements for massage businesses include:

- a permit for each massage technician;
- regulation of the hours of operation;
- posted list of available services and their cost;
- a record of each treatment, the name and address of the patron, name of employee and type of treatment administered.

So-called "private" clubs or "consenting adult clubs" which have ostensibly been formed as an alternative to massage parlors had until recently been regulated via the requirement of a social club permit. In June 1977, however, the ordinance establishing such requirement was declared unconstitutional by a Los Angeles Muncipal Court due to unreasonable restrictions on the freedom of association. To date, it is unknown whether the City will appeal the ruling or amend the ordinance.

C. OTHER REGULATION OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT BUSINESSES IN LOS ANGELES

Regulation of adult entertainment businesses has a long history in Los Angeles. In 1915 the "prevalence of sex evils arising out of massage parlors" caused the City Council then to enact Section 27.03 (L.A.M.C.) as "a safeguard against the deterioration of the social life of the community."[2] The ordinance provided:

> "(a) It shall be unlawful for any person to administer, for hire or reward, to any person of the opposite sex, any massage, any alcohol rub or similar treatment, any fomentation, any bath or electric or magnetic treatment, nor shall any person cause or permit in or about his place or business or in connection with his business, any agent, employee, or servant or any other person under his control or supervision, to administer any such treatment to any person of the opposite sex."[3].

This provision remained in the Code, in one form or another, until a similar Los Angeles County ordinance was declared invalid in 1972 due to the preemption of the criminal aspects of sexual activity by the State.[4]

In reaching its conclusion, the court referred to the discussion of the Los Angeles City ordinance in In Re Maki. This 1943 case upheld the constitutional validity of the ordinance, and, according to the court, established the primary purpose of such ordinance as the limiting of criminal sexual activity.

The late 1960's and early 1970's brought a proliferation of nude bars and sexual scam joints in the Los Angeles area. In 1969, the Cafe Entertainment regulations (Section 103.102 Los Angeles Business Code) was modified to include strict controls on nudity (see discussion infra).

A variety of Council motions were made to control other types of "adult entertainment" such as arcades, massage parlors, and newsracks. Many of these were initiated due to substantial citizen complaints, and some resulted in final ordinances. (See Table III pages 19a to 19d.)

---

[2] In Re Maki 56 CA 2d. 635, 1943.

[3] Section 27.03.1 Los Angeles Municipal Code, 1938.

[4] Lancaster v Municipal Court 6 C 3d 805, 1972.

Beginning in 1974, several Council motions were made generally calling for an investigation and preparation of an ordinance regulating adult theaters and bookstores. The advice of the City Attorney was sought, and at the suggestion of that Office, action was delayed pending the Supreme Court decision regarding the Detroit Ordinance. That decision was handed down in June of 1976. On July 13, 1976, a Council motion was introduced by Councilman Wilkinson requesting a study of concentrations of adult entertainment similar to that of Detroit.

Table III provides a generalized summary of the major Council files and actions relating to adult entertainment.

While not part of this study, a recently enacted ordinance controlling on-site sale of alcoholic beverages should be recognized as an attempt to control another adult-type use. Effective March 1, 1977, the Los Angeles Muncipal Code was amended to require a conditional use permit for the on-site sale of alcoholic beverages. (Council File No. 70-200, City Plan Case No. 22878). Although aimed at the regulation of anti-social activities in all establishments serving alcoholic beverages, the subject ordinance would, of course, also have a "spillover" effect with regard to those businesses which have adult entertainment as well as alcoholic beverages.

Generally, the ordinance would, in all cases, require issuance of a conditional use permit for any business selling alcoholic beverages for on-site consumption, rather than the previous practice of permitting them as a matter of right in certain zones. The advantage of the new procedure is that as a prerequisite of approval of an individual application, there must be a public hearing to determine whether the proposed use will have a detrimental effect upon nearby properties and the neighborhood in which it is being proposed. In the long run, the ordinance may prove to be an effective device to regulate uses (dispensing alcoholic beverages) which tend to have a deteriorating effect on an area, some of which may, coincidentally, also be adult entertainment businesses.

TABLE III

CITY COUNCIL FILES RELATING TO ADULT ENTERTAINMENT

DATE	FILE NO.	SPONSORS	RECOMMENDATION	DISPOSITION
3/23/70		North Hollywood Chamber of Commerce	That topless and bottomless bars and pornographic film and literature be confined to the M-3 zone.	Disapproved by the Planning Commission.
3/71	C.F. 72-374	Councilman Snyder	Effort to control bath or massage parlors by modifying the definition of "physical therapy" in state law. And, City support for legislation that would make Physical Therapists, Chiropractors responsible for activities in their offices and prohibit treatment by unlicensed assistants unless the license holder is in the room.	Introduction of AB 823 modifying the definition of physical therapy - Died in Committee November 1972.
			Recommend modification of Board of Chiropractors Rules and Regulations.	State Board of Chiropractic Examiners adopted "Board Rule 316" which makes chiropractors responsible for the conduct of employee in their place of practice, and specifically prohibits sexual acts or erotic behavior involving patients patrons or customers.

TABLE III (cont'd.)

DATE	FILE NO.	SPONSORS	RECOMMENDATION	DISPOSITION
2/74	C.F. 72-374 'S-1 S-2	Stevenson and Wilkinson	Study of the need and feasibility of regulating hours of operation, minimum requirement for practitioners - and health and safety conditions in massage parlors.	1/9/75 Board of Police Commissioners approved ordinance and adopted agreement with County to provide inspection of massage parlors.

TABLE III (cont'd.)

DATE	FILE NO.	SPONSOR	RECOMMENDATION	DISPOSITION
10/18/74	C.F. 74-4521	Snyder, Robert Stevenson, Ferraro	Provide by Ordinance that permits may not be granted to operate motion picture theaters which show "adult" films or bookstores which sell printed material which may not be sold to minors at locations which are within 1,500 feet of the nearest school, playground or church.	Police and Fire and Civil Defense Committee referred prepared ordinance to Planning Committee.
/21/75	C.F. 74-1969		Police permit requirement for arcades becomes effective. Regulates 5 or more coin or slug operated machines. Revocation for non-compliance with health, zoning, fire requirements, obscenity convictions. Regulates hours of operation.	Regulation subsequently found unconstitutional by the Appellate Department of Superior Court, L.A. County.
/27/76		City Planning Commission	Planning Department report to City Planning Commission, at their request, regarding proposed regulation of massage parlors and adult bookstores in Los Angeles.	No action taken.
/9/76	C.F. 73-374 S-1A		Council adopts ordinance requiring permits to operate a massage business, act as a massage technician and gives a massage for compensation effective 4/17/76.	Ordinance now in effect.
'23/76	C.F. 74-4521 S-2	Wilkinson and Stevenson	Require public hearings prior to opening of an adult bookstore which has for sale sexually explicit material; limit the hours of operation.	Referred to Police, Fire and Civil Defense.

TABLE III (cont'd.)

DATE	FILE NO.	SPONSOR	RECOMMENDATION	DISPOSITION
6/25/76	C.F. 74-4521	Wilkinson, Gibson, Nowell, Braude, Russell, Wachs, Stevenson, Bernardi, Farrell, Lorenzen	Request City Attorney to draft an ordinance following Young vs. American Mini Theaters guidelines.	Referred to Police, Fire and Civil Defense Committees.
6/28/76	C.F. 74-4521	Stevenson, Wachs	Preparation of zoning ordinance to prohibit sexual scam joints, adult bookstores and theaters, nude live entertainment within 500' from a private dwelling, church, school, public building, park or recreation center, of within 1000' of each other, to be retroactive, priority to the oldest establishments.	Referred to Police, Fire and Civil Defense Committees.
7/13/76	C.F. 74-4521	Wilkinson	Instruct the City Planning Department to prepare a report to the City Council regarding the extent of any possible degradation of neighborhoods in Los Angeles due to concentration of adult entertainment establishments.	Consolidation of above cases. After approval of full Council assigned to Planning Department with the cooperation of other involved agencies.
3/15/77	C.F. 74-1969		Police, Fire and Civil Defense Committee recommendation to amend Sections 103.101, 103.101.1 of the Municipal Code - (A revised ordinance to regulate arcades).	Adopted by full Council.
/5/77	C.F. 77-860 S-49	File not available for review.	Support state legislation providing specific penalties for use of minors for pornography.
/11/77	C.F. 77-1997	File not available for review.	Regarding prostitution enforcement laws.

IV.

METHODOLOGY AND ANALYSIS

Methodology

In complying with the City Council's instructions, the Department has utilized various available data sources, including property assessment data, U. S. Census data, and obtained other information germane to the subject in an effort to determine, on an empirical basis, the effects (if any) of adult entertainment facilities on surrounding business and other properties. The Department also reviewed sales data of commercial and residential property in areas containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses and in "control areas" containing no such concentrations. The staff also attempted to secure information on the sales volume of commmercial properties, but was unable to obtain this information.

It should be emphasized that, in conducting this study, every effort was made by the Department to preclude the introduction of subjective judgment or other bias, except where the opinions of other individuals or groups were specifically solicited.* It was the Department's intent to base any conclusions entirely on relevant data and other factual information which became available during the course of conducting the study.

The procedure employed by the Department in conducting this study involved the following areas of emphasis:

1. A measure of the change from 1970-76 in assessed "market value" of land and improvements for the property occupied by and within an appropriate radius of five known "clusters" (nodes) of "adult entertainment" businesses. An identical measure of four "control areas" without concentrations of adult entertainment businesses was also made to determine if a significant difference in the rate of change in assessment values occurred in such areas between 1970 and 1976. Comparisons were also made with the entire community in which the concentration nodes were located.

2. An analysis of responses received from a mail survey questionnaire conducted by the Planning Department;

* Expert opinions were requested from realtors, realty boards, appraisers and lenders through letters and questionnaires. The Department also sent letters to local members of the American Sociological Association requesting their assistance in this study. Their replies were limited in number and not significant in terms of this study.

3. Review of available data from the U.S. censuses of 1960 and 1970, including the results of a "cluster analysis" and description of Hollywood based on such analysis prepared by the City's Community Analysis Bureau;

4. An analysis of verbal and written testimony obtained at two public meetings on this subject conducted on April 27 and 28, 1977 by representatives of the City Planning Commission;

5. A review of various approaches to the regulation of "adult entertainment" businesses, including legislation enacted by other jurisdictions;

6. An analysis of alternate forms of control, including existing Municipal Code provisions relative to this general subject;

7. A discussion of earlier efforts of the City to control adult entertainment in Los Angeles; and

8. A presentation of the Los Angeles City Police Department's report dealing with crime statistics and their relation to "adult entertainment" businesses in Hollywood.

9. The actual "last sales price" of commercial and residential properties in areas containing concentrations of "adult entertainment" businesses were compared with the assessed values of property in such areas. The results were then compared with "control areas" containing no concentration of such businesses. (It was found that the actual sales prices tended to parallel assessed values and that in other cases the comparison was inconclusive. No further discussion of this aspect of the study is contained herein.)

10. In an attempt to determine any possible effects of "adult entertainment establishments" on business sales volume, the Department reviewed sales data from a Dun and Bradstreet computer tape file for the years 1970 and 1976. However, this source of date could not be used since it did not contain directly comparable information for the two years indicated. (A substantial change in the number of member firms listed apparently occurred after 1970.) In addition, the Department requested sales information from the City Clerk's Business License File. The City Clerk advised that the generation of the information requested would require 100 man-days of work; consequently their information could not be obtained within the time constraints for completion of the study.

Items 5, 6, and 7, above, are the subject of Section III of this report, entitled "Methods Currently Used to Regulate Adult Entertainment Business". The Police Department's report is discussed herein as Section V. The Planning Department's analysis of topics 1 through 4 is described in detail, below.

A. CHANGES IN ASSESSED VALUATION BETWEEN 1970-76 IN FIVE SEPARATE AREAS CONTAINING HIGH CONCENTRATIONS OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT BUSINESSES

In order to determine if there has been a significant change in assessed property values which may have been influenced by the proliferation of "adult entertainment" businesses, the Department has calculated the change in the assessed value of land and improvements for properties occupied by, and located within, a 1,000 to 1,800 foot radius of known concentrations of adult entertainment businesses. Five such areas were selected for analysis, as described below. The year 1970 was selected as the base period because of the availability of data for that year, and since that point in time corresponds approximately with the beginning of the proliferation of adult entertainment businesses in Los Angeles. The percentage change in the assessed "market" value of land and improvements for commercial and residential properties was calculated for the 1970 base year and for 1976.

Similar calculations covering the same time period were also prepared for "control areas" (containing no concentration of adult entertainment businesses) but which were similar, in terms of zoning and land use, or which were located in geographical proximity to the study area nodes. Four such control areas were selected.

1. Study and Control Areas

On the basis of field invesigations and other available data, the Department determined that there are five different areas within the City suitable for analysis, each containing a relatively high concentration of adult entertainment establishments. As shown in Exhibits "A" and "B" on the following pages, three of these concentrations (or "nodes" of activity) are located in Hollywood; one is in Studio City; and one is in North Hollywood. In each case, the focal point of the area selected for analysis was the intersection of two major streets, with the adult entertainment businesses located along the commercially zoned frontage of one or both of the streets forming the intersection. In four of the five areas selected, residentially zoned and developed properties are situated not farther than one-half block from the commercially-zoned frontage. (One node in Hollywood is entirely surrounded by commercial properties.)

EXHIBIT A

ADULT ENTERTAINMENT STUDY
BY CENSUS TRACTS

HOLLYWOOD AREA

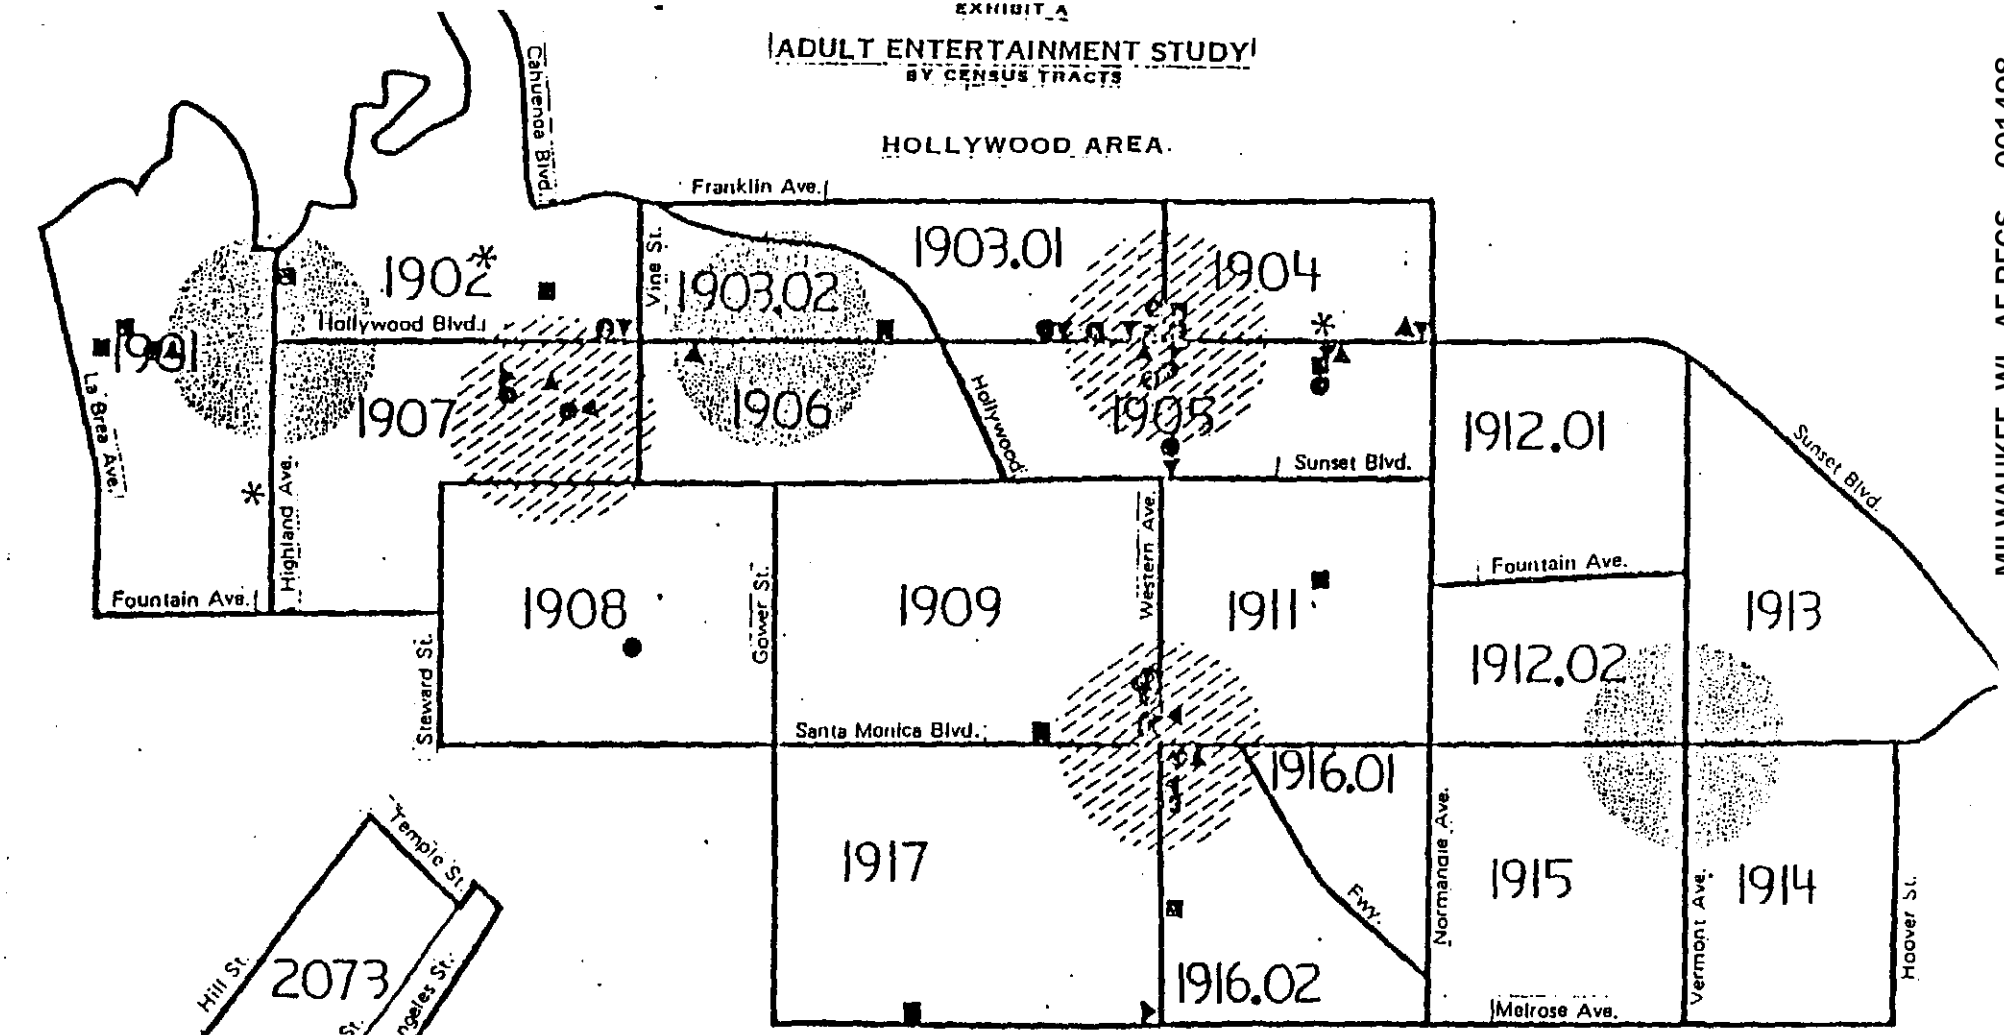


EXHIBIT B

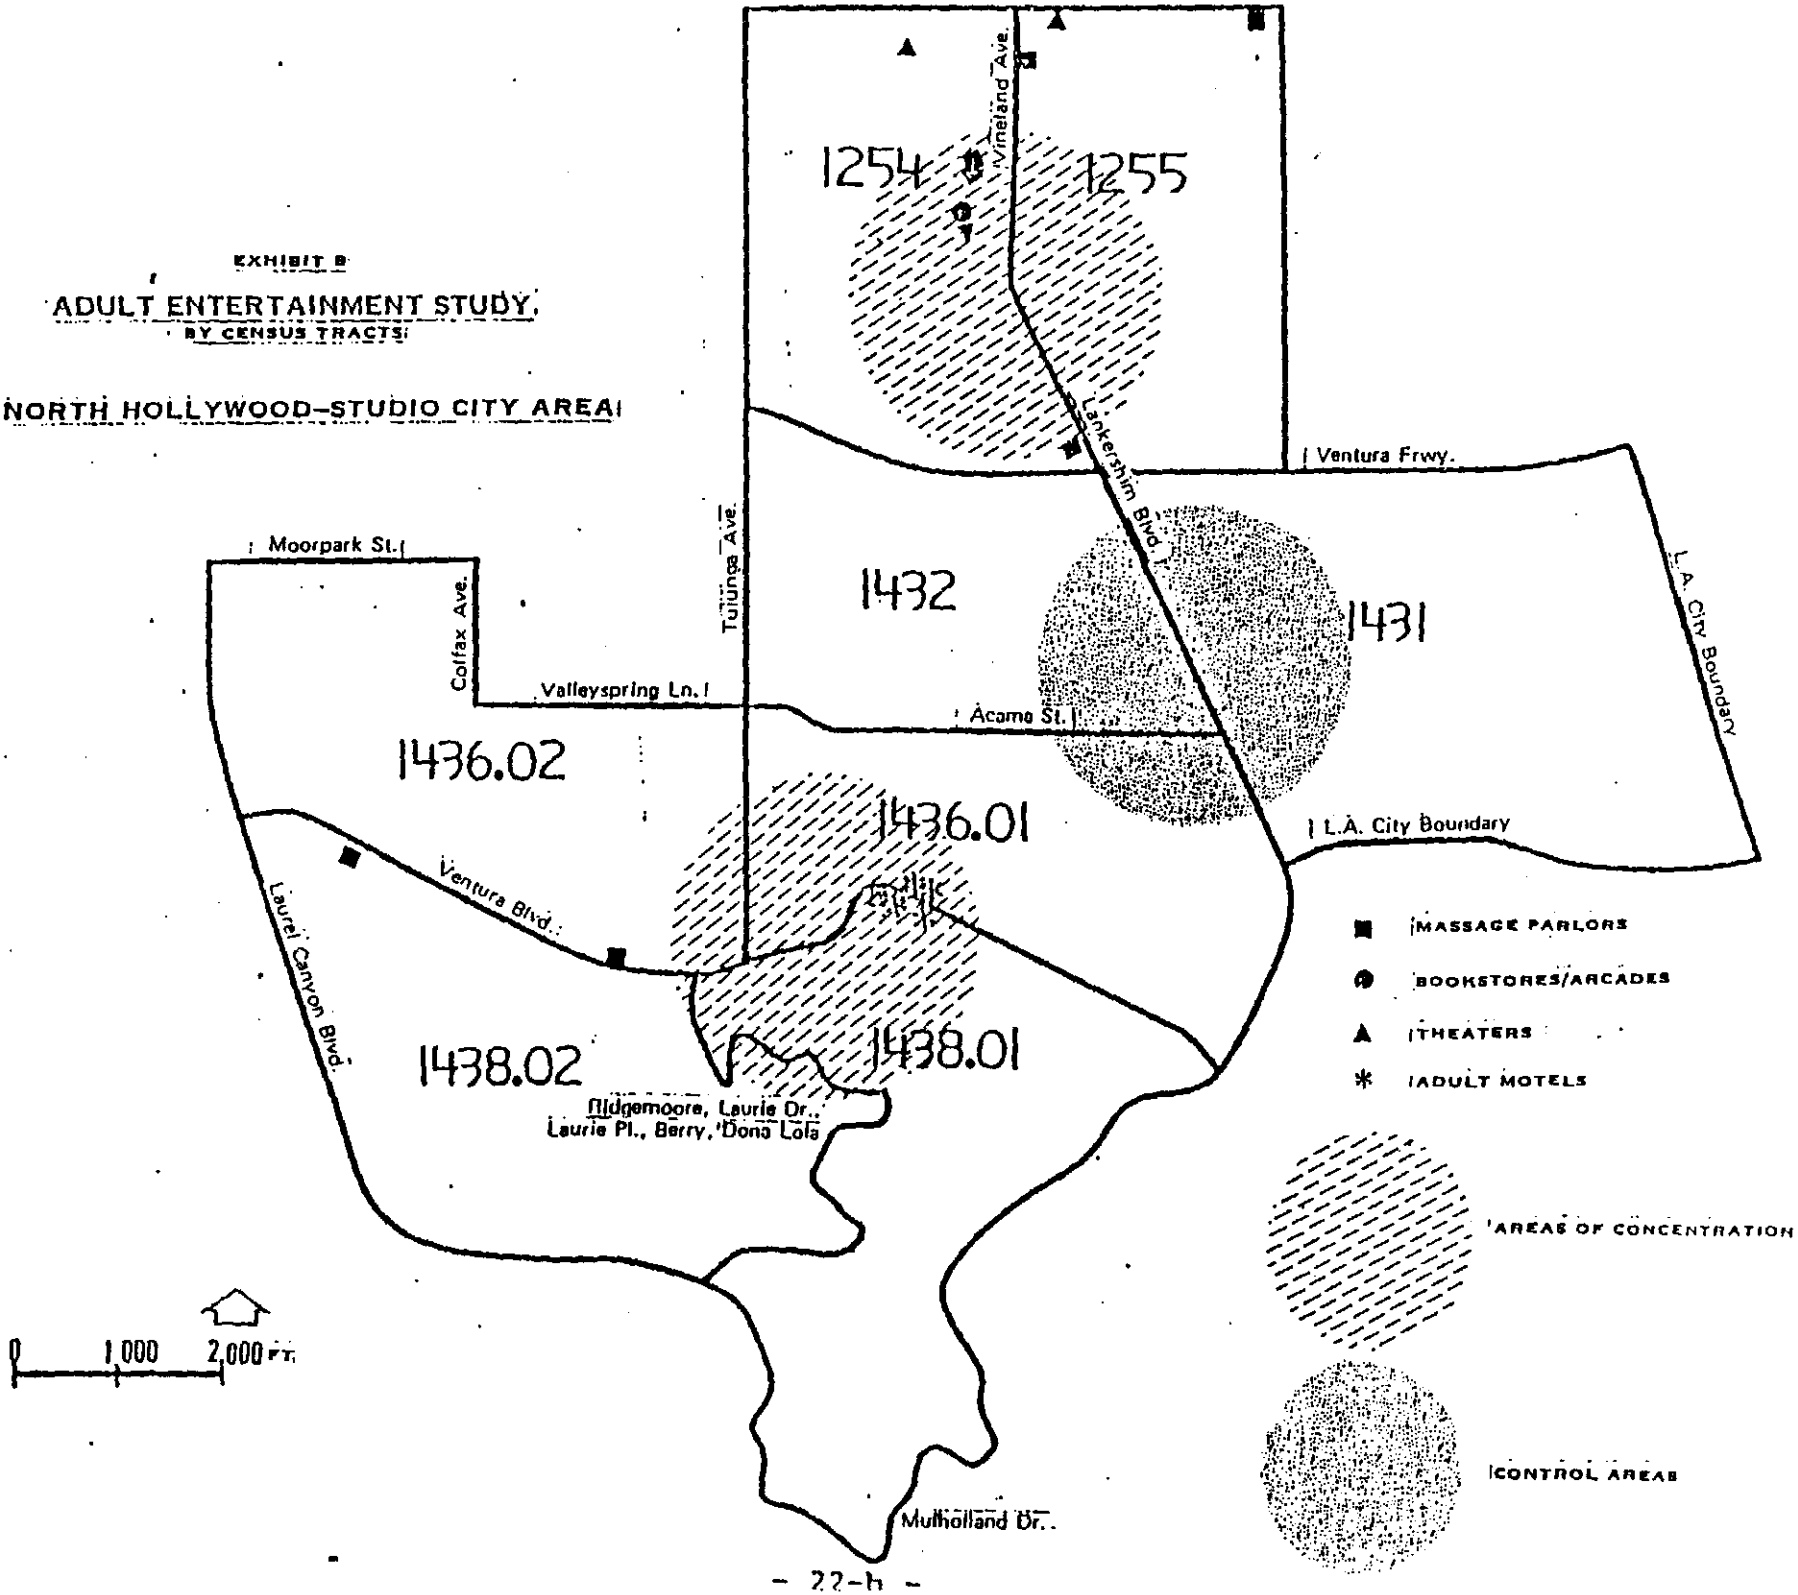
ADULT ENTERTAINMENT STUDY

BY CENSUS TRACTS

NORTH HOLLYWOOD–STUDIO CITY AREA



Although Main Street in downtown Los Angeles contains a relatively high concentration of sex-oriented businesses (primarily theaters, arcades and bookstores), this area was not selected for analysis since no residential properties are located in proximity thereto. In addition, Main Street has traditionally contained burlesque theaters, arcades, bars and similar types of establishments, and there has been no significant change in this generalized pattern of land use during the past ten years.

In the Hollywood area, the focal points of concentration are at the following three intersections: Santa Monica Boulevard and Western Avenue (containing 12 such businesses); Hollywood Boulevard and Western Avenue (9 such businesses); and Selmna Avenue and Cahauenga Boulevard (containing 7 such businesses). In Studio City, the focal point is east of the main intersection of Tujunga Avenue and Vineland Avenue (at Eureka Drive) which contains six adult entertainment businesses; and in North Hollywood the focus of concentration is at Lankershim Boulevard and Vineland Avenue (containing 4 such businesses)

In the Hollywood area, property within an approximate 1,000-foot radius of the above named intesections was included for purposes of analysis. In Studio City it was appropriate to include those properties situated within an approximate 1,500 foot radius of the intersection of Eureka Drive; in North Hollywood, property within an approximate 1,500 foot radius of the intersection of Lankershim Boulevard and Vineland Avenue was selected for analysis.

As also shown in Exhibit "A", three separate "control areas" were established in Hollywood, each originating at the intersection of two major streets and also encompassing all property within an approximate 1,000-foot radius of the street intersection. Control areas were established at: Santa Monica Boulevard and Vermont Avenue; Hollywood Boulevard and Highland Avenue; and Hollywood Boulevard and Gower Street. In the San Fernando Valley, Exhibit "B" indicates one control area, centered at the intersection of Lankershim Boulevard and Whipple Street, and encompassing property within a radius of approximately 1,500 feet of that intesection, relates to the two nodes of concentration in Studio City and North Hollywood. None of the control areas has adult entertainment businesses within its boundaries, with the exception of the area surrounding the intersection of Hollywood Boulevard and Gower Street which contains one such business.

Table IV, indicates the percentage change in assessed land and improvement value from July 1970 to July 1976 for the commercial and residential property encompassed by the applicable radius surrounding each of the five nodes of concentration, together with their corresponding control areas. For purposes of comparison, the same data is shown for the entire City and for the Community within which the study areas are located. Since concentrations of adult entertainment businesses could have a particular effect on the value of other business properties in an area, a separate tabulation is also shown for only commercially zoned land within each study and control area. (Table IV-A.)

As indicated in Table IV, the 1970-76 percentage change in total assessed "market" valuation of commercially and residentially zoned property (land plus improvements) increased in all three areas in Hollywood containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses. However, there was some variance in the magnitude of the increase. Changes in the three study area nodes were 2.79, 8.71, and 3.41 percent; compared with increases in the three corresponding control area of 12.53, 1.94, and 5.09 percent, respectively.

The study area node located at Santa Monica Boulevard and Western Avenue increased by 2.79 percent, compared with a substantially greater increase of 12.53 percent in the "control area" associated with that node. Total assessed value within the study area surrounding the intersection of Selma Avenue and Cahuenga Boulevard increased by 3.41 percent while the associated control area increased by the slightly greater amount of 5.09 percent. In direct contrast to this pattern, however, the Hollywood and Western node registered an 8.71 percent increase, while its corresponding control area increased by only 1.94 percent.

TABLE IV

1970-76 Changes in Assessed Valuation of Commercial and Residential Land and Improvements for Five Areas Containing Concentration of Adult Entertainment Businesses, as Compared With "Control" Areas, Surrounding Community, and City of Los Angeles.

Property Within Approximate 1,000 to 1,800 Foot Radius of Intersection of Streets Shown:	No. of Entertainment "Sites" 1969-70	June 1977	Percentage Change in Assessed Valuation 1970-76 Land	Improvements	Total
Santa Monica Boulevard and Western Avenue (Hollywood)	6	12	-0.22	5.81	2.79
Santa Monica Boulevard and Vermont Avenue (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	0	-4.84	32.66	12.53
Hollywood Boulevard and Western Avenue (Hollywood)	6	9	3.51	13.21	8.71
Hollywood Boulevard and Highland Avenue (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	0	19.32	-7.83	1.94
Selma Avenue and Cahuenga Boulevard (Hollywood)	4	7	21.12	-12.54	3.41
Hollywood Boulevard and Gower Street (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	1	17.76	-8.61	5.09
Hollywood Community	N.A.	31	21.20	32.72	27.00
City of Los Angeles	N.A.	N.A.	35.08	38.92	37.15
Tujunga Avenue and Ventura Boulevard (Studio City)	1	6	67.11	63.10	64.93
Lankershim Boulevard and Vineland Avenue (North Hollywood)	2	4	15.88	9.65	12.61

TABLE IV (cont'd.)

Property Within Approximate 1,000 to 1,800 Foot Radius of Intersection of Streets Shown:	No. of Entertainment "Sites" 1969-70	No. of Entertainment "Sites" June 1977	Percentage Change in Assessed Valuation 1970-76 Land	Improvements	Total
Lankershim Boulevard and Whipple Street (Valley Control Area)	N.A.	0	62.28	27.66	42.76
Sherman Oaks-Studio City Community	N.A.	10	69.25	60.44	64.33
North Hollywood Community	N.A.	5	28.59	33.15	31.07
City of Los Angeles	N.A.	212	35.08	38.92	37.15

TABLE IV-A

1970-76 Changes in Assessed Valuation of Commercially Zoned Land and Improvements for Five Areas Containing Concentration of Adult Entertainment Businesses as Compared With Commercially Zoned Land in "Control Areas", Surrounding Community, and City of Los Angeles.

Property Within Approximate 1,000 to 1,800 Foot Radius of Intersection of Streets Shown:	No. of Entertainment "Sites" 1969-70	June 1977	Percentage Change in Assessed Valuation 1970-76 Land	Improvements	Total
Santa Monica Boulevard and Western Avenue (Hollywood)	6	12	-0.47	8.53	3.4
Santa Monica Boulevard and Vermont Avenue (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	0	-12.53	4.13	-6.38
Hollywood Boulevard and Western Avenue (Hollywood)	6	9	-2.52	-0.45	-1.77
Hollywood Boulevard and Highland Avenue (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	0	25.01	-11.19	4.06
Selma Avenue and Cahuenga Boulevard (Hollywood)	4	7	21.93	-18.79	0.54
Hollywood Boulevard and Gower Street (Hollywood Control Area)	N.A.	0	17.07	-17.22	1.09
Hollywood Community	N.A.	31	13.43	-1.51	6.70
City of Los Angeles	N.A.	212	12.27	13.52	12.93
Tujunga Avenue and Ventura Boulevard (Studio City)	1	6	19.24	25.83	21.9
Lankershim Boulevard and Vineland Avenue (North Hollywood)	2	4	-0.76	3.91	1.92

TABLE IV-A (cont'd.)

Property Within Approximate 1,000 to 1,800 Foot Radius of Intersection of Streets Shown:	No. of Entertainment "Sites" 1969-70	No. of Entertainment "Sites" June 1977	Percentage Change in Assessed Valuation 1970-76 Land	Improvements	Total
Lankershim Boulevard and Whipple Street (Valley Control Area)	N.A.	0	82.28	-6.35	27.16
Studio City Community	N.A.	10	30.95	13.01	22.02
North Hollywood Community	N.A.	5	2.74	7.56	5.21
City of Los Angeles	N.A.	212	12.27	13.52	12.93

Sources/Notes - Tables IV and IV-A:

Actual assessment data from which percentage changes in Tables IV and IV-A were derived is shown in Appendix A. Assessment data was obtained from the City's Land Use Planning and Management System (LUPAMS) computer file. Data is as of July 1 for years shown. "Entertainment Site" means adult theatre, arcade, massage parlor, nude dancing establishment or similar use. Number of "entertainment sites" for 1969-70 was obtained from L. A. Police Department; for June 1977 from L. A. Police Department and L. A. City Planning Department. N.A. means not available. Property included within areas described is shown in Exhibits A and B.

The percentage increase in assessed values within the three study areas, as well as the control areas, was considerably less in each case than percentage gains registered by the Hollywood Community or the City as a whole.

In the case of the study area nodes located in the San Fernando Valley, the pattern appears to be somewhat more spurious. The study area node containing adult entertainment businesses located in Studio City (centered east of the intersection of Tujunga Avenue and Ventura Boulevard) increased by 64.93 percent--the largest increase of any of the areas analyzed. In direct contrast, the "adult entertainment node" located at Lankershim Boulevard and Vineland Avenue increased by only 12.61 percent. The one "control area" associated with these two San Fernando Valley nodes increased by 42.76 percent -- a substantially greater gain than the North Hollywood node, but 22 percent less than the Studio City node. (Whether the sharp percentage increase shown for the Studio City node was the direct result of a recent reassessment cannot be readily determined.)

The increase in assessed value within the Studio City study area was virtually the same as that of the entire Sherman Oaks-Studio City Community but almost twice the percentage gain for commercial and residential properties in the entire City. The North Hollywood study area increased by a considerably lower percentage than the North Hollywood Community and the City as a whole.

With regard to commercial properties considered separately, Table IV-A reveals that the percentage change in assessed values of land and improvements combined was generally lower in all study areas than in their corresponding control areas. One notable exception, however, is the Santa Monica Boulevard and Western Avenue node which increased by 3.4 percent, while its corresponding control area (Santa Monica and Vermont) decreased by 6.38 percent. In Hollywood the change in assessed values of all study and control areas was less than in the entire Hollywood Community. In the San Fernando Valley the two study areas both increased less than the entire communities within which they are situated.

2. Conclusion - Changes in Assessed Valuation

On the basis of the foregoing, there would seem to be some basis to conclude that the assessed valuation of property within the study areas containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses have generally tended to increase to lesser degree than similar areas without such concentrations. However, in the staff's opinion, there would appear to be insufficient evidence to support the contention that concentrations of sex oriented businesses have been the primary cause of these patterns of change in assessed valuations between 1970 and 1976. However, responses to the Department's mail questionnaires from real estate representatives and appraisers have indicated that in their opinion, concentrations of adult entertainment businesses have, in some cases, had a direct negative impact on property values.

B. PUBLIC MEETINGS

Two public meetings were conducted by representatives of the City Planning Commission in order to receive citizen input regarding the effects, if any, of contentrations of "adult entertainment" establishments on nearby properties and surrounding neighborhoods. Notice of the hearings was published in local newspapers, aired on radio, mailed to owners of commercial and multiple residential property within 500 ft. radius of the study areas and also to persons who had previously responded to the Department's questionnaire.

The first meeting was held in Hollywood on April 27, 1977 at Le Conte Junior High School. The second meeting was conducted in Northridge on April 28, 1977 at Northridge Junior High School. Both meetings were conducted by Planning Commission President Suzette Neiman and Planning Commissioner Daniel Garcia, with Deputy City Attorney Chris Funk also in attendance..

Questionnaires were available at the meetings for the convenience of those wishing to submit their comments in writing.

Attendance was approximately 200 persons at the Hollywood meeting and 300 persons at the Northridge meeting. A combined total of 60 persons addressed the Commission. The following is a summary of the comments received by the Commission. (Tape recordings of the hearings are available for review under City Plan Case Number 26475, in the Planning Commission Office, Room 561-K, Los Angeles, City Hall, telephone (213) 485-5071.)

The most prevalent type of comment at the Hollywood meeting was an expression of fear of walking in areas where "adult entertainment" and related business are concentrated. This concern was expressed both by parents, reluctant to allow their children to be exposed to offensive signs and wares, and by women and elderly persons who feared walking in the areas either in the day or evening, because of the incidence of crime in the area. Specific instances of solicitation and other crimes were recited. Some proprietors testified that they felt their businesses have suffered, due to fear on the part of their customers. Other common statements concerned:

- Physical or economic deterioration of the area resulting from the influx of adult businesses.
- An increase in street crime.
- Offensive signs and displays.
- A need to use existing enforcement tools, such as "red light abatement" to control "adult entertainment" businesses.

- Representatives of La Cienega art gallery proprietors expressed concern over the recent establishment of an adult theater in the area and its incompatibility with gallery use.

A representative of the "Pussycat Theaters" organization informed the Commission that a survey taken by the theater operators indicated that the majority of patrons were middle class, that most were registered voters, and that many were married and had college educations. It was stated that a large number of the patrons were found to reside within a few miles of their theaters. The representative of this theater chain expressed concern at the "lumping" of all adult entertainment businesses into one classification. He felt that in terms of aesthetics, clientele, and effect upon the neighborhood, the theaters were not in the same classification as some other types of adult businesses. (The Commission requested the written documentation of the survey; however, it has not been received to date.)

Several speakers at the Northridge meeting expressed concern that the City even felt it needed to request their opinion on such a subject. They felt that their displeasure over the distribution and display of pornographic materials should be obvious. Citizens also indicated how they had been responsible for the closing of certain establishments in the San Fernando Valley by picketing and other means. Some speakers indicated that they were disturbed by the availability and display of obscene material in drug stores and supermarkets.

The following is a summary listing of specific relevant comments from the two meetings:

Hollywood Meeting (April 27, 1977)

- It was alleged that organized crime is in the sex service business and that this is a $64 million local business.

- Hollywood and particularly Hollywood Boulevard was once a cultural center; now there is a different class of people. This is a degeneration of Hollywood and Hollywood Boulevard.

- In Hollywood, due to fear for safety, people walk around in groups, not alone or as couples.

- Zoning is not the ultimate response to obscenity: there are public nuisance laws, red light abatement statutes, etc.

- There was concern about the effects on children; parents in Hollywood indicated that they did not allow their children to walk unescorted: there are too many muggings and attacks.

- There are problems brought on by the changing population of the area: street fights, acts of mischief and minor property damages have resulted.

- A local minister indicated concern for the elderly, and that children from 4 to 7 years old cannot ride their bikes without being accosted; he also indicated there had been 23 arrests for prostitution near a local elementary school; he further stated that residents have to go to other areas to shop.

- A representative of a local synagogue stated that the elderly were afraid to walk to religious services and that car pooling had been established.

- A representative of the Hollywood Businessmen's Association advised that 50 percent of the sex crimes reported (in the City) were in the Hollywood area; that since the Police have closed some sex establishments crime has dropped; that adult entertainment businesses have contributed to a deteriorating condition in Hollywood; that there is a 100 percent turnover in school attendance; that the business license ordinance should be modified to require an environmental impact report and proper sign controls for new establishments and that notice should be given to persons within one-half mile; he also reiterated that traditional businesses were leaving the area.

- It was indicated that property values had gone down; Vine and Selma was valued at $12.50 per sq. ft. years ago, but recently it was worth only $8.50 per sq. ft.

Northridge Meeting (April 28, 1977)

- A representative of the North Hollywood Chamber of Commerce indicated that adult entertainment businesses were an economic and social blight; that the Police Commission was no help; that they had proposed the M3 Zone for these uses; that we need more police and should make greater use of red light abatement; that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Department should do more.

- Claims were made that the Pussycat Theater in North Hollywood was a dangerous environment to women and children; that in the recent past 2 teenage girls had been accosted and a woman had been attacked and had to jump from a car.

- A beauty shop owner near a Pussycat Theater indicated she no longer stayed open in the evening because her customers were afraid.

- Adult entertainment businesses should be required to rent space in "Class A" buildings.

- Various persons objected to newsracks, obscene material, problems of congestion and ingress and egress.

- The Miller vs. California court case was discussed: it was contended that this case established that "a community can set its own standards".

- Questions were posed as to whether economic and financial impact should be facts needed to develop an ordinance to control adult entertainment.

- Claims were made that adult entertainment business bring crimes and violence to the area.

- A speaker stated that both the Boston and the Detroit ordinances are unacceptable. "You cannot control pornography by zoning", and opposition to the zoning approach to obscenity was expressed.

- "California is the pornographic capital of the world."

- People are offended by pornographic material in department stores, drug stores, supermarkets, etc. The recent Los Angeles County newsrack ordinance was discussed.

- One person posed the question "why don't we have an Environmental Impact Report for pornographic businesses?"

- Church representatives and a teacher at the Christian School were concerned about their members and children being exposed to pornographic advertising displayed at the Lankershim Theater and Pussycat Theater. They are afraid to let their children out on the streets.

- It was stated that "we should use civil, public nuisance and red light abatement to control adult entertainment businesses."

Conclusion

In summary, the overwhelming majority of speakers felt that the concentration of "adult entertainment" businesses in their neighborhood was detrimental, either physically by creating blight or economically by decreasing patronage of traditional businesses; or socially by attracting crime. As a result of increased crime, nearby residents have become fearful and have been forced to constrain their customary living habits in the community.

Although the testimony obtained at the public hearings would from a subjective point of view, substantiate the conclusion that "adult entertainment" businesses have a deleterious effect on the surrounding community, the staff is of the opinion that legitimate questions may have been posed by the Pussycat Theater representative regarding a single classification for all "adult entertainment" uses. There would appear to be some basis to support the contention that certain types of such uses are more "objectionable" than others, and that negative effects of a particular type of business might be minimized, depending on how the business is operated and advertised.

C. SURVEY QUESTIONNAIRE CONDUCTED BY DEPARTMENT OF CITY PLANNING

1. Description of Survey

In order to determine additional factual data relating to the subject, and to seek the comments and opinions of property owners, businessmen, realtors, real estate boards, real estate appraisers, representatives of banks, Chambers of Commerce, and others, the Department conducted a mail survey. Two questionnaires were developed. One was designed primarily for businessmen and residential property owners and is hereinafter referred to as the General Questionnaire. The second was designed for realtors, real estate appraisers and lenders and is hereinafter referred to as the Appraiser Questionnaire. A copy of the two questionnaires is contained in the Appendix. The completed questionnaires, together with other letters relative to this subject, are on file in Room 510, Los Angeles City Hall.

The General Questionnaire was mailed to all property owners (of other than property in single-family use) within a 500-foot radius of each of the five study areas. The questionnaire was also distributed to various community groups (including local and area Chambers of Commerce) and at the public meeting in Hollywood and in Northridge.

The Appraiser Questionnaire was mailed to all members of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers having a Los Angeles City address and to members of the California Association of Realtors whose office is located in the vicinity of the study areas.

Each of the two questionnaires contained spaces for a respondent to check answers to a series of questions relating to the overall effect (if any) of adult entertainment establishments on nearby properties. It should be emphasized that the Department intentionally structured the "objective response" portion of the questionnaires so as to reduce "bias" and to solicit the maximum range of responses to any specific question. For example, a respondent could check "positive", "negative" or "no effect" in response to the question... "What overall effect do you feel that adult entertainment establishments have on a neighborhood?"

In addition to the direct response portion of the questionnaire, information of a more subjective nature was also solicited. For example, after each question, space was provided for a respondent to list any comments or examples which might pertain to a specific question. The beginning of each questionnaire also invited the respondent to write comments in the space provided or on a separate sheet.

Between February 10 and April 30, 1977, a total of approximately 4,000 questionnaires were mailed (with return envelopes provided) or otherwise distributed to businessmen, real estate appraisers, realtors, representatives of banks and savings and loan institutions, the owners of multiple-unit residential property, and others. Of this number, 694 questionnaires were completed and returned to the Department (an overall 17.4 percent rate of return).

In addition, the Department received 197 non-solicited, completed questionnaires from property owners in Studio City. These questionnaires were distributed in a private mailing by a private individual. The subject mailing included a replica of the Department's appraiser questionnaire, together with written material alleging City intent to create an adult entertainment zone in Studio City (copy included as Appendix D-2). According to the subject individual's testimony at the public hearing on April 27, 1977, 11,000 replica questionnaires were mailed. Due to the prejudicial nature of the mailing, these questionnaires are not included in the study. However, the staff did tabulate the subject responses and the tabulation and summary are included in Appendix D-3. All persons responding to the above mailing were sent a memo from the Department, correcting the misinformation (copy included in Appendix D-1).

2. Results of Survey Questionnaires

A tabulation of the responses to the specific questions solicited in the objective portion in each of the two types of questionnaries is presented below. A summary of the comments follows:

GENERAL QUESTIONNAIRE

- RESPONSES -

$$\frac{\text{Total no. of responses}}{\text{Total no. of questionnaires}} = \frac{581}{3600} = 16\% \text{ return}$$

Question	Positive	Negative	No effect
1. What overall effect do you feel that adult entertainment establishments have had on a neighborhood:
Effect on the business condition (sales & profits) in the area:	43(7.4%)	492(84.7%)	36(6.2%)
Effect on homes (value & appearance) in the area immediately adjacent to adult entertainment businesses:	37(6.9%)	472(81.2%)	26(4.5%)

	Positive	Negative	No effect
Effect on homes (value & appearance) in the area located 500 feet or more from adult entertainment businesses?	35(6.0%)	446(76.8%)	19(3.3%)

2. Do you believe the establishment of adult entertainment facilities in the vicinity of your business has had any of the following effects? (Please check all those effects which you feel have occurred.)

26 (4.5%) no effect	305 (52.5%) decreased property values
206 (35.5%) lower rents
275 (47.3%) vacant businesses	13 (2.2%) increased property values
288 (49.6%) tenants moving out	16 (2.8%) lower taxes
224 (38.6%) complaints from customers	98 (16.9%) higher taxes
3 (-) less crime	489 (84.2%) decreased business activity
370 (63.7%) more crime
1 (-) improved neighborhood appearance	8 (1.4%) increased business
416 (71.6%) deteriorated neighborhood appearance	312 (53.7%) more litter
8 (1.4%) other (please specify)

3. (Not applicable for tally.)

4. Have you seriously considered moving your business elsewhere because of nearby concentrations of adult entertainment businesses?

167 (28.7%) Yes 165 (28.4%) No

5. Would you consider expanding in your current location?

83 (14.3%) Yes 177 (30.5%) No

6. What types of adult entertainment establishments are there in your area (Please check appropriate boxes.)

410	(70.6%)	adult bookstores	179	(30.8%) nude or topless dancing
310	(53.4%)	massage parlors	389	(67.0%) adult theatres
190	(32.7%)	peep shows	240	(41.3%) adult motels
237	(40.8%)	bars with X-rated entertainment
3		other sex shops

How far from your business is the nearest adult entertainment establishment? (Not tabulated due to limited response.)

Responses to the foregoing questions reveal that adult entertainment businesses are perceived by the majority of respondents as exerting a negative impact on surrounding businesses and residential properties.

Whether or not such negative impacts have actually occurred, or only perceived to have occurred, cannot be readily determined, empirically, on the basis of this survey. However, in terms of the attitudes of the respondents toward such businesses, the conclusion must be drawn that the overall effect on surrounding properties is considered to be negative.

Among the adverse effects of adult entertainment establishments cited by businessmen are:

- Difficulty in renting office space
- Difficulty in keeping desirable tenants
- Difficulty in recruiting employees
- Limits hours of operation (evening hours)
- Deters patronage from women and families; general reduced patronage

Of those businessmen indicating that they have not seriously considered moving because of nearby concentrations of adult entertainment business, the most frequent response was that they had been in the area a great many years, and to establish elsewhere would be too risky and/or that their investment was too great to move. A few respondents indicated that it is the adult entertainment businesses that should move, not they.

The few businessmen commenting that they would not consider expanding in their current location indicated that their business did not warrant expansion.

Several businessmen indicated that their businesses are relatively unaffected by nearly adult entertainment establishments. Among the businesses cited are a commercial art studio; a building trades contractor; a mail order business; a telephone answering service and a wholesaler.

Among the few positive effects cited by businessmen is the increase in business for certain non-adult entertainment businesses such as tourist-serving businesses (e.g. car rental agencies). "The bad effect it might have is cancelled out by the business it does attract; x-rated theaters attract tourists."

Many respondents commented on the crimes associated with adult entertainment establishments: prostitution, dope, theft, robbery, etc. A high percentage of respondents report they do not feel safe in such areas.

A high percentage of respondents commented on their concern for the effects of adult entertainment environment on the morals and safety of children.

A high percentage of respondents commented on the aesthetics of adult entertainment establishments: garish, sleazy; shabby, blighted, tasteless, etc. Also, many commented on the increased incidence of litter and graffiti.

APPRAISER QUESTIONNAIRE

- RESPONSES -

Total no. of responses / Total no. of questionnaires = 81/400 = 20% return

Question	Response
1. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of business property (land, structures, fixtures, etc.) located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increase in value	1	(-) decrease in value	71	(87.7%)
	no effect	5	(6.2%)
2. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of business property located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increase in value	1	(-)
	decrease in value	55	(67.9%)
	no effect	4	(4.9%)
3. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of business property located in the vicinity (length of time required to rent or sell property; rate of lessee/buyer turnover; conditions of sale or lease, etc.)?	increase in rentability/saleability	3	(3.7%)
	decrease in rentability/saleability	48	(59.3%)
	no effect	3	(3.7%)
4. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the annual income of businesses located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increased income	2	(2.5%)
	decreased income	59	(72.8%)
	no effect	7	(8.6%)
5. Have any business owners or proprietors considered relocating or not expanding their businesses because of the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?	yes	23	(28.4%)
	no	4	(4.9%)
	not known	28	(34.6%)
6. In recent years, has the commercial vitality (sales, profits, etc.) of any area in the City of Los Angeles been affected in any way by the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?	yes	45	(55.6%)
	no	29	(35.8%)
	not known	-

7. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of private residences located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	2 (3.8%)	48 (90.6%)	3 (5.7%)	53
500 - 1000 feet	2 (3.6%)	51 (91.1%)	3 (5.4%)	56
More than 1000 feet	1 (3%)	29 (87.9%)	3 (9.1%)	33

8. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of residential income property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	2 (3.4%)	51 (87.9%)	5 (8.6%)	58
500 - 1000 feet	1 (2.6%)	33 (86.8%)	4 (10.5%)	38
More than 1000 feet	1 (2.8%)	27 (75%)	8 (22.2%)	36

9. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of residential property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	1 (2.5%)	37 (92.5%)	2 (5%)	40
500 - 1000 feet	1 (2.6%)	35 (89.7%)	3 (7.7%)	39
More than 1000 feet	1 (2.8%)	28 (77.8%)	7 (19.1%)	36

10. In regard to the questions setforth above, please describe the effects which you believe the concentration of adult entertainment business has on each of the following:

Property values of surrounding:

	Decrease	Unknown	No effect	Increase
Commercial property	46 (56.8%)	32 (39.5%)	1	2 (2.5%)
Residential property	42 (51.9%)	38 (46.9%)	-	1
General	16 (19.8%)	65 (80.2%)	-	-

Rental values of surrounding:	Decrease	No response	No effect	Increase
Commercial property	39 (48.1%)	42 (51.9%)	-	-
Residential property	37 (45.7%)	44 (54.3%)	-	-
General	12 (14.8%)	69 (85.2%)	-	-
Vacancies
Number	1	56 (69.1%)	1	23 (28.4%)
Length	1	72 (88.9%)	2 (2.5%)	6 (7.4%)
Rate of tenant turnover	-	49 (60.5%)	1	31 (38.3%)
Annual business income	24(29.6%)	53 (65.4%)	2 (2.5%)	2 (2.5%)
Complaints from customers and residents due to concentration Yes	24(29.6%)	57 (70.4%)
Neighborhood appearance	24(29.6%)		3 (3.7%)
Crime	1	1	-	48 (59.3%)
Litter	-	1	1	44 (54.3%)
Other (please specify)

GENERAL QUESTIONNAIRE

- REALTOR RESPONSES -

Total no. of responses = 32

NOTE: Due to distribution, certain realtors received the General Questionnaire rather than the Appraiser Questionnaire. For analysis purposes, the subject responses were tabulated separately and analyzed together with the responses to the Appraiser Questionnaire.

Question

1. What overall effect do you feel that adult entertainment establishments have had on a neighborhood:

	Positive	Negative	No effect
Effect on the business condition (sales & profits) in the area:	-	31 (97%)	1
Effect on homes (value & appearance) in the area immediately adjacent to adult entertainment businesses:	-	31 (97%)	1
Effect on homes (value & appearance) in the area located 500 feet or more from adult entertainment businesses:	-	29 (91%)	2

2. Do you believe the establishment of adult entertainment facilities in the vicinity of your business has had any of the following effects? (Please check all those effects which you feel have occurred.)

1 (31.3%)	no effect	29 (91%)	decreased property values
23 (71.9%)	lower rents
25 (70%)	vacant businesses	0	increased property values
25 (70%)	tenants moving out	3 (9.4%)	lower taxes
25 (70%)	complaints from customers	7 (21.9%)	higher taxes
0	less crime	23 (91%)	decreased business activity
26 (81.3%)	more crime	0	increased business

30 (94%) deteriorated 27 (84%) more litter neighborhood appearance

___ Other (please specify)

3. (Not applicable for tally.)

4. Have you seriously considered moving your business elsewhere because of nearby concentrations of adult entertainment businesses?

10 (31.3%) Yes 15 (46.9%) No

5. Would you consider expanding in your current location?

10 (31.3%) Yes 12 (37.5%) No

6. What types of adult entertainment establishments are there in your area? (Please check appropriate boxes.)

- 27 (84.4%) adult bookstores
- 17 (53.1%) massage parlors
- 15 (46.9%) peep shows
- 12 (37.5%) bars with X-rated entertainment
- 13 (40.6%) nude or topless dancing
- 24 (75%) adult theatres
- 15 (46.9%) adult motels

How far from your business is the nearest adult entertainment establishment? (Not tabulated due to limited response.)

D. U.S. CENSUS AND RELATED DATA

1. Cluster Analysis "Used by Community Analysis Bureau to Describe Various Parts of the City"

The last U.S. Decennial Census was conducted on April 1, 1970. With the proliferation of adult entertainment business it would seem appropriate to include as background information a description of the socio-economic and physical characteristics of the areas under study, as revealed by census data. Such a description may provide insight as to the underlying factors contributing to the concentration of sex-oriented business in the areas under study.

An excellent available source providing such a description is a 1974 report prepared by the City's Community Analysis Bureau (CAB) concerning the "State of the City".* In this document, the CAB has utilized a statistical technique known as "cluster analysis" to identify specific areas within the City which have common characteristics, as revealed by census data. In conducting this study, the CAB made use of 66 census data items (or variables) which were selected from the entire spectrum of socio-economic and physically descriptive data items available for all census tracts in the City.

The U.S. Census Bureau reports data on numerous geographical levels, the "census tract" being the smallest geographical area for which data is maintained and reported on a regular basis. There are 750 such census tract areas in the City, each containing a population of slightly fewer than 4,000 persons, on the average. The five study area nodes and four control areas under study herein are contained within portions of 25 census tracts.

The particular variables which most accurately describe a particular census tract were used by the Community Analysis Bureau in such a manner as to combine those areas which have the most similar characteristics. As a result of this procedure, thirty cluster groups were established throughout the City, each such cluster consisting of one or more census tracts, each census tract within a particular cluster being more similar to other parts of that cluster than to any other geographical section of the City.

---

* The State of the City - A Cluster Analysis of Los Angeles - City of Los Angeles Community Analysis Bureau, June 1974.

Description of Hollywood Area

The three study areas in Hollywood containing concentrations of adult entertainment businesses are included within portions of 11 census tracts. Their three associated "control areas" are partially contained within nine census tracts. These 20 tracts are all included within a larger area identified in the CAB's report as "Cluster 15", entitled "The Apartment Dwellers", consisting of 34 tracts. A description of this area, as quoted from the previously cited CAB report, is set forth below. The fact that this description is based on data which is now seven years old may not be disadvantageous, for the purposes of this study, inasmuch as adult entertainment businesses began to flourish in the 1969-70 period.

> " Cluster 15 is a lower income, predominately old apartment area located west of the Civic Center..."
>
> "The cluster represents a total population of 174,000, 46% male and 54% female. The median age is 40. The area is mostly White, but does have an above average ethnic mix--19% Spanish-American, 3% Japanese, 2% Chinese, 3% Black. It is a cluster of workers and senior citizens. One in five residents is over 65. Female participation in the labor force is the highest of the 30 clusters. The population under 18 is small. Many of the families are headed by women..."
>
> "...Close to seven out of ten labor active residents are white collar employed. Most completed high school and 15% completed college. At $8,700, median family income is below the average for the City. This lower income does not translate into an abnormally high poverty distribution. One in ten families and a smaller proportion of unrelated individuals are welfare recipients..."
>
> "...Residents of the cluster are centrally located to both the Downtown and its commercial-financial strip extension, Wilshire Boulevard. Many public transit routes service the area. Close to 40% of the households have no automobile. The presence of two or more cars is not common. Of the older apartment complexes many have no garage facilities..."

"...Old apartments comprise 42% of the multiple units. One of the heaviest concentrations occurs east of Western Avenue and north of Olympic Boulevard. These are high density, closely packed, rectangular shaped, stucco units which line the streets approaching Wilshire Boulevard. South of Olympic Boulevard, the pattern remains one of multiple family units, but these are generally interspersed with homes or are the end product of converted two and three story frame houses. Hollywood is similar, but is has several single family residential areas and apartment encroachment appears to have more of an impact..."

"...Most of the cluster's 102,700 dwellings are renter occupied, including a majority of the homes. Median rent averages $108, but 17% of the multiple dwellings are available for less than $80..."

"...Single family residences are a small proportion of the total housing stock and like the area's apartments, many predate World War II. Few of the essentially single family residential neighborhoods have the kind of zoning protection which requires that new construction be single units. Replacement housing has tended to be large apartments. Homes averaged $26,000 in median value, which is more a factor of the land than the improvements. Much of the land west of Western Avenue adjoins the more expensive Hancock Park area..."

"...Cluster 15 has one of the highest population densities in the City, 19,080 persons per square mile, not exceptional for an apartment area. It also has the highest cluster average of elementary school transiency rates--46% for incoming students and 34% for students leaving. This mobility of the residents did not seem to affect the median sixth grade reading score. It was above the City average. The cluster has 8 park sites within its boundary and is also served by the more regional recreation areas of Echo Park, MacArthur Park and Griffith Park all of which are within access..."

"...The incidence of burglary per 100 improved parcels is high, a partial reflection of the large number of dwelling units per land parcel. One of the more disturbing aspects of the cluster is the suicide rate. Outside of Downtown, only three of the clusters had higher rates..."

2. Use of 1970 Census Data to Describe Studio City and North Hollywood Areas

There are four census tracts which comprise the Studio City study area; two such tracts in North Hollywood; and three census tracts representing the "control area" for the San Fernando Valley. (One of the "control area" tracts also forms part of the Studio City study area.)

The CAB's cluster analysis reveals that these eight different census tracts are all quite dissimilar, inasmuch as the seven tracts are contained within six different "clusters". A detailed description of each of these six clusters would not be practical for purposes of this study. However, a summary of certain key variables attributable to the two study areas in Studio City and North Hollywood, and the one corresponding control area might be instructive, and is therefore presented in Table V following. For purposes of comparison, the data is also shown for the City as a whole.

TABLE V
Comparison of 24 Variables from 1970 Census
Describing Studio City and North Hollywood Nodes
and Corresponding Control Area

VARIABLES	AREAS---------AND---------VALUES
	Studio City (Tujunga & Ventura)	North Hollywood (Lankershim & Vineland)	Control (Lankershim & Whipple)	Entire City
Population
Population per sq. mile	5,742	8,265	5,893	6,041
% Persons 0-17	18.4	18.2	16.7	30.2
% Persons 65+	10.6	17.9	15.2	10.1
% White (non-Spanish)	92.0	85.3	90.7	60.3
% Black	0	0	0	17.2
% Spanish-American	6.5	13.7	7.7	18.4
% Families w/female head	10.6	16.4	16.4	16.2
Education
% High School dropouts, 25 & older	22.1	38.6	25.3	38.1
% 25+ who have finished 4+ years college	22.0	10.2	18.3	13.9
Economics
Approximate median family income	$15,672	$ 9,471	$12,575	$10,535
% White collar employed	80.4	60.6	77.3	57.4
% unemployed	7.8	6.1	9.1	7.0
% families in poverty	3.7	10.0	6.6	9.9
% families receiving welfare	4.3	7.6	4.7	9.9
% 1-unit structures	50.6	48.9	34.2	51.7
Approximate median value, owner occupied units	$39,141	$25,335	$35,530	$26,700
Approximate median monthly rent, renter occupied units	$ 135	$ 123	$ 129	$ 107
% of owner occupied, 1 unit, structures built before 1940	24.1	52.4	52.2	28.5
% of renter occupied, 2+ unit structures built before 1940	10.9	13.9	21.8	30.7

TABLE V (cont'd)
Comparison of 24 Variables from 1970 Census
Describing Studio City and North Hollywood Nodes
and Corresponding Control Area

VARIABLES AREAS AND VALUES Crime Rates	Studio City (Tujunga & Ventura)	North Hollywood (Lankershim & Vineland)	Control (Lankershim & Whipple)	Entire City
Assaults per 100 population	.465	.374	.478	.857
Robberies per 100 population	.172	.267	.170	.454
Burglary per 100 improved parcels	13.86	10.94	13.5	14.96
Total Arrests per 100 population	4.23	4.26	4.10	8.26
Narcotic Arrests per 100 population aged 14-44	2.66	1.39	1.60	2.04

On the basis of the foregoing 1970 Census data, it is possible to develop a general description of the two study area modes containing adult entertainment businesses in the Valley. As indicated above, such a description must necessarily be based on data applying to entire census tracts, even through the study areas may encompass only portions of tracts.

Residents of the Studio City study area node in 1970 were predominantly an upper middle income group, with a relatively high percentage of college graduates. High school dropouts were considerably below the citywide norm. Eight out of ten employed persons were in "white collar" jobs. The percentage of families receiving welfare or in poverty status was considerably below the citywide percentage. The unemployment rate was slightly higher than that of the entire city.

The median value of owner occupied homes in the Studio City area was more than $12,400 higher than the City median. About one-half of the housing units were one-unit structures. Apartment rental rates were also higher than the city as a whole. The percentage of one-unit, owner occupied housing units built before 1940 (24.1 percent) approached the citywide median of 28.5 percent.

With regard to crime statistics (as of 1970), robberies per 100 population in the Studio City area were below the rate for the city as a whole (.172 and .454, respectively), although the number of burglaries per 100 improved parcels (13.86) was close to the citywide rate of 14.96. Total arrests per 100 population (4.23) were about one-half of the 8.26 rate which prevailed citywide.

The North Hollywood study area contrasts rather sharply with the above described Studio City area. In North Hollywood, median family income was $9,471 in 1970--lower than the citywide median of $10,535--and considerably lower than the $15,672 median income of residents in the Studio City study area. Sixty-one percent of employed persons were in "white collar" jobs in North Hollywood, compared with 80 percent in Studio City and 57 percent in the entire city. The percentage of families in a poverty status in North Hollywood was considerably higher than in Studio City (10.0 percent and 3.7 percent, respectively). The percent of families in North Hollywood receiving welfare was higher than in Studio City, but lower than in the entire city. Unemployment rates, however, were lower in North Hollywod than in Studio City and the entire City.

Housing values were considerably lower in North Hollywood than in Studio City, and slightly lower than average values throughout the entire city. Median montly rents were lower in North Hollywood than in Studio City but higher than in all of Los Angeles. Of all owner-occupied one-unit structures, 52.4 percent were built prior to 1940 in the North Hollywood study area, compared with only 28.5 percent in the entire city. Single-family homes in North Hollywood are older than in Studio City.

As revealed in Table V, 1970 crimes rates for the seven variables tabulated were lower in North Hollywood than in the city as a whole. Except for "robberies per 100 population" and "total arrests per 100 population" all other rates in North Hollywood were lower than in the Studio City study area.

Tabulation of U.S. Census Trends from 1960 to 1970

Time series (trend) data can often be of value in identifying underlying socio-economic or physical characteristics which may have contributed to the change in an area. During the course of this study, the staff prepared a tabulation of the 1960-70 change in selected socio-economic variables as reported in the U.S. Census, covering the five study areas, the four "control" areas, and the City as a whole. This was done in order to determine if changes in the study area nodes were significantly different than the "control areas", or from citywide norms.

A tabulation of this data is contained in Appendix E. A review of this data revealed that the 1960-70 trends in the variables selected (relating to population, economics and housing) were not significantly different for the study areas than for the "control areas". In general, numerical or percentage changes in the data were also similar to citywide trends and no firm conclusions of particular relevance to the study could be developed.

V.

POLICE DEPARTMENT STUDY OF HOLLYWOOD

This section of the report considers the number and percentages of adult entertainment businesses in the City, changes in these businesses since 1975, and more specifically, crime rates in the Hollywood area as compared to crime rates, citywide.

The following information was compiled by the Los Angeles Police Department and shows the incidence of certain adult entertainment establishments as of two different time periods-- November of 1975 and December 31, 1976. The statistics show a decrease in massage parlors, bookstores, arcades and theaters and a slight rise in adult motels. This was during the same period of time that there was stepped-up surveillance and deployment of officers in areas where concentrations of adult entertainment establishments existed. (The Hollywood community is within the West Bureau.)

This information and that which follows involving the incidence of crime in the Hollywood area provides what may be a positive correlation between crime and the presence of adult entertainment facilities.

TYPE OF ACTIVITY	Nov. 1975	Dec. 1976	Percent of Change
Adult Motels	37	38	+2%
Massage Parlors	147	80	-45%
Bookstores/Arcades	57	45	-21%
Theaters	47	44	-6%
TOTAL	288	207	-28%

DECEMBER 31, 1976
LOS ANGELES CITY POLICE DEPARTMENT
BUREAU OF ACTIVITY AND PERCENTAGE

TYPE OF ACTIVITY	CENTRAL BUREAU	SOUTH BUREAU	WEST BUREAU	VALLEY BUREAU
Adult Motels	5(13%)	23(60%)	5(13%)	5(13%)
Massage Parlors	6 (7%)	4 (5%)	42(53%)	28(35%)
Bookstores/Arcades	6(20%)	1 (2%)	24(53%)	11(24%)
Theaters	7(16%)	1 (2%)	28(64%)	8(18%)
TOTAL	27(23%)	29(14%)	99(48%)	52(25%)

The information in this section is an extract from a report to the Planning Department on "The Impact of Sex Oriented Businesses on the Police Problems in the City of Los Angeles*", prepared by the Los Angeles City Police Department. The City Council in instructing the Planning Department to conduct the Adult Entertainment study has also instructed other City agencies to cooperate with and contribute as necessary to the report process. In accordance with such instructions, the Police Department conducted an analysis of the relationship between the concentration of adult entertainment establishments and criminal activity in the Hollywood area as compared to the citywide crime rates for the period beginning 1969 and ending 1975. This period of comparison covers the years during which adult entertainment establishments appeared and proliferated in the Hollywood area.

Part I crimes are those criminal acts which most severely effect their victims; they include homicide, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, burglary, larceny, and vehicle theft. During the period of 1969 through 1975, reported incidents of Part I crimes in the Hollywood Area increased 7.6 percent while the City showed a 4.2 percent increase. Thus, Hollywood's Part I crimes increased at nearly twice the rate of the City's increase. In conformance to the overall trend, every Part I crime committed against a person, not against property, increased at a higher rate in Hollywood Area than in the citywide total. Street robberies and 484 Purse Snatches, wherein the victim was directly accosted by their assailant, increased by 93.7 percent and 51.4 percent, respectively; the citywide increase was 25.6 percent and 36.8 percent.

Suspects arrested for Part I criminal acts in Hollywood Area increased 16.2 percent while the City dropped by 5.3 percent. This reveals that Hollywood Area was 21.5 percent over the City's total in the apprehension of serious criminals during the seven year period.

Equally alarming as the increase in Part I arrests, is the increase in Part II arrests (described on Table VI, pages 53-54) in Hollywood Area as opposed to the rest of the City. Hollywood increased in this category by 45.5 percent while the City rose but 3.4 percent.

Prostitution arrests in Hollywood Area increased at a rate 15 times greater than the city average. While the City showed a 24.5 percent hike, Hollywood bounded to a 372.3 percent increase in prostitution arrests.

Similarly, pandering arrests in Hollywood Area increased by 475.0 percent, 3-1/2 times the city increase of 133.3 percent. (See note p. 54.)

*The complete report prepared by the Los Angeles City Police Department is available for review in the official files under City Plan Case No. 21475 in the Los Angeles City Planning Department.

Table VI

1969 THROUGH 1975 SURVEY PERIOD
REPORTED CRIMES AND ARRESTS

	Hollywood Area			Citywide
Part I Offenses	1969	1975	% Change	1969	1975	% Change
Homicide	19	37	+94.7	377	574	+52.3
Rape	214	199	-7.0	2115	1794	-15.2
Agrav. Assault	605	886	+46.5	14798	14994	+1.3
Robbery	905	1591	+75.8	11909	14667	+23.2
Burglary	5695	5551	-2.5	65546	69489	+6.0
Larceny	7852	8396	+6.9	89862	93478	+4.0
Auto Theft	2621	2608	-0.5	32149	30861	-4.0
TOTAL	17911	19268	+7.6	216756	225857	+4.2
St. Robberies	381	738	+93.7	5321	6684	+25.6
484 Purse Snatches	185	280	+51.4	1951	2668	+36.8

ARRESTS

	Hollywood Area			Citywide
Part I Offenses	1969	1975	% Change	1969	1975	% Change
Homicide	21	26	+23.8	475	573	+20.6
Rape	67	47	-29.9	858	552	-35.7
Agrav. Assault	239	348	+45.6	6250	3163	-49.4
Robbery	368	285	-22.6	4855	5132	+5.7
Burglary	864	514	-40.5	7823	6032	-22.9
Larceny	546	1371	+151.1	6877	11706	+70.2
Auto Theft	319	226	-29.2	4820	3121	-5.3
TOTAL	2424	2817	+16.2	31958	30279	-5.3

	Hollywood Area			Citywide
*Part II Offenses	1969	1975	% Change	1969	1975	% Change
TOTAL	10660	15503	+45.4	179233	185417	+3.4

*(Part II arrests include: other assaults, forgery and counterfeiting, embezzlement and fraud, stolen property, prostitution, narcotics, liquor laws, gambling, and other miscellaneous misdemeanors.)

Prostitution Arrests	1969	1975	% Change
Hollywood Area	433	2045	+372.3
Citywide	2864	3564	+24.5

Table VI (cont'd)

Pandering Arrests	1969	1975	% Change
Hollywood Area	8	46	+475.0
Citywide	42	98	+133.3

NOTE: (The prostitution arrests made in Hollywood Area in 1975 represents 57.3 percent of all arrests for prostitution made in the city. The pandering arrests made in Hollywood Area in 1975 represents 46.9 percent of all pandering arrests made in Los Angeles during that year.)

DEPLOYMENT

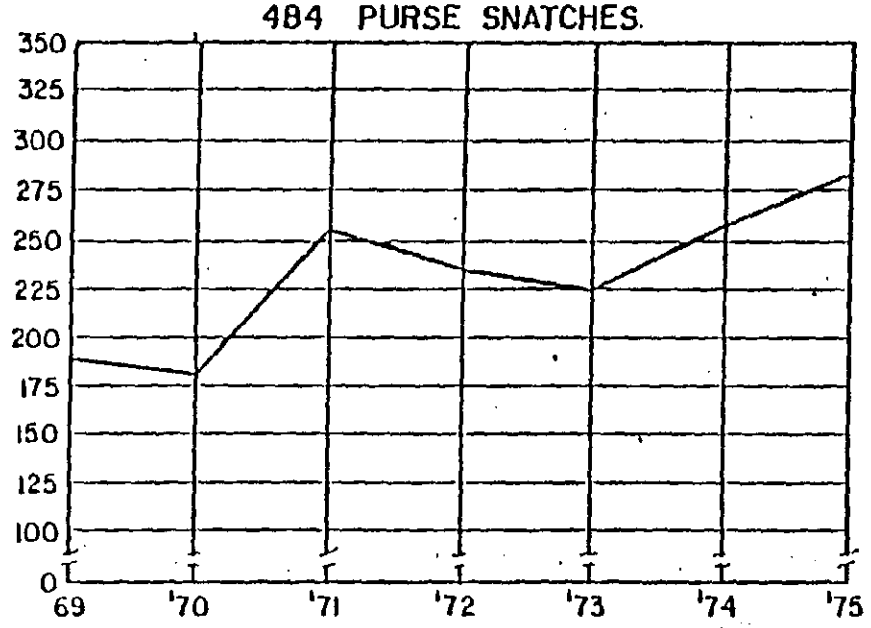
Hollywood Area	1969	1975	% Change
Patrol	197	255	+29.4
Investigators	45	61	+35.6
TOTAL	242	316	+30.6
Citywide	5194	7506	+21.1

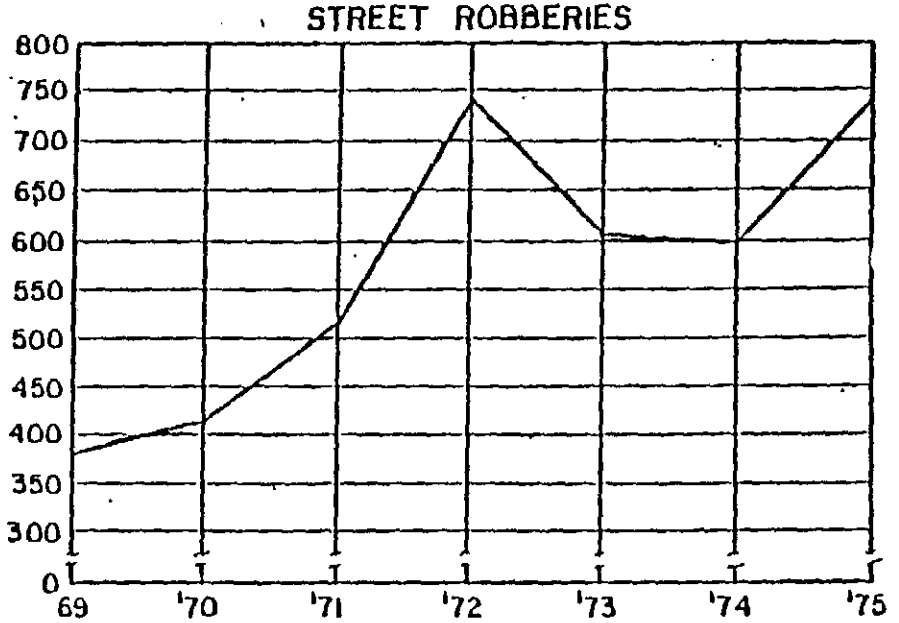
ADULT ENTERTAINMENT ESTABLISHMENTS
HOLLYWOOD AREA

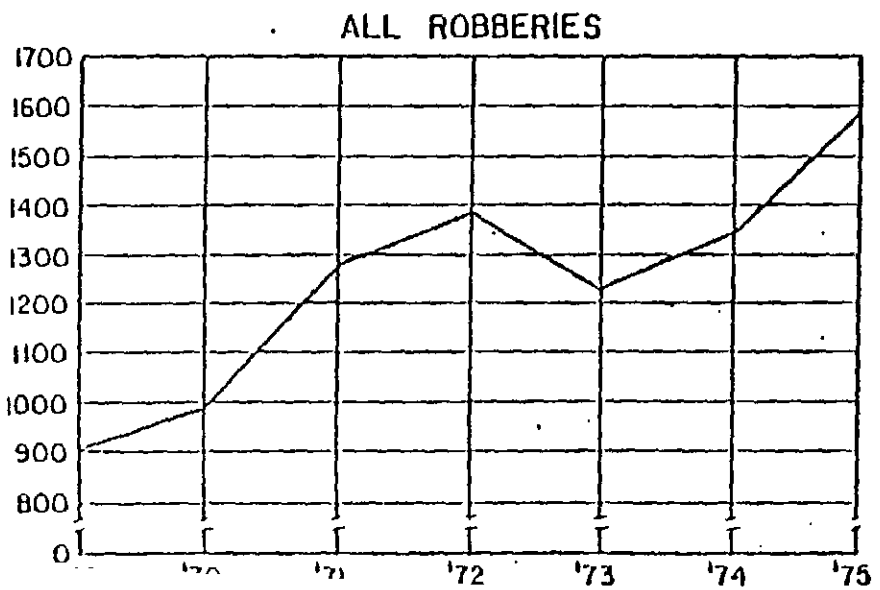
1969 through 1975

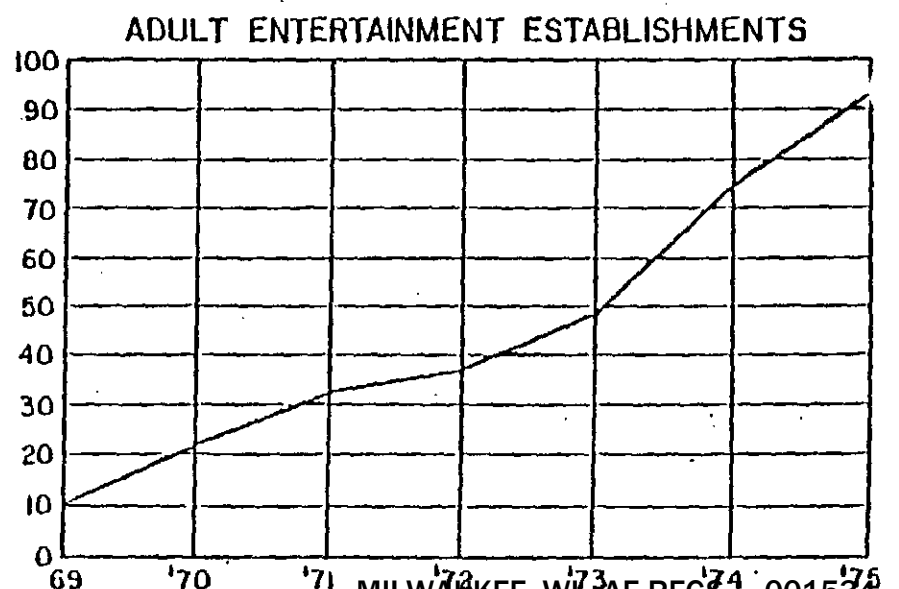
1969		1975
1	Hard-core motel	3	Hard-core motels
2	Bookstores	18	Bookstores
7	Theaters	29	Theaters
1	Massage parlor/scam joint	38	Massage parlor/scam joints
11	Locations (Total)	88	Locations (Total)

HOLLYWOOD AREA









54-A

During the period included in this report, the Citywide deployment of police personnel rose by 21.2 percent. However, with the surge of crime in the Hollywood Area, deployment there increased by 30.6 percent, 9.4 percent higher than the rest of the City. Included in this figure is a 29.4 percent hike in uniformed officers and 35.6 percent rise in investigators to cope with the criminal elements.

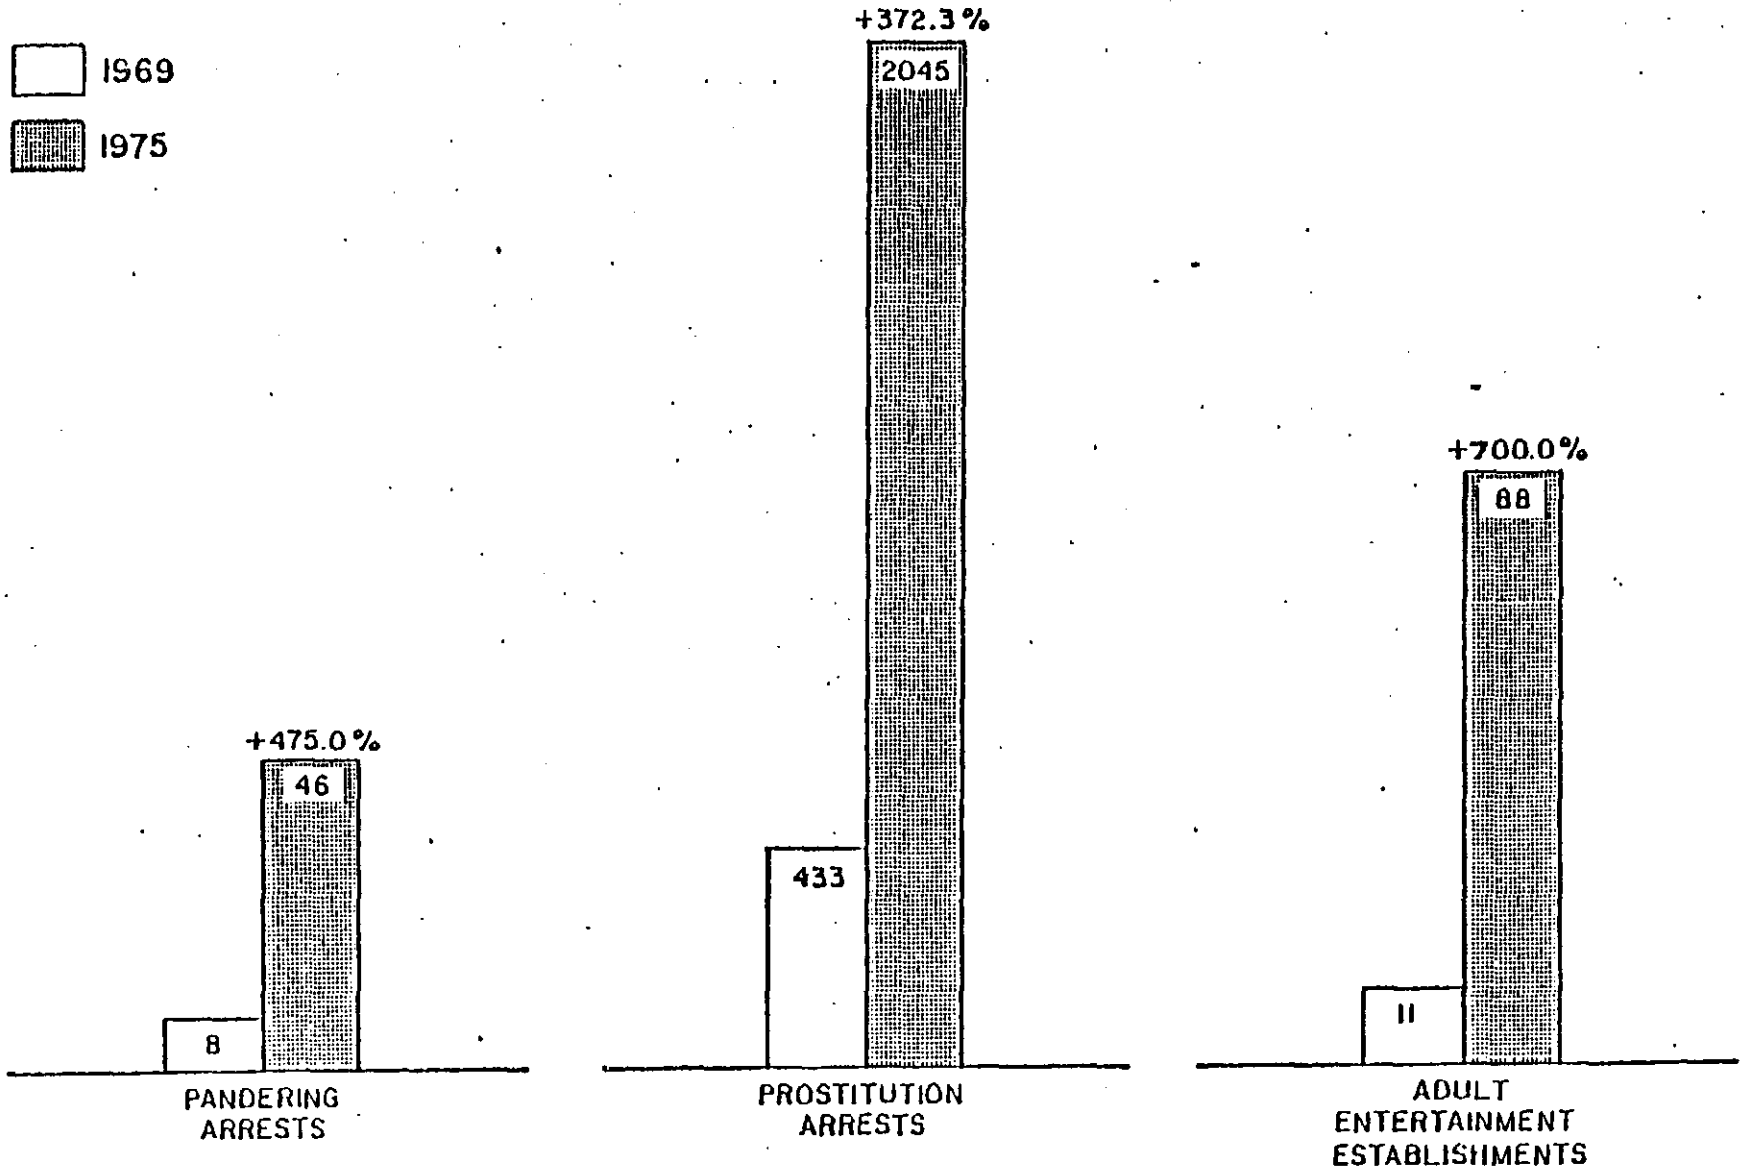
This survey reflects a seven-year span during which time the Adult Entertainment Establishment in the Hollywood Area proliferated from a mere 11 establishments to an astonishing, number of 88 such locations. The overall deleterious effect to the entire community is evident in the statistics provided. The overwhelming increase in prostitution, robberies, assaults, thefts, and the proportionate growth in police personnel deployed throughout Hollywood, are all representative of blighting results that the clustering of Adult Entertainment Establishments has on the entire community. These adverse social effects not only infect the environs immediately adjacent to the parlors but creates a malignant atmosphere in which crime spreads to epidemic proportions.

The remaining sections of the Police Department report are letters and signature petitions from concerned businessmen, clergy, merchants, citizens and police officers and are in the file and available for inspection upon request. The following paragraph summarizes this section of the Police Department report.

The police officer reports can be summarized as follows: all officers felt the sex-oriented businesses either contributed to or were directly responsible for the crime problems in the Hollywood area. The officers felt the sex shops were an open invitation to undesirables and thereby directly caused the deterioration of neighborhoods. Also, it was suggested that these businesses purposely cluster in order to establish a "strength in numbers" type effect, once they establish a foothold in a neighborhood they drive the legitimate businesses out.

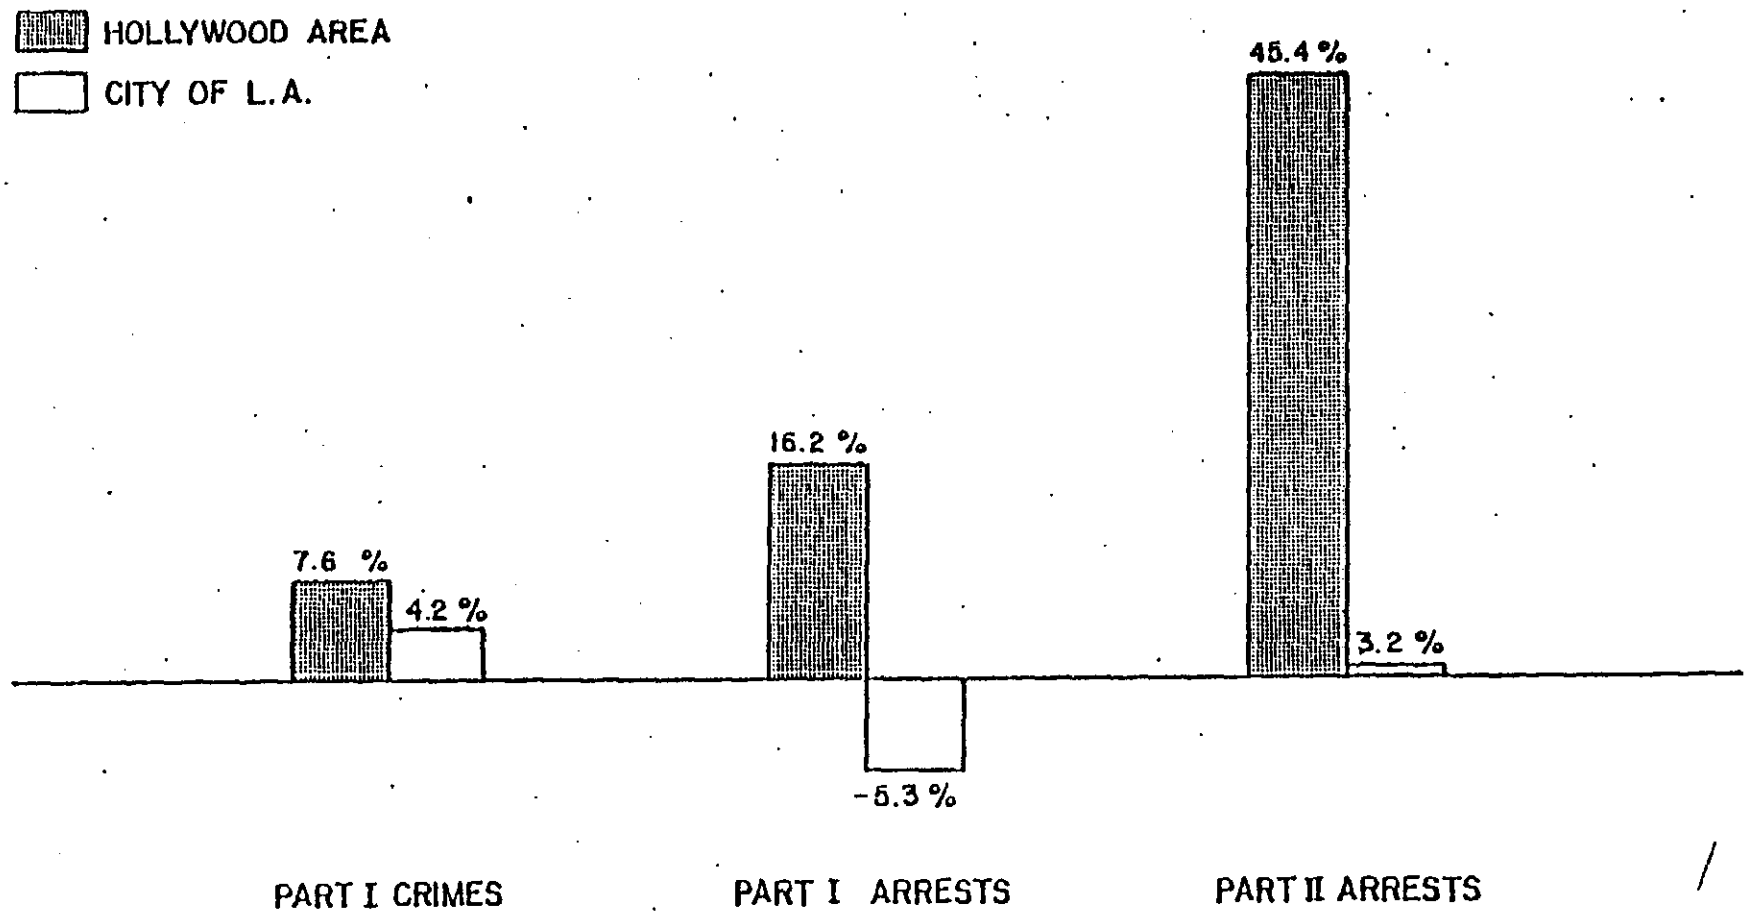
The letters from the businessmen, clubs, churches and concerned citizens were all in support of police efforts to close adult entertainment facilities. The letters all expressed the feeling that the sex shops attracted homosexuals, perverts, prostitutes and other undesirables and directly contributed to the decline of the Hollywood area.

HOLLYWOOD AREA



HOLLYWOOD AREA VS. CITY OF L.A.

RATE OF INCREASE 1969-1975



55-B

Los Angeles City Planning Department

Calvin S. Hamilton, Director
Frank P. Lombardi, Executive Officer
Glenn F. Blossom, City Planning Officer

Citywide Planning and Development Division

Glenn O. Johnson, Division Head

Code Studies Section

Jack C. Sedwick, Senior City Planner
Robert Janovici, City Planner
Charles S. Rozzelle, City Planner
Marcia Scully, Planning Assistant, Project Coordinator
Evelyn Garfinkle, City Planning Associate
Fred Hand, City Planning Associate
Ronald Lewis, City Planning Associate (former project staff member)
Charles Zeman, City Planning Associate

Staff Support

Donald S. Jacobs, Data Analysis
Fred Ige, Planning Assistant
Joyce Odell, Cartographer
Gilbert Castro, Cartographer
Barbara Reilly, Typist
Corrine Gluck, Typist
Mary Volz, Typist
Mewland Watanabe, Typist
Jeanne Crain, Typist
Audrey Jones, Typist
Mason Dooley, Photographer

APPENDICES.

APPENDIX A
(Sheet 1)

Changes in Assessed "Market" Value of Residential and Commercial Property 1970-76; Areas of Concentration of Adult Entertainment Businesses; Corresponding Control Areas, and City of Los Angeles

Areas of Concentration ("Nodes") and Control Areas	Assessed "Market" Values
	Land		Improvements		Total
	1970	1976	1970	1976	1970	1976
Santa Monica & Western	12,955,100	12,926,800	12,945,620	13,697,620	25,900,900	26,624,420
Control Area - Santa Monica and Vermont	11,549,300	10,990,500	9,971,400	13,227,900	21,520,700	24,218,400
Hollywood & Western	17,618,700	18,237,710	20,361,040	23,015,660	37,979,740	41,289,370
Control Area - Hollywood & Highland	21,956,500	26,197,880	39,051,920	35,992,140	61,008,420	62,190,020
Selma & Cahuenga	28,720,280	34,785,080	31,852,740	27,856,660	60,573,020	62,641,740
Control Area - Hollywood & Gower	14,502,880	17,078,900	13,411,880	12,256,520	27,914,760	29,335,420
Tujunga & Ventura (Studio City)	7,115,460	11,890,900	8,493,260	13,852,800	15,608,720	25,743,700
Lankershim & Vineland (North Hollywood)	13,789,200	15,979,300	15,287,340	16,763,160	29,076,540	32,742,460
Control Area - Lankershim & Whipple	11,168,200	18,169,000	14,744,280	18,823,200	25,912,480	36,992,200
	Land		Improvements		Total
City of L.A.	8,303,456,720	11,216,558,900	9,692,014,680	13,464,660,940	17,995,471,400	24,681,219,84

CITY OF LOS ANGELES
CALIFORNIA

TOM BRADLEY
MAYOR

DEPARTMENT OF
CITY PLANNING
561 CITY HALL
LOS ANGELES, CALIF. 90012

CALVIN S. HAMILTON
DIRECTOR

FRANK P. LOMBARDI
EXECUTIVE OFFICER

APPENDIX B

March 14, 1977

REQUEST FOR YOUR ASSISTANCE IN OBTAINING INFORMATION REGARDING "ADULT ENTERTAINMENT ESTABLISHMENTS"

The Los Angeles City Council has recently requested the Department of City Planning, in cooperation with the Police Department and other City agencies, to conduct a study concerning "adult entertainment" businesses.

Because of your particular knowledge of the businesses in the vicinity of your adress, we are requesting that you answer the questions on the attached questionnaire. These questions relate to the effect of adult entertainment establishments on other businesses and neighborhoods in the surrounding area. The results of the questionnaire will be of great value to us in conducting this study.

Please return your completed questionnaire in the stamped envelope provided before April 1, 1977.

If you have any questions about the study or wish to discuss this matter with Planning Department staff members, please call 485-3508.

We greatly appreciate your cooperation in assisting us in this survey.

Original signed by Calvin S. Hamilton

CALVIN S. HAMILTON
Director of Planning

CSH:CSR:cd
0417B/0029A

ADULT ENTERTAINMENT QUESTIONNAIRE

Los Angeles City Planning Department

May 9, 1977

Please answer the seven questions below by checking the appropriate spaces. Feel free to write comments in the space provided or on a separate sheet.

For the purposes of this study, an adult entertainment establishment includes businesses such as: adult bookstores; nude or topless dancing establishments; massage parlors; adult theatres showing X-rated movies; "peep shows"; so-called adult motels, and bars with X-rated entertainment.

1. What overall effect do you feel that adult entertainment establishments have on a neighborhood:

   Effect on the businesses condition (sales & profits) in the area:

   positive _____ negative _____ no effect _____

   Comments/Examples:

   Effect on homes (value & appearance) in the area immediately adjacent to adult entertainment businesses:

   positive _____ negative _____ no effect _____

   Effect on homes (values & appearance) in the area located 500 feet or more from adult entertainment businesses:

   positive _____ negative _____ no effect _____

   Comments/Examples:

(OVER)

2. Do you feel the establishment of adult entertainment facilities in the vicinity of your business has had any of the following effects? (Please check all those effects which you feel have occurred.)

____ no effect	_____ decreased property values
____ lower rents	_____ increased property values
____ vacant businesses	_____ lower taxes ____ tenants moving out	_____ higher taxes ____ complaints from customers	_____ decreased business activity ____ less crime	_____ increased business ____ more crime	_____ more litter ____ improved neighborhood appearance ____ deteriorated neighborhood appearance

____ other (please specify) _____

Please list specific examples relating to any box checked, immediately above.

3. What are the hours of operation of your business? _____

4. Have you seriously considered moving your business elsewhere because of nearby concentrations of adult entertainment businesses?

_____ yes _____ no

Why?

5. Would you consider expanding in your current location?

_____ yes _____ no; if not, why?_____

_____

_____

_____

6. What types of adult entertainment establishments are there in your area? (Please check all appropriate boxes.)

_____ adult bookstores

_____ massage parlors

_____ peep shows

_____ bars with X-rated entertainment

_____ nude or topless dancing

_____ adult theatres

_____ adult motels

How far from your business is the nearest adult entertainment establishment?_____

Thank you for your cooperation. Please return this questionnaire to:

City of Los Angeles
Department of City Planning
200 North Spring Street
Room 513, City Hall
Los Angeles, CA 90012

Name_____

(Business)_____

Address_____

_____

CALIFORNIA

DEPARTMENT OF
CITY PLANNING
561 CITY HALL
LOS ANGELES, CALIF. 90012

CALVIN S. HAMILTON
DIRECTOR

FRANK P. LOMBARDI
EXECUTIVE OFFICER

APPENDIX C

March 14, 1977

REQUEST FOR YOUR ASSISTANCE IN OBTAINING INFORMATION REGARDING "ADULT ENTERTAINMENT" ESTABLISHMENTS

The Los Angeles City Council has recently requested the Department of City Planning, in cooperation with the Police Department and other City agencies, to conduct a study concerning "adult entertainment" businesses.

Because of your particular knowledge of the businesses in the vicinity of your address, we are requesting that you answer the questions on the attached questionnaire. These questions relate to the effect of adult entertainment establishments on other businesses and neighborhoods in the surrounding area. The results of the questionnaire will be of great value to us in conducting this study.

Please return your completed questionnaire in the stamped envelope provided before April 1, 1977.

If you have any questions about the study or wish to discuss this matter with Planning Department staff members, please call 485-3500.

We greatly appreciate your cooperation in assisting us in this survey.

CALVIN S. HAMILTON
Director of Planning

CSH:CSR:lmc

Los Angeles City Planning Department

March 14, 1977

Please give your opinion regarding questions set forth below by checking the appropriate spaces and providing comments in the space provided or on a separate sheet.

For the purposes of this study, "adult entertainment establishments" include businesses such as: adult bookstores, nude or topless dancing establishments; massage parlors; adult theatres showing X-rated movies; "peep shows"; so-called adult motels and bars with X-rated entertainment.

EFFECT ON SURROUNDING BUSINESSES

1. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of business property (land, structures, fixtures, etc.) located in the vicinity of such establishments?

   increase in value_____ decrease in value_____ no effect_____

   Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

2. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of business property located in the vicinity of such establishments?

   increase in value_____ decrease in value_____ no effect_____

   Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

3. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of business property located in the vicinity (length of time required to rent or sell property; rate of lessee/buyer turnover; types of businesses of prospective lessees/buyers; conditions of sale or lease, etc.)?

   increase in rentability/saleability _____

   decrease in rentability/saleability _____

   no effect _____

   Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

4. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the annual income of businesses located in the vicinity of such establishments?

increased income_____ decreased income_____ no effect_____

Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

5. Have any business owners or proprietors considered relocating or not expanding their businesses because of the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?

Yes_____ No_____ Not known_____

If yes, please indicate the specific reason, if known.

6. In recent years, has the commercial vitality (sales, profits, etc.) of any area in the City of Los Angeles been affected in any way by the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?

Yes_____ No_____ Not known_____

If yes, which areas?

Comments/examples: (Please cite effects and provide available data.)

EFFECT ON SURROUNDING RESIDENTIAL PROPERTIES

7. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of private residences located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No Effect
Less than 500 feet	_____	_____	_____
500 - 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____
More than 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____

Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available (data.)

8. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of residential income property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No Effect
Less than 500 feet	_____	_____	_____
500 - 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____
More than 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____

Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

9. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of residential property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No Effect
Less than 500 feet	_____	_____	_____
500 - 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____
More than 1000 feet	_____	_____	_____

Comments/examples: (Please cite specific examples, including available data.)

OVERALL EFFECTS

10. In regard to the questions set forth above, please describe the effects which you believe the concentration of adult entertainment businesses has on each of the following:

Property values of surrounding:

Commercial property _____

Residential property _____

Rental values of surrounding:

Commercial property _____

Residential property _____

Vacancies

Number _____

Length _____

Rate of tenant turnover _____

Annual business income _____

Complaints from customers and residents due to concentration _____

_____

Neighborhood appearance _____

Crime _____

Litter _____

Other (please specify _____

_____

Thank you for your cooperation. Please return this questionnaire to:

City of Los Angeles
Department of City Planning
200 North Spring Street
Room 516, City Hall
Los Angeles, CA 90012

Name _____

Organization _____

Address _____

_____

Do you wish to be notified of the public hearing on this matter?

Yes _____ No _____

APPENDIX D-1

May 3, 1977

Concerned Members of the Public

ADULT ENTERTAINMENT STUDY

We wish to thank you for your interest in the above matter. Recently, residents of the Studio City area have received erroneous information regarding the activities of this Department. Specifically, they have been informed that it is our intent to create an "adult entertainment zone" on Ventura Boulevard. This information is not correct.

In January of this year, the Los Angeles City Council instructed the Planning Department to conduct a study to determine whether so-called "adult entertainment" establishments, where they exist in concentration, tend to have a deteriorating or blighting effect on adjacent properties and areas. Since that time, the Department staff has been evaluating data from the public and governmental agencies to determine whether evidence of such effects exists.

Within the next two months, the analysis of the information gathered will be presented to the Los Angeles City Council which will make a decision as to whether adoption of regulations is appropriate.

We regret that you were sent alarming erroneous information; if you have any further questions, please call my staff at 485-3508 or 485-3368.

(Original signed by)

CALVIN S. HAMILTON
Director of Planning

CSH:RJ:mw

m the Desk of
MORT ALLEN

URGENT . . . . . .

Studio City (Ventura Blvd) has one of the largest concentr of "ADULT ENTERTAINMENT MOTELS" in Los Angeles.

The attached Press Release and Questionaire was not, to our knowledge, published in ANY locally circulated newspaper.

The hearings will be held in Hollywood & Northridge - WHY not in the Studio City area? (need we say more)

We URGENTLY request that you and your neighbors attend BOTH meetings and ALSO call or send telegrams to our elected leaders:

Joel Wachs, City Councilman
Tom Bradley, Mayor
Burt Pines, City Attorney
John Van de Camp, District Attorney
Ted Goldberg, President of Studio City Chamber of Commerce

WE ALL HAVE TOO MUCH INVESTED IN OUR PROPERTIES TO ALLOW ANY "RED LIGHT DISTRICTS" ANYWHERE IN THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES, AND ESPECIALLY IN THE SAN FERNANDO VALLEY.

Mort Allen
Dori Phillips
Karen Misraje
Karen Rosen
Linda Tarlow

Talon Realty Inc

12516 VENTURA BLVD. • STUDIO CITY, CALIF. 91604
POPLAR 9-4444

CC opposes X-rated Ventura Blvd. zone

A proposal to designate certain areas of Ventura Boulevard as an "adult entertainment zone" shocked members of the Studio City Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors when announced at their Wednesday meeting.

Community activist Mort Allen read a notice from the Los Angeles City Planning Department announcing public meetings to be held on the proposal to create special districts for X-rated entertainment.

Howard Raphael, field deputy for Second District Councilman Joel Wachs, said Wachs would oppose designating a portion of Ventura Boulevard as an adult entertainment zone.

APPENDIX D-3

PRIVATELY DISTRIBUTED QUESTIONNAIRE
(Note: Not a portion of Planning Department Study)

- RESPONSES -

Total no. of responses = 197

Question	Response
1. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of business property (land, structures, fixtures, etc.) located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increase in value	2
	decrease in value	178	(90.4%)
	no effect	2
2. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of business property located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increase in value	2
	decrease in value	169	(85.8%)
	no effect	3
3. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of business property located in the vicinity (length of time required to rent or sell property; rate of lessees/buyer turnover; conditions of sale or lease, etc.)?	increase in rentability/saleability	2
	decrease in rentability/saleability	161	(81.7%)
	no effect	3
4. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the annual income of businesses located in the vicinity of such establishments?	increased income	2
	decreased income	149	(75.6%)
	no effect	5
5. Have any business owners or proprietors considered relocating or not expanding their businesses because of the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?	yes	71	(36.9%)
	no	4	(4.9%)
	not known	96	(48.7%)
6. In recent years, has the commercial vitality (sales, profits, etc.) of any area in the City of Los Angeles been affected in any way by the nearby concentration of adult entertainment establishments?	yes	100	(50.8%)
	no.	57	(28.9%)
	not known	___	(35.8%)

7. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the market value of private residences located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	-	148 (100%)	-	148
500 - 1000 feet	-	145 (100%)	-	145
More than 1000 feet	-	142 (95.9%)	-	148

8. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rental value of residential income property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	-	143 (99.3%)	1	144
500 - 1000 feet	-	138 (98.6%)	2 (1.4%)	140
More than 1000 feet	-	133 (95%)	7 (50%)	140

9. What effect does the concentration of adult entertainment establishments have on the rentability/saleability of residential property located within the following distances from such establishments?

	Increase	Decrease	No effect	Total
Less than 500 feet	-	147 (100%)	-	147
500 - 1000 feet	-	141 (99.3%)	-	142
More than 1000 feet	-	141 (97.2%)	-	145

10. (Not tabulated)

In summary, the respondents felt that the subject businesses have a decidedly adverse impact on surrounding businesses and residential properties and the large majority believe that the adverse effect extends beyond the 1000-foot radius.

Comments indicate concern for:

1. personal safety, e.g. assaults
2. moral effect on children
3. safety of property, e.g. vandalism, robbery, etc.
4. neighborhood appearance. Adult entertainment establishments were described variously as tawdry, tacky, garish, seedy, messy, neglected, untidy, blighted, unkempt.
5. litter, e.g. cans, bottles, newpapers, etc., strewn about public and private property, especially heavy after Saturday night.
6. spillover parking into residential areas. On-site parking is often inadequate. Customers seeking anonymity park at a distance away from any given establishment, on residential streets.
7. graffiti on public and private property.

APPENDIX E

SANTA MONICA BOULEVARD & WESTERN AVENUE

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	18,484	19,033	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	38	340	334,916	503,606
Percentage	0.2	1.8	13.5	17.9
Spanish	540	3,833	260,399	518,791
Percentage	3.7	20.1	10.5	18.5
Median Age	42.1	38.0	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	2,190	3,126	756,640	849,246
Percentage	11.8	16.4	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	2,437	3,334	253,993	283,395
Percentage	13.1	17.5	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	3,153	3,380	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	3,833	6,190	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	1.95	1.90	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	9,859	10,667	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	2,938	1,919	559,745	560,378
Percentage	30.0	18.0	59.0	52.0
Multiples	6,921	8,748	375,762	510,261
Percentage	70.0	82.0	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	7,039	5,736	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	9,226	9,962	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	1,330	1,078	404,652	419,801
Percentage	14.0	11.0	50.0	39.0
Renter	7,896	8,986	471,358	607,573
Percentage	86.0	89.0	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	5,699	7,713	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.1	12.3	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	16,450	25,825	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	77	105	78	114
Total Employed	9,370	9,113	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	900	912	6,914	86,802
Percentage	9.6	10.0	5.5	7.5

LANKERSHIM BOULEVARD & WHIPPLE STREET
(Valley Control Area)

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	5,497	5,897	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	9	2	334,916	503,606
Percentage	0.0	.1	13.5	17.9
Spanish	100	439	260,399	518,791
Percentage	1.8	7.4	10.5	18.5
Median Age	42.1	41.6	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	1,106	1,091	756,640	849,246
Percentage	20.1	18.5	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	729	1,076	253,993	283,395
Percentage	13.3	18.2	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	1,371	1,301	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	841	1,337	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	2.36	2.11	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	2,520	2,865	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	1,289	1,082	559,745	560,378
Percentage	51.2	37.8	59.0	52.0
Multiples	1,231	1,783	375,762	510,261
Percentage	48.8	62.2	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	898	813	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	2,328	2,790	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	1,076	989	404,652	419,801
Percentage	46.2	35.4	50.0	39.0
Renter	1,252	1,801	471,358	607,573
Percentage	53.8	64.6	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	8,086	13,154	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.6	12.6	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	22,350	37,700	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	92	136	78	114
Total Employed	2,574	2,736	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	177	280	6,914	86,802
Percentage	6.9	10.2	5.5	7.5

HOLLYWOOD & WESTERN

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	6,860	8,438	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	3	72	334,916	503,606
Percentage	-	.1	13.5	17.9
Spanish	183	909	260,399	518,791
Percentage	2.6	10.7	10.5	18.5
Median Age	43.9	41.3	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	576	803	756,640	849,246
Percentage	8.3	9.4	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	1,158	1,644	253,993	283,395
Percentage	16.8	19.4	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	1,306	1,408	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	2,805	3,602	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	1.76	1.62	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	6,773	8,044	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	764	702	559,745	560,378
Percentage	11.3	8.7	59.0	52.0
Multiples	5,818	7,559	375,762	510,261
Percentage	85.9	94.0	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	3,731	3,037	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	5,996	7,506	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	394	420	404,652	419,801
Percentage	6.6	5.6	50.0	39.0
Renter	5,602	7,137	471,358	607,573
Percentage	93.4	94.4	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	6,429	8,537	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.5	12.6	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	22,200	37,333	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	92	123	78	114
Total Employed	6,535	6,745	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	481	575	6,914	86,802
Percentage	7.4	8.5	5.5	7.5

SANTA MONICA BOULEVARD & VERMONT AVENUE

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	16,855	15,736	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	510	1,287	334,916	503,606
Percentage	3.0	8.2	13.5	17.9
Spanish	869	3,936	260,399	518,791
Percentage	5.2	25.0	10.5	18.5
Median Age	38.8	34.2	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	2,482	2,751	756,640	849,246
Percentage	14.7	17.5	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	2,830	2,432	253,993	283,395
Percentage	16.8	15.5	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	3,343	2,720	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	4,881	4,818	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	2.04	2.01	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	8,866	7,982	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	2,655	1,913	559,745	560,378
Percentage	30.0	24.0	59.0	52.0
Multiples	5,531	6,081	375,762	510,261
Percentage	62.4	76.2	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	6,589	4,093	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	8,274	7,636	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	1,404	896	404,652	419,801
Percentage	17.0	11.7	50.0	39.0
Renter	6,870	6,748	471,358	607,573
Percentage	83.0	88.4	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	5,901	8,142	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.2	12.5	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	15,975	24,100	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	76	103	78	114
Total Employed	9,073	6,528	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	595	465	6,914	86,802
Percentage	6.6	7.1	5.5	7.5

SANTA MONICA BOULEVARD & VERMONT AVENUE

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	16,855	15,736	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	510	1,287	334,916	503,606
Percentage	3.0	8.2	13.5	17.9
Spanish	869	3,936	260,399	518,791
Percentage	5.2	25.0	10.5	18.5
Median Age	38.8	34.2	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	2,482	2,751	756,640	849,246
Percentage	14.7	17.5	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	2,830	2,432	253,993	283,395
Percentage	16.8	15.5	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	3,343	2,720	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	4,881	4,818	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	2.04	2.01	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	8,866	7,982	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	2,655	1,913	559,745	560,378
Percentage	30.0	24.0	59.0	52.0
Multiples	5,531	6,081	375,762	510,261
Percentage	62.4	76.2	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	6,589	4,093	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	8,274	7,636	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	1,404	896	404,652	419,801
Percentage	17.0	11.7	50.0	39.0
Renter	6,870	6,748	471,358	607,573
Percentage	83.0	88.4	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	5,901	8,142	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.2	12.5	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	15,975	24,100	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	76	103	78	114
Total Employed	9,073	6,528	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	595	465	6,914	86,802
Percentage	6.6	7.1	5.5	7.5

SELMA AVENUE CAHUENGA BOULEVARD

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	14,886	13,827	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	43	342	334,916	503,606
Percentage	.3	2.5	13.5	17.9
Spanish	840	1,822	260,399	518,791
Percentage	5.6	13.2	10.5	18.5
Median Age	43.3	39.8	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	1,309	1,248	756,640	849,246
Percentage	8.8	9.0	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	2,896	2,712	253,993	283,395
Percentage	19.5	19.6	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	2,406	1,876	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	6,631	5,951	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	1.68	1.60	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	10,022	9,680	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	1,714	1,140	559,745	560,378
Percentage	17.1	11.8	59.0	52.0
Multiples	8,110	8,533	375,762	510,261
Percentage	80.9	88.2	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	7,197	5,161	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	8,958	8,658	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	812	683	404,652	419,801
Percentage	9.1	7.9	50.0	39.0
Renter	8,164	7,965	471,358	607,573
Percentage	91.1	92.1	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	5,535	7,584	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.2	12.5	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	20,125	30,925	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	80	111	78	114
Total Employed	8,112	6,990	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	998	943	6,914	86,802
Percentage	12.3	13.5	5.5	7.5

TUJUNGA BOULEVARD & VENTURA BOULEVARD

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	17,544	11,599	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	50	44	334,916	503,506
Percentage	.3	.4	13.5	17.9
Spanish	398	758	260,399	518,791
Percentage	2.3	6.5	10.5	18.5
Median Age	39.6	38.7	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	3,638	2,137	756,640	849,246
Percentage	20.7	18.4	30.5	30.2
Persons 55+	1,368	1,232	253,993	283,395
Percentage	7.8	10.6	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	4,526	2,664	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	3,100	2,832	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	2.36	2.17	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	8,110	5,529	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	4,520	2,716	559,745	560,378
Percentage	55.7	49.1	59.0	52.0
Multiples	3,590	2,813	375,762	510,261
Percentage	44.3	50.9	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	2,058	1,009	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	7,548	5,367	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	3,904	2,463	404,652	419,801
Percentage	51.4	45.9	50.0	39.0
Renter	3,644	2,904	471,358	607,573
Percentage	48.3	54.1	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	9,956	15,672	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.6	12.9	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	23,700	39,650	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	98	142	78	114
Total Employed	8,800	5,965	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	584	504	6,914	86,802
Percentage	6.7	8.4	5.5	7.5

HOLLYWOOD BOULEVARD AND HIGHLAND AVENUE

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	11,438	12,016	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	38	325	334,916	503,606
Percentage	.3	2.7	13.5	17.9
Spanish	357	1,509	260,399	518,791
Percentage	3.1	12.6	10.5	18.5
Median Age	44.5	41.0	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	832	970	756,640	849,246
Percentage	7.3	8.1	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	2,281	2,379	253,993	283,395
Percentage	19.9	19.8	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	1,718	1,606	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	5,768	6,408	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	1.57	1.56	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	8,261	8,835	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	1,169	858	559,745	560,378
Percentage	14.2	9.7	59.0	52.0
Multiples	7,067	7,958	375,762	510,261
Percentage	85.5	90.1	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	5,768	4,344	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	7,322	7,756	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	559	559	404,652	419,801
Percentage	7.6	7.2	50.0	39.0
Renter	6,781	7,197	471,358	607,573
Percentage	92.4	92.8	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	5,792	7,510	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.3	12.6	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	23,000	33,300	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	85	117	78	114
Total Employed	6,469	6,177	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	861	878	6,914	86,802
Percentage	13.3	14.2	5.5	7.5

HOLLYWOOD BOULEVARD AND GOWER STREET

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	7,067	2,342	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	9	53	334,916	503,606
Percentage	.1	2.3	13.5	17.9
Spanish	292	311	260,399	518,791
Percentage	4.1	13.3	10.5	18.5
Median Age	45.2	37.3	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	567	227	756,640	849,246
Percentage	8.0	9.7	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	1,445	325	253,993	283,395
Percentage	20.4	13.9	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	1,316	336	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	2,707	1,155	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	1.74	1.64	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	4,334	1,571	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	669	226	559,745	560,378
Percentage	15.4	14.4	59.0	52.0
Multiples	3,463	1,365	375,762	510,261
Percentage	84.6	85.6	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	2,778	726	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	3,924	1,446	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	345	93	404,652	419,801
Percentage	8.8	6.4	50.0	39.0
Renter	3,579	1,353	471,358	607,573
Percentage	91.2	93.6	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	6,102	8,515	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	12.4	12.4	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	21,750	27,600	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	84	112	78	114
Total Employed	3,885	1,430	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	380	148	6,914	86,802
Percentage	9.8	10.3	5.5	7.5

LANKERSHIM BOULEVARD & VINLAND AVENUE

	NODE		CITYWIDE
POPULATION	1960	1970	1960	1970
Total Population	7,600	9,344	2,479,015	2,811,801
Black	1	0	334,916	503,606
Percentage	0	0	13.5	17.9
Spanish	263	146	260,399	518,791
Percentage	3.5	1.6	10.5	18.5
Median Age	41.9	38.7	33.2	30.6
Persons 0-17	1,551	1,697	756,640	849,246
Percentage	20.4	18.2	30.5	30.2
Persons 65+	1,268	1,674	253,993	283,395
Percentage	16.7	17.9	10.2	10.1
No. of Husband & Wife Families	1,833	1,963	545,109	553,564
No. of Unrelated Individuals	1,325	2,521	329,977	421,701
Average Household Size	2.35	1.70	2.77	2.68
HOUSING
Total Units	3,558	4,897	935,507	1,074,173
Singles	1,705	1,359	559,745	560,378
Percentage	47.9	27.8	59.0	52.0
Multiples	1,853	3,538	375,762	510,261
Percentage	52.1	72.2	40.0	47.4
Built Pre-1939	1,501	1,369	481,797	328,988
All Occupied Units	2,711	4,677	876,010	1,024,835
Owner	1,213	1,143	404,652	419,801
Percentage	44.7	24.4	50.0	39.0
Renter	2,098	3,534	471,358	607,573
Percentage	55.3	75.6	43.0	56.4
ECONOMICS
Median Family Income	6,690	9,471	6,896	10,535
Median School Years Completed	11.9	12.4	12.1	12.4
Median Value Owner Occupied in $	17,800	25,450	17,300	26,700
Median Rent in $	86	118	78	114
Total Employed	3,483	4,452	126,276	1,150,796
Unemployed	267	291	6,914	86,802
Percentage	7.7	6.5	5.5	7.5

STAFF REPORT
AMENDMENT TO ZONING REGULATIONS
ADULT BUSINESSES IN C-2 ZONE WITH CONDITIONAL USE PERMIT
CASE NO. 353.015
JANUARY 9, 1978

Since 1969, beginning on Whittier Boulevard, easterly of the 605 Freeway, the community has experienced a rapid growth of adult businesses. Beginning in the unincorporated County area with an adult bookstore, the uses have expanded to include a theater, massage parlors, and model studios, and now stretch to the central business district of Whittier. Fifteen adult businesses now exist, thirteen of which are located in the City of Whittier.

On June 21, 1977, the City Council adopted Ordinance 2116, as an urgency measure, defining and regulating certain adult businesses through the conditional use permit process. The Council in the adoption of said ordinance declared that such uses have operational characteristics which may have a deleterious effect on immediately adjacent residential and commercial areas. The purpose of the urgency measure was to attempt to keep the situation status quo so that the issue could be studied and appropriate regulations, if necessary, be adopted in order to protect such commercial and residential areas within the City from the possible blighting or downgrading effect of adult business. Ordinance 2116 was amended on December 7, 1977 by Ordinance 2128 which added two uses to those regulated.

The urgency ordinance was modeled after an ordinance of Detroit, Michigan, which was upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court in June of 1976. Said ordinance dispersed such uses by use of separation distances from one another and from residential districts. Extensive discussion of the Detroit Ordinance and others appears in the American Society of Planning Officials Report No. 327, "Regulating Sex Businesses," a copy of which is enclosed. (Copies furnished only to the City Council, Planning Commission, and the file. The file copy may be reviewed in the office of the Planning Department.)

EXISTING USES

Currently, there are adult businesses at the following locations:

Address	Type of Business
10529 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
10555 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
10619 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
10703 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
10705 Whittier Blvd.	Book store
10711 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
10713 Whittier Blvd.	Massage parlor
10824 Whittier Blvd.	Massage parlor
11205 Whittier Blvd.	Massage parlor
11527 & 29 Whittier Blvd.	Model studio
11531 Whittier Blvd.	Book store
11729 Hadley	Massage parlor
7038 Greenleaf	Theater

The first of these, at 11729 Hadley Street, took out permits for partitions in January of 1969. The use of the building was stated as "physio-massage." Another massage parlor opened in 1976, at 11625 Hadley, but closed shortly thereafter. Several of the businesses have in these few years, changed hands and locations. At 10510 Dorland, a permit has been requested to convert an existing residence to a model studio, and is currently awaiting dedication of street right-of-way for issuance of permit.

STAFF STUDY

Since June 21, staff has been collecting and analyzing data and reviewing testimonies and contacting other agencies in efforts to determine what effect adult businesses have on adjacent properties. The one major factor to keep in mind in reviewing the data, however, is that not all of it can be isolated as being directly related only to the presence of adult businesses because of the variety of the factors influencing the study areas over the last ten years.

The study compared two areas on Whittier Boulevard over a ten-year period. Said areas are shown on the attached map. Area One, between Redman Avenue and Norwalk Boulevard, contains the largest concentration of adult businesses, the other, Area Four, easterly of Painter Avenue, between Jacmar and Watson Avenues, had no commercial frontage on Whittier Boulevard, and was used as a control. Area Four was selected because of its similar street patterns, lot sizes, and number of homes, to those of the first, where the adult businesses were concentrated.

The ten years compared were 1968 through 1977 (including some 1967 date where 1968 was not available). The first adult business on Whittier Boulevard was licensed on November 29, 1971, but the first in the study area appeared in 1973, and by late 1974, more than half of the current businesses were in operation. Therefore, the end of 1973 was selected as the date to be used to compare before and after affects.

The following is a summary of the results of the study, and indicates the factors considered:

	Study Area One			Study Area Fou
	Number	Per cent		Number	Per cen
1. Number of homes	160			175
2. Number of businesses
1967	17
1976	19			0
3. (a) Number of changes of occupant
Homes	154	96		170	97
Business	37	205		0
(b) Changes since 1973
Homes	88	57		32	19
Business	17	46		0
(Adult businesses)	(7)	(19)
4. Number not changed
Homes	67	41		79	45
Business	5	28		0
5. Number of homes sold
(a) At least once	46	28		79	45
(b) Since 1973	26	57		58	61
Average sale price
1968 $19,100	7		$18,750	5
1969 17,000	2		19,000	6
1970 21,000	2		20,500	3
1971 25,400	5		20,000	3
1972 20,500	4		20,650	7
1973 21,500	2		20,500	9
1974 28,300	4		22,125	7
1975 26,100	7		26,000	9
1976 31,100	9		30,800	14
1977* 36,500	8		37,227	18
*Projected from 6 month data
6. Median Home Value
(1970) $18,214			$18,280
7. Per cent owner occupied
1970		64			82
1977		84			85
8. Ages of housing	39 years			27 years

A further breakdown of the study area one, into the first and second blocks northerly of Whittier Boulevard reveals that the percentages in items 3,and 5 above, are slightly higher in the first blocks than in the second blocks by 5 to 15 per cent.

Item 3 (b), above, shows a major difference between study areas one and four of 36% (57 - 19) in number of changes in occupancy. Item 5 shows that the rate of sales of housing is about the same (57% - 61%), but item 7 shows that the owner occupancy rate has increased from 64% to 84% in study area one. This trend is supported by testimony at a recent public meeting, soliciting such information.

For business properties, the picture is more conclusive than for residential. Expanding items 3 and 4, above, in the business category, we find the following:

Number of changes in occupancy	since 1967	37
	since 1973	17
Number changing more than once	since 1967	12
	since 1973	4
Number not changing	since 1967	5
	since 1973	10
Number of changes to adult businesses		7

In addition to the above data, the annual vacancy rate dropped in 1976 to the level in 1966, having increased, to a peak of three and one-half times that level in 1972. It must be noted, however, that this apparent stability is due to the fact that adult businesses now occupy previously vacant buildings.

The Whittier Police Department has, during the last few years, been collecting evidence in efforts to eliminate alleged illegal activities from the adult businesses. As a result of these efforts, seven of the existing businesses are presently the subject of "red light abatement" action. The initial investigation and evidence gathering documented that all of the nude model studios and three of the massage parlors were actively involved in prostitution. Other problems created by the presence of these businesses are in the form of assault and battery and aggravated assault incidents. There have also been several thefts reported by the customers (johns) who are victimized by the employees. These individuals usually do not file complaints on the incidents, however, fearing that their spouses will become aware of their activities. Therefore, these incidents always do not appear on the police logs.

For several years, the Police Department has received complaints of excessive noise, pornographic material left laying about and in some instances sexual offenders, such as exhibitionists, venting their sexual frustrations in the adjoining neighborhood. Another problem posed by the patrons of these adult businesses is the influx of drunk drivers and intoxicated persons. The majority of customers frequenting the business after 4:00 p.m., and until the early morning hours are males who have been drinking and are seeking sexual release. The Police Department has compiled from the daily logs for the two, four-year periods, 1970-1973 and 1974-1977, the number of incidents of 38 types of criminal activity and the data compared with the City as a whole.

This comparison revealed the following numbers of incidents in the given years:

1970	-	23	1974	-	57
1971	-	29	1975	-	73
1972	-	52	1976	-	90
1973	-	29	1977	-	49
1970-73	-	133	1974-77		269

The comparison of the totals of each four-year time period shows an increase of 102% in incidents of crime in the period 1974-77 over the period 1970-73, whereas, the City as a whole for the same period, experienced only an 8.3% increase in incidents of crime.

Some specific crimes increased in greater proportions as indicated in the following figures for selected crimes:

CRIME	1970-1973	1974-1977	% increase
All Assaults	8	39	387
Theft (Petty)	13	29	123
Robbery	8	13	63
Burglary (Residential)	15	23	53
Malicious Mischief	3	24	700
Prostitution	3	12	300
Grand Theft Auto	5	14	180
Theft (Grand)	4	9	125
Arson	0	5
Displaying a Weapon	0	5
Prowling	0	5

Some crimes, on the other hand, decreased in frequency, such as felony narcotics, which decreased from 16 to 9, but due primarily to changes in narcotics laws. Eight other crimes decreased from one or two incidents in four years to zero to one incident in four years. Nineteen of the remaining types of crimes increased, while ten types were reported for the first time during the time period of 1974-1977.

At various public meetings, over the last several years, citizens have testified of being afraid to walk the streets, that some businesses have left the area or have modified their hours of operation, and that they are fearful of children being confronted by individuals of offensive character or of being exposed to sexually explicit material.

At a recent meeting, several of those who spoke, but lived some distance from the adult businesses, spoke on behalf of those who lived closer, but feared reprisals if they testified.

At one time, there was a general complaint from parents in the neighborhood that their minor children had been in possession of the negative portion of Polaroid film packs and although this image was not as clear as the positive portion, it clearly showed the lewd poses of the models working in the studios. Young males would rummage through the trash receptacles of the various businesses and pick up these items. It was noted during Police Department investigation of the alleged prostitution activities at these nude model studios, that they had become aware of the complaints and refused to allow Polaroid cameras in the businesses. This did not, however, stop the problem of adult newspapers obtained at the book store being left strewn in the parking areas and alleys adjacent to the businesses.

Rates and numbers of changes of occupancy of residences and increases in complaints to the Police Department are the only measurable indicators of the moral and emotional impact of adult businesses on the surrounding neighborhood. This impact is, however, the most difficult to assess and is probably the most significant as it relates to the mental and physical well-being of the neighborhood and the City as a whole.

The health, welfare, and general prosperity of the community are some of those things which facts and figures cannot adequately describe, but the protection and furtherance of which is part of the stated purpose for the development of land use regulations.

An indication of the intensity of the moral and emotional impact is the unity of the residents and their willingness, through organizations, such as Citizens for Decency Through Law, to work for improvement of their neighborhood. This organization has been successful in eliciting support of other organizations to help in said efforts.

Aesthetics are a matter of personal preference, but plays an important role in effecting peoples' attitudes. Regulations, such as the sign ordinance, may not control content or colors of buildings or signs. Typically, the adult businesses are painted in garish, high contrast colors, utilizing flashing or moving lights to attract attention to the businesses. This technique is not, however, unique to such businesses, but is quite common in marginal, strip commercial areas. It is noted that one other major strip commercial use, fast food restaurants, are beginning to change their images from the bright roofs, big signs and giant logos, to the softer, more contemporary, brick, wood, and tile, finding that their success does not depend entirely on their visibility. They have found that those who wish to avail themselves of the services offered will seek them out. The same philosophy could also be applied to adult businesses, allowing them to blend into other commercial neighborhoods.

Dispersion or Concentration

Two basic types of ordinances have been enacted by cities across the United States, dispersing or concentrating. In contrast to the Detroit ordinance, Boston created an "adult entertainment" district, concentrating adult businesses into what became known as the "combat zone." The purpose was to concentrate adult businesses into a single small area to prevent them from spreading into other areas of the City.

The Boston experience failed, however, because, according to Boston police and redevelopment spokesmen, "they (the property owners) killed the goose that laid the golden egg," by not policing themselves.

In Detroit, as in Boston, the problem was primarily in large downtown commercial districts and "skid rows." In these areas, adult entertainment businesses mingled with pawnshops, cheap hotels, bars, strip joints, etc., as well as the "non-porno" businesses. Property owners, attracted by the high rents, willingly paid by the adult businesses, eventually forced many legimate businesses to close, move, or go broke by increasing rents.

In the Hollywood area, as reported in several articles appearing in the Los Angeles Times, owners have stated that they don't particularly care for the type of business, but like the rent that will be paid by these businesses. This could be a major factor in low rent commercial areas. In the Hollywood area, the influx of adult businesses appears to have been followed by a higher vacancy rate. In West Whittier, however, the commercial area between Redman Avenue and Norwalk Boulevard, suffered from a higher vacancy rate before the commencement of adult businesses than after, but largely because adult businesses occupy those buildings which were most frequently found vacant. It could be expected that an owner of a vacant building would accept the high offers for rent with a good chance that the building would stay rented.

For the purpose of determining impact of concentration of adult businesses, four areas were compared, using Polk directories from 1967 to 1977 (1966 thru 76 information), to determine the rate of change of occupancy in adjacent residential neighborhoods before and after the introduction of adult businesses. Three of the surveyed areas contained adult businesses, the fourth, the control area, used for the entire study, included no commercial. Area one has six adult businesses, area two has one, and area three has three. The following map shows the areas studied. The results are as follows:

	Changes Per Year Before A.B.'s	Changes Per Year After A.B.'s
Area 1	9.4	22 (1974+)
Area 2	.1	.1 (1972+)
Area 3	5.3	11 (1974+)
Area 4 (Control)	20	11 (1974+)

Map of City of Whittier showing
Areas studied to determine the affects of adult businesses on adjacent properties

Area 1, with a concentration of adult businesses by 1974, experienced a 134% increase in annual turnover rate, Area 2 experienced no measurable change, Area 3, with three businesses at one location, experienced a 107% increase. The control area, with no commercial and no adult businesses, experienced a 45% decrease in turnover rate for similar periods.

If dispersion is determined to be the most effective type of control (short of prohibition) to impose on such uses to protect adjacent properties, the question then becomes how much dispersion -- how much separation between related uses and from adjacent residential uses.

The Supreme Court in the Detroit case found no objection to the 1,000 ft. separation of "regulated businesses" and 500 feet from residential districts. As mentioned earlier, Detroit's ordinance was developed for a large downtown, with a skid row area. With the exception of Whittwood, the Quad, Uptown Whittier, and the industrial area, Whittier's commercial areas are strips of shallow commercial lots along Whittier Boulevard and intersections of major streets. Almost any separation between residential districts and adult businesses eliminates these businesses from the strip commercial areas, forcing them into Uptown or the shopping centers.

The issue of separation of adult businesses from schools, churches, parks, and similar public assembly areas, has also been raised and dealt with in ordinances of other municipalities. Currently, the closest adult businesses to any of these public uses is 470 ft. from a church, 300 ft. from a park, and 1,100 ft. from a school.

Any distance requirement must, however, be based on the relationship between distance and degree of impact. Brief discussion with the principal of Franklin School and a representative of Whittier

Presbyterian Church, revealed that neither had seen any evidence of direct impacts on their institution by the adult businesses. Both were very much aware of their presence, however, and the principal at Franklin School stated that several families who have moved from the area cited the presence of said businesses. One businessman who relocated to another area in the City, stated that the businesses were not a factor but that his clients now comment on the improvement.

The park referred to is McNees Park, at Whittier and Hadley, in the unincorporated County area. Whittier Police Department indicates that while the park is the scene of many arrests and source of many problems, no definite correlation can be made between the problems and its proximity to adult businesses.

Only one church is within the areas where the current urgency ordinance would allow adult businesses. Other churches are within 250 feet of the area uptown where such businesses could be located. Whittier High School is also within 250 ft. of allowable location in the M zoned area and St. Mary's parochial school is within 500 feet. Central Park (Bailey and Washington) is also within 250 feet of property eligible for the location of adult businesses.

Police records show that complaints of public drunkenness are more frequent in the areas around adult businesses where they are also in close proximity to bars and taverns which are not "bonafide eating places." There may, therefore, be reason to separate adult businesses from businesses with certain types of on-sale alcoholic beverage permits issued by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Churches, schools, and other public facilities are closed much of the time and do not present the opportunities which the parks do. The peak use hours of adult businesses are evenings, when schools, churches, and most public facilities are closed. Therefore, the effect on these uses would naturally be less than on uses which were all day uses, such as parks, or which, like residences, have evening and weekend "peak use" or enjoyment times. For these reasons, it may be in the community interest to require separation between adult businesses and parks. Five hundred feet should be considered a minimum separation, as this distance can be easily walked in less than five minutes. A thousand feet would require an individual to purposely set out to walk whereas 500 feet or under can be "wandered into."

Based solely on the study of one adult business, located almost in the midst of a residential neighborhood (area 2), and its effect on that neighborhood, it would appear that a 500 ft. separation from residential areas is adequate so long as the adult businesses are separated from one another to avoid concentration.

Adequate separation between adult businesses would also lessen the visual or aesthetic impact of concentrations such as businesses caused by their usual garish colors and flashing signs.

In addition to adult businesses, the Detroit ordinance included, when originally adopted as a skid row ordinance in 1962, as "regulated uses," Group "D" cabaret, establishments for the sale of beer or intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises, hotels or motels, pawnshops, pool or billiard halls, public lodging houses, secondhand stores, shoeshine parlors, and taxi dance halls. Adult bookstores and adult theaters were added to this ordinance in 1972.

The Group "D" cabaret mentioned above is a topless or nude cabaret. Cabarets in the City of Whittier are currently regulated through a permit processed through the City Council. Other establishments for on-premise consumption of alcoholic beverages are currently regulated through the conditional use permit process. Pool or billiard halls, secondhand stores, and pawn shops, are permitted uses in the C-2 zones and by themselves present no evidence of any deleterious effect on adjacent properties. Shoeshine parlors and taxi dance halls are more or less unique to the skid row areas of the large cities and do not exist in Whittier nor are they expected to.

None of these uses are inherently attracted to one another, but all seem to be common to skid row areas. The skid row aspect of the Detroit ordinance has no bearing on Whittier's situation and staff cannot substantiate the need for any further regulation of those uses which are not classified as adult businesses.

In some areas, adult only motels and hotels have been established, featuring closed circuit TV showing pornographic movies as well as providing other "services," similar to the adult businesses discussed above. Staff feels that the likelihood of this type of business occurring in Whittier is not too great as these are more prevalent in areas of high transient traffic. Rather than attempt to define such a use in anticipation of its occurring, the proposed definition of adult businesses should provide adequate control over such a use.

Definitions

Defining an "adult business" is difficult, particularly when trying to separate them from other uses with similar names. The current urgency ordinance uses as its base, the definitions which appear in the Detroit ordinance with minor modifications.

The key to the Detroit definitions is the "specified anatomical areas" and "sexual activities." However, such terminology is not immediately applicable to such uses as modeling studios, massage parlors, body painting studios, escort service, rap centers, and similar uses which utilize live humans for providing services. These uses differ from theaters and bookstores in that the latter uses reproductions of humans and the "specified anatomical areas" can be easily applied.

In defining individual adult businesses, the following have been used:

"Adult Book Store" shall mean an establishment having as a substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade, material which is distinguished or characterized by its emphasis on matter depicting, describing, or relating to specified sexual activity or specified anatomical areas, or an establishment with a segment or section thereof devoted to the sale or display of such material.

"Adult Business" shall mean and include an adult book store, adult theater, massage parlor, or modeling studio.

"Adult Theater" shall mean a theater which presents live entertainment or motion pictures or slide photographs, which are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing, or relating to specified sexual activity, or specified anatomical areas.

"Massage Parlor" shall mean an establishment or business which is required to be licensed pursuant to Section 6280 et seq of the Whittier Municipal Code.

"Material" shall mean, and include, but not be limited to, books, magazines, photographs, prints, drawings, or paintings, motion pictures, and pamphlets, or any combination thereof.

"Adult Modeling Studio" shall mean an establishment or business which provides the services of modeling for the purpose of reproducing the human body wholly or partially in the nude by means of photography, painting, sketching, drawing, or otherwise.

"Specified Anatomical Areas" shall mean:

(a) less than completely and opaquely covered:

(i) human genitals, pubic region;
(ii) buttock, and
(iii) female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola; and

(b) human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely and opaquely covered.

"Specified Sexual Activities" shall mean

(a) human genitals in a state of sexual stimulation or arousal; and/or

(b) acts of human masturbation, sexual stimulation or arousal; and/or

(c) fondling or other erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttock, or female breast.

In the Detroit case, the phrase "distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting..." was attached as vague. But, since there was no question in the Detroit case as to whether the material was "distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting," the court did not rule on the vagueness of such a definition. A similar vagueness is found in the definition of adult bookstore where the phrase reads, "an establishment with a segment or section devoted to the sale or display of such material." The City's urgency ordinance narrows the vagueness some by using the phrase, "substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade... depicting...." Such words as substantial, significant, distinguished by, segment and section usually require the courts to provide the narrowing.

A number of cities define adult businesses as:

"...any business which is conducted exclusively for the patronage of adults, from the premises of which minors are specifically excluded, either by law or by the operation of such business."

Such a definition will generally encompass any use which the City is attempting to regulate and gets around the touchy question of content of material, relying on existing State and local regulations. These regulations are briefly discussed below.

The Whittier Municipal Code, Section 6288, prohibits giving a massage to or admitting any person under 18 years of age into a massage parlor unless parent or guardian has consented thereto in writing.

Minors are currently excluded specifically from adult bookstores and adult theaters by Section 313.1 of the Penal Code of the State of California because of the "harmful" content of the material available.

Section 309 of the Penal Code prohibits admitting minors into places of prostitution, but the law does not prohibit admitting a minor to view the physical body and photograph it for his own use. In this case, the exclusion is imposed by the management of the business who is not required by law to do so but does so out of fear of the possibility of being found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor pursuant to Section 272 of the Penal Code.

The difficulty at this point in time with a general definition is that litigation is still pending on one such ordinance whereas the court has sanctioned, though on a 5 - 4 vote, the definitions contained in the Detroit ordinance.

The two types of definitions can, however, be used together. The severability clause (Section 9105) of the zoning regulations would protect one definition if the other was ruled against by the court.

If the courts should rule in favor of the general definition, then the ordinance is that much stronger and accomplishes the overall goal of regulating existing and future adult business uses and eliminates the need for defining every possible business which might be conjured up.

Control

Assuming the dispersion approach is the most acceptable, two methods are available as alternatives to determining where adult businesses can be located. The first is to permit them by right in given zones, with the locational criteria. The second is to require approval through a permit process of some kind. The conditional use permit is the only tool available to the City for this type of control.

By allowing the use to be established by right, the City relinquishes control over the use other than through enforcement of criteria which might be established. Such regulation fails to take into account special circumstances relative to a specific location, on which adult businesses might have impact. The conditional use permit process allows staff and Planning Commission to review each request and requires the applicant to show that the use will not have an adverse impact on the area and that there is a demonstrated need for the use at that location.

The question remaining then is which zone is appropriate. Being a commercial use, an adult business would be limited to one of the C zones or the M zone. The C-0 zone is intended for offices and uses which service offices or employees of office type uses, such as beauty and barber shops. The C-0 zone, as well as the C-1 zone, act somewhat as transitional or buffer zones, often separating heavier C-2 zones from residential zones and allowing residential uses as as well. Adult businesses in the C-0 and C-1 zones would not be able to meet any reasonable separation criteria. The C-2 zones, though often separated from residential districts by C-0 and C-1 zones are not ideal either because of their proximity to residential uses and the shallow depths of most C-2 zoning which makes meeting separation criteria difficult.

The courts have said that restrictions on a legal business cannot be such that the effect is elimination or prohibition of such uses. First permitting adult businesses in the C-2 zone would provide reasonable flexibility through the conditional use permit process for the approval of a limited number of adult businesses in several areas of the City.

Abatement of Nonconforming Uses

It is quite obvious that any requirement for separation from residential areas and between businesses will have the effect of making all of existing adult businesses, with the exception of the theater Uptown, nonconforming uses, subject to abatement.

The courts have held that reasonable time must be given in the amortization of nonconforming uses. Such time limits must commensurate with investment involved and based on the nature of the use.

The improvement made to structures in which existing adult businesses are located were basically partitioning and signs. The valuation listed on the permits ranged from (total of all permits on property) $1,000 to $12,450, averaging $3,185 per adult business. Three locations apparently had no modifications which required building permits. The permit fees amounted to a total of $572.95, averaging $47.75 per business. One case of high valuation and permits resulted from the repair to a structure after extensive fire damage. These amounts are not, in staff's opinion, significant investments for the use, and on the high rate of return on adult business investments any costs should have been amortized several times.

The courts in 1974 upheld an 18-month amortization of a use declared a public nuisance, where users had no investment in any permanent improvements on the property and where users had adequate time to make plans to move and where there was substantial evidence that there was adequate properties favorably zoned in the county which could be used to locate the business.

A reasonable amortization should not be less than 18 months nor need be longer than two or three years. Where the conformity only requires a change in the stock in trade, such as books or a change in the material presented as in a theater, the amortization period can be shorter. The proposed ordinance would provide 90 days in this case.

Conclusion

The information obtained and reviewed during the conduct of this study has definitely shown that concentration of adult businesses in the City of Whittier have had an adverse impact on the adjacent neighborhoods. The increases in crime and residential occupancy turnover are two of the key indications of neighborhoods beginning to decline and deteriorate. The City's intent in regulating such businesses is to prevent them from causing deterioration in adjacent neighborhoods. Assuming that such regulation, now pending is timel· that is, not too late, some of the more physical evidences of deterioration are not blatantly evident. However, experiences of (municipalities and of individuals support the impact of prolonged concentration of such businesses.

Inasmuch as the courts have prevented the outright prohibition of adult businesses, regulation is the only control left to the cities. It is evident from the study that individual, isolated businesses do not have nearly as great an impact as concentrations.

Therefore, the dispersion of adult business in certain areas of the City is the most appropriate form of regulation, using the conditional use permit process to review each application.

The Supreme Court has upheld 1,000 foot and 500 foot separations in the Detroit case. These separations are adequate for Whittier's situation. In certain circumstances, lesser separation would accomplish the same end, but structuring an ordinance with specific areas complicates its enforcement.

The effect of such separation would make portions of the industrial areas and shopping centers eligible locations for adult businesses, subject to conditional use permit approval.

All of the existing locations of adult businesses would become nonconforming under the provision of the proposed ordinance and required to conform within the prescribed abatement periods.

Recommendation

Staff recommends that the Planning Commission recommend that the City Council find that the regulation of adult businesses is required for the preservation of the integrity of existing commercial area and residential areas in close proximity thereto and is in the public interest and would promote the general welfare of the community and that the attached draft ordinance regulating such businesses be adopted.

(Considered by Whittier City Planning Commission, January 9, 1978 and Whittier City Council January 24, 1978)

City of Oklahoma City
COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT
Planning Division

ADULT ENTERTAINMENT BUSINESSES IN OKLAHOMA CITY

A SURVEY OF REAL ESTATE APPRAISERS

March 3, 1986

The City of Oklahoma City

Community Development
200 N Walker
Oklahoma City, Okla. 73102

February 3, 1986

Dear Oklahoma City Appraiser,

The City of Oklahoma City has recently adopted a new ordinance that will regulate the location of adult entertainment businesses.

Adult entertainment businesses are defined in our ordinance as those which emphasize acts or materials depicting or portraying sexual conduct. These businesses include "Adult Bookstores," clubs with nude dancers, theatres which show sexually explicit movies, etc.

In an effort to more completely analyze the impact of adult businesses on surrounding properties, Planning Division asks for your help in establishing a "best professional opinion" on the matter. As a real estate professional, the opinions you share with us on the enclosed survey forms would be very valuable to us in the development of a local data base for this sensitive land use issue.

Thank you very much for your assistance.

Sincerely,

Carl Friend

Carl Friend
Principal Planner

CF:SK:dar

cc: Pat Downes
H. D. Heiser

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT
Planning Division
CITY OF OKLAHOMA CITY

TO: Professional Real Estate Appraisers

Please help us in this brief Oklahoma City survey. The information provided will help us establish an important data base regarding adult entertainment businesses.

The first four questions relate to the hypothetical situation presented below. The last three questions refer to actual situations in Oklahoma City that you might be aware of.

> A middle income residential neighborhood borders an arterial street that contains various commercial activities serving the neighborhood. There is a building that was vacated by a hardware store and will open shortly as an adult bookstore. There are no other adult bookstores or similar activities in the area. There is no other vacant commercial space presently available in the neighborhood.

Please indicate your answers to questions 1 through 4 in the blanks provided, using the scale A through G.

SCALE:
- A Decrease 20% or more
- B Decrease more than 10% but less than 20%
- C Decrease from 0 to 10%
- D No change in value
- E Increase from 0 to 10%
- F Increase more than 10% but less than 20%
- G Increase 20% or more

1) How would you expect the average values of the RESIDENTIAL property within ONE block of the bookstore to be affected? _____

2) How would you expect the average values of the COMMERCIAL property within ONE block of the bookstore to be affected? _____

3) How would uou expect the average values of RESIDENTIAL property located THREE blocks from the bookstore to be affected? _____

4) How would you expect the average values of COMMERCIAL property located THREE blocks from the bookstore to be affected? _____

5) Are you aware of the existence of adult entertainment businesses in Oklahoma City? _____

6) What is your opinion as to the effect of these businesses on surrounding properties?

_____

_____

_____

7) Specifically, how do you think these businesses affect the surrounding property?

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

Are you a member of:

MAI ____

ASA ____

SREA ____

other _____

Your name or agency _____

(If you prefer not to give your name, please check here ___)

Thank you for your cooperation. Please return this questionnaire in the postage paid envelope provided for your convenience.

METHODOLOGY

On February 7, 1986, 100 questionnaires were mailed. All real estate appraisers in Oklahoma City listed in the Yellow Pages were included in the survey. As of March 1, 1986, 34 (34%) of the questionnaires had been completed and returned. Real estate appraisers do not receive certification from the State of Oklahoma; however, 26 of the respondents (76%) belonged to a professional organization. The table below summarizes the objective part of the questionnaire. Subjective comments are discussed in a separate section of this report.

SCALE	QUESTIONS
	1	2	3	4
A Decrease 20% or more	11 (32%)	7 (21%)	4 (12%)	4 (12%)
B Decrease 10% - 20%	8 (24%)	9 (26%)	3 (9%)	3 (9%)
C Decrease 0 - 10%	6 (18%)	10 (29%)	10 (29%)	7 (21%)
D No change in value	9 (26%)	8 (24%)	17 (50%)	20 (59%)

E,F, and G were positive values--not checked by anyone

OKLAHOMA CITY REAL ESTATE APPRAISER SURVEY RESULTS

The 100% survey of real estate appraisers in Oklahoma City produced results that were consistent in virtually all respects with the result of the national survey of appraisers carried out by the city of Indianapolis.

Respondents overwhelmingly (74%) indicated that an adult bookstore would have a negative effect on residential property values in the hypothetical neighborhood described if they were within one block of the premises. 32% felt that this depreciation would be in excess of 20%, wheras 42% foresaw a decrease in value of from 1% to 20%. (Comparative national figures are 78%, 19% and 59% respectively.)

Seventy-six percent (76%) saw a similar decrease in commercial property values within one block of the adult bookstore. As in the national survey, fewer (21%) felt that a devaluation of over 20% would occur. The majority, (55%) saw the depreciation as being in the 1% to 20% range. (Comparative national figures are 69%, 10% and 59% respectively.)

The negative impact fell off sharply when the distance was increased to three blocks. As in the national survey, there appears to be more of a residual effect on residential properties than on commercial properties.

50% of the appraisers felt that a negative impact on residential properties would still obtain at three blocks from the site. Only 12% felt that this impact would be in excess of 20%. The remaining 38% felt that depreciation would be somewhere in the 1% to 20% range. 50% saw no appreciable effect at all at three blocks. (Comparative national figures are 39%, 3% and 61%.)

Commercial property was judged to be negatively impacted at three blocks by 41% of the survey. 59% saw no change in value as a result of the bookstore. (Comparative national figures are 23% and 76% respectively.)

In summary:

- The great majority of appraisers (about 75%) who responded to this survey felt that there is a negative impact on residential and commercial property values within oneblock of an adult bookstore.
- This nagative impact dissipates as the distance from the site increases, so that at three blocks, half of the appraisers felt that there is a negative impact on residential property and less than half felt that there is a negative impact on commercial property.

RESULTS FROM SUBJECTIVE QUESTIONS

Oklahoma City real estate appraisers were also asked for their opinions as to the effect of adult entertainment businesses on surrounding properties. Most of the respondents discussed a variety of negative effects. Only five respondents (14%) said that adult entertainment business had very little effect on surrounding properties. Of these, three appraiser felt that these types of businesses located in commercial areas that were already blighted. All respondents indicated their awareness of the existence of adult entertainment businesses in Oklahoma City; many refered to the 10th and MacArthur location as a prime example of an undesirable cluster situation.

Opinions are summarized below:

Not good: attracts undesirables, threat to residents feeling of safety & security.
- acts as a deterent to home sales
Would you want your home or business next door?
-forces good businesses out
-tends to have a snowball effect
-an immediate transition begins, with the better quality businesses moving out and a lower class business moving in (pawn shops, bingo parlors)
-embarrassment to other businesses and cliental - late hours, parking-trash and debris - vandalism
-children in the area in danger of adverse influence or by actual molestation by perverted people drawn to such establishments
Typical shoppers and residents go elsewhere to shop, and, if they're able to live.
If there is a large concentration of this type of business, there can be a very large loss in property value.
-tends to prevent economic improvement in the area, effects the community as to attracting other businesses
-detrimimental impact on rental rates

REPORT ON THE SECONDARY EFFECTS OF THE CONCENTRATION OF ADULT USE ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE TIMES SQUARE AREA

April 1994

PREPARED BY INSIGHT ASSOCIATES

TIMES SQUARE
BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT DISTRICT

REPORT ON THE SECONDARY EFFECTS OF THE CONCENTRATION OF ADULT USE ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE TIMES SQUARE AREA

April 1994

1560 Broadway, Suite 800, New York, NY 10036
(212) 768-1560 Gretchen Dykstra, President

TABLE OF CONTENTS

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

BACKGROUND

After a dramatic decline in the number of adult use businesses in Times Square from an all-time high of approximately 140 in the late 1970s to 36 in June, 1993, the business and adjacent residential communities view with concern the increase to 43 in the last few months. The area of concentration of these businesses has shrunk and shifted from Broadway and Seventh Avenue to Eighth Avenue and the western edge of 42nd Street block between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. This summer the City and State will begin condemnation procedures against the remaining private parcels on the northeast corner of 42nd Street and Eighth Avenue. This action will reduce the overall number but displacement onto Eighth Avenue is possible.

Times Square is one of the City's most eclectic and vibrant commercial areas, producing extraordinary economic fuel and firing the imaginations of millions worldwide as the international icon of vitality and vibrancy. Times Square is home to some of the City's major corporations with more than 30 million square feet of office space. The BID represents approximately 400 property owners and 5,000 businesses including giant entertainment companies, international security firms, large law firms, theatrical agents and publishers. Times Square has a daily pedestrian count of 1.5 million people.

It is the capital of legitimate theater for the nation with 37 Broadway theaters and a total of 25,000 seats. These theaters together sell some 8 million tickets annually, pumping $2.3 billion into the New York City economy annually.

Approximately 20 hotels with 12,500 hotel rooms (one-fifth of all hotel rooms in Manhattan) house some five million visitors a year and more than 200 restaurants, the largest concentration in any City neighborhood, serve them and local patrons. The Convention and Visitors' Bureau estimates 20 million tourists come to Times Square annually.

But Times Square is also home for thousands of residents who live within its heart or immediately adjacent to it. The BID alone has six churches within its boundaries. Among the 25,651 people who live in six census tracts which include 42nd to 54th from Sixth to Tenth Avenues, 15.4% are 62 years or older which is similar to Manhattan as a whole and to the two community districts (CB4 and CB5) in which Times Square exists. In 1990 nearly 2,000 children under the age of 14 lived in this area, too. Both old and young are generally circumscribed by their immediate community. The Census data also show that 48% of these residents work within less than half an hour from their homes and walk to work, spending both their working and off-hours in the Times Square area. This percentage is higher than the percentage for the borough as a whole and is much higher than the percentage of those in the other four boroughs.

Crime has plummeted over the past several years in Times Square with an estimated reduction by 60% on West 42nd Street alone. This reduction came in part from the closing of many adult use establishments on 42nd Street between 7th and 8th Avenues and the close coordination between the NY Police Department and the Times Square BID. The BID with its 40 public safety officers has witnessed an overall reduction of street crime within its boundaries by 19%, comparing 1992 to 1993, including an impressive reduction of 38% in grand larceny from the person. BID statistics also reveal that three card monte games have been reduced by some 57% over the past year.

The most recent Mayor's Sanitation Scorecard rated the sidewalks of Times Square at an impressive 93% thanks in large measure to the BID's 45 sanitation workers. In addition, the BID's homeless outreach team has placed many needy people in shelters and services.

During 1993, the City Council introduced legislation that would restrict the locations of adult uses citywide. This proposed legislation, along with similar bills proposed and enacted in cities across the nation, including Detroit, can only be upheld constitutionally, if it can be supported by documentation of negative secondary effects as well as evidence that the establishments could locate somewhere accessible for their patrons.

The Times Square BID commissioned an objective, fact-finding study to determine the effect, if any, these adult use businesses have on one of the City's most commercially vital areas. In this study, as in other secondary effects studies, researchers combined analysis of available data on property values and incidence of crime together with a demographic and commercial profile of the area to show relationships, if any, between the concentration of adult use establishments and negative impacts on businesses and community life. The study also includes, as allowed by Courts, anecdotal evidence from property owners, businesses and community residents and activists of their perceptions of the impact adult establishments have on their area.

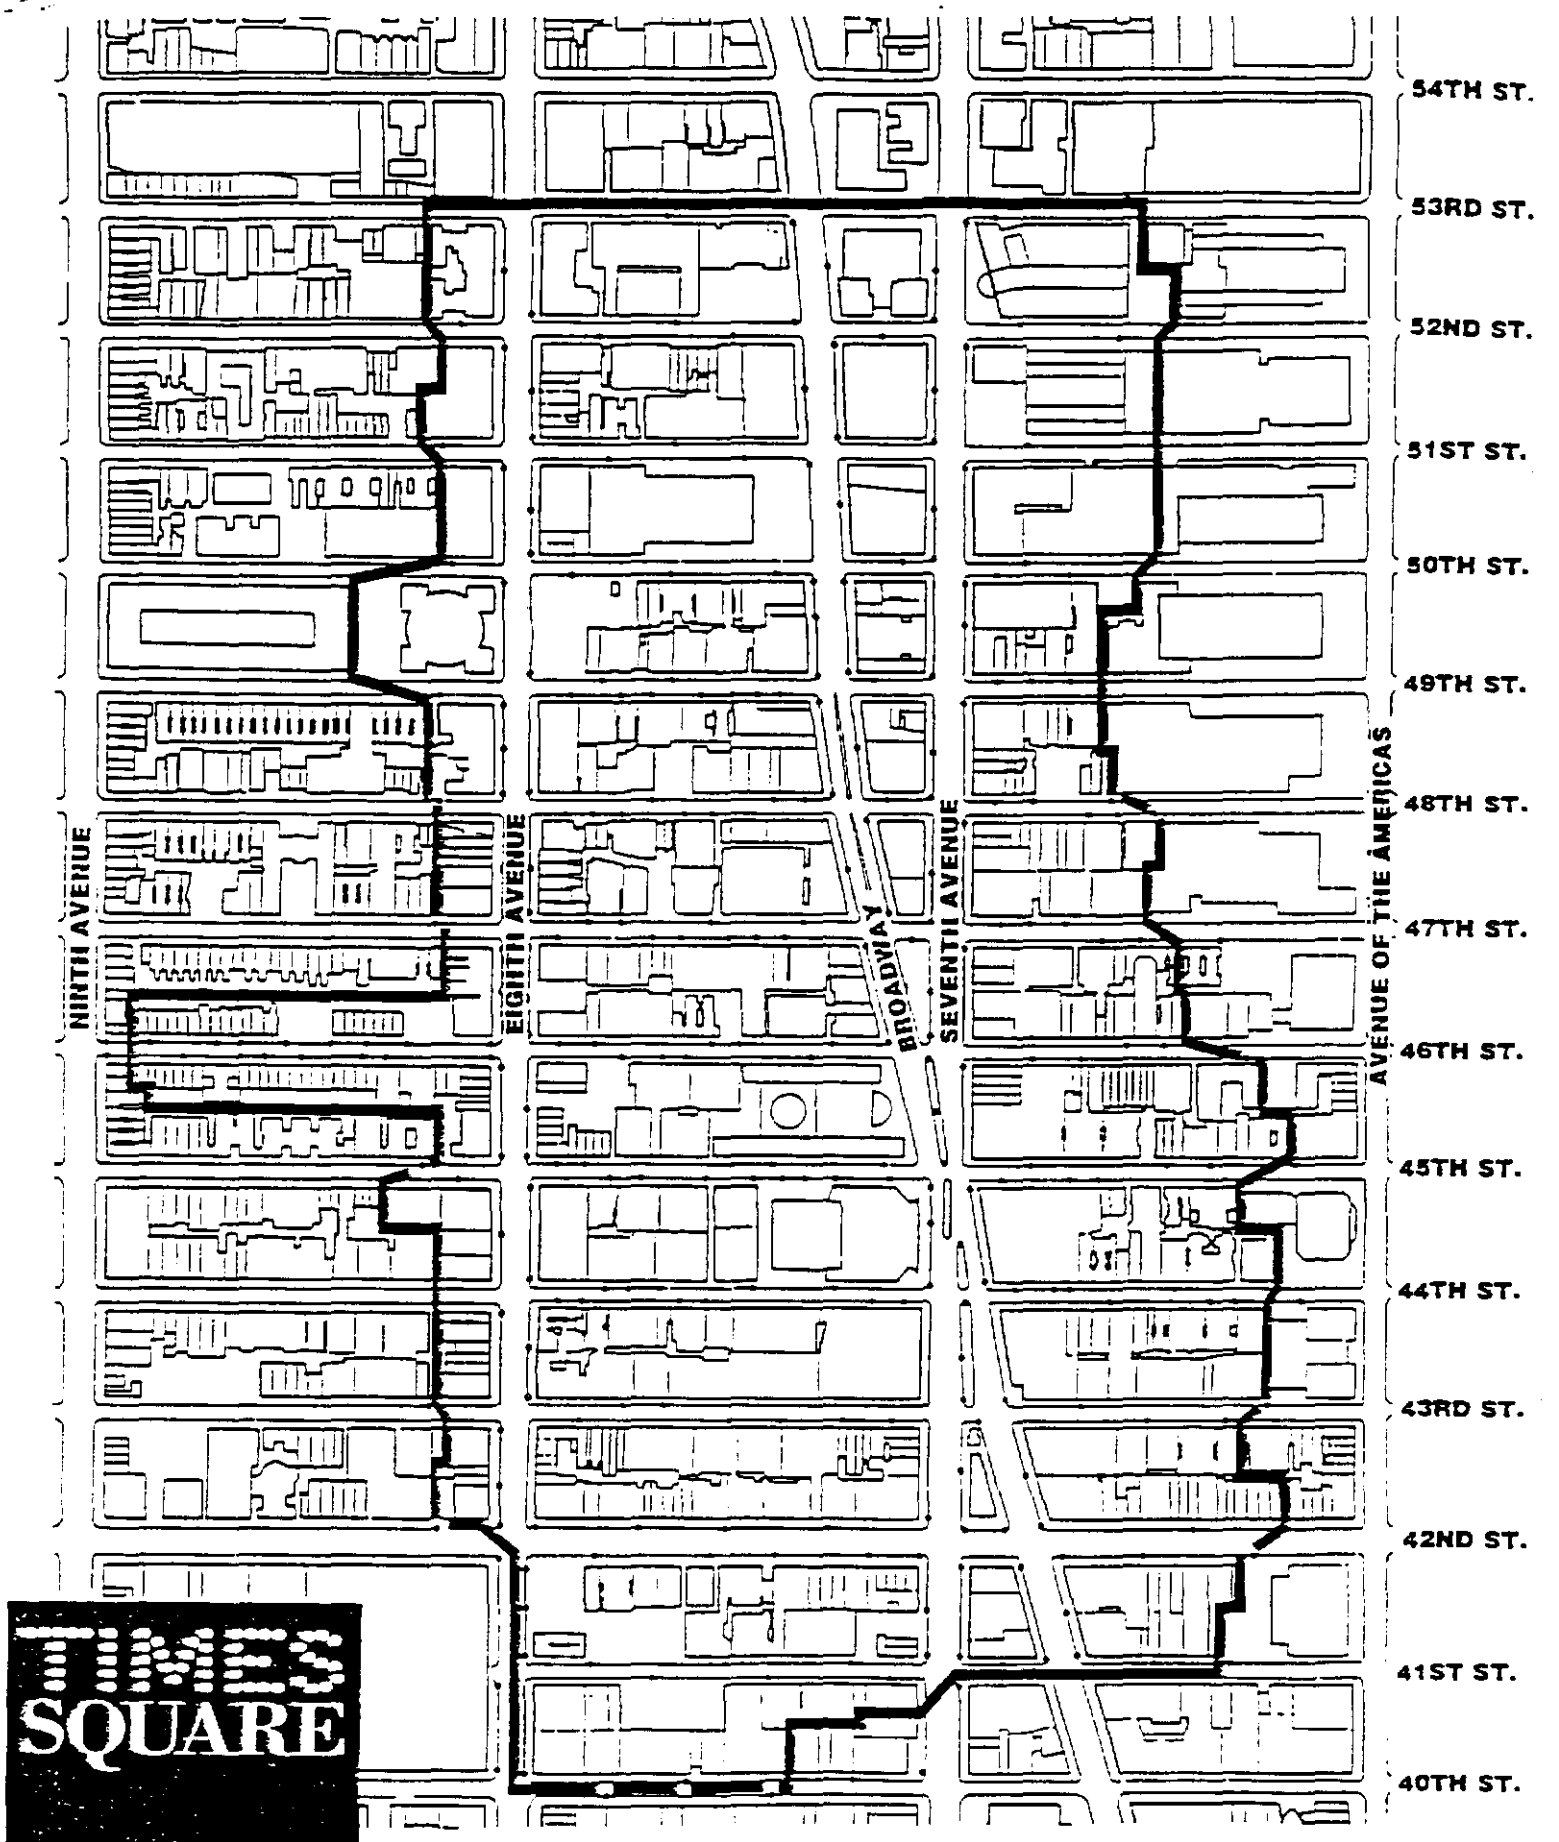
FINDINGS

- All survey respondents acknowledged the improvements in the area and voiced optimism about the future of Times Square even as they bemoaned the increase of adult establishments on Eighth Avenue. Many respondents felt that some adult establishments could exist in the area, but their growing number and their concentration on Eighth Avenue constitute a threat to the commercial prosperity and residential stability achieved in the past few years.

- Although the study was unable to obtain data from before the recent increase in adult establishments and, thus, unable to show if there's been an increase in actual complaints, there were, in fact, 118 complaints made on Eighth Avenue between 45th and 48th compared to 50 on the control blocks on Ninth Avenue between 45th and 48th Streets. In addition, the study reveals a reduction in criminal complaints the further one goes north on Eighth Avenue away from the major concentration of these establishments.

- The rate of increase of total assessed values of the Eighth Avenue study blocks increased by 65% between 1985 and 1993 compared to 91% for the control blocks during the same period. Furthermore, acknowledging the many factors that lead to a property's increased value, including greater rents paid by some adult establishments, an assessment of the study blocks reveal that the rates of increases in assessed value for properties with adult establishments is greater than the increase for properties on the same blockfront without adult establishments.

- Many property owners, businesses, experts and officials provided anecdotal evidence that proximity (defined in various degrees) to adult establishments hurts businesses and property values.



TIMES SQUARE

Business Improvement District

INTRODUCTION

After a dramatic decline in the number of adult use establishments in the Times Square area in the last eight years, Times Square, like other neighborhoods in the city, has experienced a sudden increase, especially along Eighth Avenue. This recent increase of adult businesses must be seen in the context of the current resurgence of Times Square as New York's premier tourist, entertainment, and commercial center. Member organizations of the BID and other concerned citizens have expressed particular concern about the impacts of a dense concentration of these businesses on the commercial life of the area. Thus, this study was commissioned by the Times Square Business Improvement District.

The Times Square Business Improvement District works to make Times Square clean, safe and friendly. The Times Square BID, working collaboratively with city agencies, community organizations and the many individuals and groups with a shared interest in the vitality of Times Square, provides supplemental security and sanitation services, homeless outreach efforts, tourism assistance and special events and marketing.

The BID extends from 40th to 53rd Streets, just west of Sixth Avenue to the west side of Eighth Avenue. Along 46th Street, it stretches to 9th Avenue. Its over four hundred members represent five thousand businesses and organizations in the Times Square area. Supported by mandatory assessments on local property owners, the BID has an annual budget of $4.6 million. It is an independent not-for-profit organization, with a 46-member Board of Directors representing large property owners, large and small commercial tenants, residential tenants, and social service agencies.

During 1993, legislation was introduced in the City Council that would restrict the placement of adult uses on a city-wide basis. This legislation was spurred in large part by residential neighborhoods that, for the first time, were becoming home to adult establishments.

In the summer of 1993 the BID hired Insight Associates to assess that proposed legislation and its possible impact on Times Square in order to help the BID understand its options and determine an appropriate reaction. That study called attention to wider national experience. Legislation regulating adult uses, in order to pass Constitutional muster and be upheld in the courts, must be backed by documented evidence of secondary effects of such businesses and their concentration.

The Times Square BID decided to initiate its own secondary effects study, to ensure that the Times Square experience is well-represented in any city-wide debate. The BID again hired Insight Associates, with Ethel Sheffer and Marcie Kesner as principal researchers, in September, 1993.

In the same month, the Mayor of the City of New York ordered the Department of City Planning to undertake a secondary-effects study for the entire city. That study has focused on six neighborhoods in the five boroughs, but not on Times Square. We have continued to exchange data and cooperate with City Planning in the course of our two parallel inquiries (See Appendix: The Department of City Planning Secondary Effects Study).

In addition, the Borough President of Manhattan has established a Task Force on which the BID serves. The Task Force, staffed by her office, has held public hearings and continues to gather information. It will be issuing its own recommendations in the Spring of 1994.

This study, then, seeks to obtain evidence and documentation on the secondary effects, if any, of these adult use businesses in the Times Square Business Improvement District, and of their dense concentrations, especially along 42nd Street and along Eighth Avenue. The BID instructed Insight Associates to follow the models offered by other secondary effects studies. The BID was not seeking an advocacy document, but rather an objective fact-finding study, that would add to the city-wide deliberations and to future attempts to find legal and effective ways to regulate these businesses.

Many people contributed a great deal of time and effort to this work. We want to thank particularly the staff of the Management Information Division of the Department of Finance and of the Crime Analysis Division of the New York Police Department, as well as staff of the Midtown South, Midtown North and Tenth Precincts and the Mayor's Office of Midtown Enforcement. We have not quoted any of our 54 interviewees who work and live in Times Square by name, but we thank them for taking the time from their very busy schedules to participate in our survey. We also are grateful to the many people in the real estate sector, the residents and community leaders in several neighborhoods, and the officials of municipal government in New York and other American cities, who were generous with their time in response to our inquiries.

SUMMARY OF LEGAL ISSUES AND THE EXPERIENCE ELSEWHERE

The concern about the presence of adult businesses in the midst of American cities dates at least from the decades following the Second World War when a recognition of their impact upon surrounding land values and a growing indignation about their effect on communities became widespread. By the early 1990's the regulation of adult use businesses and entertainment establishments had become a serious issue for communities across the United States. This is reflected in a number of studies and public testimony showing a relationship between adult use establishments on the one hand, and declining property values, crime and neighborhood deterioration on the other. It is these "secondary effects" which the Supreme Court and other federal and state courts take into account when ruling on the efforts of communities to regulate these businesses.

The present study is not a legal treatise--though it does review some legal precedents by way of background--but an analysis and documentation of the impacts of a concentration of adult use establishments on the Times Square area.

The major questions on this subject for a court are whether any limitation on adult uses is based on content, or whether it is based on the secondary effects of these uses on the surrounding community. There have been a number of instances in the last years in which federal courts have found adult use zoning restrictions to be acceptable, if they have been motivated by a desire to protect neighborhood quality, as contrasted with an impermissible desire to ban the message purveyed by the adult uses. It appears that courts will accept restrictions if they serve a "substantial government interest", if any statute is narrowly drawn to achieve that end, and if there are "reasonably available alternative avenues of communication". "Substantial government interest" has been defined to include reasonable attempts by municipalities to reduce urban blight and to preserve neighborhood character. "Alternative avenues of communication" requires that there be enough other places in the city for the relocation of these establishments. The availability of such places needs to be shown in court as a matter of fact.

Some cities have employed a variety of regulatory mechanisms. They have created special use zoning districts; they have required that adult uses be located at specified distances from residences, schools, churches, or business and commercial districts; and they have required operators of regulated establishments to obtain licenses or permits. Some illustrations are:

- Detroit's adoption of an "anti-skid row" zoning ordinance to disperse and/or bar from designated areas the establishment of a broad array of designated businesses, including adult uses. These restrictions were supported by studies of secondary effects.

• Chicago's requirement that owners or managing agents register and provide specific information related to the nature of their business. Chicago also regulates signs and displays by prohibiting the exterior display of sexual activity and nudity.

• Renton, a suburb of Seattle, restricted adult motion picture theatres from locating within 1,000 feet of a residentially zoned area or a house of worship, park, or school. The restrictions were upheld because it was found that approximately five per cent of the city's total land would still remain available for adult uses.

• Boston's creation of an Adult Entertainment District on the borders of its downtown center, and has thus concentrated rather than dispersed adult uses. This is a two-block area know as the "Combat Zone".

• Islip, Long Island's plan to restrict the location of adult uses to industrial districts, a plan that was upheld by the New York State Court of Appeals.

Zoning has been an especially frequent tool for cities regulating adult uses, since the Supreme Court has held that adult entertainment is a type of land use, like any other, that can be subject to rational scrutiny under equal protection.(Jules B. Gerard, Local Regulation of Adult Businesses, Deerfield, Illinois: Clark Boardman Callaghan, 1992, p.129).

Certain generalizations are seen in the variety of Court rulings in regard to zoning:

• Locational restrictions cannot be so severe as to preclude the present and/or future number of adult uses in a city.

• The more evident and rational the relationship of adult use restrictions to recognized zoning purposes, (e.g. the preservation of neighborhoods, the grouping of compatible uses), the greater the likelihood that the zoning restriction will be upheld.

• The greater the vagueness of a law the more likely it is to be struck down.

• If there is too much administrative discretion a law is likely to be struck down, since government may regulate only with narrow specificity.

Other Secondary Effects Studies

The court decisions supporting and upholding regulatory measures were supported by studies of secondary effects, some of which we summarize below:

Detroit: In Young v. American Mini-Theatres,(427 U.S.1976) the Supreme Court affirmed that cities may use zoning to restrict adult entertainment if adult entertainment is shown to have a harmful impact on neighborhoods. The City of Detroit adopted an anti-Skid Row zoning ordinance in 1962 prohibiting certain businesses, such as pool halls, pawn shops,and in an amended version in 1972, adult bookstores, motion picture theatres, and cabarets, from locating within 1,000 feet of any two other "regulated uses" or within 500 feet of a residentially zoned area. The ordinance sustained in Young was based on studies by urban planning experts that showed the adverse environmental effects of permitting certain uses to be concentrated in any given area.

Mt. Ephraim, New Jersey: In the next ten years, there were a number of Supreme Court cases which continued to define the limits of employing zoning as a tool for restricting adult entertainment. Although it was recognized that such restrictions were valid, it was also established in Schad v. Borough of Mt. Ephraim (452 U.S. 61, 1981) (though with a plurality decision because of varying interpretations among the justices) that municipalities may not use zoning to prohibit adult entertainment entirely. The deciding judges stated that the borough had not offered sufficient evidence to show the incompatibility of adult uses with other commercial businesses, and also had not provided adequate "alternative avenues of communication" for the location of such businesses.

Renton, Washington: In 1986, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the Renton, Washington regulations (The City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres (475 U.S.41, 1986), although the city had based its prohibitions upon a study of the secondary effects of adult theatres conducted in neighboring Seattle and other nearby cities. The Supreme Court stated that municipalities could rely on the experiences of other cities. Furthermore, the Court stated that a city must be allowed to experiment with solutions to serious problems and it must be allowed to rely upon the experiences of other municipalities about the deteriorating and blighting effects of adult use establishments.

Los Angeles: In June, 1977, the Los Angeles City Planning Department conducted a study of the effects of adult entertainment establishments in several areas within the city. It found "a link between the concentration of such businesses and increased crime in the Hollywood community" (p.1.) The study also concluded, based on its analysis of percentage changes in the assessed value of commercial and residential property between 1970 and 1976, that there was no direct relationship between adult uses and property value changes. But in response to questionnaires, it was shown that appraisers, realtors, bankers, businesspeople, and residents all believed that the concentration of adult entertainment establishments has an adverse economic effect on both businesses and residential property in respect to market value, rental value, and rentability/salability.

It was believed that these effects extend even beyond a 1,000 foot radius, and that they are related to the degree of concentration. In addition, there are adverse effects on the quality of life, including neighborhood appearance, littering, and graffiti.

Minneapolis-St. Paul: The Twin Cities have conducted a number of studies over a period of more than ten years. In a 1978 St. Paul study and a 1980 Minneapolis study, statistically significant correlations were seen between location of adult businesses and neighborhood deterioration. It was concluded that adult businesses tend to locate in somewhat deteriorated areas to begin with, but further deterioration follows the arrival of adult businesses.

In these early studies, significantly higher crime rates were associated with an area containing two adult businesses than in an area with only one such business. Significantly lower property value prevailed in an area with three such businesses than in an area with only one.

In 1983, St. Paul examined one neighborhood that had a particularly heavy concentration of adult entertainment establishments. The University-Dale neighborhood had many signs of deterioration and social distress. While these indicators could not be directly attributable to the presence of the adult establishments, it was stated that there was a relationship between the concentrations of certain types of adult entertainment and street prostitution, especially, as well as other crimes. (40-Acre Study, prepared by the St. Paul Department of Planning and Economic Development, p. 19.)

This perception of an unsafe and undesirable neighborhood was documented by a survey conducted by Western State Bank which found its efforts to attract employees and customers being frustrated by people's perceptions of the neighborhood. (Ibid., p.23.)

In a 1987 Memorandum of the St. Paul Planning Department, discussing issues raised during the public review of proposed zoning regulations of adult establishments, it was stated that there is a relationship of prostitution activity to adult entertainment establishments, making for a "sex for sale" image of the neighborhood. The variables affecting the incidence of street prostitution include the character of the neighborhood, the effect of the concentration of adult businesses, and the specific kind of adult businesses associated with other serious land use problems. (Ibid., p.53-54.)

While much of the public testimony and the expert analysis described the negative effects on residential areas, it was also stated that such uses should be prohibited from proximity to commercial areas as well, because the purposes are incompatible. (Ibid., p.60.) If such harmful uses do continue to exist in commercial areas, it was recommended in the study that there be sufficient spacing requirements, so as to minimize the documented negative effects of clusters of establishments.

In the 1988 Supplement to the 40-Acre Study, the City Planning Staff asserted that there is considerable evidence that multifunctional adult entertainment complexes can be the equivalent of the concentration of many single adult businesses. (Supplement to the 1987 Zoning Study, p. 6.) These multi-uses not only create multiple negative impacts but may also increase the intensity of the negative impacts. (Ibid., p.7.)

In 1989, the Attorney General of Minnesota, Hubert Humphrey, III, issued a Report based upon the study by the state's Working Group on the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses. It recommended a number of zoning and distancing regulations, as well as licensing regulations, while continuing to document the negative effects of such businesses on communities. It recommended that "Communities should document findings of adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses prior to enacting zoning regulations to control these uses so that such regulations can be upheld if challenged in court. (Attorney General's Report, p. 5.)

Indianapolis, Indiana, and Phoenix, Arizona: The Minnesota Attorney General's Working Group summarized these two other studies. In 1983,Indianapolis researched the relationship between adult entertainment and property values at the national level. They took random samples of twenty percent of the national membership of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers. Eighty percent of the survey respondents felt that an adult bookstore located in a hypothetical neighborhood would have a negative impact on residential property values of premises located within one block of its site. Seventy-two percent of the respondents felt there would be a detrimental effect on commercial property values within the same one-block radius.

A Phoenix, Arizona Planning Department study, published in 1979, showed arrests for sexual crimes, and locations of adult businesses to be directly related. The study compared three adult use areas with three control areas with no adult use businesses.

Islip, New York: In 1980, the town of Islip, Long Island conducted a study of the impacts of adult bookstores on residential and commercial sections of the town. It focused on the impacts of the location of one particular bookstore, and it surveyed and inventoried the impacts of other adult use enterprises on nearby hamlets, including Bayshore and Brentwood in addition to Islip Terrace and Central Islip. This study also reviewed numerous newspaper articles and letters of complaint, in order to gauge public reaction. Further, it analyzed distances, travel time and other factors to support the town's regulations which confined such uses to industrial zones. This regulation was upheld by the New York State Court of Appeals in Town of Islip v. Caviglia, in 1989. The Court accepted the evidence in the Islip study that the ordinance was designed to reduce the injuries to the neighborhood and that ample space remained elsewhere for the adult uses after the re-zoning.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF ADULT ENTERTAINMENT IN TIMES SQUARE

Times Square has long been known as a place for popular amusements from movies and theatre to flea circuses and video arcades. It has always attracted people of all incomes and tastes. But its history as a place of concentrated sex-related businesses really begins in the late 1960s and 1970s.

The concentration of massage parlors, nude live entertainments, erotic bookstores, X-rated movies, and peep shows increased at that time to such an extent that Times Square began to be called "a sinkhole". (The Daily News, August 14, 1975.)

The resulting crimes, assaults, and other violence made Times Square the highest crime area in the city. The numbers of sex-related businesses in Times Square and its environs reached as high, by some estimates, as 140 in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

In the 1970s the commercial and residential communities united to combat this blight by staging demonstrations and rallies, by sponsoring legislation, and, perhaps most important, by organizing themselves into the Mayor's Midtown Citizens' Committee, and in helping to create the Office of Midtown Enforcement.

The negative image of Times Square created by the increasing concentration of adult entertainment uses, coupled with pessimistic economic indicators, all contributed to a sense of decline on 42nd Street and the surrounding blocks.

In 1977, the City Planning Commission attempted to reduce the existing concentration of adult use businesses and to prevent future concentrations. Stimulated in part by the situation in Times Square, the Commission passed new zoning amendments to disperse such concentrations and to regulate their proximity to residential districts. The adverse economic and social effects produced by these concentrations were documented by findings of higher tax arrears on 42nd Street compared to the rest of midtown, declining sales tax revenue, and increases in criminal activity in Times Square. This zoning attempt failed at the last minute at the Board of Estimate.

But in the early 80s, several factors converged to stimulate a dramatic reduction in adult use establishments on 42nd Street and throughout Times Square. The State declared 42nd Street a "blighted area", and announced its intention to condemn numerous properties, including pornography shops, in order to stage the Urban Development Corporation's 42nd Street Development Project. Although litigation slowed down the project, most of the street has now been condemned and emptied of all uses.

Meanwhile, there was increased police activity throughout the area and the Mayor's Office of Midtown Enforcement coordinated action against illegal businesses including massage parlors. The commencement of the AIDS epidemic had a sobering effect on live sex establishments and many disappeared. And private developers assembled Times Square parcels, removing existing adult uses.

In June 1993 when Insight Associates completed the review for the Times Square BID of City Council legislation there were 36 adult use establishments within the Times Square area, a dramatic decline from the all time high of 140 in the late 70s. In addition, the area of concentration had shrunk and shifted. No longer were sex shops lining Broadway and Seventh Avenue to the same degree, but rather they were beginning to cluster along Eighth Avenue. Now, nine months later, there are 43 adult establishments, with most of the new stores on 42nd Street lying outside of the UDC's project and along Eighth Avenue.

Amidst the refurbishing, upgrading and improvement of a once sorely deteriorated Times Square, there is now new concern about the recent sudden proliferation.

APPROACH AND METHODOLOGY

This study focuses on the Times Square Business Improvement District, but the study concentrates more closely on the areas of adult use business concentration, that is, 42nd Street from Seventh to Eighth Avenues, and Eighth Avenue from 42nd Street to 50th Streets, because more than half of all the District's adult use businesses are located on these blocks.

Following secondary effects studies in other cities, we combined available data on property values and incidence of crime, plus in-person and telephone interviews with a broad range of diverse business and real estate enterprises, including major corporations, smaller retail stores, restaurants, theatres and hotels, as well as with Community Boards, block associations, activists and advocates, churches, schools and social service agencies.

Gathering Data on Assessed Property Values

To measure the possible impact of adult use businesses and the concentration of such businesses in our study blocks, we sought data on the overall and specific changes in assessed valuation of property from the tax period 1985-1986 to the most recent 1993-1994 tax year. This, we felt, would give enough of a spread across real estate cycles. The 1985-1986 data were the earliest computerized data available to us from the Department of Finance records.

The Department of Finance, however, could not provide reliable data on market value, as opposed to assessed valuation. We were able to get, and have used, the actual, not the billable, assessed values. The data contained information on tax block and lot, building class, and street address. We aggregated the actual valuation figures by individual tax lots for Study and Control blockfronts for 1985 and 1986, and for 1993 and 1994. From this we derived the percentage of change between the two benchmark years.

For this part of the study, we narrowed our focus to four Study Blocks: three blocks along Eighth Avenue, from 45th to 48th Street, and the 42nd Street Block between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. As contrasting control blocks where no adult use establishments exist, we chose the equivalent three blocks along Ninth Avenue, and 42nd Street between Eighth and Ninth Avenues. We then compared both the Study and Control blocks' data to similar statistics for all of Manhattan, and for all of New York City, as well as for the BID and the wider Times Square area.

In choosing Control Blocks, we realized that there is no block like 42nd Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues--our study block--anywhere. But we felt that by shifting our focus just one block to the west, we would have a block with no adult establishments but with similar uses and traffic patterns (though it does have the Port Authority Bus Terminal on its corner). As controls for our Eighth Avenue Study Blocks, we took the similar parallel blocks on Ninth Avenue, which, although residential, have comparable though not identical land uses and traffic patterns.

Tax arrears data were obtained for the years 1988, 1989, 1992 and 1993, the most recent year available through the New York City MISLAND system. We compared the data for our control and study blocks with aggregated data by census tracts that roughly approximated the boundaries of the Times Square Business Improvement District, and with Manhattan and New York City as a whole as well. No significant or consistent findings were obtained from this exercise.

Gathering Crime Data

Working closely with the Crime Analysis Division of the NYPD, we requested crime data for the Study Blocks of 42nd Street, Seventh to Eighth Avenues, and Eighth Avenue, from 45th through 48th Streets, for a period of one year. This amount of data proved too difficult for the Crime Analysis Division to obtain, and we were ultimately given these data for only a three month time period, from June through August, 1993. The same information was also supplied for our Control Blocks, which, for this subject, were slightly different: instead of the 42nd Street block between Eighth and Ninth Avenues which includes the Port Authority Bus Terminal, the next block west, between Ninth and Tenth Avenues was used.

Selecting the Interviewees

We initially obtained a listing of BID property owners for interview, by taking every fifth name on the BID's 404 owners' list. When an individual or corporation owned several properties, the name was used only once. We also eliminated the owners of adult use establishments (though later we did talk to one owner and operator of a number of such establishments in the area). We also deleted the many 42nd Street properties now owned by the State or City of New York or the New York State Urban Development Corporation. Similarly, we disregarded owners with telephone numbers outside the tri-state area, or those without listed telephone numbers. Banks and hotels were omitted from this first list.

This effort yielded a sample of 37 potential interviewees, of whom 20 were ultimately interviewed. The 20 included some of the largest developers and managers in Times Square and in New York City, with multiple holdings, as well as smaller residential and commercial property owners. It included as well the three major theatre-owning organizations, which control almost all the legitimate Broadway houses, as well as a major nonprofit theatre. Two major communications companies were on this list.

This group of potential interviewees was then supplemented by selections from a listing of restaurants and hotels of different price levels. We interviewed seven restaurant owners or managers, representing eight restaurants in the Times Square area, including major chains, smaller coffee shops, and well known eateries. Two of these interviewees are also owners of the properties in which their operations stand. We interviewed four hotel owners or operators in three hotels along Eighth Avenue. Five retail establishment owners along Eighth Avenue were also interviewed.

Community group interviews included six churches, three social service agencies (plus one more informal interview with a fourth, serving the homeless), five block associations, the District Manager and Assistant District Manager of Community Boards Four and Five, respectively, and the Co-Chairs of each Board's Public Safety Committee. The principals of two public schools in the area were seen as well. In sum, 53 formal interviews were carried out, plus one less formal discussion with an owner and operator of several porn establishments.

For these interviews, we constructed a Survey Schedule questionnaire, which was modelled to some degree on the one being utilized by the City Planning Department's city-wide study of adult uses underway at the same time.

TIMES SQUARE: ITS PROMINENCE AND ITS PEOPLE

The Times Square and Clinton communities, which the Business Improvement District encompasses or abuts, are dynamic and diverse neighborhoods. The area is home to some of the city's major corporations and there are more than 30 million square feet of office space. The BID has more than four hundred property owners, representing five thousand businesses in its membership. More than 250,000 employees work at enterprises that range from giant recording companies to international security firms to one-person theatrical agencies. Among the major corporations now making their home in Times Square are Morgan Stanley, Bertelsmann, Viacom, and many more. And of course, Times Square contains the highest concentration of legitimate theatres anywhere in the world, thirty-seven theatres, with as many as 25,000 seats to be filled on each performance day.

Times Square has a daily pedestrian count of 1.5 million persons. There are approximately twenty hotels, with 12,500 hotel rooms, in the Times Square area, one-fifth of all hotel rooms in Manhattan. Twenty million tourists and five million overnight visitors arrive annually. There are more than two hundred restaurants in the Times Square area. It is indeed New York City's center for commerce and the performing arts, business and tourism.

But the area is also a home for thousands of residents who live adjacent to and in the midst of this vibrant midtown commercial core. The area is replete with churches, block associations, civic associations, business organizations and theatre related organizations. The Times Square BID knows--and works with--some 35 social service agencies in the greater Times Square area.

It also has the largest concentration of pornography establishments in the city. The number of such businesses reached a high of about 140 establishments in the 1970s and early 1980s, and declined thereafter to approximately forty. There is some indication that the number has increased somewhat in the Times Square area and on its periphery, particularly on Eighth Avenue, in the past months.

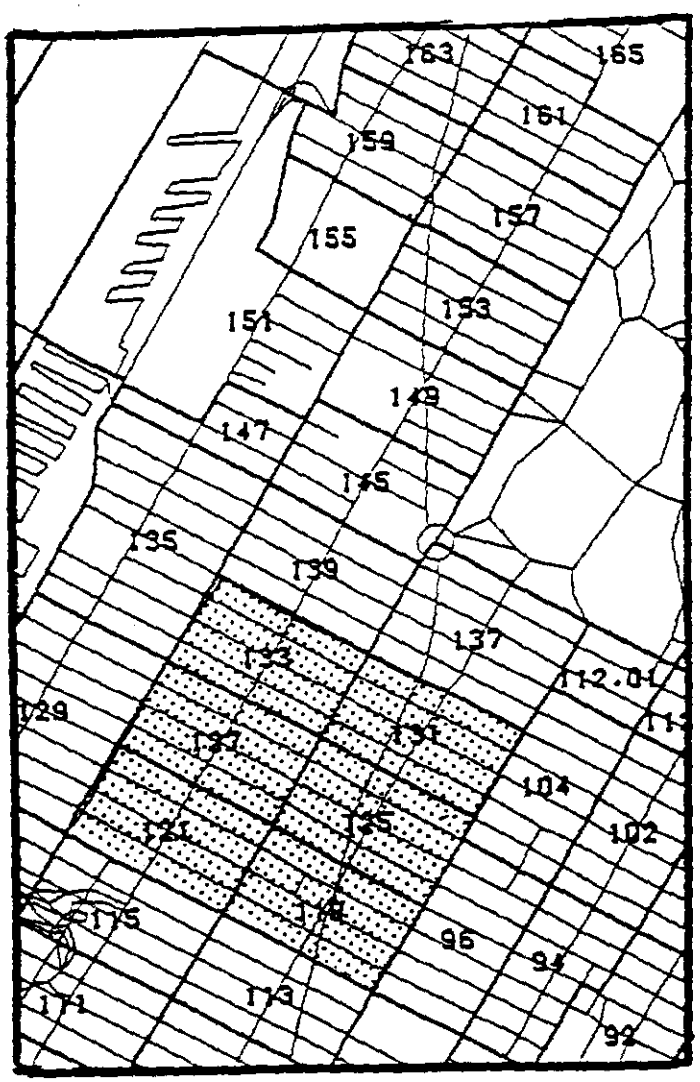
Demographics and Housing

In order to draw detailed demographic information from the 1990 Census, we aggregated data by the census tracts that most closely approximated the area of the Times Square BID. By using data from six census tracts that cover the area between Sixth and Tenth Avenues to the east and west, and 42nd and 54th Streets to the south and north, we have covered the entire BID, as well as additional blocks. Thus, data from these six tracts, which we will call the Times Square Neighborhood to avoid confusion with the Times Square BID, will reflect the demographics within the BID as well as the directly adjacent neighborhood. The map on the following page depicts the census tracts for this section of west midtown. As one can see, the Times Square BID falls within the boundaries of census tracts 119, 121, 125, 127, 131, and 133.

Broadly speaking, the eastern blocks of this area, particularly as one approaches Sixth Avenue, are commercial in character, with stores, restaurants, offices, and other commercial establishments. In comparison, the mid-blocks between Ninth and Tenth Avenues have a higher preponderance of housing; they constitute the eastern edge of the Clinton neighborhood.

Therefore, in reviewing the following census data, the reader must be aware that there will be a larger number of residents and housing units than those who actually reside within the official borders of the Times Square Business Improvement District. For example, our Census data show more than 25,000 residents in these tracts; the BID estimates 5,000 residents within its narrower boundaries. However, these 20,000 residents are, in fact, part of the Times Square community and view themselves as being affected by the adult use establishments (those along Eighth Avenue in particular).

TIMES SQUARE BID
CENSUS TRACTS



Source: New York City Department of City Planning, Computer Information Systems; U.S. Bureau of the Census

Total Population

In 1990, the total population for the Times Square Neighborhood was 25,651, which was slightly higher than the previous decade. The racial characteristics are depicted below. In general, over half of the population was White (higher than the Manhattan percentage); 11% was Black/Non-Hispanic, and 24% were Hispanic. During the decade from 1980 to 1990, the Hispanic population declined slightly, while the Asian (particularly the non-Chinese Asian) population increased to approximately the same as that of the borough of Manhattan, or 7%.

TABLE I
POPULATION CHARACTERISTICS, 1990
TIMES SQUARE NEIGHBORHOOD*

	1980 Number	1980 %	1990 Number	1990 %
White	14,251	57.9	14,807	57.7
Black, Non-Hispanic	2,252	9.2	2,785	10.9
Hispanic	6,793	27.6	6,099	23.8
Asian	1,117	4.5	1,761	6.9
Other	199	0.8	199	0.8
TOTAL	24,612	100.0	25,651	100.0

Source: U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1980 and 1990 Censuses of Population and Housing Characteristics, and Social and Economic Characteristics.

* Despite the image of Times Square as a solely commercial area, it is a place where many people raise their children. In 1990, there were 3,690 families with children under the age of 18 living in the six census tracts.

Housing Units

In 1990, there were over 18,000 housing units in the neighborhood, of which 75% were rental units and 49% were in large buildings of over 50 units. In a borough in which less than 10% of the units were vacant, 20.5% were vacant in Times Square.

The size of housing units within the six census tracts is smaller than elsewhere in the borough. While the median number of rooms per unit is 3 for Manhattan, it is 2.2 for the Times Square Neighborhood and 1 for the one census tract bounded by 42nd and 45th Streets, Sixth to Eighth Avenues.

In addition to these permanent housing units, there are also a considerable number of hotel rooms in Times Square. The Times Square BID estimates that over 12,500 hotel units are located within its boundaries. The large number of hotel rooms reflects Times Square's importance in the City's tourism industry. The number of tourists constitutes, from one point of view, a large group of potential customers for adult use establishments. But from another standpoint, as documented in our surveys with hotel operators, restaurateurs, and theatre owners, the concentration of adult use establishments is seen to be offensive to this stream of visitors and travellers.

Age

The population of the Times Square Neighborhood is similar in percentage of population age 62 and over to that of the borough or of the two Community Districts in which it falls: CD 4 and CD 5. In addition, in 1990 there were close to 2,000 children under the age of 14 living in the Times Square Neighborhood. Both the elderly and young, whose lives are generally circumscribed by their immediate community, are impacted by the types of businesses and uses that occur in the Times Square area, including the adult use establishments.

TABLE II
AGE CHARACTERISTICS, 1990
TIMES SQUARE NEIGHBORHOOD

	Time Square	CD4	CD5	Manhattan
TOTAL POP.	25,651	84,431	43,507	1,487,536
% UNDER 14	7.4	8.2	5.2	13.2
% OVER 62	15.4	15.9	15.3	15.9
MEDIAN AGE (years)	36.63	37.2	37.2	35.9

Source: U.S. Bureau of the Census, 1980 and 1990 Censuses of Population and Housing Characteristics, and Social and Economic Characteristics.

Employment Characteristics

Traditionally, a large percentage of Clinton residents have worked in the Times Square area, particularly in the theater and music industries as technicians, actors, and performers. This is borne out by the census data, which show a very high percentage of residents working within less than half an hour of their homes and walking to work. The percentage of workers in the Times Square Neighborhood who walk to work is higher than the percentage for the borough as a whole and is much higher than the percentage of those in the other four boroughs.

In 1990, approximately two-thirds of the population of the Times Square Neighborhood above the age of 16 were employed. The Bureau of the Census estimated that 95% of these workers worked in New York City and 88% worked in Manhattan. This is similar to Manhattan's residents in general, of whom 94% worked in the City and 84% in the borough. Compare this to, for example, the Queens workforce, of which only 40% work in their home borough.

Similarly, while the mean travel time to work for Manhattan residents was 29 minutes (and that of the other four boroughs was approximately 40 minutes), the mean travel time to work for residents in these six census tracts was 23.16 minutes. Of the Times Square residents who travelled to work, 48%, or almost half, walked. Compare this to 29% of the Manhattan workforce and less than 10% in the other boroughs. Times Square, therefore, has a considerable segment of the population who spend both their working hours and off-time in the Times Square Neighborhood.

TIMES SQUARE NEIGHBORHOOD: ITS ZONING AND ITS USES

Zoning

The Times Square neighborhood is zoned for General Central Commercial uses, reflecting the importance of Times Square as a central core for the City and region. These C6 zones vary: while Broadway, Sixth and Seventh Avenues are zoned C6-6 (15 FAR), the midblocks and Eighth Avenue are zoned C6-5 or C6-4, for a lower FAR of 10. Uses permitted in C6 districts typically include all residential uses as well as commercial and wholesale uses.

To the west of Eighth Avenue the predominant zoning is R8, with a C1-5 overlay along 9 Avenue for our control blocks. R8 permits general residential uses of a 4.8-6.0 FAR. C1-5 commercial districts permit local neighborhood commercial uses at an FAR of 2.0.

Special Districts

Special Midtown District

Times Square lies within one special zoning district and directly abuts another. In fact, the eastern boundary of one of these districts and the western boundary of the other meet in the center of Eighth Avenue.

Eighth Avenue can thus be viewed as the transition between two special districts: one encouraging commercial development and the other attempting to preserve a low-scale residential community. That duality is reflected in the opinions of residents and businesses about the status and future of the Eighth Avenue strip.

There are those who view Eighth Avenue as a development corridor, which began to be such with the building of Worldwide Plaza but which remains under-built, with a number of vacant buildings and parking lots. There are others who see the area as one that can and should continue to serve the economic development needs of the theatre and entertainment industries as well as other related needs of the city. Still others think it can and should be enhanced as a residential avenue. Whatever their perspective, few see the concentration of adult use establishments as being beneficial to either the preservation or the development of the area.

The area of the Times Square Business Improvement District lies almost entirely within the boundaries of the Special Midtown District (Sect. 81 of the NYC Zoning Resolution). Within that, a large proportion of the BID is included within the Theater

Sub-District, and the even more restrictive Theater Sub District Core, which extends from 43rd to 50th Streets, and from 100 feet east of Eighth Avenue to 200 feet west of Sixth Avenue.

In general, the goals of the Special Midtown District include the strengthening of Midtown's business core, while directing and encouraging development and preserving the "scale and character" of Times Square. Within the overall Special District, the purpose of the Theater Sub-District is to protect the cultural and theatrical and ancillary uses (i.e., shops and restaurants) in Times Square. This sub-district provides additional incentives and controls to encourage preservation of theaters, special development rights transfers, and separate requirements for ground floor uses.

Special Clinton District

Directly to the west of the Midtown Special District--and thus, of the Times Square area--is the Clinton Special District, whose purpose is the preservation of the residential character of the Clinton community (Sect. 96). The west side of Eighth Avenue falls within the Perimeter Area of the Special Clinton District. It is a transition between the tourism area of the Midtown District and the low-rise residential neighborhood immediately to the west, and the manufacturing district further west. Community residents characterize Eighth Avenue as "The Front Door to Clinton".

The Special Clinton District regulations contain provisions regarding demolition of residential buildings and relocation of tenants that are stringent and designed to preserve the neighborhood's residential character.

Our Ninth Avenue control block falls not within the Perimeter Area, but rather in the more restrictive Preservation Area; the one exception is the block on which Worldwide Plaza is located, which is excluded from the Special District. Within the Preservation Area, there are also tough provisions in regard to demolition and relocation of residents.

Land Uses: Control and Study Blocks

In general, the land uses in this neighborhood are diverse and eclectic. We provide a detailed picture of this diversity below.

42nd Street Study Block Land Uses

The present land uses along 42nd Street reflect the general commercial nature of the block. The north side of 42nd Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues has a significant number of now vacant theaters, awaiting redevelopment through the 42nd Street Development Project. In addition there are clothing, sporting goods, tobacco, and camera stores, as well as delicatessens and a fast food establishment on the corner at Eighth Avenue. As one approaches the northeastern corner of the intersection at Eighth Avenue, one can see a concentration of adult use establishments on the still privately owned portion of that block. (The State will soon begin condemnation of these buildings.)

Along the south side of the 42nd Street Study block there are also a number of now-vacant retail establishments and theaters, as well as the Candler office building. Retail establishments that are open along the south side of the Study block include electronics, novelties, sporting goods and shoe stores, as well as one first-run movie theater.

There are approximately six adult use establishments on the north side of the 42nd Street Study Block, and nine adult use establishments on the south side, for a total of 14. (Some of these stores are divided with more than one entrance and level).

42nd Street Control Block

The land uses along the north side of the 42nd Street Control Block between Eighth and Ninth Avenues include the following uses: a bar, two parking lots, a church and its rectory, office supply and gift stores, a deli, an entry to an apartment house, and the entrance to an adult use establishment whose main entrance is on Eighth Avenue.

The south side of the control block is most notable for the Port Authority Bus Terminal, which takes up approximately two-thirds of the blockfront. Additional uses to the west of the Bus Terminal include: a pizzeria, a parking lot, a hotel entry, an appliance servicing establishment, offices, and the US Post Office's Times Square Station.

Other than the side entry to the Eighth Avenue adult use establishment, there are no adult use establishments actually on the control block.

Eighth Avenue Study Block

The Eighth Avenue Study blockfront extends three blocks from 45th to 48th Streets. The mixture of uses is not reflective of the General Commercial Core aspect of the location. Instead, the uses are a mixture of local retail including novelty shops and souvenir stands, as well as delis, drugstores, and liquor stores, parking lots, vacant properties, and restaurants and other eating and drinking establishments. There are some uses which serve the theatre industry to the east; for example, the hardware store between 47th and 48th Street.

The study blocks are flanked by the Milford Plaza Hotel, between 44th and 45th Streets, the Days Inn between 48th and 49th Streets, and Worldwide Plaza between 49th and 50 Streets. Along this strip of three blocks there are eight adult use establishments: six movie theaters and two video stores.

Ninth Avenue Control Block

The building stock on Ninth Avenue resembles that on the Eighth Avenue study block: predominantly older, two to four-story buildings, often with apartments above the retail places. The uses on Ninth Avenue are more reflective of the area's zoning for local retail uses, with food markets, barbers, locksmiths, fast foods, and florists, for example. Also noteworthy are the numerous restaurants along Ninth Avenue serving primarily locals.

There are no adult use establishments along Ninth Avenue, either in our three-block control blockfront between 45th and 48th Streets, or for the entire stretch from 42nd Street up to 50th Street.

A map of all land uses as of March, 1994 along 42nd Street between Seventh and Ninth Avenue between 42nd and 50th Streets is attached at the end of this report.

ADULT USE ESTABLISHMENTS AND PROPERTY VALUES

Total Assessed Value

We attempted to compare total assessed value over time, and the rate of change, for our study and control blocks. We analyzed and compared the years 1985-1986 to 1993-1994. In addition, we compared our Study and Control blocks' assessed valuation to that of 1) the aggregated tax blocks falling within the boundaries of the Times Square Business Improvement District; 2) the entire Borough of Manhattan; and 3) the City as a whole. Our findings are summarized in Table III.

The Table shows that the rate of increase of the total actual assessed values of the Eighth Avenue Study Blocks was less than the rate of increase for the Control Blocks along Ninth Avenue on which no adult use establishments are or were located. To a lesser extent, the rate of increase of the actual total assessed value of the 42nd Street Study Block is less than that of the 42nd Street Control Block.

TABLE III
ACTUAL ASSESSED VALUES
CHANGES FROM 1985-1993 FOR SELECTED BLOCKFRONTS

BLOCKS	ACTUAL ASSESSED VALUE 1985-1986 (millions)	ACTUAL ASSESSED VALUE 1993-1994 (millions)	PERCENTAGE CHANGE 1985-1993
8TH AVE. STUDY BLOCKS (45-48 STS.)	11.22	18.55	65
9TH AVE. CONTROL BLOCKS (45-48 STS.)	4.52	8.65	91
42 ST. STUDY BLOCKS (7-8 AVES.)	34.89	51.63	48
42 ST. CONTROL BLOCKS (8-9 AVES.)	88.31	136.65	55
TSBID (ESTIMATED)*	2,034.7	3,252.3	60
MANHATTAN	29,462.7	47,229.4	61
CITYWIDE	53,589.8	81,714.6	52

Sources: NYC Department of Finance; Insight Associates

* The estimated BID total assessed value was determined by adding all 36 tax blocks that fall entirely or partially within the boundaries of the Times Square Business Improvement District.

Changes on Individual Properties

After determining that the rate of increase of the total actual assessed values of the Eighth Avenue Study Blocks was less than the rate of increase for the Control Blocks, we zeroed in to compare more closely the rates of change for the lots themselves. After detailing each block, property by property, an overall figure for the "social block" or the avenue considered with both its east and west sides, is noted.

The assessed values of the tax lots on the Eighth Avenue Control Blocks were analyzed in terms of proximity to the location of adult use establishments; the purpose of the exercise was to see if there were any patterns regarding the location of establishments and the rates of change.

The findings are shown below. In most cases, the rate of changes for other lots on the blocks were less than those with adult use establishments. Note that the tax lots which have adult use establishments are indicated by bold type.

When there is a decline in the assessed value, and the Department of Finance records indicate no change in the building class or size, we can assume that the property owner had at some point filed for and been granted a reduction in the property's assessed value though a certiorari proceeding.

There may be many reasons for a property's assessed value to have changed at a rate different than those of the rest of the block, or the general area. One cannot automatically assume any one reason, such as the proximity of adult use establishments. For example, the physical condition of the property may have deteriorated, or the property may be at a location undesirable from the point of view of potential retailers.

While it may well be that the concentration of adult use establishments has a generally depressive effect on the adjoining properties, as a statistical matter we do not have sufficient data to prove or disprove this thesis. It may also be that simply the presence of adult use establishments is subjectively viewed by assessors as a factor that necessarily reduces the value of an property. In short, assumptions may influence assessment.

Also included in the lists below are the actual uses--the types of stores or restaurants, for example--for each property along the Eighth Avenue Study blockfronts, from 45th through 48th Streets. We have tried to see if there is any pattern in which uses that one might consider to be more compatible with an adult use reveal a different rate of change in assessed value than other, less compatible uses.

TABLE IV
BLOCK BY BLOCK CHANGES IN ASSESSED VALUATION ALONG EIGHTH AVENUE STUDY BLOCKS

LOCATION (on Eighth Avenue)	BLOCK/LOT	ADDRESS	LAND USES	% CHANGE IN ASSESSED VALUE (1985/6-1993/4)
8 AVENUE: 45-46 STREET
West	1036/36	731-727	Pizzeria Grocer/Deli Vacant Deli	50%
West	1036/33	725	Pawn Shop	9%
West	1036/29	712	Photo lab Army/Navy Hair/Nails Restaurant Restaurant	33%
East	1017/61	740	Hotel entrance Liquor Novelty Bar Novelty	136%
East	1017/63	738	Adult Use (Capri)	138%
East	1017/58		Parking lot	61%
East	1017/4	732	Adult Use (Eros I)	166%
East	1017/3	730	Bar	84%
East	1017/2	728	Adult Use (Venus)	94%
East	1017/101	726	Deli	43%
East	1017/1	724	Souvenir/ T-shirts	275%
Social Block Change: 61%

In the 45th to 46th Street study block, the parcels across the avenue from a concentration of three adult theaters show a rate of increase much lower than the average for the entire blockfront. The parcels on the same (east) side of the street from the theaters tended to show lower rates of increase in assessed value, except for 1017/1, whose owner is listed by the Department of Finance as that of an adult use establishment located at 265 W. 47 St, and 1017/61, which is a mixed use property comprising a hotel with retail uses below.

TABLE IVa
BLOCK BY BLOCK CHANGES IN ASSESSED VALUATION ALONG EIGHTH AVENUE STUDY BLOCKS

LOCATION (on Eighth Avenue)	BLOCK/LOT	ADDRESS	LAND USES	% CHANGE IN ASSESSED VALUE (1985/6-1993/4)
8 AVENUE: 46-47 STREET
West	1037/36	767	Restaurant Fast Food	55%
West	1037/35	765	Hotel Entrance	-26%
West	1037/34	763	Adult Video	395%
West	1037/33	741-743	Travel Agency (entrance) Bar Restaurant	199%
West	1037/30	733-39	Pastry shop (formerly adult video) Novelty/Gift Electronics Bar Grocery Adult Video (Pleasure Palace)	125%
East	1018/61	760	Liquor store Pharmacy Deli Restaurant Union office (entrance)	55%
East	1018/3	754	Parking lot	121%
East	1018/1	750	Souvenirs Deli Bar	123%
Social Block Change: 73%

There are no readily defined patterns for the properties located on the west side of Eighth Avenue on Block 1018. The parcels at 754 and 750 generally appreciated by over 120%, while the remaining parcel increased only by half.

However, on the west side of Eighth Avenue, on which there are two X-rated videos, located at 763 and 739, the properties not owned by the owner of the video establishments evidenced a lower rate of increase. The assessed value of the property at 765, adjacent to the Adult Video, actually declined by over 25%.

TABLE IVb
BLOCK BY BLOCK CHANGES IN ASSESSED VALUATION ALONG EIGHTH AVENUE STUDY BLOCKS

LOCATION (on Eighth Avenue)	BLOCK/LOT	ADDRESS	LAND USES	% CHANGE IN ASSESSED VALUE (1985/6-1993/4)
8 AVENUE: 47-48 STREET
West	1038/36	787	Coffee shop Pizzeria	30%
West	1038/35	785	Hardware store	51%
West	1038/34	783	Restaurant	180%
West	1038/33	781	Lighting store	162%
West	1038/31	777	Adult Movie (Hollywood Twin)	120%
West	1038/29	771	Restaurant	136%
East	1019/61	782	Firehouse	48%
East	1019/63	780	Adult Use	59%
East	1019/64	778	Souvenirs	59%
East	1019/3	776	Adult Videos	59%
East	1019/2	772	Vacant, sealed building	107%
East	1019/1	770	Frame store (entrance on 47 St.)	-4%
Social Block Change: 66%

It is difficult to see a strong pattern on the west side of Eighth Avenue, although the assessed values of the two properties located at 787 and 785 increased by far less than the other four, including 777, which houses the Hollywood Twin, and 771, which is owned by an individual listed as owner of other adult use establishments in the area.

On the east side of Eighth Avenue, the two adult establishments and the property between them enjoy a common ownership; the three tax lots all increased in assessed value by precisely the same percentage--59%. On that block front there is also a NYC Fire House and an vacant and sealed building that is listed by the Department of Finance in 1993 as City-owned. The one remaining parcel on that block front--a framing store--experienced a decline in assessed valuation for the period.

A similar review of tax lots was not conducted for the other area of concentration, the 42nd St. Control Block. This was because it is felt that the many other trends and government actions along that strip, including public condemnation of the parcels and numerous lawsuits, would further complicate the analysis, and would prove fruitless.

Department of Finance Assumptions

In addition to the detailed analysis described above, we spoke to a high official in the Department of Finance to obtain his expert opinion on the relationships and effects, if any, of adult use establishments on neighboring properties. He stated that "there is no doubt in my mind that they [adult use establishments] adversely affect other properties." Their presence, he indicated, is factored into the locational aspect of the appraisal formula, though, he acknowledged that appraising is not itself an exact science. A commercial building may be obtaining a reasonable rate of return, but if that building were located near an adult use establishment, the assessor would tend to use a higher capitalization rate, which would therefore produce a lower value. The further away a property is from the adult uses, he explained, the lower the effect on its value.

ADULT USE ESTABLISHMENTS AND CRIMINAL ACTIVITY

General Crime Statistics

Over the past five years, according to the Office of Midtown Enforcement, police statistics show an estimated 54% decrease in crime in the Times Square area. This decrease parallels the decrease in adult use establishments, and although we cannot claim direct causality it is interesting to note that there is both the perception and the reality that Times Square is a safer place than it was years ago. While we were not able to collect crime statistics over a broad range of time, we were able to obtain information from the New York City Police Department for our Study and Control Blocks for a three-month period in 1993.

In addition, data on control blockfronts with no adult use establishments were requested for Ninth Avenue between 45th and 48th Streets, and for 42nd Street between Ninth and Tenth Avenues. The latter was selected as the control block for this purpose, rather than the block between Eighth Avenue and Ninth Avenue that had been used in analyzing property tax data, (see p. 25-30), because it was felt that encompassing the Port Authority Bus Terminal, with its unrelated associated crime statistics, would not provide a meaningful basis of comparison to the study block.

The crime data reports were prepared by the Precincts in which these blockfronts are located: Midtown South, Midtown North, and the Tenth Precinct. The reports generated by these precincts do not include complaints for prostitution or drugs (other than criminal possession of a controlled substance), as these crimes are reported in an incompatible format. (We did, however obtain some information on prostitution activity from other sources, which will be described below.) In addition, certain desired data, such as known locations for drug-dealing, are part of on-going investigations and prosecutions, and thus not available to us. The data we have used reflect the numbers of criminal complaints, not arrests, for known addresses or locations along the block fronts under study.

Actual complaints were listed for a wide range of crime categories, including Grand and Petit Larceny, Grand and Petit Larceny from an Auto; Criminal Possession of Controlled Substance; Criminal Harassment; Assault, Robbery, and Fraudulent Accosting. Each precinct used slightly different categories in preparing its reports for this study, but in general, the major categories were similar. Certain crimes were more prevalent in specific locations. For example, a larger number of complaints of Grand and Petit Larceny from an Auto were noted along Eighth Avenue between 45th and 48th Streets; this may reflect the presence there of parking lots.

Despite the many limitations on these data, there were certain significant patterns that did appear. In general, as seen in Table II, criminal complaints were higher for the 42nd Street study block than for the 42nd Street control block two blocks to the west. During the three month period of July through September, 1993, there were 45 criminal complaints on the Ninth to Tenth Avenue block of 42nd Street, and 88 on the Seventh to Eighth Avenue blockfront. Similarly, there were 118 criminal complaints on Eighth Avenue between 45th and 48th Streets, and only 50 for the same three blocks along Ninth Avenue.

One cannot assert that there is a direct correlation between these statistics and the concentration of adult use establishments on 42nd Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenue, or along Eighth Avenue between 45th and 48th Streets. But there is very definitely a pointed difference in the number of crime complaints between these study blocks and their controls.

It appears that there was a continuing reduction in crimes along Eighth Avenue the further away from 42nd Street, with its concentration of adult use establishments. While there were 135 complaints on Eighth Avenue between 42nd and 43rd Streets, there were only 80 on the block between 44th and 45th Streets. For the three blocks between 45th and 48th Streets, there were a total 118 complaints for the same period. These complaint statistics are summarized in Table V.

TABLE V
CRIMINAL COMPLAINTS FOR SELECTED BLOCKFRONTS
JUNE, JULY & AUGUST 1993

BLOCKFRONT	JUNE	JULY	AUGUST	TOTAL
8 Ave. between 42-43 Sts.	34	45	56	135
8 Ave. between 44-45 Sts.	38	21	21	80
8 Ave. between 45-48 Sts.	40	45	33	118
9 Ave. between 45-48 Sts.	16	13	21	50
42 St. between 7-8 Aves.	29	36	23	88
42 St. between 9-10 Aves.	16	16	13	45

Source: New York City Police Department; Insight Associates

Criminal Activities: Drugs and Prostitution Arrests

As can be seen in the responses to our survey, one of the most frequently made assertions is that adult use establishments attract criminal activities, particularly drug dealing and prostitution. Working closely with the NYPD Crime Analysis Unit, we attempted to obtain data concerning arrests or complaints for these two types of criminal activities, in order to enhance the criminal complaint data discussed above.

Prostitution and drug complaints are not collected by the precincts in the same way as other criminal complaint data. Drug complaints and drug arrests are not maintained on the precinct level and are considered confidential, due to on-going criminal investigations. Thus, we were not able to obtain data on this type of criminal activity. With the cooperation of the Crime Analysis Unit, however, we were able to obtain information concerning prostitution arrests along Eighth Avenue from 42nd Street to 48th Street.

In a three month period from July through September, 1993, in the Midtown South Precinct, there were 19 arrests made on Eighth Avenue between 42nd and 45th Streets, compared to no arrests on Ninth Avenue between 42nd and 45th Streets. Further north on Eighth Avenue, between 45th and 48th Streets, the Midtown North Precinct reported 9 arrests for prostitution, compared to 14 arrests along Ninth Avenue for the same three blocks during the same three month period. Thus, the heaviest incidence of prostitution arrests occurred in the three block study area of dense concentration of adult use establishments, during this time period. Those findings are summarized in Table VI.

TABLE VI
PROSTITUTION AND RELATED ARRESTS
FOR SELECTED BLOCKFRONTS
JUNE, JULY, & AUGUST 1993

BLOCKFRONT	JUNE	JULY	AUGUST	TOTAL
8 AVENUE (42-45 Streets)	7	7	5	19
9 AVENUE (42-45 Streets)	0	0	0	0
8 AVENUE (45-48 Streets)	7	1	1	9
9 AVENUE (45-48 Streets)	3	10	1*	14

Source: New York City Police Department; Insight Associates

* In addition, there were 7 arrests for Patronizing a Prostitute for this month.

In addition, we were able to obtain from the Midtown Community Court a list of locations for prostitution arrests appearing before that court for the period from October 12, 1993 through February 28, 1994. The Midtown Community Court sampled 60% of its prostitution arrests for this 4 1/2-month period, looking at the frequency of arrests on Eighth Avenue between 42nd and 48th Streets, as compared to those along Ninth Avenue between the same streets.

The number of prostitution arrests on Eighth Avenue was 20 for that period, compared to 5 for Ninth Avenue. However, higher than that was the number--24--for the area west of Ninth Avenue. This may reflect the well-known concentration of prostitution activity along the westernmost stretches of West Midtown, particularly along Tenth and Eleventh Avenues.

What is interesting, however, is that during this 4 1/2-month period, the location for the majority of prostitution arrests shifted dramatically eastward, from west of Ninth Avenue to Eighth Avenue itself. This change may have been a function of police activity and sweeps or may be related to other factors.

Nevertheless, the more recent level of prostitution activity, while higher in the west, dropped along Ninth Avenue, but increased again along Eighth Ave. This concentration of arrests along Eighth Avenue may be related to presence of adult use establishments along Eighth Avenue, but may also be related to traffic and pedestrian patterns, proximity to the Port Authority Bus Terminal, and proximity to Times Square itself. It should be noted that according to the Midtown Community Court's records, the most frequent locations for prostitution arrests in their sample were in the West 20s along Tenth and Eleventh Avenues and in the upper 50s on Sixth Avenue.

The findings are shown in the following table.

TABLE VIa
PROSTITUTION ARRESTS AT SELECTED LOCATIONS
MIDTOWN COMMUNITY COURT
(60% Sample)

LOCATIONS	10/12/93-12/31/93	1/1/94-2/28/94	TOTAL
8 AVENUE (42-48 Streets)	4	16	20
9 AVENUE (42-48 Streets)	3	2	5
WEST OF 9 AVENUE (42-48 Streets)	21	3	24

Source: Midtown Community Court, 3/4/94

The Office of Midtown Enforcement, although acknowledging the decline in criminal activity in the Times Square area, continues to deploy surveillance teams to monitor the level of prostitution activity in the area. (Office of Midtown Enforcement 1991-2 Fiscal Year Report).

INTERVIEW FINDINGS

Previous secondary effects studies have combined survey research and anecdotal reports from community and business interests. Our study did so as well. A total of 54 interviews were conducted between November, 1993, and March, 1994. Three different interview questionnaires were employed: one designed for property owners and business operators, a second intended for local organizations, churches, and schools, and the third for Community Board representatives.

In general, we sought to obtain information on perceptions and experience of the impact in the Times Square area of adult entertainment establishments. More specifically, we tried to elicit detailed observations of the effects of these enterprises on business and daily life. We also attempted to obtain information on the effects of these businesses in geographic terms, i.e., the proximity and distance of adult use establishments and the resulting intensity and/or diminution of impacts.

To provide context, we asked all respondents about their views of what constituted the major problems facing the Times Square area, and the relative importance of pornography and adult use businesses among these problems. The open-ended conversations that followed completion of the formal interview schedule were often most productive. Where possible, the interview results are presented below as quantified measures but in addition, many valuable insights emerge from interview material that is not easily quantified.

Property and Business Owners

Real Estate Owners, Managers, and Corporate Leaders

Our twelve-interview sample in this important category included five of the largest real estate companies or management agencies in the city, with multiple holdings in Times Square and elsewhere. We interviewed one appraiser familiar with the Times Square area, one owner of residential property, and one leasing agent. In addition, we spoke with executives of two important publishing and communications corporate groups.

Most of these respondents have been part of the Times Square scene for decades, and some are relatively recent arrivals. They are all aware of Times Square's history, in all its ups and downs, and some have played roles in this history. Their observations and expertise, however, are focused on the growth of Times Square as a unique conglomerate of entertainment uses, commercial tenants, tourist attractions, and, increasingly, a home for financial and multi-national corporations.

As our appraiser interviewee stated, we must evaluate how the presence of these adult entertainment uses slows down or reduces rentals and business activity in the long run. That is, it can be said that pornographic uses may attract other businesses and traffic, which brings revenue to the owners of those businesses in the short run. But there is no way to encourage increased value of commercial properties for a variety of businesses in the long run if they are next door to a concentration of pornography establishments.

This observation is confirmed by the direct experience of our real estate respondents. Three real estate developers had bought buildings in the Times Square area which housed adult use businesses, and they sought to terminate these leases as quickly as possible. They all asserted that the presence of such stores had a definitely negative effect on office leasing, especially for corporate tenants. A leading real estate agent described the lower rents and difficult leasing conditions of an office building located on 42nd Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues. He also depicted the lower rents on Eighth Avenue as compared to Seventh Avenue for comparable buildings, and cited instances of tenants refusing to renew leases because of the Eighth Avenue location and its atmosphere.

An owner of a smaller residential property on 46th Street said that he believed that the adult use businesses on his corner at Eighth Avenue frighten people away. He had an apartment on the market recently and a prospective applicant who said he wanted to rent it for his daughter and friends turned out to be really interested in using it as a massage parlor. The owner recently advertised office space in his building, but has so far attracted two adult use businesses, while other applicants have been scarce.

The builder and owner of World Wide Plaza spoke of the need to oust a porn theatre one block to the north (which later relocated further south on Eighth Avenue) in order to attract major corporate tenants. While his tenants have long-term leases, and he recognizes that the development of his building was affected by recent downturns in the real estate market having little to do with porn, he nevertheless expressed concern about the new spread of porn uses along Eighth Avenue. In fact, though the block from 50th Street to 51st Street, north of World Wide Plaza, remains vacant because of these larger market trends, he is seeking to encourage the lessee to rent to local retail uses, rather than to adult entertainment businesses. Members of this development organization stated that they believed that security costs in this building were somewhat higher than those of comparable buildings located in other neighborhoods. They also were very concerned about the recent increase in adult uses on Eighth Avenue, which they fear is occurring because of the public agency condemnations along 42nd Street, which may well be forcing the porn merchants northward.

All of our respondents said that adjacency of porn establishments has a negative effect on sales and leasing, and that plainly the concentration of establishments affects the overall image of the western edge of Times Square. They describe Eighth Avenue and certain side streets where these stores are located as "less hospitable places", and as injurious to the quality of life. One corporate executive said that one of his employees was mugged in front of an adult-entertainment store. A developer and an executive of a corporation both said that adult businesses on the same street, or diagonally across the street from a property have offensive and negative results.

All except one developer said that perhaps there is a way to limit the number of such establishments, and to disperse them. The dissenter said that not even one could be tolerated.

All of our property owners and business representatives--large and small--expressed the view that adult use businesses have a negative effect on the market or rental values of businesses located in their vicinity. It was very clear that negative effect was intensely felt if the adult business was right next door, in the same building, or on the same block. But every respondent also emphasized the negative effects of a concentration of businesses, stating that "Eighth Avenue is a less attractive place to do business" than other avenues in the Times Square area. One representative of a major property owner said that there were more improvements on Ninth Avenue in recent years than on Eighth Avenue, as evidenced in the numbers of new restaurants and small viable retail stores which have opened on that street. In the light of other improvement in the Times Square area, this respondent, too, expressed concern about "the march of porn stores up Eighth Avenue."

A corporate newcomer to the Times Square area expressed great optimism about its future and he said that the confidence was shared by employees and prospective retail tenants, but he also said that the positive trends were clear along Seventh Avenue and Broadway, and certainly less so along Eighth Avenue.

A real estate agent who tries to rent only to "Triple A" tenants said that proximity to adult establishment would be a deterrent to them. If there was an opportunity to rent to, say, a major fast food chain, which might be willing to locate on Eighth Avenue, in such a case, he was sure that concessions or sweeteners would have to be offered in the form of sharing in increased insurance costs, or in offering lower-priced rentals.

On the other hand, new area business and long-term owners both said that there is much improvement in Times Square and that its new identity as a center for corporations, entertainment, and tourism will continue to make it attractive to investment from all over the world. Because of the extraordinary pedestrian traffic, it can and will attract major retailers, and it is important that this trend not be deterred by the concentration of porn theatres, strip clubs, and adult video stores.

Theatre Owners

Interviews were held with high executives of the three major legitimate theatre organizations. All were very emphatic about the deleterious effects of the presence of adult use stores near their theatres and in the neighborhood in general. They stated that these uses "scare away audiences", and were not good for business. One respondent believed that one of his well-equipped and otherwise competitive theatres could not compete for bookings because of its location near 42nd Street's porn strip. That is, he could not obtain rentals for productions, and was forced to create projects of his own to keep the theatre from staying dark.

All three, including the owner of that theatre, mentioned the direct negative effects of the presence of an adult use establishment right next door to the Martin Beck Theatre. Despite the fact that this theatre now houses a musical hit, the owners describe complaints from patrons about the adjacent sex establishment. Complaints were voiced about the "unpleasant" atmosphere on the western edge of the streets on which their theatres were sited, West Forty Fourth Street and West Forty Seventh Street.

One respondent, with a more than twenty year history of theatre operation in the area, was unequivocal in his view that the presence of these establishments hurt business. From the days of massage parlors in the 1970s to the video stores of today and the resurgence of topless dancing establishments, there has been a continuing pattern of deterioration of facades, sidewalks, and blockfronts--a pattern damaging to theatregoing. He believed that low-level drug dealing and prostitution could be linked to the presence of these adult entertainment places, and that the presence of even one such store on a street is negative.

The other two theatre executives believe that the more concentration of porn businesses you have, the more it hurts property values. While they did express concern for free speech considerations, they were all quite critical of the negative effects of the appearance of these stores, which they say contributes to blight.

These exhibitors asserted that Broadway theatre and restaurant patrons are a class of people who are discouraged by the prospect of walking through pornography-filled streets. The respondent from a nonprofit theatre located in Times Square, not immediately near adult use businesses, did not express major problems or complaints related to such places. He recognized, however, that many of his patrons parked their cars west of Eighth Avenue, and that many of his promotions included dining on Restaurant Row, but he cited no specifically perceived negative effects.

The theatre owners stated that the incidence of crime has declined in the Times Square area, and that the area is cleaner and safer, its negative raffish image has improved markedly. But they were concerned about Eighth Avenue, about vacant stores, and about uses such as porn stores that were incompatible with theatregoers.

Restaurants

We interviewed seven respondents, representing eight variously-priced restaurants and chains in the Times Square area. Two were located on 46th Street's Restaurant Row, two on Eighth Avenue, and three elsewhere in Times Square. One restaurateur was also a building owner.

All of the respondents believed, in general, that the presence of the adult use establishments was not good for their business. One of the owners was not at all affected, he said, by the adult businesses, because the block on which his restaurants were located was free of such uses. But although this restaurant operator had been offered properties on Eighth Avenue as well as on 43rd Street, he said that he would not open restaurants on those sites even if they were free. "My customers want to be entertained, to be in an uplifting environment. My places attract family and friends. I don't want my customers to be put off by the atmosphere."

But the owner of a lower-priced coffee shop on Eighth Avenue who claimed that he sought tourists and local business said that the presence of these businesses made for a "terrible" influence, and that Eighth Avenue was no longer "a very popular area". He said that business is off after 7:30 or 8 at night on this Avenue, compared to business a few years ago.

Another popular restaurant with a substantial core of regular customers who are not bothered by the presence of porn stores said, however, that the restaurant has great difficulty attracting the corporate parties that they have been seeking. They believe that there is a public perception that the area is unsavory, since they have had the experience of attracting potential parties, and then having those potential customers cancel. This manager also expressed concern that tourists may pass her restaurant by because it is sandwiched between pornography establishments.

Three of the restaurant operators described complaints from customers about loitering. The food establishments located on or near Eighth Avenue said that they believed that new porn businesses were relocating from 42nd Street; they also said that the flamboyant advertising of porn stores, even ads seen from across the avenue, had a negative effect on their business.

All these respondents were aware of and complained about drug dealing which they could not directly tie to the adult entertainment ventures, but which they felt were part of the same picture.

Both a small coffee shop owner and the owner of two larger family restaurants expressed their opinion that Times Square remains a promising business growth area and that they intend to stay. But the coffee shop may be forced to move off Eighth Avenue, and would like to unless conditions improve.

Hotels

The three hotel operators who were part of the interview sample, and the owner of one of the properties--all located along Eighth Avenue--agreed that the dense concentration of adult entertainment venues was a deterrent to their trade.

The owner of a long-standing moderate priced tourist and convention hotel said that there had been a tremendous improvement in conditions in Times Square in the last two or three years. He attributed this to the work of the Police Department and the Times Square Business Improvement District. But this hotel owner continues to have some difficulty attracting airline and corporate business, and the trade shows that it seeks. He described complaints from airline personnel that women among them were verbally assaulted on Eighth Avenue. He said that Times Square is viewed as a "fun area", but that Eighth Avenue is the "seedy side of the district". He also said that he is himself "not a prude", that it is perhaps possible to live with some of these establishments, but that the concentration of them--more than one on every block on Eighth Avenue--is "disgusting and harmful". In sum, this manager of a large hotel said that there is great improvement, but there is still the need to combat sleaze through City action and through pressure on landlords.

An assistant manager of a chain hotel did not see any positive or negative direct effects of porn businesses on his own. But he did observe that prostitution activity seemed to be worse than last year, and he offered the opinion that plainly people do not like to see either that activity or porn establishments when they leave his hotel.

In the interviews with the owner and his lessee of a small hotel franchised by an international chain we heard about the direct effects of porn establishments. Though located on Eighth Avenue, with X-rated movies at the end of the block, they believed that they could attract customers because of their national booking service. But after obtaining their lease, an adult-use store opened right next to the front door of the hotel, and the respondent described many instances of customers having booked rooms through the national office arriving, looking, and cancelling. These customers sometimes took photographs of the adjacent porn store and sent them back to the national booking office. As a consequence, business is down substantially. Both owner and manager describe the constant activity of prostitution in front of the porn store and their hotel, and both associate drug dealing and crime with the loiterers attracted to the store.

The owner had the opportunity to acquire and rent the adjacent store. He could have rented to adult use businesses, he said, but refused. He claimed that the adult use is paying a much higher, above market rent than what the previous owner or any non-pornographic business would pay for that space. He also said that "I am certain that there are illegal activities in the back room [of the store]. The rent is too high to be sustained by the sales." Both men expressed concern about a store across the Avenue that had been vacant for a year and a half, and feared it would be rented for adult entertainment use.

Retailers

The five merchants interviewed had all been in business in the area for many years. Four are family-owned businesses which also own the buildings in which they operate. Three of the businesses are industry wholesalers, destination markets, and local service stores.

Two of the interview respondents saw no particular effects of the presence of adult use establishments on their own specific businesses. Both of these condemned the presence of drug and crack dealers in the vicinity. One of these two said that he knew the manager of a gay movie theatre across the Avenue and considered him a neighbor trying to do business.

Another interviewee felt differently, that conditions brought about by the porn businesses were pretty bad, negatively affecting rents. Though he said he was as concerned about the First Amendment as anyone, and "did not consider myself a saint", he did say that the people who hang out in front of these establishments are unsavory and are involved in petty street crime. He feels that the presence of such stores hurts the perception of Times Square as a place of entertainment and business. He had become optimistic about Times Square's future in the last years, but now found himself worried about the increase in the number of adult use stores on Eighth Avenue, and the consequent security and safety problems. Nevertheless, he plans to continue doing business in the area where his family has been since 1935, and would consider expanding into more space in an industrial or commercial building west of Eighth Avenue.

A liquor store owner said that his real living is from the residential and business trade in the area and he does not welcome the presence of the adult use stores. He is convinced that they are associated with street drug dealing, and claims to have observed known dealers in video stores many times per day. He believes that they frequent these places--which otherwise seem to be doing very little trade--because the video dealers are tied into the crack-selling business. That owner and a manager of a store owned by a family which has been doing business in Times Square for ninety years expressed great concern about vacant stores, high rents that only the porn operators can afford, and loiterers who interfere with customers.

Community Residents and Organizations

In the greater Times Square neighborhood there are eight block associations, approximately seven public schools, and about fifteen churches, six of them within the BID boundaries.

Block Associations

Of eight known block associations in the area west of Eighth Avenue, we interviewed representatives of five. All the respondents described the negative impact of the concentration of adult use businesses for both the residential and commercial communities. They all said that they believed and observed that these uses are negative in their effects because they attract loiterers, drug dealers, prostitutes, and their customers. Four of the block association leaders said that adult use establishments drive out legitimate businesses, and they deplored the recent loss of a stationery store and a drycleaners which had been replaced by adult entertainment businesses.

All five representatives said they had been directly affected by the presence of adult use establishments on their blocks, and indirectly, by the presence of groups of prostitutes who congregate in front of the establishments on Eighth Avenue, and also onto the side streets. They linked this prostitution activity to Eighth Avenue itself, but they acknowledge the presence of prostitution and drug dealing on other avenues to the west. Four of these respondents had made complaints to owners or operators of adult use establishments about their displays and about loitering. One had not. The same four had also complained to the Police, Midtown Enforcement, and the Community Board.

On the question of the scope of the area impacted by an adult use business, four of the respondents believed that the impact was neighborhood-wide, by which they mean that the image of the entire area is tarred: "It erodes the neighborhood's self-esteem." In terms of the impact of any single adult entertainment location, two believed that such impact extends across a street or avenue, and one believed that it extended more than five hundred feet. All respondents commented on the appearance of the stores; some called them aesthetically unpleasing and garish, obtrusive and tawdry, and disturbing to children. Some felt that the appearance of adult movie theatres was somewhat less disturbing than that of other adult businesses, and others complained that the covered, blanked-out windows of adult bookstores were forbidding and repellent.

These community interviewees believe that drugs and drug-related criminal activities constitute the number one issue for neighborhood residents, prostitution activity a close second, and the presence of pornography establishments was rated as third.

Another theme for longer-time residents was the belief that there had been many signs of renewal and community health in the Times Square area in recent years, but that the arrival of new adult use businesses, vacant stores, and resultant increases in drug activity were now posing new threats to community stability. These respondents viewed themselves as part of a working- and middle-class community in Clinton, adjacent to the commercial Times Square, and fighting to preserve the residential character of their home blocks.

Community Boards Four and Five

Community Board Five covers the Times Square area and reaches through most of the BID district to the east side of Eighth Avenue. Board Four covers the west side of Eighth Avenue, the Clinton residential and manufacturing communities to the west, as well as the Chelsea community to the south, where there has also been a recent increase in the presence of adult establishments.

We interviewed the District Manager and the Co-Chair of the Public Safety Committee of Board Four, and the Assistant District Manager and Co-Chair of the Public Safety Committee of Board Five. All four told of an increase in complaints and concern being directed to the Boards over the past two years. For Board Four, many of the complaints focused on the area along Sixth Avenue in Chelsea, as well as on the area just south of the BID boundaries, on Eighth Avenue. There were specific complaints about particular establishments, including the documenting of criminal activity along Sixth Avenue, along Eighth Avenue south of the BID, and at Forty Sixth Street and Eighth Avenue.

In terms of effects, one representative may have summed up the feeling by saying that the presence of these businesses makes "people feel that my neighborhood is no longer my own: people who are apolitical begin to organize against these stores." Another said "the block is taken away from the residents, you can't walk down the street. Other people who use the street to walk or shop cross over or avoid these businesses."

All these respondents described instances of loitering, late-night drinking, and, in the case of some establishments, documented criminal activity. Yet, because these activists also had experience with the negative impacts of non-pornographic bars and discos as well, they did state that perhaps every establishment had to be judged on its own effects on a block or a community. If any of these users could be good neighbors, if they could blend in with the community, then perhaps some could be tolerated. But they also said that the experience has been that if there is one establishment, then others follow, leading to an unacceptable concentration of adult use stores. This is what has occurred in Chelsea, and this is the case on Eighth Avenue. When there comes to be "a critical mass" and when the stores are poorly run, the area becomes a point of attraction for all sorts of undesirable activities.

These informants expressed their concern about impacts on their residential communities, but they also saw their interests linked to the prosperity of the theatre community in Times Square, for example, and to the continuing growth of other businesses in Clinton and Chelsea.

Schools

We were able to interview representatives of two public schools in the area, Public School 111, and Park West High School. They decried the proliferation of adult entertainment stores in general, and stated that they did not want young people to grow up assuming that "the sleazy image" provided by these stores is the norm. "Why throw this at children before they are ready?" They also expressed concerns about prostitution and drug dealing in the area, which, together with the presence of the porn stores, contributes to the negative image of the Times Square and Clinton areas. One representative had recently made specific complaints about a nude bar opposite the back of the school building, and had worked with the Community Board to lessen the effects and even, unsuccessfully, to close that bar.

Social Service Organizations

Three interviews were held with 1) the executive director of an organization providing residential and service needs for older citizens, 2) the executive director of a multi-service settlement house, and 3) the executive director of an AIDS project. A fourth, more informal conversation was held with the executive director of an organization serving the homeless.

Two of these respondents observed that the presence of adult entertainment businesses has a negative effect on the area. The settlement house leader said that the families and children she serves try to avoid Eighth Avenue, and the senior service representative believed that their ability to attract viable commercial tenants for their retail rental space was being hurt.

The AIDS organization representative asserted that pornography may be okay for some, but may be linked to drugs and prostitution because there is also commercial sex taking place in and around these establishments. He believes that there is a double standard prevailing, in that not enough is being done to combat drug dealing, prostitution, and the spread of AIDS. Each of these interviewees was concerned about the negative image of Times Square that may be fostered by the presence of the porn businesses and their ancillary activities.

The respondent from the homeless agency described the presence of a scantily dressed woman dancing on the street and distributing flyers for a newly-opened business one block south of the BID boundaries. This new business is on the same block as the outreach ministry of a church, and very close to the two residences for homeless adults run by her organization. She stated that she is working with people who are "trying to get their lives together" and she found the presence of these establishments not helpful. The three executive directors believed that the appearance and exterior displays were "embarrassing", "seamy", and "seemed to be violent".

As to the issues and problems facing the neighborhood and Times Square, all three mentioned drug dealing and prostitution, and two spoke of the negative effects of street crime, even if they were only perceived effects. All three said that Times Square is and should be a place of entertainment and tourism, but that there was a difference between this and sleaze. One person also mentioned that the stalled 42nd Street development and the empty buildings had "deadened" the block. She was also concerned about the decline of neighborhood service stores, needed by seniors and families living in the area.

Religious Organizations

Six church representatives were interviewed, one of whom had been in the area only a few months while the others had been working in the Times Square area for many years. While these people all decried the content of the advertising at adult use businesses, their image of women, and the negative effects of their existence, their true complaints were directed at the ancillary activities or effects that they insist were the inevitable result of the businesses' presence. Each of these members of the clergy spoke about the prevalence of prostitution activity. Many knew who these prostitutes were, and were concerned about the violence they had observed, women being beaten and other violent incidents associated with the selling of sex on the street.

They all stated that the presence of these stores attracted people who, as one put it, "are involved in some sort of scam". That is, the stores attract hangers-on, street people who engage in gambling, drug dealing, as well as groups of men looking for sex, and women, men, and boys selling sex. Three of these interviewees acknowledged that there is also a great deal of prostitution west of Eighth Avenue where there are no adult entertainment spots.

Clergy spoke of themselves and their parishioners being accosted by prostitutes; one described an attempt by a prostitute to pick his pocket as he walked his dog on Eighth Avenue. One church leader believed that people come from all over the world to patronize the pornography establishments in the area, but three others said that they did not believe that tourists came to Times Square for this purpose. Instead, they maintained that it was difficult for tourists to make their way past the sleaze of Eighth Avenue.

These church people, like the community residents, spoke of a feeling that things had been improving in their community until the most recent influx of additional adult entertainment businesses. In some respects they welcomed what they saw as the improved image of Times Square, and praised the work of the BID. But their major issue, above all others, remains the drug problem, and resultant street crime, which they see as the scourge of the entire community.

SOME ADDITIONAL TESTIMONY

During the course of this study, in addition to the interviews that made up the formal survey, we received or had passed along to us from time to time written communications from various individuals who live or work in the Times Square area. Some of these are sampled below:

, Proprietor, Restaurant:
(March 1, 1994)

I am a new business owner on West 47th Street between Broadway and Eighth Avenues. We opened our doors at on October 7, 1994 [sic, 1993?]. Our restaurant occupies the space of the old Delsomma Restaurant. During these four months we have seen BID's work in the neighborhood evident in the painting of storefront gates, removal of bills posted on abandoned buildings, helpful clean-up crews and ever so accommodating security people. Unfortunately, we have also noticed the opening of four new adult video stores in a two-block stretch between 46th and 48th Streets on Eighth Avenue. While I have never seen any of them with more than two customers inside, the element of underground business they attract is atrocious, namely prostitution, drug dealing and loitering. Since their customers are few they obviously generate their income in some other unobvious manner.

While the owners of the adult video stores have a civil right to earn a living, I am opposed to its impact on the neighborhood and would like to know what I can do to protect the area from similar new business and discourage store owners from operating in the area. Not only does it hurt the area's legitimate businesses but we must remember there are several high schools in the area whose students should not be exposed to these activities.

Thomas K. Duane, Councilmember:
(Letter to the owner of 320 West 45th Street, now occupied by an adult entertainment business, December 23, 1993)

As you may be aware, "Private Eyes" joins the growing list of adult uses (i.e. adult video stores and topless/bottomless dance clubs) in the Clinton neighborhood of Manhattan. Red Zones in other American cities have caused dramatic increases in crime and negatively impacted the local economy. While you may gain short-term economic benefits from renting out your property to an adult use, you also will be creating a negative economic climate for your own property.

You should also be aware that your property is directly across the street from a residentially zoned property filled with families and young children. Moreover, the City Council has been considering legislation which would illegalize adult uses within 500 feet of residentially zoned property. "Private Eyes" would clearly be illegal if such legislation were to pass.

The Block Associations in Clinton have been working long and hard to make their streets safer and drug-free. Renting your property to an adult use such as "Private Eyes" undermines their hard work and significant achievements.

I am aware the Community Board #4 has offered to assist you in identifying a more appropriate use for 320 West 45th Street. I urge you to accept the board's offer. I would be more than happy to provide assistance from my office as well.

The West 45th Street Block Association:
(Letter to Community Board 4, March 4, 1994)

...The "Private Eyes" adult nightclub at 320 W. 45th St. has become a continuous cause of concern and frustration among block residents. Although the club may be in technical compliance with various laws, little by little, Private Eyes has created conditions that cheapen the quiet ambiance of this mostly residential block, adversely affect our quality of life and attract elements (both patrons and non-patrons) who continually disturb the peace.

...

"No Parking" was established on this block several years ago to discourage loitering around parked cars. By allowing (or encouraging) patrons to disregard parking regulations, conditions are created for late night crowds and disturbances.

Indeed, we've noticed a distinct increase in Private Eyes patrons hanging out and milling around parked cars -- late at night usually between 2 and 4 a.m.. These patrons are often inebriated, rowdy and shouting, blowing car horns and in at least one instance they have even tried to overturn a car. A side effect is that car alarms tend to go off frequently.

This late-night congregating in front of the club happens again and again. These people do not live here or have any respect for block residents. And whether by design or happenstance, the club attracts certain non-patrons detrimental to the block. Street prostitution and drug dealing has increased.

...

Almost every night, Private Eyes has employees handing out advertising flyers on the corner of Eighth Avenue and 45th Street. Although we're cognizant of first amendment rights (which don't necessarily apply to commercial advertising),these pamphleteers tend to block a very busy corner, attract drug dealers and cause litter (from their discarded handouts).

...

We must relate that this is a residential block with approximately 2,000 apartments. This is not a problem of morals, but the presence and behavior of Private Eyes directly and adversely reduces whatever quality is left on this block. From various buildings, we've heard residents complain of being woken up in the middle of the night, others who claim they're afraid to go into their own building if blocked by dealers, crack addicts or other scurrilous characters.

Aside from a few storefront businesses, the Martin Beck Theatre is the only Broadway theatre west of 8th Avenue, bringing onto our block around 2,000 tourists every night and a portion of the $2.3 Billion revenue of the theatre industry. The conditions created by Private Eyes may not directly affect that revenue, but surely tourists are in increased danger and may leave our city with a foul impression.

Ross Graham and Timothy Gay, Chairperson and Committee Chairperson of Community Board #4:

(August 16, 1993)
Re: the building at the northwest corner of 46th St. and 8th Avenue:

Community Board No. 4 understands that the property you own at the above location is being renovated to possibly accommodate a multi-floor adult entertainment center, or, in other words, a "porn palace."

Community Board No. 4 is on record as opposing a concentration of adult entertainment businesses in any specific neighborhood. Store fronts along Eighth Avenue in the 40s are quickly being turned into pornographic video and literature outlets, and several theaters specialize in adult movies and live entertainment.

The "porno palace" appears to be the first proposed multi-level facility of its kind in the neighborhood.

However, you should know that each of the 300 Blocks from West 43rd to West 59th Street is residential. West 45th, 46th (your corner), 47th and 48th Streets are especially residential with active block associations, and West 46th Street, as you know, is Restaurant Row. A number of legitimate Broadway, off-Broadway, and off-off-Broadway theaters operate within a few blocks, as well as businesses ranging from major law firms (at Worldwide Plaza) to child care centers. Junior High School 17, with more than 700 children, is located a half a block away, on West 47th Street between 8th and 9th Avenues. In addition, your proposed "porno palace" is within 100 feet of a church.

Community Board No. 4 strongly urges you to reconsider the proposed use of your building.

Rowan Murphy, Assistant Director of Common Ground Community (CGC), operator of The Times Square, an affordable housing program in what was formerly the Times Square Hotel at 25 W. 43 Street:

(Testimony before Manhattan Borough President's hearing, October, 1993)

...CGC acquired The Times Square in March of 1991. At that time, there was one adult use establishment on the south side of W. 43rd Street, across from our building. The block, at that time, had a growing reputation as a "safe corridor," as the result of intensive efforts by the Mayor's Office of Midtown Enforcement, Midtown South, and local businesses to increase community policing and security awareness. In September of '92, two additional adult use establishments opened, the 24-hour "Playpen" and "Malebox" located directly across from our front entrance.

For the 364 individuals who live at The Times Square, and our staff, this concentration of uses has meant a steadily deteriorating quality of life on 43rd Street. Before the Malebox and Playpen opened, tenants could enjoy sitting in the lobby or mezzanine during the evening, strolling to the corner for coffee or lingering on the steps for some fresh air. Now, the street is a gathering place for prostitutes and others involved in illegal activities.

Patrons for the adult use establishments harass and intimidate our elderly tenants, in particular. Patrons use our service entrance as a urinal on a regular basis. Our security staff is hassled when attempting to keep our entrance clear of loiterers from these establishments. The street is now ugly and intimidating at night, discouraging use of the lobby and mezzanine by our tenants and creating noise problems for tenants living at the front of the building overlooking 43rd Street.

The concentration of adult uses on West 43rd Street gives the block a very different appearance and feeling than it had when a single establishment existed there.

... [T]he density of adult uses, the disruptions they create, and the sordid street activity they attract have been major negative factors for those evaluating our building as a place to live. The majority of the applicants who decline acceptance at our building described their main reason for doing so as concern about the safety and quality of life on the block.

Public Nuisance and Public Health Problems: The Adonis Theatre

In January, 1994, the New York City Department of Health obtained a temporary closing order from the New York State Supreme Court,shutting down the Adonis Theatre, located at 693 Eighth Avenue, near 44th Street. This action was brought under the New York City Administrative Code, the State Sanitary Code and the Penal Law, in order to restrain a public nuisance at the premises and to stop acts of individuals which were detrimental to health and which are considered to be high risk sexual activity. This action was brought as part of the City's continuing effort to help control the spread of the AIDS virus. High risk sexual activities were observed by inspectors on nine visits to the Adonis Theatre over a four month period involving at least 95 individuals. The Court papers stated, "All incidents were seen in open areas. The management of the Adonis Theatre must obviously be aware--or must vigorously shield itself from knowledge--of all this high risk activity that is plainly visible to casual and occasional outside inspectors."

APPENDIX

The Department of City Planning Secondary Effects Study

The Department of City Planning is currently undertaking a study of secondary impacts of adult use establishments in six other locations in New York City. The Department compares assessed values but for the years 1986/7 and 1992/3. Comparing our findings for our years to their selected years, we found that the trends remained the same, but in somewhat different proportions: the difference between assessed valuation rates of change for 1986/7 and 1992/3 was less for the Eighth Avenue study block and the Ninth Avenue control block than for the years of 1985/6 and 1993/4, and the difference was greater for the "DCP years" of 1986/7 and 1992/3 as compared to our years of 1985/6 and 1993/4. These differences in findings may be related to the selection of different years in the real estate "boom and bust" cycle.

For both sets of data, the increases in assessed valuations occurred at a higher rate on the "control" blocks" on which there were no adult use establishments, than on the "study" blocks, on which there were adult use concentrations. We are not asserting a simple cause-and-effect relationship here. There are too many variables--zoning, market trends, public condemnation proceedings for the 42nd Street Development Project, personal decisions by owners--that may affect assessed values--in addition to the presence of adult uses.

REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S WORKING GROUP ON THE REGULATION OF SEXUALLY ORIENTED BUSINESSES

June 6, 1989

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, III
Attorney General
State of Minnesota

MEMBERS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S WORKING GROUP ON THE REGULATION OF SEXUALLY ORIENTED BUSINESSES

Ann Burkhart
Associate Professor
University of Minnesota
Law School
Minneapolis, Minnesota

Honorable Kathleen A. Blatz
Minnesota House of Representatives
IR/Bloomington, Minnesota

Honorable Terry M. Dempsey
Minnesota House of Representatives
IR/New Ulm, Minnesota

Thomas L. Fabel
Lindquist & Vennum
Minneapolis, Minnesota

John Laux
Minneapolis Chief of Police
Minneapolis, Minnesota

Sharon Sayles-Belton
Councilwoman
Minneapolis, Minnesota

Honorable Kathleen Vellenga
Minnesota House of Representatives
DFL/St. Paul, Minnesota

William Wilson
Councilman
St. Paul, Minnesota

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

Many communities in Minnesota have raised concerns about the impact of sexually oriented businesses on their quality of life. It has been suggested that sexually oriented businesses serve as a magnet to draw prostitution and other crimes into a vulnerable neighborhood. Community groups have also voiced the concern that sexually oriented businesses can have an adverse effect on property values and impede neighborhood revitalization. It has been suggested that spillover effects of the businesses can lead to sexual harassment of residents and scatter unwanted evidence of sexual liaisons in the paths of children and the yards of neighbors.

Although many communities have sought to regulate sexually oriented businesses, these efforts have often been controversial and equally often unsuccessful. Much community sentiment against sexually oriented businesses is an outgrowth of hostility to sexually explicit forms of expression. Any successful strategy to combat sexually oriented businesses must take into account the constitutional rights to free speech which limit available remedies.

Only those pornographic materials which are determined to be "obscene" have no constitutional protection. As explained later in more detail, only that pornography which, according to community standards and taken as a whole, "appeals to the prurient interest" (as opposed to an interest in healthy sexuality), describes or depicts sexual conduct in a "patently offensive way" and "lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value," can be prohibited or prosecuted. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24 (1973).

Other pornography and the businesses which purvey it can only be regulated where a harm is demonstrated and the remedy is sufficiently tailored to prevent that harm without burdening First Amendment rights. In order to reduce or eliminate the impacts of sexually oriented businesses, each community must find the balance between the dangers of pornography and the constitutional rights to free speech. Each community must have evidence of harm. Each community must know the range of legal tools which can be used to combat the adverse impacts of pornography and sexually oriented businesses.

On June 21, 1988, Attorney General Hubert Humphrey III announced the formation of a Working Group on the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses to assist public officials and private citizens in finding legal ways to reduce the impacts of sexually oriented businesses. Members of the Working Group were selected for their special expertise in the areas of zoning and law enforcement and included bipartisan representatives of the state Legislature as well as members of both the Minneapolis and St. Paul city councils who have played critical roles in developing city ordinances regulating sexually oriented businesses.

The Working Group heard testimony and conducted briefings on the impacts of sexually oriented businesses on crime and communities and the methods available to reduce or eliminate these impacts. Extensive research was conducted to review regulation and prosecution strategies used in other states and to analyze the legal ramifications of these strategies.

As testimony was presented, the Working Group reached a consensus that a comprehensive approach is required to reduce or eliminate the impacts of sexually oriented businesses. Zoning and licensing regulations are needed to protect residents from the intrusion of "combat zone" sexual crime and harassment into their neighborhoods. Prosecution of obscenity has played an important role in each of the cities which have significantly reduced or eliminated pornography. The additional threat posed by the involvement of organized crime, if proven to exist, may justify the resources needed for prosecution of obscenity or require use of a forfeiture or racketeering statute.

The Working Group determined that it could neither advocate prohibition of all sexually explicit material nor the use of regulation as a pretext to eliminate all sexually oriented businesses. This conclusion is no endorsement of pornography or the businesses which profit from it. The Working Group believes much pornography conveys a message which is degrading to women and an affront to human dignity. Commercial pornography promotes the misuse of vulnerable people and can be used by either a perpetrator or a victim to rationalize sexual violence. Sexually oriented businesses have a deteriorating effect upon neighborhoods and draw involvement of organized crime.

Communities are not powerless to combat these problems. But to be most effective in defending itself from pornography each community must work from the evidence and within the law. The report of this Working Group is designed to assist local communities in developing an appropriate and effective defense.

The first section of the report discusses evidence that sexually oriented businesses, and the materials from which they profit, have an adverse impact on the surrounding communities. It provides relevant evidence which local communities can use as part of their justification for reasonable regulation of sexually oriented businesses.

The Working Group also discussed the relationship between sexually oriented businesses and organized crime. Concerns about these broader effects of sexually oriented businesses underlie the Working Group's recommendations that obscenity should be prosecuted and the tools of obscenity seized when sexually oriented businesses break the law.

The second section of this report describes strategies for regulating sexually oriented businesses and prosecuting obscenity. The report presents the principal alternatives, the recommendations of the Working Group and some of the legal issues to consider when these strategies are adopted.

The goal of the Attorney General's Working Group in providing this report is to support and assist local communities who are struggling against the blight of pornography. When citizens, police officers and city officials are concerned about crime and the deterioration of neighborhoods, each of us lives next door. No community stands alone.

SUMMARY

The Attorney General's Working Group on the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses makes the following recommendations to assist communities in protecting themselves from the adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses. Some or all of these recommendations may be needed in any given community. Each community must decide for itself the nature of the problems it faces and the proposed solutions which would be most fitting.

1. City and county attorneys' offices in the Twin Cities metropolitan area should designate a prosecutor to pursue obscenity prosecutions and support that prosecutor with specialized training.

2. The Legislature should consider funding a pilot program to demonstrate the efficacy of obscenity prosecution and should encourage the pooling of resources between urban and suburban prosecutor offices by making such cooperation a condition for receiving any such grant funds.

3. The Attorney General should provide informational resources for city and county attorneys who prosecute obscenity crimes.

4. Obscenity prosecutions should begin with cases involving those materials which most flagrantly offend community standards.

5. The Legislature should amend the present forfeiture statute to include as grounds for forfeiture all felonies and gross misdemeanors pertaining to solicitation, inducement, promotion or receiving profit from prostitution and operation of a "disorderly house."

6. The Legislature should consider the potential for a RICO-like statute with an obscenity predicate.

7. Prosecutors should use the public nuisance statute to enjoin operations of sexually oriented businesses which repeatedly violate laws pertaining to prostitution, gambling or operating a disorderly house.

8. Communities should document findings of adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses prior to enacting zoning regulations to control these uses so that such regulations can be upheld if challenged in court.

9. To reduce the adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses, communities should adopt zoning regulations which set distance requirements between sexually oriented businesses and sensitive uses, including but not limited to residential areas, schools, child care facilities, churches and parks.

10. To reduce adverse impacts from concentration of these businesses, communities should adopt zoning ordinances which set distances between sexually oriented businesses and between sexually oriented businesses and liquor establishments, and should consider restricting sexually oriented businesses to one use per building.

11. Communities should require existing businesses to comply with new zoning or other regulation of sexually oriented businesses within a reasonable time so that prior uses will conform to new laws.

12. Prior to enacting licensing regulations, communities should document findings of adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses and the relationship between these effects and proposed regulations so that such regulations can be upheld if challenged in court.

13. Communities should adopt regulations which reduce the likelihood of criminal activity related to sexually oriented businesses, including but not limited to open booth ordinances and ordinances which authorize denial or revocation of licenses when the licensee has committed offenses relevant to the operation of the business.

14. Communities should adopt regulations which reduce exposure of the community and minors to the blighting appearance of sexually oriented businesses, including but not limited to regulations of signage and exterior design of such businesses, and should enforce state law requiring sealed wrappers and opaque covers on sexually oriented material.

IMPACTS OF SEXUALLY ORIENTED BUSINESSES

The Working Group reviewed evidence from studies conducted in Minneapolis and St. Paul and in other cities throughout the country. These studies, taken together, provide compelling evidence that sexually oriented businesses are associated with high crime rates and depression of property values. In addition, the Working Group heard testimony that the character of a neighborhood can dramatically change when there is a concentration of sexually oriented businesses adjacent to residential property.

Minneapolis Study

In 1980, on direction from the Minneapolis City Council, the Minneapolis Crime Prevention Center examined the effects of sex-oriented and alcohol-oriented adult entertainment upon property values and crime rates. This study used both simple regression and multiple regression statistical analysis to evaluate whether there was a causal relationship between these businesses and neighborhood blight.

The study concluded that there was a close association between sexually oriented businesses, high crime rates and low housing values in a neighborhood. When the data was reexamined using control variables such as the mean income in the neighborhood to determine whether the association proved causation, it was unclear whether sexually oriented businesses caused a decline in property values. The Minneapolis study concluded that sexually oriented businesses concentrate in areas which are relatively deteriorated and, at most, they may weakly contribute to the continued depression of property values.

However, the Minneapolis study found a much stronger relationship between sexually oriented businesses and crime rates. A crime index was constructed including robbery, burglary, rape and assault. The rate of crime in areas near sexually oriented businesses was then compared to crime rates in other areas. The study drew the following conclusions:

1. The effects of sexually oriented businesses on the crime rate index is positive and significant regardless of which control variable is used.

2. Sexually oriented businesses continue to be associated with higher crime rates, even when the control variables' impacts are considered simultaneously.

According to the statistical analysis conducted in the Minneapolis study, the addition of one sexually oriented business to a census tract area will cause an increase in the overall crime rate index in that area by 9.15 crimes per thousand people per year even if all other social factors remain unchanged.

St. Paul

In 1978, the St. Paul Division of Planning and the Minnesota Crime Control Planning board conducted a study of the relationship between sex-oriented and alcohol-oriented adult entertainment businesses and neighborhood blight. This study looked at crime rates per thousand and median housing values over time as indices of neighborhood deterioration. The study combined sex-oriented and alcohol-oriented businesses, so its conclusions are only suggestive of the effects of sexually oriented businesses alone. Nevertheless, the study reached the following important conclusions:

1. There is a statistically significant correlation between the location of adult businesses and neighborhood deterioration.

2. Adult entertainment establishments tend to locate in somewhat deteriorated areas.

3. Additional relative deterioration of an area follows location of an adult business in the area.

4. There is a significantly higher crime rate associated with two such businesses in an area than is associated with only one adult business.

5. Housing values are also significantly lower in an area where there are three adult businesses than they are in an area with only one such business.

Similar conclusions about the adverse impact of sexually oriented businesses on the community were reached in studies conducted in cities across the nation.

Indianapolis

In 1983, the City of Indianapolis researched the relationship between sexually oriented businesses and property values. The study was based on data from a national random sample of 20 percent of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers.

The Study found the following:

1. The appraisers overwhelmingly (80%) felt that an adult bookstore located in a neighborhood would have a negative impact on residential property values within one block of the site.

2. The real estate experts also overwhelmingly (71%) believed that there would be a detrimental effect on commercial property values within the same one block radius.

3. This negative impact dissipates as the distance from the site increases, so that most appraisers believed that by three blocks away from an adult bookstore, its impact on property values would be minimal.

Indianapolis also studied the relationship between crime rates and sexually oriented bookstores, cabarets, theaters, arcades and massage parlors. A 1984 study entitled "Adult Entertainment Businesses in Indianapolis" found that areas with sexually oriented businesses had higher crime rates than similar areas with no sexually oriented businesses.

1. Major crimes, such as criminal homicide, rape, robbery, assault, burglary, and larceny, occurred at a rate that was 23 percent higher in those areas which had sexually oriented businesses.

2. The sex-related crime rate, including rape, indecent exposure, and child molestation, was found to be 77 percent higher in those areas with sexually oriented businesses.

Phoenix

The Planning Department of Phoenix, Arizona published a study in 1979 entitled "Relation of Criminal Activity and Adult Businesses." This study showed that arrests for sexual crimes and the location of sexually oriented businesses were directly related. The study compared three areas with sexually oriented businesses with three control areas which had similar demographic and land use characteristics, but no sexually oriented establishments. The study found that,

1. Property crimes were 43 percent higher in those areas which contained a sexually oriented business.

2. The sex crime rate was 500 percent higher in those areas with sexually oriented businesses.

3. The study area with the greatest concentration of sexually oriented businesses had a sex crimes rate over 11 times as large as a similar area having no sexually oriented businesses.

Los Angeles

A study released by the Los Angeles Police Department in 1984 supports a relationship between sexually oriented businesses and rising crime rates. This study is less definitive, since it was not designed to use similar areas as a control. The study indicated that there were 11 sexually oriented adult establishments in the Hollywood, California, area in 1969. By 1975, the number had grown to 88. During the same time period, reported incidents of "Part I" crime (i.e., homicide, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, burglary, larceny and vehicle theft) increased 7.6 percent in the Hollywood area while the rest of Los Angeles had a 4.2 percent increase. "Part II" arrests (i.e. forgery, prostitution, narcotics, liquor law violations, and gambling) increased 3.4 percent in the rest of Los Angeles, but 45.4 percent in the Hollywood area.

Concentration of Sexually Oriented Businesses Neighborhood Case Study

In St. Paul, there is one neighborhood which has an especially heavy concentration of sexually oriented businesses. The blocks adjacent to the intersection of University Avenue and Dale Street have more than 20 percent of the city's adult uses (4 out of 19), including all of St. Paul's sexually oriented bookstores and movie theaters.

The neighborhood, as a whole, shows signs of significant distress, including the highest unemployment rates in the city, the highest percentage of families below the poverty line in the city, the lowest median family income and the lowest percentage of high school and college graduates. (See 40-Acre Study on Adult Entertainment, St. Paul Department of Planning and Economic Development, Division of Planning, 1987 at p. 19.) It would be difficult to attribute these problems in any simple way to sexually oriented businesses.

However, it is likely that there is a relationship between the concentration of sexually oriented businesses and neighborhood crime rates. The St. Paul Police Department has determined that St. Paul's street prostitution is concentrated in a "street prostitution zone" immediately adjacent to the intersection where the sexually oriented businesses are located. Police statistics for 1986 show that, of 279 prostitution arrests for which specific locations could be identified, 70 percent (195) were within the "street prostitution zone." Moreover, all of the locations with 10 or more arrests for prostitution were within this zone.

The location of sexually oriented businesses has also created a perception in the community that this is an unsafe and undesirable part of the city.. In 1983, Western State Bank, which is currently located across the street from an adult bookstore, hired a research firm to survey area residents regarding their preferred location for a bank and their perceptions of different locations. A sample of 305 people were given a list of locations and asked, "Are there any of these locations where you would not feel safe conducting your banking business?"

No more than 4 per cent of the respondents said they would feel unsafe banking at other locations in the city. But 36 percent said they would feel unsafe banking at Dale and University, the corner where the sexually oriented businesses are concentrated.

The Working Group reviewed the 1987 40-Acre Study on Adult Entertainment prepared by the Division of Planning in St. Paul's Department of Planning and Economic Development. This study summarized testimony presented to the Planning Commission regarding neighborhood problems:

> Residents in the University/Dale area report frequent sex-related harassment by motorists and pedestrians in the neighborhood. Although it cannot be proved that the harassers are patrons of adult businesses, it is reasonable to suspect such a connection. Moreover, neighborhood residents submitted evidence to the Planning Commission in the form of discarded pornographic literature allegedly found in the streets, sidewalks, bushes and alleys near adult businesses. Such literature is sexually very explicit, even on the cover, and under the present circumstances becomes available to minors even though its sale to minors is prohibited.

Testimony

The Working Group heard testimony that a concentration of sexually oriented businesses has serious impacts upon the surrounding neighborhood. The Working Group heard that pornographic materials are left in adjacent lots. One person reported to the police that he had found 50 pieces of pornographic material in a church parking lot near a sexually oriented business. Neighbors report finding used condoms on their lawns and sidewalks and that sex acts with prostitutes occur on streets and alleys in plain view of families and children. The Working Group heard testimony that arrest rates understate the level of crime associated with sexually oriented businesses. Many robberies and thefts from "johns" and many assaults upon prostitutes are never reported to the police.

Prostitution also results in harassment of neighborhood residents. Young girls on their way to school or young women on their way to work are often propositioned by johns. The Flick theater caters to homosexual trade, and male prostitution has been noted in the area. Neighborhood boys and men are also accosted on the street. A police officer testified that one resident had informed him that he found used condoms in his yard all the time. Both his teenage son and daughter had been solicited on their way to school and to work.

The Working Group heard testimony that in the Frogtown neighborhood, immediately north of the University-Dale intersection in St. Paul, there has been a change over time in the quality of life since the sexually oriented businesses moved into the area. The Working Group heard that the neighborhood used to be primarily middle class, did not have a high crime rate and did not have prostitution. St. Paul police officers testified that they believed the sexually oriented businesses caused neighborhood problems, particularly the increase in prostitution and other crime rates. Property values were suffering, since the presence of high crime rates made the area fashion with organized crime either the mafia or some other facet of non-mafia never-the-less highly organized crime.

Id. at 1047-48.

Thomas Bohling of the Chicago Police Department Organized Crime Division, Vice Control Section, told the Pornography Commission that "it is the belief of state, federal and local law enforcement that the pornography industry is controlled by organized crime families. If they do not own the business outright, they most certainly extract street tax from independent smut peddlers." Id. at 1048 (emphasis in original).

The Pornography Commission stated that it had been advised by Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl F. Gates that "organized crime families from Chicago, New York, New Jersey and Florida are openly controlling and directing the major pornography operations in Los Angeles." Id.

The Pornography Commission was told by Jimmy Fratianno, described by the Commission as a member of LCN, "that large profits have kept organized crime heavily involved in the obscenity industry." Id. at 1052. Fratianno testified that "95% of the families are involved in one way or another in pornography. . . . It's too big. They just won't let it go." Id. at 1052-53.

The Pornography Commission concluded that "organized crime in its traditional LCN forms and other forms exerts substantial influence and control over the obscenity industry. Though a number of significant producers and distributors are not members of LCN families, all major producers and distributors of obscene material are highly organized and carry out illegal activities with a great deal of sophistication." Id. at 1053.

The Pornography Commission reported that Michael George Thevis, reportedly one of the largest pornographers in the United States during the 1970's was convicted in 1979 of RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations) violations including murder, arson and extortion. The Commission also reported examples of other crimes associated with the pornography industry, including prostitution and other sexual abuse, narcotics distribution, money laundering and tax violations, copyright violations and fraud. Id. at 1056-65.

Although the Pornography Commission report has been criticized for relying on the testimony of unreliable informants in drawing its conclusions finding links between pornography and organized crime (See Scott, Book Reviews, 78 J. Crim. L. & Criminology 1145, 1158-59 (1988)), its conclusions find additional support in recent state studies.

The California Department of Justice recently reported that:

> California's primacy in the adult videotape industry is of law enforcement concern because the pornography business has been prone to organized crime involvement. Immense profits can be realized through pornography operations, and until recently, making and distributing pornography involved a relatively low risk of prosecution. But more aggressive law enforcement efforts and turmoil within the pornography business has destabilized the smooth flow of easy money for some of its major operations . . . .
>
> As long as control over pornography distribution is contested, and organized crime figures continue their involvement in the business, the pornography industry will remain of interest to law enforcement officials statewide.

Bureau of Organized Crime and Criminal Intelligence, Department of Justice, State of California, Organized Crime in California 1987: Annual Report to the California Legislature at 59-62 (1988).

The Pennsylvania Crime Commission similarly determined in a 1980 report that most pornography stores examined were affiliated or owned by one of three men who had ties with "nationally known pornography figures who are members or associated of organized crime families." Pennsylvania Crime Commission, A Decade of Organized Crime: 1980 Report at 119.

For example, Reuben Sturman, a leading pornography industry figure based in Cleveland, was reported by the FBI in 1978 to have built his empire with the assistance of LCN member DiBernardo. Federal Bureau of Investigation Report Regarding the Extent of Organized Crime Involvement in Pornography (1978). Sturman, who reportedly controls half of the $8 billion United States pornography industry, was recently indicted by a federal grand jury in Las Vegas for racketeering violations and by a federal grand jury in Cleveland for income tax evasion and tax fraud. Newsweek, August 8, 1988, p. 3.

Evidence of the vulnerability of sexually oriented businesses to organized crime involvement underscores the importance of criminal prosecution of these businesses when they engage in illegal activities, including distribution of obscenity and support of prostitution. Prosecution can increase the risk and reduce the profit margin of conducting illegal activities. It may also disclose organized crime association with local pornography businesses and increase the costs of criminal enterprise in Minnesota.

In addition to prosecution, forfeiture of property used in the illegal activities related to sexually oriented businesses can cut deeply into profits. Regulation to permit license revocation for conviction of subsequent crimes may also expose and increase control over criminal enterprises related to sexually oriented businesses.

PROSECUTORIAL AND REGULATORY ALTERNATIVES

The regulation of many sexually oriented businesses, like other businesses dealing in activity with an expressive component, is circumscribed by the First Amendment of the United States Constitution.3/ Nonetheless, the First Amendment does not impose a barrier to the prosecution of obscenity, which is not protected by the First Amendment, or to reasonable regulation of sexually oriented businesses if the

---

3/ The First Amendment provides:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, or to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

The constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech, often the basis for challenges to regulation of sexually oriented businesses, restricts state as well as federal actions. See, e.g., Fiske v. Kansas, 274 U.S. 380, 47 S. Ct. 655 (1927).

regulation is not designed to suppress the content of expressive activity and is sufficiently tailored to accomplish the regulatory purpose.

The Working Group believes that communities have more prosecutorial and regulatory opportunities than they may currently recognize. The purpose of this section of the Report is to identify and recommend enforcement and regulatory opportunities. Of course, each community must decide on its own how to balance its limited resources and the wide variety of competing demands for such resources.

I. OBSCENITY PROSECUTION

Obscene material is not protected by the First Amendment. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S. Ct. 2607 (1973). The sale or distribution of obscene material in Minnesota is a criminal offense. The penalty was recently increased to up to one year in jail and a $3,000 fine for a first offense, and up to two years in jail and a $10,000 fine for a second or subsequent offense within five years. Minn. Stat. § 617.241, subd. 3 (1988).4/

The Working Group believes that Minnesota's obscenity statutes are adequate to prosecute and penalize the sale and distribution of obscene materials. However, historically, widespread obscenity prosecution has not occurred.

The Working Group believes this is not because the sale or distribution of obscene publications in Minnesota is rare, but because prosecutors have been reluctant to bring obscenity charges, because of limited resources, difficulties faced when prosecuting obscenity, and because obscenity has historically been considered a victimless crime.

4/ The prior penalty was a fine only -- up to $10,000 for a first offense and up to $20,000 for a second or subsequent offense. Minn. Stat. § 617.241, subd. 3 (1986). Obscenity arrests are so infrequent that incidents involving possible violations of section 617.241 are not separately compiled by the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Comprehension. See Bureau of Criminal Apprehension, 1987 Minnesota Annual Report on Crime, Missing Children and Bureau of Criminal Apprehension Activities.

Obscenity, however, should no longer be viewed as a victimless crime.5/ There is mounting evidence that sexually oriented businesses are, as described earlier in this report, often associated with increases in crime rates and a decline in the quality of life of neighborhoods in which they are located. Further, as discussed previously, when there is no prosecution of obscenity, large cash profits make pornographic operations very attractive to members of organized crime. The Working Group thus believes that prosecution of obscenity, particularly cases involving children, violence or bestiality, should assume a higher priority for law enforcement officials.

In addition, many of the difficulties faced when prosecuting obscenity can be addressed by adequate training and assistance. In order to prove that material is obscene, a prosecutor must prove:

> (i) that the average person, applying contemporary community standards would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest in sex;
>
> (ii) that the work depicts sexual conduct . . . in a patently offensive manner; and
>
> (iii) that the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

Minn. Stat. § 617.241, subd. 1(a)(i-iii) (1988). This statutory standard was drawn to be consistent with constitutional standards set forth in Miller, supra.

5/ Two blue ribbon commissions have reached different conclusions regarding the harmfulness of sexually explicit material to individuals. A presidential Commission on Obscenity and Pornography concluded in 1970 that there was no evidence of "social or individual harms" caused by sexually explicit materials and, therefore, "federal, state and local legislation prohibiting the sale, exhibition, or distribution of sexual materials to consulting adults should be repealed." The Report of the Comm'n on Obscenity and Pornography at 57-8 (Bantam Paperback ed. 1970). However, in 1986, the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography concluded that "sexually violent materials . . . bear . . . a causal relationship to antisocial acts of sexual violence . . . [and that] the evidence supports the conclusion that substantial exposure to [non-violent] degrading material increases the likelihood for an individual [to] . . . commit an act of sexual violence or sexual coercion." Attorney General's Comm'n on Pornography, 1 Final Report at 326, 333 (1986).

To be sure, prosecutors face a number of hazards in prosecuting obscenity. They include inadequate training in this specialized area of law, attempts by defense attorneys to remove jurors who find pornography offensive, the offering into evidence of polls and surveys through expert testimony to prove tolerant community standards, efforts to guide jurors with jury instructions favorable to the defense, and discouragement with unsuccessful prosecutions.

But the hazards can be overcome. Alan E. Sears, former executive director of the U.S. Attorney General's Commission on Pornography has stated:

> Prosecutors can successfully obtain obscenity convictions in virtually any jurisdiction in the United States. In order to obtain a conviction, it is incumbent upon a prosecutor to prepare well, know the law, not fall into the "one case syndrome" trap, obtain a representative jury through proper voir dire, keep the focus of the trial on the unlawful conduct of the defendant, and obtain legally sound instructions.

Sears, "How To Lose A Pornography Case," The CDL Reporter (n.d.).

The Working Group heard testimony from prosecutors who have pursued obscenity cases nationally regarding effective ways to prosecute obscenity cases. Materials can be bought or rented, rather than seized under warrant. In the absence of survey data, community standards can be left to the wisdom of the jury. In that case, experts should be prepared to testify if the defense attempts to make a statistical case that the material is not obscene. Prosecution of obscenity is also likely to be most effective if initial prosecutions focus on materials which are patently offensive to the community, such as those involving children, violence or beastiality.

The experience of other cities has demonstrated that vigorous and sustained enforcement of obscenity statutes can sharply reduce or virtually eliminate sexually oriented businesses. Cincinnati, Omaha, Atlanta, Charlotte, Indianapolis and Fort Lauderdale were cited to the Working Group as examples of cities which have successful programs of obscenity prosecution.6/ The Working Group encourages prosecutors to take advantage of increasing training opportunities and other assistance for obscenity prosecutions and to reassess the desirability of increased enforcement. The Working Group is pleased to note that county attorneys and law enforcement groups in Minnesota have recently held forums and seminars on obscenity law enforcement and prosecution. The U.S. Justice Department's National Obscenity Enforcement Unit offers assistance to local prosecutors, including sample pleadings, indictments, search warrants, motions, responses and trial memoranda.7/

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. City and county attorneys' offices in the Twin Cities metropolitan area should designate a prosecutor to pursue obscenity prosecutions and support that prosecutor with specialized training.

2. The Legislature should consider funding a pilot program to demonstrate the efficacy of obscenity prosecution and should encourage the pooling of resources between urban and suburban prosecuting offices by making such cooperation a condition of receiving any such grant funds.

6/ Memorandum to Jim Bellus, executive assistant to St. Paul Mayor George Latimer (prepared by St. Paul Department of Planning and Economic Development) (July 5, 1988); see also Waters, "The Squeeze on Sleaze," Newsweek, Feb. 1, 1988, at 45 ("After more than 10 years of levying heavy fines and making arrests, Atlanta has won national renown as 'the city that cleaned up pornography.'").

7/ The Address of the National Obscenity Enforcement Unit is U.S. Justice Department, 10th & Pennsylvania Ave. N.W., Room 2216, Washington, D.C. 20530. Its telephone number is 202-633-5780. Assistance is also available from Citizens for Decency through Law, Inc., 2845 E. Camelback Rd., Suite 740, Phoenix, AZ 85016. It is the publisher of "The Preparation and Trial of an Obscenity Case: A Guide for the Prosecuting Attorney." Its telephone number is 602-381-1322. The National Obscenity Law Center, another private organization, is located at 475 Riverside Drive, Suite 236, New York, N.Y. 10115. It publishes an Obscenity Law Bulletin and the "Handbook on the Prosecution of Obscenity Cases." Its telephone number is 212-870-3216.

3. The Attorney General should provide informational resources for city and county attorneys who prosecute obscenity crimes.

4. Obscenity prosecutions should concentrate on cases that most flagrantly offend community standards.

II. OTHER LEGAL REMEDIES

A. RICO/FORFEITURE

In addition to traditional criminal prosecutions, use of RICO statutes and criminal and civil forfeiture actions may also prove to be successful against obscenity offenders. By attacking the criminal organization and the profits of illegal activity, such actions can provide a strong disincentive to the establishment and operation of sexually oriented businesses. For example, the federal government and a number of the twenty-eight states which have enacted racketeer influenced and corrupt organization (RICO) statutes include obscenity offenses as predicate crimes. Generally speaking, to violate a RICO statute, a person must acquire or maintain an interest in or control of an enterprise, or must conduct the affairs of an enterprise through a "pattern of criminal activity." That pattern of criminal activity may include obscenity violations, which in turn can expose violators to increased fines and penalties as well as forfeiture of all property acquired or used in the course of a RICO violation. These statutes generally enable prosecutors to obtain either criminal or civil forfeiture orders to seize assets and may also be used to obtain injunctive relief to divest repeat offenders of financial interests in sexually oriented businesses. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68 (West Supp. 1988). RICO statutes may be particularly effective in dismantling businesses dominated by organized crime, but they may be applied against other targets as well.

The Working Group believes that Minnesota should enact a RICO-like statute that would encompass increased penalties for using a "pattern" of criminal obscenity acts to conduct the affairs of a business entity. Provisions authorizing the seizure of assets for obscenity violations should be considered, but the limitations imposed by the First Amendment must be taken into account.

It has been argued that a RICO or forfeiture statute based on obscenity crime violations threatens to "chill protected speech" because it would permit prosecutors to seize non-obscene materials from distributors convicted of violating the obscenity statute. American Civil Liberties Union, Polluting The Censorship Debate: A Summary And Critique Of The Final Report Of The Attorney General's Commission On Pornography at 116-117 (1986).

However, a narrow majority of the United States Supreme Court recently held that there is no constitutional bar to a state's inclusion of substantive obscenity violations among the predicate offenses for its RICO statute. Sappenfield v. Indiana, 57 U.S.L.W. 4180, 4183-4184 (February 21, 1989). The Court recognized that "any form of criminal obscenity . statute applicable to a bookseller will induce some tendency to self-censorship and have some inhibitory effect on the dissemination of material not obscene." Id. at 4184. But the Court ruled that, "the mere assertion of some possible self-censorship resulting from a statute is not enough to render an anti-obscenity law unconstitutional under our precedent." Id. The Court specifically upheld RICO provisions which increase penalties where there is a pattern of multiple violations of obscenity laws.

However, in a companion case, the Court also invalidated a pretrial seizure of a bookstore and its contents after only a preliminary finding of "probable cause" to believe that a RICO violation had occurred. Fort Wayne Books, Inc. v. Indiana, 57 U.S.L.W. 4180, 4184-4185 (February 21, 1989). The Court explained there is a rebuttable presumption that expressive materials are protected by the First Amendment. That presumption is not rebutted until the claimed justification for seizure of materials, the elements of a RICO violation, are proved in an adversary proceeding. Id. at 4185.

The Court did not specifically reach the fundamental question of whether seizure of the assets of a sexually oriented business such as a bookstore is constitutionally permissible once a RICO violation is proved. The Court explained:

> [F]or the purposes of disposing of this case, we assume without deciding that bookstores and their contents are forfeitable (like other property > such as a bank account or yacht) when it is proved that these items are property actually used in, or derived from, a pattern of violations of the state's obscenity laws.

Id. at 4185. The Working Group believes that a RICO statute which provided for seizure of the contents of a sexually oriented business upon proof of RICO violations would have the potential to significantly curtail the distribution of obscene materials.

Although Minnesota does not have a RICO statute, it does have a forfeiture statute permitting the seizure of money and property which are the proceeds of designated felony offenses. Minn. Stat. § 609.5312 (1988). But, this statute does not permit seizure of property related to commission of the offenses most likely to be associated with sexually oriented businesses. Obscenity crimes are not among the offenses which justify forfeiture. Although solicitation or inducement of a person under age 13 (Minn. Stat. § 609.322, subd. 1) or between the ages of 16 and 18 to practice prostitution (Minn. Stat. § 609.322, subd. 2) are included among the offenses which could justify seizure of property, many crimes involving prostitution are outside the reach of the present Minnesota forfeiture law.

The following crimes are not included among the crimes which can justify seizure of property and profits: solicitation, inducement, or promotion of a person between the ages of 13 and 16 to practice prostitution (Minn. Stat. § 609.322, subd. 1A); solicitation, inducement or promotion of a person 18 years of age or older to practice prostitution (Minn. Stat. § 609.322, subd. 3); receiving profit derived from prostitution (Minn. Stat. § 609.323); owning, operating or managing a "disorderly house," in which conduct habitually occurs in violation of laws pertaining to liquor, gambling, controlled substances or prostitution (Minn. Stat. § 609.33).

Although its reach would be much more limited, the legislature should also consider providing for forfeiture of property used to commit an obscenity offense or which represents the proceeds of obscenity offenses. Under the holding in Fort Wayne Books, Inc. v. Indiana, such forfeiture could not take place, if at all, until it was proved that the underlying obscenity crimes had been committed.

There are no comparable constitutional issues raised by enacting or enforcement of forfeiture statutes based on violations of prostitution, gambling, or liquor laws. The legislature may require sexually oriented businesses which violate these laws to forfeit their profits. The Working Group believes that such an expansion of forfeiture laws would give prosecutors greater leverage to control the operation of those businesses which pose the greatest danger to the community.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The legislature should amend the present forfeiture statute to include as grounds for forfeiture all felonies and gross misdemeanors pertaining to solicitation, inducement, promotion or receiving profit from prostitution and operation of a "disorderly house."

2. The legislature should consider the potential for a RICO-like statute with an obscenity predicate.

B. NUISANCE INJUNCTIONS

Minnesota law enforcement authorities may obtain an injunction and close down operations when a facility constitutes a public nuisance. A public nuisance exists when a business repeatedly violates laws pertaining to prostitution, gambling or keeping a "disorderly house." The Minnesota public nuisance law permits a court to order a building to be closed for one year. Minn. Stat. §§ 617.80-.87 (1988).

Nuisance injunctions to close down sexually oriented businesses which repeatedly violate laws pertaining to prosecution, gambling or disorderly conduct are potentially powerful regulatory devices. The fact that a building in which prosecution or other offenses occur houses a sexually oriented business does not shield the facility from application of nuisance law based on such offenses. Arcara v. Cloud Books, Inc., 478 U.S. 697, 106 S. Ct. 3172 (1986) (First Amendment does not shield adult bookstore from application of New York State nuisance law designed in part to close places of prostitution).

Although the Working Group believes that nuisance injunctions with an obscenity predicate would be effective in controlling sexually oriented businesses, such provisions would probably be unconstitutional under current U.S. Supreme Court decisions. Six Supreme Court justices joined in the Arcara result, but two of them -- Justices O'Connor and Stevens -- concurred with these words of caution:

> If, however, a city were to use a nuisance statute as a pretext for closing down a book store because it sold indecent books or because of the perceived secondary effects of having a purveyor of such books in the neighborhood, the case would clearly implicate First Amendment concerns and require analysis under the appropriate First Amendment standard of review. Because there is no suggestion in the record or opinion below of such pretextual use of the New York nuisance provision in this case, I concur in the Court's opinion and judgment.

Arcara, supra, 478 U.S. at 708, 106 S. Ct. at 3178.

In an earlier case, Vance v. Universal Amusement, 445 U.S. 308, 100 S. Ct. 1156 (1980), the Court ruled unconstitutional a Texas public nuisance statute authorizing the closing of a building for a year if the building is used "habitual[ly]" for the "commercial exhibition of obscene material." Id. at 310 n.2, 100 S. Ct. at 1158 n.2.

The Court's recent holdings in Sappenfield and Fort Wayne Books, Inc. give no indication that the Court would now look more favorably upon an injunction to close down a facility which sold obscene materials. The Court assumed without deciding that forfeiture of bookstore assets could be constitutional in a RICO case. But, in making this assumption, the Court distinguished forfeiture of assets under RICO from a general restraint on presumptively protected speech. The court approved the reasoning of the Indiana Supreme Court that, "The remedy of forfeiture is intended not to restrain the future distribution of presumptively protected speech but rather to disgorge assets acquired through racketeering activity." Fort Wayne Books, Inc. at 4185. The Court assumed that RICO provisions could be upheld on the basis that "adding obscenity-law violations to the list of RICO predicate crimes was not a mere ruse to sidestep the First Amendment." Id. Without the relationship to proceeds of crime, a remedy which closed a facility for obscenity violations would be far less likely to withstand constitutional scrutiny.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Prosecutors should use the public nuisance statute to enjoin operations of sexually oriented businesses which repeatedly violate laws pertaining to prostitution, gambling or operating a disorderly house.

III. ZONING

Zoning ordinances can be adopted to regulate the location of sexually oriented businesses without violating the First Amendment. Such ordinances can be designed to disperse or concentrate sexually oriented businesses, to keep them at designated distances from specific buildings or areas, such as churches, schools and residential neighborhoods or to restrict buildings to a single sexually oriented usage. Because zoning is an important regulatory tool when properly enacted, the Working Group believes a careful explanation of the law and a review of potential problems in drafting zoning ordinances may be helpful to communities considering zoning to regulate sexually oriented businesses.

A. Supreme Court Decisions

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the validity of municipal adult entertainment zoning regulations in Young v. American Mini Theaters, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (1976), and City of Renton v. Playtime Theaters, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 926 (1986).8/

In Young, the Court upheld the validity of Detroit ordinances prohibiting the operation of theaters showing sexually explicit "adult movies" within 1,000 feet of any two other adult establishments.9/ The ordinances authorized a waiver of the 1,000-foot restriction if a proposed use would not be contrary to the public interest and/or other factors were satisfied. Young, supra, 427 U.S. at 54 n.7, 96 S.Ct. at 2444 n.7. The ordinances were supported by urban planners and real estate experts who testified that concentration of adult-type establishments "tends to attract an undesirable quantity and quality of transients, adversely affects property values, causes an increase in crime, especially prostitution, and encourages residents and businesses to move elsewhere." Id. at 55, 96 S.Ct. at 2445. A "myriad" of locations were left available for adult establishments outside the forbidden 1,000-foot distance zone, and no existing establishments were affected. Id. at 71 n.35, 96 S.Ct. at 2453 n.35.

Writing for a plurality of four, Justice Stevens upheld the zoning ordinance as a reasonable regulation of the place where adult films may be shown because (1) there was a factual basis for the city's conclusion that the ordinance would prevent blight; (2) the ordinance was directed at preventing "secondary effects" of adult-establishment concentration rather than protecting citizens from unwanted "offensive" speech; (3) the ordinance did not greatly restrict access to lawful speech, and (4) "the city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems." Id. at 63 n.18, 71 nn.34, 35, 96 S. Ct. at 2448-49 n.18, 2452-53 nn.34, 35.

8/ The only reported Minnesota court case reviewing an adult entertainment zoning ordinance is City of St. Paul v. Carlone, 419 N.W.2d 129 (Minn. Ct. App. 1988) (upholding facial constitutionality of St. Paul ordinance).

9/ The ordinances also prohibited the location of an adult theaters within 500 feet of a residential area, but this provision was invalidated by the district court, and that decision was not appealed. Young v. American Mini Theaters, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 52 n.2, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2444 n.2 (1976).

Justice Stevens did not expressly describe the standard he had used, but it was clear that the plurality would afford non-obscene sexually explicit speech lesser First Amendment protection than other categories of speech. However, four dissenters and one concurring justice concluded that the degree of protection afforded speech by the First Amendment does not vary with the social value ascribed to that speech. In his concurring opinion, Justice Powell stated that the four-part test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1679 (1968), should apply. Powell explained:

> Under that test, a governmental regulation is sufficiently justified, despite its incidental impact upon First Amendment interests, "if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on . . . First Amendment freedom is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest."

427 U.S. at 79-80, 96 S.Ct. at 2457 (citation omitted), (Powell, J., concurring).

Perhaps because Justice Stevens' plurality opinion did not offer a clearly articulated standard of review, post-Young courts often applied the O'Brien test advocated by Justice Powell in his concurring opinion. Many ordinances regulating sexually oriented businesses were invalidated under the O'Brien test. See R.M. Stein, Regulation of Adult Businesses Through Zoning After Renton, 18 Pac. L.J. 351, 360 (1987) ("consistently invalidated"); S.A. Bender, Regulating Pornography Through Zoning: Can We 'Clean Up' Honolulu? 8 U. Haw. L. Rev. 75, 105 (1986) (ordinances upheld in only about half the cases).

Applying Young, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals invalidated a zoning ordinance adopted by the city of Minneapolis. Alexander v. City of Minneapolis, 698 F.2d 936 (8th Cir. 1983). In Alexander, the challenged ordinance had three major restrictions on sexually oriented businesses: distancing from specified uses, prevention of concentration and amortization. It prohibited a sexually oriented business from operating within 500 feet of districts zoned for residential or office-residences, a church, state-licensed day care facility and certain public schools. It forbade an adults-only facility from operating within 500 feet of any other adults-only facility. Finally, the ordinance required existing sexually oriented entertainment establishments to conform to its provisions by moving to a new location, if necessary, within four years.

The Eighth Circuit ruled that the Minneapolis ordinance created restrictions too severe to be upheld under the Young decision. It would have required all five of the city's sexually oriented theaters and between seven and nine of the city's ten sexually oriented bookstores to relocate and would have required these facilities to compete with another 18 adult-type establishments (saunas, massage parlors and "rap" parlors) for a maximum of 12 relocation sites. The effective result of enforcing the ordinance would be a substantial reduction in the number of adult bookstores and theaters, and no new adult bookstores or theaters would be able to open, the Court concluded. Alexander, supra, 698 F.2d at 938.

In Renton, supra, the United States Supreme Court adopted a clearer standard under which regulation of sexually oriented businesses could be tested and upheld. The Court upheld an ordinance prohibiting adult movie theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, park or school.

Justice Rehnquist, writing for a Court majority that included Justices Stevens and Powell, stated that the Renton ordinance did not ban adult theaters altogether and that, therefore, it was "properly analyzed as a form of time, place and manner regulation." Id. at 46, 106 S.Ct. at 928. When time, place and manner regulations are "content-neutral" and not enacted "for the purpose of restricting speech on the basis of its content," they are "acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication," Rehnquist stated. Id. He found the Renton ordinance to be content-neutral because it was not aimed at the content of films shown at adult theaters. Rather, the city's "predominate concerns" were with the secondary effects of the theaters. Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. at 929 (emphasis in original). Once a time, place or manner regulation is determined to be content-neutral, "[t]he appropriate inquiry . . . is whether the . . . ordinance is designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and allows for reasonable avenues of communication," Rehnquist wrote for the Court. Id. at 50, 106 S.Ct. at 930.

The Supreme Court found that Renton's "interest in preserving the quality of urban life" is a "vital" governmental interest. The substantiality of that interest was in no way diminished by the fact that Renton "relied heavily" on studies of the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments by Seattle and the experiences of other cities, Rehnquist added. Id. at 51, 106 S.Ct. at 930-31.

> The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. That was the case here. Nor is our holding affected by the fact that Seattle ultimately chose a different method of adult theater zoning than that chosen by Renton, since Seattle's choice of a different remedy to combat the secondary effects of adult theaters does not call into question either Seattle's identification of those secondary effects or the relevance of Seattle's experience to Renton.

Id. at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. at 931.

Rehnquist's inquiry then addressed the means chosen to further Renton's substantial interest and inquired into whether the Renton ordinance was sufficiently "narrowly tailored."

His comments on Renton's means to further its substantial interest suggest that municipalities have a wide latitude in enacting content-neutral ordinances aimed at the secondary effects of adult-entertainment establishments. He quoted the Young plurality for the proposition that:

> It is not our function to appraise the wisdom of [the city's] decision to require adult theaters to be separated rather than concentrated in the same areas. . . . [T]he city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems.

Id. at 52, 106 S.Ct. at 931 (quoting Young, supra, 427 U.S. at 71, 96 S.Ct. at 2453).

As to the "narrowly tailored" requirement, Rehnquist found that the Renton ordinance only affected theaters producing unwanted secondary effects and, therefore, was satisfactory. Id.

The second prong of Renton's "time, place, manner" inquiry -- the availability of alternative avenues of communication -- was satisfied by the district court's finding that 520 acres of land, or more than five percent of Renton, were left available for adult-entertainment uses, even though some of that developed area was already occupied and the undeveloped land was not available for sale or lease. A majority of the Court found:

> That [adult theater owners] must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation. . . . In our view, the First Amendment requires only that Renton refrain from effectively denying [adult theater owners] a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city, and the ordinance before us easily meets this requirement.

Id. at 54, 106 S.Ct. at 932.

B. Standards and Need for Legal Zoning

Unlike Young, the Renton case spells out the standards by which zoning of sexually oriented businesses should be tested. Renton and several lower court decisions rendered in its wake suggest that the two most critical areas by which the ordinances will be judged are 1) whether there is evidence that ordinances were enacted to address secondary impacts on the community, and 2) whether there are enough locations still available for sexually oriented businesses so that zoning is not just a pretext to eliminate pornographic speech.10/

10/ Of 11 recent post-Renton adult-entertainment zoning decisions by federal courts, five invalidated ordinances, three upheld ordinances and three ordered a remand to district court for further proceedings. Zoning ordinances were struck in Avalon Cinema Corp. v. Thompson, 667 F.2d 659 (8th Cir. 1987)(city council failed to offer

(Footnote 10 Continued on Next Page)

This section first describes some of the legal considerations which communities must keep in mind in drafting zoning ordinances for sexually oriented businesses. Then, some suggestions are provided, based on evidence reviewed by the Working Group, of types of zoning which can be enacted to reduce the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses.

1. Documentation to Support Zoning Ordinances

Sexually oriented speech which is not obscene cannot be restricted on the basis of its content without running afoul of the First Amendment. The justification for regulating sexually oriented businesses is based on proof that the zoning is needed to reduce secondary effects of the businesses on the community.

Since Renton, a number of adult entertainment zoning ordinances have been invalidated for failure of the enacting body to document the need for zoning regulations. Thus, one court invalidated a zoning ordinance because there was "very little, if any, evidence of the secondary effects of adult bookstores . . . before the City Council . . . ."

(Footnote 10 Continued from Previous Page)
evidence suggesting neighborhood decline would result); Tollis, Inc. v. San Bernadino County, 827 F.2d 1329 (9th Cir. 1987) (no evidence presented to legislative body of secondary harmful effects); Ebel v. Corona, 767 F.2d 635 (9th Cir. 1985) (lack of effective alternative locations); 11126 Baltimore Boulevard, Inc. v. Prince George's County of Maryland, 684 F. Supp. 884 (D. Md. 1988) (insufficient evidence of secondary effects presented to legislative body; special exception provisions grant excessive discretionary authority to zoning officials); and Peoples Tags, Inc. v. Jackson County Legislature, 636 F. Supp. 1345 (W.D. Mo. 1986) (improper legislative purpose to prevent continued operation of adult-entertainment establishment). Zoning ordinances were upheld in SDJ, Inc. v. City of Houston, 837 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir. 1988); FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 837 F.2d 1298 (5th Cir. 1988); and S & G News, Inc. v. City of Southgate, 638 F.Supp. 1060 (E.D. Mich. 1986), aff'd without published opinion, 819 F.2d 1142 (6th Cir. 1987). Remands were ordered in Christy v. City of Ann Arbor, 824 F.2d 489 (6th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 108 S. Ct. 1013 (1988)(remand for determination of excessive restrictions); International Food & Beverage Systems v. City of Fort Lauderdale, 794 F.2d 1520 (11th Cir. 1986) (remand for reconsideration in light of Renton, supra; nude bar ordinance), and Walnut Properties, Inc. v. City of Whittier, 808 F.2d 1331 (9th Cir. 1986) (remand, in part, for determination of land availability).

11126 Baltimore Boulevard, supra, 684 F. Supp. at 895; see also Tollis v. San Bernadino County, 827 F.2d 1329, 1333 (9th Cir. 1987) (ordinance construed to prohibit single showing of adult movie in zoned area; invalidated for failure to present evidence of secondary effects of single showing); but see Thames Enterprises v. City of St. Louis, 851 F.2d 199, 201-02 (8th Cir. 1988) (observations by legislator of secondary effects sufficient).

On the other hand, it is not necessary for each municipality to conduct research independent of that already generated by other cities. The Renton court held that evidence of the need for zoning of sexually oriented businesses can be provided by studies from other cities "so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Id. at 51, 106 S.Ct. at 931. See also SDJ, Inc. v. City of Houston, 837 F.2d 1268, 1274 (5th Cir. 1988) (public testimony from experts, supporters and opponents and consideration of studies by Detroit, Boston, Dallas and Los Angeles sufficient evidence of legitimate purpose).

The first section of this report summarizes evidence from various cities documenting the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. Following Renton, it is intended that local communities will make use of this evidence in the course of assembling support for reasonable regulation of sexually oriented businesses.

2. Availability of Locations for Sexually Oriented Businesses

Courts also evaluate whether zoning of sexually oriented businesses is merely a pretext for prohibition by reviewing the alternative locations which remain for a sexually oriented business to operate under the zoning scheme. A municipality must "refrain from effectively denying . . . a reasonable opportunity to open and operate" a sexually oriented business. Renton, supra, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S. Ct. at 932.

Access may be regarded as unduly restricted if adult entertainment zones are unreasonably small in area or if the number of locations is unreasonably few. There is no set amount of land or number of locations constitutionally required. The Renton court found that 520 acres of "accessible real estate," including land "criss-crossed by freeways" -- more than five percent of the entire land area in Renton -- was sufficient. 475 U.S. at 53, 106 S.Ct. at 932. The Young court found the availability of "myriad" locations sufficient. 427 U.S. at 72 n.35, 96 S.Ct. at 2453 n.35.

Whether .058 square miles constituting .23 of 1 percent of the land area within the city's central business zone is sufficient is not clear. See Alexander v. The City of Minneapolis (Alexander II), No. 3-88-808, slip op. at 22 (D. Minn. May 22, 1989) (less than 1% of land area could be valid if "ample actual opportunities" for relocation exist); Christy v. City of Ann Arbor, 824 F.2d 489, 490, 493 (6th Cir. 1987) (remanding for a determination of excessive restriction). See also 11126 Baltimore Boulevard, Inc. v. Prince George's County of Maryland, 684 F. Supp. 884 (D. Md. 1988) (20 alternative locations sufficient); Alexander v. City of Minneapolis, 698 F.2d 936, 939 n.7 (8th Cir. 1983) (pre-Renton; 12 relocation sites for at least 28 existing adult establishments not sufficient).

The sufficiency of sites available for adult entertainment uses may be measured in relation to a number of factors. See, e.g., Alexander II, supra, slip op. at 22-23 (insufficient if relocation site owners refuse to sell or lease); International Food & Beverage Systems, Inc., 794 F.2d 1520, 1526 (11th Cir. 1986) (suggesting number of sites should be determined by reference to community needs, incidence of establishments in other cities, goals of city plan); Basiardanes v. City of Galveston, 682 F.2d 1203, 1209 (5th Cir. 1982) (pre-Renton case striking zoning regulation restricting adult theaters to industrial areas that were "largely a patchwork of swamps, warehouses, and railroad tracks . . . . lack[ing] access roads and retail establishments").

However, the fact that land zoned for adult establishments is already occupied or not currently for sale or lease will not invalidate a zoning ordinance. Renton, supra, 475 U.S. at 53-54, 106 S.Ct. at 932; but see, Alexander II, supra, slip op. at 22-23 (reasonable relocation opportunity absent where owners refuse to sell or rent). There is no requirement that it be economically advantageous for a sexually oriented business to locate in the areas permitted by law.

3. Distance Requirements

Another factor that may be examined by some courts is the distance requirement established by an adult entertainment zoning ordinance. In SDJ, Inc. v. Houston, 837 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir. 1988), the Court was asked to invalidate a 750-foot distancing requirement on the ground that the city had not proved that 750 feet, as opposed to some other distance, was necessary to serve the city's interest.

The Court found that an adult entertainment zoning ordinance is "sufficiently well tailored if it effectively promotes the government's stated interest" and declined to "second-guess" the city council. Houston, supra, 837 F.2d at 1276.

Courts have sustained both requirements that sexually oriented businesses be located at specified distances from each other, see Young, supra, (upholding distance requirement of 1000 feet between sexually oriented businesses), and requirements that sexually oriented businesses be located at fixed distances from other sensitive uses, see Renton, supra, (upholding distance requirement of 1000 feet between sexually oriented businesses and residential zones, single-or-multiple family dwellings, churches, parks or schools).

The Working Group heard testimony that when an ordinance establishes distances between sexually oriented uses, an additional regulation may be needed to prevent operators of these businesses to defeat the intent of the regulation by concentrating sexually oriented businesses of various types under one roof, as in a sexually oriented mini-mall. The city of St. Paul has adopted an ordinance preventing more than one adult use (e.g., sexually oriented theater, bookstore, massage parlor) from locating within a single building. A similar ordinance was upheld in the North Carolina case of Hart Book Stores, Inc. v. Edmisten, 612 F. 2d 821 (4th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 929 (1980).

The experience with multiple-use sexually oriented businesses at the University-Dale intersection suggests that these businesses have a greater potential for causing neighborhood problems than do single-use sexually oriented businesses. Following Renton, it is suggested that lawmakers document the adverse effects which the community seeks to prevent by prohibiting multiple-use businesses before enacting this type of ordinance.

4. Requiring Existing Businesses to Comply with New Zoning

Zoning ordinances can require existing sexually-oriented businesses to close their operations provided they do not foreclose the operation of such businesses in new locations. Under such provisions, an existing business is allowed to remain at its present location, even though it is a non-conforming use, for a limited period.

The Minnesota Supreme Court has explained the theory this way:

> The theory behind this legislative device is that the useful life of the nonconforming use corresponds roughly to the amortization period, so that the owner is not deprived of his property until the end of its useful life. In addition, the monopoly position granted during the amortization period theoretically provides the owner with compensation for the loss of some property interest, since the period specified rarely corresponds precisely to the useful life of any particular structure constituting the nonconforming use.

Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co. v. Village of Minnetonka, 162 N.W.2d 206, 213 (Minn. 1968).

Such provisions applied to sexually oriented businesses have been said to be "uniformly upheld." Dumas v. City of Dallas, 648 F. Supp. 1061, 1071 (N.D. Tex. 1986), aff'd, FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 837 F.2d 1298 (5th Cir. 1988) (citing cases).

As detailed in the first section of this report (pp. 6-15), there are significant secondary impacts upon communities related to the location of sexually oriented businesses. These impacts are intensified when sexually oriented businesses are located in residential areas or near other sensitive uses and when sexually oriented businesses are concentrated near each other or near alcohol oriented businesses. The Working Group believes that evidence from studies such as those described in the first section of this report and anecdotal evidence from neighborhood residents and police officers should be used to support the need for zoning ordinances which address these problems.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Communities should document findings of adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses prior to enacting zoning regulations to control these uses so that such regulations can be upheld if challenged in court.

2. To reduce the adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses, communities should adopt zoning regulations to set distance requirements between sexually oriented businesses and sensitive uses, including but not limited to residential areas, schools, child care facilities, churches and parks.

3. To reduce adverse impacts from concentration of sexually oriented businesses, communities should adopt zoning ordinances which set distance requirements between liquor establishments and sexually oriented businesses and between sexually oriented businesses and should consider restricting sexually oriented businesses to one use per building.

4. Communities should require existing businesses to comply with new zoning or other regulation pertaining to sexually oriented businesses within a reasonable time so that prior uses will conform to new laws.

IV. LICENSING AND OTHER REGULATIONS

Licensing and other regulations may also be used to reduce the adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses. The critical requirements which communities must keep in mind are that regulations must be narrowly crafted to address adverse secondary effects, they must be reasonably related to reduction of these effects and they must be capable of objective application. If these standards can be met, licensing and other regulatory provisions may play an important role in preventing unwanted exposure to sexually oriented materials and in reducing the crime problems associated with sexually oriented businesses.

It is clear that failure to act upon a license application for a sexually oriented business cannot take the place of regulation. Without justification, denial or failure to grant a license is a prior restraint in violation of the First Amendment. Parkway Theater Corporation v. City of Minneapolis, No. 716787, slip. op. (Henn. Co. Dist. Ct., Sept. 24, 1975).

An ordinance providing for license revocation of an adult motion picture theater if the licensee is convicted of an obscenity offense is also likely to be held unconstitutional as a prior restraint of free speech. Alexander v. City of St. Paul, 227 N.W.2d 370 (Minn. 1975). The Alexander court stated:

> [W]hen the city licenses a motion picture theater, it is licensing an activity protected by the First Amendment, and as a result the power of the city is more limited than when the city licenses activities which do not have First Amendment protection, such as the business of selling liquor or running a massage parlor.

Id. at 373 (footnote omitted); see also, Cohen v. City of Daleville, 695 F. Supp. 1168, 1171 (M.D. Ala. 1988) (past sale of obscene material cannot justify revocation of license).

However, the courts have permitted communities to deny licenses to sexually oriented businesses if the person seeking a license has been convicted of other crimes which are closely related to the operation of sexually oriented businesses.

In Dumas v. City of Dallas, supra, the court reviewed a requirement that a license applicant not have been convicted of certain crimes within a specified period. Five of the enumerated crimes were held to be not sufficiently related to the purpose of the adult entertainment licensing ordinance because the city had made no findings on their justification. The invalid enumerated offenses were controlled substances act violations, bribery, robbery, kidnapping and organized criminal activity. The court upheld requirements that the licensee not have been convicted of prostitution and sex-related offenses. Id. at 1074. If a community seeks to require that persons with a history of other crimes be denied licenses, clear findings must first be made which justify denial of licenses on that basis.

The Dumas court also invalidated portions of the licensing ordinance permitting the police chief to deny a license if he finds that the applicant "is unable to operate or manage a sexually oriented business premises in a peaceful and law-abiding manner" or is not "presently fit to operate a sexually oriented business." Neither provision satisfied the constitutional requirement that "any license requirement for an activity related to expression must contain narrow, objective, and definite standards to guide the licensing authority." Id. at 1072. See also Alexander II, supra, slip op. at 16 (unconstitutionally vague to define regulated bookstores as those selling "substantial or significant portion" of certain publications); 11126 Baltimore Boulevard, supra, 684 F. Supp. at 898-99 (striking ordinance allowing zoning officials to deny permit if adult entertainment establishment is not "in harmony" with zoning plan, does not "substantially impair" master plan, does not "adversely affect" health, safety and welfare and is not "detrimental" to neighborhood because such standards are "subject to possible manipulation and arbitrary application").

A number of courts have upheld ordinances requiring that viewing booths in adult theaters be open to discourage illegal and unsanitary sexual activity. See, e.g., Doe v. City of Minneapolis, 693 F. Supp. 774 (D. Minn. 1988).

Licensing provisions and ordinances forbidding massage parlors employees from administering massages to persons of the opposite sex have withstood equal protection and privacy and associational right challenges. See Clampitt v. City of Ft. Wayne, 682 F. Supp. 401, 407-408 (N.D. Ind. 1988) (equal protection); Wigginess, Inc. v. Fruchtman, 482 F. Supp. 681, 689-90 (S.D. N.Y. 1979), aff'd, 628 F.2d 1346 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 842, 101 S.Ct. 122. However, some courts have found same-sex massage regulations to be in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. See Stratton v. Drumm, 445 F. Supp. 1305, 1310-11 (D. Conn. 1978); Cianciolo v. Members of City Council, 376 F. Supp. 719, 722-24 (E.D. Tenn. 1974); Joseph v. House, 353 F. Supp. 367, 374-75 (E.D. Va.), aff'd sub nom. Joseph v. Blair, 482 D.2d 575 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 955, 94 S. Ct. 1968 (1974). Contra, Aldred v. Duling, 538 F.2d 637 (4th Cir. 1976).

Although the Working Group expressed strong concern about the operation of prostitution under the guise of massage parlors, this type of regulation is not advisable because legitimate therapeutic massage establishments could find their operations curtailed. Prostitution may be better controlled through prosecution and use of post-conviction actions such as forfeiture or enjoining a public nuisance.

In 1985, a court upheld an ordinance making it unlawful to display for commercial purposes material "harmful to minors" unless the material is in a sealed wrapper and, if the cover is harmful to minors, has an opaque cover. Upper Midwest Booksellers Ass'n v. City of Minneapolis, 780 F.2d 1389 (8th Cir. 1985). Last year, the legislature enacted a state law similarly prohibiting display of sexually explicit material which is harmful to minors unless items are kept in sealed wrappers and, where the cover itself would be harmful to minors, within opaque covers. Minn. Stat. § 617.293 (1988). This law has the potential to protect minors from exposure to sexually oriented materials. Communities also have considerable discretion to regulate signage so that the exterior of sexually oriented businesses does not expose unwitting observers to sexually explicit messages.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Prior to enacting licensing regulations, communities should document findings of adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses and the relationship between these effects and proposed regulations so that such regulations can be upheld if challenged in court.

2. Communities should adopt regulations which reduce the likelihood of criminal activity related to sexually oriented businesses, including but not limited to open booth ordinances and ordinances which authorize denial or revocation of licenses when the licensee has committed offenses relevant to the operation of the business.

3. Communities should adopt regulations which reduce exposure of the community and minors to the blighting appearance of sexually oriented businesses including but not limited to regulations of signage and exterior design of such businesses and should enforce state law requiring sealed wrappers and opaque covers on sexually oriented material.

CONCLUSION

There are many actions which communities may take within the law to protect themselves from the adverse secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. Prosecution of obscenity crimes can play a vital role in decreasing the profitability of sexually oriented businesses and removing materials which violate community standards from local outlets. Forfeiture and injunction to prevent public nuisance should be available where sexually oriented businesses are the site of sex-related crimes and violations of laws pertaining to gambling, liquor or controlled substances. These actions will remove the most egregious establishments from communities.

Zoning can reduce the likelihood that sexually oriented businesses will lead to neighborhood blight. Licensing can sever the link between at least some crime figures and sexually oriented businesses. Regulation and enforcement can protect minors from exposure to sexually explicit materials.

The Attorney General's Working Group on the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses believes that prosecution, seizure of profits, zoning and regulation of sexually oriented businesses should only be done in keeping with the constitutional requirements of the First Amendment. Rational regulation can be fashioned to protect both our communities and our constitutional rights.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS
DALLAS DIVISION

Illusions-Dallas Private Club, Inc., a Not-for-Profit Texas Corporation d/b/a Penthouse Key Club, and; Hotel Development Texas Ltd., a Texas Limited Liability Company, and Silver City, an Unincorporated Membership Organization, and; Green Star, Inc., a Texas Corporation,	§
Plaintiffs,	§
v.	§
	§	CIVIL ACTION 3:04-CV-0201-R
John T. Steen, Jr., in his Official Capacity as Chairman of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, and; Gail Madden, in her Official Capacity as a Member of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, and; Alan Steen, in his Official Capacity as Administrator of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission,	§
Defendant.	§

EXPERT REPORT OF RICHARD MCCLEARY, PH.D.

I. Opinions: Based on my training, professional experience, research, and review of the facts and materials of this case, I hold the following opinions.

A. Public safety or crime-related secondary effects of sexually-oriented businesses (SOBs) can be established by methods that, while empirical, do not rely on formal, systematic designs.

1. These methods include simple observation and measurement, deduction from established theory, and induction from the results of analogous research based on formal, systematic designs.

2. The formal systematic, designs used in crime-related secondary effect studies include before-after and/or cross-sectional control comparisons. These designs are known as "quasi-experiments."

B. When formal scientific methods are used, inferential validity requires that an estimate of the ambient crime risk for an SOB be compared to the estimated risk for a comparable control. This comparison can be made in either of two ways.

1. In a "before/after" contrast, ambient crime rates are compared before and after an SOB opens. The validity of this contrast assumes that all relevant causal variables (other than the opening of the SOB) are stable over the before/after time frame.

2. In a "static group" contrast, ambient crime rates for an SOB are compared to ambient crime rates for some non-SOB business. The validity of this contrast assumes that the SOB and non-SOB control are equivalent on all relevant causal variables. If this assumption is unwarranted, the "static group" contrast can be adjusted statistically to approximate equivalence.

3. In either design, the contrast is used for the exclusive purpose of ruling out, or rendering implausible, the common, relevant "threats to internal validity."

4. Quasi-experimental estimates of ambient crime risk are not possible in every case. A strong quasi-experimental design assumes the availability of before/after data and/or suitable sites and controls. Otherwise, quasi-experimental analyses may not be feasible.

5 The authorities for my opinions on quasi-experimental design are cited below at II.A.

C. Ambient crime risk is measured by the ratio (or difference) of crime incidents to potential targets per unit of time and area.

1. Uniform Crime Reports (UCRs), collected by local police agencies for the Texas Department of Public Safety and the FBI, are an accepted measure of crime risk. Part I UCRs include the serious "violent" (homicide, rape, robbery, and assault) and "property" crimes (auto theft, larceny, burglary, and arson). The adverse secondary effects of SOBs ordinarily involve robbery, assault, and auto theft.

2. The adverse secondary effects of SOBs also involve Part II UCRs, especially so-called "victimless" crimes (alcohol, drugs, prostitution, etc.). These crimes are sensitive to police activity, which can affect risk estimates from Part II UCR rates. In that respect, Part I UCR rates are a more valid measure of crime-related secondary effects.

3. Part II UCRs directed against property (vandalism, trespassing, etc.) and persons (disorderly conduct, simple assault, etc.) are also relevant to the secondary effects of SOBs. These Part II UCRs are less sensitive to police activities.

4. Although police calls-for-service (CFSs) are often used to evaluate liquor license renewals, CFSs are an unacceptable measure of crime risk.

a. The shortcomings of CFSs are well known to criminologists. CFSs are easily manipulated, are only weakly correlated with locations and times of crime incidents; are sensitive to minor variations in police policy; yield biased estimates of ambient crime risk; and so forth. The validity implications of these problems are so great and so well known that virtually no published research uses CFSs to measure crime risk. These problems are known to underwriters. Actuarial estimates of the crime risk at an insured address are always based on crime incidents at or in the vicinity of the address, never on CFSs to the address.

b. CFS-based measures of ambient crime risk also have statistical shortcomings, in particular, a relatively low "signal-to-noise" ratio. This reduces the statistical power of before/after and static-group comparisons, creating a bias in favor of a null finding (i.e., no secondary effect).

c. In addition to general and statistical shortcomings, which apply to criminological studies, CFS-based measures of crime risk have shortcomings that are specific to SOBs. They underestimate the incidence rates of "victimless" crimes, e.g., including prostitution, lewd behavior, and drug use. Since these vice crimes do not come to the attention of the police through the 911 system, they leave no CFS record.

d. Since these biases favor the null finding, CFS-based measures of ambient crime risk cannot be used to demonstrate the absence of a secondary effect. They can be used to demonstrate the presence of a secondary effect, however.

e. These shortcomings of CFS-based measures of ambient crime risk have been noted by courts, most recently, the Eleventh Circuit in Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Florida.

5. The authorities for my opinions on the properties of CFSs are cited below at II.B.

D. The fundamental measure of crime risk is the ambient crime rate (per unit of time and area). This is ordinarily defined as the ratio of crime incidents that occurred within 500 feet (approximately one city block) of an SOB (or control) address during a fixed period of time. Ambient crime rates calculated this way are interpreted as victimization risks (i.e., as the probabilities of victimization) per unit of time in a circular area centered on an SOB or control.

1. While smaller circular areas (e.g., a 250-foot radius around an SOB and/or control) are acceptable in principle, smaller circles often exceed the precision of the UCR geo-coding system.

2. Larger circular areas (e.g., a 1000-foot radius around an SOB) tend to "dilute" the estimated effect, biasing it toward zero.

3. The optimal fixed period of time for the estimate depends on the crime rate. Longer periods of time are required for rare crimes (homicide, rape, etc.). Crime indices (e.g., total Part I UCRs) can be estimated from shorter periods.

4. Crime events are distributed as Poisson. "Waiting times" between crime events are distributed as exponential. Requisite spatio-temporal sample sizes are determined by Poisson and exponential parameters.

5. The authorities for my opinions on the distributional properties of crime incidents are cited below at II.C.

E. To assess the statistical significance of an observed secondary effect estimate, the ratio (or difference) of ambient crime rates for SOBs and/or controls is compared to a statistical model. The statistical test can have any of three outcomes.

1. An effect estimate is statistically significant if the ratio (or difference) is larger than "chance" (e.g., sample or measurement error) with 95 percent confidence. Ninety-five percent confidence implies a complementary false-positive error rate of five percent or less.

2. If the confidence level of an effect estimate is less than 95 percent, the effect estimate is statistically null if and only if the associated level of statistical power is 80 percent or higher. Eighty percent power implies that the complementary false-negative rate is smaller than 20 percent.

a. Power calculations depend on an expected substantive effect size.

b. For ambient crime risk, an effect of 10 percent or more is substantively large.

3. If an effect estimate has neither 95 percent confidence nor 80 percent statistical power, the test result is inconclusive.

4. The authorities for my opinions on statistical hypothesis testing are cited below at II.D.

F. When optimal designs are possible, crime-related secondary effect studies find that SOBs pose high ambient crime risks.

1. These risks involve not only Part II UCR crimes, such as prostitution, public drunkenness, and disorderly conduct, but also Part I UCR crimes such as homicide, robbery, assault, and auto theft.

2. Having been observed in a wide range of situations, places, and times, this finding is scientifically robust.

3. The authorities for my opinions on the crime-related secondary effects of SOBs are the studies cited below at II.E.

G. The consensus finding that SOBs pose high ambient crime risks corroborates modern criminological theory. According to theory, victimization risk is concentrated around a "hotspot" (e.g., an SOB) because of the quantity and quality of people drawn to the site.

1. Standard business practices designed to attract customers (sales, advertising, "giveaways," etc.) draw large numbers of customers from a wide catchment area.

2. SOB patrons have characteristics that make them particularly attractive, "soft" crime targets. In particular:

a. SOB patrons are drawn to the site from a wide catchment area and, thus, are strangers in the neighborhood;

b. SOB patrons are disproportionately male;

c. SOB patrons are open to vice overtures;

d. SOB patrons are likely to carry cash;

e. When victimized, SOB patrons tend not to complain to or seek assistance from the police.

3. The high density of "soft" targets near SOBs attracts predatory criminals to the neighborhood. The predators attracted to the SOB site are "professional" criminals who fall into two categories.

a. Some of the predators attracted to the SOB neighborhood are vice purveyors who dabble in crime.

b. Others are criminals who pose as vice purveyors in order to lure or lull potential victims.

4. The authorities for my opinions on the criminological theory of secondary effects are cited below at II.F.

H. Controlling for relevant differences, criminological theory holds that proximity to alcohol aggravates the crime risk posed by SOBs.

1. The aggravating effect works through two theoretical mechanisms.

a. Access to alcohol makes an SOB more attractive, thereby drawing more customers to the site.

b. By lowering personal inhibition and clouding judgment, alcohol makes SOB patrons more vulnerable to predatory criminals.

2. The aggravating effect has been demonstrated explicitly and implicitly in secondary effect studies.

a. A 1991 study of Garden Grove SOBs, cited at II.E.10 below, found an increase in ambient crime risk for an SOB following the opening of a tavern in the neighborhood.

b. A 2003 study of Greensboro SOBs by Dr. Daniel Linz and Mike Yao, cited at II.E.17-18 below, reported a large, significant effect for neighborhoods with adult cabarets.

c. A 2004 Daytona Beach, FL study conducted by Dr. Linz, Mr. Yao, and Dr. Randy D. Fisher, cited at II.E.21-22 below, replicates the findings of the 2003 Greensboro study.

3. The aggravating effect works through two theoretical mechanisms.

a. Access to alcohol makes an SOB more attractive, thereby drawing more customers to the site.

b. By lowering personal inhibition and clouding judgment, alcohol makes SOB patrons more vulnerable to predatory criminals.

4. The aggravating effect of alcohol at the individual level is corroborated by laboratory experiments cited below at II.G.

I. Chapter 32 of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission Code, cited at II.H.1 below and referred to hereafter as the "Regulation," is designed to mitigate the crime-related secondary effects of SOBs by separating alcohol and nudity. The factual predicate of the Regulation is sufficient for that purpose. Based on theory and research, there is a reasonable expectation that the Regulation will mitigate the crime-related secondary effects of SOBs.

J. In a declaration cited at II.H.2 below, Dr. Daniel Linz expresses the contrary opinion that the factual predicate of the Regulation is *in*sufficient. In Dr. Linz's opinion, the crime-related secondary effect studies ordinarily relied on by legislatures, such as those cited in II.E below, "do not adhere to professional standards of scientific inquiry necessary in order to insure methodological integrity and thus reliability and validity." I disagree not only with Dr. Linz' general opinion of crime-related secondary effect literature but, also, with the methodological foundation of his opinion.

1. The methodological authority for Dr. Linz' opinion is an article, cited at II.H.2.a below, written by Dr. Bryant Paul, Dr. Linz, and Mr. Bradley J. Shafer.

a. The methodological rules endorsed in the Paul-Linz-Shafer article are not derived from primary authorities on quasi-experimental design (such as those cited below at II.A); on the spatio-temporal distribution of crime (such as those cited below at II.B-C); or on statistical hypothesis testing (such as those cited below at II.D).

b. Dr. Linz claims that the Paul-Linz-Shafer four-part validity test is derived from Justice Souter's opinion in Daubert v. Merrell Dow. The Daubert criteria are not a necessary-sufficient methodological canon, however, nor even well suited to legislative fact-finding.

i. The claim that legislatures must or should apply the four-part validity test to weigh secondary effect studies has been rejected by courts, particularly G.M. Enterprises. Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, Wisconsin.

ii. I am aware of no legislature or government agency that has used the Paul-Linz-Shafer four-part validity test to design research or to assess the validity of research products.

c. Although the Paul-Linz-Shafer article is well known to SOB plaintiffs, it has had virtually no impact on any scientific or scholarly literature. Excluding citations by Dr. Linz and his colleagues, as of May, 15, 2007, the Linz-Paul-Shafer article has been cited only twice in peer-reviewed journals. I am aware of no experts in social science methodology who would endorse the four-part validity test described in the Linz-Paul-Shafer article.

d. Dr. Linz claims that the Paul-Linz-Shafer four-part validity test is "neither difficult nor cumbersome to apply." I disagree. The Paul-Linz-Shafer validity criteria are too subjective to be used to guide the design of research or to assess the validity of research findings.

i. The sense of the Paul-Linz-Shafer "compared-to-what" test is that SOBs and controls must be "statistically adjusted" or "matched" to control for crime risks unrelated to secondary effects. I agree; see my opinion II.B above. Dr. Linz fails to specify objective criteria for grading the "compared-to-what" test, however. More important, the "compared-to-what" test assumes that inadequate "statistical adjustment" or "matching" generates a bias in favor of an adverse effect estimate. In fact, however, the opposite is true. Inadequate "statistical adjustment" or "matching" generates a bias in favor of finding of no significant secondary effect.

ii. The sense of the Paul-Linz-Shafer "one-time-fluke" test is that ambient crime risk should be estimated over a long enough period of time to ensure conventional statistical confidence levels. I agree; see my opinion II.C above. But again, because Dr. Linz does not specify the length of time required to pass the "one-time-fluke" test, the test is wholly subjective. And Dr. Linz assumes again that violating the "one-time-fluke" test biases the study in favor of an adverse effect. But in fact, shorter time series bias the study in favor a null finding.

iii. The sense of the Paul-Linz-Shafer "looking-for-more-crime" test is that proactive policing can exaggerate the ambient crime risk of SOBs. While this may be true for vice crimes (see my opinion II.C.2 above), however, it is false for most other crimes. Proactive policing reduces the ambient risk of robbery, vandalism, assault, and other non-vice crimes.

iv. The sense of the Paul-Linz-Shafer "talking-only-to-people-who-give-answers-they-wanted-to-hear" test is non-random sampling can lead to biased estimates of public opinion. I agree in principle. In practice, on the other hand, estimates of public opinion of SOBs is invariant to sample properties. "Good" and "bad" samples lead to similar estimates. More important, of course, no legislation relies exclusively on public opinion.

2. To criticize the validity of a secondary effect study, Dr. Linz identifies some weakness in a study's design and then characterizes the weakness as a "fatal flaw." This style of argument reflects a misunderstanding of the relevant principles of design.

a. Since all secondary effect studies use quasi-experimental designs, all have uncontrolled threats to internal validity or potential shortcomings. The consequences of most of these shortcomings are benign, however; i.e., they do not affect the conclusions of the study.

b. A methodological shortcoming is irrelevant unless it satisfies two conditions:

i. The shortcoming must significantly affect the study's findings; i.e., it change the study's findings. If the shortcoming does not change the study's finding, it is irrelevant.

ii. The shortcoming must bias the study's finding in favor of an adverse secondary effect finding. If the shortcoming biases the study in favor of a null finding, or if it favors neither finding, it is irrelevant.

c. Dr. Linz presents no evidence to suggest that a "fatal flaw" is significant, however, or that it would bias the study findings in favor of a significant adverse secondary effect. The evidence suggests, on the contrary, that the "fatal flaws" cited by Dr. Linz are small and unbiased.

3. The epistemological theory of quasi-experimentation, spelled out in the authorities cited at II.A below, holds that the consistency of a finding across a diverse settings renders artifactual explanations implausible. Whereas the findings of any specific study might be faulted on narrow methodological grounds, the consensus finding of the body of studies in the factual predicate of the Regulation cannot be dismissed on the same grounds. Since the Regulation rests on a body of studies, Dr. Linz' argument is irrelevant.

K. Following his general argument, Dr. Linz criticizes the methodological rigor of the secondary effect studies relied on by the State. I disagree with virtually all of Dr. Linz' methodological criticisms.

1. Dr. Linz dismisses studies that present no novel data or analyses. This criticism is irrelevant in my opinion. Synthetic literature reviews are a common, useful tool. Some of the most prestigious scientific journals publish these reviews for the simple reason that they are useful. If the author or publisher of a synthetic review (The American Center for Law and Justice, e.g.) has an interest in the debate, of course, the interest should be made known to the reader.

2. Dr. Linz criticizes the 1979 Phoenix study because, in his opinion, it fails the Paul-Linz-Shafer "compared-to-what" and "one-time-fluke" tests. I disagree.

a. The SOB-control differences in the Phoenix study lie well within the conventional range of sampling error. The differences are not statistically significant. Furthermore, the SOB-control differences in the Phoenix similar in size to analogous differences in Dr. Linz' studies.

b. The probability that the statistically significant secondary effect estimate reported in the Phoenix study is a "one-time-fluke" can be estimated from the Central Limit Theory and a weak stationarity assumption. The "one-time-fluke" probability is smaller than .05.

Dr. Linz' methodological critique of the 1979 Phoenix study demonstrates the subjective nature of the Paul-Linz-Shafer validity canon.

3. Dr. Linz' methodological critique of the 1991 Garden Grove study centers on the control sites that were used to rule out common threats to internal validity. In the Garden Grove study, ambient crime was measured before and after the opening of three SOBs. Whenever an SOB opened, ambient crime rose. To show that this before/after effect was not a spurious artifact of some uncontrolled threat to internal validity, Dr. James W. Meeker and I measured ambient crime for other Garden Grove SOBs over the same time. Finding no before/after difference for these controls, ruled out other explanations for the observed secondary effects.

a. Dr. Linz argues that non-SOBs should have been used as controls to show that the secondary effects were "endemic" to SOBs. This is a different issue, of course. A quasi-experimental design uses control sites to rule out plausible threats to internal validity. For that purpose, the SOB and controls sites should be as similar as possible. Existing SOBs located in the same neighborhood are nearly ideal quasi-experimental controls.

b. The question of whether the opening of a non-SOB would produce a similar before/after effect is irrelevant and uninteresting.

4. Dr. Linz' methodological critique of the 1977 Los Angeles study dismisses a large, significant crime-related secondary effect because it occurs during a period of "stepped-up" police surveillance. Although "stepped-up" surveillance might explain an increase in vice crimes, however, it cannot explain an increase in non-vice crimes such as robbery. On the contrary, criminological authorities predict that "stepped-up" surveillance would produce a decrease in the ambient risk for non-vice crimes. The fact that the Los Angeles reported a large, significant effect for non-vice crimes invalidates Dr. Linz' methodological critique.

5. A 1984 Indianapolis study finds that SOBs have large, significant secondary effects on ambient crime and real estate values. Dr. Linz dismisses both findings on methodological grounds.

a. In Dr. Linz' opinion, the crime-related secondary effect finding fails the Paul-Linz-Shafer "compared to what" test. As in the 1979 Phoenix study, however, the Indianapolis SOB-control differences lie within the conventional range of sample error.

b. Dr. Linz dismisses the real estate finding on several grounds, none of which are convincing. In any event, Dr. Linz' methodological critiques of the 1984 Indianapolis findings have been rejected by several courts, at least implicitly; see especially the Fifth Circuit decision in H and A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, Texas.

6. Dr. Linz argues that the authors of some of the studies that the State relied on "disavow" their findings. I disagree with Dr. Linz' interpretation of the texts in question. Dr. Linz has misinterpreted the rhetorical qualifications that social scientists commonly use in reporting their findings.

a. Contrary to Dr. Linz' claim, the "path analysis" results reported in the 1980 Minneapolis study finds that SOBs have a statistically significant "direct effect" on crime. The text quoted by Dr. Linz refers to unrelated preliminary analyses. The City of Minneapolis interprets the 1980 finding as a large, statistically significant secondary effect and continues to rely on the 1980 study.

b. Contrary to Dr. Linz' claim, the quasi-experimental contrast reported in the 1978 Whittier study amounts to a large, statistically significant crime-related secondary effect. The authors do indeed qualify their finding. Because the study is a quasi-experiment, the authors note that "not all of" the large, significant effect can be attributed to the presence of SOBs along Whittier Boulevard. "Not all of" and "none of" are not synonyms; nor is this qualification the "disavowal" that Dr. Linz claims. The City of Whittier interprets the 1978 finding as a large, statistically significant secondary effect and continues to rely on the 1978 study.

7. The authors of the1978 St. Paul study do acknowledge, as Dr. Linz claims, that the study found no statistically significant secondary effect for SOBs. The St. Paul findings have a more complicated interpretation than Dr. Linz' claim would suggest, however.

a. In addition to SOBs, the "adult entertainment business" category in the St. Paul study included non-SOB taverns, cabarets, and other entertainment venues. Although the effect estimates for the "adult entertainment business" category were statistically significant in six regression models, the estimates for the SOB subcategory were not significant.

b. Because all six of the SOB effect estimates were positive, the results are interpreted to mean that SOBs have an adverse (but not significant) effect on ambient crime. If the six positive SOB effect estimates are tested jointly, the St. Paul results are statistically significant at the conventional level of confidence.

8. Dr. Linz criticizes the 1994 New York City (Times Square) study on the same grounds as the 1979 Phoenix and 1984 Indianapolis studies: SOB-control differences are too large to pass the Paul-Linz-Shafer "compared-to-what" test. But here again, the SOB-control differences lie within the conventional range of sample error; the SOB-control differences are not statistically significant. To support his critique, Dr. Linz again quotes the authors of the report.

9. Dr. Linz criticizes the 1986 Austin study on grounds that SOBs in high-crime neighborhoods were excluded from the study design. While Dr. Linz is correct on that point, his characterization of the exclusion as a "fatal flaw" is incorrect. Excluding high-crime neighborhoods from the study favors the null hypothesis. Had the high-crime neighborhoods been included, the estimated secondary effect would have been several times higher than the estimate that was reported.

10. The 1986 El Paso study compared SOB and control areas, finding a large, statistically significant difference in ambient crime. A companion survey found large, significant differences in public opinions about SOBs.

a. Dr. Linz dismisses the crime-related secondary effect finding on two familiar grounds: the SOB- control differences fail the Paul-

Linz-Shafer "compared-to-what" test and several SOB sites are excluded from the study. In the first instance, the SOB-control differences not significantly different (not withstanding Dr. Linz' contrary claim). In the second instance, SOB sites are excluded because the city's geography would not permit their inclusion in the design.

b. Dr. Linz does not dismiss the findings of the public opinion survey but characterizes the findings as "equivocal."

11. The 1996 Newport News study finds a large, significant difference in ambient crime risk between SOB and control areas. Dr. Linz dismisses this finding because the study's two-year time frame is too short to pass the Paul-Linz-Shafer "one-shot-fluke" test. Dr. Linz does not reveal the length of time required to pass the test; nor does he explain how the effect estimate could exceed the conventional confidence threshold given that the time series was too short to pass the "one-shot-fluke" test.

12. Dr. Linz criticizes the 1997 Dallas study because the SOB and control areas are not adequately "matched" and, hence, fail the Paul-Linz-Shafer "compared-to-what" test. In this instance, the basis of Dr. Linz' critique is unclear to me. I am familiar with this report and to not see that the SOB-control could bias the study findings.

13. Dr. Linz dismisses several surveys of real estate appraisers on grounds that the opinions of these professionals are unrelated to real estate sales prices. Dr. Linz cites no authorities for this opinion, however. Lacking an authority, I disagree. The City of Kennedale, TX relied on a reasonably well designed and executed survey of real estate appraisers to enact an SOB ordinance. The Kennedale ordinance was upheld by the Fifth Circuit decision in H and A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, Texas.

Dr. Linz' detailed methodological critiques of the secondary effect studies relied on by the State are often incorrect or irrelevant and always arbitrary. SOBs and controls will always be different on one variable or another. It is not sufficient to find an SOB-control difference or to characterize the difference as a fatal flaw. To be taken seriously, a methodological critique must demonstrate that design shortcoming is associated with a spurious he finding. Dr. Linz' critiques do not meet this standard and cannot be taken seriously.

L. Following his detailed methodological criticisms of the studies relied on by the State, Dr. Linz reviews secondary effect studies that, in his opinion, are more rigorous than the studies relied on by the States. These studies, conducted by Dr. Linz and his colleagues, find no SOB-crime relationships. Had the State relied on these studies, according to Dr. Linz, it would not have enacted the Regulation. I disagree with Dr. Linz' opinions.

1. The crime-related secondary effect studies conducted by Dr. Linz and his colleagues are neither more (nor less) methodologically rigorous than the secondary effects studies that the State relied on. Like all crime-related secondary effect studies, Dr. Linz' studies are quasi-experiments. As such, his studies are subject to the same methodological criticisms.

a. The 2001 study of Fort Wayne SOBs by Drs. Linz and Paul, cited at II.E.14 below, finds no significant difference between SOB and "matched" control areas on a small subset of crime incidents.

i. The SOB-control differences in Fort Wayne are as large or larger than the differences in the 1979 Phoenix study or the 1984 Indianapolis study.

ii. Drs. Linz and Paul discard any crime incident not cleared by arrest. Since most of Fort Wayne's crime incidents are not cleared by arrest, most of the crime in Fort Wayne was excluded by design. The reader can only wonder about the consequences of this design idiosyncracy.

iii. Drs. Linz and Paul do not report an error rate for their finding; nor do they report the statistics that would allow a critical reader to calculate the error rate.

b. The study of Charlotte SOBs, cited at II.H.2.b below, compares UCRs within 500 feet of 20 adult cabarets to UCRs within 500 feet of three control businesses: a McDonald's restaurant, a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant, and a gasoline station mini-mart. The adult cabarets had lower ambient crime rates than the control businesses. Dr. Linz interprets this result to mean that SOBs as a class do not have crime-related secondary effects. But while this interpretation may be correct, Dr. Linz' co-authors suggest alternative interpretations, including:

i. Crime reporting biases: "Perhaps victims of crime in areas surrounding adult clubs are not motivated to report crime incidents to the police. If this were the case, there may not be stable crime reporting across study and control sites. It could be that, compared to the control sites, more of the crime that occurs in the adult dance club zone goes unreported. It seems plausible that many of the victims of crime in these areas might not want to draw attention to themselves." (p. 100)

ii. Non-comparable controls: "Conceptually, it may be more appropriate to compare adult club sites with non-adult club sites so that one can determine whether the type of club activity affects the level of crime. This comparison may be implicit (if not explicit) in the minds of citizens and justices when considering whether an adult club should be allowed to locate in a particular area. Methodologically, using basic service type businesses such as fast food restaurants as control sites may confound the comparisons being made in the research, even if they are located in areas equivalent to those in which adult dance clubs are located (p. 100)

iii. The effects of SOB regulations: "[T]he adult nightclub business in the late-1990s in many respects may be quite unlike that of the 1960s and 1970s when these establishments were relatively new forums of entertainment in American society. As noted in the introduction to this article, adult nightclubs have been subjected to over two decades of municipal zoning restrictions across the country, and they usually must comply with many other regulations as well. (p. 99)

iv. Extraordinary security measure at the Charlotte clubs: "[A]dult nightclubs, including those in Charlotte, often appear to have better lighting in their parking lots and better security surveillance than is standard for non-nightclub business establishments. These may be factors producing fewer crime oportunities and lower numbers of reported crime incidents in the surrounding areas of the clubs ... The extensive management of the parking lots adjoining the exotic dance nightclubs, in many cases including guards in the parking lots, valet parking, and other control mechanisms, may be especially effective in reducing the possibility of violent disputes in the surrounding area." (p. 99)

v. Finally, it is possible that the Charlotte adult cabarets studied by Dr. Linz and his colleagues are exceptional. The criminological theory of secondary effects, described at I.G above, allows for this possibility.

Nevertheless, judged by the conventional criteria described in my opinion I.E above, the Charlotte findings are inconclusive.

2. Not withstanding his contrary claim, Dr. Linz' studies are consistent with the crime-related secondary effects literature; i.e., his studies are either inconclusive (as defined in my opinion at I.E.3 above) or, else, find that SOBs pose large, significant ambient crime risks. In several studies, moreover, Dr. Linz and his colleagues find large effects but mistakenly claim that the estimates are not statistically significant.

a. The 2002 study of San Diego peep shows by Drs. Linz and Paul, cited at II.E.15-16 below, find that peep show areas have sixteen percent more 911 calls than control areas. In the article cited at II.B.2 below, published in a peer reviewed journal, Dr. James W. Meeker and I demonstrate that the confidence level associated with this difference exceeds the conventional 95 percent level required for statistical significance.

b. The 2004 study of crime rates in 67 Florida counties by Dr. Linz and several colleagues, cited at II.H.2.c below, finds no correlation between the number SOBs in a county and the county's Part I UCR crime rate. Dr. Linz interprets his inability to find an SOB-crime correlation to mean that SOBs have no secondary effects. I disagree with this interpretation.

i. Until now, no secondary effect study has looked for crime-related secondary effects at the county level.

ii. The criminological theory of secondary effects, described at I.G above, and the distributional properties of crime incidents, described at I.D above, define ambient crime risk at areal scales ranging from a few hundred thousand square feet to a "neighborhood." Looking for the ambient effects of SOBs at the scale of a typical county strains the limits of statistical power. To illustrate this issue, if each of Florida's 401 SOBs poses an ambient crime risk that extends a distance of 500 feet, the combined ambient risk would cover 11.3 square miles. This is only 0.02 percent of Florida's 54,200 square-mile land area.

ii. To illuminate the statistical power issue, one can calculate the number of counties needed to detect ambient secondary effects at the conventional 0.8 level. Based on reasonable effect sizes and models, the analysis would require more than 1,000 counties. Given the required sample size, Dr. Linz' interpretation of the 67 Florida county study can be stated as: "If there are more than 1,000 counties in Florida, then Florida's SOBs have no crime-related secondary effects."

iii. At an earlier date, Dr. Randy D. Fisher characterized this study as "under review" at a journal named Law and Human Behavior.

3. Dr. Linz' does not mention two studies that might be relevant to the present suit.

a. The 2003 study of Greensboro SOBs by Drs. Linz.and Yao, cited at II.E.17-18 below, found that neighborhoods with SOB cabarets have several times more 911 calls than neighborhoods with non-SOB taverns. The effect is consistent across six crime categories.

b. The 2004 study of Daytona Beach SOB cabarets by Drs. Linz.and Fisher, cited at II.E.21-22 below, is a replication of the 2003 Greensboro study. As in Greensboro, in Daytona Beach, Linz and Fisher find that neighborhoods with SOB cabarets have several times more 911 calls than control neighborhoods.

i. In light of this finding, Drs. Linz and Fisher rejected the conventional definition of "statistical significance." Using novel definitions, Drs. Linz and Fisher argued that their large, significant effect estimates demonstrate that Daytona Beach SOB cabarets have no crime-related secondary effects.

ii. The Eleventh Circuit decision in Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Florida rejected the novel interpretation of Drs. Linz and Fisher.

In sum, secondary effects studies conducted by Dr. Linz and his colleagues are consistent with the studies relied on by the State and with the large body of studies that has accumulated over the last thirty years. The secondary effect studies conducted by Dr. Linz and his colleagues either find large, statistically significant crime-related secondary effects or, else, are inconclusive by the conventional criteria described in my opinion I.E above.

II. Data and information relied on: The data and information that I relied on to form these opinions consists of documents filed in this case and research reports written by me and others. Specific documents include:

A. Methodological and statistical authorities, including

1. Campbell, D.T. and J.C. Stanley*, Experimental and Quasi-Experimental* Designs for Research (Rand-McNally, 1966).

2. Cook, T.D. and D.T. Campbell, Quasi-Experimentation: Design and Analysis Issues for Field Settings (Houghton-Mifflin, 1979).

3. Rubin, D. Matched Sampling for Causal Effects. Cambridge University Press, 2006.

4. Shadish, W.R., T.D. Cook, and D.T. Campbell, Quasi-Experimental Designs for Generalized Causal Inference (Houghton-Mifflin, 2002).

B. Authorities on crime measurement, including

1. Klinger, D. and G.S. Bridges. Measurement errors in calls-for-service as an indicator or crime. Criminology, 1997, 35:529-41.

2. McCleary, R. and J.W. Meeker. Do peep shows "cause" crime? Journal of Sex Research, 2006, 43:194-196.

3. McCleary, R., B.C. Nienstedt and J.E, Erven. Uniform Crime Reports as organizational outcomes. Social Problems, 1982, 29:361-372.

C. Authorities on the statistical properties of crime incidents, including

1 Cameron, A.C. and P.K. Trivedi. Regression Analysis of Count Data, Econometric Society Monograph30. (Cambridge U Press, 1998).

2 Diggle, P,J. Statistical Analysis of Spatial Point Patterns, 2nd Ed. Arnold, 2002.

3 Feller, W. An Introduction to Probability Theory and its Applications, Volume I, 3rd Ed. (Wiley, 1968 [1st Ed., 1950]).

4. Greenberg, D.F. Mathematical Criminology (Rutgers U Press, 1979).

5. Haight, F. Handbook of the Poisson Distribution (Wiley, 1967).

6. Stiger, M. and R. McCleary. Confirmatory spatial analysis by regressions of a Poisson variable. Journal of Quantitative Anthropology, 1989, 2:13-38.

D. Authorities on the statistical hypothesis tests, including

1. Cohen, J. Statistical Power Analysis for the Behavioral Sciences, 2nd Ed. (L.E. Erlebaum Associates, 1988)

2. Hoenig, J.M. and D.M. Heisey. The abuse of power: the pervasive fallacy of power calculations for data analysis. The American Statistician, 2001, 55:1-6.

3. Kendall, M. and A. Stuart, Chapter 22 of The Advanced Theory of Statistics, 4th Ed. (Charles Griffin and Co., 1979 [1st Ed., 1946]).

4. Lipsey, M. Design Sensitivity: Statistical Power for Experimental Research. (Sage Publications, 1990).

E. Secondary effect studies routinely relied on by legislatures, including

1. Los Angeles, CA, 1977. Study of the Effects of the Concentration of Adult Entertainment Establishments in the City of Los Angeles. Department of City Planning, June, 1977.

2. Amarillo, TX, 1977. A Report on Zoning and Other Methods of Regulating Adult Entertainment in Amarillo. City of Amarillo Planning Department, September 12th, 1977.

3. Whittier, CA, 1978. Staff Report, Amendment to Zoning Regulations, Adult Businesses in C-2 Zone with Conditional Use Permit, Case No. 353.015. January 9th, 1978.

4. St. Paul, MN, 1978. Effects on Surrounding Area of Adult Entertainment Businesses in St. Paul. Department of Planning and Economic Development and Community Crime Prevention Project, June, 1978.

5. Phoenix, AZ, 1979. Adult Business Study. City of Phoenix Planning Department, May 25, 1979.

6. Minneapolis, MN, 1980. An Analysis of the Relationship between Adult Entertainment Establishments, Crime, and Housing Values. Minnesota Crime Prevention Center, Inc. M. McPherson and G. Silloway, October, 1980.

7. Indianapolis, IN, 1984. Adult Entertainment Businesses in Indianapolis, An Analysis. Department of Metropolitan Development, Division of Planning. March, 1984.

8. Austin, TX, 1986. Report on Adult Oriented Businesses in Austin. Office of Land Development Services, May 19th, 1986.

9. El Paso, TX, 1986. Effects of Adult Entertainment Businesses on Residential Neighborhoods. Office of the City Attorney, September 26th, 1986.

10. Garden Grove, CA, 1991. Final Report to the City of Garden Grove: The Relationship between Crime and Adult Business Operations on Garden Grove Boulevard. October 23, 1991. Richard McCleary, Ph.D. and James W. Meeker, J.D., Ph.D.

11. New York Times Square, NY, 1994. Report on the Secondary Effects of the Concentration of Adult Use Establishments in the Times Square Area. Insight Associates. April, 1994.

12. Newport News, VA, 1996. Adult Use Study. Department of Planning and Development. March, 1996.

13. Dallas, TX, 1997. An Analysis of the Effects of SOBs on the Surrounding Neighborhoods in Dallas, Texas. Peter Malin, MAI. April, 1997.

14. Ft. Wayne, IN, 2001. Measurement of Negative Secondary Effects Surrounding Exotic Dance Nightclubs in Fort Wayne, Indiana. Daniel Linz and Bryant Paul. February 13th, 2001.

15. San Diego, CA, 2002. A Secondary Effects Study Relating to Hours of Operation of Peep Show Establishments in San Diego, California. Daniel Linz and Bryant Paul. September 1, 2002.

16. San Diego, CA, 2003. A Methodical Critique of the Linz-Paul Report: A Report to the San Diego City Attorney's Office. R. McCleary and J.W. Meeker. March 12, 2003.

17. Greensboro, NC, 2003. Evaluating Potential Secondary Effects of Adult Cabarets and Video/Bookstores in Greensboro: A Study of Calls for Service to the Police. Daniel Linz and Mike Yao, November 30th, 2003.

18. Greensboro, NC, 2003. A Methodical Critique of the Linz-Yao Report: Report to the Greensboro City Attorney. R. McCleary. December 15th, 2003.

19. Toledo, OH, 2004. Evaluating Potential Secondary Effects of Adult Cabarets and Video/Bookstores in Toledo, Ohio: A Study of Calls for Service to the Police. Daniel Linz and Mike Yao. February 15th, 2004.

20. Toledo, OH, 2004. A Methodological Critique of the Linz-Yao Report: Report to the City of Toledo, OH. R. McCleary and J.W. Meeker. May 15th, 2004.

21. Daytona Beach, FL, 2004. Evaluating Potential Secondary Effects of Adult Cabarets in Daytona Beach Florida: A Study of Calls for Service to the Police in Reference to Ordinance 02-496. D. Linz, R.D. Fisher, and M. Yao. April 7th, 2004.

22. Daytona Beach. FL, 2006. A Methodological Critique of Evaluating Potential Secondary Effects of Adult Cabarets in Daytona Beach, Florida: A Study of Calls for Service to the Police in Reference to Ordinance 02-496. R. McCleary, May 1st, 2006.

23. Fort Worth, TX, 2004. Effect of Land Uses on Surrounding Property Values: Survey of Appraisers. Duncan Associates, Austin, TX.

F. Authorities on the criminological theory of secondary effects, including

1. Bennett, T., and R. Wright. Burglars on Burglary: Prevention and the Offender. (Gower, 1984).

2. Cohen, L.E. and M. Felson. Social change and crime rate trends: A routine activity approach. American Sociological Review, 1979, 44:588-608.

3. Felson, M. Crime and Everyday Life, 2nd Ed. Pine Forge Press, 1998.

4. Felson, M. Crime and Nature. Sage, 2006.

5. Feeney, F. Robbers as Decision-Makers. Pp. 53-71 in Cornish D. and R. Clarke (eds.), The Reasoning Criminal: Rational Choice Perspectives on Offending. (Springer-Verlag, 1986).

6. Fleisher, M. Beggars and Thieves: Lives of Urban Street Criminals. (U Wisconsin Press, 1995).

7. Goldstein, H. Problem-Oriented Policing. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1990.

8. Katz, J. Seductions of Crime: Moral and Sensual Attractions in Doing Evil (Basic Books, 1988).

9. Katz, J. The Motivation of the Persistent Robber. In Tonry, M. (ed.), Crime and Justice: A Review of Research (U Chicago Press , 1991).

10. Newman, O. Defensible Space: Crime Prevention Through Urban Design. New York: MacMillan, 1973.

11. Sanchez, L.E. Sex, violence citizenship, and community: an ethnography and legal geography of commercial sex in one American city. Ph.D. Dissertation, Criminology, Law and Society, University of California, Irvine, 1998.

12. Scott, M.S. Assaults in and Around Bars. U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Community Oriented Policing. 2002.

13. Shaw, C.R. The Jack-Roller: A Delinquent Boy's Own Story. University of Chicago Press, 1966 [1930].

14. Shover, N. Great Pretenders: Pursuits and Careers of Persistent Thieves. (Westview, 1996).

15. Snodgrass, J. The Jack-Roller at Seventy. Lexington, MA: Lexington Books, 1982.

16. Wilson, J.Q. and G.L. Kelling. Broken windows: The police and neighbor-hood safety. Atlantic Monthly, 1982, 249:29-38.

17. Wright, R.T. and S.H. Decker. Armed Robbers in Action: Stickups and Street Culture (Northeastern U Press, 1997).

G. Authorities on the relationship between alcohol and erotica, including

1. Davis, K.C., J. Norris, W.H. George, J. Martell, and R,J. Heiman. Men's likelihood of sexual aggression: The influence of alcohol, sexual arousal, and violent pornography. Aggressive Behavior, 2006, 32, 581 - 589.

2. Norris, J., K.C. Davis, W.H. George, J. Martell, and J.R. Heiman. Alcohol's direct and indirect effects on men's self-reported sexual aggression likelihood. Journal of Studies on Alcohol, 2002, 63, 688-695.

H. Documents submitted by the Plaintiffs and Defendants in this suit, including

1. Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission Code, Chapter 32

2. Declaration of Daniel Linz, Ph.D. with exhibits,

a. Paul, B., D. Linz and B.J. Shafer. Government regulation of "adult" businesses through zoning and anti-nudity ordinances: de-bunking the legal myth of negative secondary effects. Communication Law and Policy, 2001, 6:355-391.

b. Linz, D., B. Paul, K.C. Land, M.E. Ezell and J.R. Williams. An examination of the assumption that adult businesses are associated with crime in surrounding areas: A secondary effects study in Charlotte, North Carolina. Law and Society Review, 2004, 38(1):69-104.

c. Examining the link between sexual entertainment and crime: The presence of adult businesses and the prediction of crime rates in Florida. Fisher, R.D., Benton, C.V, Linz, D. and Paul, B. Manuscript under review at Law and Human Behavior.

3. Complaint, February 2nd, 2004

4. Answer, February 23rd, 2004

5. Deposition of Jeanenne Fox with exhibits, June 3rd, 2004

6. Documents produced by Defendant for the Plaintiff (CD)

I. Court decisions, including

1. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed.2d 469 (1993)

2. G.M. Enterprises. Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, Wisconsin., 350 F.3d 631, 640 (7th Cir. 2003)

3. Daytona Grand, Inc. v. City of Daytona Beach, Florida No. 06-12022 (11th Cir. 2007)

4. H and A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, TX, 480 F.3d 336 No. 05-11474 (5th Cir. Feb. 22, 2007).

III. Exhibits to be used: The documents that I would expect to use as exhibits in the trial include all of the documents listed in section II above.

IV. Qualifications: My curriculum vitae is appended.

V. Compensation: I am being compensated at the rate of $350 per hour for testimony and deposition, $250 per hour for other tasks. I do not expect the total compensation in this case to exceed $20,000.

VI. Cases in which I have testified or been deposed within the last four years: In the last four years, I have been deposed or testified in the following cases:

Alaska Inter-Tribal Council v. State. Alaska Superior Court, Dillingham Branch.

Artistic Entertainment v. City of Warner Robins. U.S. District Court, Middle District of Georgia (Case No. 97-00195-CV-4-HL-5); U.S. Court of Appeals, Eleventh Circuit (Case No. 02-10216).

Scamp's v. California Alcoholic Beverage Commission and City of Westminster, CA. Alcoholic Beverage Control Board Administrative Hearing.

Washington Retailtainment, Inc. v. City of Centralia, WA. U.S. District Court, Western District of Washington at Tacoma (Case No. C03-5137FDB).

People of the State of Illinois ex rel. Edward C. Deters v. The Lion's Den, Inc. Circuit Court for the 4th Judicial Circuit of Illinois (Case No. 04-CH-26).

New Albany DVD, LLC. v. City of New Albany, IN. U.S. District Court, Southern District of Indiana, New Albany Division (Cause No. 4:04-CV-0052-SEB-WGH).

Giovani Carandola Ltd. et al. v. Ann Scott Fulton et al. U.S. District Court, Middle District of North Carolina, Greensboro Division (Case No. 1:01 CV 115).

Fantasyland Video, Inc., v. County of San Diego. U.S. District Court, the Southern District of California (Case No. 02-CV-1909 LAB (RBB)).

Tollis, Inc. and 1560 N. Magnolia Ave., LLC. v. County of San Diego U.S. District Court, Southern District of California (Case No. 02-CV-2023 LAB (RBB))

Reliable Consultants, Inc., et al. v. City of Kennedale, TX U.S. District Court, Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division (Civil No. 4:05-CV-166-A).

Abelene Retail #30, Inc. v. County of Dickinson et al. U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas (Case No. 02:04-CV-02330-JWL).

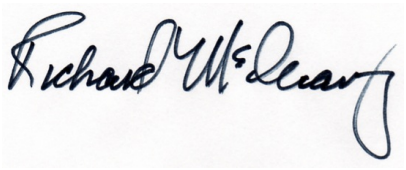
Regensberger v. City of Waterbury et al., U.S. District Court, District of Connecticut (Civil No. 3:04-CV-1900(PCD)).

Charlie's Club, Inc. v. Mike Hale et al., U.S. District Court, Northern District of Alabama, Southern Division (Case No. CV 05-CO-2189-S); and SJB, Inc., et al., v. Troy King, et al. U.S. District Court, Northern District of Alabama, Southern Division (Case No. CV-05-TMP-2477-S).

Giovani Carandola Ltd. et al. v. City of Greensboro. U.S. District Court, Middle District of North Carolina, Greensboro Division (Civil No. 01:05-CV-1166).

YYBC, Inc. v. Town of Davie. U.S. District Court, Southern District of Florida (Case No. 06-60111-CIV-UNGARO-BENAGES/ O'Sullivan).

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. Executed on October 5, 2007.



Richard McCleary, Ph.D.

Criminal Justice Policy Review
Volume 19 Number 2
June 2008 153-163

10.1177/0887403408315111 http://cjp.sagepub.com hosted at http://online.sagepub.com

Rural Hotspots

The Case of Adult Businesses

Richard McCleary
University of Califonria, Irvine

A recent U.S. Tenth Circuit decision questions whether the routine activity theory of hotspots applies to adult businesses located in sparsely populated rural areas. Although few criminologists are interested in urban–rural differences, the Tenth Circuit decision makes this topic acutely relevant to policy makers and courts. To address the threshold question, the hotspot theory is analyzed to demonstrate its generality to urban, suburban, and rural locations. The results of a corroborating case study are then presented. When an adult entertainment business opens on an interstate highway off-ramp to a small rural village, total crime rises by 60%. Alternative explanations related to uncontrolled threats to internal validity are considered and ruled out. After reporting the results of the case study, the consequences of the theory and results for policy makers and courts are discussed.

Keywords: secondary effects; hotspots; ambient crime risk; adult businesses; rural crime

Expressive activities that occur inside adult entertainment businesses, including cabarets that feature live nude or seminude dancing, x-rated video arcades, and bookstores, enjoy First Amendment protection. Courts have ruled that governments may regulate these businesses, so long as the regulations are aimed at mitigating the businesses' potential adverse "secondary effects" (Andrew, 2002).

To defend an ordinance, a government must produce evidence to show that the businesses are associated with secondary effects such as ambient noise, litter, and in particular, crime. The government's evidence need not satisfy arbitrary standards of methodological rigor. On the contrary, the 1986 U.S. Supreme Court decision in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres holds that governments may rely on any evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Taking advantage of this evidentiary standard, few governments conduct local secondary effects studies; most rely on the large body of studies conducted in other places and times.

The U.S. Supreme Court reviewed the evidentiary standard 16 years later. Though reaffirming the modest "reasonably believed to be relevant" Renton standard, in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, the Court allowed adult businesses to challenge the relevance of secondary effects evidence. If a business could demonstrate that the government's evidence was irrelevant to the problem that its ordinance purported to address, the ordinance could be struck down.

Author's Note: Paul Brantingham, Marcus Felson, and Alan Weinstein read early drafts. The author also benefited from conversations with the late Dennis W. ("Denn") Roncek. Correspondence concerning this article should be addressed to Richard McCleary, School of Social Ecology, Irvine, CA 62697-7080; e-mail: mccleary@uci.edu.

Relevance challenges fall into two categories. The first centers on the fact that secondary effects studies have typically ignored salient differences among distinct adult business models. In Encore Videos v. City of San Antonio, an adult bookstore argued that its products were sold for "off-site" use only and, thus, that it could not have the same secondary effects as cabarets, video arcades, and other "on-site" adult businesses. Accepting part of this argument, the Fifth Circuit struck down a San Antonio ordinance whose evidentiary predicate failed to include secondary effects studies of "off-site" adult bookstores.

An ambiguous passage in the Encore Videos decision left the impression that the Fifth Circuit had endorsed an interpretation of criminological theory favoring the plaintiffs. Citing the ambiguous passage, "off-site," adult businesses argued subsequently that criminological theory precluded secondary effects for their business model. Four years later, however, in H and A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, the Fifth Circuit upheld an ordinance the evidentiary predicate of which included studies of "off-site" adult bookstores. The three-judge panel, including one member who had participated in the Encore Videos decision, took the unusual step of retracting the passage that seemed to endorse an interpretation of criminological theory (McCleary & Weinstein, 2007).

The second category of Constitutional challenges centers on the fact that secondary effect studies have ignored idiosyncratic local conditions. In 2004, an adult bookstore in rural Kansas used criminological theory to argue that the sparsely populated rural environment precluded the possibility of secondary effects. And because the local government had not studied this issue prior to enactment, the ordinance should be struck down. Rejecting this argument, the trial court granted the defendant's summary judgment motion. On appeal, however, in Abilene Retail #30 v. Dickinson County, the Tenth Circuit agreed with the plaintiff's interpretation of criminological theory:

> All the studies relied on by the Board examine the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses located in urban environments; none examines businesses situated in an entirely rural area. To hold that legislators may reasonably rely on those studies to regulate a single adult bookstore, located on a highway pullout far from any business or residential area within the County would be to abdicate "independent judgment" entirely. Such a holding would require complete deference to a local government's reliance on prepackaged secondary effects studies from other jurisdictions to regulate any single sexually oriented business of any type, located in any setting. (p. 1175)

Because the adult bookstore was located in an isolated rural area, and because the County had no evidence to suggest that rural adult businesses would have secondary effects, the Tenth Circuit reversed the summary judgment and remanded the case for trial.

Although the question of urban–rural generality is only one of many weighed in the Tenth Circuit's decision, it is the central question of this essay. Because most criminological research has been conducted in nonrural areas, criminological theories do not necessarily generalize to rural crime. Because relatively little crime occurs in rural areas, of course, few criminologists are interested in urban–rural questions. Following the Tenth Circuit's Abilene Retail decision, on the other hand, urban–rural differences are acutely relevant to policy makers and courts.

The potential cost of the decision is staggering. In the best case, local governments will be forced to rewrite ordinances to cover businesses located in more rural areas. In the worst case, litigious adult businesses will have an incentive to relocate to rural areas, forcing trial courts to judge the relative ruralness of areas, case by case. In any case, extrapolating the Tenth Circuit's argument to other variables not explicitly addressed by criminological theory threatens the ability of local governments to mitigate public safety hazards associated with adult businesses.

This essay addresses the threshold question of whether criminological theories can be generalized to rural areas. Although the generalization may be difficult for some criminological theories, the relevant theory of "hotspots" (Sherman, Gartin, & Buerger, 1989) applies to any accessible area, rural or urban. After describing the relevant criminological theory, I report the results of a corroborating quasi-experimental case study. When an adult business is opened on an interstate highway off-ramp in a sparsely populated rural community, ambient crime risk rises precipitously, in effect making a hotspot of the community.

The Criminological Theory of Secondary Effects

Writing shortly after the advent of Uniform Crime Reports, Vold (1941) confirmed that a city's crime rate was proportional to its population. The observed relationship had an obvious explanation: "[B]ehavior in the country in all probability comes under much greater informal control of the opinions and disapprovals of the neighbors than is the case in the relative anonymity of the city" (p. 38). The negative correlation confirmed not only grand sociological theory (e.g., Tönnies, 1887/1963; Durkheim, 1893/1964) but also the related criminological theory of social disorganization.

As proposed by Shaw and McKay (1942), the theory of social disorganization predicts that neighborhoods with low residential stability will have high rates of delinquency and vice versa. To the extent that a small town has the characteristics of a stable neighborhood, social disorganization theory would predict the low crime rates observed by Vold (1941). Moreover, when a small town is disrupted by an influx of newcomers, the same theory predicts an abrupt increase in the town's crime rate.

This can occur in at least two ways. First, the newcomers may victimize the town's residents. Indeed, fear of victimization by newcomers is implicated in the rapid spread of gated communities (Blandy, Lister, Atkinson, & Flint, 2003). Second, the influx of newcomers may disrupt the town's routine activities in a way that attracts predatory criminals, creating a local "hot spot of predatory crime" (Sherman et al., 1989).

The discovery of hotspots by Sherman et al. (1989) was anticipated by the work of Brantingham and Brantingham (1981); adult business hotspots have many of the properties associated with crime "attractors" and "generators" (see also Brantingham & Brantingham, 1993). A simpler routine activity theory (Clarke, 1983; Cohen & Felson, 1979; Felson, 1998; Felson & Cohen, 1980) is sufficient for present purposes, however. In this context, the routine activity theory of crime equates ambient crime risk, generally defined as the number of crimes within 500-1,000 feet of a site, with the product of four risk factors. This can be written as:

$$\text{Ambient Crime Risk} = \frac{N \text{ of Targets} \times \text{Expected Value}}{\text{Police Presence}} \times \text{Offenders}$$

An increase (or decrease) in the number of targets at the site or in their expected value, defined in the usual way, yields an increase (or decrease) in ambient crime risk. An increase (or decrease) in police presence, on the other hand, yields a decrease (or increase) in ambient crime risk.

Targets

Adult business sites are crime hotspots because they attract potential victims, or targets, from wide catchment areas. Adult business sites are no different in that respect than tourist attractions (Danner, 2003; Dimanche & Lepetic, 1999) and sporting events (Corcoran, Wilson, & Ware, 2003; Westcott, 2006). Compared to the targets found at these better known hotspots, however, the targets found at adult businesses are exceptionally attractive to offenders. This reflects the presumed characteristics of adult business patrons. They are disproportionately male, open to vice overtures, and carry cash. Most important of all, when victimized, they are reluctant to involve the police. From the offender's perspective, they are "perfect" victims.

Offenders

The crime–vice connection has been a popular plot device for at least 250 years. John Gay's Beggar's Opera (1728/2006), for example, describes the relationship between MacHeath, a predatory criminal, and the vice ring composed of Peachum, Lucy, and Jenny. This popular view is reinforced by the empirical literature on criminal lifestyles and thought processes. The earliest and best-known study (Shaw, 1930/1966; Snodgrass, 1982) describes the life of "Stanley," a delinquent who lives with a prostitute and preys on her clients.

This simple application of the routine activity theory assumes a pool of rational offenders who move freely from site to site, choosing to work the most attractive site available. These offenders lack legitimate means of livelihood and devote substantial time to illegitimate activities; they are "professional thieves" by Sutherland's (1937) definition. Otherwise, they are a heterogeneous group—some are vice purveyors who dabble in crime, whereas others are predatory criminals who promise vice to lure and lull their victims. Despite their heterogeneity, the offenders share a rational decision-making calculus that draws them to adult business sites.

Expected Value

Criminological thinking has changed little in the 75 years since Shaw's (1930/1966) Jack-Roller. To document the rational choices of predatory criminals, Wright and Decker (1997) interviewed 86 active armed robbers. Asked to describe a perfect victim, all mentioned victims involved in vice, either as sellers or buyers. Three of the armed robbers worked as prostitutes:

> From their perspective, the ideal robbery target was a married man in search of an illicit sexual adventure; he would be disinclined to make a police report for fear of exposing his own deviance. (p. 69)

The rational calculus described by these prostitute-robbers echoes the descriptions of other predators (see Bennett & Wright, 1984; Feeney, 1986; Fleisher, 1995; Katz, 1988, 1991; Shover, 1996).

Police Presence

With respect to the quantity and quality (or value) of the targets at a site, urban and rural adult business sites are equally attractive to the rational offender. Police presence is generally lower at rural sites, however. Some part of the urban–rural disparity is because of obvious factors. Rural police agencies protect larger areas with fewer personnel, for example, and drive longer distances in response to calls. Though less obvious, fuzzier jurisdictional lines and more complex demands for service make policing more difficult and less effective in rural areas (Thurman & McGarrell, 1997; Weisheit, Falcone, & Wells, 1999). Because police presence is relatively lower at rural sites, controlling for the quantity and quality of targets, rural sites are more attractive to the rational offender.

Montrose, Illinois: A Case Study

An unincorporated village of 250 residents, Montrose, Illinois is located on I-70 midway between St. Louis and Indianapolis. I-70 separates Montrose's residential dwellings from its businesses: a convenience store-gas station, a motel, and for a short period, a tavern. Other than gas and lodging, cross-country travelers had no reason to exit I-70 at Montrose prior to February, 2003. In that month, the Lion's Den opened on a service road within 750 ft of the I-70 off-ramp. A large, elevated sign let I-70 travelers know that x-rated videos, books, and novelties could be purchased "24/7." The store was successful by all accounts.

The residents of Montrose did not welcome the new business. Unlike the village's other businesses, the Lion's Den was located on the residential side of I-70. Complaining that the store disrupted their idyllic lifestyle, villagers picketed the site on several occasions. Traffic was a chronic complaint. The narrow gravel access road connecting the site to I-70 could not support the weight of big-rig trucks; it soon fell into disrepair. The Lion's Den offered to build a new, larger access road from I-70 to its site. But fearing an even larger volume of traffic, the villagers declined the offer.

Like all Illinois villages, Montrose had no adult business ordinances. However, the Lion's Den was located within 1,000 feet of a public park, in violation of an Illinois statute. When the State moved to enforce its statute, the Lion's Den sued, arguing that "off-site" adult businesses could not generate the public safety hazards associated with adult cabarets, video arcades, and other on-site adult entertainment businesses. The trial in State v. The Lion's Den et al. lasted 4 days. The court upheld the statute and, in July, 2005, the Montrose Lion's Den closed its doors.

At the trial, the State presented evidence of the Lion's Den's adverse impact on the surrounding area: sexually explicit litter and decreased use of the nearby park. However neither party presented local crime data. Table 1 reports data bearing on the crime-related secondary effects of the adult business in Montrose. During the 1,642-day period beginning January 1, 2002, the Effingham County Sheriff's Office recorded 83 crime incidents in the village. The most common incidents involved the theft or destruction of property. Incidents of disorder and indecency, traffic-related incidents, and alcohol-drug offenses were nearly as common. Incidents involving danger or harm to persons (robbery, assault, etc.) were rare.

The columns labeled "Open" and "Closed" in Table 1 break the incidents down into an 881-day segment in which the Lion's Den was open and a 761-day segment in which it was closed. Crime rates are 22.39 and 13.92 total incidents per year for the "Open" and "Closed" segments, respectively. From these raw rates, it appears that crime in Montrose rose when the Lion's Den opened and fell when the Lion's Den closed. Of course, this assumes that plausible alternative hypotheses for the difference can be ruled out.

Null Hypothesis

The most obvious alternative explanation is that the difference is because of chance. To rule this out, the daily total crime count series was regressed on a binary variable representing "Open" and "Closed" days (Cameron & Trivedi, 1998). The log-parameter values reported in Table 1 were estimated with Stata 9.2 (Stata Corporation, 2007). Because the effect estimate $\beta = 0.475$ occurs with probability $p(t \geq 2.09) < 0.035$, by the conventional 95% confidence criterion, the chance explanation, or null hypothesis, is rejected.

Table 1
Crime-Related Secondary Effects of a Rural Adult Business

	Open		Closed		Log Effect	β	t
Property crimes	23	9.54	15	7.20
Personal crimes	3	1.24	5	2.40	Constant	–3.267	–17.60
All other crimes	28	11.61	9	4.32	Open	0.475	2.06
Total crimes	54	22.39	29	13.92	$e^{0.475}$	1.61

Although parameter estimation requires working in the natural log metric, log-parameters are not easily interpreted. However, the exponentiated effect estimate is approximately equal to the ratio of the segments. In this instance, the value ($e^{0.475}$) 1.61 is interpreted as a 61% difference. The rate of total crime in Montrose was 61% higher during the 29 months that the Lion's Den was open, that is, compared to the period prior to February 2003, before the Lion's Den opened, and the period after July 2005, when it closed. This is a large, statistically significant crime-related secondary effect.

Internal Validity

Another set of alternative explanations involve uncontrolled threats to internal validity. The switching regime (closed–open–closed) property of the quasi-experimental design controls many of the most common threats to internal validity. Nevertheless, authorities on quasi-experimental design (Campbell & Stanley, 1966; Cook & Campbell, 1979; Shadish, Cook, & Campbell, 2002) cite maturation, history, and instrumentation as the most plausible threats to the internal validity of time-series designs.

The threat of maturation refers to the possibility that the effect reported in Table 1 may be due, not to the opening of the Lion's Den but to a natural trend in the village's crime rate. However, because the daily time total crime time series satisfies the simple Poisson homogeneity assumption (Feller, 1968), the maturation hypothesis is rejected.

The threat of history refers to the possibility that the effect may be because of some event in the village that coincided with the opening of the Lion's Den. A search of local news media found only one significant event during the 1,662-day time series. Shortly after the Lion's Den opened, the village's only liquor-serving tavern closed permanently. However, if the tavern's closing had any effect on crime in Montrose, the expected effect would have been to reduce the crime rate during the 881 days that the Lion's Den was open. Accordingly, history is rejected as an alternative hypothesis.

Instrumentation refers to the possibility that the effect may be due, not to the opening of the Lion's Den but to a coincidental change in the way that crimes are recorded in the village. If the Effingham County Sheriff stepped up the frequency of patrols in the village when the Lion's Den opened, for example, the effect reported in Table 1 might be a spurious artifact of heightened surveillance. Criminologists acknowledge that heightened surveillance can exaggerate "victimless" crime rates; proactive enforcement against prostitution and drugs invariably leads to higher vice crime rates. However, proactive enforcement against "serious" crime does not produce higher rates of homicide, assault, and robbery. On the contrary, criminologists generally agree that heightened surveillance reduces the rate of "serious" crime.

The detailed incident reports do not support an instrumentation hypothesis. During the 881 days that the Lion's Den was open, crime in the village grew more "serious." Although five "Personal Crimes" were reported during the 761 days that the Lion's Den was closed versus three when it was open, none of the five incidents involved a weapon or resulted in an injury. When the Lion's Den was open, in contrast, two of the three "Personal Crimes" reported in the Village were armed robberies, one committed by a gang of four men wearing ski masks and armed with shotguns. Moreover, both armed robberies were committed at the site of the Lion's Den and were the only robberies recorded in the village's modern history.

The timing of the crime incidents is related to their seriousness. During the 761 days that the Lion's Den was closed, Montrose's modal crime incidents were "drive-off" thefts from the village's gasoline station and vandalism at the Village's motel. Most of these incidents occurred during the day and required no immediate response from the Sheriff's Office; and because the businesses were separated from residences by I-70, the modal incidents attracted little attention. On the other hand, during the 881 days that the Lion's Den was open, a majority of incidents occurred at night and demanded immediate action; as more incidents began to occur on the residential side of I-70, crime became more noticeable to village residents.

Discussion

Following the opening of an adult business on an interstate highway off-ramp into a sparsely populated rural village, total crime in the village rose by approximately 60%. Two years later, when the business closed, total crime in the village dropped by approximately 60%. In light of the strong quasi-experimental design, artifactual explanations for this effect, including maturation, history, and instrumentation are implausible. The only plausible explanation for the effect reported in Table 1 is that, like adult businesses in urban and suburban settings, adult businesses in sparsely populated rural areas generate ambient crime-related secondary effects.

This finding was not unexpected. Although criminological theories are based largely on data collected in urban and suburban areas, the routine activity theory of hotspots (Sherman et al., 1989) generalizes to rural settings. Put simply, adult businesses attract patrons from wide catchment areas. Because these patrons are disproportionately male, open to vice overtures, and reluctant to report victimizations, their presence attracts offenders. The spatiotemporal conjunction of targets and offenders generates ambient victimization risk—a hotspot of predatory crime. This theoretical mechanism operates identically in rural, suburban, and urban areas. Moreover, because rural areas ordinarily have lower levels of visible police presence, rural hotspots may be riskier than their suburban and urban counterparts.

The Tenth Circuit may not have found the Montrose results useful. Every case study is unique in some respect, after all; and although the U.S. Census Bureau considers both Effingham County, Illinois and Dickinson County, Kansas to be "rural," the Tenth Circuit may have focused on idiosyncratic, legally relevant factors. Nevertheless, the case study results demonstrate that, whether urban, suburban, or rural, hotspots are hotspots. In urban, suburban, and rural areas, adult businesses attract patrons who are disproportionately male, open to vice overtures, and reluctant to report victimizations to the police. This attracts offenders to the site with predictable consequences for ambient crime risk. In theory, of course, because of the relative scarcity of police in rural areas, offenders may find rural hotspots more attractive. Otherwise, the routine activity theory of hotspots generalizes to any site that is attractive to potential victims, or targets, and accessible to offenders.

Solving the problem of rural hotspots by allocating more police resources to rural areas is politically unfeasible. Governments allocate public safety resources across regions on utilitarian grounds. Per capita allocations have the greatest impact on per capita crime rates. This poses an obstacle to rural problem-oriented policing (Weisheit et al., 1999), of course, but it is a rational policy for a government. Because the targets attracted to a rural hotspot live outside the jurisdiction, and because victimizations are underreported, ignoring the hotspot is a more realistic strategy.

The future is unclear. The relocation of adult businesses to rural areas parallels the postwar "flight" of inner-cities families. From the perspective of adult business proprietors, the urban environment has become hostile. Zoning codes force adult businesses into "ghettos" where their operations are strictly regulated and where competition with other adult businesses is fierce. Rural areas have few regulations, on the other hand, and little competition; access to interstate highway traffic is a bonus. As urban environments become more hostile, more adult businesses will relocate to rural areas, forcing state and county governments into policy decisions. The case study reported here can, hopefully, inform that debate.

References

Andrew, C. J. (2002). The secondary effects doctrine: The historical development, current application, and potential mischaracterization of an elusive judicial precedent. Rutgers Law Review, 54, 1175.

Bennett, T., & Wright, R. (1984). Burglars on burglary: Prevention and the offender. London: Gower.

Blandy, S., Lister, D., Atkinson, R., & Flint, J. (2003). Gated communities: A systematic review of the research evidence. CNR Paper No. 12. Bristol, UK and Glasgow, UK: Economic and Social Research Council.

Brantingham, P. L., & Brantingham, P. J. (1981). Notes on the geometry of crime. In P. L. Brantingham & P. J. Brantingham (Eds.), Environmental criminology (pp. 27-54). Thousand Oaks, CA: Sage.

Brantingham, P. L., & Brantingham, P. J. (1993). Nodes, paths and edges: Considerations on environmental criminology. Journal of Environmental Psychology, 13, 3-28.

Cameron, A. C., & Trivedi, P. K. (1998). Regression analysis of count data, econometric society: Monograph 30. Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press.

Campbell, D. T., & Stanley, J. C. (1966). Experimental and quasi-experimental designs for research. Chicago: Rand McNally.

Clarke, R. V. (1983). Situational crime prevention: Its theoretical basis and practical scope. In M. Tonry & N. Morris (Eds.), Crime and justice: Annual review of research (pp. 1-63). Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Cohen, L. E., & Felson, M. (1979). Social change and crime rate trends: A routine activity approach. American Sociological Review, 44, 588-608.

Cook, T. D., & Campbell, D. T. (1979). Quasi-experimentation: Design and analysis issues for field settings. Skokie, IL: Houghton-Mifflin.

Corcoran, J. J., Wilson, I. D., & Ware, J. A. (2003). Predicting the geo-temporal variations of crime and disorder. International Journal of Forecasting, 19, 623-634.

Danner, T. A. (2003). Violent times: A case study of the Ybor City Historic District. Criminal Justice Policy Review, 14, 3-29.

Dimanche, F., & Lepetic, A. (1999). New Orleans tourism and crime: A case study. Journal of Travel Research, 38, 19-23.

Durkheim, E. (1964). The division of labor in society. Glencoe, IL: Free Press. (Original work published 1893)

Feeney, F. (1986). Robbers as decision-makers. In D. Cornish & R. V. Clarke (Eds.), The reasoning criminal: Rational choice perspectives on offending (pp. 53-71). New York: Springer-Verlag.

Feller, W. (1968). An introduction to probability theory and its applications: Volume I (3rd ed.). New York: Wiley.

Felson, M. (1998). Crime and everyday life (2nd ed.). Thousand Oaks, CA: Pine Forge Press.

Felson, M., & Cohen, L. E. (1980). Human ecology and crime: A routine activities approach. Human Ecology, 8, 389-406.

Fleisher, M. S. (1995). Beggars and thieves: Lives of urban street criminals. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press.

Gay, J. (2006). The beggar's opera. New York: Hard Press Editions. (Original work published 1728)

Katz, J. (1988). Seductions of crime: Moral and sensual attractions in doing evil. New York: Basic Books.

Katz, J. (1991). The motivation of the persistent robber. In M. Tonry (Ed.), Crime and justice: A review of research (pp. 277-306). Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

McCleary, R., & Weinstein, A. C. (2007). Do "off-site" adult businesses have secondary effects? Legal doctrine, social theory, and empirical evidence. Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Society for Criminology, Atlanta, GA.

Shadish, W. R., Cook, T. D., & Campbell, D. T. (2002). Quasi-experimental designs for generalized causal inference. Skokie, IL: Houghton-Mifflin.

Shaw, C. R. (1966). The jack-roller: A delinquent boy's own story. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. (Original work published 1930)

Shaw, C. R., & McKay, H. D. (1942). Juvenile delinquency and urban areas. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Sherman, L. W., Gartin, P. R., & Buerger, M. E. (1989). Hot spots of predatory crime: Routine activities and the criminology of place. Criminology, 27, 27-56.

Shover, N. (1996). Great pretenders: Pursuits and careers of persistent thieves. Prospect Heights, IL: Westview.

Snodgrass, J. (1982). The jack-roller at seventy. Lexington, MA: Lexington Books.

Stata Corporation. (2007). Stata Version 9.2. College Station, TX: Author.

Sutherland, E. H. (1937). The professional thief. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

Thurman, Q., & McGarrell, E. G. (1997). Community policing in a rural setting. Cincinnati, OH: Anderson.

Tönnies, F. (1963). Community and society (Gemeinschaft und gesellschaft). New York: Harper and Row. (Original work published 1887)
Vold, G. B. (1941). Crime in city and country areas. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 217, 38-45.
Weisheit, R. A., Falcone, D. N., & Wells, L. E. (1999). Crime and policing in rural and small-town America (2nd ed.). Prospect Heights, IL: Waveland Press.
Westcott, J. (2006). Super Bowl XXXIX. FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin, 75, 1.
Wright, R. T., & Decker, S. H. (1997). Armed robbers in action: Stickups and street culture. Boston: Northeastern University Press.

Cases and Decisions

Abilene Retail #30, Inc. v. Board of Commissions of Dickinson County, Kansas, 492 F.3d 1164, 1175 (10th Cir. 2007).
City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41 (1986).
City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425 (2002).
Encore Videos, Inc. v. City of San Antonio, 330 F.3d 288 (5th Cir. 2003).
H and A Land Corp. v. City of Kennedale, TX, 480 F.3d 336 (5th Cir. 2007).
People of the State of Illinois ex rel. Edward C. Deters, State's Attorney of Effingham County v. The Lion's Den, Inc., et al. 4th Ill. Judicial Circuit Court, No. 04-CH-26 (June 10, 2005).

Richard McCleary is a professor of criminology, law and society at the University of California, Irvine. His current interests center on the measurement of ambient public safety hazards associated with hotspot businesses.

"Strip Clubs According to Strippers: Exposing Workplace Sexual Violence"

Kelly Holsopple
Program Director
Freedom and Justice Center for Prostitution Resources
Minneapolis, Minnesota

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this paper is to investigate women's experiences in stripclubs and to describe the activities in stripclubs from the women's point of view. The format approach is collective story narrative with the author as part of the collective voice. The research was inspired by the author's experiences in stripping over the course of thirteen years. The author's intention is to examine the conditions of stripclubs by describing the fundamental way stripclubs are organized. The description features bar activities focused on stripper-customer interactions; survey data on sexual violence in stripclubs; and women's thoughts on stripping.

THEORETICAL FOUNDATION

Stripclubs are popularly promoted as providing harmless entertainment and as places where respectful men go to watch and talk to women (Reed 1997). Stripclub customers are described as normal men who use stripclubs to avoid adultery and therefor find a safe outlet for their sexual desires in balance with their marital commitments (Reed 1997). In contrast, stripclubs are criticized for being environments where men exercise their social, sexual, and economic authority over women who are dependent on them and as places where women are treated as things to perform sex acts and take commands from men (Ciriello 1993).

Stripclubs are organized according to gender and reflect gender power dynamics in greater society. "Gendered spaces are social arenas in which a person's gender shapes the roles, statuses, and interpersonal dynamics and generates differential political and economic outcomes and interaction expectations and practices" (Ronai, Zsembik, and Feagin 1997:6). Stripclubs are more specifically organized according to gender inequality, which is perpetuated by gendered spaces and consequently sexualized (Ronai, et al 1997). The typical stripclub scenario displays young, nude or partially nude women for fully clothed male customers (Thompson and Harred 1992).

The entire analysis of stripclubs is located within the context of men's domination over women. When organizations are produced in the context of the structural relations of domination, control, and violence, they reproduce those relations (Hearn 1994). These organizations may also make explicit use of gendered forms of authority with unaccountable and unjustifiable authority belonging to men (Hearn 1994). The stripclub elicits and requires direct expressions of male domination and control over women (Prewitt 1989).

In order to dominate or control and secure men's domestic, emotional and sexual service interests, male dominated institutions and individual men utilize violence (Hanmer 1989). Violence against women is identified as physical, sexual, emotional, verbal, and representational, but all violence from men against women should be understood as sexual violence (Hearn 1994).

The concept of a continuum is useful when discussing sexual violence, especially in stripclubs. Continuum is defined as a basic characteristic underlying many different events and as a series of elements or events that pass into one another (Kelly 1987). The common underlying element in stripclubs is that male customers, managers, staff, and owners use diverse methods of harassment, manipulation, exploitation, and abuse to control female strippers.

LITERATURE REVIEW

Despite a substantial amount of research on the topic of strippers, stripping, and stripclubs, none focuses on sexual violence in stripclubs perpetrated against strippers. Instead the studies focus on sociological and psychological profiles of the women (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Peretti and O' Connor 1989; Reid, Epstein, and Benson 1994; McCaghy and Skipper 1970; Thompson and Harred 1992) and their strategies for interaction with customers (Boles and Garbin 1974; Enck and Preston 1988; Ronai 1989). Although most studies mention male sexual violence and exploitation, the research regarding stripping fails to investigate and account for the problem of sexual violence in establishments that feature female strippers. The gap is the rationale for my study.

METHOD

Data for this research was obtained through interviews, a survey, and the researcher's participant observation while involved in stripping (Hamel 1993). Women in this study stripped in the local stripclubs in the Midwest metropolitan area where the researcher lives, in local nightclubs in the same area, in metropolitan and rural stripclubs and nightclubs across the United States, at private parties, in peep shows, and in saunas. The stripclubs featured a variety of attractions including topless dancing, nude dancing, table dancing, couch dancing, lap dancing, wall dancing, shower dancing, and bed dancing. In addition, some clubs had peepshows, female boxing and wrestling with customers, offered photographs of the dancers, or hired pornography models and actresses as headliners.

The study was conducted in two phases. In 1994, I conducted free-flowing qualitative interviews for one to four hours each with forty-one women while I was still involved in stripping and compiled participant observer notes about the activities in stripclubs. The women ranged in age from nineteen to forty years old and were involved in stripping from three months to eighteen years. All of the women identified themselves as Caucasian.

In 1996, I proceeded to design a twenty-six question survey according to themes derived from the interviews to investigate sexual violence in stripclubs. My long-time involvement in the strip industry allowed an association with strippers that was invaluable for administering in-depth surveys regarding sensitive issues. The surveys were administered face-to-face to insure the information was indeed from the women in stripping. Again, the surveys and consequent discussions lasted from one to four hours. Many women explained that they had never talked about their experiences so extensively because no one had ever asked them the right questions. Participants were asked to say whether they had experienced different abusive and violent actions in the stripclub, to estimate how often each action happened, and then to identify which men associated with the stripclub perpetrated the action. The categories of men were defined as customer, owner, staff, and manager. Since I exited stripping, snowball sampling was employed to recruit the eighteen participants for the survey. Participants in the survey were asked to pass on postcards to other women. The range of ages was eighteen to thirty-five years old. The age of entry into stripping ranged from fifteen to twenty-three years old, with a mean age of eighteen years and ten months. The length of time the women in this study were involved in stripping ranged from three months to eighteen years with an average length of six years and seven months. Women predominantly identified themselves as Caucasian. Only one woman identified herself as Hispanic. Twelve of the women described their sexual orientation as heterosexual, two as lesbian, and four as bisexual. The survey data was analyzed on the Statistical Program for Social Sciences.

After the data was compiled, a focus group of 4 women currently in stripping and with no prior association with the study positively evaluated the relevancy of the study and approved the collective story.

Statements in quotations throughout this paper are derived from the 41 interviews and discussions that often followed the administration of the 18 surveys.

PART 1: TYPICAL STRIPCLUB ACTIVITIES

A. Recruitment

Women find out about stripping from a variety of sources. Upscale stripclub franchises recruit in new cities by having managers and imported dancers scout in nightclubs. Most women find out about stripping from girlfriends already in stripping, male associates, the media, and some from prior involvement in prostitution. One woman told how she loitered in and around urban stripclubs to pick up customers when she was fifteen and how her pimp eventually drove her to small town strip bars because those bars admitted her and hired her. Someone else got involved in stripping through an escort service for bachelor parties. Another young woman who went to a gentlemen's club to pick up her friend recounted her recruitment as an eighteen-year-old. She waited at the bar, was served alcohol, and the owner asked to check her I.D. Instead of censuring her for drinking, he told her she would make $1000 per week and pressured her to enter the amateur contest that night. She won the contest, $300, and worked there three weeks before being recruited into an escort service by a patron pimp.

In a typical hiring scenario women respond in person to a newspaper ad promising big money, flexible hours, no experience necessary. As an audition the club manager asks the applicants to perform on amateur night or bikini night, both of which are particularly popular with customers who hope to see girl-next-door types rather than seasoned strippers. The manager will make a job offer based on physical attributes and number of women already on the schedule. Clubs portray the job requirements as very flexible. Women are told that they will not be forced to do anything they do not want to do, but clubs overbook women so they are forced to compete with each other, often gradually engaging in more explicit activities in order to earn tips (Cooke 1987).

B. Working Conditions

Women in stripping are denied legal protection relating to the terms and conditions under which they earn their livings (Fischer 523). Most strippers are hired to work as independent contractors rather than employees. Most strippers are not paid a wage (Mattson 1995), therefor their income is totally dependent on their compliance with customer demands in order to earn tips. More often than not, the strippers have to pay for the privilege of working at a club (Cooke 1987; Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Prewitt 1989). The majority of clubs demand that women turn over 40 to 50 percent of their income for stage or couch rental and enforce a mandatory tip out to bouncers and disc jockeys (Enck and Preston 1988; Forsyth and Deshotels 1997). Usually a minimum shift quota is set and the women must turn over at least that quota amount. If a woman does not earn the quota and wants to continue working at the establishment, she owes the club and must pay off that shift's quota by adding it to the quota for the next shift she will work. The stripclubs may also derive income from promotional novelty items, kickbacks, door cover charges, beverage sales, prostitution, and capricious fines imposed on the women. As independent contractors, strippers are not entitled to file discrimination claims, receive workers' compensation, or unemployment benefits (Fischer 1996; Mattson 1995). Club owners are free from tax obligations and tort liability. Owners pay no Social Security, no health insurance, and no sick pay. Some club owners require strippers to sign agreements indicating that they are working as independent contractors and many clubs require women to sign a waiver of their right to sue the club for any reason.

Although strippers are classified as independent contractors, the reality of their relationship to their supervisors is an employee-employer relationship. Regardless of the agreements claiming independent contractor status, clubs maintain enormous control over the women. The club controls the schedule and hours, requires strippers to pay rental fees, tip support staff large amounts, and even sets the price of table dances and private dances. Clubs have specific rules about costuming and even dictate the sequence of stripping and nudity. For example, by the middle of the first song the woman must remove her top, she must be entirely nude by the end of the second song, and must perform a nude floorshow. All this regardless of whether customers are tipping her or not. A club may further influence dancers' appearances by pressuring them to shave off all their pubic hair, maintain a year-long tan, or undergo surgery for breast augmentation. At nude clubs, it is common for the performers to be shaved clean, giving them an adolescent and even childlike appearance.

Clubs also exert significant control over the strippers' behavior during their shifts by regulating when women may use the bathroom and how many of them can be in the dressing room at one time. Some clubs do not provide seating in the dressing room and forbid smoking in that room, thus preventing strippers from taking a break. When a woman wants to sit down or smoke a cigarette, she must do so on the main floor with a customer. Clubs enforce these rules through fines (Cooke 1987; Enck and Preston 1988; Ronai 1992). Women are fined heavily by club management: $1 per minute for being late, as much as $100 for calling in sick, and other arbitrary amounts for "talking back" to customers or staff, using the telephone without permission, and touching stage mirrors. Women are fined for flashing, prostitution (Enck and Preston 1988), taking off their shoes, fighting with a customer, being late on stage, leaving the main floor before the DJ calls her off, not cashing in one dollar bills, profanity in music, being sick, not cleaning the dressing room, using baby oil on stage, dancing with her back to a customer (Enck and Preston 1988) and being touched by a customer.

Despite the stripclub's representation of a dancing job as flexible, strippers attest that their relationship with the club becomes all consuming and everything associated with being a stripper interferes with living a normal life. And despite the common perception that a woman can dance her way through school, many strippers report that their jobs take over their lives. Long and late hours, fatigue, drug and alcohol problems, and out of town bookings make it difficult to switch gears. Not only do the women spend a significant amount of their time in stripclubs, the activities and influences from the club environment permeate their personal lives and detrimentally effect their well-being. Although stripclubs are considered legal forms of entertainment, people unassociated with the industry are unaware of the emotional (Peretti and O'Connor 1989; Ronai 1992), verbal (Mattson 1995; Ronai 1992), physical (Boles and Garbin 1974), and sexual abuse (Ciriello 1993; Ronai 1992) inherent in the industry. Despite claims from management that customers are prohibited from touching the women, this rule is consistently violated (Enck and Preston 1988; Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Ronai and Ellis 1989; Thompson and Harred 1992). Furthermore, stripping usually involves prostitution (Boles and Garbin 1974; Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Prewitt 1989; Ronai and Ellis 1989; Thompson and Harrod 1992).

C. Stripper-Customer Interactions

Main Floor

Stripclub activities are offered in public spaces or private rooms or other isolated parts of clubs (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997). The typical stripclub scenario presents young, nude or partially nude women mingling with fully clothed male customers. They circulate through the crowd, encouraging men to buy liquor, drinking and talking with men, and soliciting and performing a variety of private dances (Prewitt 1989; Ronai and Ellis 1989). Women describe their role in the stripclub as hostess, object, prostitute, therapist, and temporary girlfriend and say they are there to entertain and attract men and business for the owners.

Women who work at small strip joints say they can hang out, order in food, and play pool during their shifts. On the other hand, women who work at gentlemen's clubs have to hustle photographs and drinks and are required to sell promotional T-shirts, calendars, and videos. They can be mandated to sell the items with private dances. For example, the dancers buy T-shirts from the house mom for $8 and sell them for $15. So for $15, the customer receives a T-shirt and 2 $10 table dances. Strippers at gentlemen's clubs are further informed by management that they are not allowed to buy their own drinks, that they have to be sitting with customers, and can never turn down a drink, even when their drinks are full.

Stage

Women report dancing on stages as cheaply constructed by laying plywood on the benches of restaurant booths to stages covered with kitchen linoleum to wood parquet or marble stages in a few upscale clubs. Some stages are elevated runways so narrow that strippers say that cannot get away from customers on each side touching them, especially when they are kneeling down to accept a tip in the side of their g-strings/t-bars or when they have their backs turned. Stages can also be sunken pits with a rail around it and a bar for the customers' beverages. During a set, a stripper may do striptease, acrobatics, dance, walk, or squat to display her genitals. Generally the progression for striptease begins during the first song with the woman wearing a dress or costume covering her breasts and buttocks. Over the course of a set of 2 or 3 songs she will remove her bra and in nude clubs, her g-string/t-bar. Some clubs feature floorshows in which women crawl or move around on the floor posing in sexual positions and spread their legs at the customers' eye level. During a floorshow, a dancer changes her movements from upright to positions on her knees and squatting in a crabwalk in order to 'flash' tipping customers. "Flashing" is pulling the g-string/t-bar aside, revealing the pubic area and/or the genitals. Dancers describe this as "doing a show" for paying customers. Ordinarily, a dancer only positions herself in front of tipping patrons (Prewitt 145). Customers who fail to tip are ignored. Audience response can be expressed by clapping, hooting, barking, whistling, amount of money tipped, or complete silence depending upon time of day, state of inebriation, excitement over the musical selection, or the appearance and abilities of the stripper.

On stage, some women's thoughts wander, while others' focus on angry desperation. "I daydream about nothing in particular to pass the time of 12 minutes." "I'm thinking about how good I look in the mirrors and how good I feel in dance movements." "I tell myself to smile." "I think about getting high and that I am making money to get high." "I am giving these guys every chance to be decent, so that I don't have to be afraid of them." "I am filled with disdain for the customers who do not tip, but sit and watch and direct you to do things for no money." "I think of how cheap these fuckers are, what bills I need to pay."

Private Dance Activities

Private dances are usually performed in areas shielded from the larger club view (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997, Prewitt 1989). As a rule, the private dance involves one female dancer and one male customer. Private dances are situations where women are often forced into acts of prostitution in order to earn tips (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Prewitt 1989; Ronai and Ellis 1989). Men masturbate openly (Peretti and O'Connor 1989), get hand jobs (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997), and stick their fingers inside women (Ronai and Ellis 1989). Men with foot fetishes have been known to suck on dancers' toes.

A variety of private dances are promoted in strip clubs. Table dancing is performed on a low coffee table or on a small portable platform near the customer's seat. The woman's breasts and genitals are eye level to the customer. Couch dancing for a customer entails the dancer standing over him on the couch, dangling her breasts or bopping him in the face with her pubic area. Lap dancing requires the woman to straddle the man's lap and grind against him until he ejaculates in his pants. A variation involves the woman dancing between his legs while he slides down in his chair so that the dancer's thighs are rubbing his crotch as she moves. Bed dancing is offered in a private room and requires a woman to lay on top of a fully clothed man and simulate sexual intercourse until he ejaculates. Shower dancing is offered in upscale clubs and allows a clothed patron to get into a shower stall with one or more women and massage their bodies with soap. Wall dancing requires a stripper to carry alcohol swabs to wash the customer's fingers before he inserts them into her vagina. His back is stationary against the wall and she is pressed against him with one leg lifted. Peep shows feature simulated or actual acts directed by openly masturbating customers. Customers sit in a private booth and view the women through a glass window. Live sex shows involve 2 or more individuals engaging in simulated or sexual activity performed behind glass or on a stage. Customers openly masturbate while watching the show from the audience or through an opening in a private booth.

During private dances women are conscientious about their boundaries and safety. "I don't want him to touch me, but I am afraid he will say something violent if I tell him 'no'." "I was thinking about doing prostitution because that's when customers would proposition me." "I could only think about how bad these guys smell and try to hold my breath." "I spent the dance hyper vigilant to avoiding their hands, mouths, and crotches." "We were allowed to place towels on the guys' laps, so it wasn't so bad." "I don't remember because it was so embarrassing."

D. Dressing Room

Women describe a range of types and qualities of dressing rooms. Strippers are expected to change clothing in beer coolers, broom closets, and public restrooms. Some stripclub dressing rooms are nice with lights, mirrors, vanities, and chairs, and are equipped with lockers, and tanning beds. Other clubs have make-up mirrors but no chairs or ashtrays to prevent dancers from lingering. Women complain that too many dressing rooms are down isolated halls or in the basements of establishments and that they have to scream for help when customers intrude. Some are so damp or filthy that the women cannot take their shoes off. Other dressing rooms are so frigid that dancers carry small space heaters to and from work. The dressing rooms are used to change costumes, drink, do drugs, do hair and make-up, iron costumes, do homework, bitch about customers, avoid customers, talk about problems, hang out. In strip joints and rural bars, women lay on blankets or inside sleeping bags between sets and nap and read.

The greatest response to questions regarding preparation for work was "drink". Women drink while getting ready to go to work and they drink while doing their hair and make-up once in the dressing room. Women who work at nude juice bars that do not serve alcohol or at bars that do not allow women to buy their own drinks report that they stop at another bar on their way in and "get loaded". Between stage sets and private dances, women drink some more, clean themselves with washcloths or babywipes after performing on a dirty stage or being touched by a lot of men, apply deodorant, and perfume their breasts and genitals.

PART 2: SURVEY DATA

One hundred percent of the eighteen women in the survey report being physically abused in the stripclub. The physical abuse ranged from three to fifteen times with a mean of 7.7 occurrences over the course of their involvement in stripping. One hundred percent of the eighteen women in this study report sexual abuse in the stripclub. The sexual abuse ranged from two to nine occurrences with a mean of 4.4 occurrences over the course of their involvement in stripping. One hundred percent of the women report verbal harassment in the stripclub. The verbal abuse ranged from one to seven occurrences with a mean of 4.8 occurrences over the course of their involvement in stripping. One hundred percent of the women report being propositioned for prostitution. Seventy eight percent of the women were stalked by someone associated with the stripclub with a range of one to seven incidents. Sixty one percent of the women report that someone associated with the stripclub has attempted to sexually assault her with a range of one to eleven attempts. Not only do women suffer the abuse they experience, all of women in the survey witnessed these things happen to other strippers in the clubs. The overwhelming trend for violence against women in stripclubs was committed by customers of the establishments. Stripclub owners, managers, assistant managers, and the staff of bartenders, music programmers or disc jockeys, bouncers, security guards, floorwalkers, doormen, and valet were significantly less involved in violence against the women. According to the women in this study, almost all of the perpetrators suffered no consequence whatsoever for their actions.

Physical Abuse

Customers spit on women, spray beer, and flick cigarettes at them. Strippers are pelted with ice, coins, trash, condoms, room keys, pornography, and golf balls. Men pitched a live guinea pig and a dead squirrel at two women in the survey. Some women have been hit with cans and bottles thrown from the audience. Customers pull women's hair, yank them by the arm or ankle, rip their costumes, and try to pull their costumes off. Women are commonly bitten, licked, slapped, punched, and pinched.

Table 1 - Physical Abuse

Abusive Action	Ever (by men in stripclub) (%)	At Least Once Every Day (%)	At Least Once Every Week (%)	At Least Once Every Month (%)	At Least Once Every Year (%)
Grabbed by arm	78	44 C 6 M 11 S	17 C 6 O 6 M 11 S	11 C 6 O 6 M	6 M
Grabbed by ankle	56	28 C		6 C 6 M	11 C
Grabbed by waist	94	50 C 6 M 11 S	33 C 11 M 11 S	6 M	11 C
Bitten	56	6 C	11 C		11 C
Licked	78	28 C	17 C	11 C 6 O 6 M 11 S	22 C
Slapped	39	6 C	11 C		17 C
Hair pulled	39	6 C	6 C	11 C
Punched	72	6 C
Pinched	72	17 C	17 C	6 C 6 M 6 S	22 C 6 S
Kicked	11	6 C
Spit on	61	6 C			28 C
Pulled costume off	83	22 C		6 C 6 O 6 M	22 C 6 S
Ripped costume	44	6 C		6 C	17 C
Flicked cigarette	33	6 C	6 C		11 C
Sprayed beer	39	6 C	6 C	6 C	6 C

Threw ice	61	6 C	11 C	6 C	6 C
Threw coins	83	17 C	11 C	11 C 6 S	28 C
Threw cans/glasses	22	6 C
Threw garbage	39	17 C	11 C
Threw other	28	11 C

N = 18 Key: C = customers, O = owners, M = managers , S = staff

Sexual Abuse

Stripclub customers frequently grab women's breasts, buttocks, and genitals. Customers often attempt and succeed at penetrating strippers vaginally and anally with their fingers, dollar bills, and bottles. Customers expose their penises, rub their penises on women, and masturbate in front of the women. Women in this study consistently connected lap dances to the sexual abuse they suffered in the club. "That's the first thing men try to do when they get close to you and always in a lap dance." Stripclub owners, managers, and staff also expect women to masturbate them and some have forced intercourse on strippers.

Table 2 - Sexual Abuse

Abusive Action	Ever (by men in stripclub) (%)	At Least Once Every Day (%)	At Least Once Every Week (%)	At Least Once Every Month (%)	At Least Once Every Year (%)
Grabbed breasts	94	28 C 6 M	17 C	17 C 6 M	17 C 6 O
Grabbed buttocks	89	39 C	11 C	39 C 6 M 6 S	6 O 6 S
Grabbed genitals	67	17 C		11 C 6 M	17 C
Exposed penis to her	67	11 C	6 C	6 C 6 O 6 M	33 C
Rubbed penis on her	78	39 C 6 M	22 C 6 O 6 M 6 S	6 C	22 C 6 O
Masturbated in front of her	78	33 C 6 M	11 C	28 C	6 C

N = 18 Key: C = customers, O = owners, M = managers, S = staff

Table 3 - Sexual Abuse

Abusive Action	Experienced Attempted Abuse (%)	Experienced Successfully Completed Abuse (%)
Penetrate her vaginally with fingers	61 C 6 M	39
Penetrate her anally with fingers	33 C	17
Penetrate her with object	33 C 6 O	11
Force her to masturbate him	28 C 6 O 6 M	17
Force intercourse on her	17 C 6 O 6 M	11

N = 18 Key: C = customers, O = owners, M = managers, S = staff

Verbal Abuse

Customers, owners, managers, and staff alike engage in harassing namecalling. Women are continually called "cunt, "whore", "pussy", "slut", and "bitch". Women in this study charge that men in the stripclub called them other demeaning or degrading names like ugly, looser, fat, pregnant, boy, stupid, crack, slash, snatch, beaver, dog, dyke, lezzie, brown eye, hooters, junkie, crackhead, and shit.

Forty four percent of the women report that men associated with the stripclub have threatened to hurt them physically. These women report from three to 150 threats during their involvement in stripping. Threats range from verbal threats of slaps, ass whippings, and rapes to physical postures of punching and back hand slapping. "When I wouldn't let a customer grab on me, he would call me a bitch and threaten to kick my ass or rape me." "When a customer grabs and the woman and the girl takes action, they threaten".

Table 4 Verbal Abuse – Namecalling

Abusive Action	Ever (by men in stripclub) (%)	At Least Once Every Day (%)	At Least Once Every Week (%)	At Least Once Every Month (%)	At Least Once Every Year (%)
Called "cunt"	61	28 C 6 M	6 C	17 C	11 C 6 M
Called "slut"	61	28 C 6 S	6 C	17 C 6 O 6 M 6 S	11 C
Called "whore"	78	28 C 6 S	6 C	17 C 6 O 6 M 6 S	22 C
Called "pussy"	72	39 C 6 S	11 C	11 C	11 C
Called "bitch"	89	39 C 6 S	11 C 6 O 6 M 6 S	6 C	22 C 6 M
Called other	56	17 C	6 C	17 C 6 M	6 C

N = 18 Key: C = customers, O = owners, M = managers, S = staff

Stalking

Men associated with stripclubs repeatedly attempt to contact the women against their wishes. Strippers are followed home and stalked by stripclub customers. Customers telephone, write letters, send gifts, and follow the women around against their wishes. Women recount stories of catching customers following them to fitness clubs, parks and lakes, day care centers, and even lesbian bars. They describe times when customers have broken into their homes and taken underwear, hairbrushes, and family photographs. Women say that other customers have used their jobs at the telephone company or within the criminal justice system to target the women. The women complain that customers also have followed them home masturbating while driving in the next lane. Women who travel the strip circuit to rural areas report that customers and stripclub owners, managers, and staff alike follow women from city to city and state to state. Furthermore, local men in small towns harass the visiting women by calling and knocking on the doors of the motel rooms and have been caught peeping in the windows of strippers' motel rooms.

Twelve percent of the women who reported being followed to their cars further reported that they were robbed (5.6 %), beaten (11.1%), threatened with a weapon (5.6%), verbally sexually harassed (66.7%), and sexually assaulted (16.7%) by customers. A customer who claimed he was in love with the woman followed her to her car, called her a "fucking cunt" and strangled her hard enough to cause blood to squirt from her neck.

Table 5 - Stalking

Abusive Action	Ever (by men in stripclub) (%)	Range of occurrences
Sent her letters against her wishes	28	3-100 times
Sent her gifts against her wishes	22	2-100 times
Called her home against her wishes	39	2-360 times
Followed her home against her wishes	56	2-500 times
Followed her to her car against her wishes	67	12-500 times
Followed her around on her private time	28	1-150 times
Followed her from club to club, city, and state	28	6-360 times
Other	28	1-360 times

N = 18

Sexual Exploitation

Only a minority of women report that they were asked to perform sexual acts on men associated with the stripclub in order to return to work (11% by owners); as a condition of being hired (11% by managers, 11% by owners); in order to continue working there (17% by owners); in order to get a better schedule (6% by owners); or for drugs (17% by customers, 11% by managers, 22% by owners, 11% by staff).

A majority of the women, however, report they were asked to perform sexual acts on men associated with the stripclub for money (100% by customers, 6% by managers, 17% by owners, 11% by staff). Customers and pimps constantly proposition women (Boles and Garbin 1974; Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; Ronai 1992; Ronai and Ellis 1989). Fourteen (78%) women from the survey report they are propositioned for prostitution every day by customers, three (17%) every week, one (6 %) every year. Women comment that customers ask them "Do you date?" all night long. "Infinite…too many too count." Women say that prostitution is influenced and suggested by management. One woman new to stripping was dumbfounded at how little money she was making taking her clothes off, so she asked the manager for his advice on increasing tips. He suggested turning tricks and said he could help her set up dates. Management sets up tricks, says it is good for business, and obligates women to turn over money from prostitution to the club. Women say prostitution is promoted even though owners tell women they would be punished if they turn tricks. Some stripclubs are notorious for promoting prostitution. "You have to be a 'ho to work there".

Women disclosed that they were recruited into prostitution through stripping. Although the strip industry markets stripping as something other than prostitution, some women consider prostitution an extension of stripping and stripping a form of prostitution. Pimps season women first with stripping and then turn them out into brothels or escort services for more money. Tricks, sugar daddies, pimps, and drug dealers in the stripclub seek to engage women in prostitution. Another young woman said that soon after she became involved in stripping, a pimp who posed as a customer in the stripclub manipulated her into an escort service by promising that she could make more money in less time simply by accompanying businessmen to dinner. She agreed in order to feed her crack addiction and as her addiction increased she slid down from gentlemen's clubs to escort service to brothel to street and crack house prostitution.

Not only are women in stripping pressured by customers to perform sexual acts on them, owners, managers, and staff pressure the women to perform sexual acts on them, their relatives and associates, on vice officers and police officers. Women explain the pressure could range from being coerced into dancing for the intended with an expectation to put on a real good show with special treatment, extra time, and sexual contact, to engaging in prostitution. Strippers, like other subordinates in worker-management relationships, respond with obedience to directives from management and others with authority (McMahon 1989).

Table 6 - Sexual Exploitation

Recipient	Pressured by customer (%)	Pressured by owner (%)	Pressured by manager (%)	Pressured by staff (%)	Pressured by vice officer (%)	Pressured by police officer (%)
Owner's friend		39
Owner's relative		11
Owner's business associate		33
Manager's friend			17
Manager's relative			6
Manager's business associate			11
Customer	72	22	17	6
Vice officer		17	11	6	11
Police officer		17	11	6		22

N = 18

PART 3: WOMEN'S THOUGHTS ON STRIPPING

Women in stripping are overwhelmingly motivated by the promise of wealth or a will to survive (McCaghy and Skipper 1970; Ronai 1992; Thompson and Harred 1992). Stripclub owners, managers, pimps and the media portray stripping as a glamorous way to earn big money fast and use this strategy to lure young women into stripping. Women in this study report the best part of stripping to be the money. "The only part that keeps me there is the money". At the same time, women are trapped and disappointed by the money. "I hated it…but glad I had it at the time for the income." "Women are reduced to exposing genitals for $1 bills." "It pays the bills… if we could pay bills another way we would." "The bar owners and management are exploitative, they steal money." "It's hard to get out because of the money." With respect to the money strippers seek to earn, they in turn must pay out fines, kickbacks, 100% of their social security insurance and taxes, travel and hotel expenses, and the costs for costumes, tanning, and plastic surgery. Women report that they have to have the right attitude to make money (Ronai 1992). This ordinarily was described as being drunk, high or numb (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997). Others feel it required tolerance. "The ability to ignore customers for just being there." Most women say it is easier when the men are tipping regularly and when they do not have to interact with men intimately. Women acknowledge that strippers measure their worth according to the amount of tips they earn and that they want attention, acceptance, and approval from the customers because it brings money (Futterman 1992).

Women in stripping feel it doesn't take much skill to be a stripper (Forsyth and Deshotels 1997; McCaghy and Skipper 1970). "It would be nice to say women need dance talent but it's not true." "Tits, pussy, and blonde hair is all it takes." Instead they referred to dissociation to abuse. "It takes a willingness to do it…anybody can do it." "It takes somebody who can shut themselves off and be really fake." "…the ability to take a lot of abuse." They state a stripper needs a good head on her shoulders, an open mind, guts, strength, and survival skills. They believe they need abuse counseling, a lifeline from the "outside world", and education about what's really going on. "Need to know they have options, that they aren't always going to be a 'ho'." Women in stripping want a union to protect strippers, decent working conditions, fair treatment, and an end to cruelty by management. Lastly, strippers think that women and girls don't know what they are getting into when they first start dancing. "It's really harmful because it is so benign, so accepted." "Girls think they will have fun dancing and get paid, they have no idea they have to fight men's hands, and dicks, and tongues, and then fight for every fucking dollar bill you earn." "It was a lot different than I originally thought."

The women in this study condemn the men associated with stripping and the impact stripping has on them as the worst parts of stripping. Women do not like the way customers treat them (Thompson and Harred 1992). Furthermore they say they do not like talking to customers, asking men for money, and resent having to have to deal with them at all. They find customers irritating because they are drunk and have negative attitudes towards women. Women characterize customers as scum, psycho mama's boys, rapists and child molesters, old perverted men, idiots, assholes, and pigs. Strippers are largely disgusted by customers and describe them as pitiful and pathetic, stupid and ignorant, sick, controlling and abusive. "They smell so sour, they breathe very heavy and kind of wheeze when women are near." "They are weak abusers who have to subordinate women and girls to feel like a man." "I see my dad. They're old enough to be my father." "Yuck. I am repulsed by the sight, sound, smell, and touch of them." "I'm embarrassed for them." The women offer insightful evaluations of stripclub customers. They say that these men do not know how to communicate. Moreover, they perceive that customers are out of control, have power and abuse problems, and will do anything to degrade women because they hate women. Strippers also state that customers want a free show and think women are cheap. In contrast, a few women positively perceived some customers as nice and added they are thankful to those who tip well.

Women in this study undoubtedly denounce stripclub owners as pimps and "glorified pimps" and maintain that owners misuse power and are sick. The women also label managers as pimps citing that they mistreat women, that they make every attempt to take money from the women, and that they are sick because they are affiliated with the industry and know the harm they do. Strippers accuse managers of being threatened and jealous of the money women make and that women are just a dollar to management. Finally, women refer to staff music programmers, doormen, bartenders, bouncers, floorwalkers, and valet as wanna-be pimps because they always want to be tipped. The women see staff as derelicts who can't get a job anywhere else and who think they are cool for working in a stripclub. Strippers perceive staff as creepy and disrespectful and as "looky-lous" who just want to look at naked women for free. Women criticize staff by pointing out that at least owners are making big money. Few women had positive responses, but those that did felt they got along well with staff and had no real hard feelings.

Clearly strippers' attitudes about men are impacted by the activities in stripclubs. Women say they don't like men and men are worthless. Likewise women believe stripping inhibits their ability to be involved in a normal relationship. "It affects your lovelife and feelings about men." "Nice boyfriends can't handle it." "Too large a percentage of men fit into category of customer and I do not want to hate men."

Women in this study expressed mostly negativism regarding their experiences in stripping with themes of abuse, deception, drugs, and low self-esteem. "I would never do it again. It was degrading." "No doubt that it led me to prostitution and my pimp." "Taught me how to control men and gave me a false illusion of control. Takes a long time to regain self-control." "Don't do it. Once you do it, it is hard to get out." "If there is any way you can avoid it…it is hard to get out once you start." "I wouldn't recommend it. It is too stressful and I am always comparing myself to other women on the outside." "I wish I had put more money away and had more education by the time I quit. I just didn't know it wasn't about success for us, it was about using us." "I spent my entire young adulthood being abused. It is hard to undo all this." "Drugs destroyed beautiful, healthy women." "I blame the men…it is all bad. I didn't think highly of myself while I was in stripping, but I am glad I got out of it by standing up for myself." "It is hard to view myself for who I am and my accomplishments rather than how I look and attention from men. I got this from stripping."

Some women expressed fascination with stripping. "It has been an experience of a lifetime. I've seen everything…some crazy shit." "I have never seen things like I have seen in stripping. It is weird." Still others felt positively about their experience. "If it wasn't for the money I made at it, I would have nothing right now. "It has its ups and downs, but I always enjoy the music and dancing and the attention." "I have been extremely fortunate as far as what happened in stripping. It provides a good life, but I look at it as a job, work day shifts and work a straight job at the same time." A few women also determined positive outcomes for themselves from their involvement in stripping. "It served its purpose as a group for a sense of belonging." "Helped me recognize what is right and wrong, and what is right and wrong for me." "After surviving it I felt strong." "Stripping distracted me from my personal problems that led me into stripping…no way could I have held normal job with the problems I had."

Above all, women in stripping reject the popular image of stripping and clarify the common misperceptions about stripclubs. "That no one touches you, women enjoy it, and it's okay for men to go there." "That women actually get to wear a costume and actually get to dance." "That we get sexually aroused doing this." "That men are there to have harmless fun, when they are really there to abuse women." "That it is a big party and that the women want to be there for some reason other than money, like sex or to meet men or because they are nudists or exhibitionists." "That you are doing things you want to be doing." "That they are not degrading us because girls always are justifying it with college." "That it is not prostitution." "That it is glamorous, fast money, easy work, way to get ahead."

DISCUSSIONS AND CONCLUSIONS

Men associated with stripclubs use force and coercion to establish sexual contact with women in stripping, proposition women for prostitution, intentionally inflict bodily harm upon the women, and expose themselves to the women. These actions are prohibited by law, yet when these crimes are committed against women in stripclubs, the general attitude that strippers deserve what they get prevails. Women's complaints of abuse are met with contempt and are dismissed by owners, managers, and staff. Women are customarily told to ignore abuse and have been rebuffed with "Go bend over and do your job" and "You have to expect a certain amount of that." In the case of women in stripping, enduring sexual violence is part of her job description. Women in stripping are expected to endure these abuses, degradations, and humiliations with a smile and a "Thank You".

The degree of sexual violence perpetrated against strippers explodes the myths about stripping as harmless entertainment. The verbal harassment, physical and sexual abuse, and financial exploitation women suffer in stripclubs is unparalleled in any other legitimate workplace. Women in stripping are subject to actions that would be perceived as assaultive or a least unwanted in any other context or were directed against other women. Stripclubs allow men to use and abuse women in a manner that is not tolerated in any other business.

The organization and conditions of stripclubs not only produce and reproduce gender inequality, but facilitate and normalize men's violence against women. Sexual violence has been normalized, institutionalized, and legalized in the stripclub industry as socially sanctioned male behavior. Stripclubs and the men associated with stripclubs have turned acts of violence into entertainment and tied male sexual pleasure to victimizing and exploiting. Stripclubs are structured according to male domination and control, and are inherently violent. It is impossible to set up stripclubs without sexual violence and that is reason to challenge the legitimacy of stripclubs.

Future research should address men associated with stripclubs and their views on women in stripping and stripclub activities. An exploration of why stripclubs exist, an explanation of why men go to stripclubs, and a description of how stripclub owners and government policy establish the tone and culture of stripclubs are also in order. Future research should explore gender role socialization and female strippers' perceptions of sexual harassment and violence. The definition of sexual harassment should be tested with strippers to learn if they perceive actions differently than women in other workplaces. In turn, strippers' rights in the workplace must be considered. Studies focused on women's emotional and psychological response, including drug and alcohol abuse, to violence in stripclubs should be conducted.

REFERENCES

Boles, Jacqueline and A.P. Garbin. 1974. "The Strip Club and Stripper-Customer Patterns of Interaction." Sociology and Social Research 58:136-144.

Ciriello, Sarah. 1993. "Commodification of Women: Morning, Noon, and Night." Pp. 264-281 in Transforming A Rape Culture, eds. Emille Buchwald, Pamela Fletcher, and Martha Roth. Minneapolis MN, Milkweed Editions.

Cooke, Amber. 1987. "Stripping: Who Calls the Tune?" Pp. 92-99 in Good Girls, Bad Girls: Feminists and Sex Trade Workers Face to Face, ed. Laurie Bell. Toronto: Seal Press, pp. 92-99.

Enck, Graves E. and James D. Preston. 1988. "Counterfeit Intimacy: A Dramaturgical Analysis of an Erotic Performance." Deviant Behavior 9:369-381.

Fischer, Carrie Benson. 1996. "Employee Rights in Sex Work: The Struggle for Dancers' Rights as Employees." Law & Inequality: A Journal of Theory and Practice, 14, pp. 521-554.

Forsyth, Craig and Tina Deshotels. 1997. "The Occupational Milieu of the Nude Dancer." Deviant Behavior 18:125-142.

Futterman, Marilyn. 1992. Dancing Naked in the Material World. Buffalo, NY: Prometheus Books.

Hamel, Jacques. 1993. Case Study Methods. Newbury Park, CA: Sage Publications.

Hanmer, Jalna, Jill Radford and Elizabeth Stanko. 1989. Women, Policing, and Male Violence. International Perspectives. London: Routledge.

Hearn, Jeff. 1994. "The Organization(s) of Violence: Men, Gender Relations, Organizations, and Violences." Human Relations 47:731-754.

Kelly, Liz. 1987. "The Continum of Sexual Violence". Pp 46-60 in Women, Violence, and Social Control, eds. Jalna Hanmer and Mary Maynard. Atlantic Highlands, NJ: Humanities Press International.

Mattson, Heidi. 1995. Ivy League Stripper. New York, NY: Arcade Publishing.

McCaghy, Charles and James K. Skipper. 1970. "Stripteasers: The Anatomy and Career Contingencies of a Deviant Occupation." Social Problems 17:391-405.

McMahon, Christopher. 1989. “Managerial Authority.” Ethics 100:33-53.

Peretti, Peter.O. and Patrick O’Connor. 1989. “Effects of Incongruence Between The Perceived Self and the Ideal Self on Emotional Stability of Stripteasers.” Social Behavior and Personality 17:81-92.

Prewitt, Terry J. 1989. “Like a Virgin: The Semiotics of Illusion in Erotic Performance.” The American Journal of Semiotics 6:137-152.

Reed, Stacy. 1997. “All Stripped Off.” Pp. 179-188 in Whores and Other Feminists, ed. Jill Nagle. New York, NY: Routledge.

Reid, Scott A., Jonathon A. Epstein and D. E. Benson. 1994. "Role Identity in a Devalued Occupation: The Case of Female Exotic Dancers." Sociological Focus 27:1-27.

Ronai, Carol Rambo and Carolyn Ellis. 1989. “Turn-ons for Money: Interactional Strategies of the Table Dancer.” Journal of Contemporary Ethnography 18:271-298.

Ronai, Carol Rambo. 1992. “The Reflective Self Through Narrative: A Night in the Life of an Exotic Dancer Researcher”, in Investigating Subjectivity: Research on Lived Experience, eds. Carolyn Ellis and Michael Flaherty. Newbury Park, CA: Sage, pp. 102-24.

Ronai, Carol Rambo, Barbara A. Zsembik, and Joe R. Feagin. 1997. Everyday Sexism in the Third Millenium. New York, NY: Routledge.

Thompson, William E. and Jackie L. Harred. 1992. "Topless Dancers: Managing Stigma in a Deviant Occupation." Deviant Behavior 13:291-311.

Testimony of David Sherman

Former Midwest Manager of Deja Vu

Sexually Oriented Businesses: An Insider's View

Testimony before the Michigan House Committee -- Ethics and Constitutional Law
January 12, 2000

The National Organization Against Lewd Activities (N.O.A.L.A.)
1-800-552-1901

Having been involved in the Adult Entertainment Industry for fourteen years, I am very aware of the consequences this business can have on all involved. Over the years, I've seen friendships, families, and lives destroyed.

Much of the activity of the adult entertainment industry is illegal and criminal. In addition, there are tremendous negative effects on entertainers, communities, local businesses, as well as families.

The following, for your information, are some of my personal experiences with the Adult Entertainment Industry.

Right from the start, drug and alcohol use is rampant. The dancers call it partying. They don't realize that they are medicating themselves in order to do the work they do. Also, the abortion rate is extremely high due to the fact that most have lost contact with family members due to what they do. They also feel they could never take the chance on flawing the body from carrying a child. Additionally, the dancers believe they have no way to support a baby without dancing, and therefore can't quit to have one. Basically, they are caught in a very real, painful "Catch-22."

The girls, if they have never danced, are usually extremely against it and most of the time are hired as waitresses, even though waitresses are not needed. This makes the atmosphere become part of their life. At this point, they see it as a job -- not as stripping -- and are converted quite easily to dancing. Once dancing, they get used to being objectified. It becomes as important to them to hear how beautiful they are 200 times a day as it is to actually make the money from the dancing.

Between the use of drugs to medicate what they do and hearing how beautiful they are all the time, they soon experience what I call "BDA" Basic Dancer Attitude. This is when the dancer thinks that no matter what friends, children, husband, and families think about her, it doesn't matter. They can all be replaced because all of the patrons around her find her attractive, beautiful, and idolized. Now the dancers are truly caught in the "adult" scene. With friends and family gone from their lives, they exist alone in this dark, subculture of sex, drugs, alcohol, and prostitution. All of this perverse living, to the dancer, is now just part of her normal lifestyle.

After a couple of years at this level, the dancer realizes she is getting older and attempts to fit back into society. She tries boyfriends, school, or really anything to cling to what is "normal." Realizing that she cannot live in both worlds, she returns to the subculture of the Adult Business, actually despising the real world. This leads to more dependency on drugs and alcohol, which now makes her 100% lost to this life. The dancers will continue living like this until they realize they can no longer stay at their "current level" and keep making money and getting the compliments. Once they realize this, they begin to master more perverse things to make cash, to make up for fading looks and dancer burnout.

The cycle then becomes even more vicious with depression, drugs, alcohol, and body mutilation to stay thin. Finally, they realize they can no longer keep up with the new and younger girls and leave, going to one of five places:

1. They go to a very filthy, nasty club that's full of girls in their position. Here they perform and do some of the most vile and filthy acts you can imagine to make money.

2. Some turn to prostitution, meeting customers outside of the club. The club now becomes a place for them to meet new "clients."

3. Some marry just to be able to survive. But the addictions to drugs and alcohol normally shatters and destroys these relationships.

4. Some actually do break away and go to school to become productive citizens, but the frequency of this is around 1 of 50.

5. They become society's throw-away people -- people used up, degraded, abused, and even sold by the people who own these establishments.

Sadly, these young ladies, over time -- little by little -- become manipulated, controlled, and finally destroyed by a world that our communities have closed their eyes to. Thinking back, there are three girls that seem to stand out rather clearly as examples of what can -- and often times does -- happen to a young, innocent woman who naively gets sucked into the sexually oriented business industry.

1. She was a pretty, intelligent twenty-year-old girl who came into the business as a waitress. She was, from what I could see, from the upper middle class and a loving Christian family. She attended Bowling Green State University in Ohio and was fluent in several languages, plus carried a 3.8 grade point average. She soon became interested in stripping. She started dancing and very quickly got caught up in the lifestyle of drugs, alcoholism, and lesbianism. I watched her life deteriorate for about two years. She has, as far as I know, gone on to graduate from school. But still after five years, she has not left this subculture and only fallen deeper into it.

2. This young lady was also a nice, nineteen-year-old pharmacy major at the University of Toledo in Ohio. She too started as a waitress and soon converted to dancing. Her family was from Cleveland and were paying all of her schooling and housing. She was from a wealthy family who owned several businesses from construction to restaurants. After about eight months, her family found out what she was doing and did everything in their power to get her to quit. But by this time, she was making enough money and doing enough drugs to think she could handle life on her own. Her family lost all contact, and she lost all control. She disappeared into this subculture and I haven't heard of her since, and that has been over three years ago.

3. Another young victim was a medical student from the University of Toledo. Her husband of only a couple of weeks worked in one of these adult clubs. Being newlyweds, they needed money, but she did not want to dance. Soon after waitressing, she easily converted to dancing. The life quickly consumed her. She moved to St. Louis for her medical career but soon quit school and started dancing at a club there. Divorce quickly followed, and she went on to California doing drugs and making XXX films. I recently learned she has contracted AIDS after about two years in the pornography film business and is now working in a fast food restaurant in San Diego.

THE MANAGER'S ROLE

As far as female employees in adult entertainment nightclubs – everyone that is hired is treated as a potential dancer. It really doesn't matter if she's hired as a waitress, hostess, or even a bartender.

First, you must make the girl feel at home in an environment that is so abnormal that most people have to be made comfortable. In fact, you could almost say they have to be "hardened' to the club life. This is easily accomplished by working there as many hours as possible and by having all of the staff treat them as if they were long lost friends. It's important for the management to do this also.

Second, after a few weeks, because the girl is now your friend, as a manager you bring up how short you are on girls that night or how short the amateur contestants are. You ask them to please help, that they don't need to take their clothes off, but the club just needs an extra body. Usually, they happily agree to do this. You then have them change into dancing attire, usually a skimpy dress, a teddy, g-string or a t-bar (which is a very small pair of panties). Often, the girls -- having become used to the environment and having seen nudity daily -- are intoxicated with the sense of being on stage and are lured out of their clothing by the other girls, customers, and promises of large tips.

Now at this point, the manager's job just starts. But if the girl has not taken her clothes off, the manager again has to start in on her about needing more help on the floor. Again, most of the girls will agree to help the manager out. At this time, you tell them that things are not that busy, and you take them out for dinner, "my treat." Of course, the club always writes this off! So you go out, have some drinks, and small talk with the girl. Returning to the club, she now believes that you're good friends, plus she is under the influence of alcohol. At this point, she easily disrobes on the customers request, with the other girls welcoming a new dancer into their ranks. The experienced dancers will then go on about how beautiful she is and how much money she'll make.

Of course, even now, she still might have not disrobed. But, by this point, you are her friend and can make her feel guilty about not helping out more and ask her to please disrobe, as without her, you'll not make much money that night. She is needed. People who need her and customers who tell her how beautiful she is surround her.

She now experiences a variety of emotions, and being human, needs to be needed. With this emotion fulfilled, she finds herself wanting to be complimented -- which she is -- and she wants to make money -- which she can. You then play on the "what more can a girl want?" and the subject of self-worth never really comes up.

At this point, if she still has not disrobed, you let her know you no longer need her for her position, but dancing is open if she wishes to still work at the club. This does not work unless she has incurred debts and needs the money, or she actually enjoyed the experience and doesn't want to lose her new friends. If she stays, the manager must start training her to be a professional. This means changing almost everything about her, including her personality. She must now be a passive/aggressive if she is to survive. This means that she needs to learn to say whatever it takes to make money. She can never talk about her personal life to anyone, as clients can hear this.

What you try to do is get the girls programmed to have regular customers. A regular customer is a customer who believes that this girl actually cares for him, and now his fantasy world is complete. He comes in on a regular basis, and she invites him back on certain days and times as to not interfere with other regular customers. This is usually set for the club's slow times because when it's busy, she can make money without her regular clientele. Of course, with all of these girls having regular clients, the club is guaranteed a steady income and solid revenues. The club regulars are usually family men looking for an escape from the real world, and the girls are taught to prey upon them.

Mandatory meetings are set for all the girls. This time is really used mostly for programming the girls and getting into their heads. You again let them know what you want and motivate them by whatever it takes. Soon the new dancer starts running around with the more hardened and seasoned girls, and they realize how much easier this job is being drunk, high, or more often than not, both. By now she's working until 2 a.m., staying out all night, partying after work, and then grabbing a breakfast with the girls. They wake up, go to work, and the cycle starts all over.

They have no time to go to the post office, the dentist, or any other "normal" things. They are deep into the club scene and on the road to hard times and even self-destruction. At this point, school, family, and friends -- as well as everything else they once had -- has faded into a world that no longer exists for them.

As a manager, at this point, anything you say, ask, or demand of the girl will gladly be done because the club is now her home. The girls don't realize this is their only world now, and the club manager now has total control over what's going on in their lives. The girls will even put up with degradation, verbal and emotional abuse, and everything else the manager wants to do.

At this time the girl may feel fed up and leave, going to a new club thinking to herself that she finally made a decision on her own and things will be better. But she is really just fooling herself. Now the manager at the new club does the same things except now she has no friends to talk to. And the manager knows that most of the time she cannot return to the old club, so he abuses her even worse than the first manager. Of course, she then drinks more and gets high more than ever, hoping it will go away. It will only get worse for her now.

Soon the dancer finds herself not being complimented as much or making the money she did at first. Because of the drugs and alcohol, she finds herself aging fast and losing her looks. Of course, this now leads to a downward spiral of more drinking, partying and drugs. Many opt for plastic surgery in one form or another because in their own eyes, their looks are what they are worth. With most people, if they gained weight or lost their tan, it would not be a problem. But to a dancer, it would be devastating for them for days and even weeks and beyond.

CUSTOMERS

I've found that there are five categories, or groups of customers that visit the clubs.

1. The first customer, usually 28 to 50, is married or recently divorced. He almost always becomes not only a pornography addict but also a "fantasy" addict. He is lured in for just a glimpse of the "other side." But once he is there, the well-trained dancer learns his weaknesses and strengths, and knowing what buttons to push, soon has him as her "regular." He is soon here three to four times a week, seeing only one dancer, believing she is is girlfriend while being friends with most of the dancers. After awhile, he may not come in on his lunch hour but after work before he goes home to his family. Soon bills are not being paid and clothes for his children are not being bought. I've seen them believe that this girl so deeply cares for him, that he will try and borrow money from her. I've also seen regulars leave a five-year-old child locked out in the car in the parking lot for hours while they lived out their fantasies. Also, I watched a patron cause a fatal accident outside of the club. While waiting for the authorities, he walked into the club to see his "girlfriend' who was dancing that night. Those are just a few examples of how physically and emotionally tied to the club these people become. Unfortunately, this group usually makes up about 30% of the entire group, but about 85% of the groups daytime traffic and 20% of the nightime. I could write pages on customer number one as far as bad decisions he makes trying to carry on his "love affair" with dancers.

2. Customer two is the young adult 18 to 30 there for a bachelor party, birthday, college party, and so on. A lot of these never come back except for special occasions. But a small percentage will become a regular, being addicted from day one. About 15% of these will return again and again to the club. This group makes up about 20% of the overall club business.

3. Customer three is the majority of your night business. He is 25 to 30, comes in maybe once or twice a month, and either feels a friendship there or maybe has a need being fulfilled. He continues to teeter-totter on the edge of becoming a regular #1. It only takes the right girl or the right experience, and he easily falls into that category.

4. Customer four is the gentleman 45 to 70 or the 18 to 25 age bracket. He comes in only once in a great while for special events, special entertainers or business meetings. He usually makes up the rest of the 15% of the dayshift business and the minority of your night shift unless he is there for a special event. Most of the time, this will be the only time you see him. A very small percentage of these will become a number one customer.

5. The fifth, and most dangerous customer, is the person there merely for business, selling, giving, and using the girls in his drug trade. Many clubs have several of these people all intertwined together in this dark world. They pull the life from and inflict pain not only on the girls, but their families as well. With girls wanting and needing drugs, number five has them in his control as well as the club. He becomes a friendly face everyone wants to see. The bad thing is, many girls owe him money, so he either makes them another bad deal (drawing the girl in deeper), or brings her to his world altogether to be a pusher, be involved in a biker gang, or give himself sexually to a small group of dealers. The sad thing is, the girl will feel like she is among friends and will try to drag others into this dark world with her.

OVERALL INSIDER OBSERVATIONS

Having been in the Adult Entertainment Industry for years, I have seen everything from monies not being entered into registers to owners leaving with shoeboxes full of cash on a weekly basis. I have walked into clubs and witnessed 15-year-old girls working -- with their parent's knowledge. I've seen girls leave with customers, meet them outside, as well as literally perform sex acts while lap dancing for customers. Again, the bar may pay an employee to watch for this, but the girls pay them more not to see it. If these are "clean upstanding businesses," why is it that day after day used condoms were found in V.I.P. rooms?

The owners many times hide themselves by owning several corporations, one of which will finally own the club. Many times in liquor clubs, the liquor license is not even in an owner's name, but a manager who was given stock to do this.

Even though the girls are private contractors, the clubs do have contracts with both stage names and real names on them. The clubs hire people to count every lap dance done in order to collect the percentage for the club, but yet the clubs claim there is no way to keep track of what the girls make. In turn, this allows the girls not to file taxes and also be on Federal and State Aid programs, even though she may be making hundreds and thousands of dollars weekly.

Again the clubs claim the girls are private contractors, but many are told when they will work which makes them employees.

As far as the clubs themselves following written law, I have copies of a Judgement Entry that ever since the day it was handed down has not been followed nor enforced. The club owner himself said not to follow it. This club also is part of a very large club chain.

Maybe the reason that it has not been enforced is that a lot of local law enforcement not only frequent these businesses, but also date the entertainers. This is true as well of firemen and city officials who all get in free. In fact, not long ago in a club in Detroit, an off-duty police officer lost his gun and could not find it. Another became mad at this girlfriend who was a dancer. Upon leaving, he discharged his gun into the door, hitting the owner of the club in his face.

Violence does occur. Once during a dancers' meeting, the manager had upset one of the girls who happened to be a member of a gang. She had him beaten up badly following the meeting.

Another manager tried to force himself on an entertainer. Again, her boyfriend belonged to a gang, and a bomb threat, as well as violence, occurred at the club. He was not terminated but merely sent to another club.

Another manager literally held a gun to a girl's head because she wanted to quit. He was still employed for years after that. Again, another manager went on a rampage in a hotel, and while he was there, discharged a firearm. He was simply moved to another location and is now in prison for attempted rape.

As far as the argument that the girls are only putting themselves through school, that is a farce. Very few of these even attend classes once they are making the kind of money that they do. Soon they are working until 2, 3 or 4 a.m.; and in no way, shape, or form are they getting up and going to classes. Very few of these girls finish school.

Another dimension to the concern surrounding sex clubs is the rampant tax evasion maneuvers exercised by the various employees.

TAX EVASION AND THE SEX CLUB EMPLOYEE

DJ

These people are paid in most clubs hourly; but as well as their hourly wages, the dancers are made to tip them nightly. Usually the tip is 10 percent of what the girl made that evening; and the DJ keeps track of how many dances the girls have done to insure his cut. Example: If there are, say, 30 girls working a night shift and the average tip to the DJ is, let's go low and say $15; then in cash income, the DJ just made $450. This income is generally not reported as the DJ receives his regular paycheck and usually only claims that.

DOORMEN

Again, in most clubs the girls are required to tip the doormen out, as he walks them to and from the parking lot and tries to ensure their safety in the club as well. While the tips are not as good as the DJ's, the doormen still could average $60 nights. Five nights a week figures out to $300 weekly in pretty much unreported income.

FLOORWALKERS

These are the people who count dances for the clubs to make sure that the girls pay the 33 percent they are required to the club for every dance done. These also are the same ones that are responsible for watching to make sure the girls are not doing things outside the line of the law. They make tips by turning their heads to illegal dances. In turn, the girls tip them better for letting them make more money by dancing a little more dirty then legal. I have seen floorwalkers leave with as much as $600 in one night. Again, they receive a paycheck so reporting the extra income generally does not happen. The truly bad thing about a dishonest floorwalker is if one girl is paying him to dance dirty, soon all girls have to. In order to make any money at all, they too must alter the dances they do to illegal ones.

DANCERS

I would say that by far the dancer is the worse offender of tax evasion in the clubs as she generally has nothing in her name and reports very little, if any, of her income. The dancers with children generally are on federal and state welfare programs collecting food stamps, checks, and insurance while making hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars a week or more.

BARTENDERS/WAITRESSES

This group is probably the least tipped by the dancers, but again most clubs require that the dancers do tip. The reasoning behind all this tipping is it lets the club owners pay bottom dollar for help but yet the employees make good money due to the tipping program.

MANAGERS

The managers, on the other hand, are not tipped; but in a lot of cases, if a girl does something wrong or doesn't show up for work, he will fine her. In turn, most of the time that money never makes it to the register but directly into his pocket. The clubs know of this. That's how they get by with paying some managers as little as $7 an hour. Again this money never gets reported as it too is untraceable cash.

I could easily fill an entire book with what I've observed in the Adult Pornography Industry. I've seen countless lives shattered and unbelievable heartache. You would be surprised at the amount of "it can't happen to me" or "I won't be like that" that I have heard.

I've formed National Association Against Lewd Activities (N.O.A.L.A.) with a few others to educate the public as to the manner in which these so-called Adult Clubs are sucking in well-intentioned young people, seeking quick bucks for survival. Unwittingly, the demands brought on by the abusive lifestyle leads to the degradation, if not the destruction, of themselves and countless others.

But it isn't enough just to educate the public. It is vital that this committee recognizes that it is the role of government to ensure the public health, safety, and welfare of its citizenry. My testimony here today represents merely a tip of the iceberg. What I have described is not just what occurs in one pornography outlet in some large city far away, but this IS the manner in which all pornography outlets operate from the six various Deja Vu's in Michigan (Saginaw, Lansing, Kalamazoo, Flint, Ypsilanti, Port Huron) to the scores of other similar outlets operating under various names from Sensations to Showgirls to Velvet Fingers, etc., etc.

Background checks, licensing as well as enforcing regulations, are essential for the safety of clients, entertainers, and communities.

LOBBYING - TO AVOID RESTRICTIONS

Adult entertainment businesses use lobbying as a key to keeping new ordinances or legislation from being passed. This plays a very important role in allowing them to run these businesses the way THEY want to.

Large turnouts by entertainers, owners, owners reps, as well as attorneys, law students, and even the A.C.L.U. at times are used to intimidate those in local government and to keep the new legislation from passing -- by making the government body think that masses have formed on their own, when in actuality they have been pulled together by a team of people paid to do just that.

Another thing not touched on is that in every club in the state where the new legislation is being considered there are signature cards for the patrons to sign as well as information giving times and locations of hearings.

In fact, one company I worked for had this down to a fine art. Every manager was required to attend all city council meetings in order to stay on top of any new legislation being proposed. They then were to buy the minutes from the meeting and fax or send them to the corporate office. If any new legislation was proposed, that information went to the person who was in charge of lobbying and to the corporate attorney.

Even if the proposed legislation involved a city, town, or state in which the adult business had no entities, the club attorneys and attorneys would still come out in full force to defeat it, as it may have had an adverse effect on them at a later time.

Another tactic used so frequently is to bring in big gun attorneys from elsewhere to intimidate and sue as well as tie up in court the passed ordinance for as long as possible or until it ran the city or township out of funding. These businesses have plenty to spend on staying open and running them the way THEY want to. From time to time the company would use a local attorney, coaching him and making him file the things they needed in order to make it look as though they were a local business.

In regard to the lobbying, the attorney -- the funding as well as lawsuits -- the adult businesses seem to somehow utilize the press to their advantage. The press simply didn't deal with the real issues in most cases.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS

The entertainers who work in these clubs, even though supposedly independent contractors, oddly enough pay upwards of 30% of their income to work in these establishments. This does not include the unwritten laws of tipping which are all explained to them by the management or other entertainers. This includes tipping the DJ in order to listen to or dance to the music they want to have played. They also must tip doormen, floorwalkers, waitresses and bartenders in turn helping the club to pay the wages for the cheap labor which the clubs employ.

By the time a dancer is done, she may have paid up to 50% of her income just to work. Most of this income, in my experience, is not reported by these employees. One instance stands out clearly. An entertainer phoned me saying she knew that fines, or so-called reinstatement fees, were not being rung into the register. I, in turn, told her to write the management a check and ask for a receipt. At that point, she was told to leave and not come back as the club did not give out receipts or accept checks for fines.

NINE REASONS FOR THE PASSAGE OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

In closing, I would like to say that without regulation of the kind proposed by these bills -- and mind you this is merely the tip of the iceberg -- businesses like these will continue to get away with whatever, whenever they please.

There are several reasons as to why this legislation is needed. The following, while not an exhaustive list, are the ones that come immediately to mind:

1. Helping set and ENFORCE regulation on a statewide level will keep the criminals from moving from city to city staying employed in the same type of business, never having to be but a ghost to the current laws. In other words, these regulations will help keep these lawless ones more answerable to the laws of the land and prevent them from preying on naive young ladies, desensitizing them, duping them into gradual steps of so-called entertainment which ultimately leads them to their degradation and destruction.

2. Drug abuse and dealing run rampant in many clubs, almost always in the bathrooms, locker rooms, and yes, even offices. Again, licensing should help curb the offenders by letting them know it is no longer tolerated, and is being regulated on a statewide level in addition to local regulation.

3. It would keep known sex offenders as well as known felons from working, owning, or entertaining in the clubs and adult businesses, as many owners in these businesses have a criminal record.

4. The licensing issue should keep the entertainers from soliciting in any way which, as we all know, comes in many forms. In turn, that will help keep adult businesses as above table as possible. It will also help keep the seasoned entertainer from teaching the new ones the so-called “tricks of the trade” which most of the time are illegal.

5. The hours of operation will help in curbing many of the illegal activities such as drug dealing, solicitation, and illegal dances due to the fact that the more intoxicated the entertainer is the more the dancer is likely to do. It is a big plus on the safety and welfare of the entertainers, employees, citizens, and communities -- as many of the late night people are truly drunk or intoxicated on other forms of drugs and literally do things they would never do if it were not in the late night situation.

6. State regulation on lap dances and lewd behavior will keep the entertainers from just being fined or as it is called in the business "contract reinstatement fees" which most entertainers gladly pay as they make a lot more money then they lose the dirtier the dances are. Dirtier most of the time means illegal.

7. The proposed legislation will put the entertainer in a position to pay taxes as she would no longer be an unknown person without an income. This, in turn, will keep the clubs above board on what they are being paid by the entertainers as the girls will need every write-off they can get, including the stage fees. It will also keep the many girls who are on federal and state aid (while making hundreds of dollars a week) off these programs.

8. Several small clubs come to mind that it will really keep above board. I consulted on a few smaller clubs, and in the back room I found all paperwork hidden away that would ever be used to pay taxes. The pages were in total disarray as if they were just thrown in there nightly. What taxes were paid on, I'll never know, but it was not on the paperwork or register receipts I found or which dated back several years.

9. The next thing I'm sure it will curb is the blatant cash flowing out of clubs. In one club I had consulted on I found $672,000 in lost retail liquor sales. The owner, upon my telling him what I found, has not spoken to me since. He did, however, build a new house paying cash for the labor.

In closing, with great concern for our present generation and those who will come after us, I encourage this committee to vigorously support the passage of the proposed 13 bill package and to move it with great haste. This is a significant package of bills because if enforced, it will curb the criminality and lawlessness that is directly linked to sexually oriented businesses. Without its passage, untold numbers of lives will continue to be degraded, victimized and destroyed.

Exhibit M-4

Summary of IMPD UCR Classified Part I Crimes at Bookstore Addresses
Pre- and Post- Enforcement Periods/Regulated v Non-Regulated Hours

	Total Crimes	Non-Regulated Hours	Mon-Sat Midnight to 10 am	Sunday
LAFAYETTE VIDEO AND NEWSSTAND
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	8	2	5	1
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	6	5		1
NEW FLICKS VIDEO
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	3	3
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	2	1	1
KEYSTONE VIDEO & NEWSSTAND
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	11	3	3	5
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	10	5	3	2
ANNEX BOOKS
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	9	5	3	1
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	2	1	1
VIDEO GALLERY
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	5	3	1	1
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	1	1
Grand Sum Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005	36	16	12	8
Grand Sum Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008	21	13	5	3

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist.
Pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. Post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.
Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Exhibit M-5

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR Description
02402 N LAFAYETTE RD - LAFAYETTE VIDEO AND NEWSSTAND
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	030087247	08/25/2003	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	040045406	04/22/2004	132 ROBBERY - ATTMP ARMED
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	020046740	04/29/2002	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	030056432	05/29/2003	242 LARC-50/200-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	030117438	11/24/2003	150 ROBBERY - STRARM HIWAY
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	030120630	12/05/2003	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	040103315	10/05/2004	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Sunday	Midnight to 10am	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	020044274	04/21/2002	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	050100215	10/03/2005	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	060012093	01/07/2006	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	070014989	01/29/2007	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	070129023	08/15/2007	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	070133426	08/22/2007	132 ROBBERY - ATTMP ARMED
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	02402 N LAFAYETTE RD	060142733	12/10/2006	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT

Total Location Count: 14

MILWAUKEE, WI AE REGS 001764

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist

The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.

Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR Description
03580 N LAFAYETTE RD - NEW FLICKS VIDEO
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	03580 N LAFAYETTE RD	020126591	12/14/2002	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	03580 N LAFAYETTE RD	040030138	03/06/2004	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	03580 N LAFAYETTE RD	050017427	01/26/2005	132 ROBBERY - ATTMP ARMED
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	03580 N LAFAYETTE RD	070092767	06/18/2007	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	03580 N LAFAYETTE RD	050095677	09/21/2005	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT

Total Location Count: 5

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist

The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.

Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR Description
04501 N KEYSTONE AV - KEYSTONE VIDEO & NEWSSTAND
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	020075627	07/20/2002	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	030024566	02/20/2003	256 LARC-UNDER 50-BUILDING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	040128106	12/23/2004	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	030042553	04/17/2003	172 ASSAULT - OTHER WEAPON
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	040030492	03/08/2004	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	050042724	04/20/2005	242 LARC-50/200-SHOPLIFTING
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	020115672	11/10/2002	151 ROBBERY - STRARM COMER H
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	030059986	06/08/2003	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	050037414	04/03/2005	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT
Sunday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	020117905	11/17/2002	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Sunday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	040075446	07/18/2004	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	050083727	08/17/2005	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060072238	07/07/2006	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060077207	07/21/2006	236 LARC-OVER 200-BUILDING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060094478	09/06/2006	232 LARC-OVER 200-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	070081141	05/30/2007	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	050063459	06/20/2005	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060037950	03/30/2006	174 ASSAULT - SIMPLE
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060114182	11/01/2006	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	060067976	06/25/2006	193 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES DAY
Sunday	Midnight to 10am	04501 N KEYSTONE AV	070042277	03/25/2007	191 BURG - FRC ENT - RES DAY

Total Location Count: 21

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist

The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.

Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR	UCR Description
06767 E 38TH ST - ANNEX BOOKS
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	020050986	05/11/2002	243	LARC-50/200-FROM VEHICL
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	020121395	11/27/2002	252	LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	030080621	08/06/2003	250	LARC-UNDER 50-PICKPOCK
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	040015016	01/16/2004	141	ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	050053293	05/21/2005	132	ROBBERY - ATTMP ARMED
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	06767 E 38TH ST	020059759	06/05/2002	252	LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	06767 E 38TH ST	050017545	01/27/2005	141	ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	06767 E 38TH ST	050031628	03/16/2005	141	ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	040013054	01/11/2004	242	LARC-50/200-SHOPLIFTING
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06767 E 38TH ST	050003213	12/15/2005	242	LARC-50/200-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	06767 E 38TH ST	060121161	11/20/2006	192	BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT

Total Location Count: 11

MILWAUKEE, WI AE REGS 001767

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist
The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.
Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR Description
06801 E 38TH ST - VIDEO GALLERY
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06801 E 38TH ST	020003049	08/14/2002	252 LARC-UNDER 50-SHOPLIFTING
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06801 E 38TH ST	050034999	03/26/2005	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06801 E 38TH ST	050039455	04/09/2005	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Monday - Saturday	Midnight to 10am	06801 E 38TH ST	040028841	03/03/2004	192 BURG - FRC ENT-NON-RES NGT
Sunday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06801 E 38TH ST	040058593	05/30/2004	141 ROBBERY - ARMED COMER H
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Monday - Saturday	10:01 am to 11:59 pm	06801 E 38TH ST	060083259	08/07/2006	174 ASSAULT - SIMPLE

Total Location Count: 6

MILWAUKEE, WI AE REGS 001768

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist
The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.
Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Listing - Adult Bookstore Locations

Day Type	Time Range	Address	Case #	File Date	UCR Description

Total Report Count: 57

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist
The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34 calendar months.
Time Ranges for crimes where the exact time was unknown were assigned based on the UCR convention of first likely time of occurrence.

Exhibit M-6

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Summary (by Described Address)
500' Footer Buffer of 4 Points: Pre- and Post- Enforcement Time Frames (UCR Count Order)

2402 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
02402 N LAFAYETTE RD - LAFAYETTE VIDEO AND NEWSSTAND	8		6	1				1
02422 N GOODLET AV - Residence	4					1	1	2
02421 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	3					1	2
02429 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	3				1	2
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - A AND E LAUNDROMAT	3						1	2
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - SAV A TON GROCERY STORE	3						3
02458 N GOODLET AV - Residence	3				1	1		1
02362 N GOODLET AV - Residence	2					1	1
02369 N GOODLET AV - Residence	2		1			1
02371 N GOODLET AV - Residence	2				1			1
02441 N LAFAYETTE RD - Papa John's Pizza	2			1				1
02450 N LAFAYETTE RD - MENA AUTO SERVICE AND SALES	2						1	1
Address Suppressed - Generic Street Address	2	2
02353 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1				1
02370 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1				1
02400 N GOODLET AV - Generic Street Address	1				1
02400 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1					1
02401 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1				1
02402 N LAFAYETTE RD (Generic) - Generic Street Address	1				1
02418 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02421 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1					1
02424 KESSLER BL ND - Generic Street Address	1					1
02425 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02429 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1					1
02433 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1

2402 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
02434 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02437 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1								1
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - CRISTANS SUPER SANDWICH SHOPPE	1						1
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1							1
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - KAPU AUTO SALES	1						1
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - Residence	1								1
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - S AND S AUTO SALES	1								1
02449 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1				1
02450 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02450 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
02453 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02453 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1
02457 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1					1
02462 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1		1
02500 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1				1
02500 N LAFAYETTE RD - M AND M CAR WASH	1							1
02538 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1							1
02545 N LAFAYETTE RD - ALIS AUTO SALES	1						1
Address Suppressed - Residence	1	1
Summary for Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005 (45 detail records)
Sum	71	3	8	2	10	12	19	12	5

2402 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Incident Occurred Out of Date Range
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - P & J LAUNDROMAT	1							1
Summary for Incident Occurred Out of Date Range (1 detail record)
Sum	1							1
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
02405 N LAFAYETTE RD - NU LOOK FASHION	7						6	1
02402 N LAFAYETTE RD - LAFAYETTE VIDEO AND NEWSSTAND	6		4				1	1
02446 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	4							1	3
02450 N LAFAYETTE RD - MENA AUTO SERVICE AND SALES	4						1	2	1
02414 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	3						1	2
02434 N GOODLET AV - Residence	3					1	2
02438 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	3		1	1			1
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	3		1	1			1
02449 N GOODLET AV - Residence	3					2	1
02500 N LAFAYETTE RD - M AND M CAR WASH	3		1				2
02371 N GOODLET AV - Residence	2				2
02400 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	2								2
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - RUEBENS QUE	2						2
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - C AND C AUTO SALES OF INDY INC	2						1	1
02445 N LAFAYETTE RD - KAPU AUTO SALES	2								2
02457 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	2						1		1
02465 N GOODLET AV - Residence	2				1		1
02545 N LAFAYETTE RD - ALIS AUTO SALES	2								2
02361 N GOODLET AV - Generic Street Address	1							1

2402 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
02370 N LAFAYETTE RD - ORIENTAL MARKET	1						1
02400 N GOODLET AV - Generic Street Address	1					1
02400 N LAFAYETTE RD - BEAUTY SUPPLY PARKING LOT	1							1
02401 GROFF AV - Residence	1						1
02401 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1		1
02402 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1						1
02402 N LAFAYETTE RD (Generic) - Generic Street Address	1					1
02403 N LAFAYETTE RD - TOTAL LOOK BEAUTY SALON	1						1
02406 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1				1
02409 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1					1
02417 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1							1
02417 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1
02421 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1					1
02429 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1							1
02434 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1							1
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - ASIA CITY	1						1
02440 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1					1
02441 N LAFAYETTE RD - C AND R CATERING	1							1
02441 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
02445 N CENTENNIAL ST - Residence	1							1
02450 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1							1
02450 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1							1
02454 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1
02457 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1							1
02458 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1

2402 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
02469 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1						1
02470 N GOODLET AV - Residence	1							1
02500 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
02545 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
03002 N CAPITOL AV - Vehicle Recovery - Not A Crime	1								1
Summary for Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008 (49 detail records)
Sum	86		8	2	4	8	30	19	15
Summary for 'BufferArea' = 2402 Lafayette Buffer Area (95 detail records)
Sum	158	3	16	4	14	20	49	32	20

3580 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
03557 N LAFAYETTE RD - CASH AMERICA PAWN	5				1			4
03602 N LAFAYETTE RD - QUICK STOP LIQUOR STORE	4							4
03580 N LAFAYETTE RD - NEW FLICKS VIDEO	3		3
03650 N LAFAYETTE RD - MIDAS MUFFLER SHOP	3						1	1	1
03600 N LAFAYETTE RD - HOURGLASS BOUTIQUE	2					1	1
03605 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	2								2
03605 N LAFAYETTE RD - INSTANT AUTO FINANCE	2							1	1
03641 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
03649 N LAFAYETTE RD - STEFAN JOHANSON KARTING CENTER	2						1	1
03653 N LAFAYETTE RD - CAR X	2					1	1
03557 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1							1
03560 N LAFAYETTE RD - ABIDING FAITH LIGHTHOUSE CHR	1						1
03564 N LAFAYETTE RD - LOS CAZADORES	1						1
03574 N LAFAYETTE RD - CAR QUEST	1		1
03585 N LAFAYETTE RD - SUPER KMART	1							1
03641 N LAFAYETTE RD - INDY TIRE	1							1
03652 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
03653 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1					1
03654 N LAFAYETTE RD - VANS FISH MARKET	1						1
Summary for Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005 (19 detail records)
Sum	36		4		1	3	7	15	6
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
03605 N LAFAYETTE RD - INSTANT AUTO FINANCE	11							5	6

3580 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
03557 N LAFAYETTE RD - CASH AMERICA PAWN	8				2	1	1	4
03641 N LAFAYETTE RD - INDY TIRE	7						6	1
03650 N LAFAYETTE RD - MIDAS MUFFLER SHOP	4						2	2
03605 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	3							3
03641 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	3							2	1
03580 N LAFAYETTE RD - NEW FLICKS VIDEO	2		1				1
03602 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	2							2
03654 N LAFAYETTE RD - VANS FISH MARKET	2						1	1
03564 N LAFAYETTE RD - EL PUERTO DE SAN BLAS	1						1
03585 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1					1
03590 N LAFAYETTE RD - BEAUTY SHOP	1							1
03600 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1		1
03602 N LAFAYETTE RD - QUICK STOP LIQUOR STORE	1							1
03605 N LAFAYETTE RD - ALDI FOOD	1			1
03649 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1							1
03652 N LAFAYETTE RD - CAR X	1						1
03652 N LAFAYETTE RD - JIMS PLUMBING CORP	1							1
03653 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
03654 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address	1							1
03654 N LAFAYETTE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1						1
03654 N LAFAYETTE RD - SHUN FAT ENT INC DBA VANS	1						1
03690 N LAFAYETTE RD - ICI PAINTS	1							1
03694 N LAFAYETTE RD - SUNLIGHT NAIL SUPPLY	1						1
04503 W 38TH ST - MECHANIC SHOP	1								1

3580 Lafayette Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
Summary for Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008 (25 detail records)
Sum	58		2	1	2	2	16	26	9
Summary for 'BufferArea' = 3580 Lafayette Buffer Area (44 detail records)
Sum	94		6	1	3	5	23	41	15

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
02330 E 46TH ST - CVS	42		6	2				33	1
04501 N KEYSTONE AV - KEYSTONE VIDEO & NEWSSTAND	11		2	1	1		1	6
02626 E 46TH ST - COMMUNITY ACTION CENTER	7		1	1		3		2
02511 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	6						1	5
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - EASY PAWN	6		1					4	1
04440 N KEYSTONE AV - THOMAS CATERER	5						3	2
04459 N ALLISONVILLE RD - NAPA AUTO CARE	5						2	1	2
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - ROYCE MOTORS	5							4	1
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	4				2	1		1
02511 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	3							2	1
04555 N KEYSTONE AV - BUDGET TRUCK AND CAR RENTAL	3						1	1	1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	3							1	2
04449 N ALLISONVILLE RD - FOOD PLUS	2						2
04449 N ALLISONVILLE RD - LET IT BOUNCE BARBER AND BEAUTY	2						2
04459 N ALLISONVILLE RD - FALL CREEK SERVICE CENTER	2						1	1
04498 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
04500 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2				1			1
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - U-SAVE AUTO RENTAL	2							2
04555 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - Cal Fireworks	2		1				1
02300 E 45TH ST - DAVE'S AUTO	1							1
02316 E 45TH ST - MICHAEL MARTIN PROPERTIES	1							1
02330 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1		1
02500 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1							1

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
02511 E 46TH ST - CORPORATE SQUARE EAST	1						1
02511 E 46TH ST - FALL CREEK CONSULTING	1						1
02511 E 46TH ST - FLEX WEIGHT MANAGEMENT	1				1
02511 E 46TH ST - GREATER INDPLS COUNCIL ON ALCOHOLISM	1						1
02511 E 46TH ST - MD STRUM HOUSING SERVICES	1							1
02511 E 46TH ST - PROJECT IMPACT - OFFICE	1				1
02511 E 46TH ST - TOTAL PIECE	1						1
02511 E 46TH ST #Q2 - EUPHORIA	1							1
02600 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1					1
02611 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1		1
02626 E 46TH ST - EBENEZER INTERNATIONAL MINISTRIES CHURCH	1						1
02626 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1					1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	1							1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1							1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - HAIRTIQUE	1						1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - TOWN AND COUNTRY FLEA MARKET	1						1
04440 N KEYSTONE AV - Residence	1						1
04446 N ALLISONVILLE RD - WILKERSON BODY SHOP	1							1
04458 N ALLISONVILLE RD - DOWN WIT IT ENTERTAINMENT	1						1
04459 N ALLISONVILLE RD - CUSTOM AUTO REPAIR	1							1
04459 N ALLISONVILLE RD - Generic Street Address	1								1
04461 N KEYSTONE AV - AA-MCO TRANSMISSION	1							1
04495 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	1								1
04502 N KEYSTONE AV - EARL SHEIB PAINT AND BODY SHOP	1				1

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
04510 N KEYSTONE AV - FURNITURE LAND	1						1
04510 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	1								1
04530 N KEYSTONE AV - LAWN MAINTENANCE/LANDSCAPING	1							1
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - Otto Ind, LLC	1								1
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - AMOCO GAS STATION	1							1
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - BP CONNECT	1								1
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - UNION PLANTERS BANK	1		1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - A-1 QUALITY CAR SALES	1							1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - CAR REPAIR	1							1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - Fireworks Store	1						1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1							1
NOT STATED - Residence	1					1
Summary for Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005 (60 detail records)
Sum	156		14	4	7	7	25	83	16
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
02330 E 46TH ST - CVS	18		3				1	14
04501 N KEYSTONE AV - KEYSTONE VIDEO & NEWSSTAND	10		3			1	4	2
02511 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	6					1		5
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - EASY PAWN	5		1				3	1
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - ROYCE MOTORS	5						2	3
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	5		1		1	2		1
02626 E 46TH ST - COMMUNITY ACTION CENTER	4					2		2
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - CARIBBEAN VILLAGE BAR AND GRILL	4					2	2

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	4							4
02626 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	3							1	2
04502 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	3							1	2
04555 N KEYSTONE AV - BUDGET TRUCK AND CAR RENTAL	3							2	1
02300 E 45TH ST - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
02511 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	2						1	1
04440 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
04444 N ALLISONVILLE RD - TRANS TECH ELECTRIC	2						2
04502 N KEYSTONE AV - DAVES PAINT AND BODY	2						1	1
04530 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2							1	1
04550 N KEYSTONE AV - USA FIREWORKS	2						2
04555 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2					1			1
04600 N KEYSTONE AV - Residence	2			1					1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2					1		1
04602 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	2							2
01447 SHADOW RIDGE RD - Residence	1						1
02318 E 45TH ST - Generic Street Address	1							1
02325 E 45TH ST - Residence	1							1
02330 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1							1
02500 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1								1
02511 E 46TH ST - MARION COUNTY PUBLIC DEFENDER	1						1
02511 E 46TH ST - QUINTON RESIDENTIAL LIVING	1							1
02511 E 46TH ST - ROOFING COMPANY	1					1
02511 E 46TH ST #SUIT - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1							1
02601 E 46TH ST - ACE TAX PREPARATION	1						1

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
02611 E 46TH ST - BIG DOG LIQUOR STORE	1		1
02611 E 46TH ST - Generic Street Address	1								1
02626 E 46TH ST - COLLEGE AVENUE CONDUMINIUMS LL	1							1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - JOHN H BONNER TAX CENTER	1						1
04435 N KEYSTONE AV - Residence	1							1
04444 N ALLISONVILLE RD - AMACO	1							1
04444 N ALLISONVILLE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1						1
04446 N ALLISONVILLE RD - CYCLE SHOP	1							1
04446 N ALLISONVILLE RD - Generic Street Address	1							1
04449 N ALLISONVILLE RD - FOOD PLUS	1		1
04449 N ALLISONVILLE RD - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1					1
04451 N ALLISONVILLE RD - GEORGE'S BARBER SHOP	1						1
04455 N ALLISONVILLE RD - NATIONAL CITY BANK	1		1
04461 N KEYSTONE AV - AA-MCO TRANSMISSION	1							1
04461 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	1								1
04500 N KEYSTONE AV - Generic Street Address	1				1
04530 N KEYSTONE AV - LAWN MAINTENANCE/LANDSCAPING	1						1
04545 N KEYSTONE AV - Residence	1							1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - A-1 QUALITY CAR SALES	1							1
04601 N KEYSTONE AV - ENTERPRISE	1							1
04602 N KEYSTONE AV - ALDI FOOD	1							1
Summary for Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008 (54 detail records)
Sum	123		11	1	2	12	25	59	13

4501 N Keystone Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Summary for 'BufferArea' = 4501 N Keystone Buffer Area (114 detail records)
Sum	279		25	5	9	19	50	142	29

6767 E 38th Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
06800 E PENDLETON PK - Menard's	149		1	6		2		137	3
06800 E PENDLETON PK - FAMILY DOLLAR	14		1				5	8
06767 E 38TH ST - Annex Books	9		4					5
06845 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - ALDI FOOD	8		1			1		5	1
06801 E 38TH ST - VIDEO GALLERY	5		3				1	1
06833 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - HINDEL LANES	4			1				3
02805 BARBARY LN - Residence	3				1	2
06685 E 38TH ST - HERROD AUTOMOTIVE	3							2	1
06800 E PENDLETON PK - Generic Street Address	3					1		1	1
06700 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	2					1		1
06708 E 38TH ST - ANOTHER PHASE MEN'S CLOTHING	2						1	1
06800 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - Generic Street Address	2					1			1
06801 E 38TH ST (Generic) - Generic Street Address	2								2
01600 N PENDLETON PK - Generic Street Address	1					1
03799 N ELIZABETH ST - Generic Street Address	1		1
06685 E 38TH ST - Residence	1							1
06702 E 38TH ST - CLUB ESCALADE	1				1
06708 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address-BUSINESS	1						1
06710 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	1								1
06710 E 38TH ST - PSYCHIC STUDIO SERVICES	1							1
06710 E 38TH ST - Residence	1						1
06713 E 38TH ST - Residence	1						1
06718 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	1							1
06755 E 38TH ST - VIP Hair Salon	1					1
06802 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - Residence	1						1

6767 E 38th Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005
06901 E 38TH ST - CULLIGAN WATER COMPANY	1							1
06909 E 38TH ST - FIFTH THIRD BANK	1		1
06909 E 38TH ST - FIFTH THIRD BANK - OUTSIDE	1		1
Summary for Apr 1 2002 - May 31 2005 (28 detail records)
Sum	221		13	7	2	10	11	168	10
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
06800 E PENDLETON PK - Menard's	176			6	1	2		167
06800 E PENDLETON PK - FAMILY DOLLAR	17		4	1		2	3	7
06700 E 38TH ST - CLUB ESCALADE	9			2	2			5
06845 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - ALDI FOOD	8		1			1		6
06800 E PENDLETON PK - Generic Street Address	5					1		2	2
06833 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - HINDEL LANES	4					2		2
06909 E 38TH ST - FIFTH THIRD BANK	4		1				2	1
06685 E 38TH ST - HERROD AUTOMOTIVE	2							2
06708 E 38TH ST - PERSONAL TOUCH CLOTHING STORE	2						2
06765 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	2								2
06765 E 38TH ST - WAX ON WAX OFF	2					1		1
06767 E 38TH ST - Annex Books	2						1	1
06800 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	2					1		1
06901 E 38TH ST - CULLIGAN WATER COMPANY	2						1	1
00545 E 19TH ST - IPS SCHOOL 27	1						1
03736 N ELIZABETH ST - Residence	1						1
03749 N KITLEY - BECKER LANDSCAPE CONTRACTORS	1								1

6767 E 38th Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008
06685 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	1							1
06700 E 38TH ST - Generic Street Address	1								1
06710 E 38TH ST - CARPET FURNITURE AND MORE	1						1
06712 E 38TH ST - CLUB ESCALADE	1							1
06712 E 38TH ST - KJS SEAFOOD AND BBQ	1						1
06718 E 38TH ST - SPEEDWAY AUTO PARTS	1						1
06750 E 38TH ST - HINDEL LANES	1							1
06751 E 38TH ST - ROOTS II HAIR STUDIOS	1		1
06800 E 38TH ST - Menard's	1					1
06800 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - Generic Street Address	1								1
06800 E PENDLETON PK - ANNIES ALTERATIONS INC	1						1
06800 E PENDLETON PK - WILKERSON BARBER SHOP	1						1
06801 E 38TH ST - VIDEO GALLERY	1					1
06805 E 38TH ST - PAY DAY LOAN STORE	1		1
06833 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - Generic Street Address	1								1
06900 E 34TH ST - Occurred outside buffer	1					1
06900 E 38TH ST - CLUB ESCALADE	1							1
06900 E 38TH ST - Menard's	1							1
06900 E MASSACHUSETTS AV - THE POINT BAR PARKING LOT	1							1
06901 E 38TH ST - WHITE CASTLE	1				1
Summary for Jun 1 2005 to March 31 2008 (37 detail records)
Sum	260		8	9	4	13	16	202	8

6767 E 38th Buffer Area

Location	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Summary for 'BufferArea' = 6767 E 38th Buffer Area (65 detail records)
Sum	481		21	16	6	23	27	370	18

IMPD UCR Classified Crime Summary (by Described Address)
500' Footer Buffer of 4 Points: Pre- and Post- Enforcement Time Frames (UCR Count Order)

	Total UCR	Rape	Armed Robbery	Strong Arm Robb.	Agg. Assault	Simple Assault	Burglary	Larceny	Vehicle Theft
Grand Total	1012	3	68	26	32	67	149	585	82

Prepared by IMPD Resource Coordinator based on UCR Case Numbers selected by City of Indianapolis Planning Division and follow-up reading by IMPD UCR specialist

The pre-enforcement period (April 1, 2002 - May 31, 2005) represents 38 calendar months. The post-enforcement period (June 1, 2005 - March 31, 2008) represents 34.

The data selections did not contain any Criminal Homicides, so that Part I Crime is not presented on this report.

Konrad discovers that adult-video and sex-toy shops attract all kinds

BY KONRAD.MARSHALL

Posted: May 28, 2008 in Nightlife

Tags: porn, Adult Movies, Pornographic, vibrators, adult toys, adult shops, xxx

"Are you looking for anything in particular?"

This is the question that begs to be asked when a customer walks in, because if there's one truth that the racks of adult DVDs, stacks of pornographic magazines and walls of mature "toys" and gadgets confirms, it's that everyone likes something in particular.

In my two hours working in Keystone Video & Newsstand, on a recent Friday night, I saw them all. Young women venturing into the store in pairs for moral support, giggling. Couples whispering to one another in corners, with goods in hand. And men, lots of men, perusing all the store has to offer, some loudly and proudly, and some with a sheepish shuffle.

None of them seemed to want to answer the question, though. For the most part, they seemed to know exactly what something in particular that they wanted.

There were magazines, books, and videos grouped according to all tastes, featuring true porn stars (Jenna Jameson and Belladonna), amateur ones (like former Indy escort Marie McCrae, and even a former Keystone Video clerk, Jake Blade), and celebrities (from Screech to Paris Hilton to Jimi Hendrix). A movie featuring a relative unknown was playing in the background, the music coming from the store radio oddly fitting: "Still looking for that blue jean baby queen, prettiest girl I ever seen. See her shake on the movie screen."

There were things with harnesses, clips, suction cups, pumps, cavities, vibration and gyration. And things made of latex, blown glass, Cyberskin, metal and rubber (rubbers themselves were there, too).

I helped a young female cashier run through the purchases of a young man buying vibrators on behalf of his girlfriend, surprised to learn that the store puts batteries inside any motorized toys to make sure the tools operate as expected. (A little tip for guys: If you want to know what a device will feel like on your loved one, hold it up to the tip of your nose.)

Some of the items, though, particularly those in the fetish section, look like weapons of mass destruction, or tools of cruel and unusual punishment, but employees are taught never to express any judgment.

"When I first started -- and I was no stranger to this stuff -- it took a while to get comfortable," manager Lawrence Utley said. "It can be intense. It can definitely be intense."

But there's also a light side. After all, it's hard not to laugh at a 15-inch, 5-pound "device."

"A lot of the stuff we deal with, at first, it's hysterical," Utley said. "But you obviously can't laugh in anybody's face. You get questions that you think are a joke, but they're serious. And then you get questions that you think are serious, and they're actually joking."

As an employee, however, you are permitted to laugh when someone calls Keystone Video hoping to reserve a copy of "The Rugrats Movie."

The only well-known titles in this store are "Debbie Does Dallas," "Behind the Green Door," "Caligula," and of course, the mother of them all, "Deep Throat," none of which have commanded "hardest of the hardcore" status for some time.

The mood of the store is truly softened by half the floor space being devoted to lingerie, novelties, costumes, incense, and things like edible underwear.

"It's all about enhancing your sex life, enhancing your love life, and enhancing your relationship," said Utley. "And I believe in the freedom angle, too."

Utley used to manage a store in Hebron, and he remembers the wrath incurred in that community, including weekly protesters with signs and bullhorns. He once had to stop truckers from setting their pit bulls on the people with placards.

"It was a little unnerving," Utley said. "Of course, the funny thing is a lot of them were customers. They'd protest you one day, and they would shop the next. So you have to be able to let that stuff go."

It isn't all excitement though. Some days there is nothing much to do but organizing stock and neatening the displays.

"It's a habit now," said one of the store cashiers. "I'll be in Wal-Mart and find myself straightening shelves."

Excellent article!

joe.shearer on May 28, '08 at 01:05 PM

---

joe.shearer wrote:
Excellent article!

I agree Konrad's articles are always great.

randydaytona on May 29, '08 at 12:14 PM

So, Konrad, were you able to keep a straight face??? Great article caralyn on May 29, '08 at 01:04 PM

I'd like to know the craziest/weirdest thing you sold that day.

Dexter on May 29, '08 at 01:12 PM

Thanks guys. I gotta say, there was definitely some freaky stuff in that place, but it was still a pretty comfortable atmosphere.

The guy who runs it told me a funny thing. He said he tells the girls who work there to be ready to be propositioned, that guys will just assume they're prostitutes, or that the doors in the back of the store lead to peep shows and dungeons and what not. He was a pretty cool guy, and funny.

As for the craziest thing sold, I didn't see any truly crazy sales. But I asked about how often some of the weirder stuff sells. The festish wall was pretty popular. And you would be AMAZED at how many gigantic ... male imitation devices ... sell. And you'd be shocked at how realistic the female .. pockets? ... seem.

More shocking still? Some people actually try to return used merchandise. (The store, for the record, does not accept said returns.)

Konrad.Marshall on May 29, '08 at 01:34 PM

---

ha-ha-ha-HAH-ha-ha....funny post!

deb5683 on May 30, '08 at 08:45 AM

Why does it seem that all the "freaky" stories get thrown your way, Konrad? :)

FineWine on May 30, '08 at 09:43 AM

Just lucky, I guess :)

Konrad.Marshall on May 30, '08 at 09:53 AM

Trusted local news leader for Kingman, Arizona & Mohave County kdminer.com

DAILY MINER

Recently Commented | Most Viewed
- Kingman Resource Center thief sentenced (19 comments)
- In Memory of: Maureen Calabrese (2 comments)
- Tougher nuisance code OK'd (15 comments)
- Kingman Letters: Seniors ready to work (5 comments)
- New Reader Poll: illegal immigration legislation (23 comments)

Submit news tips or breaking news

10/26/2010 6:00:00 AM

Suspect sought in robbery of adult book store

Erin Taylor
Miner Staff Reporter

KINGMAN - Authorities are looking for a man who robbed a Golden Valley adult bookstore just after midnight Friday night.

Mohave County Sheriff's spokeswoman Trish Carter said a man between the age of 30 and 40 years old walked into the Pleasure Palace adult store on Highway 68 around 12:57 a.m. and demanded money from the clerk.

Carter said the man was wearing a black, hooded sweatshirt underneath a one-piece outfit that resembled a mechanic's jumpsuit. The suspect pointed his right hand at the clerk from inside his jumpsuit pocket as though he had a weapon.

The man made off with an undisclosed amount of cash. No other items were taken.

The suspect had the hood pulled over the top of his head with a black bandana or cloth covering his face. He is anywhere from 5-foot-10 to 6-foot tall, with a normal build and hazel colored eyes.

Anyone with any information is asked to call the Mohave County Sheriff's Office at (928) 753-0753 or Silent Witness at (928) 753-1234. A reward of up to $500 has been offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person(s) responsible for the robbery.

Reader Comments

Posted: Saturday, October 30, 2010
Article comment by: Henry O

Porno stores always seem to smell strongly of chlorine and cheese.....yick! I wouldn't be working there for that reason alone.

Posted: Saturday, October 30, 2010
Article comment by: makes ya wonder

If Porno shops actually did pay better than Degreed positions. I think there would be one on every corner and the colleges would go bankrupt.

Im so glad its not that way. Theirs nothing. Not even a liquor store can destroy an area faster then a Porno shop. People who frequent these stores tend to be dregs. Before you hammer me with the "you have no right to be judgemental". Take a few moments and think about it. Im being realistic.

If you doubt my realisum sit in the parking lot for awhile. I Promise MOST of the folks you see shopping there. You would drop dead if your Child brought home and announced. "we're getting married".

These places turn an absolutely fantastic event two people can share. Into something that turns your stomach. I dont ever want to understand the "draw" people feel that brings them to a Porno shop. Working there for me would be the bottom of the barrel. My family would have to be homeless and starving.

Posted: Friday, October 29, 2010
Article comment by: would you sellout your integrity?

Hey College degree making less then Porno employee.

Somethings are worth more then a few bucks. Personnally I would do ANYTHING for any pay to NOT find myself degraded to the point of slinging Porno.

Then again our country has become "money first" over the last few decades. Selling out and joining the dregs seems to not bother many more people these days.

Im sure glad Im older and wont have to see how society evolves deeper into disgrace with each generation for much longer.

Posted: Friday, October 29, 2010
Article comment by: World's down the tubes

@ "@ talk about a horrible job--"

BULL! Unless you're working at McDonalds in spite of your degree? And if what you did say wasn't a lie, your friend is the exception! Doesn't mean that they all pay well!

Posted: Thursday, October 28, 2010
Article comment by: @ talk about a horrible job --

You might want to research and rethink your opinion. I have a friend who works at one of these stores and is paid more and has better health insurance than I do at my job that requires a college degree. As to the other comments about being open at that hour, I assume you think we should close gas stations and conveinence stores too?

Posted: Thursday, October 28, 2010
Article comment by: talk about a horrible job

Porno stores are the bottom feeders of all society.

Im not a "church lady" nor am I a prude. If you visit these places you must have a very low self esteem. Sex is cool and all...BUT. Its not the ultimate end all of things in life. Just thinking of visiting this kind of store makes me want to take a hot bleach bath.

Im glad the clerk didnt get hurt by this knucklehead. Its really to bad the clerk wasnt armed. I also hope this clerk gets a new job. Working for someone that respects their employees enough to hire an extra person for nights. For gods sake. You run a business with many customers that are seriously "different". Not to mention dangerous.
.
The owners need to be horse whipped for being so cheap or greedy they put an employee in such a precarious position. Hire a second clerk for nights. Train them to be proficient with a .45 auto at 30 feet.

Being robbed while working at a Porno shop is truely adding insult to injury. Do yourself a favor and look for better job.

Posted: Wednesday, October 27, 2010
Article comment by: Sir Batson Belfry

Any incident involving an Adult bookstore seems to bring out a lot of childish reactions in readers, which underscores the question: "How do you ever know you're selling to a Mature adult?"

Hey, here is a clerk: a person who is working what is probably not their idea of a glamorous gig with no one there for back up. Wouldn't be so humorous if the same robbery occurred in a Circle-K, now would it. I've little doubt the people who find this so entertaining have "frequent shopper" cards...and not at Circle-K.

Imagine how you would feel if you were alone in any retail store around 1 AM and some desperado walks in to rob the till. Would you feel afraid? Might you feel traumatized? And what, perchance, do you imagine would have happened if an actual customer had chosen to stop in to do some shopping while the robbery was in progress? This could have been a lot uglier than an empty cash register.

It's purely insane and unethical that anyone would be left working alone at that hour, on a Friday night, in what any rational person would consider an isolated location. Despite economic pressures, there is no excuse for leaving one person to run a shop, especially a shop that attracts more attention than most.

While there is a lot of traffic to and from cities like Laughlin and Kingman traveling the highway, I suspect someone in the local area had been casing the store or had entered the premises at various times as a customer and knew the lone clerk would be holding down the "fort" (so to speak).

It is fortunate this person was not hurt or killed by the robber and it is hoped there will be no incidents of this sort in future. Certainly, giving this media coverage won't increase the safety of anyone working nights at this store.

Attention owner(s): f there aren't surveillance cameras in the parking lot, I suggest to avert the potential liability and lower insurance premiums, you invest in a few cams with 360 degree views and at the very least, dedicate a monitor for viewing and VCR for taping activity around the sides and back of the building, particularly after the sun sets.

Motion sensor lights that also trigger a discreet signal within the store are, I'm certain, worth the money. I'm surprised there wasn't a silent "panic alarm" near the register to alert the local police.

If the owners believe it is too expensive to invest in this equipment, I ask them to compare this to the expense of closing the store at a reasonable hour or ensuring there is always another human being with a registered firearm present who can keep the cashier safe during the night shift. Ideally, both the equipment and the "late night Ninja" would be put into place.

And anyone who thinks a robbery is funny should steer clear of Adult Bookstores or risk being grounded for eternity by their wife or girlfriend(s). Or, as an alternative, grow up.

Posted: Wednesday, October 27, 2010
Article comment by: Im Funny Dammit

Thanks alot Jerry. You ol' fuddy duddy.

Posted: Wednesday, October 27, 2010
Article comment by: Jerry J

Wow, now the post from I'm Funny is HIGHLY inappropriate and suggestive...can't believe KDM published it!

(It slipped through. It's gone now. Thanks for the heads up. -Mark)

Posted: Tuesday, October 26, 2010
Article comment by: Bart Simpson

OMG!! Who would rob an adult book store!? What has the world come to when someone would violate the sanctity of such a holy place?

Posted: Tuesday, October 26, 2010
Article comment by: Tim griffith

The only problem here is that the establishments that were robbed should've provided handguns (pref. large calibre) to the employees. That way, they could've just blown these idiots out of their shoes, and the police could then easily just ID the bodies. "

Posted: Tuesday, October 26, 2010

Article comment by: FBI'S FIBS

This just brings to the forefront of my mind how happy I am that we don't have an adult bookstore within city limits and I hope it stays this way. Not from a religious standpoint, but it just looks like trash when you see that in a neighborhood! The last place I lived had them around and even my "open minded" friends agreed that it made the area look seedy.

Article Comment Submission Form

Please feel free to submit your comments. Article comments are not posted immediately. Submissions must adhere to the Use of Service section in our Terms of Use agreement. The email address and phone number you provide are for internal use and will not be visible to the public. The passcode below is not case-sensitive. You may post comments using a pseudonym or alias name and enter 000-0000 for the phone number.

Submit an Article Comment

First Name:
Required

Last Name:
Required

Telephone:
Required

Email:
Required

Comment:
Required

Passcode:
Required

3MZ7V7 Click here to see a new mix of characters.

This is an anti-SPAM device. It is not case sensitive.

Submit Reset

azcentral.com
ARIZONA'S HOME PAGE

Police search for adult bookstore robber

by Lisa Halverstadt - Jul. 14, 2008 03:46 PM
The Arizona Republic

A Mesa man was arrested early Saturday after police said he and another man threatened others with a handgun at an adult bookstore on Apache Boulevard.

Richard Torres, 24, who Tempe police eventually arrested, allegedly yelled at a witness and ordered him to go inside the bookstore, police said.

An unidentified man with Torres stuck a handgun into a man's ribs at the Modern World Adult Bookstore and took $7 from him, according to police reports. He then walked up to another man, held a gun to his head and demanded he give up his cell phone. The unidentified robber hit that man in the face, knocking out one of his teeth and later yelled at Torres to get into a car.

The two men drove across the street and then abandoned their vehicle, police said.

Torres was later arrested at a fenced-in residence in the 1600 block of East Hudson Drive on suspicion of two counts of armed robbery and first-degree trespassing. He had been hiding in the bushes, police said.

Police are still searching for the other man who is described as about 5-foot-10 inches, tall with a thin-to-medium build and "Afro"-style hair. At the time of the armed robbery, he wore a white T-shirt and brown pants.

Adult bookstore robbed in Kearny Mesa «

SEARCH: Go

- Teachable Moments Blog
- The Good Blog
- Sponsored Blogs
- San Diego at Work
- Urban Living
- Wealth and Legacy
- Family Law Blog
- SoCal Business Today
- Boys and Girls Clubs
- BestRank Search Marketing
- Brookfield Homes
- Alcohol, Tobacco and Other Drugs

- Business
  - Careers
  - Giving'em the Business Blog
  - Clean Tech
- Sports
  - America's Finest Sports Blog
  - San Diego Chargers
  - San Diego Padres
  - SDSU Aztecs
  - Hacksaw Hamilton Columns
  - Sports Columns
- Living
  - Eat Drink San Diego Blog
  - Universal Health Blog
  - The Good Blog
  - Food & Drink
  - Maryann Castronovo Columns
  - Health
  - Eight Greats
  - The Good Squad
  - Nightlife
  - Out & About
- Arts & Ent.
  - Music
  - Decibel Music Blog
  - Culture Cruncher Arts Blog
  - David Elliott on Movies
  - Pat Launer on Theater
  - Balboa Park Guide
- Travel
  - Trippin' Travel Blog
  - Visitors Guide
  - Balboa Park Guide
  - Casino Guide
  - Adventure Travel Guide
- Events
  - San Diego Calendar
  - Submit Events
- Education

Adult bookstore robbed in Kearny Mesa

By Staff, City News Service
Monday, January 11, 2010

- comment
- print page
- text size

A man robbed an adult bookstore at gunpoint in Kearny Mesa but no one was hurt, police said Monday.

The gunman robbed the Adult Emporium 2 at 5101 Convoy St. around 7:45 p.m. Sunday, San Diego police Officer Dino Delimitros said.

Police described the robber as black and in his 30s, last seen wearing a blue and gray windbreaker-type jacket. He carried a semi-automatic handgun, Delimitros said.

This story was written and edited by City News Service staff.

Tags: adult bookstore, Adult Emporium, black, gray windbreaker, gunman, Kearny Mesa, SDNN

This entry was posted on Monday, January 11th, 2010 at 7:53 am and is filed under Crime . You can follow any responses to this entry through the RSS 2.0 feed. You can skip to the end and leave a response. Pinging is currently not allowed.

SHARE THIS POST

POST A COMMENT

* Required to comment

* Name

* E-Mail (will not be published)

Website

Submit Comment 1000 characters available

Facebook

Twitter

RSS Feeds

Want more local news?

Get Daily News & Alerts straight to your inbox

Sign up today

- Most Read
- Most Commented
- Recent Stories

- San Diego Pride Parade photo gallery
- Report lifts veil on counterterrorism agencies
- Composer Nobuo Uematsu is game for SD
- 2010 OTL World Championships guide

- Benches clear as Padres sweep D-backs
- Photo Gallery: 2010 OTL Championships
- 8 Great restaurants for Del Mar race season

Presented By:

Blogs

Eat Drink San Diego

Holidays still sweet for diabetes sufferers

91 days, 8 hours ago

Search Marketing

Twitter Applications to Feed Your Addiction

215 days, 3 hours ago

Search Marketing

6 Ways to Lower Your Site's Bounce Rate

227 days, 7 hours ago

Balboa Park Collaborative

Balboa Park launches iPhone application

229 days, 8 hours ago

Alcohol, Tobacco and Other Drugs

Do we really want a stoned workforce?

231 days ago

Balboa Park Collaborative

Landing a dream gig: Profile of Mike Griffin, zookeeper

231 days, 4 hours ago

More Blogs

Want more local news?

Get Daily News & Alerts straight to your inbox

Sign up today

Essentials

- Weather
- Traffic
- Home

News

- Most Recent
- Politics
- AP Headlines
- Rancho Bernardo

RSS

Sections

- Opinion
- Business
- Sports
- Food & Drink
- Arts & Entertainment
- Music & Nightlife
- Lifestyle
- Health
- Visitors Guide
- Travel

Blogs

- A Conversation with San Diego
- America's Finest Sports Blog
- Eat Drink San Diego
- A More Perfect Union
- Culture Cruncher
- Decibel
- Giving'em the Business

Extras

- Comics
- San Diego Yellow Pages
- Multimedia
- The Good Squad
- Out and About
- San Diego Resources

SDNN

- About Us
- Feedback
- Advertising
- Partners
- Employment
- Privacy Policy
- Terms of Service

Article Published: Monday, August 01, 2005 - 9:53:02 PM PST

Bat used in robbery of adult bookstore

MONTCLAIR - A robber struck an adult bookstore employee with a bat and then took cash from the store Sunday afternoon, police said.

The employee didn't notice when the robber entered the Paradise Adult Book Store at 3894 E. Mission Blvd. The robber entered an area behind the counter through an open door around 4:15 p.m. and grabbed a baseball bat that was behind the counter.

He struck the employee in the back and demanded the employee open the register, police said.

The robber took all the cash in the register and left the business. The employee, who police said suffered little to no injuries, refused medical attention.

Police said the man left in a white Volkswagen, possibly a Jetta. Police received a partial plate number of 5BK787.

- Melissa Pinion-Whitt, (909) 483-9378

OTHER ARTICLES IN THIS SECTION

8/2/2005

- Geocaching families hunt treasures by satellite
- Chino mosque leader denounces attacks
- DA views CVUSD conflict complaint
- Judge denies Cooper appeal
- Mt. Baldy carjacking suspects arrested
- CIM inmate found dead in cell
- Ontario busts 27 in prostitution sting
- Scandal rumor again haunts county offices
- Man recalls emotion of finding brother's dead body
- Woman raped inside her Montclair home
- Police seek witnesses of fatal car crash
- Two seriously injured in 210 Freeway pileup
- Kittens rescued from fire at Ontario motel
- Shoppers beating the heat
- Officials hoping to capitalize on Speedway
- More than 500 nabbed in gang sting
- Grenades kill 4, injure 25 in Mexico
- 6-year-old fatally shoots 2-year-old brother
- Bush installs Bolton as U.N. ambassador
- Company renegotiating perchlorate cleanup
- Court: Country club discriminated against lesbian couple
- Residents worry student complex will add noise, crime
- Van crash kills five, injures 15 others
- Teenager charged with murder after neighbor's body found in trunk
- Funding in works for interchange fixes
- Ontario council calls special meeting today
- Supes have strong six months of fund-raising
- Residents campaign to stop carpool

Sports Challenge

Sports

Lakers / NBA
Dodgers / MLB
Angels / MLB
Quakes Baseball
Kings / NHL
Galaxy
Chivas USA
USC
UCLA
NFL
Special Reports
Redlands Bike Classic
Prep Sports
Sports Challenge
Sports Columnists
Other Sports
Horse Racing

U-Entertainment

Film TV
Music
Gossip
Dining

Living

Travel

Food

Health

Business

Opinions

Services

Subscribe
Pay / Renew
Vacation Holds
Delivery Problems
Change of Address

Info

parking
- Pomona chamber installs board, officers
- Fire doesn't get fund-raiser down
- Rialto eager for airport land
- Cities set for "Night Out"
- Rialto library hosting fund-raising book sale
- Regulators announce new emission factor for dairies
- Ontario arena under Anschutz management

RETURN TO TOP

foxreno.com

Caught on Tape: Oakland Armed Adult Bookstore Robbery

POSTED: 9:07 am PDT April 23, 2008
UPDATED: 10:48 am PDT April 23, 2008

OAKLAND, Calif. -- Another night, another frightening armed robbery in Oakland -- the pattern repeated itself in the East Bay city when a bandit walked into a downtown adult bookstore, brandished a handgun and threatened the clerks and other patrons.

The manager, who asked not to be identified, said it was the third such recent robbery of an adult bookstore in the city.

Police released no other details about the 6:46 p.m. robbery at Cory's Adult Superstore at 2408 Telegraph and no arrests had been made.

The manager said police recommended he get a gun.

"The officer suggested I should arm myself," he told KTVU. "It's getting tough out there. These types of robberies are becoming an everyday happening."

The robbery took place just hours before an Oakland City Council meeting where police officials laid out a game plan to fight crime in Oakland. The officials promised more officers on the street, working longer hours.

Related To Story

Video: CAUGHT ON TAPE: Watch Oakland Adult Bookstore Robbery

More Metro news

Two officers kill robber's alleged getaway driver

By Debbi Farr Baker and Joe Hughes
UNION-TRIBUNE STAFF WRITERS

April 19, 2007

SAN DIEGO – Two San Diego police officers shot and killed a suspected getaway driver early yesterday morning after he opened fire on them following a robbery at a North Park adult bookstore.

The Medical Examiner's Office late Wednesday identified the man as Maurice Antoine White, 30, of Valencia Park.

Two patrol officers saw a man run out of the F Street Adult Video and Gifts store on University Avenue at Florida Street a few minutes after midnight.

Store employees said the man had come into the store carrying a gun and wearing gloves and a mask. He jumped over the counter, threatened them with the gun and stole money, said homicide Lt. Kevin Rooney.

Officers who were driving by saw the man running with his hands raised over his head – possibly as he took off his mask – carrying a white bag, Rooney said.

As the man headed north on Florida, he yelled something to White, who was in a green 1990 Chevy Cavalier parked with its lights on before running away, Rooney said.

The officers pulled behind the Cavalier, which drove a short distance before turning left and pulling over on Lincoln Avenue, a dead-end street. They got out of their patrol car and approached the car from either side.

The officer on the passenger side shined his flashlight into the car and saw that White was holding a gun pointed down between his legs, Rooney said.

“The passenger officer yells 'gun' to alert his partner and yells for the man to drop the weapon,” Rooney said. “Instead, he raised it and pointed it at the officer on the driver's side, and it appears he fired several rounds.

“Both officers drew their weapons and opened fire,” Rooney said.

Rooney did not say how many times White was hit, but he was still alive after the shooting and paramedics were called. He died a short time later.

The gun was found wedged next to the car door, police said.

Rooney said he did not know how many shots were fired during the encounter, but police were not aware of any collateral damage to buildings or homes in the area.

He said the officers were very lucky they were not shot.

“They did what they were trained to do, and they did it well,” Rooney said.

The two officers will be off for several days and placed on administrative leave, a routine practice when officers are involved in shootings. Both work out of Western Division. One has been on the force for two years and the other three.

Police are still looking for the man who robbed the video store. He is described as black, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, 130 pounds, wearing a beige shirt.

Police said the robber ran through an apartment complex, took off clothing and his gloves, and tossed his handgun. Those items have been recovered, Rooney said.

Detectives were at the scene for several hours as they investigated the shooting and robbery.

As the sun came up, the Cavalier was still parked on the cul-de-sac with the body inside. Its back window had been shot out. Several markers were on the ground indicating where the shell casings from the bullets fell.

Lincoln Avenue was roped off, but police were letting residents in and out of their homes, a mixture of small houses and apartment buildings. Some residents were not being allowed to move their cars, however.

The adult bookstore has been the scene of several robberies and a shooting over the years.

The store was robbed on Dec. 21, 2003; Nov. 8, 2001; and Nov. 1, 2001. The two November robberies were believed to have been committed by the same ski-masked bandit, who used a semi-automatic handgun.

On Nov. 12, 1997, a manager at the store was pistol-whipped during an armed robbery by two masked men. They got about $100.

On July 18, 1996, a would-be robber fired a shot at a security guard inside the store. The bandit then tried unsuccessfully to open the cash register before running off. The guard suffered minor glass cuts during the incident.

The store, which is part of a chain, recently curtailed hours. It used to be open all night, but it now closes at 2 a.m.

■Debbi Baker: (619) 293-1710; debbi.baker@uniontrib.com

Adult Book Store Robbed By Muscular Man

POSTED: 2:04 pm PDT July 8, 2006

Email This Story | Print This Story

SAN DIEGO -- A 6-foot tall muscular man in dark shorts and a baseball cap robbed an bookstore in North Park of an undisclosed amount of cash, said San Diego police.

The robbery at the F Street store in the 2000 block of University Avenue was reported a Friday, SDPD Sgt. Rich Nemetz said.

The suspect reportedly grabbe the drawer when the clerk ope register, police said.

Following the robbery the sus Nemetz said.

Loren's Field Notes
Family
Food
House And Home
MARKETPLACE
Expert Connection
Automotive
Dating
Career
Deals
Legal Center
Real Estate
Travel
Weddings
YELLOWPAGES.COM
KGTV
Advertise
About 10News
Children's 10Mobile
10News Team
10Leadership Award
TV Listings
10News Jobs
SITE TOOLS
Contact Us
Desktop Alerts
E-mail Sign Up
Premium Weather
RSS

impact on your job and your performance reviews. More

Tips To Keep Your Home Safe

Whether you are going out of town for the day or a few weeks, find out how to make sure your home isn't a target for criminals. More

Get An Online Degree In Less Time

Simply enter your program of interest, name, and offline contact information. You can get the information you need and start advancing your career in no time through an acredited program. More

Easy Nursery Decorating Tips

Are you ready to start decorating for your new little bundle of joy? Check out these great tips to get the nursery together in no time. More

Links We Like includes a selection of information, tools and resources from our partners and sponsors.

Adult Bookstore Robbed At Gunpoint, Clerk Left Unharmed

POSTED: 9:46 am PDT August 20, 2006

Email This Story | Print This Story

SAN DIEGO -- An adult bookstore clerk was robbed at gunpoint Saturday of an unkno cash by two male suspects, 10News reported.

The heist took place at 5:35 a.m. at Mercury Books in the 7400 block of Clairemont Me according to San Diego police Sgt. Kerry Tom.

One robber carried a silver re dressed in a dark tan jacket.

The other suspect wore a brov said.

It was unclear whether that m a weapon.

The clerk was apparently not

Family
Food
House And Home
MARKETPLACE
Expert Connection
Automotive
Dating
Career
Deals
Legal Center
Real Estate
Travel
Weddings
YELLOWPAGES.COM
KGTV
Advertise
About 10News
Children's 10Mobile
10News Team
10Leadership Award
TV Listings
10News Jobs
SITE TOOLS
Contact Us
Desktop Alerts
E-mail Sign Up
Premium Weather
RSS

Whether you~re thinking of joining or already have, find out what you need to know about your favorite course.More

Hate Cleaning? Try These Decorating Tips

Do you dread cleaning your home? Check out these great decorating tips that will make cleaning easy, fast, and stress-free.More

You Can Refinance Your Home In Minutes

Whether you want to pay off some bills, remodel, or get a better rate, you can refinance your home in minutes. Just enter your name and other important information and get a handful of approval values and rates in minutes.More

Get An Online Degree In Less Time

Simply enter your program of interest, name, and offline contact information. You can get the information you need and start advancing your career in no time through an acredited program.More

Links We Like includes a selection of information, tools and resources from our partners and sponsors.

Up to 4 refinance quotes with one form. S only please.
www.nextag.com

INVESTools - Investor Education
Discover how our 5-Step Formula can hel financial goals through intelligent investm www.investools.com

Mortgage Rates Near 39-yr Lows
$300K loan for under $999/mo. Think you See new payment.
www.lowermybills.com

Credit Cards Specials at CreditCar
Compare credit card offers and apply for t choice.
www.creditcards.com

Try the Rhapsody Music Service fo
The alternative to buying music. Legal acc songs.
www.rhapsody.com

Find More:

Crime/911

STOCKTON ADULT ENTERTAINMENT STORE ROBBED (1:05 P.M.)

By The Record
August 26, 2008

STOCKTON – An adult entertainment store was robbed and an employee threatened Monday afternoon.

According to a Stockton police report, a 23-year-old employee of Suzie's Adult Store in the 3100 block of East Hammer Lane was alone in the store and went to the bathroom about 2:20 p.m.

A man was standing outside the bathroom door when she came out and he lifted his shirt to show her a semiautomatic handgun in the waistband of his pants.

"This is a robbery," the police report quoted the robber. "Give me everything you got or I will kill you."

The employee handed over nearly $400 and the robber left going east from the business. No vehicle was seen.

The robber was described as a black man in his 20s or 30s with short black hair. He wore large mirrored sunglasses, black T-shirt and black jeans.

Anyone with information is asked to contact the Stockton Police Department at (209) 937-8377.

TheDenverChannel.com

Porn Store Robber Still On The Loose

Police Are Asking For Help

Tara Kurtz, Contributor

POSTED: 10:09 am MDT July 28, 2006
UPDATED: 10:51 am MDT July 28, 2006

Related To Story

Police hope someone will recognize this man.

DENVER -- Police are searching for a man who is suspected of robbing four adult bookstores in the past week.

The suspect is described as a black male about 5 feet, 10 inches tall and weighing 200 pounds with possibly a light mustache and goatee, according to police. Police also said he was wearing a white jersey with dark lettering, a blue hat and carried a black handgun.

The four adult bookstore locations hit were at the 100 block of South Broadway Avenue, the 8200 and 3400 blocks of Colfax Avenue and the 5500 block of North Federal Boulevard, police said.

The Denver Police are asking for any assistance in solving this crime.

Bookstore bandits wanted for armed robbery written by: John Fosholt , Producer/Photographer posted by: Dan Boniface , Web Producer created: 5/24/2007 5:38:18 PM

Last updated: 5/25/2007 8:17:02 PM

STORYCHAT POST YOUR COMMENT

Set 9NEWS as your homepage

STORY TOOLBOX
Send to a friend
Printable Version
Decrease text size
Increase text size

Click to enlarge

ENGLEWOOD - Police are searching for two men who threatened and robbed a clerk at a store on South Santa Fe Drive on May 19.

One of the men has been identified as 30-year-old Eric Brink. He has outstanding warrants for aggravated robbery and parole violations.

He and his partner used a rifle to stickup the Adult Bookstore at 4595 South Santa Fe Drive.

A security camera photographed the second man, and police are trying to identify him.

If you can help with the investigation, call Crime Stoppers at 720-913-7867. Your information could make you eligible for a cash reward.

STORYCHAT

Read all 6 comments »

Type in your comments to post to the forum

Name (appears on your post)

Comments

Type the numbers you see in the image on

Other News Stories

- Honoring veterans past and present - May 26, 2007
- Class of 1937 member realizes graduation dream - May 26, 2007
- Program that lets kids get up close and personal with wildlife 'for the birds' - May 26, 2007
- Insurance companies raise rates for homes at risk for wildfires - May 26, 2007
- Gas prices slightly lower, steady, roads clear for holiday - May 26, 2007
- Church: members of Episcopal parish support split - May 26, 2007
- Teacher retires after 42 years of never calling in sick - May 26, 2007
- Veterans honor, remember fallen heroes - May 26, 2007

Top Stories on 9NEWS.com

Three sets of triplets graduate together
Hallway camera snaps burglar's picture
Mother finds mission at DUI checkpoints
3-year-old girl injured in hit-and-run
Officials confirm plague caused death in domestic cat

9NEWS.com Products and Services

RSS Subscribe to the top stories RSS feed Headlines available in mobile format

the right:

Post Comment

Please note by clicking on "Post Comment" you acknowledge that you have read the Terms of Service and the comment you are posting is in compliance with such terms. Be polite. Inappropriate posts may be removed by the moderator.

Visit 9NEWS.com Story Chat

9NEWS.com Story Chat Disclaimer

denverpost.com
THE DENVER POST

Sex-toy store clerk stabbed during robbery

By The Denver Post

Posted: 03/07/2011 08:09:53 PM MST

Updated: 03/07/2011 11:25:58 PM MST

An employee of a Lakewood adult store is in the hospital after suffering stab wounds during a robbery just before 6 p.m., police said.

A Lakewood Police spokeswoman said the robbery took place at the Pleasures Adult Entertainment store at 7570 W. Jewell Ave. The suspect, described as a Hispanic male in his 20s was armed with a knife, police said. After stabbing a male employee, the suspect escaped with an undisclosed amount of cash, police said.

The status of the wounded man is not known, and his identity has not been released.

Kyle Glazier: 303-954-1638

Police: Man Uses Sprinkler Head To Hold Up Adult Store

Same Man Accused Of Robbing Store 3 Times

POSTED: 5:46 pm EDT June 26, 2006

Related To Story

> ENLARGE

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. -- Police say a man was arrested Monday after he was caught on surveillance tape using a most unusual item as a weapon.

The clerk of the Hollywood Adult Bookstore thought he was being held up at gunpoint. What the robber didn't realize was that police had the store under surveillance because it has been robbed twice in the past month.

Detectives say they nabbed Andre Clark as he ran from the store.

Capt. Tony Rode said when they got a closer look at Clark's "weapon," they realized it was the attachment you add to a hose to water your lawn.

Police said that they believe Clark is also responsible for the two prior robberies at the store.

MOST POPULAR STORIES

Man Jumps From 29th Floor In D
Firefighters Accused Of Raping V Rock Men's Room
Local 10 Goes Inside Terror Sus Warehouse
Naked Teen Stabbed To Death U Circumstances Man Calls 911, Says He Killed H
more most popular

MOST POPULAR VIDEO

Daughter of Murdered Singer Te Trial
Children Witness Mother's Murd
Take A Look Inside Terror Suspe
Nip Tuck Without Big Scars
Synagogue Can Stay
Coach Riley On Stage Dancing
Heavy Rain Brings Mosquitos
Runway Dog Gets A New Home
Cuban Migrants Make it to Shor
Who Is Wade Jones?

SLIDESHOWS

Nicole Kidman, Keith Urban G Downunder

Two superstars tie ceremony over the Australia. More Det

Heat Wins Championship; Miam

MIAMI-DADE COUNTY HEADLINES

- Local 10 Goes Inside Terror Suspects' Warehouse
- Charge Against State Attorney's Son Is Dropped
- Man Calls 911, Says He Killed His Wife
- Man Jumps From 29th Floor In Downtown Miami
- Miami Moves Up Ranks Of World's Most Expensive Cities
- Hurricane-Damaged Condo Seeps With Water After Weekend Showers
- Friend Says Terrorism Suspect Is 'Humble Dude Who Helps His Mamma'

BROWARD COUNTY HEADLINES

- Police: Man Uses Sprinkler Head To Hold Up Adult Store
- Firefighters Accused Of Raping Woman In Hard Rock Men's Room
- Structural Problems Found In Airport Garage
- Synagogue, Hollywood Reach $2-Million Agreement
- 8 Months After Wilma, School Board Building Gets New Glass
- Naked Teen Stabbed To Death Under Mysterious Circumstances
- Man Accused Of Stabbing Dolphins' Taylor Pleads Not Guilty
- Puppy Shot 4 Times Gets National Attention
- Officer Shoots Man, 2 Dogs During Domestic Dispute Call
- Man Driving SUV Backs Over Child
- Runner Falls In Street, Then Hit, Dragged By Car

FLORIDA HEADLINES

- Police: Murder-Suicide Shooter Was Former Collier County Deputy
- Riviera Beach Toddler Run Over, Dies
- Panhandle Men Charged In Multimillion-Dollar Internet Porn Ring
- Abducted Or Acting? Mysterious 911 Call Troubles Authorities

DESKTOP ALERT

News, Weather Alerts Delivered To Your Desktop

* Breaking News Alerts
* Severe Weather Alerts
Click here to download Desktop Alert!

PREMIUM WEATHER

How will the weather affect you? Know for sure. Monitor storms, animate your forecast, create personal alerts! Try it now! or Log in here.

Email This Story Print This Story

MOST POPULAR STORIES

- When He's 64: Celebrating Ex-B McCartney's Birthday
- Top 10 Most Popular Celebrities
- Darryl Hannah, Urban Farm Pro From Tree Top Perch
- Steelers Quarterback Injured In Wreck
- U.S. Military Says al-Zarqawi Kil Strike
- After Crash, Van Continues On \ Dangling From Window
- Chinese Baby Born With 3 Arms
- Clumsy Crook Crashes Through Caught

more slideshows

Man Jumps From 29th Floor In Downtown Miami
Firefighters Accused Of Raping Woman In Hard Rock Men's Room
Local 10 Goes Inside Terror Suspects' Warehouse
Naked Teen Stabbed To Death Under Mysterious Circumstances
Man Calls 911, Says He Killed His Wife
more most popular

... AT THE BOTTOM

Is Your Car On Recall?
Heart Disease: Women Are Clueless

Links We Like includes a selection of information, tools and resources from our partners and sponsors.

Two Sarasota adult stores robbed again

Last Update: 10/19/2010 6:38 pm

Print Story | ShareThis

SARASOTA - Sarasota Police are investigating two armed robberies that occurred minutes apart Wednesday night at two adult entertainment businesses. That makes a total of five robberies of adult entertainment businesses since July 16th in the City of Sarasota.

At approximately 11:25 p.m the suspect walked into the front door of X Factor in the 1900 block of 12th Street and pointed a handgun at the clerk and demanded money. The suspect was wearing a Halloween mask with hair sticking out of the top of the mask. He's described as a white male approximately 20–30 years old 6 feet tall and 190 lbs with brown hair and brown eyes.

As the suspect exited the store he instructed the clerk "I got something else to do give me ten minutes before you call the cops".

As officers arrived on the scene of the first robbery they received information on a robbery at XTC Super Center on 17th Street with a similar suspect description. Officers transported the clerk from the first robbery to the scene of the second robbery where they viewed the surveillance video and confirmed that it was video of the same person that robbed him.

The victim advised that he had observed a truck drive slowly past the business right before the robbery; the truck appeared to be a red Chevy with a loading lift on the rear of the vehicle.

The XTC store video possibly shows the suspect's vehicle which appears to have some type of a lift on the rear of the vehicle. Earlier that night a 2000 Forest Green Dodge Dakota was reported stolen in Sarasota County. The stolen vehicle is reported to have a lift on the rear of the vehicle.

Capt. Paul Sutton confirms that Sarasota Police are investigating the links between the suspect in these robberies and the man shot by Sarasota County Sheriff's Office today. they are looking for a white male that was wearing a mask and driving a green pickup with a lift on the back.

VOLUSIA & CENTRAL FLORIDA THE AREA IN BRIEF

3 rob adult bookstore near I-75

Posted April 11, 2006

E-mail this article
Printer friendly version
Most e-mailed articles
News on your cell

WILDWOOD -- Three men robbed the X-Mart Supercenter this weekend on State Ro Interstate 75, according to the Sumter County Sheriff's Office.

Two workers were inside the adult bookstore about 5 a.m. Saturday when three me store. One stayed by the door, while the other two entered and demanded money. C was armed with a gun and the other had a bat, according to the Sheriff's Office.

They ordered the employees to get on the floor and grabbed cash out of the register, reports said.

A few customers entered the store and were ordered to the floor. The suspects fled with an unknown amount of money, the Sheriff's Office said.

Etan Horowitz, Kevin P. Connolly, Stephen Hudak and Sarah Lundy of the Sentinel staff contributed to this report.

Armed men rob sex shop

By Ty Tagami
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

11:24 p.m. Wednesday, November 17, 2010

Five men, two of them armed, burst into a Jonesboro sex shop Wednesday night and ran off with untold amounts of cash.

No one was injured in the robbery of the Starship Enterprises in the 7400 block of Tara Boulevard, but police did call in an ambulance.

"There was a pregnant lady at the store," Clayton County Police Officer Otis Willis told the AJC. "Rescue was called to check her out."

Willis said it was unclear whether she was an employee or customer, but he said she was fine.

The men, two of whom had handguns, ran south on Tara and jumped into a black Dodge Ram.

Police responded to the address after an alarm company alerted dispatchers at 9:48 p.m.

Email Print A A A Text Size

Davenport, IA

Two men arrested fro armed robbery at adult bookstore

May 12, 2006 06:02 PM EDT

DAVENPORT, Iowa - Two Davenport men have been arrested for the armed robbery at an adult bookstore.

Police say 19-year-old Chrisopher Mitchell is the one who held up the store and 42-year-old Leroy Owens drove the get-away car. Both are being charged with first degree robbery.

It happened at TR Video last night. Luckily the store clerk remembered what the the car looked like and reported it to the police. Police busted them in a nearby neighborhood.

Local & Regional News Full Story >

Seniors rush to beat Medicare deadline

Hostage situation in Dixon prison ends peacefully

Day Trippin' -- Geocaching

News to Go -- May 12, 2006

Kolb interview tape released

West Rock River Bridge boosting southwest Rock Island

Hostage taken at Dixon prison

What do you think

- Taming the Prom
- Sharing the Kids
- Laughing Pets

City By City Online

West Rock River Bridge brings development to Milan

Development teams unveils 3 lighting plans lighting design planed for lock and dam 15

News, links, and inforr community. WQAD.co
eastern Iowa and west

Chicago Tribune
ONLINE EDITION

2 arrested in 4 robberies at X-rated bookstores

By Brendan McCarthy
Tribune staff reporter

July 15, 2005

While several robbers have taken hundreds of thousands of dollars from downtown banks in the last month, two Chicago men allegedly took a more novel approach: They have been accused of a series of X-rated adult book and novelty store holdups that began in mid-June.

David Joseph, 33, of the 2200 block of West Adams Street, and Paul Barney, 42, of the 2200 block of West Monroe Street, have been charged with several counts of robbery, police said.

They have admitted to four robberies at three adult bookstores, police said, and are suspected in several other thefts. They were arrested about 2:30 a.m. Thursday in a sting set up by officers from the Near North Police District.

Officers were staked out at Hubbard's Adult Book Store in the 100 block of West Hubbard Street when two men matching the descriptions of suspects in earlier robberies walked into the store. Police confronted the two as they left the store.

"We identified ourselves, and one guy pulled out a black Craftsman cordless hand drill from his pocket and started running," Patrolman Martin O'Flahertysaid.

Police said the men had just robbed the store, and officers found $151 in stolen money in their pockets.

Joseph and Barney also admitted an earlier robbery at the Hubbard store and robberies at Frenchy's Adult Book Store in the 800 block of North State Street and Over 21 Bookstore in the 1300 block of North Wells Street, police said.

"It seems like lately the adult bookstores have been getting hit a couple times a week," Patrolman Patrick Bryant said.

---

bmccarthy@tribune.com

Published: December 02, 2009 10:18 am

Sketch of Edgewood robber released

Tony Huffman
Effingham Daily News

The Effingham County Sheriff's Department released a sketch Tuesday of the man who allegedly held up the adult book store near Edgewood at 7:43 a.m. Nov. 23.

According to Effingham County Sheriff John Monnet, a man holding a large black pistol approached an employee of the store as she left the store with a money bag on her way to the bank to deposit an undisclosed amount of money. The suspect took the money bag and fled.

The man is described as a 5-foot 10-inch tall, skinny, white male with greasy shoulder-length hair. The suspect also reportedly had a slight mustache and bad teeth and was wearing mirrored sunglasses, blue jeans, a jeans jacket and boots at the time of the robbery.

The suspect fled the scene by getting in a late-1990's model Chevrolet truck with tinted windows driven by another suspect. The truck was last seen going southbound toward the Interstate 57 interchange, according to Monnet. A description of the driver was not available.

Monnet hopes the description of the robbery suspect and getaway vehicle will produce leads that will result in the arrest of the two suspects. Anyone with information about the incident is urged to contact the Effingham County Sheriff's Department at 217-342-2101.

Tony Huffman can be reached at 217-347-7151 ext. 135 or tony.huffman@effinghamdailynews.com

Your comment *

Your email address *

Your name (for public display) *

Submit

No records found

Photos

The Effingham County Sheriff's Department released this sketch of the suspect in an armed robbery at Adult Time.
None/Submitted Image
(Click for larger image)

Resources

Print this story
E-mail this story

More from the Local News section

Sketch of Edgewood robber released

Car crashes into Altamont McDonald's

Heartland board member selected to head agency

Council will hear city manager pitch

H1N1 flu shot clinic Wednesday

Popular business directory searches

Our Partners
American Profile Spry

Effingham Daily News, Effingham, IL Calendar

December–January

M	T	W	T	F	S	S
		2	3	4	5	6
7	8	9	10	11	12	13
14	15	16	17	18	19	20
21	22	23	24	25	26	27

ADD EVENT SEE MORE

© 2009, Effingham Daily News
201 North Banker Street; Effingham, IL 62401
Phone: (217) 347-7151; Fax (217) 342-9315
Send us your news tips & comments.

Popular Business directory links - Effingham Apartments | Effingham Attorneys | Effingham Auto Dealers | Effingham Auto Parts | Effingham Auto Repair | Effingham Beauty Salons | Effingham Car Rental | Effingham Dentists | Effingham Doctors | Effingham Flowers | Effingham Hotels | Effingham Insurance | Effingham Loans | Effingham Mortgages | Effingham Movers | Effingham Pizza | Effingham Realtors | Effingham Restaurants | Effingham Storage | Effingham Tax Preparation | Effingham Travel | Effingham Featured | More...

The News-Gazette
SERVING EAST CENTRAL ILLINOIS

Gunman robs Champaign adult bookstore

Wed, 11/24/2010 - 1:57pm | Mary Schenk (/author/mary-schenk) (/contact_author/418566)

CHAMPAIGN – Champaign police are investigating the armed robbery of an adult bookstore early Wednesday.

A Champaign police report said a man entered the Illini Video Arcade, 33 E. Springfield Ave., shortly after 2 a.m.

He pointed a gun at the 19-year-old male clerk and left with the clerk's cell phone, a business phone and an undisclosed amount of cash.

The report described the robber as a black man, about 30, 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighing 225 pounds, wearing a black Carhart jacket, black jeans and a brown bandana.

Police said the victim was not physically injured.

Anyone with information is asked to call Crimestoppers at 373-8477.

Categories (2):	News (/category/news), Courts, Police, and Fire (/category/news/courts-police-and-fire)
Location (3):	Champaign County (/location/local/champaign-county), Champaign (/location/local/champaign-county/champaign), Local (/location/local)
Tags (1):	armed robbery (/tag/armed-robbery)

Comments

News-Gazette.com embraces discussion of both community and world issues. We welcome you to contribute your ideas, opinions and comments, but we ask that you avoid personal attacks, vulgarity and hate speech. News-Gazette.com reserves the right to remove any comment at its discretion, and we will block repeat offenders' accounts. To post comments, you must first be a registered user, and your username will appear with any comment you post. Happy posting.

#1 (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2010-11-24/gunman-robs-champaign-adult-bookstore.html#comment-65181)
Ryder (http://www.news-gazette.com/users/ryder) wrote on November 24, 2010 at 3:11 pm

When people were getting beat up for sport, I shrugged my shoulders. When peeping Toms somehow breached airtight dorm security, I said, "Oh well." But robbing the adult video store? TOO FAR, CROOKS, THAT WAS THE LAST STRAW.

Search News Stories

More Like This

- Man with handgun flees with adult bookstore with cash (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2007-06-17/man-handgun-flees-adult-bookstore-cash.html)
- Police seeking gunman after north Champaign shooting (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2009-07-27/police-seeking-gunman-after-north-champaign-shooting.html)
- Pedestrian has money stolen by gunman in Urbana (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2009-06-08/pedestrian-has-money-stolen-gunman-urbana.html)
- Gunman's surrender ends hostage crisis (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2007-06-22/gunmans-surrender-ends-hostage-crisis.html)
- Woman, adult son escape evening blaze in Champaign (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2006-12-29/woman-adult-son-escape-evening-blaze-champaign.html)
- Champaign teen charged as adult in stabbing (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2010-11-12/champaign-teen-charged-adult-stabbing.html)
- 5 of 15 offered adult diversion for bar fight arrests (/news/courts-police-and-fire/2008-03-26/5-15-offered-adult-diversion-bar-fight-arrests.html)

News by Date

« (#) March 2011 (#)

Su	Mo	Tu	We	Th	Fr
6 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-06)	7 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-07)	1 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-01)	2 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-02)	3 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-03)	4 (/category/news/date?type=story&created[value][date]=2011-03-04)
13	14	8 15	9 16	10 17	11 18
20	21	22	23	24	25
27	28	29	30	31

(Updated every 5 minutes)

- News (/news/local)
- Sports (/category/sports)
- Entertainment (/category/arts-and-entertainment)
- Community (/community)
- Calendar (/calendar)
- Classifieds (/classified)
- Obituaries (/obituaries)
- Archives (/news/archives/)
- Advertiser Index (/advertiser-index/)

- Subscriber services (/section/services/subscriber-services)
- General services (/section/services/general-services)
- Advertising services (/section/services/advertising-services)
- Reader services (/section/services/reader-services)
- Job listings (http://careers.news-gazette.com)
- Online services (/section/services/online-services)

- IlliniHQ (http://www.illinihq.com/)
- Business Directory (http://directory.news-gazette.com/)
- WDWS (http://www.wdws.com/)
- WHMS (http://www.whms.com/)
- Pulse (http://www.checkyourpulsedaily.com/)
- Central Illinois Business (http://www.centralillinoisbusiness.com/)

- idomagazine (http://www.idomagazine.com/)

(#)

- (http://www.twitter.com/news_gazette)
- (http://www.facebook.com/newsgazette)
- Social Networks:

<<Back

WQAD.com LIVE, LOCAL, LATEBREAKING • MOLINE, IL

Man gets 20 years for robbing adult entertainment store

URBANA, Ill. A 21-year-old Champaign man has been sentenced to 20 years in prison for robbing an adult entertainment store last year and beating two men inside with a baseball bat.

Quentin Robinson pleaded guilty to armed robbery, admitting that he and a 23-year-old friend went into the Champaign shop at 2 a-m last August and took cash and a cellphone from the clerk and his friend.

He also admitted to hitting the men with a bat.

Prosecutors say the men also smashed glass counters, vending machines and video surveillance cameras.

Robinson will have to serve at least 17 years of his sentence.

His accomplice, Tori Starks, was sentenced to 40 years in prison in March.

Prosecutors said they have evidence linking both men to a similar attack last summer at another local adult entertainment store.

Document

Start a New Search | Previous Results

Other Formats: Abstract Full Text Page Print Printer Friendly

Metro on the go: 04.14.10

Indianapolis Star - Indianapolis, Ind.
Date: Apr 14, 2010
Start Page: A.16
Section: LOCAL -- METRO & STATE
Text Word Count: 881

Document Text

MARION COUNTY

Man charged in slaying of owner

of jewelry store

A suspect in the slaying of a Fountain Square jeweler had rings and a gun linked to the crime when he was arrested, police said Tuesday.

Michael Inman, 34, Indianapolis, faces a preliminary charge of murder in the slaying of David Pedigo, 55, who was found dead Friday in his store at 1042 Virginia Ave.

Inman also is charged with robbery in an April 3 theft and assault at Cirilla's, a Northwestside adult store.

Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department officials credited Patrolman James Sparks with linking the two crimes.

Sparks arrested Inman on Saturday outside an apartment complex at 2011 Egret Court.

Sparks had nine rings believed stolen from Pedigo Jewelry, police said. Officers also saw him toss a gun, which was matched to the one used in the slaying, police said at a news conference.

Inman was charged with felony robbery in the holdup at Cirilla's. Police said he stole $75 and beat and kicked the clerk.

Teens critically hurt

in hit-and-run

Two teen girls were in critical condition after police say they were struck by a suspected drunken driver Tuesday night on the Eastside.

A vehicle hit the girls in the 2800 block of North Keystone Avenue about 9:30 p.m. and continued driving, said Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department spokesman Lt. Jeff Duhamell.

The girls were taken to Methodist Hospital, Duhamell said. Their identities were withheld.

Shortly after the crash, police believe they found the vehicle in a yard in the 2800 block of Hillside Avenue. Officers questioned a 36-year-old man who appeared to walk from the vehicle, Duhamell said.

Graffiti tagger, 23,

gets work release

A man known by his "CHOKE" graffiti tag was sentenced to work release and community service Tuesday in Marion Superior Court.

Miguel Villanueva -- who missed an earlier guilty plea hearing, resulting in new felony charges -- was sentenced to 18 months in a work-release jail. He also must perform 1,050 hours of community service during four years on probation, including participation in an Indianapolis graffiti cleanup program.

Villanueva, 23, formerly of Richmond, painted his tag on dozens of buildings in Indianapolis last year, causing an estimated $100,000 in damage, prosecutors said.

He pleaded guilty Tuesday to all nine counts of criminal mischief and a count of criminal gang activity; his plea agreement left the sentence open to Judge Marc Rothenberg, who opted for community corrections over jail.

The judge will decide in June whether to order any restitution.

Man kills himself

during standoff

Indianapolis metropolitan police say a 39-year-old man died Tuesday after he shot himself inside his Westside apartment during a standoff with officers trying to serve an arrest warrant.

Police arrived about 11:10 a.m. at the Darby Court Apartments in the 6300 block of Sullivan Court, on West 21st Street just east of I-465.

Officers said several shots were fired at them through the door. One officer received minor injuries from shattered glass.

Alfred S. Grice, who was wanted on four counts of child molesting, barricaded himself inside his home for more than two hours.

During the siege police and SWAT team members fired tear gas into the apartment, used an explosive to breach the door and sent in a robot to search the apartment. Police ended the standoff shortly before 3 p.m. when the man was found dead in a bedroom.

Man stabbed to death following argument

A 32-year-old man was arrested Tuesday after an apparent disagreement led him to fight with and then stab a victim shortly before sunrise, police said.

Jose Luis Tinajero-Garcia called police at 5:54 a.m. and told the dispatcher he had just stabbed someone in a Northeastside apartment in the 8200 block of Heatherton Court, said Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Sgt. Matthew Mount.

When officers arrived, Tinajero-Garcia was standing in front of the apartment with a kitchen knife on the ground near his feet.

Inside, Fabian Gutierrez-Barcenas, 23, was found dead with several stab wounds. Tinajero-Garcia was held without bond at the Marion County Jail pending formal charges.

BOONE COUNTY

Zionsville teachers

OK cuts to save jobs

Zionsville - Zionsville teachers agreed to $1.4 million in salary and benefit concessions, letting the school district make needed cuts to the 2010-11 school budget.

The School Board voted 5-0 Monday to accept $2.1 million in cuts for the next school year. Drastic program and work-force cuts were avoided because the Zionsville teachers union agreed to concessions that included wage freezes and a halt to employer contributions to most teachers' retirement plans.

The concessions may have saved up to 30 teachers' jobs, said Union President Matt Doublestein.

HENDRICKS COUNTY

Man gets 13 years in death of alleged rival

Danville - An Avon man has gotten a 13-year prison term in the death of a man he believed was having an affair with his wife.

John Gary Cooper, 59, was ordered to serve eight years for reckless homicide, plus five years for using a firearm, in the May 27 death of Michael R. Gelinas. Hendricks County Judge Karen Love sentenced him Monday.

Cooper had been charged with murder, but a jury found him guilty March 2 of reckless homicide after a weeklong trial.

Cooper's wife, Angela Cooper, was a caregiver for Gelinas' mother, who lived in his house.

Star reports

Abstract (Document Summary)

BOONE COUNTY Zionsville teachers OK cuts to save jobs Zionsville - Zionsville teachers agreed to $1.4 million in salary and benefit concessions, letting the school district make needed cuts to the 2010-11 school budget. Drastic program and work-force cuts were avoided because the Zionsville teachers union agreed to concessions that included wage freezes and a halt to employer contributions to most teachers' retirement plans.

Other Formats: Abstract Full Text Page Print Printer Friendly

Most Viewed Articles (Updated Daily)

- Metro on the go: 04.24.10
- Let it out
- Junior Achievement faces questions, audit
- For the Record

- For the Record

Man tries to rob adult book store with steak knife

Muncie police are looking for a man who tried to rob an adult bookstore late Sunday night, armed with a steak knife. Police were called to the scene at a store called "After Dark," where the attempted robbery took place. Police believe the suspect was scared away after noticing surveillance cameras inside the store.

Fox59.com
12:05 p.m. EDT, April 19, 2010

Muncie, Ind. Man tries to rob Muncie adult book store with steak knife

Muncie police are looking for a man who tried to rob an adult bookstore late Sunday night, armed with a steak knife. Police were called to the scene at a store called "After Dark."

The attempted robber didn't get away with any items or money, police believe he got nervous after noticing surveillance cameras inside the store.

Fox59 Weather Alerts | Fox59 News Alerts | Fox59 on Twitter | Fox59 on Facebook

Sign-up for Breaking News Alerts from Fox59

TOP STORIES

Two shot, killed on west side
Updated: 37 minutes ago

Fines begin for absent House Democrats

Police investigating incident at Kokomo mayor's house
Updated: 2:08 p.m.

Homicides up 9% in Indianapolis in 2010
Updated: 2:18 p.m.

Music store employee shot during robbery
Updated: 44 minutes ago

Former Marine awarded Purple Heart 50 years later
Updated: 3:25 p.m.

MOST VIEWED

Teen dies following apparent game of 'chicken'

School mourns death of 13-year-old student

Sheriff promises more changes to jail as details emerge in death of pregnant inmate

Four county police chase ends in crash

Fines begin for absent House Democrats

DON'T MISS...

Write Your Own Caption!

Pictures: Eva Pilgrim's Outfit of the Day

Photos: Daytona Bike Week through the years

PHOTOS: Teachers Behaving Badly

Photos: Carnival in Brazil

News
Blogs
Bloomington Crimetracker
Digital Newsroom
Education
Facebook
Fox 59 Faceoff
Local News
Morning News
Nation/World
Politics
RSS Feeds
Special Reports
Twitter
Weird News

Business
Sci-Tech
Indianapolis Business Journal
Money Forum
Taking Stock
Technology

Weather
7-Day Forecast
Blog
Closings & Delays
iMap Radar
Jet Stream
Live Guardian
National Radar
National Temps
Regional Radar
Regional Temps
Severe Weather Alerts
State Temps
Storm Reports
Tower Cam
Watches & Warnings
Weather Stick
Wind Chill

Sports
Auto Racing
College
Colts
Fever
High School
Indians
Local Sports
Pacers
theSnakepit

Features
Be Our Guest
Caught on Camera
Sci-Tech
Do My Job
Does It Work
Female Focus
Fox 59 Faceoff
Gas Prices
Hoosier Gardener
Living Well
Mommy Magic
Money Forum
Paying It Forward
Pets
Sherman Live!
Straight Talk
Stretching Your Dollar
Taking Action

Health
Ask Dr. Steve
Family
Fitness
Health Careers
Health Key
Healthy Aging
Men
Wellness
Women

Lifestyle
Do-It-Yourself
Family Life
Fashion
Food
Money Forum
Pets
Travel
Weddings

Entertainment
Community Connection
Contests
Fox59 TV Schedule
Get Out with NUVO!
Lou Harry A&E Previews
Movie Showtimes
THIS TV Schedule

Fox59
Advertise
Contact Us
Contests
Employment Opportunities
Features
Links
Staff Bios

NEWS GATHERING PARTNERS | Indianapolis Business Journal | NUVO Newsweekly | Indianapolis Woman Magazine | WTTS FM 92.3 | WIBC 93.1 | HANK FM 97.1 | Soft Rock B105.7 | 1070 The Fan | The Times of Noblesville | The Paper of Montgomery County | Hendricks County Flyer

Privacy Policy | Terms of Service | Contact Us | About Our Ads

Fox59 WXIN-TV, 6910 Network Place, Indianapolis, IN 46278

A Tribune Broadcasting website

The Wichita Eagle
Kansas.com

47°F
51°/37°
Complete Forecast

Posted on Sun, Aug. 15, 2010

Crime down in core, up in Wichita's outer areas

0 Comments

BY HURST LAVIANA
The Wichita Eagle

As he drove through Midtown last week, Officer Bart Norton recalled the days when crime was threatening to overwhelm his North Broadway beat.

"South Broadway always had the moniker, but there was a time that North was just as bad," he said.

The prostitution and drug dealing that had long plagued South Broadway were spreading north across Douglas.

But by focusing on the heart of the problem — the hotels — police and many who live and work in the area think North Broadway may be turning the corner on crime.

In an effort to closely monitor neighborhood crime trends, Wichita police divide the city into 491 crime reporting zones. Two of the three zones that saw the steepest drop in crime last year were along North Broadway in Norton's Beat 41.

A closer look at 2009 figures shows that many neighborhoods near the city's center saw significant decreases in crime last year.

PHOTOS

Gallery: Crime down in core area

See reported crimes on our daily Wichita crime maps

Searchable database: Search for crimes on your block (2008 and 2009)

CRIME DOWN IN CORE AREA

Click here to see the video in full screen or to e-mail to a friend.

Wichita overall saw a 1.5 percent drop in major crimes last year when compared with 2008. The figures show that the drop occurred because the increases in crime on the fringes of town were more than offset by decreases in the inner city.

Consider:

* In the 19 crime reporting zones that are within a mile of Douglas and Broadway, crime was down 4.7 percent last year when compared with the average of the previous four years.

* In the 39 zones that are 1 to 2 miles from the city's center, crime was down 5.4 percent.

* On the outskirts of the city, in the 242 zones that are more than 5 miles from Douglas and Broadway, crime was up 11.4 percent.

MOST READ STORIES | NEW BLOG POSTS

1. Kansas sheriff confirms skydiving fatal
2. Top spots for tickets in Wichita bring millions in fines
3. Man robbed after truck breaks down near downtown Wichita
4. States seek to outlaw 'bath salts'
5. Rago man dies while assisting with field burn
6. SEARCHABLE DATABASE: Daily booking report from Sedgwick County Jail
7. Man says he was beaten, robbed after trying to steal DVDs
8. North High staff member arrested
9. Cause of fire that damaged 1880s building downtown still unclear, officials say
10. Pompeo attempts to block safety site

But the figures also suggest that the bulk of the city's crime is still occurring in and around downtown Wichita.

Those 19 zones in the city's center cover 5.8 square miles — about 3 1/2 percent of the city's area. But they accounted for 11 1/2 percent of the city's auto thefts, 8 1/2 percent of the burglaries, 17 percent of the robberies and 10 1/2 percent of the homicides.

Crime on the move

Deputy Police Chief Terri Moses said it's no secret that crime follows people as they move toward the fringes of town.

"I always point to where I live now" she said of her east Wichita home. "It used to be a wheat field, so the chances of a crime occurring there were null."

As the city grows, she said, police monitor call loads to make sure that officers are allocated to areas where crimes are occurring.

Moses said there were probably several reasons for the sharp drop in crime last year in Beat 41, which covers neighborhoods west of Broadway between Central and 21st Street.

Part of the drop, she said, could be attributed to the construction of the Nomar International Marketplace on West 21st. The project forced the closing or relocation of several businesses, she said, including an adult bookstore that had often been the site of robberies and other crimes.

Construction today has limited access to businesses around 21st and Broadway.

"You couldn't commit a crime at that intersection now," she said.

Moses said that in any part of town, it's important for police to work with residents to fight crime. She said that appears to be happening on North Broadway.

"I would like to think it's a combination of the police as well as the community policing itself," she said.

On patrol on Beat 41

As Norton was starting his day last Wednesday, Ellis Dixon was cleaning up his barbershop. Burglars had broken a window overnight in the business in the 1900 block of West 13th Street and carried out a 42-inch television and other electronic equipment.

That afternoon, Norton was awaiting the results of fingerprint samples that he had sent to the lab. Dixon was making plans to beef up security.

"If I have to put bars up, if I have to put in more security, that's what I'm going to do," he said.

Norton asked anyone with information about the barbershop burglary, or any other crime on his beat, to contact him at the department's Patrol North Bureau.

Norton's beat stretches west from Broadway past North High School to the Arkansas River, but he spends much of his time working with businesses on Broadway. As he drove east from the barber shop, he described the area.

"It's pretty diverse in all aspects — race, income, housing," he said. "We've got some very nice houses, but then we've got some that need a lot of work.

"The majority of people over here go to work and live their lives doing what they're supposed to be doing. But there's a very small percentage..."

When he pulled into the Auto Motel at 1230 N. Broadway, owner Sanjib "Sam" Mitra was remodeling one of the rooms.

Teri Weitzman, the hotel manager, was in the office describing what it was like when she started working there 3 1/2 years ago.

"Every other door was a crack dealer," she said. "There were hookers everywhere."

Today, she said, prostitutes are discreet if they are working in the area. Drug dealers are no longer welcome, she said, and they no longer frequent the hotels.

Norton attributed the change to a crackdown that started more than five years ago after someone opened fire with an AK-47 on a second-floor hotel balcony.

Then in July 2007, a 48-year-old woman who worked as a maid at the Auto Motel was found strangled in her room. The case remains unsolved.

Today, anyone checking into a North Broadway hotel is required to show a photo identification, a copy of which is left at the desk. At the Auto Motel, visitors must leave their names and addresses with the clerk.

Norton said an important part of the crackdown required the help of hotel owners. They were encouraged to report suspicious activity and put unwelcome visitors on a "notrespassing" list.

For those on the list, merely showing up on the hotel property can result in their arrest.

"If they come on my property, they go to jail," Mitra said.

Norton said the hotels on his beat have dozens of names on their no-trespassing lists.

"We've made lots of arrests, and things have calmed down a little bit," he said.

Norton said he enjoys patrolling Beat 41, an area where he rode his bicycle as a youth. His grandmother still lives on North Fairview, which is in his beat.

He said the diversity of the neighborhood makes his job interesting and enjoyable.

"It's something different every day," he said.

Reach Hurst Laviana at 316-268-6499 or hlaviana@wichitaeagle.com.

Add New Comment Login

Real-time updating is enabled. (Pause)

Showing 0 comments Sort by oldest first

' Subscribe by email + RSS

WHAS11 NEWS

LOCAL NEWS

Police catch the adult bookstore bandits

08:27 PM EDT on Tuesday, July 1, 2008

(WHAS11) - Police have arrested two men for robbing the same adult bookstore four times in just three months.

WHAS11 News

On one occasion Miles and Bailey allegedly left with not only cash, but with the entire cash register.

On one occasion they left with not only cash, but with the entire cash register.

Police have arrested 20-year-old Jamal Bailey and 21-year-old Anthony Miles.

Miles and Bailey are charged with robbing the Red Alley adult book store on south Seventh Street.

Police say the robbery spree began in late March before the two were nabbed over the weekend.

Each time they were armed with handguns and demanded cash.

The arrest report says that one time Bailey and Miles even took the whole register when the clerk could not open the drawer.

The Herald News
REALITY. DELIVERED ~~DAILY.~~ NOW!

Armed robbers target adult bookstore

By Michael Holtzman
Herald News Staff Reporter
Posted Feb 26, 2010 @ 08:07 PM
Last update Feb 26, 2010 @ 08:43 PM

FALL RIVER — A Flint Street pornography shop was robbed of cash at gunpoint by two masked men early Thursday night, police and the owner said.

It was the first time it had been robbed in their 15 years of business, said Paul Balasch, owner of XXXTRA Video at the corner of Pleasant Street. He said they stole about $400.

“We wanted to make everybody aware of what's going on,” Balasch said.

No one was harmed.

The armed robbery adds to about 50 others that have occurred since December, acting Police Chief Cathleen Moniz told the City Council this week during an extended dialogue over how to combat the spike in crime and reduced police staffing.

Half of that total were in December, and the number had dropped significantly this month, Moniz reported.

Police are offering a cash reward leading to an arrest for this latest armed crime, police spokesman Paul Gauvin said.

Balasch had left the store for the day to his brother, Michael Ponte, 54, who said one of the men carried a rifle that looked like a .22-caliber, while standing watch at the door.

He said they were in and out of the store “in two minutes.”

“One guy threw me a bag and told me to empty the cash register, and the other guy held the rifle on me,” he said.

They entered right after a customer exited the 203 Flint St. shop about 6:35 p.m., police said.

Both men were described as thin, white or light skinned, in their early 20s, wearing gloves and with black masks pulled up over their noses, Gauvin said.

The one carrying what looked like a small-caliber rifle with a wooden stock handle was about 5-foot-10 and 160 to 170 pounds, wearing a dark New York Yankees cap with white lettering and a dark hooded sweatshirt, Gauvin said.

The other man was described as an inch or two shorter and about 160 pounds, wearing a dark jacket with a white design.

After fleeing on foot south on Flint Street in the direction of Alden Street, the report filed by Officer Alan Beausoleil said, a silver sport utility vehicle was seen headed in that direction at a high rate of speed.

The incident is being investigated by the Major Crimes Division, and anyone with information is asked to contact Det. Richard Saraiva or the TIPS hot line, 508-672-8477.

Balasch said he closes his store the six days a week its open at 7 p.m. “just so I can avoid this kind of thing.”

He said they have video cameras showing the robbery. “But they had masks and gloves on. It (the cameras) doesn't deter these guys,” he said.

E-mail Michael Holtzman at mholtzman@heraldnews.com

.

Comments (28)
VICTIM OF CHOICE
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

How absolutely horrible preying on these nice, hardworking, honest, taxpaying, entrepreneurs. I was talking about the two young men ha ha ha. Hey what about THEIR civil rights & THEIR choice to make money blah blah blah. Smut is smut & it shouldn't be sold on the street, if the people don't want it. Can't feel all that sorry for them, making a living by ruining everyones lives.

truth hunter
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Perhaps the robbers were strip club entrepreneurs trying to stifle competition and amass some needed capital?

Anyone see who was driving the get-away car? Did they look familiar?
iNOTlistening
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Look at the picture of the owner with a big water bong in the background lol cnoodles
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Victim Of Choice....who do u think u r? I bet u r a recovering addict!!! Now u beg for God's firgiveness and guidance. I say to you...it's too late. Ask for God'd guidance when things are good. He will keep you on a righteous path. Ask him when things are bad and God will think you are using him?
102945tfp
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Hey look, it's passive bunnyrabbit of choice. Schizophrenia is a tough illness. Our prayers are with you.
myopinion79
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

the main focus should be the fact that the flint has a major crime issue right now and something needs to be done before it's the entire city having problems or people are getting hurt. i hope these guys get caught.
fallriverstyle
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Just a couple of chaps looking 'Behind The Green Door' or some good ole 'Swedish Erotica voiceofreason72
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

when they get caught they will probably have it get dismissed just every other case in da riva.....they should be put away voiceofreason72
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

victim you are a fool. its a local business that people can go to if they choose. just because you don't choose to doesn't make it a bad thing founding father
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

I did not know that business was there...now that i do i will go there and spend some money.....as for the robbers i hope the next person they rob defends themselves and doesn't miss.....get a real job and stop hurting your families.....
name something after me
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

It just keeps coming 3 shooting last night in Fall River one person murdered, HN has not reported as of this post.
tone611

1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

armed robbery for 400 dollars how pathetic can you be?
jnap1979
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Victimofchoice you are so ignorant. It doesn't matter what kind of business they run, it's a legal business and they are following the law. Getting robbed is awful, period. It doesn't matter what business you are in.
jonbetty
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

staged! what an  you are, maybe you should try standing infront of a gun pointing at you and see if you call it staged. I know this guy and he's messed up over this, not to mention his wife who feels that the next time could be worse. Did anyone mention the variety store around the corner has been hit atleast four times this year, I guess the people there are ok with you and they didn't stage it.
Just Dick
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

I'm surprised this Mom and Pop store still survives when you can go online and buy whatever you want. Sorry for the loss. Hope they had insurance and hope the criminals get hard time.
WDW_Dad
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Seeing everyone is ok without serious injury....
I'm glad to see Mike is ok and didn't try to be a hero. $400 is peanuts and not worth the price of a life. Mike did the right thing and although I'm being a monday morning quaterback, maybe it's time to put a buzzer lock on the door and allow entry to only one at a time.The buzzer system works. No one is allowed entry without that eletric lock opening.And if it's a robbery, most thiefs seeing this type of system do not bother. I know these fools are low-lifes and druggies and really don't care. But they want it to be fast too. They want easy entrance and exit. If they know they have to be buzzed in and out, it does curb future troubles. 'JONBETTY, if you personally know them, pass this idea over to Paul. It's not all that much to install and it lower insurance as well. Feel free to pass my email over to him.. WDW_Dad@yahoo.com

SSmith
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

One of the 3 adult stores in Fall River, this one has been there for I would guess about 10 years maybe longer with no troubles. The tone for some comments displays personal disagreement with this legitimate and yes tax paying business. The flint neighborhood has made zero complaints about this business. Check your history books, pushing ones beliefs on others went out in 1776 in this country. Disagree or not they and all deserve equal protection under the law and save me that lip that the founding fathers are rolling in their graves, maybe they are, maybe theyre not.

Some of the commenters believe their personal opinions or beliefs trump the fact that someone was on a city street with a rifle, walking into a legitimate business with the threat of serious injury or death to rob. That should be your outrage. I could care less about porn or strip clubs. I dont think store 24, 7-11 or other stores should be open all night in Fall River either and they are asking for problems, but I dont think they should be robbed. If you dont like that stuff, fine, but some statements say all that needs to be said about your individual psyche. Whats next, someone who is poor deserves (what they get) or will color or race matter to you or do you think if a woman wears a dress she should deserves what happens? Some of you are truly lost in this world and have some very deep problems, and should probably double up on the daily doses.

alwaysAgoodtimewith theGoodLord
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Why do they call them adult stores? They really should call them juvenile stores because there really isn't anything adult about it. Really, they should.
frhviolet
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

First banks then stores now this . What is next ?
102945tfp
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

well, almost a passive bunnyrabbit of choice, maybe you should push that idea at your church, get those sickos straightened out first, then come back and take care of the rest of us. Good luck with that, little fella.
irate taxpayer
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Some of you have the sense of humor of a quahog. Let's see a bank on one corner and adult store on the other. Hmmm, which one can we score? Probably customers of the store who knew only one person would be in there and no cameras!
vmc
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

A lot of comics around iknowit
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

If u dont like adult stores or things like that u dont have to go there but they have a rite to operate and they pay taxes and i dont ever remember any problems there, so VICTIM OF CHOICE shut up k thanks bengalsurock
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

how sad...these drug addicts will rob anyone for any amount just to keep using,,,,,,Fall River needs to remove the gangs and addicts off the streets before the crime rate wil drop....The Fall River Police Department needs to step up their game and stop turning a blind eye!!! Public safety needs to be the number one priority!
Jethro Clambert
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Interesting a parrallel in the lows of society - Adult book store robbed by a couple of gun men who likely would patronize the strip club. The stripper then can recieve 1 dollar bills from the robbers who stole the cash from the adult book store. Micro economy going on here!!!
passive Lamb VI
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Despite these 2 fumbling men, exercising THEIR right to operate & their choice ...I think they deserve an award of some sort.
neverhadtoknockonwood
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Babes in thailand how is that offensive.....
myopinion79
1 year ago
Report Abuse
You must be logged in to report abuse.

Report Abuse

Just wondering why most of the time no one sticks to the point of the article?? Not only on this article but most that are posted on here. Herald News should really keep a close eye on some of the idiotic comments posted on here. Majority of the comments most likely come from people who have no education but think they know it all.

Login or register to post a comment:

Login

Username:

Password:

Forgot password

Login

Register

Email:

First Name:

Last Name:

I agree to the terms of use

I am over 13 years of age

NOTE: Your inbox must accept emails from "no-reply@gatehousemedia.com"

Register

ClickOnDetroit.com

Employee Shot At Adult Bookstore

Deputies Investigate Whether Shooting Occurred During Robbery

POSTED: 12:07 pm EDT July 25, 2005

An employee was critically wounded in a shooting at an adult bookstore in Highland Park Monday morning.

The shooting occurred at the Worldwide News bookstore located on Woodward Avenue, south of McNichols Road, according to the Wayne County Sheriff's Department. A 31-year-old Highland Park man was shot in his chest, Local 4 reported.

The shooter is described as a black man in his early 20s, about 5 feet 7 inches tall and wearing blue jeans, a black jacket and a dark-colored cap.

Sheriff's deputies are investigating whether the shooting occurred during a robbery attempt. Investigators are reviewing a surveillance tape from the store.

No further information was available.

INTERNATIONAL Herald Tribune AMERICAS

Armed robber steals $140 cash, $22,000 in porn movies from Michigan adult bookstore

The Associated Press

Published: April 13, 2007

PONTIAC, Michigan: Police are hunting for a man who held up an adult bookstore, stealing $140 (€103) in cash and locking the clerk in the bathroom before also escaping with $22,000 (€16,336) worth of pornographic movies.

E-Mail Article
Listen to Article
Printer-Friendly
3-Column Format
Translate
Share Article
Add to Clippings
Text Size

Authorities said the unidentified man walked into the store on Wednesday night and browsed for several minutes. He then asked the clerk for help, pulled out a large semiautomatic handgun and demanded money from the register, Pontiac police Sgt. William Ware said.

The robber took $140 and locked the clerk in the bathroom, Ware said. He said the store employee emerged after several minutes and noticed that several cases of adult movies also were missing.

"It's possible the man may try to sell the stolen movies," Ware told The Oakland Press.

Fantasies Unlimited store manager Tim Merriwether said Friday that this was the first time the store had been robbed since it opened in Pontiac, a suburb north of Detroit.

Ware and Merriwether said they do not think the robber was a regular customer at the store.

The man, who can be seen on a surveillance tape, grabbed four cases holding about 800 movies, while leaving behind about seven other cases, the manager said. He said there was no apparent pattern in what the robber stole and what he left behind.

Today in Americas

- World Bank weighs Paul Wolfowitz's future
- 3-month extension of duty in Iraq stuns a U.S. patrol there
- E-mail from Gonzales aide reveals hiring plans

Most E
Last 24 H
1. In br
2. Visio
3. Wall
4. Write boomer
5. In Eu
6. Man
7. Turn
8. Beyo
9. Town
10. App

"Apparently, he took all that he could grab," Merriwether said.

Home > Americas

Back to top

More Features
Blogs
Top Ten Articles

The Newspaper
Today's Page One in Europe
Today's Page One in Asia
IHT Electronic Edition
E-Mail the Editor

Services
Funds Insite
Classifieds
Advertise with the IHT

Other Formats
E-Mail Alerts
AudioNews
Mobile
RSS XML

Site Feedback | Terms of Use | Contributor Policy | Site Map

Man Dressed As Woman Robs Berkeley Adult Video Store

Jennings Police Wonder If It Is The Same Bandit That Hit Clothing Store Friday

Male Robber Dressed As Woman Hits Berkeley Adult Video Story
(2:17)

By Chris Regnier
FOX2now.com
9:28 p.m. CST, February 15, 2010

BERKELEY, MO (KTVI-FOX2now.com) A man dressed up as a woman pulls off an armed robbery at a Berkeley adult entertainment store and it is all caught on surveillance video. It might not be the first robbery that this cross dressing bandit has committed. Berkeley police are talking to cops in Jennings to see if this cross dressing bandit may be on a crime spree.

On Monday, FOX 2 obtained exclusive surveillance video of a man dressed as a woman who robbed a Berkeley adult store over the weekend. A similar crime happened in Jennings last Friday.

The surveillance video shows just how far the suspect was willing to go to look like a woman in the Berkeley case. The cross dressing bandit had a dress on as well as a sweater and a scarf when he robbed the Hustler Hollywood store on Natural Bridge Road in Berkeley. Investigators say the suspect came in about 12:40am Sunday. He shopped for a few minutes, got in line, paid for a small item, then pulled a long barrel handgun on the clerk and came around the counter.

Related

Jennings Police Looking For Cross Dressing Bandit

Topics
Crimes
Berkeley (Alameda, California)
Theft

See more topics »

Top Stories

Police Arrest 83 in Soulard Mardi Gras Festivities

Police Search for Missing 6 Year Old

Bill Could Change How Missouri Teachers Are Paid, Hired

Photo Galleries

Pictures - Truck-Trailer Buckles On 270 Near Granite City

Kate Middleton childhood photo

The 25 Drunkest Countries

Pictures - Mardi Gras Mayor's Ball

March 4th Severe Weather

St. Louis Mardi Gras 2011!

Berkeley Police Chief Frank McCall described what happened next.

"He says something to her. I haven't ascertained what that is at this time. But he decides he's going to take the entire drawer. And he reaches in- I guess there's a cable or something that attaches it to the computer system. He rips that out and as I said takes the entire drawer."

Berkeley police are now looking into whether the same cross dressing bandit is responsible for a robbery last Friday afternoon at the Workwear for Less store on Halls Ferry Road in Jennings. In that case, investigators say a man dressed as a woman again used a long barrel handgun to pull off the crime.

Berkeley and Jennings police are now combining resources.

McCall says, "We have contacted and spoken with Jennings. We will be working with Jennings to ascertain if were dealing with the same individual," explained McCall.

Investigators say in both cases, the suspect may have had either a short beard or a goatee. The suspect in both robberies also hid the gun in his clothes.

Nobody was hurt in either case.

Comments (0)

Add comments | Discussion FAQ

Currently there are no comments. Be the first to comment!

Must See Photos

Popular Stories

1. Man Charged With Molesting Child At Ritz-Carlton
2. Police Search for Missing 6 Year Old
3. Police Car, Van Collide In Spanish Lake
4. Man Struck And Killed On I-270
5. Police Make 60 Arrests During Mardi Gras 2011
6. Bill Could Change How Missouri Teachers Are Paid, Hired
7. Mardi Gras: The Party, The Mess, The Cleanup
8. Police Arrest 83 in Soulard Mardi Gras Festivities
9. Maryland Heights Officer Struck By Vechile
10. SHOCKING VIDEO: School Bus Driver Yanks Child To The Ground And Yells At Her

Photos: Top 10 list of Spring Break destinations booked on Orbitz.com for 2011

Pictures: World's largest stuff

Famous Sports Scandals

'Dancing With the Stars' Season 12 cast

Who said it: Charlie Sheen or Muamar Gaddafi?

News
News Links
Automotive News
Education
March For A Job
Precious Earth
Contact 2
FOX Files
Jaco Report
You Paid For It

About
News Team
Contact
Advertise
FAQ
E-Mail Alerts
FOX 2 Jobs
Mobile Apps
FCC/EEO Public Report
Program Schedule
Search

Perks
FOX Merchandise
Buy Tickets
Coupons
The Hot List
2-For-1 Gift Certificates

Sports
Prep-Zone
Illini
Mizzou
Billikens
Blues
Rams
Cardinals

Lifestyle
Food
Do It Yourself
Fitness
Family
Health
Parenting
Personal Finance
Career Advice
Obituaries

Social
Facebook
Twitter
Neighbors
RSS
Mobile Alerts
Weather Alerts
Send Photos

Police look for adult bookstore robber

by Newsdesk KRCG

Posted: 12.16.2009 at 11:00 AM

save send print

Newsdesk KRCG
read more »

Become a Fan
Follow Us
Contact Newsdesk
Newsdesk's feed
SUBSCRIBE

| more

Read more: Local, Crime, Lion's Den, Robbery

PULASKI COUNTY, MO. -- Pulaski County Deputies are on the lookout for an armed robber who held up the Lions Den Adult Bookstore on Highway 17 in Waynesville before 1 a.m. Wednesday.

The sheriff said the male suspect threatened the clerk with a knife.

The clerk said the suspect was about 6'3", weighing 190 pounds, had a brown mustache and goatee. At the time of the robbery the suspect was wearing a white baseball cap, light colored jeans and a green Carhart style coat with a white tee shirt with a Chevrolet emblem. The suspect drove away in a mid-1990's purple Buick Regal or Century.

Anyone with information on this robbery is asked to call the Pulaski County Sheriff's Office at 573-774-6196.

save send print | | more

Be the first to Post a comment

Post a comment

Login or Sign up to comment.

Post to Facebook

Post Comment

Most Popular

Most Read | Most Commented

UPDATE: Large military aircraft flies low over Jefferson city
Package lost in mail for five weeks and counting
Update: Accident puts two in hospital
Update: Postal worker attacked by two pit bulls
Update: Missing boy found in Saline County

Latest Headlines

Local & State | National & World

MU lecture series honors Kit Bond
Luetkemeyer meets with Israeli diplomats
Forums on school boundaries allow public input
Update: Postal worker attacked by two pit bulls

Statewide tornado drill postponed

More stories »

Associated Press Video

Raw Video: NYC Police Helicopter View on 9/11

Report: Military Leadership Needs More Diversity

Nev. Sen. Ensign Says He Won't Run Again

Trials at Gitmo to Resume

Raw Video: Car Slams Into Gas Station

Oil Settles Above $105 a Barrel, Gas Above $3.50

More videos »

About Us
About Us
Our Team
Contact Us
Advertise With Us
Program Schedule
Email Newletters
RSS Feeds
Closed Captioning Concerns

News
Stories
Video
Slideshows
Money
Politics
KRCG Blogs
Life at the Lake
Severe Weather Week

Sports
Stories
Video
Slideshows
Big Ol Fish
Deer Tracker
Team of the Week
Athlete of Week
Soccer Stats

Weather
Stories
Video
Slideshows
Radar
Severe Weather
Agriculture
WeatherCall
uShare Weather Pix
School Closings
Severe Weather Week

Neighborhood
Stories
Video
Slideshows
Community Links
uShare
Connect with KRCG
Deer Tracker
Community Closings

Best Bets
Auto
Home
Travel
Beauty
Health
Financial Entertainment
Legal
Senior Living

Entertainment
Stories
Slideshows
CBS Video
AP Video
uShare
Program Schedule
Your Home
KRCG Blogs

Do You Know This Armed Robber?

Last Edited: Thursday, 03 Apr 2008, 9:22 PM CDT
Created: Thursday, 03 Apr 2008, 3:45 PM CDT

By Teresa Woodard

Armed Robbery

(KTVI - myFOXstl.com) -- Police in St. Charles are looking for a criminal carrying a bold weapon and wearing a weird disguise. He robbed an adult bookstore at gunpoint, while his face was painted white.

At least police believe it was white paint on his face. The man walked into the Pure Pleasures Adult Mega center on Old Highway 94 about 4:15 Thursday morning. Police say he was carrying either a rifle or a shotgun and pointed it at the clerk.

Workers say he told the clerk to give him all the money in the cash register. And he instructed him not to look at his face.

"There's some kind of white substance that's on his face," says St. Charles Police Lt. Donovan Kenton. "We're not exactly sure what that is."

"It's a little out of the ordinary for someone to look like that," Kenton says. "It's an assumption he's trying to distort his features a little bit."

"It could be some kind of a skin condition."

Police hope surveillance pictures taken by their security camera lead them to their guy, or better yet that their guy leads police to him.

"Normally what'll happen is he'll brag about it to somebody," Kenton says.

"We're hoping someone in the community knows who this individual is," Kenton says.

He was wearing a grey hoodie, and had it pulled tight around his face. Despite the white disguise on his face, police were able to determine he has a reddish goatee. He's believed to be in his early to mid 30's, approximately 6 feet tall.

Pure Pleasures workers say they were going to immediately institute new security measures, including locking their door on the overnight shift. Anyone who wants in will have to be buzzed in by workers.

If you've got a tip, St. Charles police say someone is manning the phones 24 hours a day. You can call 636-949-3520, or Crimestoppers at 636-949-3333. There is a reward.

News Release from the St. Charles City Police Department:

The St. Charles Police Department is investigating an armed robbery that occurred in the early morning hours of Thursday April 3, 2008 at the Pure Pleasure Video Store located in the 1800 Block of Old Hwy. 94 South. A white male suspect entered the business at approximately 4:13 a.m., displayed a long gun and demanded money from the clerk. After obtaining money from the register, the suspect fled the store.

The suspect is described as a white male, early to mid 30's, approximately 6 feet tall with a medium build and a reddish colored goatee. The suspect was wearing a dark colored coat and a grey "hoodie" sweatshirt with the hood pulled tight around his face and dark colored pants. The suspect is described as having a "painted white face", with some sort of white substance covering his exposed facial area.

Any person having information reference to this crime is asked to contact the St. Charles Police Department at 636-949-3520 or can do so anonymously through St.

Charles CrimeStoppers at 636-949-3333.

Print This Page

- Hot Topics:
- Oil boom
- Boy shot
- Embezzlers
- GazPrepSports
- Zonta blanket
- City Council rift
- Heights fire
- Bark beetles
- Zipline
- Education data

Home / News / Local News / Crime & Courts

Adult-bookstore robber sentenced

- Story
- Discussion

Adult-bookstore robber sentenced

Gazette Staff The Billings Gazette | Posted: Tuesday, July 27, 2010 12:00 am | (6) Comments

Font Size:

Default font size

Larger font size

- 1
- Recommend Sign Up to see what your friends recommend.

A man who helped rob a Billings adult bookstore was sentenced Monday in District Court.

Joel Dean Sills, 42, received a sentence of 10 years to the state Department of Corrections, with five years suspended, for the robbery at the Ball Adult Books and Video store on South 26th Street on April 8, 2009.

Sills and a co-defendant, 25-year-old Benajah Phillip Shipp, were charged with robbing the store with a knife.

Shipp died in March, and the criminal case against him was dismissed. Prosecutors said Shipp was armed with a knife during the robbery.

Sills briefly apologized before he was sentenced for felony robbery by accountability.

Judge Gregory Todd followed a plea agreement in the case after a prosecutor said Sills has at least five prior felony convictions.

Sills paid $450 in restitution at the sentencing hearing. Todd agreed to recommend Sills for a state drug treatment program.

Posted in Crime-and-courts on Tuesday, July 27, 2010 12:00 am | Tags: Joel Dean Sills, Ball Adult Books And Video, Robbery

Share This Story

Print Email ShareThis

Other Stories

- Man sentenced for DUIs 4 and 5
- Internal controls reduce risk of embezzlement
- Trust busters: Embezzlers betray unsuspecting employers
- Some recent embezzling cases at a glance
- Appellate court affirms jury award in debt-collection case
- Man found passed out in Cadillac at McDonald's drive-thru charged with DUI
- Billings man charged with DUI No. 6
- Police investigating man who arrived at hospital with gunshot wound

Sponsored Links

Adult Bookstore Clerk Cut During Armed Robbery

Clerk Cut In Face, Drives Self To Hospital

POSTED: 1:43 pm EST January 15, 2010
UPDATED: 1:51 pm EST January 15, 2010

HIGH POINT -- A clerk at the Market Video and News adult bookstore on South Main Street was cut in the face by a man who robbed the business Friday morning, High Point police said.

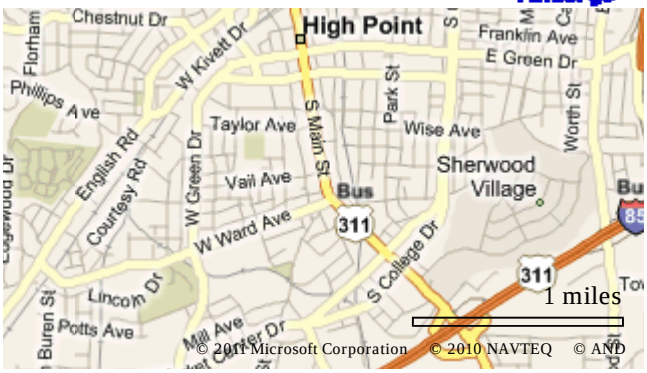
Police said a man went into the business at about 6:10 a.m., pulled out a knife, and began slashing at the clerk.

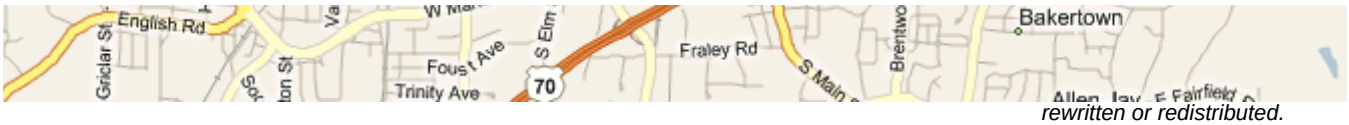
The clerk drove himself to High Point Regional Hospital to be treated for three lacerations on his face.

Police said by the time officers arrived, the man was gone. He was described as white, between 30 and 40 years old, with short hair and a goatee. He was also wearing camouflage pants and a dark toboggan hat, police said.

Police spokesman Lt. Steven Myers said something was stolen from the store, but wouldn't say what.

Myers said officers are reviewing surveillance video.





Your Comments

(18)

Close Username:
Password:
Confirm password:
Email:
First name:
Date of Birth: MM DD YYYY

By using Local Voices I agree to the Terms of Use and Privacy Policy

Join

Log in with your u local account or join.
Join | Forgot Password
Username Password log in
Or log in using another provider

500 characters remaining
(Log in to add a comment)

Share on Facebook
Share on Twitter
Post

The following are comments from our users. This is not content created by WXII12.com.
By posting your comments you agree to accept the Terms of Use
1 2 3 ...4 »

- anoiselesspatientspider [Profile]
  Member
  Jan. 19, 2010 1:57pm EST
  anoiselesspatientspider
  Inappropriate

  ncrangerwillie, tea baggers are those guys who dumped a lot of tea into lakes/rivers after Obama was elected to protest...I'm not sure what the point was, other than to show their dissatisfaction with the changing of the guard. Additionally, it is also a gay sex term (which I find ironic).
- ncrangerwilly [Profile]
  Member
  Jan. 19, 2010 12:17pm EST
  ncrangerwilly
  Inappropriate

  pardon my dumbness, but whats a tea bagger.....
- anoiselesspatientspider [Profile]
  Member
  Jan. 19, 2010 7:41am EST
  anoiselesspatientspider
  Inappropriate

  I have to agree, aliluyya and billde (nice use of the Miller quote--and how applicable, considering the headline). Those who think the clerk "got what he deserved" probably also agree with Pat Robertson when he said that essentially, the Haitians got what they deserved because they "made a pact with the devil" during the Haitian revolution.
- billde [Profile]
  Member
  Jan. 18, 2010 12:06pm EST
  billde
  Inappropriate

  I have to agree with aliluyya. It seems that the right-wings idea of rights is that they are free to tell everyone how to live. I quote Henry Miller. "People who go around trying to save the world have either no problems of their own or do not want to deal with them." Tea baggers just go away.
- aliluyya [Profile]
  Member
  Jan. 18, 2010 10:13am EST
  aliluyya
  Inappropriate

even if you work at a less-than-reputable establishment you don't deserve to get slashed on your shift. where are all the tea baggers (how well that term works here) complaining about their possible loss of rights?

1 2 3 ...4 »
Go to kickapps.com >

Elkin Tribune
The Stokes News
Rockingham County Radio
Blue Ridge Country 98.1 FM

Make WXII12.com Your Homepa

April 10, 2008

Tip leads to arrests of store robbery suspects

Reno police credit an anonymous tip for the arrest of two suspects in the March 30 robbery of a Reno adult bookstore.

Police said they interviewed Robert Mendoza, 44, and Michael Jason Cox, 26, both of Reno, on Tuesday and arrested them on suspicion of robbery, conspiracy to commit robbery and burglary.

Police believe they went into the Adult Theatre and Bookstore at 1052 S. Virginia St. and loitered before one of them used a black handgun to rob a clerk of an unspecified amount of money.

NIAGARA GAZETTE

August 1, 2010

BLOTTER: Police reports published Aug. 2 (http://niagara-gazette.com/policereports/x1936216986/BLOTTER-Police-reports-published-Aug-2)

Police sig

Staff Reports
Niagara Gazette (http://niagara-gazette.com)

NIAGARA FALLS — NIAGARA FALLS

Clerk foils attempted bookstore robbery

A clerk at an adult bookstore managed to disarm a sword-wielding robber early Sunday morning.

The counter clerk at the store in the 8600 block of Niagara Falls Boulevard told police a man entered the store about 3:30 a.m., wearing a goalie mask and holding a 2-foot long machete. The victim said as the suspect tried to come behind the counter, he grabbed the machete and disarmed him.

The suspect and the clerk then struggled with each other before the robber was able to break free and flee the store.

He was last seen running southwest on Cayuga Drive.

Man rescued after fall near Horseshoe Falls

Niagara Parks Police rescued a New Hampshire man after he tumbled in the Niagara River, just above the Horseshoe Falls on Friday.

The incident happened at 7:20 p.m. when parks officers were alerted to an injured man at the corner of Fraser Hill and the Niagara Parkway in the Falls, Ont.

When officers arrived on the scene they found a 43-year-old man from Londonderry, N.H., who had fallen about 10 feet down a steep bank into shallow water about 650 feet above the Horseshoe Falls.

The victim, who happened to be a paramedic, had fallen while trying to get a picture of the falls. He was unable to help himself back to shore because he had fractured his right leg.

Officers were able to climb down to the water level and assist the victim, who was becoming fatigued. He was extricated and then transported to Greater Niagara General Hospital with nonlife threatening injuries.

Police said the victim, who was just starting his honeymoon, was last seen apologizing profusely to his new wife.

Niagara Falls

• THEFT: Police are investigating a car break-in in the 2400 block of South Avenue. A 27-year-old woman told officers sometime between 9:45 p.m. Saturday and 7:30 a.m.. Sunday someone broke into her 2007 Dodge Caliber by smashing a rear driver's-side window. The victim said 15 cents was taken.

• ARRESTS: Two Falls men were arrested on drug and other charges. Keith K. Jackson, 25, 602 18th St., was charged with restricted use of alcohol and unlawful possession of marijuana. Kevin L. Jackson, 21, 1302 Garden Ave., was charged with unlawful possession of marijuana and false personation. Officers said they observed a crowd of people around a car being driven by Keith Jackson in a parking lot in the 1500 block of Pierce Avenue at 12:50 a.m. Sunday. When police approached the car, they found Keith Jackson drinking a beer while he was at the wheel. He also had 12 baggies containing marijuana in his possession. Kevin Jackson gave officers a fake name to avoid being arrested on an outstanding parole violation warrant and also had pot in his possession when he was taken into custody.

• ARREST: A Falls man was arrested after he caused a disturbance when he was stopped for traffic violations. Jeremy Scouten, 32, 2502 Falls St., Apt. 2, was charged with disorderly conduct in addition to the traffic violations. Officers said they stopped Scouten at 19th Street and Welch Avenue at 6:19 p.m. Saturday for running a stop sign and failing to signal a turn. After being stopped, Scouten got out of his car and began screaming and swearing at the officers.

Niagara Gazette 310 Niagara Street Niagara Falls, NY 14302

Published: 9/1/2012

Adult-bookstore robber sought by Oregon police

BLADE STAFF

Oregon police are seeking information about an armed robbery at an adult bookstore.

Police said a man with a gun entered X-Spot, 2246 Woodville Rd., about 6:20 a.m. Sunday and demanded cash from a clerk. He fled with an undisclosed amount of money.

Police describe the suspect as 30 to 40 years old, about 5 feet tall, 150 to 180 pounds, and of small build.

Anyone with information is asked to call police at 419-698-7060.

Guidelines: Please keep your comments smart and civil. Don't attack other readers personally, and keep your language decent. If a comment violates these standards or our privacy statement or visitor's agreement, click the "X" in the upper right corner of the comment box to report abuse. To post comments, you must be a Facebook member. To find out more, please visit the FAQ.

Related stories

- Natural-gas plant planned in Oregon
- 3 injured in monster truck mishap
- Police seek tips in central Toledo slaying
- Ourtown East news briefs: 8-21
- Sidewalk installation for Navarre approved

Masked men rob porn shop

YouNews™

Related Content

- Man robs same bank 3 times in 3 months
- Four armed robberies in four days hit Eugene

Story Published: Nov 17, 2008 at 10:18 AM PST

By KVAL Web Staff

Video

EUGENE, Ore. -- Two masked men robbed an adult bookstore at gunpoint late Friday night, taking cash and merchandise before fleeing the scene.

The two suspects entered The Adult Shop at 720 Garfield Street around 11:50 p.m. and ordered the two employees to the ground at gunpoint.

The first suspect is described as a white male approximately 20 years-old. He is 5'8" tall with a thin build. He was wearing dark baggy clothing and his face was covered with a bandana.

The second suspect is described as a white male approximately 20 years-old. He is 6'0" tall with a thin build. He was wearing dark baggy clothing and his face was covered with a bandana.

Both subject's coats were described as "puffy."

A week earlier, armed robbers committed four crimes in as many days between Friday, Nov. 7, and Monday, Nov. 10. Armed suspects robbed a tavern Friday, a gas station Saturday, a restaurant Sunday and a private residence Monday in the Eugene area.

No one was reported injured in any of the robberies.

"While crime statistics naturally fluctuate, we are indeed seeing a higher-than-typical number of armed robberies this fall," said Kerry Delf with the Eugene Police Department.

Anyone with information about this incident is asked to call Detective Jeff Donaca at (541) 682-5193.

Find this article at:
http://www.kval.com/news/local/34591104.html

Click to Print

SAVE THIS | EMAIL THIS | Close

Check the box to include the list of links referenced in the article.

LOCALLY OWNED BY PAMPLIN MEDIA GI

THE BEE since 1906

Printer-friendly version Email story link

Alert cops and a K-9 capture adult store robbery suspect

BY DAVID F. ASHTON
The Bee, Sep 8, 2010

When the 5 ft. 10 in. tall, 170 lb man came strolling into the Fantasyland Video Store — just north of S.E. 52nd Avenue on S.E. Foster Road, at 6 am on the morning of Saturday, August 7, turned out he wasn't looking to check out adult entertainment.

Charges against this suspect, 36-year-old Benjamin Anthony Gomez, include Second Degree Robbery.

COURTESY MULTNOMAH COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE

Instead, the man's early Sunday morning plans included confronting an employee, and snatching the store's cash, before riding off into the sunrise.

"It helped that our police offers got a detailed description of the suspect and his vehicle," commented Portland Police Bureau East Precinct Commander Bill Walker about the case.

"From there on, officers demonstrated great police work," Walker continued. "For instance, the license plate number given them wasn't quite right; it didn't come up. An officer kept running similar plate numbers, and finally pulled the registration of a vehicle that matched the description [of the getaway car], at an address on the 3500 block of S.E. Kelly Street."

At that location, in the neighborhood north and west of S.E 39th Avenue and Powell Boulevard, a non-English- speaking neighbor communicated that he saw a man, matching the suspect's description, running in the area.

"There was a short foot pursuit," Walker revealed.

A Washington County Sheriff's Office K-9 Unit happened to be nearby, heard the call, and also headed to the location. With the help of the dog, officers took the suspect into custody about a block south of the suspect's listed residence — all happening before 7 am.

"Like I said, this is an example of great police work," Walker concluded, "and, good interagency cooperation."

36-year-old Benjamin Anthony Gomez was charged with the crime, reported police spokesperson Lt. Kelli Sheffer.

The Multnomah County Department of Corrections' records show that Gomez remains in custody, with bail set at more than $250,000 for charges that include Second Degree Robbery, Second Degree Theft, and First Degree Trespass.

Find more stories about

- Gas Station
- Station Wagon
- Robbery Charges

FEATURED ARTICLES

Police: Man stole officer's badge
August 20, 2003

Shots fired in holdup ... at robber
May 5, 2010

Man shot in shoulder as he robs Allentown gas station, police say
May 4, 2010

Man pleads guilty to 2 robberies

Robert Landis of Center Valley said he held up gas station, adult bookstore for drug money.

January 14, 2011 | By Kevin Amerman, OF THE MORNING CALL

A Center Valley crack user who was shot during a holdup at an Allentown gas station in May has pleaded guilty to two robbery charges.

Robert Leroy Landis, 41, admitted to Lehigh County Judge Robert L. Steinberg on Thursday that he robbed a Valero gas station on N. Fourth St. in Allentown and the Adult Arcade on Route 309 in Springfield Township, Bucks County, in May.

Each of the felony counts carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison.

Landis, who has four previous robbery convictions, according to authorities, was shot in the shoulder by a cashier's son after robbing the Allentown gas station.

Landis insists he didn't have a weapon, although authorities say he pretended to have a gun. Landis said he was trying to get money for crack cocaine.

"I wasn't out to hurt no one or nothing like that," he said. "I know they didn't know that."

According to Assistant District Attorney Craig Scheetz and a police affidavit:

Landis entered the Valero mini-mart just before 10:30 a.m. May 4 and bought a soda. He then demanded money — holding one hand in his pocket as though he had a gun — and began smashing items on the counter. He pushed the cashier, Laila Hadeed, and stole the cash register and cash drawer, valued at $500. Police didn't say how much cash was in the drawer.

Hadeed told her son, Terry Hadeed, that she had been robbed and the son confronted Landis in the parking lot with a gun. Terry Hadeed told police he fired two warning shots in the air to get Landis to stop while he was entering a station wagon. The son said Landis recklessly tried to drive away, nearly striking him and a customer, Sarina Smith.

Scheetz said after Terry Hadeed was nearly run over, he "emptied his gun into the car," hitting Landis.

At 10:43 a.m., an officer who saw Landis driving away with a smashed back window tried to pull Landis over. Landis wouldn't stop and drove on a sidewalk in an attempt to elude police. Landis eventually ditched the station wagon about two miles south of the gas station and ran into woods east of Basin Street. He was captured around 11 a.m. after yelling that he was hurt. Landis was taken to Lehigh Valley Hospital-Cedar Crest, where he was treated for a non-life-threatening wound.

In an interview with police, Landis admitted robbing the Adult Arcade the day before. In the robbery, he also stole the cash register, injuring employee Sharon Heebner.

Landis' attorney, Andrea Olsovsky, suggested that Terry Hadeed didn't have the right to shoot Landis, saying evidence suggests shots were fired before Landis started driving.

"If he was hit and killed, there would be some sympathy for Mr. Hadeed and not much for your client," Steinberg replied. "When you rob a store, you run the risk that a victim will be armed."

Scheetz noted that Landis had an aluminum baseball bat next to the driver's seat. Olsovsky said he coaches Little League baseball, but acknowledged the rest of the equipment was in the back of the vehicle.

"I think we could all agree he wasn't going to the batting cages that day," Steinberg quipped.

The judge is scheduled to sentence Landis in March.

kevin.amerman@mcall.com

610-820-6510

Porn Shop Robbery

Print Article

SHARE

5.0000/5 rating

Reported by: Nate Potter
Friday, August 20 2010

ANTIS TOWNSHIP, BLAIR COUNTY - Police in Blair County are searching for the person who robbed an adult bookstore with a gun, early Friday morning.

Police say a man walked into the Adult World on Old Route 220 outside of Bellwood, just before 2:00 a.m., pointed a gun at an employee and demanded money.

Police said he got away with an undisclosed amount of cash.

Anyone with information is asked to call the Pennsylvania State Police in Hollidaysburg, (814) 696 - 6100.

You must be registered and logged in to post a comment.

WTAJ News

PA Powerball Winning Ticket Worth $1 Million
Reported By: Jody Gill
Monday, March, 7 2011 @ 1:01 PM
$1 Million Dollar Ticket Sold at A Turkey Hill Convenience Store
Read More»

DEP Says River Water Meets Radioactivity Guidelines
Reported By: Kevin Flanigan
Monday, March, 7 2011 @12:24 PM
The Department of Environmental Protection on Monday announced results of in-stream water quality monitoring for radioactive material.
Read More»

Centre County "Give Kids A Smile" Registration Open
Reported By: Jody Gill
Monday, March, 7 2011 @11:37 AM
Free Dental, Hearing and Vision Exams for Eligible Children 3-18 years of Age Residing in Centre County
Read More»

Two DuBois Area Burglaries Being Investigated
Reported By: Jody Gill
Monday, March, 7 2011 @11:01 AM
DuBois Police Looking for Information
Read More»

Corbett To Unveil Budget Proposal
Reported By: Patrick Schurr
Monday, March, 7 2011 @ 9:00 AM
Higher taxes not expected in plan.
Read More»

Start Prev 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 Next End Page 1 of 965

Bethlehem police investigate armed robberies

January 07, 2011 | By Pamela Lehman, OF THE MORNING CALL

Bethlehem police are investigating two armed robberies Thursday night at area businesses, but don't believe the holdups are related, according to police.

No one was injured in either robbery, said police Lt. Mark DiLuzio. He said police are still investigating exactly how much cash was stolen from each business.

According to police:

The first robbery happened shortly before 10:30 p.m. at the Lukoil, 2450 Catasauqua Road. Police said a man armed with a sawed-off shotgun came in and stole money from the register before running away.

He is Hispanic, about 5 feet 7 inches tall with a thin build. He was wearing a black baseball cap with a logo on it – possibly the New York Yankees. Police said he had a black bandana covering his face and was wearing a dark hoodie and baggy jeans.

The second robbery happened around 11:15 p.m. at the adult bookstore at 1162 Pembroke Road. Police said three men, one armed with a semi-automatic handgun, entered the store and robbed the clerk.

Two of suspects are Hispanic men who were both wearing bandanas to cover their faces – one white and one black. One man is about 5 feet 11 inches tall and the second is about 5 feet 7 inches tall. Police said they were also wearing dark hoodies.

The third suspect is a black man wearing a black jacket who stood watch at the door while the other men stole the cash.

Anyone with information may call the police crime tip line at 610-691-6660.

Find more stories about
- Bethlehem Police
- Sawed-off Shotgun
- Bandana

FEATURED ARTICLES

After Army, Appel's World Came Undone
June 6, 1988

Allentown Cites Police, Citizens For Their Efforts Officers Commended For Heroism, Bravery Beyond The Call Of Duty
May 19, 1988

Crime Stoppers Begins Organizers Pick 1st `Crime Of Week'
May 27, 1993

East Neighborhoods

Gunman arrested in adult bookstore robbery

Sunday, December 04, 2005

Murrysville police arrested a Penn Hills man early yesterday morning just a few minutes after an armed robbery took place at an adult bookstore.

Solomon Kenneth Hickman, 36, faced charges on three counts of robbery, carrying a firearm without a license, reckless endangerment, resisting arrest, and receiving stolen property.

Shortly before 2 a.m., a masked gunman fled from The Adult Mart at 6094 William Penn Highway. Three Murrysville officers stopped a vehicle on Route 22 when they saw a driver fitting the description of the gunman. Police said the vehicle's driver, Mr. Hickman, was abusive and struggled as officers tried to arrest him.

Mr. Hickman is being held at the Westmoreland County Jail.

E-mail this story Print this story

TRIBUNE-REVIEW

Robbers use adult bookstore's handcuffs to restrain employee

By Paul Paterra
TRIBUNE-REVIEW
Tuesday, July 19, 2011

A clerk in an adult bookstore in Murrysville was restrained by handcuffs taken from the shelves by two masked robbers toting handguns early Monday morning.

Murrysville police Chief Thomas Seefeld said the two men entered Murrysville Video News on Route 22 at about 2:15 a.m. as the male clerk was closing for the night.

"The clerk was walking through the shop, and a man appears wearing a mask and gloves and displaying a handgun," Seefeld said. "Another male appears dressed the same way, also showing a handgun."

Police were contacted when the clerk's female friend arrived to pick him up and saw two men rushing out of the store to a pickup and driving west on Route 22. When she found the door locked, she called police.

Officers arrived at the bookstore and shattered the glass door to get into the building. The clerk was found in a utility room cuffed to a metal section of the wall, Seefeld said.

"Using handcuffs from the business, they secured (the clerk) to a stationary object," Seefeld said. "They ended up getting an undetermined amount of cash, some of the clerk's personal belongings, including his wallet, and a couple of items from the shop. The (bookstore) had some video surveillance. We don't know if it will be any benefit to us."

Westmoreland County Detectives are assisting with the investigation.

The bookstore, which opened in 1975 under the name Adult World, has a colorful and sometimes violent history marked by two slayings.

• On Nov. 25, 1992, clerk James Scott Swoyer, 23, was shot four times and stabbed once while working the overnight shift. Swoyer's wallet and car keys were not taken; about $80 remained in the cash register. The slaying of the Westmoreland County Community College student remains unsolved.

• In April 1992, the bookstore was raided as part of a statewide crackdown on pornography.

• In 1986, Richard "Rick" Drylie was sentenced to eight to 20 years for the stabbing death of Daryl G. "Larry" Vincent. According to court records, Vincent made a homosexual advance toward Drylie after asking him if he wanted to smoke marijuana. Vincent was stabbed more than 30 times, and his throat was slashed. His body was discovered in a wooded area behind the store.

• On Jan. 13, 1977, a war over the business between two factions escalated into a shootout. William Birdseye, the notorious owner of area pornography dens, and another bookstore operator, John VanEmburg, were in a turf war with Adult World operator Allen Morrow of eastern Pennsylvania. Birdseye was the building's legal owner at the time. He and VanEmburg barricaded themselves in the building with a small arsenal. Morrow, at least five other men, and a Doberman stormed the building. Two of Morrow's cronies were struck by shotgun fire.

Paul Paterra can be reached at ppaterra@tribweb.com or 724-836-6220.

Tribune-Review

Back to headlines

Pair of suspects sought in heist at Adult Video

By Paul Peirce
TRIBUNE-REVIEW
Tuesday, June 4, 2002

Murrysville police are seeking help from early-morning commuters in solving a robbery Monday at an adult bookstore along Route 22.

Police Chief Thomas Fitzgerald Jr. said a masked man entered Adult Video at 6 a.m. and pointed a gun at a store clerk. Police said the armed robber and an accomplice fled with an undetermined about of cash and merchandise, including a number of adult DVDs.

"The clerk was not watching the door. He heard the door open and when he turned, there was a guy wearing a mask, pointing a handgun at him," Fitzgerald said. "The robber came right over the rack, pointing a handgun at him, and immediately put the clerk down on the floor, tying him up with plastic handcuffs."

Police Detective John Verner said the clerk was unharmed. The clerk said that while he was restrained on the floor behind the counter he heard a second voice, according to police.

"There were at least two people involved," Fitzgerald said.

Verner said the robbers ransacked the store before fleeing out the front door.

"We believe they ran away through the woods to their car, which was parked farther (west) in a field just off Route 22. With all the traffic coming past here toward Pittsburgh at 6 a.m. we believe somebody must have seen something," Verner said.

Police said they believe the thieves parked a vehicle in a field about 100 yards west of the store, just off Route 22.

The clerk, who was not identified, was able to trip an alarm to summon police, but the robbers got away before authorities arrived.

"The clerk's pretty shook up, but otherwise he's OK," Fitzgerald said.

At the time of the robbery, no customers were in the bookstore, which is open 24 hours a day, Verner said.

Although the store is equipped with surveillance cameras, they were not operating at the time of

Photo Gallery

click to enlarge

Murrysville police officers

S.C. Spangler/Tribune-Review

click to enlarge

Hugh Shearer

S.C. Spangler/Tribune-Review

Obituaries
Opinion
PenguinsLIVE
PiratesLIVE
Photo Gallery
Postcards
Real-EstateLIVE
Search Our Site
Shopping
Sports
SteelersLIVE
Subscriber Services
Tickets
Traffic Reports
TravelLIVE
Trib Store
Web Cams
Web Directory
Web Only
Weather
Wedding Planner
Yellow Pages

Our Newspapers:
Tribune-Review
Pgh. Tribune-Review
Valley News Dispatch
Daily Courier
Valley Independent
Leader Times
The Herald
Blairsville Dispatch
KQV Radio

the holdup, Fitzgerald said.

"We'd appreciate some help from the public on this one," he added.

Police said that while the bookstore has not been the subject of many police calls in recent months, it has, over the years, been the site of numerous incidents of violence.

Store clerk James Scott Swoyer of Jeannette, a 23-year-old Westmoreland County College student, was stabbed to death at the store early on the morning of Nov. 25, 1992. The murder of Swoyer, whose body was discovered by police behind a counter after they broke through a glass door to enter the building, remains unsolved. Police were summoned to the scene when a store manager could not get through a locked door to begin his shift at 9 a.m. the day before Thanksgiving.

Swoyer's was the second murder at the store in less than a decade. Store customer Daryl G. "Larry" Vincent of North Huntingdon Township was stabbed to death in the woods behind the store in 1985. Another customer, Richard "Rick" Drylie, also of North Huntingdon Township, eventually was sentenced to serve eight to 20 years in prison for killing.

According to court records, Drylie became angered after Vincent asked him to come to the woods to smoke a marijuana cigarette and then made a homosexual advance toward Drylie. Vincent was stabbed more than 30 times and his throat was slashed.

Even the issue of the store's ownership has prompted violence. A shootout took between warring factions claiming ownership of the business took place on Jan. 13, 1977, at the store, about two years after it opened as Adult World.

The late William Birdseye, a notorious owner of pornography-related businesses who owned the structure, and another bookstore operator, John VanEmburg, barricaded themselves inside the store.

Allen Morrow, an eastern Pennsylvania man who operated several Adult World chain stores, and five of Morrow's cronies stormed the building with a Doberman. Two of Morrow's men were injured by gunfire.

Anyone with information on yesterday's robbery is asked to call Fitzgerald or Verner at 724-327-2111.

Paul Peirce can be reached at ppeirce@tribweb.com or (724) 837-5374.

Back to headlines

Originally Published: 1/27/2011

Share

Police seek robber of adult bookstore on Penn Street

CITY OF READING

more news from this area >>>

Reading Eagle

Reading police are asking for help in identifying a man who robbed the Reading Adult Outlet, 316 Penn St., on Jan. 15.

Police said a black man wearing dark sunglasses and a black hat entered the store about 4 a.m. and ran behind the counter.

Investigators gave this further account:

A male clerk hit the panic button, alerting police dispatchers of the robbery.

The robber ordered the clerk to open the register, then grabbed an undisclosed amount of money, jumped over the counter and left the store. He was last seen running across Penn Street.

He was described as 5 feet 9 inches tall with a stocky build.

The clerk wasn't injured. It was unclear if any customers were in the store.

Anyone with information to help police identify the man should call Crime Alert Berks County's tip line at 877-373-9913. Crime Alert will pay a cash reward for information, and tipsters can collect the reward without revealing their identity.

[+] Enlarge. -

Courtesy of Reading police

Reading police are seeking this man, who they say robbed the Reading Adult Outlet on Jan. 15.

WEEU 830 AM | Reading Eagle Press
Reading Eagle Company • 345 Penn Street • Reading • PA • 19603 • 610.371.5000

08/28/2006

Sioux Falls Man Charged With Robbery

A Sioux Falls man is in jail for allegedly robbing a man he had just met at the adult bookstore downtown.

Twenty-one-year-old Lucas Johnson faces a number of charges. Police say he met a 28-year-old Baltic man late Sunday night. After going to eat, police say the two men were in a car, when Johnson pulled out a gun, and took the man's wallet. He also made him get cash out of an ATM.

Police found Johnson later and after a chase on foot they arrested him, finding the gun, the money, and some marijuana in the process.

<<Back

8NEWS RightNOW WRIC-TV8/DT RICHMOND/PETERSBURG

Adult Entertainment Store Robberies in Petersburg

March 16, 2007 06:20 PM EDT

FROM 8NEWS

Petersburg Police are investigating a string of robberies by a suspect targeting adult entertainment stores.

Police say "The Thriller" bookstore on East Washington Street was robbed at gunpoint March 4th.

Then on March 10th, just four blocks away, "The LTD" was robbed. In this case, we're told the clerks were pistol whipped, and then shot at as they tried to run away.

Early Friday morning, the same store was robbed again.

In each, the suspect escaped with cash and wallets.

If you have any information, call Petersburg Crime Solvers at (804) 861-1212.

LOCAL

Last updated June 19, 2007 4:43 p.m. PT

E-mail this Print this RSS

Owner of Spokane adult bookstore beaten to death in robbery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPOKANE, Wash. -- The owner of an adult book and video rental store has died after being beaten in a robbery at his store, and police on Tuesday made an arrest in the case.

John G. "Jack" Allen, 74, owner of Best Buy Adult Entertainment, died Monday evening of head injuries he received in the robbery Sunday night, said his nephew, Jason Kazmark. The cash register was taken from the store, as was Allen's pickup, which police found about a block away.

Spokane police arrested Jeramie R. Davis, 36, for investigation of murder and robbery. Davis originally called 911 to report finding Allen on the book store floor. He was arrested after hours of questioning by police.

Allen bought the store in November 1995, when the city was fighting with sex-oriented business owners to curb lewd behavior, and immediately tore out eight viewing booths in favor of an expanded video sales and rental section.

Even so, the store frequently was plagued by burglaries and robberies.

Information from: The Spokesman-Review, http://www.spokesmanreview.com

E-mail this Print this
E-mail newsletters
RSS

Save and share this article del.icio.us Digg Facebook Newsvine

Add AP Local headlines to My web site My Yahoo! Google More options

INSIDE SEATTLEPI.COM

Day in Pictures
Hungry wolves and more

David Horsey
The Orient Express...

Pike Place
The Market has plenty of tasty nibbles

AP LOCAL HEADLINES
· Microsoft to change desktop search after Google complaint
· Truck plows into pedestrians in N. Seattle suburb; one dead
· Technical workers at Boeing Kansas defense plant decertify union
· Teen charged in double homicide pleads guilty
· Sold: half of Idaho ghost town nets $250,000
· Man sentenced to 35 to life in elderly woman's slaying
· Mount Rainier National Park: missing hiker found dead
· Missing hiker found dead on Mount Rainier
· Owner of Spokane adult bookstore beaten to death in robbery
· Two Fort Lewis-based soldiers killed in Iraq
more

AP WEST HEADLINES
· St. Paul man pleads guilty to illegally selling seal parts
· Syringe, 911 call top trial in death of Nevada politician
· Sold: half of Idaho ghost town nets $250,000
· Tankers, ground crews battle Colo. fires; 60 more homes evacuated · Freeport-McMoRan CEO: Business good for new copper giant
more

LOCAL HEADLINES
· Truck hits group of pedestrians in Kenmore
· Chief criticized for interfering in investigation
· Body spotted on Rainier may be missing hiker
· Report finds gains and challenges for region's women · Worker killed at non-profit recycling plant
more

SEATTLE BLOGS

Strange Bedfellows
P-I staff on Seattle politics
· Hillary theme song
· Joel Connelly: The Children's Hour
· King County's new Web site

mypi Personalize now

ap: top headlines
· Bush plans to veto stem cell bill
· Army considers longer combat tours again
· NYC Mayor Michael Bloomberg leaves GOP
· Baby found near where woman disappeared
· 78 killed by bombing at Baghdad mosque
more

ap: odd news
· 'Mrs. Grace' sees her future in jail
· Firefighters resuscitate cats, rat
· Firefighters flush cat from storm drain
· BYU track star mops up, arrested
· Honduras audits 'love motels' over taxes more

most read
· Carter blasts US policy on Palestinians
· Truck hits group of pedestrians in Kenmore, killing one · Body spotted on Rainier is missing hiker
· Lake Stevens mom taped pacifier to baby's mouth; infant died · Bainbridge student arrested after school death threats
more

most e-mailed
· Developer buys Columbia City plaza
· Chinese toys: A recall scare
· Students protest foreign sweatshops
· Michael Moore's latest focuses on health care system · High costs halt work on new Wallingford QFC; Queen Anne plans in flux more

popular soundoffs
· Smashing Hamas won't bring peace to Palestine or Israel
· Iraq War: Collateral damage
· Students protest foreign sweatshops
· Why was body left in a tub for three days?
· Ronald Reagan revealed in new book
more

· Help/troubleshoot
· Customize headlines
· My account

Seattle Post-Intelligencer
101 Elliott Ave. W.
Seattle, WA 98119
(206) 448-8000

Home Delivery: (206) 464-2121 or (800) 542-0820 seattlepi.com serves about 1.7 million unique visitors and 30 million page views each month.

Send comments to newmedia@seattlepi.com
Send investigative tips to iteam@seattlepi.com

Red Letter robbery suspects could be linked to half-dozen holdups, police say

- Story
- More (2)

Font Size:

Default font size
Larger font size

Red Letter robbery suspects could be linked to half-dozen holdups, police say

BILL NOVAK | The Capital Times | bnovak@madison.com madison.com | Posted: Wednesday, December 15, 2010 11:55 am

Related Links

-  Related: Madison crime map

Crime coverage on Twitter

	Madison.com crime news @madisoncrime Keep track of crime in your community.

Political coverage on Twitter

	Madison.com Politics @MadPolitics All Wisconsin politics.

All the time. For the junkie in us all.

More from this section

- Man robbed at gunpoint in gas station parking lot
- Man 'just couldn't' rob store, turns knife over to clerk
- Update: Identities released in head-on crash that killed 3 in Green County
- Capitol visitors screened for weapons; woman arrested trying to rush past security
- Drunken driving suspect fights officer for Taser, police say

More...

Madison police said they might be able to close the book on a half-dozen armed robberies with the arrest of three suspects in the holdup of an east-side adult bookstore.

Kiwanta Ali, 21, Norman Walker, 23 and Peter Zimmer, 29, all of Madison, were arrested in connection with the armed robbery of Red Letter News, 2528 E. Washington Ave., on Dec. 9, police said.

Ali is believed to have been the gunman who entered the store and allegedly struck a customer with a handgun before fleeing with cash, while Walker and Zimmer are believed to be parties to the crime, police said.

Ali and Walker were tentatively charged with parole violations while Zimmer was tentatively charged with being a party to the crime of armed robbery.

Police spokesman Joel DeSpain told madison.com the three suspects are "persons of interest" in other recent armed robberies dating back to mid-November.

Similar holdups over the past month, according to police incident reports, include:

— The armed robbery of the PDQ convenience store at 5280 Williamsburg Way in Fitchburg on Dec. 10.

— The armed robbery of the Speedway gas station at 4902 Verona Road on Dec. 6.

— The armed robbery of the PDQ convenience store at 4202 Milwaukee St. on Dec. 3.

— The armed robbery of Deon's gas station at 2301 Commercial Ave. on Dec. 1.

— The armed robbery of the Stop-N-Go store at 6202 Schroeder Road on Nov. 21.

— The armed robbery of the PDQ store at 7502 Mineral Point Road on Nov. 16.

Posted in Crime_and_courts on Wednesday, December 15, 2010 11:55 am Updated: 5:17 pm. | Tags: Crime, Armed Robbery, Madison Police, Joel Despain, Kiwanta Ali, Norman Walker, Peter Zimmer, Speedway, Pdq, Deon's, Stop-n-go

Share This Story

Print Email ShareThis

Recommended for You

- Local officials say Walker plan to privatize ...
- Scott Fitzgerald is violating his oath of office
- Heavy rain could cause mid-week flooding, ...
- John Nichols: 'Constitutional crisis' ...
- State National Guard members could be called up ...
- Plain Talk: Guess why Walker wants to freeze ...

Thank you for using our printer friendly story page.

Return to story

Red Letter News robbed again

The Capital Times
November 18, 2008

Red Letter News, 2528 E. Washington Ave., was robbed again at about 5 a.m. Tuesday by a man reportedly wearing a ski mask and saying he had a weapon.

Madison police said the clerk at the adult bookstore didn't see a weapon. The robber took money from the cash register and fled.

The store was robbed twice in April by "bandana bandits," two Madison men who committed six robberies on the east side during the spring and were convicted of the crimes this

GOOGLEMAP2[350|maps.google.com/maps?f=q:hl=en:geocode=:q=2528+E.+Washington+Ave.,+Madison,+WI:sll=37.0625,-95.677068:sspn=33.710275,54.052734:ie=UTF8:

Return to story

Weather

52°F Mostly Cloudy
Forecast »

Calendar

- Find Events
- Send Events
- Movie Times

Homes

Buy your new home online.
Choose a County/Area:
Northeast Wisco Go
Find a Home:
- Quick search
- Map search
- City/State search
- Search by address

Apartments

- Rentals
- Place Ad

Jobs

- Find a Job
- Fill a Job

Cars

- Find a Car
- Sell a Car
- Research

Dating

- Find a date
- Your profile

Shopping

- On Sale
- Local Coupons

Classifieds

- Find Stuff
- Place Ad

Wisinfo

- Gateway to Wisconsin

Posted September 26, 2006

Reward offered in bookstore robberies

The Post-Crescent

TOWN OF MENASHA — The owners of an adult book and product store that has been robbed twice in the last three months have offered a $3,000 reward in the case.

Lt. Doug Jahsman said the reward would be paid for information that leads to the arrests and convictions of the person or people involved in the robberies at Eldorado's Adult Book Store, 2545 S. Memorial Drive, in June and last week.

A man wearing a hooded sweatshirt and cap pulled down to his eyes entered the store Thursday, pushed a clerk to the floor and fled with an undetermined amount of money.

The clerk described the suspect as 5 feet 8 to 6 feet tall with a medium build. He was reported to be wearing dark clothing, a hooded sweatshirt an eyes.

A robber also took an undetermined amount of money June 18.

Police ask anyone with information on the incidents or suspects to call investigators

Comment on this Story

The Post-Crescent's news and online staffs uses all comments we receive from this feature to hel and provide feedback to our editors and reporters. If you also wish us to consider publishing your site, please fill out the required fields below. An editor will contact you for a final check prior to pul comments.

* Required fields for verification

Please include phone number for verification purposes if you want your comments considered fc

Submit a letter to the editor | Send us a news tip | Ethics policy

Your name*: Your email address*: Your cc

Your city*: Your phone number:

Please select if you wish to have this comment considered for a Letter to the Editor: ○ Yes ◉

Your age*:
The Children's Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA) requires us to ask you the following question about yc please see our Terms of Service.

◉ under 13 ○ 13-17 ○ 18-34 ○ 35-49 ○ 50-64 ○ 65 or older

Submit

Explore More

Special Sections

- Photo Galleries: Multimedia
- K-C announces plant closure
- Community First Fox Cities Marathon
- Election 2006
- Watered Down: Appleton's water plant problems
- Banta to cut 500 jobs

All special sections »
All magazines »

Special Reports

- United Way Fox Cities profiles
- Remembering 9.11.01
- Appleton's Ban on Smoking
- Making a world of difference
- Home Games: The Post-Crescent's L at Rec and Youth Sports
- Dairyland Redefined

All special reports »
All magazines »

Jobs: CareerBuilder.com | Cars: Cars.com | Apartments: Apartments.com | Shopping: SI

Contact us at 920-993-1000. postcrescent.com is a Gannett Co
Use of this site signifies your agreement to the Terms of Service and Privacy Pc

Weather | Calendar | Jobs | Cars | Apartments | Shopping | Classifieds | Dati

Company Links

Appleton Post-Crescent | Fond du Lac Reporter | Green Bay Press-Gazette | Manitowoc H Herald

Oshkosh Northwestern | Sheboygan Press | Stevens Point Journal | Wausau Daily Her

BREAKING NEWS» OVU names new president

Man charged in armed robbery

January 15, 2011

PARKERSBURG - A Parkersburg man was arrested Friday for robbing Pioneer Adult Bookstore at gunpoint this week, officials said.

Timothy Randall Constable, 21, 6337 Emerson Ave., was charged with armed robbery Friday and remains in custody waiting for a bond hearing in circuit court.

According to the Wood County Sheriff's Office, Constable and an accomplice entered Pioneer Adult Bookstore, 6603 Emerson Ave., around 11 p.m. Tuesday, threatened the clerk with a gun and demanded money. He fled with an undisclosed amount of cash and valuables, police said.

Deputy Mark Smith followed the suspect's footprints in the snow for more than a mile Tuesday night, giving officers a lead into the suspect's whereabouts, according to a press release from the Wood County Sheriff's Office.

Constable was arraigned Friday before Wood County Magistrate Brenda Marshall. Since his offense is a capital offense, his bond is set in circuit count rather than magistrate court.

Save | Comments (3) | Post a comment |

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

JACK GALARDI, RED EYED INC. d/b/a CRAZY HORSE SALOON, WALLEYE, LLC MIA LUNA, INC. d/b/a PINK PONY SOUTH, and JG&P, LLC,	)
Plaintiffs,	)	CIVIL ACTION FILE NUMBER
v.	)	1:09-CV-00965-RWS
CITY OF FOREST PARK, CORINE DEYTON, JOHN PARKER, CHIEF DWAYNE HOBBS, COUNCILPERSONS: DEBORAH YOUMANS, SPARKLE ADAMS, LINDA LORD, and MAUDIE MCCORD,	)
Defendants.	)

DECLARATION OF DWAYNE HOBBS UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY

1.

My name is Dwayne Hobbs. I have personal knowledge of the facts set forth in this declaration and know them to be true and correct. I am over the age of eighteen years, am suffering no disabilities and am competent to execute this declaration.

2.

I am Chief of Police for the City of Forest Park, Georgia and a defendant in the above-captioned litigation. As Chief of Police, my duties include oversight of all law enforcement within the corporate city limits of the City of Forest Park. I have been employed as Chief of Police of the Forest Park Police Department since April 1, 1996.

3.

There have been reported crimes around the Crazy Horse, including entering of automobiles, drug offenses, and anonymous complaints of drugs. These businesses have asked for stepped up patrols in the area, which the Police Department has provided on a periodic basis.

4.

During my time serving the Forest Park Police Department, there have been at least two murders that were connected with the clubs. One occurred on the property of one of the clubs, and the other occurred off-premises but was allegedly connected with activities at one of the dancers.

5.

Recently, there have been two alleged rapes involving the Pink Pony South. In one instance, a dancer alleges that she was raped in one of the VIP rooms. In another instance, a dancer alleged that she was raped at a nearby hotel. In this second instance, the allegation of rape turned out to be untrue, and instead the incident involved an instance of prostitution connected with the club.

6.

Attached hereto as Exhibit A are true and correct copies of the Police Department records relating to an alleged rape and battery that occurred at the Pink Pony South on July 7, 2010. The Forest Park Police Department investigated this incident, which involved a customer in a VIP room allegedly raping a dancer. These records are maintained during the normal course and scope of the operations of the Forest Park Police Department.

7.

Attached hereto as Exhibit B are true and correct copies of the Police Department records relating to a murder of a customer in the parking lot of the Crazy Horse Saloon on or about June 24, 2007. The Forest Park Police Department investigated this incident, which involved a fatal gunshot wound to the head of the victim. These records are maintained during the normal course and scope of the operations of the Forest Park Police Department.

8.

Attached hereto as Exhibit C are true and correct copies of the Police Department records relating to an incident of larceny, underage drinking, prostitution, and false reporting of a crime that occurred near the Pink Pony South on May 19, 2009, and originated at the club. The Forest Park Police Department investigated this incident, which involved waitress at the club making a false allegation of rape against a customer, allegations of underage drinking, and alleged prostitution. These records are maintained during the normal course and scope of the operations of the Forest Park Police Department.

9.

Attached hereto as Exhibit D is a true and correct copy of the most recent application for an adult entertainment license submitted by Jack Galardi, Red Eyed, Inc., and Mia Luna, Inc. In the application materials, Mr. Galardi represents that he is the owner of the Goldrush Showbar in Atlanta, Georgia.

10.

It is exceedingly difficult for my department to investigate activities within the clubs because the employees are familiar with all of my officers.

11.

In fact, one of my recent investigations was derailed because club employees recognized my undercover officer who had not worked within the City for more than ten years. According to one of the dancers at the club, she and others were told to avoid criminal activity that night because of the knowledge that the City had and might again place an undercover officer in the club. This dancer provided this information to a private investigator the City had hired.

12.

By my signature below, I declare, under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

Dwayne Hobbs

12/23/10

Date

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

JACK GALARDI, RED EYED INC. d/b/a CRAZY HORSE SALOON, WALLEYE, LLC MIA LUNA, INC. d/b/a PINK PONY SOUTH, and JG&P, LLC,	)
Plaintiffs,	)	CIVIL ACTION FILE NUMBER 1:09-CV-00965-RWS
vs.	)
CITY OF FOREST PARK, CORINE DEYTON, JOHN PARKER, CHIEF DWAYNE HOBBS, COUNCILPERSONS: DEBORAH YOUMANS, SPARKLE ADAMS, LINDA LORD, and MAUDIE MCCORD,	)
Defendants.	)

DECLARATION OF GUY L. WATKINS, JR.
UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY

1.

My name is Guy L. Watkins, Jr. I have personal knowledge of the facts set forth in this declaration and know them to be true and correct. I am over the age of eighteen years, am suffering no disabilities and am competent to execute this declaration.

2.

I am a licensed private detective and owner of Business Consulting & Investigations, Inc. ("BCI").

3.

The City of Forest Park hired BCI to conduct surveillance at Pink Pony South and Crazy Horse, both of which are adult entertainment clubs located in the City.

4.

In order to complete this assignment, I assigned six BCI representatives who are private detectives to go into the clubs during their open hours of operation on the following dates: December 16, 17, and 18, 2010.

5.

The BCI representatives provided me with verbal reports and are in the process of completing written reports.

6.

The activity at each club was generally the same other than at the Pink Pony South on the evening of December 17, 2010. With this exception, the BCI representatives witnessed dancers sitting on the patrons' laps fully nude and rubbing themselves on the patrons' genitals. BCI representatives witnessed dancers putting their breasts in customer's mouths, allowing customers to touch their bare breasts and buttocks and allowing customers to insert their fingers into the dancers' vaginas.

7.

On numerous occasions, BCI representatives were asked by dancers to pay between $145 and $300 to go to a VIP room to engage in sexual activity.

8.

One of the dancers told a BCI representative that the house received most of the money from the VIP rooms so the club management encouraged the dancers and the waitresses to get customers into the VIP rooms.

9.

On at least one occasion, a BCI representative witnessed a dancer and a customer engaging in what appeared to be sexual intercourse in a VIP room.

10.

The dancers and waitresses encouraged the customers, including BCI representatives, to purchase drinks and alcohol shooters. The BCI representatives told the employees that they did not want to drink and the employees responded back that the drinks could be for the dancers. On several occasions, the BCI representatives purchased alcohol and it was then consumed by the dancers. Almost all of the dancers appeared to be under the influence of alcohol or other intoxicating substances.

11.

Several times, BCI representatives witnessed customers openly betting over games of pool.

12.

On December 17, 2010, a dancer at Pink Pony South told a BCI representative that club management informed the dancers that the police department had sent in an undercover officer to the club, so the girls were to refrain from criminal activity. That dancer told the BCI representative that she could "rock [his] world" however, if they went into a VIP room where "no one could see us."

13.

In addition to the assignments within the adult entertainment clubs, I was asked to locate the six former dancers who had provided affidavits and some of whom had provided counter-affidavits provided by plaintiffs' to the Court. After expending several hours on this task, we were able to confirm the location of two of the former dancers but were not able to speak to them directly. We have been unable to locate the other four former dancers.

14.

By my signature below, I declare, under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

Guy L. Watkins, Jr.

12/23/2010

Date

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

JACK GALARDI, RED EYED INC. d/b/a CRAZY HORSE SALOON, WALLEYE, LLC MIA LUNA, INC. d/b/a PINK PONY SOUTH, and JG&P, LLC,	)	CIVIL ACTION FILE NO. 1:09-CV-00965-RWS
Plaintiffs,	)
v.	)
CITY OF FOREST PARK, CORINE DEYTON, JOHN PARKER, CHIEF DWAYNE HOBBS, COUNCILPERSONS: DEBORAH YOUMANS, SPARKLE ADAMS, LINDA LORD, and MAUDIE MCCORD,	)
Defendants.	)

DECLARATION OF JOHN PARKER UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY

Comes now JOHN PARKER, who being first duly sworn, deposes and states on oath the following:

1.

My name is John Parker. I am over eighteen years of age and competent in all respects to testify to the following facts, which are within my own personal knowledge unless expressly indicated otherwise herein.

2.

I am employed by the City of Forest Park, Georgia ("the City") as its City Manager and Director of Public Safety, and I have been so employed since April, 2006. Prior to that time, from January, 1990 to June, 1994, inclusive, I was also employed by the City as its City Manager.

3.

Included in my duties and responsibilities as City Manager and Director of Public Safety are to "direct and supervise the administration of all departments, offices and agencies of the [C]ity" and to "see that all laws, provisions of [the City's] charter and acts of the city council, subject to enforcement by [me] or by officers subject to [my] jurisdiction are faithfully executed."

4.

In addition, I am responsible, in cooperation with other officials of the City, for maintaining business records, ordinances, resolutions, court orders, and other public documents of the City.

5.

I have never reached the conclusion or made the determination that the City is or would be unable to produce evidence that would tend to demonstrate that there are adverse and pernicious secondary effects caused by or related to adult entertainment establishments specifically operating in the City. I have not commissioned such a study or survey only because I understand that such studies are not required or necessary in order to sustain the City's ordinances and regulations governing adult entertainment.

6.

However, based on my review and reading of several studies produced by other jurisdictions, including but not limited to neighboring jurisdictions such as DeKalb County, Georgia and others, it is my opinion that there is no significant difference between these other local jurisdictions and the City, and that there are pernicious and adverse secondary effects caused by the operation of adult entertainment establishments in the City.

7.

Although there has been some relatively minor development in the past three to five years in the general vicinity of the Crazy Horse Saloon and along the Jonesboro Road corridor, such development has been slow, sluggish and of very low quality of the kind that is typical of very poor, blighted and economically depressed areas.

8.

These deteriorated and blighted areas in the City exist in relatively close proximity to adult entertainment establishments, and based on my review of several studies produced by other jurisdictions, a contributing factor likely is the existence of the clubs.

9.

Plaintiff Red Eyed, Inc. owns and operates "the Crazy Horse Saloon," which is an adult entertainment establishment within the meaning of the City's ordinances that currently provides nude dancing and the retail sale of alcoholic beverages. The Crazy Horse Saloon is located and operates at 3920 Jonesboro Road, Forest Park, Georgia 30297, and was previously located and operated at 3950 Jonesboro Road, Forest Park, Georgia 30297.

10.

On or about September 7, 2010, the City filed a nuisance abatement action in the Municipal Court of the City of Forest Park, Georgia (Environmental Division) (hereinafter "the Municipal Court"), against three apartment complexes: the "Briarwood Forest Duplexes" at 890 Conley Road, Forest Park, Georgia 30297 (hereinafter the "Briarwood Forest Properties"); the "Taj Mahal Apartments" at 514 Bridge Avenue, Forest Park, Georgia 30297 (hereinafter the "Taj Mahal Properties"); and the "Moore Avenue Apartments" at 508 Moore Avenue, Forest Park, Georgia 30297 (hereinafter the "Moore Avenue Properties") (the three apartment complexes being hereinafter collectively referred to as the "Apartment Properties").

11.

The Briarwood Forest Properties are located approximately ¼ mile south of the Crazy Horse Saloon; the Taj Mahal Properties and the Moore Avenue Properties are located approximately 2500 feet +/- from the Crazy Horse Saloon and the Pink Pony South.

12.

The Briarwood Properties consist of approximately 56 separate dwelling units, none of which are fit for human habitation, and all of which have been boarded up and vacant, except for vagrants and squatters, for over five years.

13.

The Briarwood Properties have served as a breeding ground for illegal drug use and other criminal activities, requiring exceptional diligence and patrolling by the City's Police Department.

14.

The Taj Mahal Properties consist of approximately 48 separate dwelling units, none of which are fit for human habitation, and all of which have been boarded up and vacant, except for vagrants and squatters, for over five years.

15.

The Taj Mahal Properties have served as a breeding ground for illegal drug use and other criminal activities, requiring exceptional diligence and patrolling by the City's Police Department.

16.

The Moore Avenue Properties consist of approximately 56 separate dwelling units, none of which are fit for human habitation, and at least 52 of which have been boarded up and vacant, except for vagrants and squatters, for over five years.

17.

The Moore Avenue Properties have served as a breeding ground for illegal drug use and other criminal activities, requiring exceptional diligence and patrolling by the City's Police Department.

18.

On or about October 14, 2010, following a hearing, the Municipal Court entered a "Final Order – Nuisance Abatement" against all units located at the Briarwood Forest Properties.

19.

Attached hereto and incorporated herein is Exhibit A, which is a true and correct copy of the Municipal Court order referenced above.

20.

Among other findings, the Municipal Court entered a finding that the Briarwood Forest Properties, "including all units and structures existing thereon, are so old and dilapidated and are in such a state of disrepair as to be dangerous, unsafe, unsanitary and otherwise unfit for human habitation, and so inimical to the general public health, safety and welfare, ... and to the citizens of the City of Forest Park, Georgia, that they constitute a continuing nuisance."

21.

The Municipal Court also found that "it is neither feasible nor economically justified nor reasonable to attempt to make all the repairs and renovations necessary to bring [the Briarwood Forest Properties] into compliance with all the codes and ordinances of the City and the laws of the State of Georgia," and therefore ordered "all units and structures" located on the Briarwood Forest Properties to be demolished.

22.

Also following a hearing, the Municipal Court entered a "Final Order – Nuisance Abatement" against all units located at the Taj Mahal Properties and the Moore Avenue Properties.

23.

Attached hereto and incorporated herein is Exhibit B, which is a true and correct copy of the Municipal Court order referenced above.

24.

Among other findings, the Municipal Court entered a finding that the Taj Mahal Properties and the Moore Avenue Properties, "including buildings, apartments, units and structures situated thereon, are so old and dilapidated and are in such a state of disrepair as to be dangerous, unsafe, unsanitary and otherwise unfit for human habitation, and so inimical to the general public health, safety and welfare, ... and to the citizens of the City of Forest Park, Georgia, that they constitute continuing nuisances and continuing unsafe and dangerous conditions, in continuing violation of numerous provisions of the Code of Ordinances of the City, ... and the laws of the State of Georgia."

25.

The Municipal Court also ordered that the owners of the Taj Mahal Properties and the Moore Avenue Properties could elect to "abate ... the aforesaid nuisances and unsafe conditions by undertaking and completing those repairs and improvements [necessary to abate the nuisances]," or "by undertaking to demolish one or more of that Owner's buildings, apartments, units, or structures situated upon said Owner's properties."

26.

The Municipal Court also ordered that "if any Owner shall fail or refuse to comply with [the Municipal Court's] order within forty five (45) days from the date of this Order, then the [City] shall be entitled in the exercise of its police power to demolish the buildings, apartments, units or structures upon said Owner's properties, and to clean and clear the grounds underlying same."

27.

The Apartment Properties are located in relatively close proximity to the Crazy Horse Saloon, and based on my review of several studies produced by other jurisdictions, including but not limited to neighboring jurisdictions such as DeKalb County, Georgia and others, it is my opinion that the existence of the clubs contributed to the decline of the Apartment Properties.

27.

By my signature below, I declare, under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

John Parker

12-30-10
Date

IN THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE CITY OF FOREST PARK, GEORGIA

CLAYTON COUNTY, STATE OF GEORGIA

2010 OCT 14 PM 1:0
P&Z DEPT.

City of Forest Park, Georgia, Petitioner, vs. All those persons and legal entities having an interest in the following properties (the "Properties"): Briarwood Forest Duplexes, LLC, 890 Conley Road, Forest Park, Ga. 30297; Taj Mahal Apartments, 514 Bridge Avenue, Forest Park, Ga. 30297; and Moore Avenue Apartments, 508 Moore Avenue, Forest Park, Ga. 30297, Respondents.	CASE NO. NO. ECAB-2010-FP-28 Final Order – Nuisance Abatement 890 Conley Road – All Units Forest Park, Georgia 30297

ORDER

This matter having come before the Court for a hearing after due and legal notice being provided to all those persons and entities purporting to have an interest in the property known as "890 Conley Road, Forest Park, Clayton County, Georgia, Clayton County Tax I.D. No. 13015D-C004," and more completely described in the Deed Records of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Clayton County, Georgia at Deed Book 8542, pp. 5 through 44 inclusive ("the Property"), upon consideration of all of the evidence, including sworn testimony and all documentary evidence, the Court hereby FINDS AND ORDERS the following:

1. The Property, including all units and structures existing thereon, are so old and dilapidated and are in such a state of disrepair as to be dangerous, unsafe, unsanitary and otherwise unfit for human habitation, and so inimical to the general public health, safety and welfare, and the surrounding areas in proximity thereto, and to the citizens of the City, that they constitute a continuing nuisance and are in continuing violation of numerous provisions of the Code of Ordinances of the City of Forest Park, Georgia ("the City Code") and the laws of the State of Georgia; and

EXHIBIT A to Pawlowski Decl.

2. Based on the evidence in the record, none of which is contradicted or impeached, the Court finds that it is neither feasible nor economically justified nor reasonable to attempt to make all of the repairs and renovations necessary to bring said units and structures into compliance with all the codes and ordinances of the City and the laws of the State of Georgia; and so

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

The Property known as 890 Conley Road, Forest Park, Clayton County, Georgia, Clayton County Tax I.D. No. 13015D-C004, and each and every unit, building and structure thereon, shall be demolished and the lots on which they are situated shall be cleared and cleaned; this work shall be accomplished by the City of Forest Park, Georgia ("the City") through an independent contractor; and this Order shall apply, but shall not be limited to, the following lots, buildings, structures and units: Building A, Units 1 and 2, Building B, Units 3 and 4, Building C, Units 5 and 6, Building D, Units 7 and 8, Building E, Units 9 and 10, Building F, Units 11 and 12, Building G, Units 13 and 14, Building H, Units 15 and 16, Building I, Units 17 and 18, Building J, Units 19 and 20, Building K, Units 21 and 22, Building L, Units 23 and 24, Building M, Units 25 and 26, Building N, Units 27 and 28, Building O, Units 29 and 30, Building P, Units 31 and 32, Building Q, Units 33 and 34, Building R, Units 35 and 36, Building S, Units 37 and 38, Building T, Units 39 and 40, Building U, Units 41 and 42, Building V, Units 43 and 44, Building W, Units 45 and 46, Building X, Units 47 and 48, Building Y, Units 49 and 50, Building Z, Units 51 and 52, Building AA, Units 53 and 54, Building BB, Units 55 and 56.

AND IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that all costs incurred by the City in accomplishing the demolition, cleaning and clearing of said lots, buildings and units and all remaining portions of the Property, shall constitute a lien upon all of the Property, which shall be recorded in the public records of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Clayton County, Georgia.

SO ORDERED this 14th day of October, 2010.

Honorable Ethenia F. King, Judge
Municipal Court of the City of Forest Park, Ga.

Prepared and submitted by:

Joe M. Harris, Jr.
Attorney for Petitioner City of
City of Forest Park, Georgia
205 Corporate Center Drive
Suite B
Stockbridge, Ga. 30281
Georgia Bar No. 330400
Telephone: 678-610-8155

IN THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE CITY OF FOREST PARK, GEORGIA

CLAYTON COUNTY, STATE OF GEORGIA

City of Forest Park, Georgia, Petitioner, vs. All those persons and legal entities having an interest in the following properties (the "Properties"): Taj Mahal Apartments, 514 Bridge Avenue, Forest Park, Georgia 30297; and Moore Avenue Apartments, 508 Moore Avenue, Forest Park, Georgia 30297, Respondents,	)	CASE NO. NO. ECAB-2010-FP-28 Final Order – Nuisance Abatement 514 Bridge Avenue – All Buildings, Structures and Units; and 508 Moore Avenue – All Buildings, Structures and Units Forest Park, Georgia 30297

ORDER

This matter having come before the Court for a hearing after due and legal notice being provided to all those persons and entities purporting to have an interest in the properties known as "Moore Avenue Apartments, 508 Moore Avenue, Buildings A, B, C and D and Lots 1 through 14 inclusive, Forest Park, Clayton County Georgia, 30297, Clayton County Tax I.D. Nos. 13051D-A082 through 13051D-A096 inclusive" and the properties known as "Taj Mahal Apartments, 514 Bridge Avenue, Lot 1, Block D and Lots 15 through 26 inclusive, Forest Park, Clayton County, Georgia, 30297, Clayton County Tax I.D. Nos. 13015D-A097 through 13051D-A109 inclusive," (collectively, the Properties"), upon consideration of all of the evidence, including sworn testimony and all documentary evidence, the Court hereby FINDS AND ORDERS the following:

1. The Properties, including all buildings, apartments, units and structures situated thereon, are so old and dilapidated and are in such a state of disrepair as to be dangerous, unsafe, unsanitary and otherwise unfit for human habitation, and so inimical to the general public health, safety and welfare, and the surrounding areas in proximity thereto, and to the citizens of the City of Forest Park, Georgia (the "City"), that they constitute continuing nuisances and continuing unsafe and dangerous conditions, in continuing violation of numerous provisions of the Code of Ordinances of the City ("the City Code"), the "International Property Maintenance Code, 2006 Edition" (the "IPMC"), the "International Building Code, 2006 Edition" (the IBC"), and the laws of the State of Georgia, all of which are applicable in the City; and
2. Based on the evidence in the record, the Court finds that the Properties, including all buildings, apartments, units and structures situated thereon, individually and collectively, constitute continuing nuisances and continuing unsafe conditions which must be abated; and
3. The Court further finds and concludes that the aforesaid nuisances and unsafe conditions specifically include, but are not limited to, those deficiencies and unsafe conditions identified in Plaintiff's Exhibit 25, consisting of five (5) pages, each entitled "Property Maintenance Inspection Checklist" dated November 11, 2010, prepared and signed by Mike Tuttle, Chief Code Inspector and Deputy Director, Department of Planning, Building and Zoning for the City, and Plaintiff's Exhibit 26, consisting of seven (7) pages, each entitled "Property Maintenance Inspection Checklist" dated November 10,

2010, prepared and signed by Mike Tuttle, Chief Code Inspector and Deputy Director, Department of Planning, Building and Zoning for the City, both of said exhibits being attached hereto and incorporated herein by reference; and

4. The Court further finds that after due notice, the following owners of one or more buildings, apartments, units or structures situated upon the Properties entered an appearance in this case and demonstrated an interest in these matters: Dr. J. P. Agrawal, Ms. Sarla Agrawal, Dr. Pallava Agrawal, J. J. El-Awal, and Multiple Talents, LLC (each one of these being individually referred to herein as the "Owner" and collectively referred to herein as "the Owners"); now

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

The Nuisances and Unsafe Conditions described and identified herein shall be abated as follows:

A. Each of the Owners may elect to abate one or more of the aforesaid nuisances and unsafe conditions by undertaking and completing those repairs and improvements necessary to abate those deficiencies and unsafe conditions identified in Plaintiff's Exhibits 25 and 26, as applicable, contained within each building that said Owner intends to repair and improve; and any Owner who so elects shall obtain a building permit from the City's Department of Planning, Building and Zoning at 785 Forest Parkway, Forest Park, Georgia 30297 (the "PB&Z Department"), and shall begin the process required to obtain such building permit within forty five (45) days from the date of this Order by submitting to the PB&Z Department a written assessment of each of those buildings, apartments, units and structures that said Owner intends to repair and improve; each assessment shall be prepared by an engineer licensed by the State of Georgia, and shall include a description of all corrective actions that are necessary to bring those properties, buildings, apartments, units and structures selected by the Owner for repair and improvement up to the minimum standards required by the City Code, the IPMC, the IBC, and the laws of the State of Georgia, an estimated cost for such corrective actions, and whether, in the opinion of the said engineer, it is economically feasible to take said corrective actions; or in the alternative:

B. Each of the Owners may elect to abate one or more of the aforesaid nuisances and unsafe conditions by undertaking to demolish one or more of that Owner's buildings, apartments, units, or structures situated upon said Owner's properties, in which case the Owner making such election shall apply for and obtain a demolition permit from the City's Department of Planning, Building and Zoning, 785 Forest Parkway, Forest Park, Georgia 30297 within forty five (45) days from the date of this Order; and

C. In the event that any Owner shall fail or refuse to comply with either Paragraph A or Paragraph B above within forty five (45) days from the date of this Order, then the City of Forest Park, Georgia shall be entitled in the exercise of its police power to demolish the buildings, apartments, units or structures upon said Owner's properties, and to clean and clear the grounds underlying the same; and

D. In the event that an Owner shall elect to repair and improve one or more buildings pertaining to his or her property, then that Owner shall diligently pursue the work necessary to complete the required repairs and improvements within a reasonable time, and the City shall monitor the progress made by the Owner in order to ensure compliance with this Order, and shall report to this Court at any time that the City's Code Inspector shall be of the opinion that said work is not being pursued in a reasonably timely manner; and

E. In the event that an Owner shall commence repairs and improvements and then fail to diligently pursue the work in a reasonably timely manner, then the City shall file a complaint with this Court and serve a copy upon the Owner; and upon notice being given, this Court shall conduct a hearing as to whether the work should continue, and if so, upon what conditions, or whether the work should stop, and the building, apartments, units or structures should be demolished; and

F. In the event that any of the buildings, apartments, units or structures upon any of the Properties shall be demolished by the City, then all costs incurred by the City in accomplishing the demolition of said buildings, apartments, units or structures, and the cleaning and clearing of the grounds pertaining thereto, shall constitute a lien upon those properties owned by said Owner, and the lien or liens shall be recorded in the public records of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Clayton County, Georgia.

SO ORDERED this 6th day of December, 2010.

Honorable Ethenia F. King, Judge
Municipal Court of the City of Forest Park, Ga.

Prepared and submitted by:

Joe M. Harris, Jr.
Attorney for Petitioner City of
City of Forest Park, Georgia
205 Corporate Center Drive
Suite B
Stockbridge, Ga. 30281
Georgia Bar No. 330400
Telephone: 678-610-8155

EXHIBIT
B
to Parker Decl.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

FLANIGAN'S ENTERPRISES, INC. OF GEORGIA d/b/a Mardi Gras, 6420 Roswell Road, Inc. d/b/a Flashers, and Fantastic Visuals, LLC d/b/a Inserection,	*	CIVIL ACTION FILE No. 1:09-CV-2747-RLV
Plaintiffs,	*
v.	*
CITY OF SANDY SPRINGS, GEORGIA, et al.	*
Defendant.	*

AFFIDAVIT OF ROBERT STEVENS

1. My name is Robert Stevens, I am over eighteen years of age, and I am competent to give this Affidavit.

2. I am a Captain in the City of Sandy Springs Police Department, and I have been with this department since July 1, 2006.

3. From late 2010 through May 2011, I supervised a narcotics/prostitution investigation concerning Sherell Allen, who was a dancer at Mardi Gras, an adult entertainment establishment in Sandy Springs. The investigation culminated in the arrest of Ms. Allen and five other women who were also dancers at Mardi Gras. Ms. Allen was convicted on drug charges. The other women were charged with solicitation for an illicit sexual act.

4. Attached to this affidavit is a five-page outline of activities, matters observed by law enforcement personnel, and factual findings from the above investigation. The outline is part of the case file for this legally authorized investigation by the Sandy Springs Police Department. As the outline records, an undercover officer bought drugs from dancers at Mardi Gras on the following dates:

December 2, 2010 (3.8 grams of cocaine)
December 30, 2010 (4.8 grams of cocaine)
January 21, 2011 (4.8 grams of cocaine)
February 2, 2011 (4.2 grams of cocaine)
March 1, 2011 (4.9 grams of cocaine)
May 20, 2011 (4.6 grams of cocaine)
May 24, 2011 (57.1 grams of cocaine)

5. The case investigation file also includes written statements that the five Mardi Gras dancers, who were arrested with Sherell Allen on May 26, 2011, provided to the Police Department. These five pages are also attached to this affidavit. The dancers, who were each over the age of 18 years, wrote their statements and certified that they were true and correct and freely given without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or any other unlawful influence. Their statements record that dancers participate in sex acts with customers inside Mardi Gras, including oral sex, masturbation, and sexual intercourse. The statements also reflect that dancers engage in drug transactions and drug use inside Mardi Gras.

6. Beginning in late 2011, I led an undercover investigation at Flashers, an adult entertainment establishment at 6420 Roswell Road NE in Sandy Springs, to investigate allegations of illegal drug distribution and prostitution occurring among the employees.

7. On Friday, December 16, 2011, Detective David Huffschmidt and I went to Flashers in an undercover capacity at about 10:30 P.M.

8. From the bar I saw 20-25 nude adult entertainers dancing on stage or among patrons on the main floor. I saw many nude entertainers having physical contact with customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their bare breasts in the customers' faces and grinding their nude buttocks into customers' laps during lap dances. Bouncers for Flashers were about to see the physical contact that was occurring between nude entertainers and customers.

9. I received a lap dance from a nude adult entertainer, for which I paid $20-$25. Several times she rubbed her bare breasts in my face. She also sat on my lap and thrusted her hips into my crotch and along my leg. Later I received a lap dance from a different nude entertainer. She also rubbed her bare breasts in my face repeatedly and rubbed along my legs with her bare buttocks. I also saw multiple nude entertainers have similar physical contact with Detective Huffschmidt.

10. On Friday, December 23, 2011, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Detective Huffschmidt.

11. On this visit I received several lap dances from a nude adult entertainer. I paid $20-$25 for each lap dance. During the dances she repeatedly sat on my lap and thrusted back and forth on my lap with her bare buttocks. She also would face me and rub her bare genitals with her fingers as if she were masturbating herself. Later I saw this entertainer have the same kind of physical contact with Detective Huffschmidt.

12. Another adult entertainer, Ebony, asked me to go with her to the VIP room for $125, and that we could "get close" for an extra $50. She told me the room was dark, no one could see in, no one would interrupt us, and we could touch each other. When I said I did not want to get into any trouble with the bouncers, she repeated that the bouncers would not come into the VIP room while we were in there.

13. Ebony gave me several lap dances for $20-$25 per dance. She would bend over away from me and spread her vagina apart with her fingers. She sat in my lap several times and rubbed on my crotch with her nude buttocks back and forth in a rapid motion. During lap dances she told me several times, "I give good oral sex." She also told me she was sexually aroused and that she wanted to give me oral sex. I told her I was interested, and she left me for a few minutes.

14. Ebony approached me later, squeezed my buttocks with her hands, and asked if I was ready to go back to the VIP room. When I said I would after another beer, she responded "I don't want you to get too drunk so you can't get it up and come on me." I believed this to mean that she did not want me to get too drunk so that I could not get an erection and be unable to ejaculate on her. Ebony approached me again later, stating she wanted to give me the "pornstar experience" and that she had "all the toys and protection." I asked her if we could instead meet sometime outside of the club. She said she understood, and she gave me a napkin with her telephone number.

15. During this visit to Flashers, I saw numerous nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas. Bouncers for Flashers were able to see the physical contact that was occurring between nude entertainers and customers, and yet it continued.

16. On Thursday, January 5, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Detective Huffschmidt.

17. On this visit had received six to seven lap dances from a nude adult entertainer. I paid $20-$25 for each lap dance. During each dance the entertainer rubbed her bare breasts in my face, grinded her bare buttocks into my crotch area, rubbed her bare vagina with her fingers for me to see, and in one instance grabbed my crotch with her hand. Flashers bouncers were able to see this physical contact, but they ignored it.

18. At one point I saw an adult entertainer and a customer enter the VIP room that was near where I sat. Before they entered, there was a dim green light on inside the VIP room. After they entered, the light went out and the interior of the room was completely dark until they came out. During the 20 to 30 minutes that the entertainer and the customer were in the VIP room, I did not see any bouncer look into their VIP room.

19. I also saw many other nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' crotches and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

20. On Friday, January 13, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Detective Huffschmidt, from about 11:30 P.M. to about 1:45 A.M. (on January 14).

21. As before, I received a lap dance from a nude adult entertainer. She sat on my lap and grinded her bare buttocks into my crotch area. I paid her $20-$25 in return. Afterwards she said she would have rubbed her breasts in my face, but that they were too sensitive because she just had them pierced.

22. Then another adult entertainer, Mystery, came up to me and grabbed my crotch with her hand and asked if I wanted a dance. I agreed, so she removed her attire. During the lap dance she grabbed my crotch several more times with her hands, pushed her bare buttocks into my crotch area, and even straddled me on the bar stool and grinded her bare vaginal area on my crotch. For this dance, I paid $20-$25. Flashers bouncers were able to see this physical contact but they did not say anything to us about it.

23. Later another nude entertainer gave me lap dances for $20-$25 per dance. During each dance she grinded her bare buttocks into my crotch area, rubbed her breasts in my face, rubbed her knees in my crotch area, and touched her vagina with her fingers. This entertainer also gave dances to, and had the same kind of physical contact with, Detective Huffschmidt.

24. I also saw many other nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' crotches and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

25. On Saturday, January 28, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Detective Huffschmidt, from about 10:00 P.M. to about 11:30 P.M.

26. On this visit, the adult entertainers were—at first—not dancing for customers like usual, but rather would huddle in groups and whisper to each another. One of the adult entertainers, Vegas, approached me, and we recognized one another from a previous visit to the club. She told me that the dancers suspected that undercover officers were in the club. After some time I asked her who the cops were, and she pointed out two men sitting at a table. I did not recognize them and I was not aware of any other agency conducting an undercover operation at Flashers that night.

27. Later Vegas gave me a lap dance. She rubbed her bare breasts in my face, kissed my neck, rubbed her knees into my crotch, and grinded on my crotch with her bare buttocks. I received at least 6 lap dances from Vegas on this visit, and each one cost about $20 and involved the foregoing physical contact. One time, between dances, she reached under the table and grabbed my crotch before asking to give me another lap dance. Bouncers were able to see the physical contact during each lap dance, but they never tried to make her stop.

28. During this visit, I saw other entertainers rubbing their bare breasts in customers' faces, sitting and grinding their nude buttocks on customers' laps, and laying on top of customers while nude. Although Flashers staff could see that activity, no one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

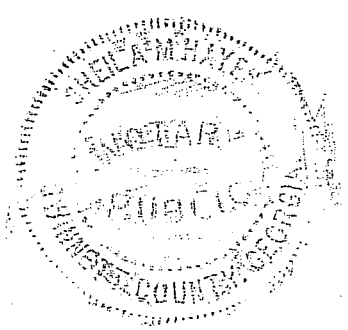
29. Affiant further sayeth not.

Robert Stevens 9-18-12

Robert Stevens

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of September, 2012.

Sheila M. Hayes, Notary Public



Outline on the Mardi Gras Case

On November 22, 2010, I went to the permits unit in effort to identify each person provided by the informant. Each stage name provided was entered into our reporting system. By doing so, the true identity and profile along with a photo was revealed. A copy of each profile was printed. At approximately 1630 Hours, the informant arrived at police headquarters. He was shown a photo of each person while their profiles were concealed. The informant identified each person by writing their stage name on the bottom profile. Each person was easily identified by the informant.

On December 01, 2010 at approximately 1803 hours, I went into the Mardi Strip Club located at 6300 Powers Ferry Rd along with the informant for purpose of being introduced. After being there approximate 20 minutes, I was introduced to a white female identified as "Morgan" her real name is Jessica Pelt and Teri Shields.

On December 02, 2010 at approximately 1702 hours, I went into the Mardi Gras Strip Club and made a hand to hand purchased approximately 3.8 grams of cocaine from Jessica Pelt. The purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds.

On December 07, 2010 at approximately 1733 hours, I went to the Cocktail Cove Sports Bar located at 5840 Roswell Rd along with the CI. I was introduced to the main target Sherell Allen. After a brief conversation, Allen sold me approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine. The Purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds.

On December 12, 2010 I went to the Mardi Gras Strip Club for the purpose of making a purchase of cocaine from Teri Shields. Shields had made prior arrangements via cell phone to sell to me on this date; however, she was unable to get her hands on the drugs.

On December 14, 2010 at approximately 1739 hours, I went to the Cocktail Cove Sports Bar and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine from Sherell Allen. The Purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds.

On December 20, 2010 at approximately 1545 hours, I went to the Taco Mac Sports Bar and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 7 grams of cocaine and 7 grams of marijuana from Sherell Allen. The Purchase was made with $635.00 of confidential city funds. The cocaine was sold for $475.00 and the marijuana at $160.00.

On December 30, 2010 I went to the Mardi Gras Strip Club along Detective Concepcion and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine from Sherell Allen. We were introduced to a white female "Athena" real name Connie Lee. Lee was described as Allen's right hand girl. We also met a white male who was introduced as JB. Detective Concepcion was brought in this date to get me into VIP. By doing so it showed me to have more credibility. We were asked to use cocaine while in VIP; however, we managed to control the situation.

On January 06, 2011 at approximately 1633 hours, I met Allen in the parking lot of the Publix Grocery Store located at 6300 Powers Ferry Rd and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine from Sherell Allen. The Purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds.

On January 21, 2011 at approximately 1412 hours, I went into the Mardi Strip Club located at 6300 Powers Ferry Rd and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine from Sherell Allen. The Purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds. On this date, Allen and Lee explained how they travel to Ft Lauderdale Fl, hide illegal drugs in their vaginas and fly back to Atlanta.

On February 2, 2011 at approximately 1245 hours, I went to the Mardi Gras Strip Club and made a hand to hand purchase of approximately 4.2 grams of cocaine. The Purchase was made with $250.00 of confidential city funds. During this meet, Allen advised me that she makes drops all over the metropolitan Atlanta including Forsyth County. Allen also informed me that she sells pills as well.

On March 01, 2011 at approximately 1803 hours, I went to the Mardi Gras Strip Club and purchase approximately 4.9 grams of cocaine from Sherell Allen. While talking to Allen and Jessica Pelt, I learned that new dancers at the club were also aware of the drug activity at Mardi Gras. Some of them were pointed out as users and/or as partaking in the sale of illegal drugs.

On Thursday April 07, 2011 at approximately 1825, I met Sherell Allen at the TacoMac located in Dunwoody Georgia. The purpose of the meet was to achieve installation of a tracking device and to seek more information related to Allen's drug supplier. In order to meet with Allen, I had to agree to purchase more cocaine. While sitting at the bar along with Allen, she handed a plastic bag containing two smaller bags. One of the bags contained approximately 4.7 grams of suspected cocaine and the other bag contained 5 blue and yellow pills which appeared to be ecstasy pills. The cocaine was later field tested and showed to be positive for cocaine.

On Monday April 18, 2011 at approximately 1845 hours, I entered the Buffalo Wild Wings Sports Bar for the purpose of meeting with Sherell Allen. At approximately 1855 hours, Allen arrived. She then asked for the money and pointed to her legs while telling me to take it. I handed her $250.00 of confidential city funds and received approximately 4.8 grams of cocaine. Later that day a tracking device was placed on Allen's vehicle.

On Thursday April 29, 2011 at approximately 1730 hours, I met Sherell Allen at the TacoMac located at 5600 Roswell Road. The purpose of the meeting was for the HIDTA team to replace an inoperative tracking device and for me to discuss with Allen future plans of a so called party which is to become a takedown of her illegal drug enterprise. There were also two other females at that meeting. A white female "Athena" who's real name is Connie Lee and an unknown black female. There was no drug or money exchange at this meeting.

On Friday, May 20, 2011 at approximately 14:30 hours, I met with Sherell Allen at The Mardi Gras Strip Club for the purpose of finalizing plans of an upcoming party. This so called party is to become a drug and prostitution sting. Also at this meeting an 8-Ball (4.6 grams) of suspected cocaine was purchased. I had to agree to make this purchase in order to meet with Allen for finalization of take down plans. Approximately 20 minutes after meeting Allen at the upstairs bar area, the exchange was made when Allen tapped me on my leg and handed me the suspected cocaine. I then handed her $250.00 of confidential City funds. A field test of the drug confirmed it to be cocaine.

On Tuesday, May 24, 2011 at approximately 1300 hours, I met Sherell Allen at 8879 Roswell Road (The North River Tavern). The purpose of this meeting was to front Allen the money for four ounces of cocaine and to confirm the take down party. After giving her $2,700.00 of confidential city seized funds, Allen stated, "I`m going to pick up two ounces right now." I then advised her that I was under the impression that this was front money for four ounces. Allen stated that she had to purchase two ounces from her supplier first and then she would be able to bring two more ounces on the night of the party. Allen left a few minutes later being followed by Detectives Spears and Begeal. She was also being tracked by an electronic tracking device being monitored by Detective Simone. Detectives observed Allen walking up to the door of 1876 Madrona Street, Atlanta GA.

30318. A short while later, Allen was seen jogging to her car and driving off. At approximately 1350 hours, Allen called me via cell phone and advised that she had goods. At approximately 1430 hours the exchange was made at the bar area of the Mardi Gras Strip Club. The suspected cocaine was later field tested and showed to be positive for cocaine. It weighed approximate 57.1 grams, a little over two ounces.

On May 26, 2011 at approximately 1845 hours, Undercover Detectives Huffschmidt, Stansberry and I met Sherell Allen, Connie Lee, Amy Walker, Michelle Reynolds, Tameka Dixon and Rosario Garrett met in the bar area of the Crown Plaza Hotel. After talking and having a drink, we all went to room number 728. Allen and I then went to room number 712. Both rooms were equipped with listening bugs. Once in room number 712, Allen removed four small bags containing suspected cocaine. She then asked me how many did I want. She advised me that it would be $160.00 for all four bags. Allen then asked me if I would give her the money for the other two ounces we had agreed on. I then counted out $2,600.00 and an additional $1,800.00 which was to cover the cost for each female at $300.00 each for prostitution. During the transactions, Allen removed a handgun from her purse and showed it to me while stating, "See, here`s my gun. It`s a 38." She then placed it back into her purse. All funds were confidential city seized funds and all funds given to her on this date was recovered. At that time, takedown officers Sgt. Stevens, Detective Begeal and Detective Concepcion entered the room and placed Allen under arrest. Allen was transported back to police headquarters where she was read her rights by Sgt. Stevens and Detective Simone. After being informed of her charges and what she was facing, Allen advised that she wanted to speak to a lawyer. At that time the interview was terminated. The suspected cocaine (3.6 gms) was later tested and showed positive for cocaine. Allen`s handgun a 38cal. revolver, a samsung cell phone and the cocaine were placed into property and evidence.

On May 31, 2011 at approximately 1710 hours, Jessica Pelt arrived at the Sandy Springs Police Headquarters after being arrested on warrant number 11SWA0029 for distribute of cocaine. After being read her rights, Plet denied knowing Sherell Allen and others involved in this case. Plet denied ever selling me drugs and claimed to never have seen me before. Pelt sold me two ounces of cocaine at the Mardi Gras Strip Club on December 2, 2010. I showed Plet her permit information which was file at the Sandy Springs Police Department; however, she continued to deny dancing at the Club. Pelt had renewed the permit on September 23, 2010. After a brief interview she was transported to the Fulton county jail.

SANDY SPRINGS POLICE DEPARTMENT
STATEMENT FORM

STATEMENT OF: ~~Connie Lee~~ TAKEN/WRITTEN BY: ~~Det. Thomas~~

RACE/SEX: W/F DOB: [redacted]/57 NICKNAME: ~~Athena~~

DATE: 5/26/11 TIME: ~~10:15 PM~~ CASE #: ~~2010-915880~~

HOME ADDRESS: [redacted] PHONE [redacted]

BUSINESS ADDRESS: _____ PHONE (___) _____

I have known Stacy for about 5 yrs. I only saw her sell to Morgon, Amy. when she was out having the baby I would hold it for her at work about a couple times a week at $40.00 bgs. I would buy from her when I was at work a ~~b~~$40.00 bg. about who she was paying off I do not know. and ~~the~~ In the VIP I have giving head I've seen Stacy, and morgan also do it ~~I've~~ I've Seen ~~alic~~ Alisa give head to guys in the VIP room. I've seen her ~~give~~ sell to guys inside the club but I do not know who They ~~are. Because~~ were, all of this took place at Mardi gras where I work.

I certify that I have read or have had read to me the above statement and that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I further certify that the statement was freely given and without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or any other unlawful influence.

SIGNATURE: Connie Lee DATE: 5/26/11

WITNESS: _____ DATE: 5/26/11

Revised 05-01-06

SANDY SPRINGS POLICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT FORM

CASE NUMBER: _____ DATE: _____ TIME: _____

STATEMENT OF: Rosario Gon~~t~~ RACE/SEX: F DOB: [redacted] 68

ALIAS (STREET NAME): Rose

HOME ADDRESS: [redacted] PHONE [redacted]

BUSINESS ADDRESS: Atlanta GA PHONE (___) _____

I done cocaine with Stacy, Athena and Serena inside her car one night at the crown plaza Hotel, ~~two~~ three weeks ago.
I did 10 Handjob with ~~the~~ for the Customer in the VIP room and had one sex with the customer. and also seen Athena done cocaine in the dressing rest room.

I certify that I have read or have had read to me the above statement and that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I further certify that the statement was freely given and without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or other unlawful influence.

SIGNATURE: Rosario [illegible] WITNESS: Det. [illegible] #103

WITNESS: _____ WITNESS: _____

03/07/06

SANDY SPRINGS POLICE DEPARTMENT
STATEMENT FORM

STATEMENT OF: Amy Walker TAKEN/WRITTEN BY: Amy Walker

RACE/SEX: F DOB: [redacted]89 NICKNAME: @heyanne

DATE: 05/26/11 TIME: CASE #:

HOME ADDRESS: [redacted] PHONE ( )

BUSINESS ADDRESS: PHONE [redacted]

I saw Atheena & Serena upstairs at Mardi Gras. They told me to meet Stacy downstairs. I went & Talked to her and She told me that She was having a private party at the Crowne Plaza on thursday The deal was before we went in we all would get $300 each and one girl told me to bring condoms, just in case but that would be more money. I showed up to find myself in jail.

I certify that I have read or have had read to me the above statement and that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I further certify that the statement was freely given and without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or any other unlawful influence.

SIGNATURE: Amy Walker DATE: 05/26/11

WITNESS: #127 DATE: 05-26-11

Revised 05-01-06

SANDY SPRINGS POLICE DEPARTMENT
STATEMENT FORM

STATEMENT OF: Tameka Dixon TAKEN/WRITTEN BY: _____

RACE/SEX: Female DOB: [redacted] 83 NICKNAME: Toy

DATE: 5-26-2011 TIME: CASE #: _____

HOME ADDRESS: [redacted] PHONE [redacted]

BUSINESS ADDRESS: _____ PHONE [redacted]

Last week, Stacy AKA Sherrell Allen, called me and asked if I wanted to do a party. I said yes. She told me that it would be three hundred dollars at the door just to show up. She also said that they wanted girls that partied, She told me I could fake and act as if I was doing cocaine. (Because she knew that I have been clean now for 3½ years) I figured she was just tryna be a friend and help me make some money, and as a friend I trusted her. Sherrell is a dealer, I work night shift, and she works days. So I don't get to see her as often but I do see her when I am coming into work, and she is leaving when I come in. There is only one girl that I know of that helps Sherell, her name is Connie, I am not sure of any other girls dealing for her, that is the only one that I know of.

I certify that I have read or have had read to me the above statement and that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I further certify that the statement was freely given and without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or any other unlawful influence.

SIGNATURE: T Dixon DATE: 5-26-2011

WITNESS: C. [redacted] #1013 DATE: 5/26/2011

Revised 05-01-06

SANDY SPRINGS POLICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT FORM

CASE NUMBER: _____ DATE: 5/26/11 TIME: 10:39 pm

STATEMENT OF: _____ RACE/SEX: BLK DOB: [redacted]-65

ALIAS (STREET NAME): Michelle Reynolds

HOME ADDRESS: [redacted] PHONE [redacted]

BUSINESS ADDRESS: _____ PHONE (___)_____

I was told It was a bachelor party. and that It was up to each individual as to what they wanted to participate in. It would last an 1 1/2hr. and to not be surprised at what you see. We all were to get $300; and what ever else happened was at each girls discretion. you could or could not indulge in party Favors or other activities If were propositioned it would be up to you if wanted to participate

I certify that I have read or have had read to me the above statement and that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief. I further certify that the statement was freely given and without promise of reward, coercion, intimidation, or other unlawful influence.

SIGNATURE: _____ WITNESS: _____ #103

WITNESS: _____ WITNESS: _____

03/07/06

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

FLANIGAN'S ENTERPRISES, INC. OF GEORGIA d/b/a Mardi Gras, 6420 Roswell Road, Inc. d/b/a Flashers, and Fantastic Visuals, LLC d/b/a Inserection,	*	CIVIL ACTION FILE No. 1:09-CV-2747-RLV
Plaintiffs,	*
v.	*
CITY OF SANDY SPRINGS, GEORGIA, et al.	*
Defendant.	*

AFFIDAVIT OF DAVID HUFFSCHMIDT

1. My name is David Huffschmidt, I am over eighteen years of age, and I am competent to give this Affidavit.

2. I am a detective in the City of Sandy Springs Police Department, and I have been with this department since January 2008.

3. Beginning in late 2011, I participated in an undercover investigation at Flashers, an adult entertainment establishment at 6420 Roswell Road NE in Sandy Springs, to investigate allegations of illegal drug distribution and prostitution occurring among the employees.

4. On Friday, December 16, 2011, Sergeant Rob Stevens (now, Captain) and I went to Flashers in an undercover capacity at about 10:30 P.M.

5. From the bar I saw 20-25 nude adult entertainers dancing on stage or among patrons on the main floor. I saw many nude entertainers having physical contact with customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their bare breasts in the customers' faces and grinding their nude buttocks into customers' laps during lap dances.

6. I received a lap dance from a nude adult entertainer for about $20. Several times she rubbed her bare breasts in my face. She also sat on my lap and rubbed my crotch with her bare buttocks. Later I received a lap dance from a different nude entertainer, who also had physical contact with me in similar ways. I paid for that lap dance as well. I also saw multiple nude entertainers have similar physical contact with Sergeant Stevens.

7. On Friday, December 23, 2011, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Sergeant Stevens shortly after 10:00 P.M.

8. On this visit I received lap dances from a nude adult entertainer called Chelsea. I paid $20-$25 for each lap dance. During the dances, Chelsea grinded on my crotch area with her bare buttocks. I also saw her have this kind of physical contact during lap dances with Sergeant Stevens.

9. While leaning her body against mine and exposing her bare breasts to me, Chelsea asked if I wanted to go with her to the VIP room. She said it would cost $125 for the club, plus $200 for her. I told her the price was too high, so she continued dancing in my lap. I asked where she was from, and she said El Salvador. She then whispered in my ear that we could go to the VIP room and she would take me to El Salvador. I understood this to mean she would have sex with me in the VIP room for $325.

10. Chelsea then led me to a different area of the club, where she said we could "get away with a lot more." She gave me a lap dance, grinding her bare buttocks on my crotch and rubbing her bare breasts. She turned around and touched her bare vagina, spreading it open slightly with her hand. Then, referring to her vagina, she said "we have to go to the VIP for that." She then started rubbing my crotch area with her bare breasts. For this lap dance I paid about $20 or $25.

11. Next I spoke with a nude entertainer called Trinity. She spoke to me about the VIP room, and she explained she did not want me to waste my money that night because, due to her female situation, it was a week of the month that she could not do the VIP room. Trinity then gave me a lap dance for about $20 or so. While still nude she grinded on my crotch area with her bare buttocks. She then turned around and caused her bare breasts to touch my face. After the dance, she took down my phone number and then called my phone to give me her number.

12. During this visit to Flashers, I saw numerous nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas. Bouncers for Flashers were able to see the physical contact that was occurring between nude entertainers and customers, and yet it continued.

13. On Thursday, January 5, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Sergeant Stevens.

14. On this visit I received several lap dances from nude adult entertainers for $20-$25 per dance, and each involved physical contact. The entertainers rubbed their bare breasts in my face and grinded on my clothed genital area with their bare butts and vaginal areas.

15. I also saw many other nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' crotches and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

16. On Friday, January 13, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Sergeant Stevens, from about 11:30 P.M. to about 1:45 A.M. (on January 14).

17. On this visit I received several lap dances from nude adult entertainers for $20-$25 per dance, and each involved physical contact. The entertainers rubbed their bare breasts in my face and grinded on my clothed genital area with their bare butts and vaginal areas. During one such dance, an entertainer called Mystery placed her leg on top of my leg while grinding her nude vagina on my leg. Then she turned around, bent over, and grinded my crotch with her bare buttocks.

18. During a lap dance from Zoey, she sat in my lap, put her hands on my shoulders, and grinded her bare breasts and stomach in my face. Then she turned around, bent over, reached her hand between her legs and ran her finger between her vaginal lips for me to see. She did this several times. I paid her about $20 or so for this lap dance.

19. I also saw many other nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' crotches and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

20. On Saturday, January 28, 2012, I returned to Flashers in an undercover capacity with Sergeant Stevens, from about 10:00 P.M. to about 11:30 P.M.

21. One of the nude entertainers, called Trinity, approached me and we talked. As we spoke, she mentioned that two men at the other end of the main stage were suspected to be undercover officers. She commented that it was stupid of one of the other nude entertainers to be dancing for them since she believed they were undercover officers.

22. Trinity then gave me lap dances for about three songs. She did so completely nude, she rubbed her bare breasts in my face and my chest area, and she grinded on my crotch/lap area with her bare buttocks. Later Trinity gave me another lap dance, and it also involved the same kind of physical contact. I paid her about $20 for each lap dance.

23. I also saw many other nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' crotches and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

24. Affiant further sayeth not.

R SCOTT LAUGHMAN
Notary Public, Georgia
Cobb County
My Commission Expires
06-26-15

David Huffschmidt

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18 day of September, 2012.

_____, Notary Public

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

FLANIGAN'S ENTERPRISES, INC. OF GEORGIA d/b/a Mardi Gras, 6420 Roswell Road, Inc. d/b/a Flashers, and Fantastic Visuals, LLC d/b/a Inserection,	*	CIVIL ACTION FILE No. 1:09-CV-2747-RLV
Plaintiffs,	*
v.	*
CITY OF SANDY SPRINGS, GEORGIA, et al.	*
Defendant.	*

AFFIDAVIT OF CAMERON REEVES

1. My name is Cameron Reeves, I am over eighteen years of age, and I am competent to give this Affidavit.

2. I am the Owner of Reeves Investigations LLC, and I am a licensed private investigator.

3. On Friday, October 7, 2011, I went to Flashers, an adult entertainment establishment at 6420 Roswell Road NE in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 8:30 P.M. to about 11:05 P.M. On this visit I saw Mario Freese and Tamara Corazalla moving about throughout the club.

4. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $20 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), lifted up her tank top (exposing her bare breasts), and put both her hands on my upper thighs. The entertainer then began to rub my groin area with her nude butt. Her nude vaginal area also had physical contact with my groin area. The nude adult entertainer rubbed her bare breasts on my face and then licked my ear and neck area with her tongue. Mario Freese was sitting next to me at the time, and he and Tamara Corazalla were both able to see the conduct described in this paragraph.

5. I later received dances from two other nude adult entertainers that consisted of the same kind of physical contact described in paragraph 4. I paid each of the entertainers $30 after each dance.

6. During this visit to Flashers, I saw at least 18 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces and bodies. Mario Freese and Tamara Corazalla were present in the room and were able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

7. On Friday, October 7, 2011, I went to MainStage, an adult entertainment establishment at 5275 Roswell Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 11:15 P.M. to about 1:15 A.M (on October 8). On this visit I saw Grant Davis, Apostolos Kakaroumbas, and Kevin Gribbin in the establishment. MainStage is in the same location as the Coronet Club.

8. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $10 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), lifted up her tube top (exposing her bare breasts), and put both her hands on my upper thighs. The entertainer then began to rub my groin area with her nude butt. I paid the nude entertainer $20.

9. Then the nude entertainer asked me to go with her to the Gold Room, which she described as a more "private area." I agreed to go into the Gold Room for the quoted price of $25. In the Gold Room the nude entertainer rubbed her bare breasts on my face and rubbed her nude vaginal area on my thighs. She also rubbed my groin area with her nude butt. For this dance, I paid the nude entertainer $35.

10. Later an adult entertainer took me to the VIP room. To go to the VIP room, I had to pay Kevin Gribbin, who appeared to be a manager, a $240 fee. In the VIP room I sat on a couch and the adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks) and her bra (exposing her bare breasts). The entertainer straddled my head, and she touched my face with her nude vaginal area. She then wrapped her legs around my body and rubbed her bare breasts against my face. In this position, the nude entertainer moved back and forth on my groin area (a motion known as "dry humping") for several minutes. Her nude vaginal area had physical contact with my thigh area and groin in the VIP room. I spent 15 minutes in the VIP room with the nude entertainer.

11. During this visit to MainStage, I saw at least 8 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas, nude entertainers rubbing their breasts against customers' faces and bodies, and nude entertainers rubbing their vaginal and butt areas in customers' faces. Grant Davis, Apostolos Kakaroumbas, and Kevin Gribbin were present and able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

12. On Saturday, October 8, 2011, I went to Mardi Gras, an adult entertainment establishment at 6300 Powers Ferry Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 9:30 P.M. to about 12:15 A.M. (on October 9). On this visit I saw Rick Peffer and a manager called Slater in the establishment.

13. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $40 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks) and her bra (exposing her bare breasts). While nude, the entertainer straddled me, wrapped her legs around my torso, and rubbed my groin area with her nude vaginal area. She then changed positions and rubbed my groin area with her nude butt. Afterwards I paid the entertainer $50. During this visit to Mardi Gras, I received similar dances from two other nude adult entertainers.

14. While seated on the main floor, I saw Rick Peffer speaking with a group of customers who were part of a bachelor party. Three adult entertainers took the bachelor onto the stage where he sat in a chair. The adult entertainers removed their bras and thong underwear. They rubbed their nude vaginal areas on the bachelor's thighs, rubbed their bare breasts on the bachelor's face, and rubbed the bachelor's groin area with their nude butts. Rick Peffer and Slater were able to see the physical contact between the 3 nude entertainers and the bachelor on the stage.

15. On this visit, I saw at least 40 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of nude entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts on customers' faces and bodies. Rick Peffer and another manager called Slater were able to see the physical contact between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

16. On Thursday, October 20, 2011, I went to Inserection, an adult bookstore at 7855 Roswell Road, Sandy Springs, Georgia, between noon and 1:00 P.M.

17. After paying a $5 fee, I entered an area of the store containing 16 viewing booths. The area with booths was not viewable from the main merchandise showroom. Each booth had a video monitor and a bench approximately 4 feet long. I entered 6 booths, and in 2 of the booths I inserted cash to activate the video. The videos depicted both heterosexual and homosexual intercourse. In all 6 booths, the wall below the video monitor was soiled with what appeared to be the residue of human semen.

18. Two middle-aged men were in the booth area walking about while I was there. As I moved among the booths, they would walk next to the booth I was occupying and would seek to maintain eye contact with me. Their behavior made me feel like they wanted me to interact with them or perhaps to join them in anonymous sexual activity.

19. I departed the booth area and told the store clerk about the two men in the booth area. She stated she did not know about them and said she would investigate, but she did not appear to be concerned and she did not approach them during the following moments while I browsed the merchandise showroom.

20. On Wednesday, November 30, 2011, I returned to Inserection between 7:15 and 8:15 P.M. On this visit I was accompanied by a colleague.

21. My colleague and I each paid the store clerk the $5 fee to enter the booth area. The clerk, a bald African American male with facial hair, who was the only individual working and who appeared to be the manager, asked me whether I was a homosexual. When I replied "No, why?" he then replied, "Because usually only homosexuals go in there."

22. Once inside the booth area, my colleague and I went together into 4 different booths and sat or stood together in each booth for a period of time. In each booth I saw what appeared to be the residue of human semen on the floor directly below the video monitor.

23. On Thursday, December 1, 2011, I returned to Flashers from about 7:10 P.M. to about 9:10 P.M. On this visit I saw Joseph McCranie and Tamara Corazalla collecting money and walking about the establishment.

24. An adult entertainer solicited personal dances to me, and I agreed to the $20 fee per dance that she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), lifted up her tank top (exposing her bare breasts), and put both her hands on my upper thighs. The entertainer then began to rub my genital area with her nude butt. Her nude vaginal area also had physical contact with my genital area. The nude adult entertainer rubbed her bare breasts on my face. I paid the nude entertainer $50 when she finished her dances. Joseph McCranie observed the foregoing physical contact.

25. Later, I received a similar dance from another nude entertainer, for which I paid $30. During the dance, the nude entertainer rubbed my genital area with her nude butt, and then she changed positions and rubbed her nude vaginal area on my thigh.

26. During this visit to Flashers, I saw at least 10 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces and bodies. Joseph McCranie and Tamara Corazalla were present and able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

27. On Thursday, December 1, 2011, I returned to Mardi Gras from about 9:30 P.M. to about 11:30 P.M. During this visit, I saw David Lamb moving about the club.

28. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $20 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks) and her bra (exposing her bare breasts). She rubbed her nude butt on my genital area and put her hands on my thighs. After the dance, I paid her $30. David Lamb was able to see the foregoing physical contact. I later received a similar dance from another nude entertainer, for which I paid $30.

29. Later an adult entertainer offered me a dance for $40 in an upstairs private room, and I agreed. The entertainer took me to an upstairs private room, and there she removed her bra and thong underwear. Once nude, the entertainer put her hands on my shoulders and straddled me, wrapping both her legs around my torso, and she rubbed my genital area with her nude vaginal area. She then changed positions and rubbed my genital area with her nude butt. After two such dances, I paid the nude entertainer $90.

30. During this visit to Mardi Gras, I saw at least 25 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces and bodies. David Lamb was a manager on the floor and he was able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

31. On Thursday, December 6, 2011, I returned to Flashers, from about 8:00 P.M. to about 10:00 P.M. On this visit, I saw Kylie Rodgers and Tamara Corazalla collecting money and observing the main floor of the establishment.

32. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $20 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her thong underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), took off her bra (exposing her bare breasts), and put both her hands on my upper thighs. The entertainer then began to rub my genital area with her nude butt. Her nude vaginal area also had physical contact with my genital area. The nude adult entertainer rubbed her bare breasts on my face. Afterwards, I paid her $30. Kylie Rodgers and Tamara Corazalla were able to see the foregoing physical contact.

33. Later an adult entertainer took me to the VIP room, which she said would cost $250 for 30 minutes. In the VIP room, the nude entertainer rubbed my genital area with her nude butt and vagina. Using her hand, she also rubbed my penis (which remained covered by my pants). The nude entertainer then put her mouth on my clothed penis and she rubbed her vagina and bare breast on my face. Afterwards, I paid the nude entertainer $270.

34. During this visit to Flashers, I saw at least 12 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that consisted of entertainers rubbing their nude butts and vaginal areas on customers' groin areas and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts against customers' faces and bodies. Kylie Rodgers and Tamara Corazalla were present and able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

35. On Tuesday, December 6, 2011, I returned to Mardi Gras, from about 10:15 P.M. to about 12:15 A.M. (on December 7). On this visit I saw Mike Fulton walking around the main floor of the establishment.

36. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the $30 fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), took off her bra (exposing her bare breasts), and rubbed my genital area with her nude butt. I paid the nude entertainer $60 for two dances. Mike Fulton was able to see the foregoing physical contact.

37. Later an adult entertainer took me upstairs to a corner booth for a 30 minute dance, which she said would cost $150. Once inside the booth, which was dark, the adult entertainer removed her underwear (exposing her genitals and buttocks), took off her bra (exposing her bare breasts), and put both her hands on my upper thighs. The entertainer then began to rub my genital area with her nude butt. Her nude vaginal area also had physical contact with my genital area. The nude adult entertainer rubbed her bare breasts on my face. At the conclusion, I paid the nude entertainer $150.

38. During this visit to Mardi Gras, I saw at least 25 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with paying customers that included entertainers rubbing their nude butts on customers' groin areas. Mike Fulton was there as a manager and was able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and paying customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

39. On Wednesday, January 11, 2012, I went to Love Shack, an adult bookstore at 5674 Roswell Road NE in Sandy Springs, Georgia, between 9:45 and 10:45 A.M.

40. I browsed the merchandise on display in the store, but it was not apparent to me whether there were any viewing booths in the establishment. So I asked the store clerk and she told me that the viewing booths were upstairs. The stairs were in a corner of the store and are fairly hidden.

41. I went up the stairs and found 9 booths, and each contained a monitor and a bench that was about 2 feet long. The booths could not be seen or observed from the merchandise display area on the lower level.

42. I entered each of the booths, and in 6 of them I saw what appeared to be the residue of human semen on the floor directly below the monitor. In one of the booths I inserted a dollar bill to activate the video monitor, which allowed the occupant to see several videos depicting heterosexual and homosexual intercourse.

43. Later that afternoon, I returned to Love Shack with a colleague. We each paid the $2 fee and proceeded upstairs to the booth area. The two of us entered a booth together and activated the video monitor. The monitor showed videos depicting heterosexual and homosexual intercourse. Then we entered a second booth and, again, occupied that booth at the same time.

44. On Wednesday, January 11, 2012, I traveled to 350 Northridge Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, looking for an establishment called Video Wholesalers. I could not find any such establishment at that address.

45. On Wednesday, January 11, 2012, I traveled to 8290 Roswell Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, looking for an establishment called Extreme Video. I could not find any such establishment at that address.

46. On Wednesday, January 11, 2012, I went to Starship, a retail store at 8590 Roswell Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia. The establishment offered adult merchandise in one large room, but it did not have any type of back room or video booth area.

47. On Saturday, January 14, 2012, I returned to Love Shack with a colleague between 3:45 and 4:45 P.M. We again entered the booth area, where we occupied viewing booths together with no one correcting or stopping us. I also saw what appeared to be the residue of human semen on the floor directly below the video monitor in 6 of the 9 viewing booths. Again, the videos available in the booths were depicting heterosexual and homosexual intercourse.

48. Affiant further sayeth not.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on September 17th, 2012.

Cameron Reeves

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 17th day of September, 2012.

Notary Public

DEBORAH P EVANS
NOTARY PUBLIC
GWINNETT COUNTY, GEORGIA

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA
ATLANTA DIVISION

FLANIGAN'S ENTERPRISES, INC. OF GEORGIA d/b/a Mardi Gras, 6420 Roswell Road, Inc. d/b/a Flashers, and Fantastic Visuals, LLC d/b/a Inserection,	*	CIVIL ACTION FILE No. 1:09-CV-2747-RLV
Plaintiffs,	*
v.	*
CITY OF SANDY SPRINGS, GEORGIA, et al.	*
Defendant.	*

AFFIDAVIT OF WARREN SCHERR

1. My name is Warren Scherr, I am over eighteen years of age, and I am competent to give this Affidavit.

2. I am a licensed private investigator employed by Holliday Investigative Services.

3. On Friday, September 23, 2011, another investigator and I went to Mardi Gras, an adult entertainment establishment at 6300 Powers Ferry Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 9:55 P.M. to about 1:00 A.M. (on September 24). On this visit I saw a manager named Mike who was working on the floor in the establishment.

4. An adult entertainer solicited a personal dance to me, and I agreed to the fee she quoted. The adult entertainer removed her attire and was completely nude (exposing her genitals, her buttocks, and her bare breasts). For the entire duration of a song, the nude entertainer rubbed and grinded into my crotch area aggressively with her nude buttocks.

5. I also saw my colleague receive personal dances from nude entertainers. I saw the entertainers grinding his crotch area with their nude buttocks, and some of them touching his face with their bare breasts. I also saw a nude entertainer grinding his crotch area with her nude vaginal area.

6. During this visit to Mardi Gras, I saw at least 8 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with other customers that consisted of entertainers grinding their nude buttocks on the crotch area of customers and rubbing their bare breasts in customers' faces. Mike, the manager, was present in the room and was able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

7. On Saturday, September 24, 2011, another investigator and I went to MainStage, an adult entertainment establishment at 5275 Roswell Road in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 9:00 P.M. to about 11:30 P.M. On this visit, I saw Natasha Steward and Grant Davis in the establishment.

8. On this occasion, I saw my colleague receive a personal dance from a nude adult entertainer for a $25 fee. The entertainer removed her attire and was completely nude (exposing her genitals, buttocks, and bare breasts). During the dance, the nude entertainer grinded her nude body up against the body of my colleague. I saw her grind on his crotch area using her vagina and buttocks. She rubbed his body and hair with her hands, and then she rubbed his crotch area with her hands. I also saw her rub her breast against his mouth.

9. Later, I saw another nude entertainer grinding on my colleague's crotch with her nude buttocks and brushing her nude breast in his face. I also received several dances like this from nude adult entertainers.

10. During this visit to MainStage, I saw at least 6 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with other customers that included the entertainers grinding their nude buttocks on the crotch area of customers and rubbing their bare breasts in customers' faces. Natasha Steward and Grant Davis were present in the room and were able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

11. On Friday, September 23, 2011, another investigator and I went to Flashers, an adult entertainment establishment at 6420 Roswell Road NE in Sandy Springs, Georgia, from about 11:45 P.M. to about 1:00 A.M. (on September 24). On this visit, I saw a duty manager named Tamara working in the club.

12. On this occasion, I received a personal dance from an adult entertainer for a fee. The entertainer was completely nude, exposing her buttocks, breasts, and vaginal area. The nude entertainer grinded on my crotch with her bare buttocks, and she rubbed her bare breasts in my face, all while sitting on my lap and grinding her body up against mine. I received multiple dances like this from nude adult entertainers. I also saw my colleague being touched in the same way by nude entertainers.

13. During this visit to Flashers, I saw at least 4 nude adult entertainers having physical contact with other customers that consisted of entertainers grinding their nude buttocks on the crotch area of customers and entertainers rubbing their bare breasts in customers' faces. Tamara, a manager, was present in the room and was able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

14. On Tuesday, December 13, 2011, I returned to Main Stage from about 10:30 P.M. to about 12 midnight. On this visit, I saw Natasha Steward and Grant Davis in the establishment.

15. On this occasion I received a personal dance from an adult entertainer for a fee. The entertainer removed her bikini top and exposed her breasts. She was left wearing a g-string, which covered her genitals but left nearly all of her buttocks exposed. She grinded her exposed buttocks in my lap. She did that for part of a song and for the duration of another song.

16. Then the adult entertainer led me to the steps to the VIP room, and Grant Davis counted the $150 fee that I paid for fifteen minutes in the VIP room. I sat down in the VIP room and the adult entertainer took off all her clothes. For the entire 15 minutes she grinded her nude buttocks in my lap continuously, hugging me and kissing my cheek. After 15 minutes Natasha Steward came to the room to note the time, and she asked if I wanted to continue for an extra $150.

17. During this visit to MainStage, I saw at least 2 nude adult entertainers exposing their breasts while having physical contact with other customers that included the entertainers grinding their exposed buttocks on the crotch area of customers. Natasha Steward and Grant Davis were present in the room and were able to see the physical contact occurring between nude adult entertainers and customers. No one tried to stop or reduce the physical contact that was repeatedly occurring between the nude entertainers and customers.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on September 18th, 2012.

Warren Scherr

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of September, 2012.

Judith P. Horne Notary Public Cobb County, Georgia

_____, Notary Public

my commission expires: 6/10/16

Proposed Legislation

West's Florida Statutes Annotated

Title XLVI. Crimes (Chapters 775-899)

Chapter 787. Kidnapping; False Imprisonment; Luring or Enticing a Child; Custody Offenses (Refs & Annos)

West's F.S.A. § 787.06

787.06. Human trafficking

Effective: October 1, 2015

Currentness

(1)(a) The Legislature finds that human trafficking is a form of modern-day slavery. Victims of human trafficking are young children, teenagers, and adults. Thousands of victims are trafficked annually across international borders worldwide. Many of these victims are trafficked into this state. Victims of human trafficking also include citizens of the United States and those persons trafficked domestically within the borders of the United States. The Legislature finds that victims of human trafficking are subjected to force, fraud, or coercion for the purpose of sexual exploitation or forced labor.

(b) The Legislature finds that while many victims of human trafficking are forced to work in prostitution or the sexual entertainment industry, trafficking also occurs in forms of labor exploitation, such as domestic servitude, restaurant work, janitorial work, sweatshop factory work, and migrant agricultural work.

(c) The Legislature finds that traffickers use various techniques to instill fear in victims and to keep them enslaved. Some traffickers keep their victims under lock and key. However, the most frequently used practices are less obvious techniques that include isolating victims from the public and family members; confiscating passports, visas, or other identification documents; using or threatening to use violence toward victims or their families; telling victims that they will be imprisoned or deported for immigration violations if they contact authorities; and controlling the victims' funds by holding the money ostensibly for safekeeping.

(d) It is the intent of the Legislature that the perpetrators of human trafficking be penalized for their illegal conduct and that the victims of trafficking be protected and assisted by this state and its agencies. In furtherance of this policy, it is the intent of the Legislature that the state Supreme Court, The Florida Bar, and relevant state agencies prepare and implement training programs in order that judges, attorneys, law enforcement personnel, investigators, and others are able to identify traffickers and victims of human trafficking and direct victims to appropriate agencies for assistance. It is the intent of the Legislature that the Department of Children and Families and other state agencies cooperate with other state and federal agencies to ensure that victims of human trafficking can access social services and benefits to alleviate their plight.

THE FBI FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Wanted by the FBI

Human Trafficking

SEVERIANO MARTINEZ-ROJAS

ROGER GALINDO-SEPEDA

MARIA ISABEL CRUZ

WEI LI PANG

SHU GANG LI

ALFONSO ANGEL DIAZ-JUAREZ

AMPARO ALTAGRACIA MONTAS HERNANDEZ

EDDY VASQUEZ

ROGER GALINDO-SEPEDA

Conspiring to Engage in a Conspiracy to Conceal, Harbor, and Shield Illegal Aliens

REWARD: The FBI is offering a reward for information leading to the arrest of Roger Galindo-Sepeda.

informed that they were indebted to the leader of the enterprise in the amount of $7,000 to $10,000, and they would have to work off their debt. The victims were then quartered in safe houses with virtually no contact with the outside world. After being forced to wear excessive makeup and immodest clothing, the victims were then transported to clubs managed by the subjects and were forced to engage in prostitution. Women who refused to comply were threatened with being reported to the Immigration and Naturalization Service and imprisoned. Additionally, threats were made to harm the victims' families in Honduras and to inform the families of the victims' involvement in prostitution.

On May 24, 2002, a federal arrest warrant was issued by the United States District Court, Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division, after Galindo-Sepeda was charged federally with conspiring to

SUMMARY
SCARS & MARKS
ALIASES
DESCRIPTION
GET POSTER
SUBMIT A TIP

Operation Dancing Brides - 20 Individuals Charged for Participating in a Scheme to Recruit Illegal Immigrants to Work in Cheetah Adult Entertainment Clubs Controlled by La Cosa Nostra

December 1, 2011

Charges have been made against 20 individuals for their participation in a scheme that involved recruiting women from Russia and other Eastern European countries to illegally enter the U.S. to work as exotic dancers at adult entertainment clubs ("Strip Clubs") controlled by the Gambino and Bonnano Organized Crime Families of La Cosa Nostra. Several of the defendants also arranged for many of the women to enter into sham marriages with U.S. citizens. Defendants ALPHONSE TRUCCHIO, WILLIAM PAZIENZA, SR., CHRISTOPHER COLON, and RICHARD GUTKOWSKI, who are members or associates of the Gambino Organized Crime Family, and ANTHONY FRASCONE, PAUL CASELLA, and LAWRENCE ZAINO, who are members or associates of the Bonnano Organized Crime Family, are charged with racketeering and extortion crimes related to their control of several Strip Clubs located in Queens and Long Island, New York, at which the women worked. These seven defendants and 13 others—ALEKSANDR KRAVETS, THOMAS DEVITT III, GERALD MONFORT, YONG WANG, BORIS YUSUPOV, VITALIY MINDYUK, ZHANNA KUZNETSOVA, ELENA TURUBANOVA, NATALIA IVANOVA, CHRISTINE GUNNING, JEFFREY RINCHEY, OSCAR ZELEDON, and ALEXANDER BELESON—are also charged with several other crimes related to the scheme, including visa fraud, marriage fraud, and transporting, harboring, and inducing the entry of illegal aliens. All of the defendants were arrested today and will be presented before U.S. Magistrate Judge Gabriel W. Gorenstein in Manhattan federal court this afternoon. The case is assigned to U.S. District Judge Victor Marrero.

Manhattan U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara stated: "As alleged, the schemes in which these defendants participated ran the gamut of criminal activity—from racketeering and extortion, to immigration and marriage fraud. And the defendants themselves had one thing in common—the desire to turn the women they allegedly helped enter this country illegally into their personal profit centers. Today's arrests have brought an end to their illicit activities."

ICE HSI Special Agent in Charge James T. Hayes, Jr., stated: "Today's arrests bring to an end a long-standing criminal enterprise operated by colluding organized crime entities that profited wildly through a combination of extortion and fraud. As alleged, the defendants controlled their business and protected their turf through intimidation and threats of physical and economic harm. Today, that business model has been extinguished."

DSS Special Agent in Charge Robert Goodrich stated: "The Diplomatic Security Service is firmly committed to working with the U.S. Attorney's Office and our law enforcement partners at the Homeland Security Investigation's Document and Benefit Fraud Task Force, to investigate and bring to justice those who commit passport and visa fraud, which oftentimes leads to other criminal activities. This case demonstrates Diplomatic Security's continuing commitment to safeguard the integrity of the U.S. passport and U.S. visa by vigorously investigating and bringing those who commit passport or visa fraud to justice."

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF STATE
BUREAU OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY

DIPLOMATIC SECURITY INVESTIGATES

DS Case Files

RETURNING A FUGITIVE TO FACE JUSTICE

A Nigerian national was wanted in the United States for conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud, as well as money-laundering schemes. Monetary losses to his victims exceeded $70 million. DS RSOs in Lagos worked successfully with the U.S. Department of Justice and other U.S. and Nigerian law enforcement agencies to return the Nigerian fugitive to the United States, where he was arrested and turned over to the U.S. judicial process.

CURBING FRAUDULENT ASYLUM CLAIMS

Over a four-year period, Chinese asylum claims doubled in the United States to 16,000 cases per year. During the same period, Chinese student visa asylum requests jumped from ten percent of all claims to 33 percent.

To confront potential fraud and improve investigative collaboration, the DS Regional Security Office in Shenyang and the U.S. Department of Homeland Security co-founded the China Visa Working Group, with key partnership by other U.S. law enforcement agencies as well. Following the Group's success in identifying fraudulent claims, Chinese student visa asylum claims dropped 63 percent, demonstrating the importance of the program and the need for active inter-agency collaboration.

PREVENTING INTERNATIONAL VISA FRAUD

A suspect was involved in a visa fraud scheme in the Massachusetts area regarding issuance of legitimate work visas based on fraudulent documentation presented to a U.S. embassy in South America. The suspect charged individuals $15,000 to facilitate the issuance of a visa. Upon their arrival in the United States, there was no expectation that these individuals would work at the company sponsoring their visas or that they would leave the U.S. after the authorized period of stay had ended.

The investigation lasted over two years and involved DS working together with members of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, Foreign Service National Investigators employed by the U.S. embassy, and foreign law enforcement officers operating undercover. This complex visa conspiracy investigation led to the arrest of a recruiter and the identification of several companies that manipulated the work visa process to provide businesses with an illegal work force. The investigation showed that the scheme facilitated the entry of over 1,000 foreign nationals into the United States.

All five suspects were arrested and subsequently pled guilty or were convicted by a jury. Each received 18 to 30 months of prison time, and all were ordered removed from the United States.

CURTAILING GANG ACTIVITY

Operation Bloodhound, a large multi-agency investigation, targeted a violent nationwide street gang involved in narcotics, weapon trafficking, homicides, and kidnappings. The gang used passport and identity fraud to further their activities and to avoid prosecution or capture. DS special agents from several field offices presided over 23 arrests in Illinois on one day alone, and seized multiple vehicles, narcotics, and cash. Several of the gang members were sentenced to prison.

HALTING THE SMUGGLING OF PEOPLE AND NARCOTICS

Operation Dancing Brides was a joint federal investigation into a criminal enterprise that employed Eastern European females as exotic dancers. The women entered the United States on student visas and often ended up in Mafia-connected adult entertainment jobs or in sham marriages with U.S. citizens to obtain immigration benefits. The two-year investigation culminated in 31 arrests.

September 10, 2015

Veniamin Gonikman, Accused Human Trafficker, Should Pay Victims $1.6 Million, Prosecutors Say

The Huffington Post
Posted: 04/27/2012 12:13 pm EDT | Updated: 04/27/2012 12:13 pm EDT

Federal prosecutors Thursday urged a U.S. District Court to order accused human trafficker Veniamin Gonikman to pay $1.6 million to 12 victims, and ignore the defendant's plea for leniency.

According to the Detroit Free Press, the Ukranian nightclub owner, who was once on the FBI's Most Wanted list, faces up to 51 months in prison for his role in smuggling "Ukranian dancers" into the United States to work as strippers.

According to authorities, the women were forced work long hours, hand over their earnings -- sometimes "$3,000 to $4,000" a week, according to one victim's 2007 testimony before Congress -- and were verbally and physically abused. The Detroit Free Press reported that authorities estimated Gonikman extorted more than $1 million from his victims.

"I could not refuse to go to work or I would be beaten," the victim testified. "I was often yelled at for not making enough money, or had a gun put to my face."

Gonikman plead guilty to money laundering charges in September 2011, and is seeking a jail sentence of 10-to-16 months, but insists that it was his co-defendant son that was behind the human trafficking operation, according to the Detroit Free Press.

In 2005, Gonikman fled the United States after being charged in Detroit with a 22-count indictment on charges including "trafficking in persons, forced labor, alien smuggling, money laundering, extortion collection, and conspiracy," according to CBS Detroit. He was arrested in January 2011 after being deported from Ukraine.

In March 2011, the Associated Press reported that Michigan would strengthen its human trafficking laws in response to a rash of "modern-day slavery" in the state. That report cited Gonikman's case as a high-profile example, but indicated that human trafficking had become a major issue across the state, from Detroit to the Upper Peninsula.

MORE: $1.6 Million Detroit Veniamin Gonikman to Pay Veniamin Gonikman Ukraine Michigan Slave Trader Human Trafficking

Conversations

U.S. House of Representatives
Committee on the Judiciary

Statement of "Katya" Trafficking Victim from Ukraine
Before the House Judiciary Committee
United States House of Representatives

October 31, 2007

Good afternoon. I would like to thank the House Committee on the Judiciary for the opportunity to speak on behalf of trafficking victims. This is my story. I did not work as a maid, or on a farm. I was not made to be a prostitute. I came from another country. But I will try to speak for all survivors of trafficking, no matter what they were made to do or where they are from. Because our desire is a universal one - the desire for freedom.

Please call me Katya. I cannot use my real name today and I am also in disguise because I fear that my captors will recognize me and place my life and that of my family in danger.

In Fall 2003 I was a university student in Ukraine. I found out about a summer program that would allow me to work in the United States and study English. I was very excited. I applied for the program and obtained a student visa. I found out that I would be working as a waitress in Virginia Beach.

In May 2004 I traveled to the United States. I flew from Kiev to Washington D.C. When I landed, I was surprised to see Michael Aronov and Alex Maksimenko, people I knew from Ukraine, at the airport in Washington D.C.. They told me that I would no longer be going to Virginia but not to worry because they had worked things out and I would be going to Detroit. They gave me a bus ticket to Detroit.

When the bus arrived in Detroit I saw Michael, Alex, and another Ukranian man that I knew, Veniamin Gonikman waiting for me. Once I got off the bus in Detroit, everything changed. They took me to a hotel and took all of my identity documents from me. They told me that they needed them in order to get a state identification card for me. They told me that I owed them $12,000 for travel to the United States and $10,000 for the identification document, and that I only had a short time to pay them off.

I quickly leaned how I would have to pay it off. They told me I was going to have to work at a strip club called Cheetah's. They forced me to work six days a week for twelve hours a day. I could not refuse to go to work or I would be beaten. I had to hand over all of my money to Michael and Alex. I was often yelled at for not making enough money or had a gun put to my face. Every week I handed over around $3000-$4000 to Alex and Michael. I was their slave.

My captors kept me in an apartment with one of the other girls. I was never allowed out of the apartment by myself. I was driven to work by Michael or Alex (sometimes both) every day, except when they were on vacation. Then, they hired a car service for us. There was no phone in our apartment. Sometimes I was forced to call home to talk to my mom and tell her I was okay. Someone was always listening in on the calls so I could not tell her the truth, but I think she could tell by my voice that I was in trouble.

I never felt safe, between the other girl and I we only had one key to our apartment. Michael and Alex also had keys. Sometimes they would just come into our apartment without knocking, even if we were in the shower or sleeping. They would also come into our apartment when we weren't there. I know that they did this, because I found my things moved around. I think they were looking around to make sure we hadn't been keeping any of the money. The girl I lived with and I were trying to keep some money to escape. Our captors would give us money at the store and we would have to give them any leftover money. To try to keep some money for our escape we would slide some money into candy boxes. Once we got back to our place we hid the money in a hole outside in front of the apartment.

My enslavement finally ended when I escaped with the girl that I lived with. I was terrified that Alex and Michael were going to catch us. When we escaped from our apartment we put the stuff we wanted to take with us in garbage bags in case Alex or Michael showed up, that way we could just act like we were taking out the trash.

We escaped with the help from someone who believed us. The other girl confided in a man who came to the strip club regularly and who she felt she could trust. When he found out what happened, he agreed to help us. We were scared but went with him to ICE because they were supposed to help escapees. It was intimidating, but we told our story. The agents not only believed us and helped us, but they went that night and rescued two other women that had also been enslaved. They arrested Alex and Michael before they could run away or hide the evidence. Once they were arrested, I felt safe for the first time.

Since I escaped I have been learning English on my own and working full time. I really want to go back to school and finish my degree in sport medicine, but the money for college is an issue.

I am lucky, I escaped and survived being a victim of human trafficking. Many others are victims right now, they need help. Traffickers should not be able to exploit the student visa process. I was aware of human trafficking, I knew about it. I checked the program out and talked to people who had used the same company and come back safely. Still I was victim.

Businesses in the United States should not be able to make money off of slaves simply because they have someone else bring them into work. Not only did Alex and Michael make a lot of money by exploiting me, so did the strip club.

Finally, when I left Ukraine in May of 2004 and I said good-bye to my mother, I expected to see her again in a few months. Life in the United States is hard without my mother being with me. I never wanted to be here this long, but it is not safe for me to return to Ukraine. I miss my mom, and I worry about her safety since Alex's dad, Veniamin, is still in Ukraine. If the trafficking law had allowed for my mother to come and live with me in the United States it would have helped me and protected her.

Please help future victims like me, do not let this happen to anyone else. Thank you.

RedStickNow
Baton Rouge Crime News

SEARCH

Search this si

FOLLOW

HOMICIDES IN 2015

17

LOCAL LINKS

PODCAST225.COM

CRIME STOPPERS 344-STOP

RECENT NEWS

BRPD Makes Human Trafficking Arrest in Connection With Plank Rd. Strip Club Incident
MARCH 27, 2015

Baton Rouge Police Identify Deceased Female Found on North

BRPD Makes Human Trafficking Arrest in Connection With Plank Rd. Strip Club Incident

Posted on March 27, 2015

Investigators with the BRPD Sex Crimes Division have arrested a Baker female and charged her with Human Trafficking in connection with the recent bust of an unlicensed strip club on Plank Rd.

An affidavit of probable cause says Kaylenceyia Carter, 19, 2319 College Ave., Baker, LA, is allegedly responsible for bringing the 16-year-old victim to the club at 3773 Plank Rd. to strip for money.

During an interview with BRPD, the teen told investigators that she contacted Carter on March 21st stating she was in need of some money because she had no job. Carter told the teen that she had been working at a strip club and could take her there for an audition.

Carter brought the teen to the club at 3773 Plank Rd. where they met with the co-owner of the club, Trudell Richardson, also know as 'Squalee Pope.' Richardson asked the teen how old she was, to which the teen replied 16. Richardson told her to tell anyone who asked that she was 21. He told the teen that he would introduce her to the 'money guys' and that she needed to do whatever was necessary to make the money. She was told that half of the money she made was to be paid back to the club.

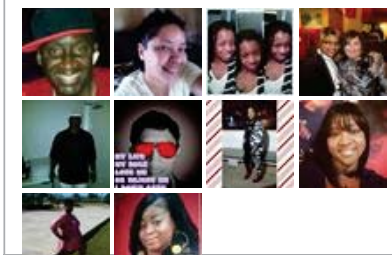
Carter then brought the teen inside the club, where she was taught how to dance on a pole. Richardson asked the teen to dance for him and several other males in the club who were throwing money on the floor in front of her. The teen told investigators that she made approximately $300.00 for the dance. She stated that she later fell asleep in one of the rooms at the club which is where the BRPD located her during a search.

A warrant was issued for Carter's arrest and she was charged with a

Find us on Facebook

Red Stick Now - Baton Rouge Crime News
Like

29,141 people like Red Stick Now - Baton Rouge Crime News.



Sign Up for Our Newsletter

Name

Email

Subscribe

OREGONLIVE

Beaverton Stars Cabaret manager admits to pimping strippers, including a 13-year-old

12.10starswarrantserve.jpg

Police served a search warrant at Stars Cabaret in Beaverton and two homes Dec. 10 linked to an alleged sex trafficking operation ran out of the strip club. (Beaverton Police Department)

Emily E. Smith | The Oregonian/OregonLive By Emily E. Smith | The Oregonian/OregonLive
Email the author | Follow on Twitter

on September 09, 2014 at 2:42 PM, updated September 10, 2014 at 8:00 PM

Correction appended

Steven Toth, a Beaverton strip club manager, hired a 13-year-old girl to dance nude for customers and have sex with some of them.

He split the profits with her pimp.

After the girl's first day at work in fall 2012, Toth had her perform oral sex on him. Then he drove her back to her pimp.

These were the facts described Tuesday, when Toth pleaded guilty in Washington County Court Circuit Court to compelling prostitution, first-degree sex abuse and second-degree sodomy. Six other counts against him were dismissed. His sentencing is set for next week.

Authorities say Victor Moreno-Hernandez was the girl's pimp. He is charged with 16 counts alleging he sexually abused, drugged and prostituted her. After Toth's plea hearing, lawyers began picking a jury for Moreno-Hernandez's trial in Circuit Court.

Toth was scheduled to go to trial the same day as his co-defendant, but he changed his mind over the weekend, said Senior Deputy District Attorney Kevin Barton. He decided instead to take a plea deal, which requires him to testify against Moreno-Hernandez.

The victim in the case was a chronic runaway who met Toth through Moreno-Hernandez, Barton said. At the time, Toth managed the Beaverton location of Stars Cabaret, a strip club chain.

The arrangement between Toth and the girl's pimp involved her working as a stripper and performing sex acts on customers in the club's back room, Barton said. The back room, behind the employees' locker room, was generally reserved for traveling porn stars or vendors who sold jewelry or dresses to the workers.

"If a child was going to be performing sex acts for customers at Stars, this room was used for that as well," Barton said.

From left, Victor Moreno-Hernandez and Steven Toth

WCSO

The prosecutor told Circuit Judge Thomas Kohl that Toth wasn't only prostituting the young teen.

During their investigation, police learned that prostitution at the strip club was common, Barton said. An informant told police that customers could select a dancer and pay the club to have sex with her off-site. This practice was against the club's official rules, Barton said.

"Unofficially, it happens," he said.

Toth was charged in a separate case with three counts of promoting prostitution related to selling sex with the women. In his Tuesday plea deal, he admitted to one of those counts.

"Is Stars still doing business?" the judge asked.

"As far as I know, yes," Barton said.

-- Emily E. Smith

Correction appended Sept. 10, 2014: A previous version of this article misstated the number of charges dismissed in Toth's case involving the child victim. The number of charges dismissed was six, not five.

Home > News

Providence strip club Cheaters, facing closure, on the market for $8 million

August 29, 2013 11:30 PM

BY AMANDA MILKOVITS

Journal Staff Writer

amilkovi@providencejournal.com

PROVIDENCE — A strip club where a missing Boston 15-year-old girl was found dancing in July is up for sale — along with the adjoining adult bookstore, strip club, gay bathhouse and "personal service club."

Cheaters Gentlemens Club, at 245 Allens Ave., faces a possible closure by the city license board for hiring an underage girl and for the arrest of a dancer who allegedly solicited an undercover detective.

The big pink strip club is part of the "adult entertainment center" listed on stripclubs4sale.com with an asking price of $8 million. The ad says the business and real estate — strip clubs, bookstore, megaplex club, "personal service club," and two vacant spaces — are valued at $11.23 million.

"This is an outstanding business opportunity that offers cash flow in excess of $2.5 million!"

The ad doesn't give the exact location in Providence or reveal the names of the businesses, but the description only fits the Allens Avenue properties owned by H. Charles Tapalian and registered to him and his family: Cheaters, Studio 253, Mega-Plex, Adult Video & News, and The Body Shoppe, all listed at 245, 253, and 257 Allens Ave.

Tapalian refused to speak to a Providence Journal reporter Thursday regarding the sale.

The advertisement went up on July 22, a week before the police found an underage Boston girl dancing at Cheaters. The teen was accompanied by a Massachusetts sex offender, who the police say put her to work in the club and was acting as a pimp for her and another 15-year-old girl.

Related

- Missing girl from Boston found dancing at Providence strip club
- Providence Police seek to shutter Cheaters, where missing teen was found dancing
- Providence City Council president proposes background checks for exotic dancers

Police: Man Had Sex With 15-Year-Old At Strip Club

Club Says Incident Never Happened

Steve Tellier/WLKY

POSTED: 10:57 pm EST February 13, 2012
UPDATED: 9:31 am EST February 14, 2012

NEW ALBANY, Ind. -- Police are searching for a southern Indiana man accused of having sex with a 15-year-old girl at a strip club in May of last year.

On Monday morning, an arrest warrant was issued for 28-year-old Seth Jecker.

Court documents stated the teen was at the club with her aunt and uncle.

A manager at The Rustic Frog, off Highway 111 in New Albany, said the incident never happened. The Rustic Frog said the family was celebrating after a wedding.

According to court documents, the girl told police that Jecker gave her several drinks while she was at the club, and that she remembered, "being alone with Jecker in a room and being on a couch with her underwear off."

She told police she also remembered, "Seth being on top of her and feeling pain."

Police said the girl was very intoxicated when they took her initial report.

Jecker later told police he had "kissed a girl at The Rustic Frog and had been told she was only 15, but he thought since they were in a strip club, she was not underage."

WLKY asked a manager at that strip club what happened. He said police examined surveillance video taken inside the club and found no evidence of criminal activity.

He also said he doesn't believe the girl was ever even inside the club, as two guards were manning the doors that night, ensuring every patron was 21 or over.

Recommended Stories:

Teen Girl Is Identified After Dying During Sleepover (WLKY.com)
Police: Man Breaks Into Home, Cleans, Cooks Dinner (WLKY.com)
Man Accused Of Killing Great-Grandmother With Hammer (WLKY.com)
City May Be Responsible For Removal Of Victim's Memorial (WLKY.com)

Selected for you by our sponsor:

These 4 Things Happen Right Before a Stroke (Newsmax.com)
Why Colorists Hate at Home Haircolor (HaircolorForWomen)
7 little-known Social Security benefits (BankRate.com)

Most Read Most Watched Don't Miss This

Police: Man Had Sex With 15-Year-Old At Strip Club
Teen Charged With Killing Her Newborn
INDOT: Sherman Minton Bridge May Reopen Early Boy, 16, Dies In ATV Crash
» More Most Popular

Quick Clicks

Terrible Valentine's

Underage stripper says club never asked to see ID

By Anita Kissée KATU News and KATU.com Staff | Published: Dec 30, 2011 at 12:18 AM PST (2011-12-30T8:18:52Z)

Nicole Madril, 17, holds a shoe she wore while dancing naked at a Salem strip club. She says the club never asked to see her ID.

RELATED CONTENT

Police investigating underage dancing at Salem strip club (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Police-investigating-underage-dancing-at-Salem-strip-club-136355623.html) (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Police-investigating-underage-dancing-at-Salem-strip-club-136355623.html?skipthumb=Y)

MOST POPULAR

Best Oregon DOT photos of 2011 (http://www.katu.com/living/outdoors/Best-Oregon-DOT-photos-of-2011-136385178.html)

Why were 1,000 people dancing on the waterfront last night? (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Why-were-1000-people-dancing-on-the-waterfront-last-night-136371513.html) (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Why-were-1000-people-dancing-on-the-waterfront-last-night-136371513.html?tab=video)

Portland's next on the list for variable speed limit signs (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Variable-speed-limit-signs-are-coming-to-Portland-136326623.html)

Photos: Ducks unveil Rose Bowl uniforms (http://www.katu.com/sports/Photos-Ducks-unveil-Rose-Bowl-uniforms-136258448.html)

Photos: No-man's land attests to Japan's nuclear nightmare (http://www.katu.com/news/national/No-mans-land-attests-to-Japans-nuclear-nightmare--136265553.html)

Eight years later, man still searching for kidnapped children (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Eight-years-later-man-still-searching-for-kidnapped-children-136373653.html) (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Eight-years-later-man-still-searching-for-kidnapped-children-136373653.html?tab=video)

Photos: Oregon troops who were killed in Iraq (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Photos-Oregon-troops-who-were-killed-in-Iraq-136081053.html)

Verizon Wireless to charge $2 for one-time payment (http://www.katu.com/news/national/Verizon-Wireless-to-charge-2-for-one-time-payment-136387303.html)

Police investigating underage dancing at Salem strip club (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Police-investigating-underage-dancing-at-Salem-strip-club-136355623.html) (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Police-investigating-underage-dancing-at-Salem-strip-club-136355623.html?tab=video)

Police: Man held woman captive, put gun in her mouth (http://www.katu.com/news/local/Police-Man-held-woman-captive-put-gun-in-her-mouth-136395493.html)

Man gets 4 years for pimping teen

Filed by Brad Dicken November 23rd, 2011 in Top Stories

Print this story

Read comments and discuss this story

An Elyria man who forced a 16-year-old girl to work as a prostitute was sentenced Tuesday to 4½ years in federal prison.

Davis

Timothy "Jhon" Davis pleaded guilty earlier this year to a federal charge of juvenile sex trafficking in exchange for prosecutors agreeing to drop additional charges he had faced in the case.

Davis had potentially faced up to life in prison, but both federal prosecutors and Davis' lawyer had asked that he receive a lower sentence, court documents show.

After he completes serving his prison sentence, Davis will be monitored for five years, according to U.S. District Court records.

Davis was arrested earlier this year after the FBI launched an investigation when they saw a photo of a girl they knew to be under the age of 18 on the website Backpage.com, which law enforcement and others have said is sometimes used to advertise prostitutes.

The site listed the girl's age as 21, but when she was contacted by the Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force, the girl told her that Davis had taken the picture of her and had known how old he was, according to court documents.

"Mr. Davis admits that he is a small-time pimp," his lawyer, Leif Christman wrote, in court documents, but he also insisted that his client didn't know the girl was underage.

Christman wrote that Davis had met the girl while she was a dancer at an adult establishment and that she was using another woman's identification.

Posted on Sun, Mar. 13, 2011

Men charged with rape, human trafficking

216 Comments
BY RON SYLVESTER
The Wichita Eagle

The 13-year-old girl saw the black Cadillac Escalade pull up to a QuikTrip, and she climbed inside with a man she had never met.

She had been told by another teen that this man would treat her better than the other pimps in Wichita.

Last week, the girl mumbled through tears in Sedgwick County District Court to tell a judge how men bought and sold her for sex.

The men she accused also were in court last week. Prosecutors say it's the first time they have charged both a pimp who they say provided the child and the "john," who they say paid for her.

Donald L. Davis, 48, and James M. Cochran, 54, stood silent as a judge entered pleas of not guilty on their behalf. If convicted, they face charges that could send them to prison for the rest of their lives.

Davis is charged with rape and human trafficking. Cochran faces three charges of rape. Their attorneys declined comment at their arraignment.

The girl is one of hundreds across the city and perhaps among 2 million around the United States exploited through commercial sex, officials think.

Girls and boys, on average, enter the sex trade between the ages of 11 to 13, according the U.S. Department of Justice.

They're exploited through strip clubs, pornography and escort services. Investigators at the Wichita-Sedgwick County Exploited and Missing Child Unit say they have tracked local girls being

PHOTOS

« 1 of 1 »

Bo Rader/The Wichita Eagle | Buy this photo
Wichita Eagle photo illustration

Fundraiser will aid kids forced into sex trade

Former exploited teen now runs KC-area nonprofit

HELPFUL RESOURCES

Veronica's Voice Kansas City-based education and outreach service to girls involved in commercial sexual exploitation, and the closest such "safe house" to Wichita.

National Runaway Switchboard: A resource to help runaways get off the street or teens thinking about running from home. Call 1-800-RUNAWAY
On Facebook

GEMS (Girls Educational and Mentoring Services) New York-based outreach to girls who have been involved in commercial sexual exploitation.
Watch a YouTube video from GEMS called "The Making of a Girl"

Breaking Free, based in St. Paul, Minn., provides education and help to girls in commercial sexual exploitation.

Children of the Night [http://childrenofthenight.org/] Los Angeles-area shelter, school and program to help girls

MOST READ STORIES | NEW BLOG POSTS

1. Girl killed while with dad in Colo.
2. 11 Wichita schools would lose Title 1 funding under budget-cutting plan
3. Overnight industrial fire causes $150,000 in damage
4. SEARCHABLE DATABASE: Daily booking report from Sedgwick County Jail
5. Copper thieves strip locomotives at KC facility
6. Wichita man sentenced to 10 years for child porn
7. Chemical bombs set off at two Wichita homes

Bennett, who at 6 feet stood a foot or more taller than the girl, used diagrams of the human body. The girl circled the parts of her body and the parts the men had put inside her. She faced the judge and kept her back turned to the defendants dressed in jail jumpsuits.

When asked to identify "Babe," the girl burst into tears.

She identified Davis as "Babe." She gestured to Cochran as "Mike."

Police had been looking for the girl since Thanksgiving. Authorities said they found her in Davis' trailer on Christmas Eve. They said she had been with Cochran earlier in the day.

That's how they were able to identify and build a case against both men. Police said they always aren't so lucky.

"They don't just come up front and tell you, 'I'm a victim of human trafficking,' " said Officer Kent Bauman of the Exploited and Missing Child Unit. "A lot of times we don't find out this girl's a victim until weeks or months afterwards, and the evidence is gone."

It was officials at the Wichita Children's Home who reported the girl as a runaway and initiated a search for her, not her family.

"So many times, they're not even reported as runaways," said Lund, the social worker, "because nobody misses them."

Beneath the surface

No one knows how many youths are currently involved in the U.S. sex trade.

"These children don't count, and nobody is counting them," wrote Julian Sher in his book, "Somebody's Daughter: The Hidden Story of America's Prostituted Children and the Battle to Save Them."

Sher found available estimates of children being sold for sex at between 300,000 and 2 million.

"That's obviously a huge gap," Countryman-Roswurm said.

What we do know in Wichita is that the Exploited and Missing Child Unit receives reports on some 1,200 runaways each year.

Now studying for her doctorate in community psychology, Countryman-Roswurm spent 10 years working with runaways and sex trade survivors.

In 2006 she founded the Anti-Sexual Exploitation Roundtable for Community Action in Wichita, which brought together law enforcement, therapists, social services and health care workers.

From 2007 to 2008, Countryman-Roswurm interviewed 250 youths coming through the Wichita Children's Home.

She found:

* 67 percent had been sexually assaulted or raped.

* 46 percent had been offered food, shelter, clothing, money or drugs in exchange for sex.

* 40 percent were "forced, prodded or coerced into trading sex for what they needed to survive."

"Only 6 percent of these youth have the skills or the strength to get away from that situation," Country-Roswurm said. "Which means to me we have to be doing more in our society in regards to prevention."

First, people have to start recognizing there is a problem, she said.

"We say it exists beneath the surface," said Bauman. "It goes on all over our community, but it's something no one wants to talk about."

And it exists, Countryman-Roswurm said, because people are willing to pay for sex with young girls.

False advertising

The 13-year-old girl said she told Davis she was 17.

That's not unusual, researchers say. Girls lie about their age, and pimps provide fake identification so they won't get caught trafficking children.

The girls perform in strip clubs and are made available on Internet "escort services."

"Amateur nights at the strip clubs are big," said Mike Nagy, a police officer who tracks runaways for the Exploited and Missing Child Unit. "On those nights, let's just say they can be lax on checking IDs."

Rehmert interviews girls who have worked in strip bars through the Wichita Children's Home's Street Outreach Program.

"There's always more going on than dancing," Rehmert said one 16-year-old told her.

On the Internet, authorities identified Backpage.com as a main source of advertising for traffickers. In the ads, teen girls lie about their ages. But they use their real pictures.

Both Rehmert and Lund recognize the pictures of girls they know to be minors on Backpage ads.

But even if customers don't know they are buying sex with a minor, they can still get in big trouble.

Cochran and Davis face 25 years to life if they're convicted of rape under Kansas' Jessica's Law. The 2006 law provides severe prison sentences for people having sexual relations with children under the age of 14.

Safe places

The 13-year-old testified she met Davis at a QuikTrip. But the convenience store chain is also the place runways in trouble can find help.

QuikTrip and Wichita fire stations are designated as "Safe Places."

Last year, Rehmert said the Wichita Children's Home received 250 calls from the Safe Places.

"The people who work at QuikTrip see a kid alone or who looks a little suspicious and they call us," Rehmert said. "They're learning what to look for."

If they get the chance to make that contact. Survivors of the sex trade talk about being under "pimp arrest," where they are denied contact with the outside world.

The 13-year-old girl who testified said Davis didn't give her a cell phone. After she had sex and collected the money, she said she would borrow the phone of her customer. She would call Davis, she said, to come pick her up.

Bennett, the prosecutor, said a group of women in the Junior League asked what they could do.

"Keep your eyes open," Bennett said. "If you see a girl at the QuikTrip getting in an Escalade and it doesn't seem right, get a tag number, call 911 and ask someone to check it out."

At the Children's Home, the runaways get warm clothes, food, a place to stay and access to counseling. Some flourish.

"These are really amazing, bright kids," Rehmert said. "All they need is opportunity and hope."

Others leave only to have their half-naked pictures return to Backpage.com.

Many have no place to go, other than the Juvenile Detention Facility.

"Good, safe, housing is a real need," Bauman said. "Sometimes, they're safer with us in the JDF than anywhere else."

The 13-year-old who testified last week stayed in detention, charged with prostitution, until authorities could place her in a home. Once she was safe, Bennett dropped the charges.

Countryman-Roswurm said agencies serving youths across the city need to better coordinate their efforts to identify at-risk children.

She also said attitudes about the sex trade need to change.

"People need to see, this can be my daughter; this can be my niece; this can be my sister; this can be my wife," Countryman-Roswurm said.

"But for so long, we've called them prostitutes. They are victims of sexual abuse, and they've been forced and coerced to participate in this form of slavery.

"And that's really what it is."

Reach Ron Sylvester at 316-268-6514 or rsylvester@wichitaeagle.com.

and 4 others liked this.

Add New Comment Login

Type your comment here.

Police: Detroit strip club employed 14-year-old

By COREY WILLIAMS (AP) – 3 hours ago

DETROIT — The manager of a Detroit strip club was charged after authorities learned a 14-year-old girl was employed as a topless dancer, making several hundred dollars a night, authorities said Friday.

The 31-year-old manager of the All Star topless bar was arraigned Friday on a charge of child sexually abusive activity.

Andrew Hutson was arrested Wednesday night at the club on Eight Mile Road. The girl, whose name was not released because of her age, is believed to have danced at the club several nights each week, making about $350 per night, Police Chief Warren Evans said at a news conference across the street from the establishment.

"It is clear that she danced there for a significant amount of time. It's clear, at least to us, that the club knew or should have known that she shouldn't be there," Evans said.

The girl's mother pulled her daughter from the club one night last week after learning she was working there. Employees of the club brought the girl out to a lobby area near the door, said her mother, whose name was withheld to protect her daughter's identity.

"Our youth are not some cheap commodity, to be used and cast aside," Prosecutor Kym Worthy said in a release. "We are sending a clear message that if you hire underage women you will face criminal charges."

An elaborate sign on an outside wall of the club bills it as "The 'ALL STARS' of GENTLEMEN CLUBS." But Evans described it as a constant thorn in the sides of police.

Over the past six years, there have been 11 nonfatal shootings and three fatal shootings "related to this club," Evans said. Violations also have been found in each of the last 15 Vice Squad inspections.

The Associated Press left a message Friday seeking comment from the club's owner. Hutson was released on a personal bond Friday. The AP could not determine if he has an attorney.

Related articles

Mom of dancer, 14, wants topless bar shut for good
Detroit Free Press - 7 hours ago

Strip club busted for topless dancer, 14
Herald Sun - 10 hours ago

Mom 'shocked' to learn 14-year-old daughter stripped
The Detroit News - 7 hours ago

More coverage (1) »

Associated Press

Photo 1 of 2

All Star topless bar on Eight Mile Road is shown in Detroit, Friday, April 23, 2010. Police say the manager of a northwest Detroit strip club has been charged after authorities learned a 14-year-old girl was employed as a topless dancer. (AP Photo/Paul Sancya)

Map

Police: 15-Year-Old Found Working At Strip Club

Girl, 17-Year-Old Found At Playmates Club In Cocoa

POSTED: 8:18 pm EDT August 23, 2009
UPDATED: 8:38 pm EDT August 23, 2009

COCOA, Fla. -- An investigation is under way at a Brevard County strip club after a woman told police her teenage daughter was working there.

Cocoa police said they went to Playmates and found the 15-year-old girl and a 17-year-old.

They weren't topless or dancing, but police said they had on revealing clothing.

The club said the girls claimed they were over 18.

Your Comments

The following are comments from our users. This is not content created by WESH.com.
By posting your comments you agree to accept the Terms of Use.

Add your comment:

Register or log in here (forgot password) Username Password Log In

(Log in to add a comment)

Hello people check ID's, besides the owner knew the truth!!!!

Aug. 24, 2009 7:48am EDT | from ChelleAynn

Inappropriate

Most Read Most Watched Most Commented

Runaway Convert To Stay In Fla. For Now
Police: 15-Year-Old Found Working At Strip Club
Shuttle Readies For Overnight Launch
Police: Man Took iPhone Pics Up Girls' Skirts

Slideshow Central

Images: Bill Lures Surfers To Coast

Images: Cool Cars At Old Town

One Year Ago: Tropical Storm Fay

ajc.com
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Police: 15-year-old was stripping at Lilburn bar

Owner of Lucky Billiards arrested along with dancer, 21

By MIKE MORRIS

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Wednesday, May 27, 2009

A man and woman were charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor Friday night after Gwinnett County police busted an alleged illegal strip club operating out of a Lilburn bar with dancers as young as 15 years old.

The owner of Lucky Billiards on Indian Trail-Lilburn Road, Jay Young Kim, was arrested, along with a dancer, Whitney Faith Blackburn.

Kim, 45, of Norcross, and Blackburn, 21, of Acworth, were released on bond Saturday morning.

According to a Gwinnett police incident report, an undercover officer went into the bar just before 11 p.m. Friday to investigate "numerous drug and possible prostitution complaints."

The officer "observed several women performing 'lap dances' for customers," the report states.

When the dancers, who were dressed in underwear, saw the officer, they "immediately ran towards the back room behind a closed curtain and began changing their clothes," according to the report.

In the back room, officers found money on the floor, as well as "a few pair of strippers shoes."

When officers questioned the women, they discovered that one was only 15 years old, police said.

That girl, also from Acworth, "stated that she has been coming here to dance for about six months," and told officers that Blackburn brought her to the club on numerous nights.

The underage girl was released to her mother's custody, and Blackburn was booked into the jail on a misdemeanor charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Kim told officers that he was unaware of the ages of the dancers, but that he had been told that all were over 18.

Teen stripper detained in Akron

By Beacon Journal staff

POSTED: 02:50 p.m. EDT, Apr 27, 2009

A 14-year-old girl was placed in protective custody during a raid in which four exotic dancers were arrested by Akron police vice officers.

Police working Operation Spring Cleaning served a search warrant Friday night at the Playhouse, 1700 E. Waterloo Road.

Police Lt. Rick Edwards said officers arrested four dancers for allegedly dancing topless and having contact with customers in a liquor establishment.

He said the club is not licensed as a sexually oriented business.

Vice officers said they saw the 14-year-old dancing topless. She did not have contact with customers.

The girl, whom Edwards said is not cooperating with police, has been placed with Summit County Children Services.

The club's owner, Robert T. Mitchell, 34, of Ravenna, and the bar manager, Christopher Wier, 34, of Ravenna, were charged with illegal use of a minor in a nudity-oriented performance and two counts of child endangering.

They were being held in the Summit County Jail.

Find this article at:
http://www.ohio.com/news/break_news/43797482.html

November 6, 2008

Lincoln Park strip club sued in teen dancer's death

FREE PRESS STAFF

The family of a 17-year-old who died of a drug overdose the first night she worked as a stripper filed a wrongful-death lawsuit Wednesday against the club where she worked.

Stephanie Brown died March 16, 2007, after dancing at the Atlantis Lounge in Lincoln Park, which hired her after she presented a fake ID.

The night before, she met Deleon Alexander II, a volunteer Ecorse High School coach, who took her and another exotic dancer to a Melvindale motel and gave them cocaine. He was convicted of delivery of a controlled substance causing a death and sentenced to 11 to 20 years in prison.

The multimillion-dollar suit names the club and its owner, Nagy Mickhail.

---

dallasnews.com
The Dallas Morning News

Dallas club where girl, 12, stripped will keep license

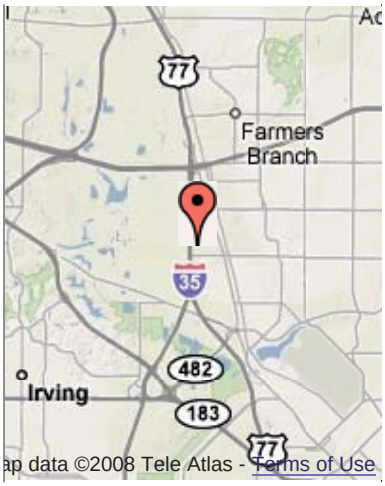
10:39 PM CDT on Wednesday, March 26, 2008

By TANYA EISERER / The Dallas Morning News
teiserer@dallasnews.com

The mere fact that a 12-year-old girl danced nude at a northwest Dallas strip club isn't enough to close its doors.

That's because the city ordinance that regulates sexually oriented businesses does not allow authorities to revoke the license of such a business for employing someone under the age of 18.

The sixth-grader danced at Diamonds Cabaret over a two-week period late last year, authorities say. They also say they found a 17-year-old girl working in the club in January.



Diamonds Cabaret

"If they're not shut down, it's like they're giving them permission to have underage girls dancing and working in that club," said the mother of the 12-year-old. The mother is not being named because her daughter, a runaway at the time of the incident, is considered a sexual assault victim.

Operators of the Diamonds Cabaret at 2444 Walnut Ridge Street did not return calls for comment. Their sexually oriented business license expires in November.

Demonica Abron, 27, who worked as a stripper in the club, and David Bell, 22, are facing charges in connection with the 12-year-old girl's dancing in the club. Mr. Bell does not appear to have been employed by the club.

Police officials are continuing to investigate whether the club's management knew she was underage.

The 23-page city ordinance does allow revocation of a club's license if, for example, the club knowingly allows prostitution, the sale or use of drugs at the club, or if there are two convictions for sex-related crimes at the club within a 12-month period.

The department also can suspend, but not revoke, the license of an escort agency for up to 30 days if it has employed

Virginia News

Richmond strip club owner to face additional charge

From NBC12 News

There was an unexpected twist in the case against a controversial Richmond strip club owner Tuesday. Prosecutors say they're seeking an additional charge against Samuel Moore. But, the man in question wasn't in the Richmond courtroom.

Moore was supposed to go to trial Tuesday on two charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Prosecutors said Tuesday they plan to try Moore on those charges plus a felony charge of videotaping sex with a minor.

But, Moore wasn't in court. His attorney telling the judge he's in the psych ward at VCU.

The evidence apparently continues to mount against Samuel Moore. During a raid last month at his Club Velvet, the Shockoe Bottom strip joint, investigators confiscated a host of items including video.

As a result, prosecutors next month will ask a grand jury to indict Moore on a felony charge of videotaping sex with a minor.

Moore had already faced two misdemeanor charges of consensual sex with a minor.

The flamboyant Moore was expected to appear in court Tuesday. His attorney told the judge his client was hospitalized in the psych ward.

A person who answered the phone at Club Velvet said he didn't know where Moore was.

Outside court, attorneys said they were restructuring the charges so the juvenile victim may only have to testify in court once.

A grand jury will consider the felony charge April 8th.

Story Created: Mar 25, 2008 at 5:45 PM EDT

Underage dancer at strip club, police say

By JIMMY ISAAC

Tuesday, August 09, 2005

Five people were arrested early Sunday at a strip club where investigators said they discovered an underage dancer.

Chief Deputy Chuck Willeford of the Gregg County Sheriff's Office said that Kilgore residents Elisa V. Zamacona, 34, and Anthony C. Coleman, 44, co-owners of the Paradise Club, were employing unlicensed and underaged dancers at the club on Texas 31 about four miles west of Kilgore.

Seventeen-year-old Jennifer L. Haynes of Kilgore and fellow dancers Carrie Ann Dobberthien, 26, of Chandler, and Brittney Sade Jackson, 19 of Arlington were arrested for not having licenses to work at a sexually-oriented business. Both owners, along with Jackson and Haynes, were released Sunday on $1,000 bond each. Dobberthien remains in the Gregg County Jail on $1,000 bond.

"It's not like they don't know what the rules are," said Willeford. He noted sheriff's deputies were operating a regular, unannounced inspection of the club less than two months after a similar raid at Baby Dolls, another sexually-oriented club on Texas 31. Baby Dolls' manager and two employees were arrested in June, and the business faces a three-day suspension.

"The only one we found doing right at this time was the Streakers club," he said.

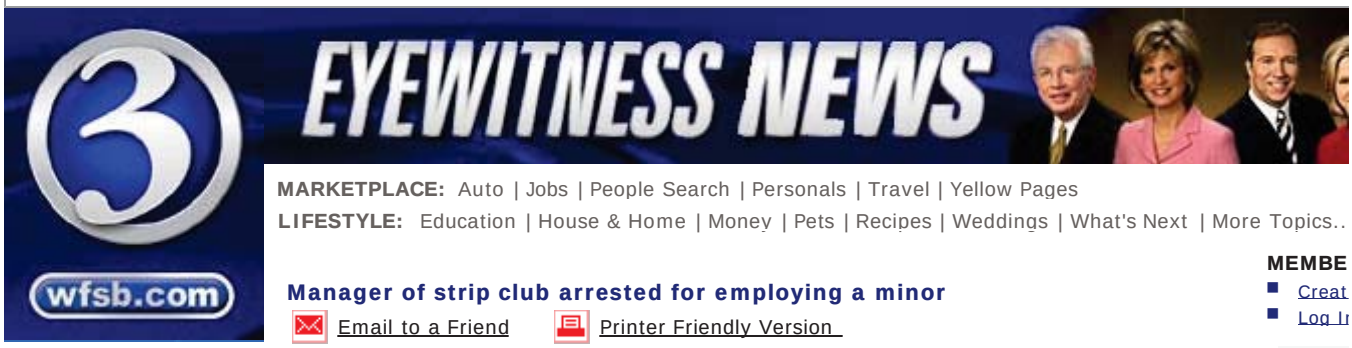
According to arrest warrants, Coleman's license to work at the club had expired on Dec. 14, 2002, while Dobberthien had worked at the club for three weeks without a license.

Haynes and Jackson told authorities that they were not working, but two witnesses stated that the two had been dancing in the club, warrants state.

Willeford said that Zamacona and Coleman, who are married, will receive a registered letter to appear for a hearing at a later date to address the violations.

On June 17, authorities investigating Baby Dolls arrested 18-year-old Sammy Jo Lucas, of Tyler, for not having a license. Investigators returned a week later and took Thomas Beasley into custody for allowing an employee to work without a license. Rodney Clarence Aldridge, 21, of Avinger, a parking lot employee, was also arrested for having an expired license. He was later released from jail on a $1,000 bond.

Lucas pleaded guilty this past week and is scheduled for sentencing on Sept. 22, according to a judicial records Web site.



Home
News
Weather
Traffic
Sports
News Links
Consumer Alerts
WFSB Forums
Channel 3 Personalities
Health
Entertainment
Business
Buy a Car
Program Schedule
About Channel 3

Manager of strip club arrested for employing a minor

Email to a Friend Printer Friendly Version

BERLIN (AP) -- Berlin police have charged the manager of a strip club with employing a 15-year-old stripper at the Infrared Cafe.

Kenneth Pina, 61, has been charged with employing a minor in an obscene performance as well as risking of injury to a minor. Police say they had gone to the club in February after receiving a complaint from the girl's family that she was dancing at the club.

Police says the girl, who lives in Waterbury, was taken out of the club and sent back to Waterbury. Pina, who lives in New Britain, was arrested Monday and released after posting bond.

More News

- Stabbing in Hartford
- State senate to vote on civil-unions bill
- Date for election of new pope set
- Boston manager Terry Francona sidelined by 'chest tightness'
- Manager of dtrip club arrested for employing a minor
- Legal arguments filed in Ross execution case
- Judge: Police chief can order officers to cover tattoos
- Poll: Rell approval rating at 80 percent

Video Headlines

- State senate debates civil unions
- Young boy back in critical condition after nearly drowning
- Dennis House reports on the scene at the Vatican
- Investigation in daycare accident
- Victim of near-drowning in stable condition
- Early-morning stabbing in Hartford
- Pfizer to undergo a restructuring
- Accident at a daycare center
- Dennis House: Procession of Pope's body through St. Peter's Square
- Jim Calhoun elected to Basketball Hall of Fame

The Times · Tribune
scrantontimes.com
a division of nepanews.com

03/10/2005

Briefs

Strip club owner to go to trial

SCRANTON -- A strip club manager accused of letting a 14-year-old girl dance naked in his establishment -- and win the amateur contest -- will face trial on a charge of corruption of minors, a magisterial district judge decided Wednesday.

The girl, now 15, testified in Central Court that she willingly entered Superdad's in Mayfield and took off all her clothes.

Nevertheless, Assistant District Attorney Suzanne B. Tierney argued manager Antonio Dangio should be held responsible because he allegedly didn't check the girl's identification, and he twice encouraged her to dance.

Mr. Dangio, 44, whose address is the same as the club's at 1401 Business Route 6, Mayfield, did not testify.

Jennifer A. Bojarsky, 18, of Archbald, the girl's friend who accompanied her to the club and onto the stage, is also charged with corruption of minors. She waived her preliminary hearing after she reached a deal with prosecutors and became a witness for the Commonwealth.

Lake Como man killed in crash

PALMYRA TOWNSHIP -- A Lake Como man was killed Wednesday afternoon after he lost control of his truck on Route 6 in Palmyra Township.

State police said Robert Gagliardo, 64, was not wearing a seat belt when he lost control of his 1997 Chevrolet truck, crashing through a mailbox and then a sign for PJ's Farm Market & Garden Center before hitting a sign base and going airborne.

Mr. Gagliardo was pronounced dead at Wayne Memorial Hospital.

County testing weather response

SCRANTON -- County schools, hospitals, nursing homes and day-care centers will be testing their severe weather emergency response plans today as part of "Weather Emergency Preparedness Week."

The Lackawanna County Emergency Management Agency will also be conducting an exercise involving simulated weather damage to Marian Community Hospital.

The exercise will simulate the evacuation and transfer of about 100 patients from the hospital.

The tests are part of a statewide exercise in emergency response to severe weather.

Renowned dance troupe to visit

SCRANTON -- The nationally recognized dance company Dance Theatre X will perform Saturday at 8 p.m. at Marywood University's Sette LaVerghetta Theatre.

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by State v. Spano, Ohio App. 7 Dist., November 18, 2011

124 S.Ct. 2219
Supreme Court of the United States

CITY OF LITTLETON, COLORADO, Petitioner,
v.
Z.J. GIFTS D-4, L.L.C., a Limited Liability Company, dba Christal's.

No. 02-1609.
|
Argued March 24, 2004.
|
Decided June 7, 2004.

Synopsis

Background: Owner of store that sold adult books brought § 1983 action challenging city's adult business licensing ordinance as unconstitutional, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, attorney fees and damages. The United States District Court for the District of Colorado, Edward W. Nottingham, J., entered summary judgment in favor of city, and owner appealed. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, Lucero, Circuit Judge, 311 F.3d 1220, affirmed in part and reversed in part. Certiorari was granted.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Justice Breyer, held that:

[1] for an "adult business" licensing scheme to satisfy First Amendment requirements, it is not enough that licensing scheme provides only assurance of speedy access to courts for review of adverse licensing decisions, without also providing assurance of speedy court decision; but

[2] where city's "adult business" licensing scheme simply conditioned operation of adult business on compliance with neutral and nondiscretionary criteria and did not seek to censor content, language in ordinance providing for judicial review of adverse licensing decisions in accordance with state's ordinary review procedures was sufficient to satisfy First Amendment requirements.

Reversed.

Justice Stevens concurred in part and concurred in judgment and filed opinion.

Justice Souter concurred in part and concurred in judgment and filed opinion, in which Justice Kennedy joined.

Justice Scalia concurred in judgment and filed opinion.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General

For an "adult business" licensing scheme to satisfy First Amendment requirements, it is not enough that licensing scheme provides only assurance of speedy access to courts for review of adverse licensing decisions, without also providing assurance of speedy court decision; delay in issuing judicial decision, no less than delay in obtaining access to court, can prevent license for First Amendment-protected business from being issued within requisite reasonable period of time. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

52 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General

Constitutional Law
Content Neutrality

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Where city's "adult business" licensing scheme simply conditioned operation of adult business on compliance with neutral and nondiscretionary criteria and did not seek to censor content, language in ordinance providing for judicial review of adverse licensing decisions in accordance with state's ordinary review procedures was sufficient to satisfy First Amendment requirements, as long as courts remained sensitive to need to prevent First Amendment harms and administered those review procedures accordingly; whether courts have done so is matter normally fit for case-by-case determination rather than facial challenge. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

71 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General

Where regulation simply conditions operation of adult business on compliance with neutral and nondiscretionary criteria and does not seek to censor content, adult business is not entitled under First Amendment to unusually speedy judicial decision, of the Freedman type, on adverse licensing decision. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

45 Cases that cite this headnote

*2220 Syllabus [*]

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Under petitioner city's "adult business license" ordinance, the city's decision to deny a license may be appealed to the state district court pursuant to Colorado Rules of Civil Procedure. Respondent Z.J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C. (hereinafter ZJ), opened an adult bookstore in a place not zoned for adult businesses. Instead of applying for a license, ZJ filed suit attacking the ordinance as facially unconstitutional. The Federal District Court rejected ZJ's claims, but the Tenth Circuit held, as relevant here, that state law does not assure the constitutionally required "prompt final judicial decision."

Held: The ordinance meets the First Amendment's requirement that such a licensing scheme assure prompt judicial review of an administrative decision denying a license. Pp. 2222-2226.

(a) The Court rejects the city's claim that its licensing scheme need only provide prompt access to judicial review, but not a "prompt judicial determination," of an applicant's legal claim. The city concedes that Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 59, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649, in listing constitutionally necessary "safeguards" applicable to a motion picture censorship statute, spoke of the need to assure a "prompt final judicial decision," but adds that Justice O'CONNOR's controlling plurality opinion in FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603, which addressed an adult business licensing scheme, did not use the word "decision," instead speaking only of the "possibility of prompt judicial review," id., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (emphasis added). Justice O'CONNOR's FW/PBS opinion, however, points out that Freedman's "judicial review" safeguard is meant to prevent "undue delay," 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596, which includes judicial, as well as administrative, delay. A delay in issuing a judicial decision, no less than a delay in obtaining access to a court, can prevent a license from being "issued within a reasonable period of time." Ibid. Nothing in the opinion suggests the contrary. Pp. 2222-2224.

(b) However, the Court accepts the city's claim that Colorado law satisfies any "prompt judicial determination" requirement, agreeing that the Court should modify FW/PBS, withdrawing its implication that Freedman's special judicial review rules-e.g., strict time limits-apply in this case. Colorado's ordinary "judicial review" rules suffice to assure 775 a prompt judicial decision, as long as the courts remain sensitive to the need to prevent First Amendment harms and administer *2221 those procedures accordingly. And whether the courts do so is a matter normally fit for case-by-case determination rather than a facial challenge. Four considerations support this conclusion. First, ordinary court procedural rules and practices give reviewing courts judicial tools sufficient to avoid delay-related First Amendment harm. Indeed, courts may arrange their schedules to "accelerate" proceedings, and higher courts may grant expedited review. Second, there is no reason to doubt state judges' willingness to exercise these powers wisely so as to avoid serious threats of delay-induced First Amendment harm. And federal remedies would provide an additional safety valve in the event of any such problem. Third, the typical First Amendment harm at issue here differs from that at issue in Freedman, diminishing the need in the typical case for procedural rules imposing special decisionmaking time limits. Unlike in Freedman, this ordinance does not seek to censor material. And its licensing scheme applies reasonably objective, nondiscretionary criteria unrelated to the content of the expressive materials that an adult business may sell or display. These criteria are simple enough to apply and their application simple enough to review that their use is unlikely in practice to suppress totally any specific item of adult material in the community. And the criteria's simple objective nature means that in the ordinary case, judicial review, too, should prove simple, hence expeditious. Finally, nothing in FW/PBS or Freedman requires a city or State to place judicial review safeguards all in the city ordinance that sets forth a licensing scheme. Pp. 2224-2226.

311 F.3d 1220, reversed.

BREYER, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which REHNQUIST, C. J., and O'CONNOR, THOMAS, and GINSBURG, JJ., joined, in which STEVENS, J., joined as to Parts I and II-B, and in which SOUTER and KENNEDY, JJ., joined except as to Part II-B. STEVENS, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, post, p. 2226. SOUTER, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, in which KENNEDY, J., joined, post, p. 2227. SCALIA, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 2228.

Attorneys and Law Firms

J. Andrew Nathan, Denver, CO, for petitioner.

Douglas R. Cole, for Ohio, et al., as amici curiae, by special leave of the Court, supporting the petitioner.

Michael W. Gross, Denver, CO, for respondent.

J. Andrew Nathan, Counsel of Record, Heidi J. Hugdahl, Nathan, Bremer, Dumm & Myers P.C., Denver, CO, Larry W. Berkowitz, City Attorney, Brad D. Bailey, Assistant City Attorney, Littleton, CO, Scott D. Bergthold, Law Office of Scott D. Bergthold, P.L.L.C., Chattanooga, TN, for petitioner.

Arthur M. Schwartz, Counsel of Record, Michael W. Gross, Cindy D. Schwartz, Schwartz & Goldberg, P.C., Denver, Colorado, for Respondent.

Opinion

Justice BREYER delivered the opinion of the Court.

776 In this case we examine a city's "adult business" licensing ordinance to determine whether it meets the First Amendment's requirement that such a licensing scheme assure prompt judicial review of an administrative decision denying a license. See *2222 FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990); cf. Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965). We conclude that the ordinance before us, considered on its face, is consistent with the First Amendment's demands.

I

Littleton, Colorado, has enacted an "adult business" ordinance that requires an "adult bookstore, adult novelty store 777 or adult video store" to have an "adult business license." Littleton City Code §§ 3-14-2, 3-14-4 (2003), App. to Brief for Petitioner 13a-20a, 23a. The ordinance defines "adult business"; it requires an applicant to provide certain basic information about the business; it insists upon compliance with local "adult business" (and other) zoning rules; it lists eight specific circumstances the presence of which requires the city to deny a license; and it sets forth time limits (typically amounting to about 40 days) within which city officials must reach a final licensing decision. §§ 3-14-2, 3-14-3, 3-14-5, 3-14-7, 3-14-8, id., at 13a-30a. The ordinance adds that the final decision may be "appealed to the [state] district court pursuant to Colorado rules of civil procedure 106(a)(4)." § 3-14-8(B)(3), id., at 30a.

In 1999, the respondent, a company called Z.J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C. (hereinafter ZJ), opened a store that sells "adult books" in a place not zoned for adult businesses. Compare Tr. of Oral Arg. 13 (store "within 500 feet of a church and day care center") with § 3-14-3(B), App. to Brief for Petitioner 21a (forbidding adult businesses at such locations). Instead of applying for an adult business license, ZJ brought this lawsuit attacking Littleton's ordinance as unconstitutional on its face. The Federal District Court rejected ZJ's claims; but on appeal the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit accepted two of them, 311 F.3d 1220, 1224 (2002). The court held that Colorado law "does not assure that [the city's] license decisions will be given expedited [judicial] review"; hence it does not assure the "prompt final judicial decision" that the Constitution demands. Id., at 1238. It also held unconstitutional another ordinance provision (not now before us) on the ground that it threatened lengthy administrative delay-a problem that the city believes it has cured by amending the ordinance. Compare id., at 1233-1234, with § 3-14-7, App. to Brief for Petitioner 27a-28a, and Brief for Petitioner 3. Throughout these proceedings, ZJ's store has continued to operate.

778 The city has asked this Court to review the Tenth Circuit's "judicial review" determination, and we granted certiorari in light of lower court uncertainty on this issue. Compare, e.g., 311 F.3d, at 1238 (First Amendment requires prompt judicial determination of license denial); Nightclubs, Inc. v. Paducah, 202 F.3d 884, 892-893 (C.A.6 2000) (same); Baby Tam & Co. v. Las Vegas, 154 F.3d 1097, 1101-1102 (C.A.9 1998) (same); 11126 Baltimore Blvd., Inc. v. Prince George's County, 58 F.3d 988, 998-1001 (C.A.4 1995) (en banc) (same), with Boss Capital, Inc. v. Casselberry, 187 F.3d 1251, 1256-1257 (C.A.11 1999) (Constitution requires only prompt access to courts); TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 24 F.3d 705, 709 (C.A.5 1994) (same); see also Thomas v. Chicago Park Dist., 534 U.S. 316, 325-326, 122 S.Ct. 775, 151 L.Ed.2d 783 (2002) (noting a Circuit split); City News & Novelty, Inc. v. Waukesha, 531 U.S. 278, 281, 121 S.Ct. 743, 148 L.Ed.2d 757 (2001) (same).

II

The city of Littleton's claims rest essentially upon two arguments. First, this Court, in applying the First Amendment's *2223 procedural requirements to an "adult business" licensing scheme in FW/PBS, found that the First Amendment required such a scheme to provide an applicant with "prompt access" to judicial review of an administrative denial of the license, but that the First Amendment did not require assurance of a "prompt judicial determination" of the applicant's legal claim. Second, in any event, Colorado law satisfies any "prompt judicial determination" requirement. We reject the first argument, but we accept the second.

A

The city's claim that its licensing scheme need not provide a "prompt judicial determination" of an applicant's legal claim rests upon its reading of two of this Court's cases, Freedman and FW/PBS. In Freedman, the Court considered the First Amendment's application to a "motion picture 779 censorship statute"-a statute that required an " 'owner or lessee' " of a film, prior to exhibiting a film, to submit the film to the Maryland State Board of Censors and obtain its approval. 380 U.S., at 52, and n. 1, 85 S.Ct. 734 (quoting Maryland statute). It said, "a noncriminal process which requires the prior submission of a film to a censor avoids constitutional infirmity only if it takes place under procedural safeguards designed to obviate the dangers of a censorship system." Id., at 58, 85 S.Ct. 734. The Court added that those safeguards must include (1) strict time limits leading to a speedy administrative decision and minimizing any "prior restraint"-type effects, (2) burden of proof rules favoring speech, and (3) (using language relevant here) a "procedure" that will "assure a prompt final judicial decision, to minimize the deterrent effect of an interim and possibly erroneous denial of a license." Id., at 58-59, 85 S.Ct. 734 (emphasis added).

In FW/PBS, the Court considered the First Amendment's application to a city ordinance that "regulates sexually oriented businesses through a scheme incorporating zoning, licensing, and inspections." 493 U.S., at 220-221, 110 S.Ct. 596. A Court majority held that the ordinance violated the First Amendment because it did not impose strict administrative time limits of the kind described in Freedman. In doing so, three Members of the Court wrote that "the full procedural protections set forth in Freedman are not required," but that nonetheless such a licensing scheme must comply with Freedman's "core policy"-including (1) strict administrative time limits and (2) (using language somewhat different from Freedman's) "the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event that the license is erroneously denied." 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (opinion of O'CONNOR, J.) (emphasis added). Three other Members of the Court wrote that all Freedman'ssss safeguards should apply, including Freedman's requirement that "a prompt judicial determination must be available." 493 U.S., at 239, 110 S.Ct. 596 (Brennan, J., concurring in judgment). Three Members of the Court wrote in dissent that Freedman's requirements 780 did not apply at all. See 493 U.S., at 244-245, 110 S.Ct. 596 (White, J., joined by REHNQUIST, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); id., at 250, 110 S.Ct. 596 (SCALIA, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

The city points to the differing linguistic descriptions of the "judicial review" requirement set forth in these opinions. It concedes that Freedman, in listing constitutionally necessary "safeguards," spoke of the need to assure a "prompt final judicial decision." 380 U.S., at 59, 85 S.Ct. 734. But it adds that Justice O'CONNOR's controlling plurality opinion in FW/PBS did not use the word "decision," instead speaking only of the "possibility of prompt judicial 2224 review." 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (emphasis added); see also id., at 229, 110 S.Ct. 596 ("an avenue for prompt judicial review"); id., at 230, 110 S.Ct. 596 ("availability of prompt judicial review"). This difference in language between Freedman and FW/PBS, says the city, makes a major difference: The First Amendment, as applied to an "adult business" licensing scheme, demands only an assurance of speedy access to the courts, not an assurance of a speedy court decision.

[1] In our view, however, the city's argument makes too much of too little. While Justice O'CONNOR's FW/PBS plurality opinion makes clear that only Freedman's "core" requirements apply in the context of "adult business" licensing schemes, it does not purport radically to alter the nature of those "core" requirements. To the contrary, the opinion, immediately prior to its reference to the "judicial review" safeguard, says:

> "The core policy underlying Freedman is that the license for a First Amendment-protected business must be issued within a reasonable period of time, because undue delay results in the unconstitutional suppression of protected speech. Thus, the first two [Freedman] safeguards are essential ... ." 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596.

781 These words, pointing out that Freedman's "judicial review" safeguard is meant to prevent "undue delay," 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596, include judicial, as well as administrative, delay. A delay in issuing a judicial decision, no less than a delay in obtaining access to a court, can prevent a license from being "issued within a reasonable period of time." Ibid. Nothing in the opinion suggests the contrary. Thus we read that opinion's reference to "prompt judicial review," together with the similar reference in Justice Brennan's separate opinion (joined by two other Justices), see id., at 239, 110 S.Ct. 596, as encompassing a prompt judicial decision. And we reject the city's arguments to the contrary.

B

[2] We find the second argument more convincing. In effect that argument concedes the constitutional importance of assuring a "prompt" judicial decision. It concedes as well that the Court, illustrating what it meant by "prompt" in Freedman, there set forth a "model" that involved a "hearing one day after joinder of issue" and a "decision within two days after termination of the hearing." 380 U.S., at 60, 85 S.Ct. 734. But the city says that here the First Amendment nonetheless does not require it to impose 2- or 3-day time limits; the First Amendment does not require special "adult business" judicial review rules; and the First Amendment does not insist that Littleton write detailed judicial review rules into the ordinance itself. In sum, Colorado's ordinary "judicial review" rules offer adequate assurance, not only that access to the courts can be promptly obtained, but also that a judicial decision will be promptly forthcoming.

Littleton, in effect, argues that we should modify FW/PBS, withdrawing its implication that Freedman's special judicial review rules apply in this case. And we accept that argument. In our view, Colorado's ordinary judicial review procedures suffice as long as the courts remain sensitive to the need to prevent First Amendment harms and administer 782 those procedures accordingly. And whether the courts do so is a matter normally fit for case-by-case determination rather than a facial challenge. We reach this conclusion for several reasons.

First, ordinary court procedural rules and practices, in Colorado as elsewhere, 2225 provide reviewing courts with judicial tools sufficient to avoid delay-related First Amendment harm. Indeed, where necessary, courts may arrange their schedules to "accelerate" proceedings. Colo. Rule Civ. Proc. 106(a)(4)(VIII) (2003). And higher courts may quickly review adverse lower court decisions. See, e.g., Goebel v. Colorado Dept. of Institutions, 764 P.2d 785, 792 (Colo.1988) (en banc) (granting "expedited review").

Second, we have no reason to doubt the willingness of Colorado's judges to exercise these powers wisely so as to avoid serious threats of delay-induced First Amendment harm. We presume that courts are aware of the constitutional need to avoid "undue delay result[ing] in the unconstitutional suppression of protected speech." FW/PBS, supra, at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596; see also, e.g., Schlesinger v. Councilman, 420 U.S. 738, 756, 95 S.Ct. 1300, 43 L.Ed.2d 591 (1975). There is no evidence before us of any special Colorado court-related problem in this respect. And were there some such problems, federal remedies would provide an additional safety valve. See Rev. Stat. § 1979, 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Third, the typical First Amendment harm at issue here differs from that at issue in Freedman, diminishing the need in the typical case for special procedural rules imposing special 2- or 3-day decisionmaking time limits. Freedman considered a Maryland statute that created a Board of Censors, which had to decide whether a film was " 'pornographic,' " tended to " 'debase or corrupt morals,' " and lacked " 'whatever other merits.' " 380 U.S., at 52-53, n. 2, 85 S.Ct. 734 (quoting Maryland statute). If so, it denied the permit and the film could not be shown. Thus, in Freedman, the Court considered a scheme with rather subjective standards and where a denial likely meant complete censorship.

783 In contrast, the ordinance at issue here does not seek to censor material. And its licensing scheme applies reasonably objective, nondiscretionary criteria unrelated to the content of the expressive materials that an adult business may sell or display. The ordinance says that an adult business license "shall" be denied if the applicant (1) is underage; (2) provides false information; (3) has within the prior year had an adult business license revoked or suspended; (4) has operated an adult business determined to be a state law "public nuisance" within the prior year; (5) (if a corporation) is not authorized to do business in the State; (6) has not timely paid taxes, fees, fines, or penalties; (7) has not obtained a sales tax license (for which zoning compliance is required, see Tr. of Oral Arg. 16-17); or (8) has been convicted of certain crimes within the prior five years. § 3-14-8(A), App. to Brief for Petitioner 28a-29a (emphasis added).

These objective criteria are simple enough to apply and their application simple enough to review that their use is unlikely in practice to suppress totally the presence of any specific item of adult material in the Littleton community. Some license applicants will satisfy the criteria even if others do not; hence the community will likely contain outlets that sell protected adult material. A supplier of that material should be able to find outlets; a potential buyer should be able to find a seller. Nor should zoning requirements suppress that material, for a constitutional zoning system seeks to determine where, not whether, protected adult material can be sold. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 46, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). The upshot is that Littleton's "adult business" licensing scheme does "not present the grave 'dangers *2226 of a censorship system.' " FW/PBS, 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (opinion of O'CONNOR, J.) (quoting Freedman, supra, at 58, 85 S.Ct. 734). And the simple objective nature of the licensing criteria means that in the ordinary case, judicial review, too, should prove simple, hence expeditious. Where that is not so-where, for example, censorship of material, as well as delay 784 in opening an additional outlet, is improperly threatened-the courts are able to act to prevent that harm.

Fourth, nothing in FW/PBS or in Freedman requires a city or a State to place judicial review safeguards all in the city ordinance that sets forth a licensing scheme. Freedman itself said: "How or whether Maryland is to incorporate the required procedural safeguards in the statutory scheme is, of course, for the State to decide." 380 U.S., at 60, 85 S.Ct. 734. This statement is not surprising given the fact that many cities and towns lack the state-law legal authority to impose deadlines on state courts.

[3] These four sets of considerations, taken together, indicate that Colorado's ordinary rules of judicial review are adequate-at least for purposes of this facial challenge to the ordinance. Where (as here and as in FW/PBS) the regulation simply conditions the operation of an adult business on compliance with neutral and nondiscretionary criteria, cf. post, at 2226-2227 (STEVENS, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment), and does not seek to censor content, an adult business is not entitled to an unusually speedy judicial decision of the Freedman type. Colorado's rules provide for a flexible system of review in which judges can reach a decision promptly in the ordinary case, while using their judicial power to prevent significant harm to First Amendment interests where circumstances require. Of course, those denied licenses in the future remain free to raise special problems of undue delay in individual cases as the ordinance is applied.

For these reasons, the judgment of the Tenth Circuit is Reversed.

Justice STEVENS, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

There is an important difference between an ordinance conditioning the operation of a business on compliance with certain neutral criteria, on the one hand, and an ordinance 785 conditioning the exhibition of a motion picture on the consent of a censor. The former is an aspect of the routine operation of a municipal government. The latter is a species of content-based prior restraint. Cf. Graff v. Chicago, 9 F.3d 1309, 1330-1333 (C.A.7 1993) (Flaum, J., concurring).

The First Amendment is, of course, implicated whenever a city requires a bookstore, a newsstand, a theater, or an adult business to obtain a license before it can begin to operate. For that reason, as Justice O'CONNOR explained in her plurality opinion in FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 226, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990), a licensing scheme for businesses that engage in First Amendment activity must be accompanied by adequate procedural safeguards to avert "the possibility that constitutionally protected speech will be suppressed." But Justice O'CONNOR's opinion also recognized that the full complement of safeguards that are necessary in cases that "present the grave 'dangers of a censorship system' " are "not required" in the ordinary adult-business licensing scheme. Id., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596 (quoting Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965)). In both contexts, "undue delay results in the unconstitutional suppression *2227 of protected speech," 493 U.S., at 228, 110 S.Ct. 596, and FW/PBS therefore requires both that the licensing decision be made promptly and that there be "the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event that the license is erroneously denied," ibid. But application of neutral licensing criteria is a "ministerial action" that regulates speech, rather than an exercise of discretionary judgment that prohibits speech. Id., at 229, 110 S.Ct. 596. The decision to deny a license for failure to comply with these neutral criteria is therefore not subject to the presumption of invalidity that attaches to the "direct censorship of particular expressive material." Ibid. Justice O'CONNOR's opinion accordingly declined to require that the licensor, like the censor, either bear the burden of going to court to effect the denial of a license or otherwise assume responsibility for ensuring 786 a prompt judicial determination of the validity of its decision. Ibid.

The Court today reinterprets FW/PBS's references to " 'the possibility of prompt judicial review' " as the equivalent of Freedman's "prompt judicial decision" requirement. Ante, at 2223-2224. I fear that this misinterpretation of FW/PBS may invite other, more serious misinterpretations with respect to the content of that requirement. As the Court applies it in this case, assurance of a " 'prompt' judicial decision" means little more than assurance of the possibility of a prompt decision-the same possibility of promptness that is available whenever a person files suit subject to "ordinary court procedural rules and practices." Ante, at 2224. That possibility will generally be sufficient to guard against the risk of undue delay in obtaining a remedy for the erroneous application of neutral licensing criteria. But the mere possibility of promptness is emphatically insufficient to guard against the dangers of unjustified suppression of speech presented by a censorship system of the type at issue in Freedman, and is certainly not what Freedman meant by " 'prompt' judicial decision."

Justice O'CONNOR's opinion in FW/PBS recognized that differences between ordinary licensing schemes and censorship systems warrant imposition of different procedural protections, including different requirements with respect to which party must assume the burden of taking the case to court, as well as the risk of judicial delay. I would adhere to the views there expressed, and thus do not join Part II-A of the Court's opinion. I do, however, join the Court's judgment and Parts I and II-B of its opinion.

Justice SOUTER, with whom Justice KENNEDY joins, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join the Court's opinion, except for Part II-B. I agree that this scheme is unlike full-blown censorship, ante, at 2224-2226, so that the ordinance does not need a strict timetable of 787 the kind required by Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), to survive a facial challenge. I write separately to emphasize that the state procedures that make a prompt judicial determination possible need to align with a state judicial practice that provides a prompt disposition in the state courts. The emphasis matters, because although Littleton's ordinance is not as suspect as censorship, neither is it as innocuous as common zoning. It is a licensing scheme triggered by the content of expressive materials to be sold. See Los Angeles v. Alameda Books,

Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (KENNEDY, J., concurring in judgment) ("These ordinances are content based, and we should call them so"); id., at 455-457, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (SOUTER, J., dissenting). Because the sellers may be unpopular with local authorities, *2228 there is a risk of delay in the licensing and review process. If there is evidence of foot dragging, immediate judicial intervention will be required, and judicial oversight or review at any stage of the proceedings must be expeditious.

Justice SCALIA, concurring in the judgment.

Were the respondent engaged in activity protected by the First Amendment, I would agree with the Court's disposition of the question presented by the facts of this case (though not with all of the Court's reasoning). Such activity, when subjected to a general permit requirement unrelated to censorship of content, has no special claim to priority in the judicial process. The notion that media corporations have constitutional entitlement to accelerated judicial review of the denial of zoning variances is absurd.

I do not believe, however, that Z.J. Gifts is engaged in activity protected by the First Amendment. I adhere to the view I expressed in FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 250, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part): the pandering of sex is not protected by the First Amendment. "The Constitution does not require a State or municipality to permit a business that intentionally specializes in, and holds itself forth to the public as specializing in, 788 performance or portrayal of sex acts, sexual organs in a state of arousal, or live human nudity." Id., at 258, 110 S.Ct. 596. This represents the Nation's long understanding of the First Amendment, recognized and adopted by this Court's opinion in Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 470-471, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31 (1966). Littleton's ordinance targets sex-pandering businesses, see Littleton City Code § 3-14-2 (2003); to the extent it could apply to constitutionally protected expression its excess is not so great as to render it substantially overbroad and thus subject to facial invalidation, see FW/PBS, 493 U.S., at 261-262, 110 S.Ct. 596. Since the city of Littleton "could constitutionally have proscribed the commercial activities that it chose instead to license, I do not think the details of its licensing scheme had to comply with First Amendment standards." Id., at 253, 110 S.Ct. 596.

All Citations

541 U.S. 774, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84, 72 USLW 4451, 04 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4843, 2004 Daily Journal D.A.R. 6662, 19 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 350

End of Document

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by Free Speech Coalition, Inc. v. Attorney General United States, 3rd Cir.(Pa.), June 8, 2016

122 S.Ct. 1728
Supreme Court of the United States

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, Petitioner,
v.
ALAMEDA BOOKS, INC., et al.

No. 00-799.
|
Argued Dec. 4, 2001.
|
Decided May 13, 2002.

Adult businesses brought § 1983 action, challenging city ordinance prohibiting operation of multiple adult businesses in single building. The United States District Court for the Central District of California, Dean D. Pregerson, J., granted summary judgment for businesses. City appealed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, Michael Daly Hawkins, Circuit Judge, 222 F.3d 719, affirmed. Certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that city could reasonably rely on police department study correlating crime patterns with concentrations of adult businesses when opposing businesses' First Amendment challenge.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Scalia concurred and filed opinion.

Justice Kennedy concurred in judgment and filed opinion.

Justice Souter filed dissenting opinion, in which Justices Stevens and Ginsburg joined and Justice Breyer joined in part.

West Headnotes (2)

[1] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Reducing crime is a substantial government interest, for purpose of justifying time, place and manner regulation of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

198 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City could reasonably rely on police department study correlating crime patterns with concentrations of adult businesses when opposing First Amendment challenge to ordinance barring more than one adult entertainment business in same building, even though study had focused on single-use establishments; study fairly supported city's rationale for ordinance. (Per Justice O'Connor, with the Chief Justice and two Justices concurring and one Justice concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

238 Cases that cite this headnote

*1728 *425 Syllabus [*]

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Based on its 1977 study concluding that concentrations of adult entertainment establishments are associated with higher crime rates in surrounding communities, petitioner city enacted an ordinance prohibiting such enterprises within 1,000 feet of each other or within 500 feet of a religious institution, school, or public park. Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1978). Because the ordinance's method of calculating distances created a loophole permitting the concentration of multiple adult enterprises in a single structure, the *1729 city later amended the ordinance to prohibit "more than one adult entertainment business in the same building." § 12.70(C) (1983). Respondents, two adult establishments that openly operate combined bookstores/video arcades in violation of § 12.70(C), as amended, sued under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for declaratory and injunctive relief, alleging that the ordinance, on its face, violates the First Amendment. Finding that the ordinance was not a content-neutral regulation of speech, the District Court reasoned that neither the 1977 study nor a report cited in Hart Book Stores v. Edmisten, a Fourth Circuit case upholding a similar statute, supported a reasonable belief that multiple-use adult establishments produce the secondary effects the city asserted as content-neutral justifications for its prohibition. Subjecting § 12.70(C) to strict scrutiny, the court granted respondents summary judgment because it felt the city had not offered evidence demonstrating that its prohibition was necessary to serve a compelling government interest. The Ninth Circuit affirmed on the different ground that, even if the ordinance were content neutral, the city failed to present evidence upon which it could reasonably rely to demonstrate that its regulation of multiple-use establishments was designed to serve its substantial interest in reducing crime. The court therefore held the ordinance invalid under Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29.

Held: The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded.

222 F.3d 719, reversed and remanded.

Justice O'CONNOR, joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice SCALIA, and Justice THOMAS, concluded that Los Angeles may reasonably rely 426 on its 1977 study to demonstrate that its present ban on multiple-use adult establishments serves its interest in reducing crime. Pp. 1733-1738.

(a) The 1977 study's central component is a Los Angeles Police Department report indicating that, from 1965 to 1975, crime rates for, e.g., robbery and prostitution grew much faster in Hollywood, which had the city's largest concentration of adult establishments, than in the city as a whole. The city may reasonably rely on the police department's conclusions regarding crime patterns to overcome summary judgment. In finding to the contrary on the ground that the 1977 study focused on the effect on crime rates of a concentration of establishments-not a concentration of operations within a single establishment-the Ninth Circuit misunderstood the study's implications. While the study reveals that areas with high concentrations of adult establishments are associated with high crime rates, such areas are also areas with high concentrations of adult operations, albeit each in separate establishments. It was therefore consistent with the 1977 study's findings, and thus reasonable, for the city to infer that reducing the concentration of adult operations in a neighborhood, whether within separate establishments or in one large establishment, will reduce crime rates. Neither the Ninth Circuit nor respondents nor the dissent provides any reason to question the city's theory. If this Court were to accept their view, it would effectively require that the city provide evidence that not only supports the claim that its ordinance serves an important government interest, but also does not provide support for any other approach to serve that interest. Renton specifically refused to set such a high bar for municipalities that want to address merely the secondary effects of protected speech. The Court there held that a municipality may rely on any evidence that is "reasonably believed to be relevant" for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest. 475 U.S., at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925. This is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support its rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs *1730 fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the Renton standard. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance. See, e.g., Erie v. Pap's A. M., 529 U.S. 277, 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265. This case is at a very early stage in this process. It arrives on a summary judgment motion by respondents defended only by complaints that the 1977 study fails to prove that the city's justification for its ordinance is necessarily 427 correct. Therefore, it must be concluded that the city, at this stage of the litigation, has complied with Renton's evidentiary requirement. Pp. 1733-1738.

(b) The Court need not resolve the parties' dispute over whether the city can rely on evidence from Hart Book Stores to overcome summary judgment, nor respondents' alternative argument that the ordinance is not a time, place, and manner regulation, but is effectively a ban on adult video arcades that must be subjected to strict scrutiny. P. 1738.

Justice KENNEDY concluded that this Court's precedents may allow Los Angeles to impose its regulation in the exercise of the zoning authority, and that the city is not, at least, to be foreclosed by summary judgment. Pp. 1739-1744.

(a) Under Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29, if a city can decrease the crime and blight associated with adult businesses by exercising its zoning power, and at the same time leave the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially undiminished, there is no First Amendment objection, even if the measure identifies the problem outside the establishments by reference to the speech inside-that is, even if the measure is content based. On the other hand, a city may not regulate the secondary effects of speech by suppressing the speech itself. For example, it may not impose a content-based fee or tax, see Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. 221, 230, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 95 L.Ed.2d 209, even if the government purports to justify the fee by reference to secondary effects, see Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 134-135, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101. That the ordinance at issue is more a typical land-use restriction than a law suppressing speech is suggested by the fact that it is not limited to expressive activities, but extends, e.g., to massage parlors, which the city has found to cause the same undesirable secondary effects; also, it is just one part of an elaborate web of land-use regulations intended to promote the social value of the land as a whole without suppressing some activities or favoring others. Thus, the ordinance is not so suspect that it must be subjected to the strict scrutiny that content-based laws demand in other instances. Rather, it calls for intermediate scrutiny, as Renton held. Pp. 1739-1741.

(b) Renton's description of an ordinance similar to Los Angeles' as "content neutral," 475 U.S., at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925, was something of a fiction. These ordinances are content based, and should be so described. Nevertheless, Renton's central holding is sound. P. 1741.

(c) The necessary rationale for applying intermediate scrutiny is the promise that zoning ordinances like the one at issue may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech. If two adult businesses are under the same roof, an ordinance requiring 428 them to separate will have one of two results: One business will either move elsewhere or close. The city's premise cannot be the latter. The premise must be that businesses-even those that have always been under one roof-will for the most part disperse rather than shut down, that the quantity of speech will be substantially *1731 undiminished, and that total secondary effects will be significantly reduced. As to whether there is sufficient evidence to support this proposition, the Court has consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required. See, e.g., Renton, supra, at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Here, the proposition to be shown is supported by common experience and a study showing a correlation between the concentration of adult establishments and crime. Assuming that the study supports the city's original dispersal ordinance, most of the necessary analysis follows. To justify the ordinance at issue, the city may infer-from its study and from its own experience-that two adult businesses under the same roof are no better than two next door, and that knocking down the wall between the two would not ameliorate any undesirable secondary effects of their proximity to one another. If the city's first ordinance was justified, therefore, then the second is too. Pp. 1741-1743.

(d) Because these considerations seem well enough established in common experience and the Court's case law, the ordinance survives summary judgment. Pp. 1743-1744.

O'CONNOR, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and SCALIA and THOMAS, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed a concurring opinion, post, p. 1738. KENNEDY, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, post, p. 1739. SOUTER, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which STEVENS and GINSBURG, JJ., joined, and in which BREYER, J., joined as to Part II, post, p. 1744.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Michael L. Klekner, Los Angeles, CA, for petitioner.

John H. Weston, Los Angeles, CA, for respondents.

Opinion

429 Justice O'CONNOR announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice SCALIA, and Justice THOMAS join.

Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1983), as amended, prohibits "the establishment or maintenance of more than one adult entertainment business in the same building, structure or portion thereof." Respondents, two adult establishments that each operated an adult bookstore and an adult video arcade in the same building, filed a suit under Rev. Stat. § 1979, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (1994 ed., Supp. V), alleging that § 12.70(C) violates the First Amendment and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents, finding that the city of Los Angeles' prohibition was a content-based regulation of speech that failed strict scrutiny. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed, but on different grounds. It held that, even if § 12.70(C) were a content-neutral regulation, the city failed to demonstrate that the 430 prohibition was designed to serve a substantial government interest. Specifically, the Court of Appeals found that the city failed to present evidence upon which it could reasonably rely to demonstrate a link between multiple-use adult establishments and negative secondary effects. Therefore, the Court of Appeals held the Los Angeles prohibition on such establishments invalid under Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and its precedents interpreting that case. 222 F.3d 719, 723-728 (2000). We reverse and remand. The city of Los Angeles may reasonably rely on a study it conducted some years before enacting the present version of § 12.70(C) to demonstrate that its ban on multiple-use adult establishments serves its interest in reducing crime.

*1732 I

In 1977, the city of Los Angeles conducted a comprehensive study of adult establishments and concluded that concentrations of adult businesses are associated with higher rates of prostitution, robbery, assaults, and thefts in surrounding communities. See App. 35-162 (Los Angeles Dept. of City Planning, Study of the Effects of the Concentration of Adult Entertainment Establishments in the City of Los Angeles (City Plan Case No. 26475, City Council File No. 74-4521-S.3, June 1977)). Accordingly, the city enacted an ordinance prohibiting the establishment, substantial enlargement, or transfer of ownership of an adult arcade, bookstore, cabaret, motel, theater, or massage parlor or a place for sexual encounters within 1,000 feet of another such enterprise or within 500 feet of any religious institution, school, or public park. See Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1978).

There is evidence that the intent of the city council when enacting this prohibition was not only to disperse distinct adult establishments housed in separate buildings, but also to disperse distinct adult businesses operated under common ownership and housed in a single structure. See 431 App. 29 (Los Angeles Dept. of City Planning, Amendment-Proposed Ordinance to Prohibit the Establishment of More than One Adult Entertainment Business at a Single Location (City Plan Case No. 26475, City Council File No. 82-0155, Jan. 13, 1983)). The ordinance the city enacted, however, directed that "[t]he distance between any two adult entertainment businesses shall be measured in a straight line ... from the closest exterior structural wall of each business." Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(D) (1978). Subsequent to enactment, the city realized that this method of calculating distances created a loophole permitting the concentration of multiple adult enterprises in a single structure.

Concerned that allowing an adult-oriented department store to replace a strip of adult establishments could defeat the goal of the original ordinance, the city council amended § 12.70(C) by adding a prohibition on "the establishment or maintenance of more than one adult entertainment business in the same building, structure or portion thereof." Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1983). The amended ordinance defines an "Adult Entertainment Business" as an adult arcade, bookstore, cabaret, motel, theater, or massage parlor or a place for sexual encounters, and notes that each of these enterprises "shall constitute a separate adult entertainment business even if operated in conjunction with another adult entertainment business at the same establishment." § 12.70(B)(17). The ordinance uses the term "business" to refer to certain types of goods or services sold in adult establishments, rather than the establishment itself. Relevant for purposes of this case are also the ordinance's definitions of adult bookstores and arcades. An "Adult Bookstore" is an operation that "has as a substantial portion of its stock-in-trade and offers for sale" printed matter and videocassettes that emphasize the depiction of specified sexual activities. § 12.70(B)(2)(a). An adult arcade is an operation where, "for any form of consideration," five or fewer patrons together may view films or videocassettes 432 that emphasize the depiction of specified sexual activities. § 12.70(B)(1).

Respondents, Alameda Books, Inc., and Highland Books, Inc., are two adult establishments operating in Los Angeles. Neither is located within 1,000 feet of another adult establishment or 500 feet of any religious institution, public park, or school. Each establishment occupies less than 3,000 square feet. Both respondents rent and sell sexually oriented products, including videocassettes. Additionally, both provide booths where patrons can view videocassettes for a fee. Although respondents are located in different buildings, each operates its retail sales and rental operations in the same commercial space in which its video booths are located. There are no 1733 physical distinctions between the different operations within each establishment and each establishment has only one entrance. 222 F.3d, at 721. Respondents concede they are openly operating in violation of § 12.70(C) of the city's code, as amended. Brief for Respondents 7; Brief for Petitioner 9.

After a city building inspector found in 1995 that Alameda Books, Inc., was operating both as an adult bookstore and an adult arcade in violation of the city's adult zoning regulations, respondents joined as plaintiffs and sued under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for declaratory and injunctive relief to prevent enforcement of the ordinance. 222 F.3d, at 721. At issue in this case is count I of the complaint, which alleges a facial violation of the First Amendment. Both the city and respondents filed cross-motions for summary judgment.

The District Court for the Central District of California initially denied both motions on the First Amendment issues in count I, concluding that there was "a genuine issue of fact whether the operation of a combination video rental and video viewing business leads to the harmful secondary effects associated with a concentration of separate businesses in a single urban area." App. 255. After respondents filed a motion for reconsideration, however, the District *433 Court found that Los Angeles' prohibition on multiple-use adult establishments was not a content-neutral regulation of speech. App. to Pet. for Cert. 51. It reasoned that neither the city's 1977 study nor a report cited in Hart Book Stores v. Edmisten, 612 F.2d 821 (C.A.4 1979) (upholding a North Carolina statute that also banned multiple-use adult establishments), supported a reasonable belief that multiple-use adult establishments produced the secondary effects the city asserted as content-neutral justifications for its prohibition. App. to Pet. for Cert. 34-47. Therefore, the District Court proceeded to subject the Los Angeles ordinance to strict scrutiny. Because it felt that the city did not offer evidence to demonstrate that its prohibition is necessary to serve a compelling government interest, the District Court granted summary judgment for respondents and issued a permanent injunction enjoining the enforcement of the ordinance against respondents. Id., at 51.

The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit affirmed, although on different grounds. The Court of Appeals determined that it did not have to reach the District Court's decision that the Los Angeles ordinance was content based because, even if the ordinance were content neutral, the city failed to present evidence upon which it could reasonably rely to demonstrate that its regulation of multiple-use establishments is "designed to serve" the city's substantial interest in reducing crime. The challenged ordinance was therefore invalid under Renton, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. 222 F.3d, at 723-724. We granted certiorari, 532 U.S. 902, 121 S.Ct. 1223, 149 L.Ed.2d 134 (2001), to clarify the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton, supra.

II

In Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., supra, this Court considered the validity of a municipal ordinance that prohibited any adult movie theater from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, family dwelling, church, park, *434 or school. Our analysis of the ordinance proceeded in three steps. First, we found that the ordinance did not ban adult theaters altogether, but merely required that they be distanced from certain sensitive locations. The ordinance was properly analyzed, therefore, as a time, place, and manner regulation. Id., at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925. We next considered whether the ordinance was content neutral or content based. If the regulation were content based, it would be considered presumptively invalid and subject to strict scrutiny. Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N. Y. State 1734 Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 115, 118, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991); Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. 221, 230-231, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 95 L.Ed.2d 209 (1987). We held, however, that the Renton ordinance was aimed not at the content of the films shown at adult theaters, but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community, namely, at crime rates, property values, and the quality of the city's neighborhoods. Therefore, the ordinance was deemed content neutral. Renton, supra, at 47-49, 106 S.Ct. 925. Finally, given this finding, we stated that the ordinance would be upheld so long as the city of Renton showed that its ordinance was designed to serve a substantial government interest and that reasonable alternative avenues of communication remained available. 475 U.S., at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. We concluded that Renton had met this burden, and we upheld its ordinance. Id., at 51-54, 106 S.Ct. 925.

The Court of Appeals applied the same analysis to evaluate the Los Angeles ordinance challenged in this case. First, the Court of Appeals found that the Los Angeles ordinance was not a complete ban on adult entertainment establishments, but rather a sort of adult zoning regulation, which Renton considered a time, place, and manner regulation. 222 F.3d, at 723. The Court of Appeals turned to the second step of the Renton analysis, but did not draw any conclusions about whether the Los Angeles ordinance was content based. It explained that, even if the Los Angeles ordinance were content neutral, the city had failed to demonstrate, 435 as required by the third step of the Renton analysis, that its prohibition on multiple-use adult establishments was designed to serve its substantial interest in reducing crime. The Court of Appeals noted that the primary evidence relied upon by Los Angeles to demonstrate a link between combination adult businesses and harmful secondary effects was the 1977 study conducted by the city's planning department. The Court of Appeals found, however, that the city could not rely on that study because it did not " 'suppor[t] a reasonable belief that [the] combination [of] businesses ... produced harmful secondary effects of the type asserted.' " 222 F.3d, at 724. For similar reasons, the Court of Appeals also rejected the city's attempt to rely on a report on health conditions inside adult video arcades described in Hart Book Stores, supra, a case that upheld a North Carolina statute similar to the Los Angeles ordinance challenged in this case.

The central component of the 1977 study is a report on city crime patterns provided by the Los Angeles Police Department. That report indicated that, during the period from 1965 to 1975, certain crime rates grew much faster in Hollywood, which had the largest concentration of adult establishments in the city, than in the city of Los Angeles as a whole. For example, robberies increased 3 times faster and prostitution 15 times faster in Hollywood than citywide. App. 124-125.

[1] The 1977 study also contains reports conducted directly by the staff of the Los Angeles Planning Department that examine the relationship between adult establishments and property values. These staff reports, however, are inconclusive. Not surprisingly, the parties focus their dispute before this Court on the report by the Los Angeles Police Department. Because we find that reducing crime is a substantial government interest and that the police department report's conclusions regarding crime patterns may reasonably be relied upon to overcome summary judgment against 436 the city, we also focus on the portion of the 1977 study drawn from the police department report.

The Court of Appeals found that the 1977 study did not reasonably support the inference that a concentration of adult operations within a single adult establishment produced greater levels of criminal activity because the study focused on the *1735 effect that a concentration of establishments-not a concentration of operations within a single establishment-had on crime rates. The Court of Appeals pointed out that the study treated combination adult bookstore/arcades as single establishments and did not study the effect of any separate-standing adult bookstore or arcade. 222 F.3d, at 724.

[2] The Court of Appeals misunderstood the implications of the 1977 study. While the study reveals that areas with high concentrations of adult establishments are associated with high crime rates, areas with high concentrations of adult establishments are also areas with high concentrations of adult operations, albeit each in separate establishments. It was therefore consistent with the findings of the 1977 study, and thus reasonable, for Los Angeles to suppose that a concentration of adult establishments is correlated with high crime rates because a concentration of operations in one locale draws, for example, a greater concentration of adult consumers to the neighborhood, and a high density of such consumers either attracts or generates criminal activity. The assumption behind this theory is that having a number of adult operations in one single adult establishment draws the same dense foot traffic as having a number of distinct adult establishments in close proximity, much as minimalls and department stores similarly attract the crowds of consumers. Brief for Petitioner 28. Under this view, it is rational for the city to infer that reducing the concentration of adult operations in a neighborhood, whether within separate establishments or in one large establishment, will reduce crime rates.

437 Neither the Court of Appeals, nor respondents, nor the dissent provides any reason to question the city's theory. In particular, they do not offer a competing theory, let alone data, that explains why the elevated crime rates in neighborhoods with a concentration of adult establishments can be attributed entirely to the presence of permanent walls between, and separate entrances to, each individual adult operation. While the city certainly bears the burden of providing evidence that supports a link between concentrations of adult operations and asserted secondary effects, it does not bear the burden of providing evidence that rules out every theory for the link between concentrations of adult establishments that is inconsistent with its own.

The error that the Court of Appeals made is that it required the city to prove that its theory about a concentration of adult operations attracting crowds of customers, much like a minimall or department store does, is a necessary consequence of the 1977 study. For example, the Court of Appeals refused to allow the city to draw the inference that "the expansion of an adult bookstore to include an adult arcade would increase" business activity and "produce the harmful secondary effects identified in the Study." 222 F.3d, at 726. It reasoned that such an inference would justify limits on the inventory of an adult bookstore, not a ban on the combination of an adult bookstore and an adult arcade. The Court of Appeals simply replaced the city's theory-that having many different operations in close proximity attracts crowds-with its own-that the size of an operation attracts crowds. If the Court of Appeals' theory is correct, then inventory limits make more sense. If the city's theory is correct, then a prohibition on the combination of businesses makes more sense. Both theories are consistent with the data in the 1977 study. The Court of Appeals' analysis, however, implicitly requires the city to prove that its theory is the only one that can plausibly explain the data 438 because only in this manner can the city refute the Court of Appeals' logic.

Respondents make the same logical error as the Court of Appeals when they suggest that the city's prohibition on multiuse establishments will raise crime rates in certain neighborhoods because it will *1736 force certain adult businesses to relocate to areas without any other adult businesses. Respondents' claim assumes that the 1977 study proves that all adult businesses, whether or not they are located near other adult businesses, generate crime. This is a plausible reading of the results from the 1977 study, but respondents do not demonstrate that it is a compelled reading. Nor do they provide evidence that refutes the city's interpretation of the study, under which the city's prohibition should on balance reduce crime. If this Court were nevertheless to accept respondents' speculation, it would effectively require that the city provide evidence that not only supports the claim that its ordinance serves an important government interest, but also does not provide support for any other approach to serve that interest.

In Renton, we specifically refused to set such a high bar for municipalities that want to address merely the secondary effects of protected speech. We held that a municipality may rely on any evidence that is "reasonably believed to be relevant" for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest. 475 U.S., at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also, e.g., Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (SOUTER, J., concurring in judgment) (permitting municipality to use evidence that adult theaters are correlated with harmful secondary effects to support its claim that nude dancing is likely to produce the same effects). This is not to say that a municipality can get away with shoddy data or reasoning. The municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale for its ordinance. If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's 439 evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance. See, e.g., Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion). This case is at a very early stage in this process. It arrives on a summary judgment motion by respondents defended only by complaints that the 1977 study fails to prove that the city's justification for its ordinance is necessarily correct. Therefore, we conclude that the city, at this stage of the litigation, has complied with the evidentiary requirement in Renton.

Justice SOUTER faults the city for relying on the 1977 study not because the study fails to support the city's theory that adult department stores, like adult minimalls, attract customers and thus crime, but because the city does not demonstrate that freestanding single-use adult establishments reduce crime. See post, at 1747-1749 (dissenting opinion). In effect, Justice SOUTER asks the city to demonstrate, not merely by appeal to common sense, but also with empirical data, that its ordinance will successfully lower crime. Our cases have never required that municipalities make such a showing, certainly not without actual and convincing evidence from plaintiffs to the contrary. See, e.g., Barnes, supra, at 583-584, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SOUTER, J., concurring in judgment). Such a requirement would go too far in undermining our settled position that municipalities must be given a " 'reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions' " to address the secondary effects of protected speech. Renton, supra, at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality opinion)). A municipality considering an innovative solution may not have data that could demonstrate the efficacy of its proposal because 440 the solution would, by definition, not have been implemented previously. The city's ordinance banning multiple-use *1737 adult establishments is such a solution. Respondents contend that there are no adult video arcades in Los Angeles County that operate independently of adult bookstores. See Brief for Respondents 41. But without such arcades, the city does not have a treatment group to compare with the control group of multiple-use adult establishments, and without such a comparison Justice SOUTER would strike down the city's ordinance. This leaves the city with no means to address the secondary effects with which it is concerned.

Our deference to the evidence presented by the city of Los Angeles is the product of a careful balance between competing interests. On the one hand, we have an "obligation to exercise independent judgment when First Amendment rights are implicated." Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 666, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994) (plurality opinion); see also Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, 435 U.S. 829, 843-844, 98 S.Ct. 1535, 56 L.Ed.2d 1 (1978). On the other hand, we must acknowledge that the Los Angeles City Council is in a better position than the Judiciary to gather and evaluate data on local problems. See Turner, supra, at 665-666, 114 S.Ct. 2445; Erie, supra, at 297-298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion). We are also guided by the fact that Renton requires that municipal ordinances receive only intermediate scrutiny if they are content neutral. 475 U.S., at 48-50, 106 S.Ct. 925. There is less reason to be concerned that municipalities will use these ordinances to discriminate against unpopular speech. See Erie, supra, at 298-299, 120 S.Ct. 1382.

Justice SOUTER would have us rethink this balance, and indeed the entire Renton framework. In Renton, the Court distinguished the inquiry into whether a municipal ordinance is content neutral from the inquiry into whether it is "designed to serve a substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." 475 U.S., at 47-54, 106 S.Ct. 925. The former requires courts to verify that the "predominate concerns" motivating the 441 ordinance "were with the secondary effects of adult [speech], and not with the content of adult [speech]." Id., at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis deleted) The latter inquiry goes one step further and asks whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance. Only at this stage did Renton contemplate that courts would examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects. Id., at 50-52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Justice SOUTER would either merge these two inquiries or move the evidentiary analysis into the inquiry on content neutrality, and raise the evidentiary bar that a municipality must pass. His logic is that verifying that the ordinance actually reduces the secondary effects asserted would ensure that zoning regulations are not merely content-based regulations in disguise. See post, at 1746.

We think this proposal unwise. First, none of the parties request the Court to depart from the Renton framework. Nor is the proposal fairly encompassed in the question presented, which focuses on the sorts of evidence upon which the city may rely to demonstrate that its ordinance is designed to serve a substantial governmental interest. Pet. for Cert. i. Second, there is no evidence suggesting that courts have difficulty determining whether municipal ordinances are motivated primarily by the content of adult speech or by its secondary effects without looking to evidence connecting such speech to the asserted secondary effects. In this case, the Court of Appeals has not yet had an opportunity to address the issue, having assumed for the sake of argument that the city's ordinance is content neutral. 222 F.3d, at 723. It would be inappropriate for this Court to reach the question of content neutrality before permitting the lower court to pass upon it. Finally, Justice SOUTER does 1738 not clarify the sort of evidence upon which municipalities may rely to meet the evidentiary burden he would require. It is easy to say that courts must demand evidence *442 when "common experience" or "common assumptions" are incorrect, see post, at 1747, but it is difficult for courts to know ahead of time whether that condition is met. Municipalities will, in general, have greater experience with and understanding of the secondary effects that follow certain protected speech than will the courts. See Erie, 529 U.S., at 297-298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion). For this reason our cases require only that municipalities rely upon evidence that is " 'reasonably believed to be relevant' " to the secondary effects that they seek to address. Id., at 296.

III

The city of Los Angeles argues that its prohibition on multiuse establishments draws further support from a study of the poor health conditions in adult video arcades described in Hart Book Stores, a case that upheld a North Carolina ordinance similar to that challenged here. See 612 F.2d, at 828-829, n. 9. Respondents argue that the city cannot rely on evidence from Hart Book Stores because the city cannot prove it examined that evidence before it enacted the current version of § 12.70(C). Brief for Respondents 21. Respondents note, moreover, that unsanitary conditions in adult video arcades would persist regardless of whether arcades were operated in the same buildings as, say, adult bookstores. Ibid.

We do not, however, need to resolve the parties' dispute over evidence cited in Hart Book Stores. Unlike the city of Renton, the city of Los Angeles conducted its own study of adult businesses. We have concluded that the Los Angeles study provides evidence to support the city's theory that a concentration of adult operations in one locale attracts crime, and can be reasonably relied upon to demonstrate that Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1983) is designed to promote the city's interest in reducing crime. Therefore, the city need not present foreign studies to overcome the summary judgment against it.

*443 Before concluding, it should be noted that respondents argue, as an alternative basis to sustain the Court of Appeals' judgment, that the Los Angeles ordinance is not a typical zoning regulation. Rather, respondents explain, the prohibition on multiuse adult establishments is effectively a ban on adult video arcades because no such business exists independently of an adult bookstore. Brief for Respondents 12-13. Respondents request that the Court hold that the Los Angeles ordinance is not a time, place, and manner regulation, and that the Court subject the ordinance to strict scrutiny. This also appears to be the theme of Justice KENNEDY's concurrence. He contends that "[a] city may not assert that it will reduce secondary effects by reducing speech in the same proportion." Post, at 1742 (opinion concurring in judgment). We consider that unobjectionable proposition as simply a reformulation of the requirement that an ordinance warrants intermediate scrutiny only if it is a time, place, and manner regulation and not a ban. The Court of Appeals held, however, that the city's prohibition on the combination of adult bookstores and arcades is not a ban and respondents did not petition for review of that determination.

Accordingly, we reverse the Court of Appeals' judgment granting summary judgment to respondents and remand the case for further proceedings.

It is so ordered.

Justice SCALIA, concurring.

I join the plurality opinion because I think it represents a correct application of our jurisprudence concerning regulation of the "secondary effects" of pornographic speech. As I have said elsewhere, however, in a case such as this our First Amendment 1739 traditions make "secondary effects" analysis quite unnecessary. The Constitution does not prevent those communities that wish to do so from regulating, or indeed entirely suppressing, the business of pandering *444 sex. See, e.g., Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment); FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 256-261, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990) (SCALIA, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Justice KENNEDY, concurring in the judgment.

Speech can produce tangible consequences. It can change minds. It can prompt actions. These primary effects signify the power and the necessity of free speech. Speech can also cause secondary effects, however, unrelated to the impact of the speech on its audience. A newspaper factory may cause pollution, and a billboard may obstruct a view. These secondary consequences are not always immune from regulation by zoning laws even though they are produced by speech.

Municipal governments know that high concentrations of adult businesses can damage the value and the integrity of a neighborhood. The damage is measurable; it is all too real. The law does not require a city to ignore these consequences if it uses its zoning power in a reasonable way to ameliorate them without suppressing speech. A city's "interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality opinion).

The question in this case is whether Los Angeles can seek to reduce these tangible, adverse consequences by separating adult speech businesses from one another-even two businesses that have always been under the same roof. In my view our precedents may allow the city to impose its regulation in the exercise of the zoning authority. The city is not, at least, to be foreclosed by summary judgment, so I concur in the judgment.

This separate statement seems to me necessary, however, for two reasons. First, Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), described a similar ordinance as "content neutral," and I agree with the dissent that the designation 445 is imprecise. Second, in my view, the plurality's application of Renton might constitute a subtle expansion, with which I do not concur.

I

In Renton, the Court determined that while the material inside adult bookstores and movie theaters is speech, the consequent sordidness outside is not. The challenge is to correct the latter while leaving the former, as far as possible, untouched. If a city can decrease the crime and blight associated with certain speech by the traditional exercise of its zoning power, and at the same time leave the quantity and accessibility of the speech substantially undiminished, there is no First Amendment objection. This is so even if the measure identifies the problem outside by reference to the speech inside-that is, even if the measure is in that sense content based.

On the other hand, a city may not regulate the secondary effects of speech by suppressing the speech itself. A city may not, for example, impose a content-based fee or tax. See Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. 221, 230, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 95 L.Ed.2d 209 (1987) ("[O]fficial scrutiny of the content of publications as the basis for imposing a tax is entirely incompatible with the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of the press"). This is true even if the government purports to justify the fee by reference to secondary effects. See Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 134-135, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101 (1992). Though the inference may be inexorable that a city could reduce secondary effects by reducing speech, this is not a permissible *1740 strategy. The purpose and effect of a zoning ordinance must be to reduce secondary effects and not to reduce speech.

A zoning measure can be consistent with the First Amendment if it is likely to cause a significant decrease in secondary effects and a trivial decrease in the quantity of speech. It is well documented that multiple adult businesses in close proximity may change the character of a neighborhood 446 for the worse. Those same businesses spread across the city may not have the same deleterious effects. At least in theory, a dispersal ordinance causes these businesses to separate rather than to close, so negative externalities are diminished but speech is not.

The calculus is a familiar one to city planners, for many enterprises other than adult businesses also cause undesirable externalities. Factories, for example, may cause pollution, so a city may seek to reduce the cost of that externality by restricting factories to areas far from residential neighborhoods. With careful urban planning a city in this way may reduce the costs of pollution for communities, while at the same time allowing the productive work of the factories to continue. The challenge is to protect the activity inside while controlling side effects outside.

Such an ordinance might, like a speech restriction, be "content based." It might, for example, single out slaughterhouses for specific zoning treatment, restricting them to a particularly remote part of town. Without knowing more, however, one would hardly presume that because the ordinance is specific to that business, the city seeks to discriminate against it or help a favored group. One would presume, rather, that the ordinance targets not the business but its particular noxious side effects. But cf. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L.Ed. 394 (1872). The business might well be the city's most valued enterprise; nevertheless, because of the pollution it causes, it may warrant special zoning treatment. This sort of singling out is not impermissible content discrimination; it is sensible urban planning. Cf. Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 388, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303 (1926) ("A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place,-like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard. If the validity of the legislative classification for zoning purposes be fairly debatable, the legislative judgment must be allowed to control").

447 True, the First Amendment protects speech and not slaughterhouses. But in both contexts, the inference of impermissible discrimination is not strong. An equally strong inference is that the ordinance is targeted not at the activity, but at its side effects. If a zoning ordinance is directed to the secondary effects of adult speech, the ordinance does not necessarily constitute impermissible content discrimination. A zoning law need not be blind to the secondary effects of adult speech, so long as the purpose of the law is not to suppress it.

The ordinance at issue in this case is not limited to expressive activities. It also extends, for example, to massage parlors, which the city has found to cause similar secondary effects. See Los Angeles Municipal Code §§ 12.70(B)(8) (1978), 12.70(B)(17) (1983), 12.70(C) (1986), as amended. This ordinance, moreover, is just one part of an elaborate web of land-use regulations in Los Angeles, all of which are intended to promote the social value of the land as a whole without suppressing some activities or favoring others. See § 12.02 ("The purpose of this article is to consolidate and coordinate all existing zoning regulations and provisions into one comprehensive zoning plan ... in order to encourage the most appropriate use of land ... and to promote the health, safety, and the general welfare ..."). All this further suggests that the ordinance is more in the nature of a typical land-use restriction and less in the nature of a law suppressing speech.

*1741 For these reasons, the ordinance is not so suspect that we must employ the usual rigorous analysis that content-based laws demand in other instances. The ordinance may be a covert attack on speech, but we should not presume it to be so. In the language of our First Amendment doctrine it calls for intermediate and not strict scrutiny, as we held in Renton.

448 II

In Renton, the Court began by noting that a zoning ordinance is a time, place, or manner restriction. The Court then proceeded to consider the question whether the ordinance was "content based." The ordinance "by its terms [was] designed to prevent crime, protect the city's retail trade, maintain property values, and generally protec[t] and preserv[e] the quality of [the city's] neighborhoods, commercial districts, and the quality of urban life, not to suppress the expression of unpopular views." 475 U.S., at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (internal quotation marks omitted). On this premise, the Court designated the restriction "content neutral." Ibid.

The Court appeared to recognize, however, that the designation was something of a fiction, which, perhaps, is why it kept the phrase in quotes. After all, whether a statute is content neutral or content based is something that can be determined on the face of it; if the statute describes speech by content then it is content based. And the ordinance in Renton "treat[ed] theaters that specialize in adult films differently from other kinds of theaters." Id., at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. The fiction that this sort of ordinance is content neutral-or "content neutral"-is perhaps more confusing than helpful, as Justice SOUTER demonstrates, see post, at 1745 (dissenting opinion). It is also not a fiction that has commanded our consistent adherence. See Thomas v. Chicago Park Dist., 534 U.S. 316, 322, and n. 2, 122 S.Ct. 775, 151 L.Ed.2d 783 (2002) (suggesting that a licensing scheme targeting only those businesses purveying sexually explicit speech is not content neutral). These ordinances are content based, and we should call them so.

Nevertheless, for the reasons discussed above, the central holding of Renton is sound: A zoning restriction that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny. Generally, the government has no power to restrict speech based on content, but there are exceptions to the rule. See Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N. Y. State Crime 449 Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 126-127, 112 S.Ct. 501, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991) (KENNEDY, J., concurring in judgment). And zoning regulations do not automatically raise the specter of impermissible content discrimination, even if they are content based, because they have a prima facie legitimate purpose: to limit the negative externalities of land use. As a matter of common experience, these sorts of ordinances are more like a zoning restriction on slaughterhouses and less like a tax on unpopular newspapers. The zoning context provides a built-in legitimate rationale, which rebuts the usual presumption that content-based restrictions are unconstitutional. For this reason, we apply intermediate rather than strict scrutiny.

III

The narrow question presented in this case is whether the ordinance at issue is invalid "because the city did not study the negative effects of such combinations of adult businesses, but rather relied on judicially approved statutory precedent from other jurisdictions." Pet. for Cert. i. This question is actually two questions. First, what proposition does a city need to advance in order to sustain a secondary-effects ordinance? Second, how much evidence is required to support the proposition? The plurality skips to the second question and gives the correct answer; but in my view more attention must be given to the first.

*1742 At the outset, we must identify the claim a city must make in order to justify a content-based zoning ordinance. As discussed above, a city must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact. The ordinance may identify the speech based on content, but only as a shorthand for identifying the secondary effects outside. A city may not assert that it will reduce secondary effects by reducing speech in the same proportion. On this point, I agree with Justice SOUTER. See post, at 1746. The rationale of 450 the ordinance must be that it will suppress secondary effects-and not by suppressing speech.

The plurality's statement of the proposition to be supported is somewhat different. It suggests that Los Angeles could reason as follows: (1) "a concentration of operations in one locale draws ... a greater concentration of adult consumers to the neighborhood, and a high density of such consumers either attracts or generates criminal activity"; (2) "having a number of adult operations in one single adult establishment draws the same dense foot traffic as having a number of distinct adult establishments in close proximity"; (3) "reducing the concentration of adult operations in a neighborhood, whether within separate establishments or in one large establishment, will reduce crime rates." Ante, at 1735.

These propositions all seem reasonable, and the inferences required to get from one to the next are sensible. Nevertheless, this syllogism fails to capture an important part of the inquiry. The plurality's analysis does not address how speech will fare under the city's ordinance. As discussed, the necessary rationale for applying intermediate scrutiny is the promise that zoning ordinances like this one may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech. For this reason, it does not suffice to say that inconvenience will reduce demand and fewer patrons will lead to fewer secondary effects. This reasoning would as easily justify a content-based tax: Increased prices will reduce demand, and fewer customers will mean fewer secondary effects. But a content-based tax may not be justified in this manner. See Arkansas Writers' Project, Inc. v. Ragland, 481 U.S. 221, 107 S.Ct. 1722, 95 L.Ed.2d 209 (1987); Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101 (1992). It is no trick to reduce secondary effects by reducing speech or its audience; but a city may not attack secondary effects indirectly by attacking speech.

The analysis requires a few more steps. If two adult businesses are under the same roof, an ordinance requiring them 451 to separate will have one of two results: One business will either move elsewhere or close. The city's premise cannot be the latter. It is true that cutting adult speech in half would probably reduce secondary effects proportionately. But again, a promised proportional reduction does not suffice. Content-based taxes could achieve that, yet these are impermissible.

The premise, therefore, must be that businesses-even those that have always been under one roof-will for the most part disperse rather than shut down. True, this premise has its own conundrum. As Justice SOUTER writes, "[t]he city ... claims no interest in the proliferation of adult establishments." Post, at 1748. The claim, therefore, must be that this ordinance will cause two businesses to split rather than one to close, that the quantity of speech will be substantially undiminished, and that total secondary effects will be significantly reduced. This must be the rationale of a dispersal statute.

Only after identifying the proposition to be proved can we ask the second part of the question presented: is there sufficient evidence to support the proposition? As to this, we have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at *1743 least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required. See, e.g., Renton, 475 U.S., at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses"); Young, 427 U.S., at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440 ("[T]he city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems"); Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 300-301, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion). As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners. See Renton, supra, at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925. The Los Angeles City Council 452 knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. See Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 665-666, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994); Erie, supra, at 297-298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion). It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion.

In this case the proposition to be shown is supported by a single study and common experience. The city's study shows a correlation between the concentration of adult establishments and crime. Two or more adult businesses in close proximity seem to attract a critical mass of unsavory characters, and the crime rate may increase as a result. The city, therefore, sought to disperse these businesses. Los Angeles Municipal Code § 12.70(C) (1983), as amended. This original ordinance is not challenged here, and we may assume that it is constitutional.

If we assume that the study supports the original ordinance, then most of the necessary analysis follows. We may posit that two adult stores next door to each other attract 100 patrons per day. The two businesses split apart might attract 49 patrons each. (Two patrons, perhaps, will be discouraged by the inconvenience of the separation-a relatively small cost to speech.) On the other hand, the reduction in secondary effects might be dramatic, because secondary effects may require a critical mass. Depending on the economics of vice, 100 potential customers/victims might attract a coterie of thieves, prostitutes, and other ne'er-do-wells; yet 49 might attract none at all. If so, a dispersal ordinance would cause a great reduction in secondary effects at very small cost to speech. Indeed, the very absence of secondary effects might increase the audience for the speech; perhaps for every two people who are discouraged by the inconvenience of two-stop shopping, another two are encouraged by hospitable surroundings. In that case, secondary effects might be eliminated at no cost to 453 speech whatsoever, and both the city and the speaker will have their interests well served.

Only one small step remains to justify the ordinance at issue in this case. The city may next infer-from its study and from its own experience-that two adult businesses under the same roof are no better than two next door. The city could reach the reasonable conclusion that knocking down the wall between two adult businesses does not ameliorate any undesirable secondary effects of their proximity to one another. If the city's first ordinance was justified, therefore, then the second is too. Dispersing two adult businesses under one roof is reasonably likely to cause a substantial reduction in secondary effects while reducing speech very little.

IV

These propositions are well established in common experience and in zoning policies that we have already examined, and for these reasons this ordinance is not invalid on its face. If these assumptions *1744 can be proved unsound at trial, then the ordinance might not withstand intermediate scrutiny. The ordinance does, however, survive the summary judgment motion that the Court of Appeals ordered granted in this case.

Justice SOUTER, with whom Justice STEVENS and Justice GINSBURG join, and with whom Justice BREYER joins as to Part II, dissenting.

In 1977, the city of Los Angeles studied sections of the city with high and low concentrations of adult business establishments catering to the market for the erotic. The city found no certain correlation between the location of those establishments and depressed property values, but it did find some correlation between areas of higher concentrations of such business and higher crime rates. On that basis, Los Angeles followed the examples of other cities in adopting a zoning ordinance requiring dispersion of adult 454 establishments. I assume that the ordinance was constitutional when adopted, see, e.g., Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and assume for purposes of this case that the original ordinance remains valid today. [1]

[1] Although amicus First Amendment Lawyers Association argues that recent studies refute the findings of adult business correlations with secondary effects sufficient to justify such an ordinance, Brief for First Amendment Lawyers Association as Amicus Curiae 21-23, the issue is one I do not reach.

The city subsequently amended its ordinance to forbid clusters of such businesses at one address, as in a mall. The city has, in turn, taken a third step to apply this amendment to prohibit even a single proprietor from doing business in a traditional way that combines an adult bookstore, selling books, magazines, and videos, with an adult arcade, consisting of open viewing booths, where potential purchasers of videos can view them for a fee.

From a policy of dispersing adult establishments, the city has thus moved to a policy of dividing them in two. The justification claimed for this application of the new policy remains, however, the 1977 survey, as supplemented by the authority of one decided case on regulating adult arcades in another State. The case authority is not on point, see infra, at 1748, n. 4, and the 1977 survey provides no support for the breakup policy. Its evidentiary insufficiency bears emphasis and is the principal reason that I respectfully dissent from the Court's judgment today.

I

This ordinance stands or falls on the results of what our cases speak of as intermediate scrutiny, generally contrasted with the demanding standard applied under the First Amendment to a content-based regulation of expression. The variants of middle-tier tests cover a grab bag of restrictive statutes, with a corresponding variety of justifications. 455 While spoken of as content neutral, these regulations are not uniformly distinct from the content-based regulations calling for scrutiny that is strict, and zoning of businesses based on their sales of expressive adult material receives mid-level scrutiny, even though it raises a risk of content-based restriction. It is worth being clear, then, on how close to a content basis adult business zoning can get, and why the application of a middle-tier standard to zoning regulation of adult bookstores calls for particular care.

Because content-based regulation applies to expression by very reason of what is said, it carries a high risk that expressive limits are imposed for the sake of suppressing a message that is disagreeable to listeners or readers, or the government. See Consolidated Edison Co. of N. Y. v. Public Serv. Comm'n of N. Y., 447 U.S. 530, 536, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980) ("[W]hen regulation is based on the content of speech, governmental action must be scrutinized more carefully to ensure *1745 that communication has not been prohibited merely because public officials disapprove the speaker's views" (internal quotation marks omitted)). A restriction based on content survives only on a showing of necessity to serve a legitimate and compelling governmental interest, combined with least restrictive narrow tailoring to serve it, see United States v. Playboy Entertainment Group, Inc., 529 U.S. 803, 813, 120 S.Ct. 1878, 146 L.Ed.2d 865 (2000); since merely protecting listeners from offense at the message is not a legitimate interest of the government, see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 24-25, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (1971), strict scrutiny leaves few survivors.

The comparatively softer intermediate scrutiny is reserved for regulations justified by something other than content of the message, such as a straightforward restriction going only to the time, place, or manner of speech or other expression. It is easy to see why review of such a regulation may be relatively relaxed. No one has to disagree with any message to find something wrong with a loudspeaker at three in the morning, see 456 Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513 (1949); the sentiment may not provoke, but being blasted out of a sound sleep does. In such a case, we ask simply whether the regulation is "narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and ... leave[s] open ample alternative channels for communication of the information." Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). A middle-tier standard is also applied to limits on expression through action that is otherwise subject to regulation for nonexpressive purposes, the best known example being the prohibition on destroying draft cards as an act of protest, United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); here a regulation passes muster "if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest ... unrelated to the suppression of free expression" by a restriction "no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest," id., at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. As mentioned already, yet another middle-tier variety is zoning restriction as a means of responding to the "secondary effects" of adult businesses, principally crime and declining property values in the neighborhood. Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). [2]

2 Limiting such effects qualifies as a substantial governmental interest, and an ordinance has been said to survive if it is shown to serve such ends without unreasonably limiting alternatives. Renton, 475 U.S., at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. Because Renton called its secondary-effects ordinance a mere time, place, or manner restriction and thereby glossed over the role of content in secondary-effects zoning, see infra, at 1745, I believe the soft focus of its statement of the middle-tier test should be rejected in favor of the United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), formulation quoted above. O'Brien is a closer relative of secondary-effects zoning than mere time, place, or manner regulations, as the Court has implicitly recognized. Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion).

Although this type of land-use restriction has even been called a variety of time, place, or manner regulation, id., at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925, equating a secondary-effects zoning regulation with a mere regulation of time, place, or manner jumps over an important difference between them. A restriction on loudspeakers has no obvious relationship to the substance of 457 what is broadcast, while a zoning regulation of businesses in adult expression just as obviously does. And while it may be true that an adult business is burdened only because of its secondary effects, it is clearly burdened only if its expressive products have adult content. Thus, the Court has recognized that this kind of regulation, though called content neutral, occupies a kind of limbo between full-blown, content-based restrictions and regulations that apply without any reference to the substance of what is said. Id., at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925.

*1746 It would in fact make sense to give this kind of zoning regulation a First Amendment label of its own, and if we called it content correlated, we would not only describe it for what it is, but keep alert to a risk of content-based regulation that it poses. The risk lies in the fact that when a law applies selectively only to speech of particular content, the more precisely the content is identified, the greater is the opportunity for government censorship. Adult speech refers not merely to sexually explicit content, but to speech reflecting a favorable view of being explicit about sex and a favorable view of the practices it depicts; a restriction on adult content is thus also a restriction turning on a particular viewpoint, of which the government may disapprove.

This risk of viewpoint discrimination is subject to a relatively simple safeguard, however. If combating secondary effects of property devaluation and crime is truly the reason for the regulation, it is possible to show by empirical evidence that the effects exist, that they are caused by the expressive activity subject to the zoning, and that the zoning can be expected either to ameliorate them or to enhance the capacity of the government to combat them (say, by concentrating them in one area), without suppressing the expressive activity itself. This capacity of zoning regulation to address the practical problems without eliminating the speech is, after all, the only possible excuse for speaking of secondary-effects zoning as akin to time, place, or manner regulations.

458 In examining claims that there are causal relationships between adult businesses and an increase in secondary effects (distinct from disagreement), and between zoning and the mitigation of the effects, stress needs to be placed on the empirical character of the demonstration available. See Metromedia, Inc. v. San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 510, 101 S.Ct. 2882, 69 L.Ed.2d 800 (1981) ("[J]udgments ... defying objective evaluation ... must be carefully scrutinized to determine if they are only a public rationalization of an impermissible purpose"); Young, 427 U.S., at 84, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring) ("[C]ourts must be alert ... to the possibility of using the power to zone as a pretext for suppressing expression"). The weaker the demonstration of facts distinct from disapproval of the "adult" viewpoint, the greater the likelihood that nothing more than condemnation of the viewpoint drives the regulation. [3]

[3] Regulation of commercial speech, which is like secondary-effects zoning in being subject to an intermediate level of First Amendment scrutiny, see Central Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Public Serv. Comm'n of N. Y., 447 U.S. 557, 569, 100 S.Ct. 2343, 65 L.Ed.2d 341 (1980), provides an instructive parallel in the cases enforcing an evidentiary requirement to ensure that an asserted rationale does not cloak an illegitimate governmental motive. See, e.g., Rubin v. Coors Brewing Co., 514 U.S. 476, 487, 115 S.Ct. 1585, 131 L.Ed.2d 532 (1995); Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 113 S.Ct. 1792, 123 L.Ed.2d 543 (1993). The government's "burden is not satisfied by mere speculation or conjecture," but only by "demonstrat[ing] that the harms [the government] recites are real and that its restriction will in fact alleviate them to a material degree." Id., at 770-771, 113 S.Ct. 1792. For unless this "critical" requirement is met, Rubin, supra, at 487, 115 S.Ct. 1585, "a State could with ease restrict commercial speech in the service of other objectives that could not themselves justify a burden on commercial expression," Edenfield, supra, at 771, 113 S.Ct. 1792.

Equal stress should be placed on the point that requiring empirical justification of claims about property value or crime is not demanding anything Herculean. Increased crime, like prostitution and muggings, and declining property values in areas surrounding adult businesses, are all readily observable, often to the untrained eye and certainly to the police officer and urban planner. These harms can be shown by police reports, crime statistics, and studies of market 459 value, all of which are within a municipality's capacity or available from the distilled experiences of comparable communities. See, e.g., Renton, *1747 supra, at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925; Young, supra, at 55, 96 S.Ct. 2440.

And precisely because this sort of evidence is readily available, reviewing courts need to be wary when the government appeals, not to evidence, but to an uncritical common sense in an effort to justify such a zoning restriction. It is not that common sense is always illegitimate in First Amendment demonstration. The need for independent proof varies with the point that has to be established, and zoning can be supported by common experience when there is no reason to question it. We have appealed to common sense in analogous cases, even if we have disagreed about how far it took us. See Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 300-301, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion); id., at 313, and n. 2, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (SOUTER, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). But we must be careful about substituting common assumptions for evidence, when the evidence is as readily available as public statistics and municipal property valuations, lest we find out when the evidence is gathered that the assumptions are highly debatable. The record in this very case makes the point. It has become a commonplace, based on our own cases, that concentrating adult establishments drives down the value of neighboring property used for other purposes. See Renton, 475 U.S., at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925; Young, supra, at 55, 96 S.Ct. 2440. In fact, however, the city found that general assumption unjustified by its 1977 study. App. 39, 45.

The lesson is that the lesser scrutiny applied to content-correlated zoning restrictions is no excuse for a government's failure to provide a factual demonstration for claims it makes about secondary effects; on the contrary, this is what demands the demonstration. See, e.g., Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 72-74, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981). In this case, however, the government has not shown that bookstores containing viewing booths, isolated from other adult establishments, increase 460 crime or produce other negative secondary effects in surrounding neighborhoods, and we are thus left without substantial justification for viewing the city's First Amendment restriction as content correlated but not simply content based. By the same token, the city has failed to show any causal relationship between the breakup policy and elimination or regulation of secondary effects.

II

Our cases on the subject have referred to studies, undertaken with varying degrees of formality, showing the geographical correlations between the presence or concentration of adult business establishments and enhanced crime rates or depressed property values. See, e.g., Renton, supra, at 50-51, 106 S.Ct. 925; Young, 427 U.S., at 55, 96 S.Ct. 2440. Although we have held that intermediate scrutiny of secondary-effects legislation does not demand a fresh evidentiary study of its factual basis if the published results of investigations elsewhere are "reasonably" thought to be applicable in a different municipal setting, Renton, supra, at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925, the city here took responsibility to make its own enquiry, App. 35-162. As already mentioned, the study was inconclusive as to any correlation between adult business and lower property values, id., at 45, 106 S.Ct. 925, and it reported no association between higher crime rates and any isolated adult establishments. But it did find a geographical correlation of higher concentrations of adult establishments with higher crime rates, id., at 43, 106 S.Ct. 925, and with this study in hand, Los Angeles enacted its 1978 ordinance requiring dispersion of adult stores and theaters. This original position of the ordinance is not challenged today, and I will assume its justification on the theory accepted in Young, that eliminating concentrations of adult establishments will spread out the documented secondary effects and render them more manageable that way.

*1748 The application of the 1983 amendment now before us is, however, a different matter. My concern is not with the 461 assumption behind the amendment itself, that a conglomeration of adult businesses under one roof, as in a minimall or adult department store, will produce undesirable secondary effects comparable to what a cluster of separate adult establishments brings about, ante, at 1735. That may or may not be so. The assumption that is clearly unsupported, however, goes to the city's supposed interest in applying the amendment to the book and video stores in question, and in applying it to break them up. The city, of course, claims no interest in the proliferation of adult establishments, the ostensible consequence of splitting the sales and viewing activities so as to produce two stores where once there was one. Nor does the city assert any interest in limiting the sale of adult expressive material as such, or reducing the number of adult video booths in the city, for that would be clear content-based regulation, and the city was careful in its 1977 report to disclaim any such intent. App. 54. [4]

[4] Finally, the city does not assert an interest in curbing any secondary effects within the combined bookstore-arcades. In Hart Book Stores, Inc. v. Edmisten, 612 F.2d 821 (1979), the Fourth Circuit upheld a similar ban in North Carolina, relying in part on a county health department report on the results of an inspection of several of the combined adult bookstore-video arcades in Wake County, North Carolina. Id., at 828-829, n. 9. The inspection revealed unsanitary conditions and evidence of salacious activities taking place within the video cubicles. Ibid. The city introduces this case to defend its breakup policy although it is not clear from the opinion how separating these video arcades from the adult bookstores would deter the activities that took place within them. In any event, while Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), allowed a city to rely on the experiences and studies of other cities, it did not dispense with the requirement that "whatever evidence the city relies upon [be] reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses," id., at 51-52, 106 S.Ct. 925, and the evidence relied upon by the Fourth Circuit is certainly not necessarily relevant to the Los Angeles ordinance. Since November 1977, five years before the enactment of the ordinance at issue, Los Angeles has regulated adult video booths, prohibiting doors, setting minimum levels of lighting, and requiring that their interiors be fully visible from the entrance to the premises. Los Angeles Municipal Code §§ 103.101(i), (j). Thus, it seems less likely that the unsanitary conditions identified in Hart Book Stores would exist in video arcades in Los Angeles, and the city has suggested no evidence that they do. For that reason, Hart Book Stores gives no indication of a substantial governmental interest that the ban on multiuse adult establishments would further.

462 Rather, the city apparently assumes that a bookstore selling videos and providing viewing booths produces secondary effects of crime, and more crime than would result from having a single store without booths in one part of town and a video arcade in another. [5] But the city neither says this in so many words nor proffers any evidence to support even the simple proposition that an otherwise lawfully located adult bookstore combined with video booths will produce any criminal effects. The Los Angeles study treats such combined stores as one, see id., at 81-82, 96 S.Ct. 2440, and draws no general conclusion that individual stores spread apart from other adult establishments (as under the basic Los Angeles ordinance) are associated with any degree of criminal activity above the general norm; nor has the city called the Court's attention to any other empirical study, or even anecdotal police evidence, that supports the city's assumption. In fact, if the Los Angeles study sheds any light whatever on the city's position, it is the light of skepticism, for we may fairly suspect that the study said nothing about the secondary effects of 1749 freestanding stores because no effects were observed. The reasonable supposition, then, is that splitting some of them up will have no consequence for secondary effects whatever. [6]

5 The plurality indulges the city's assumption but goes no further to justify it than stating what is obvious from what the city's study says about concentrations of adult establishments (but not isolated ones): the presence of several adult businesses in one neighborhood draws "a greater concentration of adult consumers to the neighborhood, [which] either attracts or generates criminal activity." Ante, at 1735.

6 In Renton, the Court approved a zoning ordinance "aimed at preventing the secondary effects caused by the presence of even one such theater in a given neighborhood." 475 U.S., at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. The city, however, does not appeal to that decision to show that combined bookstore-arcades isolated from other adult establishments, like the theaters in Renton, give rise to negative secondary effects, perhaps recognizing that such a finding would only call into doubt the sensibility of the city's decision to proliferate such businesses. See ante, at 1736. Although the question may be open whether a city can rely on the experiences of other cities when they contradict its own studies, that question is not implicated here, as Los Angeles relies exclusively on its own study, which is tellingly silent on the question whether isolated adult establishments have any bearing on criminal activity.

*463 The inescapable point is that the city does not even claim that the 1977 study provides any support for its assumption. We have previously accepted studies, like the city's own study here, as showing a causal connection between concentrations of adult business and identified secondary effects. [7] Since that is an acceptable basis for requiring adult businesses to disperse when they are housed in separate premises, there is certainly a relevant argument to be made that restricting their concentration at one spacious address should have some effect on sales and traffic, and effects in the neighborhood. But even if that argument may justify a ban on adult "minimalls," ante, at 1735, it provides no support for what the city proposes to do here. The bookstores involved here are not concentrations of traditionally separate adult businesses that have been studied and shown to have an association with secondary effects, and they exemplify no new form of concentration like a mall under one roof. They are combinations of selling and viewing activities that have commonly been combined, and the plurality itself recognizes, ante, at 1736, that no study conducted by the city has reported that this type of traditional business, any more than any other adult business, has a correlation with secondary effects *464 in the absence of concentration with other adult establishments in the neighborhood. And even if splitting viewing booths from the bookstores that continue to sell videos were to turn some customers away (or send them in search of video arcades in other neighborhoods), it is nothing but speculation to think that marginally lower traffic to one store would have any measurable effect on the neighborhood, let alone an effect on associated crime that has never been shown to exist in the first place. [8]

7 As already noted, n. 1, supra, amicus First Amendment Lawyers Association argues that more recent studies show no such thing, but this case involves no such challenge to the previously accepted causal connection.

8 Justice KENNEDY would indulge the city in this speculation, so long as it could show that the ordinance will "leav[e] the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact." Ante, at 1742 (opinion concurring in judgment). But the suggestion that the speculated consequences may justify content-correlated regulation if speech is only slightly burdened turns intermediate scrutiny on its head. Although the goal of intermediate scrutiny is to filter out laws that unduly burden speech, this is achieved by examining the asserted governmental interest, not the burden on speech, which must simply be no greater than necessary to further that interest. Erie, 529 U.S., at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382; see also n. 2, supra. Nor has Justice KENNEDY even shown that this ordinance leaves speech "substantially intact." He posits an example in which two adult stores draw 100 customers, and each business operating separately draws 49. Ante, at 1743. It does not follow, however, that a combined bookstore-arcade that draws 100 customers, when split, will yield a bookstore and arcade that together draw nearly that many customers. Given the now double outlays required to operate the businesses at different locations, see infra, at 1751, the far more likely outcome is that the stand-alone video store will go out of business. (Of course, the bookstore owner could, consistently with the ordinance, continue to operate video booths at no charge, but if this were always commercially feasible then the city would face the separate problem that under no theory could a rule simply requiring that video booths be operated for free be said to reduce secondary effects.)

*1750 Nor is the plurality's position bolstered, as it seems to think, ante, at 1736, by relying on the statement in Renton that courts should allow cities a " 'reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems,' " 475 U.S., at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. The plurality overlooks a key distinction between the zoning regulations at issue in Renton and 465 Young (and in Los Angeles as of 1978), and this new Los Angeles breakup requirement. In those two cases, the municipalities' substantial interest for purposes of intermediate scrutiny was an interest in choosing between two strategies to deal with crime or property value, each strategy tied to the businesses' location, which had been shown to have a causal connection with the secondary effects: the municipality could either concentrate businesses for a concentrated regulatory strategy, or disperse them in order to spread out its regulatory efforts. The limitations on location required no further support than the factual basis tying location to secondary effects; the zoning approved in those two cases had no effect on the way the owners of the stores carried on their adult businesses beyond controlling location, and no heavier burden than the location limit was approved by this Court.

The Los Angeles ordinance, however, does impose a heavier burden, and one lacking any demonstrable connection to the interest in crime control. The city no longer accepts businesses as their owners choose to conduct them within their own four walls, but bars a video arcade in a bookstore, a combination shown by the record to be commercially natural, if not universal. App. 47-51, 229-230, 242. Whereas Young and Renton gave cities the choice between two strategies when each was causally related to the city's interest, the plurality today gives Los Angeles a right to "experiment" with a First Amendment restriction in response to a problem of increased crime that the city has never even shown to be associated with combined bookstore-arcades standing alone. But the government's freedom of experimentation cannot displace its burden under the intermediate scrutiny standard to show that the restriction on speech is no greater than essential to realizing an important objective, in this case policing crime. Since we cannot make even a best guess that the city's breakup policy will have any effect on crime 466 or law enforcement, we are a very far cry from any assurance against covert content-based regulation. [9]

9 The plurality's assumption that the city's "motive" in applying secondary-effects zoning can be entirely compartmentalized from the proffer of evidence required to justify the zoning scheme, ante, at 1737, is indulgent to an unrealistic degree, as the record in this case shows. When the original dispersion ordinance was enacted in 1978, the city's study showing a correlation between concentrations of adult business and higher crime rates showed that the dispersal of adult businesses was causally related to the city's law enforcement interest, and that in turn was a fair indication that the city's concern was with the secondary effect of higher crime rates. When, however, the city takes the further step of breaking up businesses with no showing that a traditionally combined business has any association with a higher crime rate that could be affected by the breakup, there is no indication that the breakup policy addresses a secondary effect, but there is reason to doubt that secondary effects are the city's concern. The plurality seems to ask us to shut our eyes to the city's failings by emphasizing that this case is merely at the stage of summary judgment, ante, at 1736, but ignores the fact that at this summary judgment stage the city has made it plain that it relies on no evidence beyond the 1977 study, which provides no support for the city's action.

And concern with content-based regulation targeting a viewpoint is right to the point here, as witness a fact that involves no guesswork. If we take the city's breakup policy at its face, enforcing it will mean that in every case two establishments will operate instead of the traditional one. Since the city presumably does not wish *1751 merely to multiply adult establishments, it makes sense to ask what offsetting gain the city may obtain from its new breakup policy. The answer may lie in the fact that two establishments in place of one will entail two business overheads in place of one: two monthly rents, two electricity bills, two payrolls. Every month business will be more expensive than it used to be, perhaps even twice as much. That sounds like a good strategy for driving out expressive adult businesses. It sounds, in other words, like a policy of content-based regulation.

I respectfully dissent.

All Citations

535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670, 70 USLW 4369, 30 Media L. Rep. 1769, 02 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4067, 2002 Daily Journal D.A.R. 5167, 15 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 267

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Not Followed on State Law Grounds Mendoza v. Licensing Board of Fall River, Mass., May 11, 2005

120 S.Ct. 1382
Supreme Court of the United States

CITY OF ERIE, et al., Petitioners,
v.
PAP'S A.M. tdba "Kandyland".

No. 98–1161.
|
Argued Nov. 10, 1999.
|
Decided March 29, 2000.

Operator of establishment featuring nude erotic dancing brought action challenging constitutionality of city's public indecency ordinance proscribing nudity in public places. The Court of Common Pleas, Erie County, Civil Division, No. 1994-60059, Shad Connelly, A.J., declared ordinance unconstitutional. On appeal, the Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court, 674 A.2d 338, Nos. 445 and 446 C.D. 1995, reversed. Operator appealed. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court, Nos. 016 and 017 W.D. Appeal Docket 1997, reversed. Certiorari was granted, and operator moved to dismiss case as moot. The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that: (1) case was not rendered moot by closing of the establishment; (2) ordinance was content-neutral regulation; and (3) ordinance satisfied O'Brien standard for restrictions on symbolic speech.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Scalia concurred in judgment and filed opinion in which Justice Thomas joined.

Justice Souter concurred in part and dissented in part and filed opinion.

Justice Stevens dissented and filed opinion in which Justice Ginsburg joined.

West Headnotes (12)

[1] Federal Courts
Inception and duration of dispute; recurrence;"capable of repetition yet evading review"

Case is moot when issues presented are no longer "live" or parties lack legally cognizable interest in outcome.

317 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Mootness

Suit by operator of establishment featuring nude erotic dancing, challenging constitutionality of city's public indecency ordinance proscribing nudity in public places was not rendered moot by closing of the establishment, since operator was still incorporated, and could have decided to again operate nude dancing establishment in city; "advanced age" of owner did not make it "absolutely clear" that life of quiet retirement was his only reasonable expectation, and city had ongoing injury because it was barred from enforcing ordinance.

51 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Being "in a state of nudity" is not inherently expressive condition, but erotic nude dancing is "expressive conduct," within outer ambit of First Amendment's protection. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

83 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law

Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Constitutional Law

Symbolic speech

If governmental purpose in regulating expression is unrelated to suppression of expression, then regulation need only satisfy "less stringent" O'Brien standard for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech, but if government interest is related to content of expression, regulation must be justified under more demanding standard. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1

22 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law

Public nudity or indecency

Government restrictions on public nudity should be evaluated under framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Public nudity or indecency

Ordinance banning all public nudity, regardless of whether that nudity was accompanied by expressive activity, was content-neutral regulation and thus subject to "less stringent" O'Brien standard for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech; ordinance was aimed at combating crime and other secondary effects caused by presence of adult entertainment establishments. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

53 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Motive

Supreme Court will not strike down otherwise constitutional statute on basis of alleged illicit motive. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment).

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Symbolic speech

Under O'Brien standard for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech, court inquires whether government regulation is within constitutional power of government to enact, whether regulation furthers important or substantial government interest, whether government interest is unrelated to suppression of free expression, and whether restriction is no greater than is essential to furtherance of the government interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

32 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Public nudity or indecency

Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Municipal Corporations

Public safety and welfare

Obscenity

Exhibitions and performances

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Ordinance proscribing nudity in public places satisfied O'Brien standard for restrictions on symbolic speech; city's efforts to protect public health and safety were clearly within its police powers, ordinance furthered city's interest in combating harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing, government's interest was unrelated to suppression of free expression, and incidental impact on expressive element of nude dancing was de minimis. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

168 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

In demonstrating that secondary effects pose threat that justify regulation of nude dancing, city need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to problem that city addresses. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

57 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Because nude dancing at establishment was of same character as adult entertainment at issue in prior Supreme Court opinions, it was reasonable for city to conclude that such nude dancing was likely to produce same secondary effects, and, to justify ordinance regulating nude dancing, city could reasonably rely on evidentiary foundation set forth in Supreme Court opinions to effect that secondary effects were caused by presence of even one adult entertainment establishment in given neighborhood; city was not required to develop specific evidentiary record supporting ordinance. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment).

199 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Administrative Law and Procedure
Matters of record or of common or expert knowledge

As long as party has opportunity to respond, administrative agency may take official notice of "legislative facts" within its special knowledge, and is not confined to evidence in record in reaching its expert judgment. (Per Justice O'Connor with two Justices and the Chief Justice concurring, and two Justices concurring in judgment).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

*1384 Syllabus *

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Erie, Pennsylvania, enacted an ordinance making it a summary offense to knowingly or intentionally appear in public in a "state of nudity." Respondent Pap's A.M. (hereinafter Pap's), a Pennsylvania corporation, operated "Kandyland," an Erie establishment featuring totally nude erotic dancing by women. To comply with the ordinance, these dancers had to wear, at a minimum, "pasties" and a "G-string." Pap's filed suit against Erie and city officials, seeking declaratory relief and a permanent injunction against the ordinance's enforcement. The Court of Common Pleas struck down the ordinance as unconstitutional, but the Commonwealth Court reversed. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court in turn reversed, finding that the ordinance's public nudity sections violated Pap's right to freedom of expression as protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The Pennsylvania court held that nude dancing is expressive conduct entitled to some quantum of protection under the First Amendment, a view that the court noted was endorsed by eight Members of this Court in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504. The Pennsylvania court explained that, although one stated purpose of the ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects, there was also an unmentioned purpose to "impact negatively on the erotic message of the dance." Accordingly, the Pennsylvania court concluded that the ordinance was related to the suppression of expression. Because the ordinance was not content neutral, it was subject to strict scrutiny. The court held that the ordinance failed the narrow tailoring requirement of strict scrutiny. After this Court granted certiorari, Pap's filed a motion to dismiss the case as moot, noting that Kandyland no longer operated as a nude dancing club, and that Pap's did not operate such a club at any other location. This Court denied the motion.

Held: The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded.

553 Pa. 348, 719 A.2d 273, reversed and remanded.

Justice O'CONNOR delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I and II, concluding that the case is not moot. A case is moot when the issues presented are no longer "live" or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome. County of Los Angeles v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 631, 99 S.Ct. 1379, 59 L.Ed.2d 642. Simply closing Kandyland is not sufficient to moot the case because Pap's is still incorporated under Pennsylvania 278 law, and could again decide to operate a nude dancing establishment in Erie. Moreover, Pap's failed, despite its obligation to the Court, to mention the potential mootness issue in its brief in opposition, which was filed after Kandyland was closed and the property sold. See Board of License Comm'rs of Tiverton v. Pastore, 469 U.S. 238, 240, 105 S.Ct. 685, 83 L.Ed.2d 618. In any event, this is not a run of the mill voluntary cessation case. Here it is the plaintiff who, having prevailed below, seeks to have the case declared moot. And it is the defendant city that seeks to invoke the federal judicial power to obtain this Court's review of the decision. Cf. ASARCO Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 617–618, 109 S.Ct. 2037, 104 L.Ed.2d 696. The city has an ongoing injury because it is barred from enforcing the ordinance's public nudity provisions. If the ordinance is found constitutional, then Erie can enforce it, and the availability of such relief is sufficient to prevent the case from being moot. See Church of Scientology of Cal. v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 13, 113 S.Ct. 447, 121 L.Ed.2d 313. And Pap's still has a concrete stake in the case's outcome because, to the extent it has an interest in resuming operations, it *1385 has an interest in preserving the judgment below. This Court's interest in preventing litigants from attempting to manipulate its jurisdiction to insulate a favorable decision from review further counsels against a finding of mootness. See, e.g., United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632, 73 S.Ct. 894, 97 L.Ed. 1303. Pp. 1390–1391.

Justice O'CONNOR, joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice KENNEDY, and Justice BREYER, concluded in Parts III and IV that:

1. Government restrictions on public nudity such as Erie's ordinance should be evaluated under the framework set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech. Although being "in a state of nudity" is not an inherently expressive condition, nude dancing of the type at issue here is expressive conduct that falls within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection. See, e.g., Barnes, supra, at 565–566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion). What level of scrutiny applies is determined by whether the ordinance is related to the suppression of expression. E.g., Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342. If the governmental purpose in enacting the ordinance is unrelated to such suppression, the ordinance need only satisfy the "less stringent," intermediate O'Brien standard. E.g., Johnson, supra, at 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533. If the governmental interest is related to the expression's content, however, the ordinance falls outside O'Brien and must be justified under the more demanding, strict scrutiny standard. Johnson, supra, at 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533. An almost identical public nudity ban was held not to violate the First Amendment in Barnes, although no five Members of the Court agreed on a single rationale for that conclusion. The ordinance here, like the statute in Barnes, is on its face a general prohibition on public nudity. By its terms, it regulates conduct alone. It does not target 279 nudity that contains an erotic message; rather, it bans all public nudity, regardless of whether that nudity is accompanied by expressive activity. Although Pap's contends that the ordinance is related to the suppression of expression because its preamble suggests that its actual purpose is to prohibit erotic dancing of the type performed at Kandyland, that is not how the Pennsylvania Supreme Court interpreted that language. Rather, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court construed the preamble to mean that one purpose of the ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects. That is, the ordinance is aimed at combating crime and other negative secondary effects caused by the presence of adult entertainment establishments like Kandyland, and not at suppressing the erotic message conveyed by this type of nude dancing. See 391 U.S., at 382, 88 S.Ct. 1673; see also Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 321, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court's ultimate conclusion that the ordinance was nevertheless content based relied on Justice White's position in dissent in Barnes that a ban of this type necessarily has the purpose of suppressing the erotic message of the dance. That view was rejected by a majority of the Court in Barnes, and is here rejected again. Pap's argument that the ordinance is "aimed" at suppressing expression through a ban on nude dancing is really an argument that Erie also had an illicit motive in enacting the ordinance. However, this Court will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit motive. O'Brien, supra, at 382–383, 88 S.Ct. 1673. Even if Erie's public nudity ban has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, the dancers at Kandyland and other such establishments are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings. Any effect on the overall expression is therefore de minimis. If States are to be able to regulate secondary effects, then such de minimis intrusions on *1386 expression cannot be sufficient to render the ordinance content based. See, e.g., Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 299, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221. Thus, Erie's ordinance is valid if it satisfies the O'Brien test. Pp. 1391–1395.

2. Erie's ordinance satisfies O'Brien's four-factor test. First, the ordinance is within Erie's constitutional power to enact because the city's efforts to protect public health and safety are clearly within its police powers. Second, the ordinance furthers the important government interests of regulating conduct through a public nudity ban and of combating the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing. In terms of demonstrating that such secondary effects pose a threat, the city need not conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as the evidence relied on is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem addressed. Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. Erie could reasonably 280 rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in Renton and Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, to the effect that secondary effects are caused by the presence of even one adult entertainment establishment in a given neighborhood. See Renton, supra, at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. In fact, Erie expressly relied on Barnes and its discussion of secondary effects, including its reference to Renton and American Mini Theatres. The evidentiary standard described in Renton controls here, and Erie meets that standard. In any event, the ordinance's preamble also relies on the city council's express findings that "certain lewd, immoral activities carried on in public places for profit are highly detrimental to the public health, safety and welfare ...." The council members, familiar with commercial downtown Erie, are the individuals who would likely have had first-hand knowledge of what took place at, and around, nude dancing establishments there, and can make particularized, expert judgments about the resulting harmful secondary effects. Cf., e.g., FCC v. National Citizens Comm. for Broadcasting, 436 U.S. 775, 98 S.Ct. 2096, 56 L.Ed.2d 697. The fact that this sort of leeway is appropriate in this case, which involves a content-neutral restriction that regulates conduct, says nothing whatsoever about its appropriateness in a case involving actual regulation of First Amendment expression. Also, although requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings may not greatly reduce these secondary effects, O'Brien requires only that the regulation further the interest in combating such effects. The ordinance also satisfies O'Brien's third factor, that the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, as discussed supra. The fourth O'Brien factor—that the restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest—is satisfied as well. The ordinance regulates conduct, and any incidental impact on the expressive element of nude dancing is de minimis. The pasties and G-string requirement is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message. See, e.g., Barnes, 501 U.S., at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Pp. 1395–1398.

Justice SCALIA, joined by Justice THOMAS, agreed that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's decision must be reversed, but disagreed with the mode of analysis that should be applied. Erie self-consciously modeled its ordinance on the public nudity statute upheld in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504, calculating (one would have supposed reasonably) that the Pennsylvania courts would consider themselves bound by this Court's judgment on a question of federal constitutional law. That statute was constitutional not because it survived some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny, but because, as a 1387 general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it was not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all. Id., at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SCALIA, J., concurring in *281 judgment). Erie's ordinance, too, by its terms prohibits not merely nude dancing, but the act—irrespective of whether it is engaged in for expressive purposes—of going nude in public. The facts that the preamble explains the ordinance's purpose, in part, as limiting a recent increase in nude live entertainment, that city councilmembers in supporting the ordinance commented to that effect, and that the ordinance includes in the definition of nudity the exposure of devices simulating that condition, neither make the law any less general in its reach nor demonstrate that what the municipal authorities really find objectionable is expression rather than public nakedness. That the city made no effort to enforce the ordinance against a production of Equus involving nudity that was being staged in Erie at the time the ordinance became effective does not render the ordinance discriminatory on its face. The assertion of the city's counsel in the trial court that the ordinance would not cover theatrical productions to the extent their expressive activity rose to a higher level of protected expression simply meant that the ordinance would not be enforceable against such productions if the Constitution forbade it. That limitation does not cause the ordinance to be not generally applicable, in the relevant sense of being targeted against expressive conduct. Moreover, even if it could be concluded that Erie specifically singled out the activity of nude dancing, the ordinance still would not violate the First Amendment unless it could be proved (as on this record it could not) that it was the communicative character of nude dancing that prompted the ban. See id., at 577, 111 S.Ct. 2456. There is no need to identify "secondary effects" associated with nude dancing that Erie could properly seek to eliminate. The traditional power of government to foster good morals, and the acceptability of the traditional judgment that nude public dancing itself is immoral, have not been repealed by the First Amendment. Pp. 1400–1402.

O'CONNOR, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I and II, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and KENNEDY, SOUTER, and BREYER, JJ., joined, and an opinion with respect to Parts III and IV, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and KENNEDY and BREYER, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which THOMAS, J., joined, post, p. 1398. SOUTER, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, post, p. 1402. STEVENS, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which GINSBURG, J., joined, post, p. 1406.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Gregory A. Karle, Erie, PA, for petitioners.

*282 John H. Weston, Los Angeles, CA, for respondent.

Opinion

Justice O'CONNOR announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I and II, and an opinion with respect to Parts III and IV, in which THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice KENNEDY, and Justice BREYER join.

The city of Erie, Pennsylvania, enacted an ordinance banning public nudity. Respondent Pap's A.M. (hereinafter *283 Pap's), which operated a nude dancing establishment in Erie, challenged the constitutionality of the ordinance and sought a permanent injunction against its enforcement. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court, although noting that this Court in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), had upheld an Indiana ordinance that was "strikingly 1388 similar" to Erie's, found that the public nudity sections of the ordinance violated respondent's right to freedom of expression under the United States Constitution. 553 Pa. 348, 356, 719 A.2d 273, 277 (1998). This case raises the question whether the Pennsylvania Supreme Court properly evaluated the ordinance's constitutionality under the First Amendment. We hold that Erie's ordinance is a content-neutral regulation that satisfies the four-part test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Accordingly, we reverse the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and remand for the consideration of any remaining issues.

I

On September 28, 1994, the city council for the city of Erie, Pennsylvania, enacted Ordinance 75–1994, a public indecency ordinance that makes it a summary offense to knowingly or intentionally appear in public in a "state of nudity." [*] 284 Respondent Pap's, a Pennsylvania corporation, operated an establishment in Erie known as "Kandyland" that featured totally nude erotic dancing performed by women. To comply with the ordinance, these dancers must wear, at a minimum, "pasties" and a "G-string." On October 14, 1994, two days after the ordinance went into effect, Pap's filed a complaint against the city of Erie, the mayor of the city, and members of the city council, seeking declaratory relief and a permanent injunction against the enforcement of the ordinance.

[*] Ordinance 75–1994, codified as Article 711 of the Codified Ordinances of the city of Erie, provides in relevant part:

"1. A person who knowingly or intentionally, in a public place:

"a. engages in sexual intercourse

"b. engages in deviate sexual intercourse as defined by the Pennsylvania Crimes Code

"c. appears in a state of nudity, or

"d. fondles the genitals of himself, herself or another person commits Public Indecency, a Summary Offense.

"2. "Nudity" means the showing of the human male or female genital [sic], pubic area or buttocks with less than a fully opaque covering; the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple; the exposure of any device, costume, or covering which gives the appearance of or simulates the genitals, pubic hair, natal cleft, perineum anal region or pubic hair region; or the exposure of any device worn as a cover over the nipples and/or areola of the female breast, which device simulates and gives the realistic appearance of nipples and/or areola.

"3. "Public Place" includes all outdoor places owned by or open to the general public, and all buildings and enclosed places owned by or open to the general public, including such places of entertainment, taverns, restaurants, clubs, theaters, dance halls, banquet halls, party rooms or halls limited to specific members, restricted to adults or to patrons invited to attend, whether or not an admission charge is levied.

"4. The prohibition set forth in subsection 1(c) shall not apply to:

"a. Any child under ten (10) years of age; or

"b. Any individual exposing a breast in the process of breastfeeding an infant under two (2) years of age."

The Court of Common Pleas of Erie County granted the permanent injunction and struck down the ordinance as unconstitutional. Civ. No. 60059–1994 (Jan. 18, 1995), Pet. for Cert. 40a. On cross appeals, the Commonwealth Court reversed the trial court's order. 674 A.2d 338 (1996).

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court granted review and reversed, concluding that the public nudity provisions of the ordinance violated respondent's rights to freedom of expression as protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. 553 Pa. 348, 719 A.2d 273 (1998). The Pennsylvania court first inquired whether nude dancing constitutes expressive conduct that is within the protection of the First Amendment. The court noted that the act of being nude, in and of 285 itself, is not entitled to First Amendment protection because it conveys no message. Id., at 354, 719 A.2d, at 276. Nude dancing, however, is expressive conduct that is entitled to some quantum of protection under the *1389 First Amendment, a view that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court noted was endorsed by eight Members of this Court in Barnes. 553 Pa., at 354, 719 A.2d, at 276.

The Pennsylvania court next inquired whether the government interest in enacting the ordinance was content neutral, explaining that regulations that are unrelated to the suppression of expression are not subject to strict scrutiny but to the less stringent standard of United States v. O'Brien, supra, at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. To answer the question whether the ordinance is content based, the court turned to our decision in Barnes. 553 Pa., at 355–356, 719 A.2d, at 277. Although the Pennsylvania court noted that the Indiana statute at issue in Barnes "is strikingly similar to the Ordinance we are examining," it concluded that "[u]nfortunately for our purposes, the Barnes Court splintered and produced four separate, non-harmonious opinions." 553 Pa., at 356, 719 A.2d, at 277. After canvassing these separate opinions, the Pennsylvania court concluded that, although it is permissible to find precedential effect in a fragmented decision, to do so a majority of the Court must have been in agreement on the concept that is deemed to be the holding. See Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977). The Pennsylvania court noted that "aside from the agreement by a majority of the Barnes Court that nude dancing is entitled to some First Amendment protection, we can find no point on which a majority of the Barnes Court agreed." 553 Pa., at 358, 719 A.2d, at 278. Accordingly, the court concluded that "no clear precedent arises out of Barnes on the issue of whether the [Erie] ordinance ... passes muster under the First Amendment." Ibid.

Having determined that there was no United States Supreme Court precedent on point, the Pennsylvania court 286 conducted an independent examination of the ordinance to ascertain whether it was related to the suppression of expression. The court concluded that although one of the purposes of the ordinance was to combat negative secondary effects, "[i]nextricably bound up with this stated purpose is an unmentioned purpose ... to impact negatively on the erotic message of the dance." Id., at 359, 719 A.2d, at 279. As such, the court determined the ordinance was content based and subject to strict scrutiny. The ordinance failed the narrow tailoring requirement of strict scrutiny because the court found that imposing criminal and civil sanctions on those who commit sex crimes would be a far narrower means of combating secondary effects than the requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings. Id., at 361–362, 719 A.2d, at 280.

Concluding that the ordinance unconstitutionally burdened respondent's expressive conduct, the Pennsylvania court then determined that, under Pennsylvania law, the public nudity provisions of the ordinance could be severed rather than striking the ordinance in its entirety. Accordingly, the court severed §§ 1(c) and 2 from the ordinance and reversed the order of the Commonwealth Court. Id., at 363–364, 719 A.2d, at 281. Because the court determined that the public nudity provisions of the ordinance violated Pap's right to freedom of expression under the United States Constitution, it did not address the constitutionality of the ordinance under the Pennsylvania Constitution or the claim that the ordinance is unconstitutionally overbroad. Ibid.

In a separate concurrence, two justices of the Pennsylvania court noted that, because this Court upheld a virtually identical statute in Barnes, the ordinance should have been upheld under the United States Constitution. 553 Pa., at 364, 719 A.2d, at 281. They reached the same result as the majority, however, because they would have held that the public nudity sections of the ordinance violate the Pennsylvania Constitution. Id., at 370, 719 A.2d, at 284.

287 The city of Erie petitioned for a writ of certiorari, which we granted. *1390 526 U.S. 1111, 119 S.Ct. 1753, 143 L.Ed.2d 786 (1999). Shortly thereafter, Pap's filed a motion to dismiss the case as moot, noting that Kandyland was no longer operating as a nude dancing club, and Pap's was not operating a nude dancing club at any other location. Respondent's Motion to Dismiss as Moot 1. We denied the motion. 527 U.S. 1034, 119 S.Ct. 2391, 144 L.Ed.2d 792 (1999).

II

[1] As a preliminary matter, we must address the justiciability question. " '[A] case is moot when the issues presented are no longer "live" or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome.' " County of Los Angeles v. Davis, 440 U.S. 625, 631, 99 S.Ct. 1379, 59 L.Ed.2d 642 (1979) (quoting Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 496, 89 S.Ct. 1944, 23 L.Ed.2d 491 (1969)). The underlying concern is that, when the challenged conduct ceases such that " 'there is no reasonable expectation that the wrong will be repeated,' " United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 633, 73 S.Ct. 894, 97 L.Ed. 1303 (1953), then it becomes impossible for the court to grant " 'any effectual relief whatever' to [the] prevailing party," Church of Scientology of Cal. v. United States, 506 U.S. 9, 12, 113 S.Ct. 447, 121 L.Ed.2d 313 (1992) (quoting Mills v. Green, 159 U.S. 651, 653, 16 S.Ct. 132, 40 L.Ed. 293 (1895)). In that case, any opinion as to the legality of the challenged action would be advisory.

[2] Here, Pap's submitted an affidavit stating that it had "ceased to operate a nude dancing establishment in Erie." Status Report Re Potential Issue of Mootness 1 (Sept. 8, 1999). Pap's asserts that the case is therefore moot because "[t]he outcome of this case will have no effect upon Respondent." Respondent's Motion to Dismiss as Moot 1. Simply closing Kandyland is not sufficient to render this case moot, however. Pap's is still incorporated under Pennsylvania law, and it could again decide to operate a nude dancing establishment in Erie. See Petitioner's Brief in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 3. Justice SCALIA differs with our assessment as to the likelihood that Pap's may resume its nude dancing 288 operation. Several Members of this Court can attest, however, that the "advanced age" of Pap's owner (72) does not make it "absolutely clear" that a life of quiet retirement is his only reasonable expectation. Cf. Friends of Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Environmental Services (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 120 S.Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000). Moreover, our appraisal of Pap's affidavit is influenced by Pap's failure, despite its obligation to the Court, to mention a word about the potential mootness issue in its brief in opposition to the petition for writ of certiorari, which was filed in April 1999, even though, as Justice SCALIA points out, Kandyland was closed and that property sold in 1998. See Board of License Comm'rs of Tiverton v. Pastore, 469 U.S. 238, 240, 105 S.Ct. 685, 83 L.Ed.2d 618 (1985) (per curiam). Pap's only raised the issue after this Court granted certiorari.

In any event, this is not a run of the mill voluntary cessation case. Here it is the plaintiff who, having prevailed below, now seeks to have the case declared moot. And it is the city of Erie that seeks to invoke the federal judicial power to obtain this Court's review of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision. Cf. ASARCO Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 617–618, 109 S.Ct. 2037, 104 L.Ed.2d 696 (1989). The city has an ongoing injury because it is barred from enforcing the public nudity provisions of its ordinance. If the challenged ordinance is found constitutional, then Erie can enforce it, and the availability of such relief is sufficient to prevent the case from being moot. See Church of Scientology of Cal. v. United States, supra, at 13, 113 S.Ct. 447. And Pap's still has a concrete stake in the outcome of this case because, to the extent Pap's has an interest in resuming operations, it has an interest in preserving the judgment of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Our interest in preventing litigants from attempting *1391 to manipulate the Court's jurisdiction to insulate a favorable decision from review further counsels against a finding of mootness here. See United States v. W. T. Grant Co., supra, at 632, 73 S.Ct. 894; cf. 289 Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 74, 117 S.Ct. 1055, 137 L.Ed.2d 170 (1997). Although the issue is close, we conclude that the case is not moot, and we turn to the merits.

III

[3] Being "in a state of nudity" is not an inherently expressive condition. As we explained in Barnes, however, nude dancing of the type at issue here is expressive conduct, although we think that it falls only within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection. See Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S., at 565–566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion); Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981).

[4] To determine what level of scrutiny applies to the ordinance at issue here, we must decide "whether the State's regulation is related to the suppression of expression." Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989); see also United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. If the governmental purpose in enacting the regulation is unrelated to the suppression of expression, then the regulation need only satisfy the "less stringent" standard from O'Brien for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech. Texas v. Johnson, supra, at 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533; United States v. O'Brien, supra, at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. If the government interest is related to the content of the expression, however, then the regulation falls outside the scope of the O'Brien test and must be justified under a more demanding standard. Texas v. Johnson, supra, at 403, 109 S.Ct. 2533.

[5] In Barnes, we analyzed an almost identical statute, holding that Indiana's public nudity ban did not violate the First Amendment, although no five Members of the Court agreed on a single rationale for that conclusion. We now clarify that government restrictions on public nudity such as the ordinance at issue here should be evaluated under the framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech.

The city of Erie argues that the ordinance is a content-neutral restriction that is reviewable under O'Brien because the ordinance bans conduct, not speech; specifically, public 290 nudity. Respondent counters that the ordinance targets nude dancing and, as such, is aimed specifically at suppressing expression, making the ordinance a content-based restriction that must be subjected to strict scrutiny.

[6] The ordinance here, like the statute in Barnes, is on its face a general prohibition on public nudity. 553 Pa., at 354, 719 A.2d, at 277. By its terms, the ordinance regulates conduct alone. It does not target nudity that contains an erotic message; rather, it bans all public nudity, regardless of whether that nudity is accompanied by expressive activity. And like the statute in Barnes, the Erie ordinance replaces and updates provisions of an "Indecency and Immorality" ordinance that has been on the books since 1866, predating the prevalence of nude dancing establishments such as Kandyland. Pet. for Cert.

7a; see Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., supra, at 568, 111 S.Ct. 2456.

Respondent and Justice STEVENS contend nonetheless that the ordinance is related to the suppression of expression because language in the ordinance's preamble suggests that its actual purpose is to prohibit erotic dancing of the type performed at Kandyland. Post, at 1406 (dissenting opinion). That is not how the Pennsylvania Supreme Court interpreted that language, however. In the preamble to the ordinance, the city council stated that it was adopting the regulation

> " 'for the purpose of limiting a recent increase in nude live entertainment within the City, which activity adversely *1392 impacts and threatens to impact on the public health, safety and welfare by providing an atmosphere conducive to violence, sexual harassment, public intoxication, prostitution, the spread of sexually transmitted diseases and other deleterious effects.' " 553 Pa., at 359, 719 A.2d, at 279.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court construed this language to mean that one purpose of the ordinance was "to combat negative secondary effects." Ibid.

291 As Justice SOUTER noted in Barnes, "on its face, the governmental interest in combating prostitution and other criminal activity is not at all inherently related to expression." 501 U.S., at 585, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (opinion concurring in judgment). In that sense, this case is similar to O'Brien. O'Brien burned his draft registration card as a public statement of his antiwar views, and he was convicted under a statute making it a crime to knowingly mutilate or destroy such a card. This Court rejected his claim that the statute violated his First Amendment rights, reasoning that the law punished him for the "noncommunicative impact of his conduct, and for nothing else." 391 U.S., at 382, 88 S.Ct. 1673. In other words, the Government regulation prohibiting the destruction of draft cards was aimed at maintaining the integrity of the Selective Service System and not at suppressing the message of draft resistance that O'Brien sought to convey by burning his draft card. So too here, the ordinance prohibiting public nudity is aimed at combating crime and other negative secondary effects caused by the presence of adult entertainment establishments like Kandyland and not at suppressing the erotic message conveyed by this type of nude dancing. Put another way, the ordinance does not attempt to regulate the primary effects of the expression, i.e., the effect on the audience of watching nude erotic dancing, but rather the secondary effects, such as the impacts on public health, safety, and welfare, which we have previously recognized are "caused by the presence of even one such" establishment. Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47–48, 50, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); see also Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 321, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988).

Although the Pennsylvania Supreme Court acknowledged that one goal of the ordinance was to combat the negative secondary effects associated with nude dancing establishments, the court concluded that the ordinance was nevertheless content based, relying on Justice White's position in dissent in Barnes for the proposition that a ban of this type necessarily has the purpose of suppressing the erotic message 292 of the dance. Because the Pennsylvania court agreed with Justice White's approach, it concluded that the ordinance must have another, "unmentioned" purpose related to the suppression of expression. 553 Pa., at 359, 719 A.2d, at 279. That is, the Pennsylvania court adopted the dissent's view in Barnes that " '[s]ince the State permits the dancers to perform if they wear pasties and G—strings but forbids nude dancing, it is precisely because of the distinctive, expressive content of the nude dancing performances at issue in this case that the State seeks to apply the statutory prohibition.' " 553 Pa., at 359, 719 A.2d, at 279 (quoting Barnes, supra, at 592, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (White, J., dissenting)). A majority of the Court rejected that view in Barnes, and we do so again here.

[7] Respondent's argument that the ordinance is "aimed" at suppressing expression through a ban on nude dancing —an argument that respondent supports by pointing to statements by the city attorney that the public nudity ban was not intended to apply to "legitimate" theater productions—is really an argument that the city council also had an illicit motive in enacting the ordinance. As we have said before, however, this Court will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit motive. O'Brien, supra, at 382–383, 88 S.Ct. 1673; *1393 Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., supra, at 47–48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (that the "predominate" purpose of the statute was to control secondary effects was "more than adequate to establish" that the city's interest was unrelated to the suppression of expression). In light of the Pennsylvania court's determination that one purpose of the ordinance is to combat harmful secondary effects, the ban on public nudity here is no different from the ban on burning draft registration cards in O'Brien, where the Government sought to prevent the means of the expression and not the expression of antiwar sentiment itself.

Justice STEVENS argues that the ordinance enacts a complete ban on expression. We respectfully disagree with that characterization. The public nudity ban certainly has 293 the effect of limiting one particular means of expressing the kind of erotic message being disseminated at Kandyland. But simply to define what is being banned as the "message" is to assume the conclusion. We did not analyze the regulation in O'Brien as having enacted a total ban on expression. Instead, the Court recognized that the regulation against destroying one's draft card was justified by the Government's interest in preventing the harmful "secondary effects" of that conduct (disruption to the Selective Service System), even though that regulation may have some incidental effect on the expressive element of the conduct. Because this justification was unrelated to the suppression of O'Brien's antiwar message, the regulation was content neutral. Although there may be cases in which banning the means of expression so interferes with the message that it essentially bans the message, that is not the case here.

Even if we had not already rejected the view that a ban on public nudity is necessarily related to the suppression of the erotic message of nude dancing, we would do so now because the premise of such a view is flawed. The State's interest in preventing harmful secondary effects is not related to the suppression of expression. In trying to control the secondary effects of nude dancing, the ordinance seeks to deter crime and the other deleterious effects caused by the presence of such an establishment in the neighborhood. See Renton, supra, at 50–51, 106 S.Ct. 925. In Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984), we held that a National Park Service regulation prohibiting camping in certain parks did not violate the First Amendment when applied to prohibit demonstrators from sleeping in Lafayette Park and the Mall in Washington, D.C., in connection with a demonstration intended to call attention to the plight of the homeless. Assuming, arguendo, that sleeping can be expressive conduct, the Court concluded that the Government interest in conserving park property was unrelated to the demonstrators' message about homelessness. Id., at 299, 104 S.Ct. 3065. 294 So, while the demonstrators were allowed to erect "symbolic tent cities," they were not allowed to sleep overnight in those tents. Even though the regulation may have directly limited the expressive element involved in actually sleeping in the park, the regulation was nonetheless content neutral.

Similarly, even if Erie's public nudity ban has some minimal effect on the erotic message by muting that portion of the expression that occurs when the last stitch is dropped, the dancers at Kandyland and other such establishments are free to perform wearing pasties and G-strings. Any effect on the overall expression is de minimis. And as Justice STEVENS eloquently stated for the plurality in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), "even though we recognize that the First Amendment will not tolerate the total suppression of erotic materials that have some arguably artistic value, it is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the *1394 interest in untrammeled political debate," and "few of us would march our sons and daughters off to war to preserve the citizen's right to see" specified anatomical areas exhibited at establishments like Kandyland. If States are to be able to regulate secondary effects, then de minimis intrusions on expression such as those at issue here cannot be sufficient to render the ordinance content based. See Clark v. Community for Creative Non—Violence, supra, at 299, 104 S.Ct. 3065; Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) (even if regulation has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others, the regulation is content neutral if it can be justified without reference to the content of the expression).

This case is, in fact, similar to O'Brien, Community for Creative Non—Violence, and Ward. The justification for the government regulation in each case prevents harmful "secondary" effects that are unrelated to the suppression of expression. See, e.g., Ward v. Rock Against Racism, supra, at 791–792, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (noting that "[t]he principal justification for the 295 sound-amplification guideline is the city's desire to control noise levels at bandshell events, in order to retain the character of the [adjacent] Sheep Meadow and its more sedate activities," and citing Renton for the proposition that "[a] regulation that serves purposes unrelated to the content of expression is deemed neutral, even if it has an incidental effect on some speakers or messages but not others"). While the doctrinal theories behind "incidental burdens" and "secondary effects" are, of course, not identical, there is nothing objectionable about a city passing a general ordinance to ban public nudity (even though such a ban may place incidental burdens on some protected speech) and at the same time recognizing that one specific occurrence of public nudity—nude erotic dancing—is particularly problematic because it produces harmful secondary effects.

Justice STEVENS claims that today we "[f]or the first time" extend Renton's secondary effects doctrine to justify restrictions other than the location of a commercial enterprise. Post, at 1406 (dissenting opinion). Our reliance on Renton to justify other restrictions is not new, however. In Ward, the Court relied on Renton to evaluate restrictions on sound amplification at an outdoor bandshell, rejecting the dissent's contention that Renton was inapplicable. See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, supra, at 804, n. 1, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (Marshall, J., dissenting) ("Today, for the first time, a majority of the Court applies Renton analysis to a category of speech far afield from that decision's original limited focus"). Moreover, Erie's ordinance does not effect a "total ban" on protected expression. Post, at 1407.

In Renton, the regulation explicitly treated "adult" movie theaters differently from other theaters, and defined "adult" theaters solely by reference to the content of their movies. 475 U.S., at 44, 106 S.Ct. 925. We nonetheless treated the zoning regulation as content neutral because the ordinance was aimed at the secondary effects of adult theaters, a justification unrelated to the content of the adult movies themselves. 296 Id., at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925. Here, Erie's ordinance is on its face a content-neutral restriction on conduct. Even if the city thought that nude dancing at clubs like Kandyland constituted a particularly problematic instance of public nudity, the regulation is still properly evaluated as a content-neutral restriction because the interest in combating the secondary effects associated with those clubs is unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing.

We conclude that Erie's asserted interest in combating the negative secondary effects associated with adult entertainment establishments like Kandyland is unrelated to the suppression of the erotic message conveyed by nude dancing. The ordinance prohibiting public nudity is therefore valid *1395 if it satisfies the four-factor test from O'Brien for evaluating restrictions on symbolic speech.

IV

[8] [9] [10] [11] Applying that standard here, we conclude that Erie's ordinance is justified under O'Brien. The first factor of the O'Brien test is whether the government regulation is within the constitutional power of the government to enact. Here, Erie's efforts to protect public health and safety are clearly within the city's police powers. The second factor is whether the regulation furthers an important or substantial government interest. The asserted interests of regulating conduct through a public nudity ban and of combating the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing are undeniably important. And in terms of demonstrating that such secondary effects pose a threat, the city need not "conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities" to demonstrate the problem of secondary effects, "so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., supra, at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Because the nude dancing at Kandyland is of the same character as the adult entertainment 297 at issue in Renton, Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), it was reasonable for Erie to conclude that such nude dancing was likely to produce the same secondary effects. And Erie could reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in Renton and American Mini Theatres to the effect that secondary effects are caused by the presence of even one adult entertainment establishment in a given neighborhood. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., supra, at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (indicating that reliance on a judicial opinion that describes the evidentiary basis is sufficient). In fact, Erie expressly relied on Barnes and its discussion of secondary effects, including its reference to Renton and American Mini Theatres. Even in cases addressing regulations that strike closer to the core of First Amendment values, we have accepted a state or local government's reasonable belief that the experience of other jurisdictions is relevant to the problem it is addressing. See Nixon v. Shrink

Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 393, n. 6, 120 S.Ct. 897, 145 L.Ed.2d 886 (2000) Regardless of whether Justice SOUTER now wishes to disavow his opinion in Barnes on this point, see post, at 1406 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part), the evidentiary standard described in Renton controls here, and Erie meets that standard.

[12] In any event, Erie also relied on its own findings. The preamble to the ordinance states that "the Council of the City of Erie has, at various times over more than a century, expressed its findings that certain lewd, immoral activities carried on in public places for profit are highly detrimental to the public health, safety and welfare, and lead to the debasement of both women and men, promote violence, public intoxication, prostitution and other serious criminal activity." Pet. for Cert. 6a (emphasis added). The city council members, familiar with commercial downtown Erie, are the individuals who would likely have had firsthand knowledge of what took place at and around nude dancing establishments 298 in Erie, and can make particularized, expert judgments about the resulting harmful secondary effects. Analogizing to the administrative agency context, it is well established that, as long as a party has an opportunity to respond, an administrative agency may take official notice of such "legislative facts" within its special knowledge, and is not confined to the evidence in the record in reaching its expert judgment. See FCC v. National Citizens Comm. for Broadcasting, 436 U.S. 775, 98 S.Ct. 2096, 56 L.Ed.2d 697 (1978); Republic Aviation *1396 Corp. v. NLRB, 324 U.S. 793, 65 S.Ct. 982, 89 L.Ed. 1372 (1945); 2 K. Davis & R. Pierce, Administrative Law Treatise § 10.6 (3d ed.1994). Here, Kandyland has had ample opportunity to contest the council's findings about secondary effects—before the council itself, throughout the state proceedings, and before this Court. Yet to this day, Kandyland has never challenged the city council's findings or cast any specific doubt on the validity of those findings. Instead, it has simply asserted that the council's evidentiary proof was lacking. In the absence of any reason to doubt it, the city's expert judgment should be credited. And the study relied on by amicus curiae does not cast any legitimate doubt on the Erie city council's judgment about Erie. See Brief for First Amendment Lawyers Association as Amicus Curiae 16–23.

Finally, it is worth repeating that Erie's ordinance is on its face a content-neutral restriction that regulates conduct, not First Amendment expression. And the government should have sufficient leeway to justify such a law based on secondary effects. On this point, O'Brien is especially instructive. The Court there did not require evidence that the integrity of the Selective Service System would be jeopardized by the knowing destruction or mutilation of draft cards. It simply reviewed the Government's various administrative interests in issuing the cards, and then concluded that "Congress has a legitimate and substantial interest in preventing their wanton and unrestrained destruction and assuring their continuing availability by punishing people 299 who knowingly and willfully destroy or mutilate them." 391 U.S., at 378–380, 88 S.Ct. 1673. There was no study documenting instances of draft card mutilation or the actual effect of such mutilation on the Government's asserted efficiency interests. But the Court permitted Congress to take official notice, as it were, that draft card destruction would jeopardize the system. The fact that this sort of leeway is appropriate in a case involving conduct says nothing whatsoever about its appropriateness in a case involving actual regulation of First Amendment expression. As we have said, so long as the regulation is unrelated to the suppression of expression, "[t]he government generally has a freer hand in restricting expressive conduct than it has in restricting the written or spoken word." Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S., at 406, 109 S.Ct. 2533. See, e.g., United States v. O'Brien, supra, at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673; United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985) (finding sufficient the Government's assertion that those who had previously been barred from entering the military installation pose a threat to the security of that installation); Clark v. Community for Creative Non—Violence, 468 U.S., at 299, 104 S.Ct. 3065 (finding sufficient the Government's assertion that camping overnight in the park poses a threat to park property).

Justice SOUTER, however, would require Erie to develop a specific evidentiary record supporting its ordinance. Post, at 1405–1406 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part). Justice SOUTER agrees that Erie's interest in combating the negative secondary effects associated with nude dancing establishments is a legitimate government interest unrelated to the suppression of expression, and he agrees that the ordinance should therefore be evaluated under O'Brien. O'Brien, of course, required no evidentiary showing at all that the threatened harm was real. But that case is different, Justice SOUTER contends, because in O'Brien "there could be no doubt" that a regulation prohibiting the destruction of draft cards would alleviate the harmful secondary effects 300 flowing from the destruction of those cards. Post, at 1402–1403, n. 1.

But whether the harm is evident to our "intuition," ibid., is not the proper inquiry. If it were, we would simply say there is no doubt that a regulation prohibiting public nudity would alleviate the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing. In any event, Justice SOUTER conflates *1397 two distinct concepts under O'Brien: whether there is a substantial government interest and whether the regulation furthers that interest. As to the government interest, i.e., whether the threatened harm is real, the city council relied on this Court's opinions detailing the harmful secondary effects caused by establishments like Kandyland, as well as on its own experiences in Erie. Justice SOUTER attempts to denigrate the city council's conclusion that the threatened harm was real, arguing that we cannot accept Erie's findings because the subject of nude dancing is "fraught with some emotionalism," post, at 1404. Yet surely the subject of drafting our citizens into the military is "fraught" with more emotionalism than the subject of regulating nude dancing. Ibid. Justice SOUTER next hypothesizes that the reason we cannot accept Erie's conclusion is that, since the question whether these secondary effects occur is "amenable to empirical treatment," we should ignore Erie's actual experience and instead require such an empirical analysis. Post, at 1404, n. 3 (referring to a "scientifically sound" study offered by an amicus curiae to show that nude dancing establishments do not cause secondary effects). In Nixon, however, we flatly rejected that idea. 528 U.S., at 394, 120 S.Ct. 897 (noting that the "invocation of academic studies said to indicate" that the threatened harms are not real is insufficient to cast doubt on the experience of the local government).

As to the second point—whether the regulation furthers the government interest—it is evident that, since crime and other public health and safety problems are caused by the presence of nude dancing establishments like Kandyland, a 301 ban on such nude dancing would further Erie's interest in preventing such secondary effects. To be sure, requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings may not greatly reduce these secondary effects, but O'Brien requires only that the regulation further the interest in combating such effects. Even though the dissent questions the wisdom of Erie's chosen remedy, post, at 1409 (opinion of STEVENS, J.), the " 'city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems,' " Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S., at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (plurality opinion)). It also may be true that a pasties and G-string requirement would not be as effective as, for example, a requirement that the dancers be fully clothed, but the city must balance its efforts to address the problem with the requirement that the restriction be no greater than necessary to further the city's interest.

The ordinance also satisfies O'Brien's third factor, that the government interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, as discussed supra, at 1390–1395. The fourth and final O'Brien factor—that the restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest—is satisfied as well. The ordinance regulates conduct, and any incidental impact on the expressive element of nude dancing is de minimis. The requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message. See Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S., at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion of REHNQUIST, C. J., joined by O'CONNOR and KENNEDY, JJ.); id., at 587, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SOUTER, J., concurring in judgment). Justice SOUTER points out that zoning is an alternative means of addressing this problem. It is far from clear, however, that zoning imposes less of a burden on expression than the minimal requirement implemented here. In any event, since this is a content-neutral restriction, least restrictive 302 means analysis is not required. See Ward, 491 U.S., at 798–799, n. 6, 109 S.Ct. 2746.

*1398 We hold, therefore, that Erie's ordinance is a content-neutral regulation that is valid under O'Brien. Accordingly, the judgment of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings.

It is so ordered.

Justice SCALIA, with whom Justice THOMAS joins, concurring in the judgment.

I

In my view, the case before us here is moot. The Court concludes that it is not because respondent could resume its nude dancing operations in the future, and because petitioners have suffered an ongoing, redressable harm consisting of the state court's invalidation of their public nudity ordinance.

As to the first point: Petitioners do not dispute that Kandyland no longer exists; the building in which it was located has been sold to a real estate developer, and the premises are currently being used as a comedy club. We have a sworn affidavit from respondent's sole shareholder, Nick Panos, to the effect that Pap's "operates no active business," and is "a 'shell' corporation." More to the point, Panos swears that neither Pap's nor Panos "employ[s] any individuals involved in the nude dancing business," "maintain[s] any contacts in the adult entertainment business," "has any current interest in any establishment providing nude dancing," or "has any intention to own or operate a nude dancing establishment in the future." [1] App. to Reply to Brief in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 7–8.

[1] Curiously, the Court makes no mention of Panos' averment of no intention to operate a nude dancing establishment in the future, but discusses the issue as though the only factor suggesting mootness is the closing of Kandyland. Ante, at 1390. I see no basis for ignoring this averment. The only fact mentioned by the Court to justify regarding it as perjurious is that respondent failed to raise mootness in its brief in opposition to the petition for certiorari. That may be good basis for censure, but it is scant basis for suspicion of perjury—particularly since respondent, far from seeking to "insulate a favorable decision from review," ante, at 1391, asks us in light of the mootness to vacate the judgment below. Reply to Brief in Opposition to Motion to Dismiss 5.

303 Petitioners do not contest these representations, but offer in response only that Pap's could very easily get back into the nude dancing business. The Court adopts petitioners' line, concluding that because respondent is still incorporated in Pennsylvania, it "could again decide to operate a nude dancing establishment in Erie." Ante, at 1390. That plainly does not suffice under our cases. The test for mootness we have applied in voluntary-termination cases is not whether the action originally giving rise to the controversy could not conceivably reoccur, but whether it is "absolutely clear that the ... behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur." United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., Inc., 393 U.S. 199, 203, 89 S.Ct. 361, 21 L.Ed.2d 344 (1968) (emphasis added). Here I think that test is met. According to Panos' uncontested sworn affidavit, Pap's ceased doing business at Kandyland, and the premises were sold to an independent developer, in 1998—the year before the petition for certiorari in this case was filed. It strains credulity to suppose that the 72–year–old Mr. Panos shut down his going business after securing his victory in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, and before the city's petition for certiorari was even filed, in order to increase his chances of preserving his judgment in the statistically unlikely event that a (not yet filed) petition might be granted. Given the timing of these events, given the fact that respondent has no existing interest in nude dancing (or in any other business), given Panos' sworn representation that he does not intend to invest *1399 —through Pap's or otherwise—in any nude dancing business, and given Panos' advanced 304 age, [2] it seems to me that there is "no reasonable expectation," even if there remains a theoretical possibility, that Pap's will resume nude dancing operations in the future. [3]

[2] The Court asserts that "[s]everal Members of this Court can attest ... that the 'advanced age' " of 72 "does not make it 'absolutely clear' that a life of quiet retirement is [one's] only reasonable expectation." Ante, at 1390. That is tres gallant, but it misses the point. Now as heretofore, Justices in their seventies continue to do their work competently—indeed, perhaps better than their youthful colleagues because of the wisdom that age imparts. But to respond to my point, what the Court requires is citation of an instance in which a Member of this Court (or of any other court, for that matter) resigned at the age of 72 to begin a new career—or more remarkable still (for this is what the Court suspects the young Mr. Panos is up to) resigned at the age of 72 to go judge on a different court, of no greater stature, and located in Erie, Pennsylvania, rather than Palm Springs. I base my assessment of reasonable expectations not upon Mr. Panos' age alone, but upon that combined with his sale of the business and his assertion, under oath, that he does not intend to enter another.

3 It is significant that none of the assertions of Panos' affidavit is contested. Those pertaining to the sale of Kandyland and the current noninvolvement of Pap's in any other nude dancing establishment would seem readily verifiable by petitioners. The statements regarding Pap's and Panos' intentions for the future are by their nature not verifiable, and it would be reasonable not to credit them if either petitioners asserted some reason to believe they were not true or they were not rendered highly plausible by Panos' age and his past actions. Neither condition exists here.

The situation here is indistinguishable from that which obtained in Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 117 S.Ct. 1055, 137 L.Ed.2d 170 (1997), where the plaintiff-respondent, a state employee who had sued to enjoin enforcement of an amendment to the Arizona Constitution making English that State's official language, had resigned her public-sector employment. We held the case moot and, since the mootness was attributable to the " 'unilateral action of the party who prevailed in the lower court,' " we followed our usual practice of vacating the favorable judgment respondent had obtained in the 305 Court of Appeals. Id., at 72, 117 S.Ct. 1055 (quoting U.S. Bancorp Mortgage Co. v. Bonner Mall Partnership, 513 U.S. 18, 23, 115 S.Ct. 386, 130 L.Ed.2d 233 (1994)).

The rub here is that this case comes to us on writ of certiorari to a state court, so that our lack of jurisdiction over the case also entails, according to our recent jurisprudence, a lack of jurisdiction to direct a vacatur. See ASARCO Inc. v. Kadish, 490 U.S. 605, 621, n. 1, 109 S.Ct. 2037, 104 L.Ed.2d 696 (1989). The consequences of that limitation on our power are in this case significant: A dismissal for mootness caused by respondent's unilateral action would leave petitioners subject to an ongoing legal disability, and a large one at that. Because the Pennsylvania Supreme Court severed the public nudity provision from the ordinance, thus rendering it inoperative, the city would be prevented from enforcing its public nudity prohibition not only against respondent, should it decide to resume operations in the future, and not only against other nude dancing establishments, but against anyone who appears nude in public, regardless of the "expressiveness" of his conduct or his purpose in engaging in it.

That is an unfortunate consequence (which could be avoided, of course, if the Pennsylvania Supreme Court chose to vacate its judgments in cases that become moot during appeal). But it is not a consequence that authorizes us to entertain a suit the Constitution places beyond our power. And leaving in effect erroneous state determinations regarding the Federal Constitution is, after all, not unusual. It would have occurred here, even without the intervening mootness, if we had denied certiorari. And until the 1914 revision of the Judicial Code, it occurred whenever a state court erroneously sustained a federal constitutional challenge, since we did not even have statutory jurisdiction to entertain *1400 an appeal. Compare Judiciary Act of 1789, ch. 20, § 25, 1 Stat. 85–87, with Act of Dec. 23, 1914, ch. 2, 38 Stat. 790. In any event, the short of the matter is that we have no power to suspend the fundamental precepts that federal courts "are limited by the case-or-controversy requirement 306 of Art. III to adjudication of actual disputes between adverse parties," Richardson v. Ramirez, 418 U.S. 24, 36, 94 S.Ct. 2655, 41 L.Ed.2d 551 (1974), and that this limitation applies "at all stages of review," Preiser v. Newkirk, 422 U.S. 395, 401, 95 S.Ct. 2330, 45 L.Ed.2d 272 (1975) (quoting Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 459, n. 10, 94 S.Ct. 1209, 39 L.Ed.2d 505 (1974)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Which brings me to the Court's second reason for holding that this case is still alive: The Court concludes that because petitioners have an "ongoing injury" caused by the state court's invalidation of its duly enacted public nudity provision, our ability to hear the case and reverse the judgment below is itself "sufficient to prevent the case from being moot." Ante, at 1390. Although the Court does not cite any authority for the proposition that the burden of an adverse decision below suffices to keep a case alive, it is evidently relying upon our decision in ASARCO, which held that Article III's standing requirements were satisfied on writ of certiorari to a state court even though there would have been no Article III standing for the action producing the state judgment on which certiorari was sought. We assumed jurisdiction in the case because we concluded that the party seeking to invoke the federal judicial power had standing to challenge the adverse judgment entered against them by the state court. Because that judgment, if left undisturbed, would "caus[e] direct, specific, and concrete injury to the parties who petition for our review," ASARCO, 490 U.S., at 623–624, 109 S.Ct. 2037, and because a decision by this Court to reverse the State Supreme Court would clearly redress that injury, we concluded that the original plaintiffs' lack of standing was not fatal to our jurisdiction, id., at 624, 109 S.Ct. 2037.

I dissented on this point in ASARCO, see id., at 634, 109 S.Ct. 2037 (REHNQUIST, C. J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by SCALIA, J.), and remain of the view that it was incorrectly decided. But ASARCO at least did not purport to hold that the constitutional standing requirements of injury, causation, and redressability may be satisfied solely by 307 reference to the lower court's adverse judgment. It was careful to note—however illogical that might have been, see id., at 635, 109 S.Ct. 2037—that the parties "remain[ed] adverse," and that jurisdiction was proper only so long as the "requisites of a case or controversy are also met," id., at 619, 624, 109 S.Ct. 2037. Today the Court would appear to drop even this fig leaf. [4] In concluding that the injury to Erie is "sufficient" to keep this case alive, the Court performs the neat trick of identifying a "case or controversy" that has only one interested party.

4 I say "appear" because although the Court states categorically that "the availability of ... relief [from the judgment below] is sufficient to prevent the case from being moot," it follows this statement, in the next sentence, with the assertion that Pap's, the state-court plaintiff, retains a "concrete stake in the outcome of this case." Ante, at 1390. Of course, if the latter were true a classic case or controversy existed, and resort to the exotic theory of "standing by virtue of adverse judgment below" was entirely unnecessary.

II

For the reasons set forth above, I would dismiss this case for want of jurisdiction. Because the Court resolves the threshold mootness question differently and proceeds to address the merits, I will do so briefly as well. I agree that the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court must be reversed, but disagree with the mode of analysis the Court has applied.

The city of Erie self-consciously modeled its ordinance on the public nudity *1401 statute we upheld against constitutional challenge in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), calculating (one would have supposed reasonably) that the courts of Pennsylvania would consider themselves bound by our judgment on a question of federal constitutional law. In Barnes, I voted to uphold the challenged Indiana statute "not because it survives some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny, but because, as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it is not 308 subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Id., at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (opinion concurring in judgment). Erie's ordinance, too, by its terms prohibits not merely nude dancing, but the act—irrespective of whether it is engaged in for expressive purposes—of going nude in public. The facts that a preamble to the ordinance explains that its purpose, in part, is to "limi[t] a recent increase in nude live entertainment," App. to Pet. for Cert. 42a, that city councilmembers in supporting the ordinance commented to that effect, see post, at 1412–1413, and n. 16 (STEVENS, J., dissenting), and that the ordinance includes in the definition of nudity the exposure of devices simulating that condition, see post, at 1413, neither make the law any less general in its reach nor demonstrate that what the municipal authorities really find objectionable is expression rather than public nakedness. As far as appears (and as seems overwhelmingly likely), the preamble, the councilmembers' comments, and the chosen definition of the prohibited conduct simply reflect the fact that Erie had recently been having a public nudity problem not with streakers, sunbathers or hot dog vendors, see Barnes, supra, at 574, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment), but with lap dancers.

There is no basis for the contention that the ordinance does not apply to nudity in theatrical productions such as Equus or Hair. Its text contains no such limitation. It was stipulated in the trial court that no effort was made to enforce the ordinance against a production of Equus involving nudity that was being staged in Erie at the time the ordinance became effective. App. 84. Notwithstanding Justice STEVENS' assertion to the contrary, however, see post, at 1411–1412, neither in the stipulation, nor elsewhere in the record, does it appear that the city was aware of the nudity—and before this Court counsel for the city attributed nonenforcement not to a general exception for theatrical productions, but to the fact that no one had complained. Tr. of Oral Arg. 16. One instance of nonenforcement—against a play already in production that prosecutorial discretion might reasonably have 309 "grandfathered"—does not render this ordinance discriminatory on its face. To be sure, in the trial court counsel for the city said that "[t]o the extent that the expressive activity that is contained in [such] productions rises to a higher level of protected expression, they would not be [covered]," App. 53—but he rested this assertion upon the provision in the preamble that expressed respect for "fundamental Constitutional guarantees of free speech and free expression," and the provision of Paragraph 6 of the ordinance that provided for severability of unconstitutional provisions, id., at 53–54. [5] What he was saying there (in order to fend off the overbreadth challenge of respondent, who was in no doubt that the ordinance did cover theatrical productions, see id., at 55) was essentially what he said at oral argument before this Court: that the ordinance would not be enforceable against theatrical productions if the Constitution forbade it. *1402 Tr. of Oral Arg. 13. Surely that limitation does not cause the ordinance to be not generally applicable, in the relevant sense of being targeted against expressive conduct. [6]

5 This followup explanation rendered what Justice STEVENS calls counsel's "categorical" assertion that such productions would be exempt, see post, at 1411, n. 12, notably un categorical. Rather than accept counsel's explanation—in the trial court and here—that is compatible with the text of the ordinance, Justice STEVENS rushes to assign the ordinance a meaning that its words cannot bear, on the basis of counsel's initial footfault. That is not what constitutional adjudication ought to be.

6 To correct Justice STEVENS' characterization of my present point: I do not argue that Erie "carved out an exception" for Equus and Hair. Post, at 1412, n. 14. Rather, it is my contention that the city attorney assured the trial court that the ordinance was susceptible of an interpretation that would carve out such exceptions to the extent the Constitution required them. Contrary to Justice STEVENS' view, ibid., I do not believe that a law directed against all public nudity ceases to be a "general law" (rather than one directed at expression) if it makes exceptions for nudity protected by decisions of this Court. To put it another way, I do not think a law contains the vice of being directed against expression if it bans all public nudity, except that public nudity which the Supreme Court has held cannot be banned because of its expressive content.

310 Moreover, even were I to conclude that the city of Erie had specifically singled out the activity of nude dancing, I still would not find that this regulation violated the First Amendment unless I could be persuaded (as on this record I cannot) that it was the communicative character of nude dancing that prompted the ban. When conduct other than speech itself is regulated, it is my view that the First Amendment is violated only "[w]here the government prohibits conduct precisely because of its communicative attributes." Barnes, 501 U.S., at 577, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (emphasis deleted). Here, even if one hypothesizes that the city's object was to suppress only nude dancing, that would not establish an intent to suppress what (if anything) nude dancing communicates. I do not feel the need, as the Court does, to identify some "secondary effects" associated with nude dancing that the city could properly seek to eliminate. (I am highly skeptical, to tell the truth, that the addition of pasties and G-strings will at all reduce the tendency of establishments such as Kandyland to attract crime and prostitution, and hence to foster sexually transmitted disease.) The traditional power of government to foster good morals (bonos mores), and the acceptability of the traditional judgment (if Erie wishes to endorse it) that nude public dancing itself is immoral, have not been repealed by the First Amendment.

Justice SOUTER, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I join Parts I and II of the Court's opinion and agree with the analytical approach that the plurality employs in deciding this case. Erie's stated interest in combating the secondary effects associated with nude dancing establishments is an interest unrelated to the suppression of expression under United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), and the city's regulation is thus properly considered under the O'Brien standards. I do not believe, however, that the current record allows us to say that the city has made a sufficient 311 evidentiary showing to sustain its regulation, and I would therefore vacate the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and remand the case for further proceedings.

I

In several recent cases, we have confronted the need for factual justifications to satisfy intermediate scrutiny under the First Amendment. See, e.g., Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 120 S.Ct. 897, 145 L.Ed.2d 886 (2000); Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v. FCC, 520 U.S. 180, 117 S.Ct. 1174, 137 L.Ed.2d 369 (1997) (Turner II); Turner Broadcasting System, Inc. v.

FCC, 512 U.S. 622, 114 S.Ct. 2445, 129 L.Ed.2d 497 (1994) (Turner I). Those cases do not identify with any specificity a particular quantum of evidence, nor do I seek to do so in this brief concurrence.[1] What the 1403 cases do make plain, however, is that application of an intermediate scrutiny test to a government's asserted rationale for regulation of expressive activity demands some factual justification to connect that rationale with the regulation in issue.

1 As explained below, infra, at 1405, the issue of evidentiary justification was never joined, and with a multiplicity of factors affecting the analysis, a general formulation of the quantum required under United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), will at best be difficult. A lesser showing may suffice when the means-end fit is evident to the untutored intuition. As we said in Nixon, "The quantum of empirical evidence needed to satisfy heightened judicial scrutiny of legislative judgments will vary up or down with the novelty and plausibility of the justification raised." 528 U.S., at 391, 120 S.Ct. 897. (In O'Brien, for example, the secondary effects that the Government identified flowed from the destruction of draft cards, and there could be no doubt that a regulation prohibiting that destruction would alleviate the concomitant harm.) The nature of the legislating institution might also affect the calculus. We do not require Congress to create a record in the manner of an administrative agency, see Turner II, 520 U.S. 180, 213, 117 S.Ct. 1174, 137 L.Ed.2d 369 (1997), and we accord its findings greater respect than those of agencies. See id., at 195, 117 S.Ct. 1174. We might likewise defer less to a city council than we would to Congress. The need for evidence may be especially acute when a regulation is content based on its face and is analyzed as content neutral only because of the secondary effects doctrine. And it may be greater when the regulation takes the form of a ban, rather than a time, place, or manner restriction.

*312 In Turner I, for example, we stated that

"[w]hen the Government defends a regulation on speech as a means to redress past harms or prevent anticipated harms, it must do more than simply 'posit the existence of the disease sought to be cured.' Quincy Cable TV, Inc. v. FCC, 768 F.2d 1434, 1455 (C.A.D.C.1985). It must demonstrate that the recited harms are real, not merely conjectural, and that the regulation will in fact alleviate these harms in a direct and material way." Id., at 664, 114 S.Ct. 2445 (plurality opinion).

The plurality concluded there, of course, that the record, though swollen by three years of hearings on the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992, was insufficient to permit the necessary determinations and remanded for a more thorough factual development. When the case came back to us, in Turner II, a majority of the Court reiterated those requirements, characterizing the enquiry into the acceptability of the Government's regulations as one that turned on whether they "were designed to address a real harm, and whether those provisions will alleviate it in a material way." 520 U.S., at 195, 117 S.Ct. 1174. Most recently, in Nixon, we repeated that "[w]e have never accepted mere conjecture as adequate to carry a First Amendment burden," 528 U.S., at 392, 120 S.Ct. 897, and we examined the "evidence introduced into the record by petitioners or cited by the lower courts in this action ...," ibid.

The focus on evidence appearing in the record is consistent with the approach earlier applied in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). In Young, Detroit adopted a zoning ordinance requiring dispersal of adult theaters through the city and prohibiting them within 500 feet of a residential area. Urban planners and real estate experts attested to the harms created by clusters of such theaters, see 427 U.S., at 55, 96 S.Ct. 2440, and we found that "[t]he record *313 discloses a factual basis" supporting the efficacy of Detroit's chosen remedy, id., at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440. In Renton, the city similarly enacted a zoning ordinance requiring specified distances between adult theaters and residential zones, churches, parks, or schools. See 475 U.S., at 44, 106 S.Ct. 925. The city "held public hearings, reviewed the experiences of Seattle and other cities, and received a report from the City Attorney's Office advising as to developments in other cities." Ibid. We found that Renton's failure to conduct its own studies before enacting the ordinance was not fatal; "[t]he First Amendment does not require a city 1404 ... to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Id., at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925.

The upshot of these cases is that intermediate scrutiny requires a regulating government to make some demonstration of an evidentiary basis for the harm it claims to flow from the expressive activity, and for the alleviation expected from the restriction imposed.[2] See, e.g., Edenfield v. Fane, 507 U.S. 761, 770–773, 113 S.Ct. 1792, 123 L.Ed.2d 543 (1993) (striking down regulation of commercial speech for failure to show direct and material efficacy). That evidentiary basis may be borrowed from the records made by other governments if the experience elsewhere is germane to the measure under consideration and actually relied upon. I will assume, further, that the reliance may be shown by legislative invocation of a judicial opinion that accepted an evidentiary foundation as sufficient 314 for a similar regulation. What is clear is that the evidence of reliance must be a matter of demonstrated fact, not speculative supposition.

2 The plurality excuses Erie from this requirement with the simple observation that "it is evident" that the regulation will have the required efficacy. Ante, at 1397. The ipse dixit is unconvincing. While I do agree that evidentiary demands need not ignore an obvious fit between means and ends, see n. 1, supra, it is not obvious that this is such a case. It is not apparent to me as a matter of common sense that establishments featuring dancers with pasties and G-strings will differ markedly in their effects on neighborhoods from those whose dancers are nude. If the plurality does find it apparent, we may have to agree to disagree.

By these standards, the record before us today is deficient in its failure to reveal any evidence on which Erie may have relied, either for the seriousness of the threatened harm or for the efficacy of its chosen remedy. The plurality does the best it can with the materials to hand, see ante, at 1395–1396, but the pickings are slim. The plurality quotes the ordinance's preamble asserting that over the course of more than a century the city council had expressed "findings" of detrimental secondary effects flowing from lewd and immoral profitmaking activity in public places. But however accurate the recital may be and however honestly the councilors may have held those conclusions to be true over the years, the recitation does not get beyond conclusions on a subject usually fraught with some emotionalism. The plurality recognizes this, of course, but seeks to ratchet up the value of mere conclusions by analogizing them to the legislative facts within an administrative agency's special knowledge, on which action is adequately premised in the absence of evidentiary challenge. Ante, at 1395–1396. The analogy is not obvious; agencies are part of the executive branch and we defer to them in part to allow them the freedom necessary to reconcile competing policies. See Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 467 U.S. 837, 843–845, 104 S.Ct. 2778, 81 L.Ed.2d 694 (1984). That aside, it is one thing to accord administrative leeway as to predictive judgments in applying " 'elusive concepts' " to circumstances where the record is inconclusive and "evidence ... is difficult to compile," FCC v. National Citizens Comm. for Broadcasting, 436 U.S. 775, 796–797, 98 S.Ct. 2096, 56 L.Ed.2d 697 (1978), and quite another to dispense with evidence of current fact as a predicate for banning a subcategory of expression.[3] As 315 to current fact, the city council's closest *1405 approach to an evidentiary record on secondary effects and their causes was the statement of one councilor, during the debate over the ordinance, who spoke of increases in sex crimes in a way that might be construed as a reference to secondary effects. See App. 44. But that reference came at the end of a litany of concerns ("free condoms in schools, drive-by shootings, abortions, suicide machines," and declining student achievement test scores) that do not seem to be secondary effects of nude dancing. Ibid. Nor does the invocation of Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), in one paragraph of the preamble to Erie's ordinance suffice. App. to Pet. for Cert. 42a. The plurality opinion in Barnes made no mention of evidentiary showings at all, and though my separate opinion did make a pass at the issue, I did not demand reliance on germane evidentiary demonstrations, whether specific to the statute in question or developed elsewhere. To invoke Barnes, therefore, does not indicate that the issue of evidence has been addressed.

3 The proposition that the presence of nude dancing establishments increases the incidence of prostitution and violence is amenable to empirical treatment, and the city councilors who enacted Erie's ordinance are in a position to look to the facts of their own community's experience as well as to experiences elsewhere. Their failure to do so is made all the clearer by one of the amicus briefs, largely devoted to the argument that scientifically sound studies show no such correlation. See Brief for First Amendment Lawyers Association as Amicus Curiae 16–23; id., at App. 1–29.

There is one point, however, on which an evidentiary record is not quite so hard to find, but it hurts, not helps, the city. The final O'Brien requirement is that the incidental speech restriction be shown to be no greater than essential to achieve the government's legitimate purpose. 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673. To deal with this issue, we have to ask what basis there is to think that the city would be unsuccessful in countering any secondary effects by the significantly lesser restriction of zoning to control the location of nude dancing, thus allowing for efficient law enforcement, restricting effects on property values, and limiting exposure of the public. 316 The record shows that for 23 years there has been a zoning ordinance on the books to regulate the location of establishments like Kandyland, but the city has not enforced it. One councilor remarked that "I think there's one of the problems. The ordinances are on the books and not enforced. Now this takes place. You really didn't need any other ordinances." App. 43. Another commented, "I felt very, very strongly, and I feel just as strongly right now, that this is a zoning matter." Id., at 45. Even on the plurality's view of the evidentiary burden, this hurdle to the application of O'Brien requires an evidentiary response.

The record suggests that Erie simply did not try to create a record of the sort we have held necessary in other cases, and the suggestion is confirmed by the course of this litigation. The evidentiary question was never decided (or, apparently, argued) below, nor was the issue fairly joined before this Court. While respondent did claim that the evidence before the city council was insufficient to support the ordinance, see Brief for Respondent 44–49, Erie's reply urged us not to consider the question, apparently assuming that Barnes authorized us to disregard it. See Reply Brief for Petitioners 6–8. The question has not been addressed, and in that respect this case has come unmoored from the general standards of our First Amendment jurisprudence. [4]

4 By contrast, federal courts in other cases have frequently demanded evidentiary showings. See, e.g., Phillips v. Keyport, 107 F.3d 164, 175 (C.A.3 1997) (en banc); J & B Entertainment, Inc. v. Jackson, 152 F.3d 362, 370–371 (C.A.5 1998).

Careful readers, and not just those on the Erie City Council, will of course realize that my partial dissent rests on a demand for an evidentiary basis that I failed to make when I concurred in Barnes, supra. I should have demanded the evidence then, too, and my mistake calls to mind Justice Jackson's foolproof explanation of a lapse of his own, when he quoted Samuel Johnson, " 'Ignorance, sir, ignorance.' " McGrath v. Kristensen, 340 U.S. 162, 178, 71 S.Ct. 224, 95 L.Ed. 173 (1950) (concurring 317 opinion). [5] I may not be less ignorant of nude dancing than I was nine years ago, but after many subsequent occasions to think further about the needs of the *1406 First Amendment, I have come to believe that a government must toe the mark more carefully than I first insisted. I hope it is enlightenment on my part, and acceptable even if a little late. See Henslee v. Union Planters Nat. Bank & Trust Co., 335 U.S. 595, 600, 69 S.Ct. 290, 93 L.Ed. 259 (1949) (per curiam) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).

5 See Boswell, Life of Samuel Johnson, in 44 Great Books of the Western World 82 (R. Hutchins & M. Adler eds. 1952).

II

The record before us now does not permit the conclusion that Erie's ordinance is reasonably designed to mitigate real harms. This does not mean that the required showing cannot be made, only that, on this record, Erie has not made it. I would remand to give it the opportunity to do so. [6] Accordingly, although I join with the plurality in adopting the O'Brien test, I respectfully dissent from the Court's disposition of the case.

6 This suggestion does not, of course, bar the Pennsylvania Supreme Court from choosing simpler routes to disposition of the case if they exist. Respondent mounted a federal overbreadth challenge to the ordinance; it also asserted a violation of the Pennsylvania Constitution. Either one of these arguments, if successful, would obviate the need for the factual development that is a prerequisite to O'Brien analysis.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice GINSBURG joins, dissenting.

Far more important than the question whether nude dancing is entitled to the protection of the First Amendment are the dramatic changes in legal doctrine that the Court endorses today. Until now, the "secondary effects" of commercial enterprises featuring indecent entertainment have justified only the regulation of their location. For the first time, the Court has now held that such effects may justify 318 the total suppression of protected speech. Indeed, the plurality opinion concludes that admittedly trivial advancements of a State's interests may provide the basis for censorship. The Court's commendable attempt to replace the fractured decision in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), with a single coherent rationale is strikingly unsuccessful; it is supported neither by precedent nor by persuasive reasoning.

I

As the preamble to Ordinance No. 75–1994 candidly acknowledges, the council of the city of Erie enacted the restriction at issue "for the purpose of limiting a recent increase in nude live entertainment within the City." Ante, at 1391 (internal quotation marks omitted). Prior to the enactment of the ordinance, the dancers at Kandyland performed in the nude. As the Court recognizes, after its enactment they can perform precisely the same dances if they wear "pasties and G-strings." Ante, at 1393; see also ante, at 1404, n. 2 (SOUTER, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). In both instances, the erotic messages conveyed by the dancers to a willing audience are a form of expression protected by the First Amendment. Ante, at 1391.[1] Despite the similarity between the messages conveyed by the two forms of dance, they are not identical.

1 Respondent does not contend that there is a constitutional right to engage in conduct such as lap dancing. The message of eroticism conveyed by the nudity aspect of the dance is quite different from the issue of the proximity between dancer and audience. Respondent's contention is not that Erie has focused on lap dancers, see ante, at 1401 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment), but that it has focused on the message conveyed by nude dancing.

If we accept Chief Judge Posner's evaluation of this art form, see Miller v. South Bend, 904 F.2d 1081, 1089–1104 (C.A.7 1990) (en banc), the difference between the two messages is significant. The plurality assumes, however, that the difference in the content of the message resulting from 319 the mandated costume change is "de minimis." Ante, at 1393. Although I suspect that the patrons of Kandyland are more likely to share Chief Judge Posner's view than the plurality's, for present purposes I shall accept the assumption that the difference in the message is small. The crucial point to remember, however, is *1407 that whether one views the difference as large or small, nude dancing still receives First Amendment protection, even if that protection lies only in the "outer ambit" of that Amendment. Ante, at 1391. Erie's ordinance, therefore, burdens a message protected by the First Amendment. If one assumes that the same erotic message is conveyed by nude dancers as by those wearing miniscule costumes, one means of expressing that message is banned;[2] if one assumes that the messages are different, one of those messages is banned. In either event, the ordinance is a total ban.

2 Although nude dancing might be described as one protected "means" of conveying an erotic message, it does not follow that a protected message has not been totally banned simply because there are other, similar ways to convey erotic messages. See ante, at 1393. A State's prohibition of a particular book, for example, does not fail to be a total ban simply because other books conveying a similar message are available.

The plurality relies on the so-called "secondary effects" test to defend the ordinance. Ante, at 1391–1395. The present use of that rationale, however, finds no support whatsoever in our precedents. Never before have we approved the use of that doctrine to justify a total ban on protected First Amendment expression. On the contrary, we have been quite clear that the doctrine would not support that end.

In Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), we upheld a Detroit zoning ordinance that placed special restrictions on the location of motion picture theaters that exhibited "adult" movies. The "secondary effects" of the adult theaters on the neighborhoods where they were located—lower property values and increases in crime (especially prostitution) to name a few—justified the burden imposed 320 by the ordinance. Id., at 54, 71, and n. 34, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (plurality opinion). Essential to our holding, however, was the fact that the ordinance was "nothing more than a limitation on the place where adult films may be exhibited" and did not limit the size of the market in such speech. Id., at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440; see also id., at 61, 63, n. 18, 70, 71, n. 35, 96 S.Ct. 2440. As Justice Powell emphasized in his concurrence:

> "At most the impact of the ordinance on [the First Amendment] interests is incidental and minimal. Detroit has silenced no message, has invoked no censorship, and has imposed no limitation upon those who wish to view them. The ordinance is addressed only to the places at which this type of expression may be presented, a restriction that does not interfere with content. Nor is there any significant overall curtailment of adult movie presentations, or the opportunity for a message to reach an audience." Id., at 78–79, 96 S.Ct. 2440.

See also id., at 81, n. 4, 96 S.Ct. 2440 ("[A] zoning ordinance that merely specifies where a theater may locate, and that does not reduce significantly the number or accessibility of theaters presenting particular films, stifles no expression").

In Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), we upheld a similar ordinance, again finding that the "secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community" justified a restrictive zoning law. Id., at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925 (emphasis deleted). We noted, however, that "[t]he Renton ordinance, like the one in American Mini Theatres, does not ban adult theaters altogether," but merely "circumscribe[s] their choice as to location." Id., at 46, 48, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also id., at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("In our view, the First Amendment requires ... that Renton refrain from effectively denying respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city ..."). Indeed, in both Renton and American Mini Theatres, the zoning ordinances were analyzed as mere "time, 321 place, and manner" regulations.[3] See *1408 Renton, 475 U.S., at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925; American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 63, and n. 18, 96 S.Ct. 2440; id., at 82, n. 6, 96 S.Ct. 2440. Because time, place, and manner regulations must "leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information," Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), a total ban would necessarily fail that test.[4]

3 The plurality contends, ante, at 1394, that Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), shows that we have used the secondary effects rationale to justify more burdensome restrictions than those approved in Renton and American Mini Theatres. That argument is unpersuasive for two reasons. First, as in the two cases just mentioned, the regulation in Ward was as a time, place, and manner restriction. See 491 U.S., at 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746; id., at 804, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (Marshall, J., dissenting). Second, as discussed below, Ward is not a secondary effects case. See infra, at 1410–1411.

4 We also held in Renton that in enacting its adult theater zoning ordinance, the city of Renton was permitted to rely on a detailed study conducted by the city of Seattle that examined the relationship between zoning controls and the secondary effects of adult theaters. (It was permitted to rely as well on "the 'detailed findings' summarized" in an opinion of the Washington Supreme Court to the same effect.) 475 U.S., at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Renton, having identified the same problem in its own city as that experienced in Seattle, quite logically drew on Seattle's experience and adopted a similar solution. But if Erie is relying on the Seattle study as well (as the plurality suggests, ante, at 1395), its use of that study is most peculiar. After identifying a problem in its own city similar to that in Seattle, Erie has implemented a solution (pasties and G-strings) bearing no relationship to the efficacious remedy identified by the Seattle study (dispersal through zoning).

> But the city of Erie, of course, has not in fact pointed to any study by anyone suggesting that the adverse secondary effects of commercial enterprises featuring erotic dancing depends in the slightest on the precise costume worn by the performers—it merely assumes it to be so. See infra, at 1409–1410. If the city is permitted simply to assume that a slight addition to the dancers' costumes will sufficiently decrease secondary effects, then presumably the city can require more and more clothing as long as any danger of adverse effects remains.

And we so held in Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981). There, we addressed a zoning ordinance that did not merely require the dispersal of adult theaters, but prohibited 322 them altogether. In striking down that law, we focused precisely on that distinction, holding that the secondary effects analysis endorsed in the past did not apply to an ordinance that totally banned nude dancing: "The restriction [in Young v. American Mini Theatres] did not affect the number of adult movie theaters that could operate in the city; it merely dispersed them. The Court did not imply that a municipality could ban all adult theaters—much less all live entertainment or all nude dancing—from its commercial districts citywide." Id., at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (plurality opinion); see also id., at 76, 96 S.Ct. 2440; id., at 77, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Blackmun, J., concurring) (joining plurality); id., at 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring) (same).

The reason we have limited our secondary effects cases to zoning and declined to extend their reasoning to total bans is clear and straightforward: A dispersal that simply limits the places where speech may occur is a minimal imposition, whereas a total ban is the most exacting of restrictions. The State's interest in fighting presumed secondary effects is sufficiently strong to justify the former, but far too weak to support the latter, more severe burden. [5] Yet it is perfectly clear that in the present case—to use Justice Powell's metaphor in American Mini Theatres—the city of Erie has totally silenced a message the dancers at Kandyland want to convey. The fact that this censorship may have a laudable ulterior purpose cannot mean that censorship is not censorship. *1409 For these reasons, the Court's holding rejects the explicit reasoning in American Mini Theatres and Renton and the express holding in Schad.

5 As the plurality recognizes by quoting my opinion in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), see ante, at 1393–1394, "the First Amendment will not tolerate the total suppression of erotic materials that have some artistic value," though it will permit zoning regulations.

The Court's use of the secondary effects rationale to permit a total ban has grave implications for basic free speech principles. Ordinarily, laws regulating the primary effects of speech, i.e., the intended persuasive effects caused by the 323 speech, are presumptively invalid. Under today's opinion, a State may totally ban speech based on its secondary effects—which are defined as those effects that "happen to be associated" with speech, Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 320–321, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988); see ante, at 1392—yet the regulation is not presumptively invalid. Because the category of effects that "happen to be associated" with speech includes the narrower subset of effects caused by speech, today's holding has the effect of swallowing whole a most fundamental principle of First Amendment jurisprudence.

II

The plurality's mishandling of our secondary effects cases is not limited to its approval of a total ban. It compounds that error by dramatically reducing the degree to which the State's interest must be furthered by the restriction imposed on speech, and by ignoring the critical difference between secondary effects caused by speech and the incidental effects on speech that may be caused by a regulation of conduct.

In what can most delicately be characterized as an enormous understatement, the plurality concedes that "requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings may not greatly reduce these secondary effects." Ante, at 1397. To believe that the mandatory addition of pasties and a G-string will have any kind of noticeable impact on secondary effects requires nothing short of a titanic surrender to the implausible. It would be more accurate to acknowledge, as Justice SCALIA does, that there is no reason to believe that such a requirement "will at all reduce the tendency of establishments such as Kandyland to attract crime and prostitution, and hence to foster sexually transmitted disease." Ante, at 1402 (opinion concurring in judgment); see also ante, at 1404, n. 2 (SOUTER, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Nevertheless, the plurality concludes that the "less stringent" test announced in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), "requires only that the regulation further the interest in 324 combating such effects," ante, at 1397; see also ante, at 1391. It is one thing to say, however, that O'Brien is more lenient than the "more demanding standard" we have imposed in cases such as Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989). See ante, at 1391. It is quite another to say that the test can be satisfied by nothing more than the mere possibility of de minimis effects on the neighborhood.

The plurality is also mistaken in equating our secondary effects cases with the "incidental burdens" doctrine applied in cases such as O'Brien; and it aggravates the error by invoking the latter line of cases to support its assertion that Erie's ordinance is unrelated to speech. The incidental burdens doctrine applies when " 'speech' and 'nonspeech' elements are combined in the same course of conduct," and the government's interest in regulating the latter justifies incidental burdens on the former. O'Brien, 391 U.S., at 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673. Secondary effects, on the other hand, are indirect consequences of protected speech and may justify regulation of the places where that speech may occur. See American Mini Theatres, 427

U.S., at 71, n. 34, 96 S.Ct. 2440 ("[A] concentration of 'adult' movie theaters causes the area to deteriorate and become a focus of crime"). [6] When a State enacts 1410 a regulation, it might focus on the secondary effects of speech as its aim, or it might concentrate on nonspeech related concerns, having no thoughts at all with respect to how its regulation will affect speech—and only later, when the regulation is found to burden speech, justify the imposition as an unintended incidental consequence. [7] But those interests are not the *325 same, and the plurality cannot ignore their differences and insist that both aims are equally unrelated to speech simply because Erie might have "recogniz[ed]" that it could possibly have had either aim in mind. See ante, at 1394. [8] One can think of an apple and an orange at the same time; that does not turn them into the same fruit.

6 A secondary effect on the neighborhood that "happen[s] to be associated with" a form of speech is, of course, critically different from "the direct impact of speech on its audience." Boos v. Berry, 485 U.S. 312, 320–321, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988). The primary effect of speech is the persuasive effect of the message itself.

7 In fact, the very notion of focusing in on incidental burdens at the time of enactment appears to be a contradiction in terms. And if it were not the case that there is a difference between laws aimed at secondary effects and general bans incidentally burdening speech, then one wonders why Justices SCALIA and SOUTER adopted such strikingly different approaches in Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991).

8 I frankly do not understand the plurality's declaration that a State's interest in the secondary effects of speech that "are associated" with the speech are not "related" to the speech. Ante, at 1393. See, e.g., Webster's Third New International Dictionary 132 (1966) (defining "associate" as "closely related"). Sometimes, though, the plurality says that the secondary effects are "caused" by the speech, rather than merely "associated with" the speech. See, e.g., ante, at 1392, 1393, 1395, 1396–1397. If that is the definition of secondary effects the plurality adopts, then it is even more obvious that an interest in secondary effects is related to the speech at issue. See Barnes, 501 U.S., at 585–586, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SOUTER, J., concurring in judgment) (secondary effects are not related to speech because their connection to speech is only one of correlation, not causation).

Of course, the line between governmental interests aimed at conduct and unrelated to speech, on the one hand, and interests arising out of the effects of the speech, on the other, may be somewhat imprecise in some cases. In this case, however, we need not wrestle with any such difficulty because Erie has expressly justified its ordinance with reference to secondary effects. Indeed, if Erie's concern with the effects of the message were unrelated to the message itself, it is strange that the only means used to combat those effects is the suppression of the message. [9] For these reasons, the plurality's argument that "this case is similar to O'Brien," ante, at 1392; see also ante, at 1394, is quite wrong, as are its *326 citations to Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984), and Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), ante, at 1393–1394, neither of which involved secondary effects. The plurality cannot have its cake and eat it too—either Erie's ordinance was not aimed at speech and the plurality may attempt to justify the regulation under the incidental burdens test, or Erie has aimed its law at the secondary effects of speech, and the plurality can try to justify the law under that doctrine. But it cannot conflate the two with the expectation that Erie's interests aimed at secondary effects will be rendered unrelated to speech by virtue of this doctrinal polyglot.

9 As Justice Powell said in his concurrence in Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 82, n. 4, 96 S.Ct. 2440: "[H]ad [Detroit] been concerned with restricting the message purveyed by adult theaters, it would have tried to close them or restrict their number rather than circumscribe their choice as to location." Quite plainly, Erie's total ban evinces its concern with the message being regulated.

Correct analysis of the issue in this case should begin with the proposition that nude dancing is a species of expressive conduct that is protected by the First Amendment. As Chief Judge Posner has observed, nude dancing fits well within a broad, cultural tradition recognized as expressive 1411 in nature and entitled to First Amendment protection. See 904 F.2d, at 1089–1104; see also Note, 97 Colum. L.Rev. 1844 (1997). The nudity of the dancer is both a component of the protected expression and the specific target of the ordinance. It is pure sophistry to reason from the premise that the regulation of the nudity component of nude dancing is unrelated to the message conveyed by nude dancers. Indeed, both the text of the ordinance and the reasoning in the plurality's opinion make it pellucidly clear that the city of Erie has prohibited nude dancing "precisely because of its communicative attributes." Barnes, 501 U.S., at 577, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment) (emphasis in original); see id., at 596, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (White, J., dissenting).

III

The censorial purpose of Erie's ordinance precludes reliance on the judgment in Barnes as sufficient support for the Court's holding today. Several differences between the Erie ordinance and the statute at issue in Barnes belie the plurality's assertion that the two laws are "almost identical." 327 Ante, at 1391. To begin with, the preamble to Erie's ordinance candidly articulates its agenda, declaring:

> "Council specifically wishes to adopt the concept of Public Indecency prohibited by the laws of the State of Indiana, which was approved by the U.S. Supreme Court in Barnes v. Glen Theatre Inc., ... for the purpose of limiting a recent increase in nude live entertainment within the City." App. to Pet. for Cert. 42a (emphasis added); see also ante, at 1391–1392. [10]

10 The preamble also states: "[T]he Council of the City of Erie has [found] ... that certain lewd, immoral activities carried on in public places for profit ... lead to the debasement of both women and men ... ." App. to Pet. for Cert. 41a.

As its preamble forthrightly admits, the ordinance's "purpose" is to "limi[t]" a protected form of speech; its invocation of Barnes cannot obliterate that professed aim. [11]

11 Relying on five words quoted from the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the plurality suggests that I have misinterpreted that court's reading of the preamble. Ante, at 1392. What follows, however, is a more complete statement of what that court said on this point:

> "We acknowledge that one of the purposes of the Ordinance is to combat negative secondary effects. That, however, is not its only goal. Inextricably bound up with this stated purpose is an unmentioned purpose that directly impacts on the freedom of expression: that purpose is to impact negatively on the erotic message of the dance.... We believe ... that the stated purpose for promulgating the Ordinance is inextricably linked with the content-based motivation to suppress the expressive nature of nude dancing." 553 Pa. 348, 359, 719 A.2d 273, 279 (1998).

Erie's ordinance differs from the statute in Barnes in another respect. In Barnes, the Court expressly observed that the Indiana statute had not been given a limiting construction by the Indiana Supreme Court. As presented to this Court, there was nothing about the law itself that would confine its application to nude dancing in adult entertainment establishments. See 501 U.S., at 564, n. 1, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (discussing Indiana Supreme Court's lack of a limiting construction); see also id., at 585, n. 2, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SOUTER, J., concurring in judgment). 328 Erie's ordinance, however, comes to us in a much different posture. In an earlier proceeding in this case, the Court of Common Pleas asked Erie's counsel "what effect would this ordinance have on theater ... productions such as Equus, Hair, O[h!] Calcutta [!]? Under your ordinance would these things be prevented ... ?" Counsel responded: "No, they wouldn't, Your Honor." App. 53. [12] Indeed, as stipulated in *1412 the record, the city permitted a production of Equus to proceed without prosecution, even after the ordinance was in effect, and despite its awareness of the nudity involved in the production. Id., at 84. [13] Even if, in light of its broad applicability, the statute in Barnes was not aimed at a particular form of speech, Erie's ordinance is quite different. As presented to us, the ordinance is deliberately targeted at Kandyland's type of nude dancing (to the exclusion of plays like Equus), in terms of both its applicable scope and the city's enforcement. [14]

12 In my view, Erie's categorical response forecloses Justice SCALIA's assertion that the city's position on Equus and Hair was limited to "[o]ne instance," where "the city was [not] aware of the nudity," and "no one had complained." Ante, at 1401 (opinion concurring in judgment). Nor could it be contended that selective applicability by stipulated enforcement should be treated differently from selective applicability by statutory text. See Barnes, 501 U.S., at 574, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment) (selective enforcement may affect a law's generality).

Were it otherwise, constitutional prohibitions could be circumvented with impunity.

13 The stipulation read: "The play, 'Equus' featured frontal nudity and was performed for several weeks in October/November 1994 at the Roadhouse Theater in downtown Erie with no efforts to enforce the nudity prohibition which became effective during the run of the play."

14 Justice SCALIA argues that Erie might have carved out an exception for Equus and Hair because it guessed that this Court would consider them protected forms of expression, see Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 550, 557–558, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975) (holding that Hair, including the "group nudity and simulated sex" involved in the production, is protected speech); in his view, that makes the distinction unobjectionable and renders the ordinance no less of a general law. Ante, at 1401–1402 (opinion concurring in judgment). This argument appears to contradict his earlier definition of a general law: "A law is 'general' ... if it regulates conduct without regard to whether that conduct is expressive." Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S., at 576, n. 3, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (opinion concurring in judgment). If the ordinance regulates conduct (public nudity), it does not do so without regard to whether the nudity is expressive if it exempts the public nudity in Hair precisely "because of its expressive content." Ante, at 1402, n. 6 (opinion concurring in judgment). Moreover, if Erie exempts Hair because it wants to avoid a conflict with the First Amendment (rather than simply to exempt instances of nudity it finds inoffensive), that rationale still does not explain why Hair is exempted but Kandyland is not, since Barnes held that both are constitutionally protected.

Justice SCALIA also states that even if the ordinance singled out nude dancing, he would not strike down the law unless the dancing was singled out because of its message. Ante, at 1402. He opines that here, the basis for singling out Kandyland is morality. Ibid. But since the "morality" of the public nudity in Hair is left untouched by the ordinance, while the "immorality" of the public nudity in Kandyland is singled out, the distinction cannot be that "nude public dancing itself is immoral." Ibid. (emphasis in original). Rather, the only arguable difference between the two is that one's message is more immoral than the other's.

329 This narrow aim is confirmed by the expressed views of the Erie City Councilmembers who voted for the ordinance. The four city councilmembers who approved the measure (of the six total councilmembers) each stated his or her view that the ordinance was aimed specifically at nude adult entertainment, and not at more mainstream forms of entertainment that include total nudity, nor even at nudity in general. One lawmaker observed: "We're not talking about nudity. We're not talking about the theater or art .... We're talking about what is indecent and immoral .... We're not prohibiting nudity, we're prohibiting nudity when it's used in a lewd and immoral fashion." App. 39. Though not quite as succinct, the other councilmembers expressed similar convictions. For example, one member illustrated his understanding of the aim of the law by contrasting it with his recollection about high school students swimming in the nude in the school's pool. The ordinance was not intended to cover those incidents of nudity: "But what I'm getting at is [the swimming] wasn't indecent, it wasn't an immoral thing, and 330 yet there was nudity." Id., at 42. The same lawmaker then disfavorably compared the nude swimming incident to the activities that occur in "some of these clubs" that exist in Erie—clubs that would be covered *1413 by the law. Ibid. [15] Though such comments could be consistent with an interest in a general prohibition of nudity, the complete absence of commentary on that broader interest, and the councilmembers' exclusive focus on adult entertainment, is evidence of the ordinance's aim. In my view, we need not strain to find consistency with more general purposes when the most natural reading of the record reflects a near obsessive preoccupation with a single target of the law. [16]

15 Other members said their focus was on "bottle clubs," and the like, App. 43, and attempted to downplay the effect of the ordinance by acknowledging that "the girls can wear thongs or a G-string and little pasties that are smaller than a diamond." Ibid. Echoing that focus, another member stated that "[t]here still will be adult entertainment in this town, only it will be in a little different form." Id., at 47.

16 The plurality dismisses this evidence, declaring that it "will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit motive." Ante, at 1392 (citing United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 382–383, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47–48, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986)). First, it is worth pointing out that this doctrinaire formulation of O'Brien's cautionary statement is overbroad. See generally L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law § 12–5, pp. 819–820 (2d ed.1988). Moreover, O'Brien itself said only that we would not strike down a law "on the assumption that a wrongful purpose or motive has caused the power to be exerted," 391 U.S., at 383, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (emphasis added; internal quotation marks omitted), and that statement was due to our recognition that it is a "hazardous matter" to determine the actual intent of a body as large as Congress "on the basis of what fewer than a handful of Congressmen said about [a law]," id., at 384, 88 S.Ct. 1673. Yet neither consideration is present here. We need not base our inquiry on an "assumption," nor must we infer the collective intent of a large body based on the statements of a few, for we have in the record the actual statements of all the city councilmembers who voted in favor of the ordinance.

The text of Erie's ordinance is also significantly different from the law upheld in Barnes. In Barnes, the statute defined "nudity" as "the showing of the human male or female 331 genitals" (and certain other regions of the body) "with less than a fully opaque covering." 501 U.S., at 569, n. 2, 111 S.Ct. 2456. The Erie ordinance duplicates that definition in all material respects, but adds the following to its definition of "[n]udity":

> " '[T]he exposure of any device, costume, or covering which gives the appearance of or simulates the genitals, pubic hair, natal cleft, perineum anal region or pubic hair region; or the exposure of any device worn as a cover over the nipples and/or areola of the female breast, which device simulates and gives the realistic appearance of nipples and/or areola.' " Ante, at 1388, n. * (emphasis added).

Can it be doubted that this out-of-the-ordinary definition of "nudity" is aimed directly at the dancers in establishments such as Kandyland? Who else is likely to don such garments? [17] We should not stretch to embrace fanciful explanations when the most natural reading of the ordinance unmistakably identifies its intended target.

17 Is it seriously contended (as would be necessary to sustain the ordinance as a general prohibition) that, when crafting this bizarre definition of "nudity," Erie's concern was with the use of simulated nipple covers on "nude beaches and [by otherwise] unclothed purveyors of hot dogs and machine tools"? Barnes, 501 U.S., at 574, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment); see also ante, at 1401 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). It is true that one might conceivably imagine that is Erie's aim. But it is far more likely that this novel definition was written with the Kandyland dancers and the like in mind, since they are the only ones covered by the law (recall that plays like Equus are exempted from coverage) who are likely to utilize such unconventional clothing.

It is clear beyond a shadow of a doubt that the Erie ordinance was a response to a more specific concern than nudity in general, namely, nude dancing of the sort found in Kandyland. [18] Given that the *1414 Court has not even tried to defend 332 the ordinance's total ban on the ground that its censorship of protected speech might be justified by an overriding state interest, it should conclude that the ordinance is patently invalid. For these reasons, as well as the reasons set forth in Justice White's dissent in Barnes, I respectfully dissent.

18 The plurality states that Erie's ordinance merely "replaces and updates provisions of an 'Indecency and Immorality' ordinance" from the mid–19th century, just as the statute in Barnes did. Ante, at 1391. First of all, it is not clear that this is correct. The record does indicate that Erie's Ordinance No. 75–1994 updates an older ordinance of similar import. Unfortunately, that old regulation is not in the record. Consequently, whether the new ordinance merely "replaces" the old one is a matter of debate. From statements of one councilmember, it can reasonably be inferred that the old ordinance was merely a residential zoning restriction, not a total ban. See App. 43. If that is so, it leads to the further question why Erie felt it necessary to shift to a total ban in 1994.

But even if the plurality's factual contention is correct, it does not undermine the points I have made in the text. In Barnes, the point of noting the ancient pedigree of the Indiana statute was to demonstrate that its passage antedated the appearance of adult entertainment venues, and therefore could not have been motivated by the presence of those establishments. The inference supposedly rebutted in Barnes stemmed from the timing of the enactment. Here, however, the inferences I draw depend on the text of the ordinance, its preamble, its scope and enforcement, and the comments of the councilmembers. These do not depend on the timing of the ordinance's enactment.

All Citations

529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265, 68 USLW 4239, 28 Media L. Rep. 1545, 00 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 2443, 2000 Daily Journal D.A.R. 3255, 2000 CJ C.A.R. 1618, 13 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. S 203

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Disagreement Recognized by Boos v. Barry, U.S.Dist.Col., March 22, 1988

106 S.Ct. 925
Supreme Court of the United States

CITY OF RENTON, et al., Appellants
v.
PLAYTIME THEATRES, INC., et al.

No. 84–1360.
|
Argued Nov. 12, 1985.
|
Decided Feb. 25, 1986.
|
Rehearing Denied April 21, 1986.
|
See 475 U.S. 1132, 106 S.Ct. 1663.

Suit was brought challenging the constitutionality of a zoning ordinance which prohibited adult motion picture theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single or multiple-family dwelling, church, park or school. The United States District Court for the Western District of Washington ruled in favor of the city. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 748 F.2d 527, reversed and remanded for reconsideration, and the city appealed. The Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist, held that the ordinance was a valid governmental response to the serious problems created by adult theaters and satisfied the dictates of the First Amendment.

Reversed.

Justice Blackmun concurred in the result.

Justice Brennan filed a dissenting opinion in which Justice Marshall joined.

West Headnotes (4)

[1] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use

City ordinance that prohibited adult motion picture theaters from locating from within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single or multiple-family dwelling, church, park or school was properly analyzed as a form of time, place and manner regulation of speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

823 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use

A zoning ordinance that prohibited adult motion picture theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single or multiple-family dwelling, church, park or school was a valid governmental response to the serious problems created by adult theaters and satisfied the dictates of the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

766 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Theaters in general

The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting an adult theater zoning ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever the evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

547 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Cities may regulate adult theaters by dispersing them or by effectively concentrating them.

75 Cases that cite this headnote

41 Syllabus [*]

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Respondents purchased two theaters in Renton, Washington, with the intention of exhibiting adult films and, at about the same time, filed suit in Federal District Court, seeking injunctive relief and a declaratory judgment that the First and Fourteenth Amendments were violated by a city ordinance that prohibits adult motion picture theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, park, or school. The District Court ultimately entered summary judgment in the city's favor, holding that the ordinance did not violate the First Amendment. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the ordinance constituted a substantial restriction on First Amendment interests, and remanded the case for reconsideration as to whether the city had substantial governmental interests to support the ordinance.

Held: The ordinance is a valid governmental response to the serious problems created by adult theaters and satisfies the dictates of the First Amendment. Cf. *925 Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310. Pp. 928–933.

(a) Since the ordinance does not ban adult theaters altogether, it is properly analyzed as a form of time, place, and manner regulation. "Content-neutral" time, place, and manner regulations are acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. Pp. 928–929.

(b) The District Court found that the Renton City Council's "predominate" concerns were with the secondary effects of adult theaters on the surrounding community, not with the content of adult films themselves. This finding is more than adequate to establish that the city's pursuit of its zoning interests was unrelated to the suppression of free expression, and thus the ordinance is a "content-neutral" speech regulation. Pp. 928–930.

(c) The Renton ordinance is designed to serve a substantial governmental interest while allowing for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. A city's interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life, as here, must be accorded high respect. Although the ordinance was enacted without the benefit of studies specifically relating to 42 Renton's particular problems, Renton was entitled to rely on the experiences of, and studies produced by, the nearby city of Seattle and other cities. Nor was there any constitutional defect in the method chosen by Renton to further its substantial interests. Cities may regulate adult theaters by dispersing them, or by effectively concentrating them, as in Renton. Moreover, the ordinance is not "underinclusive" for failing to regulate other kinds of adult businesses, since there was no evidence that, at the time the ordinance was enacted, any other adult business was located in, or was contemplating moving into, Renton. Pp. 930–932.

(d) As required by the First Amendment, the ordinance allows for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. Although respondents argue that in general there are no "commercially viable" adult theater sites within the limited area of land left open for such theaters by the ordinance, the fact that respondents must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a violation of the First Amendment, which does not compel the Government to ensure that adult theaters, or any other kinds of speech-related businesses, will be able to obtain sites at bargain prices. P. 932.

748 F.2d 527 (CA9 1984), reversed.

REHNQUIST, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C.J., and WHITE, POWELL, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. BLACKMUN, J., concurred in the result. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which MARSHALL, J., joined, post, p. ——.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*926 E. Barrett Prettyman, Jr., arguedthe cause for appellants. With him on the briefs were David W. Burgett, Lawrence J. Warren, Daniel Kellogg, Mark E. Barber, and Zanetta L. Fontes.

Jack R. Burns argued the cause for appellees. With him on the briefs was *Robert E. Smith.

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for Jackson County, Missouri, by Russell D. Jacobson; for the Freedom Council Foundation by Wendell R. Bird and Robert K. Skolrood; for the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers by George Agnost, Roy D. Bates, Benjamin L. Brown, J. Lamar Shelley, John W. Witt, Roger F. Cutler, Robert J. Alfton, James K. Baker, Barbara Mather, James D. Montgomery, Clifford D. Pierce, Jr., William H. Taube, William I. Thornton, Jr., and Charles S. Rhyne; and for the National League of Cities et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon, Joyce Holmes Benjamin, Beate Bloch, and Lawrence R. Velvel.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Civil Liberties Union et al. by David Utevsky, Jack D. Novik, and Burt Neuborne; and for the American Booksellers Association, Inc., et al. by Michael A. Bamberger.

Eric M. Rubin and Walter E. Diercks filed a brief for the Outdoor Advertising Association of America, Inc., et al. as amici curiae.

Opinion

43 Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case involves a constitutional challenge to a zoning ordinance, enacted by appellant city of Renton, Washington, that prohibits adult motion picture theaters from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, park, or school. Appellees, Playtime Theatres, Inc., and Sea-First Properties, Inc., filed an action in the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington seeking a declaratory judgment that the Renton ordinance violated the First and Fourteenth Amendments and a permanent injunction against its enforcement. The District Court ruled in favor of Renton and denied the permanent injunction, but the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed and remanded for reconsideration. 748 F.2d 527 (1984). We noted probable jurisdiction, *927 471 U.S. 1013, 105 S.Ct. 2015, 85 L.Ed.2d 297 (1985), and now reverse the judgment of the Ninth Circuit. [1]

[1] This appeal was taken under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2), which provides this Court with appellate jurisdiction at the behest of a party relying on a state statute or local ordinance held unconstitutional by a court of appeals. As we have previously noted, there is some question whether jurisdiction under § 1254(2) is available to review a nonfinal judgment. See South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. v. Flemming, 351 U.S. 901, 76 S.Ct. 692, 100 L.Ed. 1439 (1956); Slaker v. O'Connor, 278 U.S. 188, 49 S.Ct. 158, 73 L.Ed. 258 (1929). But see Chicago v. Atchison, T. & S.F. R. Co., 357 U.S. 77, 82–83, 78 S.Ct. 1063, 1066–1067, 2 L.Ed.2d 1174 (1958).

The present appeal seeks review of a judgment remanding the case to the District Court. We need not resolve whether this appeal is proper under § 1254(2), however, because in any event we have certiorari jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 2103. As we have previously done in equivalent situations, see El Paso v. Simmons, 379 U.S. 497, 502–503, 85 S.Ct. 577, 580–581, 13 L.Ed.2d 446 (1965); Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 927, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 2565, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975), we dismiss the appeal and, treating the papers as a petition for certiorari, grant the writ of certiorari. Henceforth, we shall refer to the parties as "petitioners" and "respondents."

44 In May 1980, the Mayor of Renton, a city of approximately 32,000 people located just south of Seattle, suggested to the Renton City Council that it consider the advisability of enacting zoning legislation dealing with adult entertainment uses. No such uses existed in the city at that time. Upon the Mayor's suggestion, the City Council referred the matter to the city's Planning and Development Committee. The Committee held public hearings, reviewed the experiences of Seattle and other cities, and received a report from the City Attorney's Office advising as to developments in other cities. The City Council, meanwhile, adopted Resolution No. 2368, which imposed a moratorium on the licensing of "any business ... which ... has as its primary purpose the selling, renting or showing of sexually explicit materials." App. 43. The resolution contained a clause explaining that such businesses "would have a severe impact upon surrounding businesses and residences." Id., at 42.

In April 1981, acting on the basis of the Planning and Development Committee's recommendation, the City Council enacted Ordinance No. 3526. The ordinance prohibited any "adult motion picture theater" from locating within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, or park, and within one mile of any school. App. to Juris. Statement 79a. The term "adult motion picture theater" was defined as "[a]n enclosed building used for presenting motion picture films, video cassettes, cable television, or any other such visual media, distinguished or characteri[zed] by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas' ... for observation by patrons therein." Id., at 78a.

45 In early 1982, respondents acquired two existing theaters in downtown Renton, with the intention of using them to exhibit feature-length adult films. The theaters were located within the area proscribed by Ordinance No. 3526. At about the same time, respondents filed the previously mentioned lawsuit challenging the ordinance on First and Fourteenth Amendment grounds, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. While the federal action was pending, the City Council amended the ordinance in several respects, adding a statement of reasons for its enactment and reducing the minimum distance from any school to 1,000 feet.

In November 1982, the Federal Magistrate to whom respondents' action had been referred recommended the entry of a preliminary injunction against enforcement of the Renton ordinance and the denial of Renton's motions to dismiss and for summary judgment. The District Court adopted the Magistrate's recommendations and entered the preliminary injunction, and respondents began showing adult films at their two theaters in Renton. Shortly thereafter, the parties agreed to submit the case for a final decision on whether a permanent *928 injunction should issue on the basis of the record as already developed.

The District Court then vacated the preliminary injunction, denied respondents' requested permanent injunction, and entered summary judgment in favor of Renton. The court found that the Renton ordinance did not substantially restrict First Amendment interests, that Renton was not required to show specific adverse impact on Renton from the operation of adult theaters but could rely on the experiences of other cities, that the purposes of the ordinance were unrelated to the suppression of speech, and that the restrictions on speech imposed by the ordinance were no greater than necessary to further the governmental interests involved. Relying on Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), the court held that the Renton ordinance did not violate the First Amendment.

46 The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed. The Court of Appeals first concluded, contrary to the finding of the District Court, that the Renton ordinance constituted a substantial restriction on First Amendment interests. Then, using the standards set forth in United States v. O'Brien, supra, the Court of Appeals held that Renton had improperly relied on the experiences of other cities in lieu of evidence about the effects of adult theaters on Renton, that Renton had thus failed to establish adequately the existence of a substantial governmental interest in support of its ordinance, and that in any event Renton's asserted interests had not been shown to be unrelated to the suppression of expression. The Court of Appeals remanded the case to the District Court for reconsideration of Renton's asserted interests.

In our view, the resolution of this case is largely dictated by our decision in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., supra. There, although five Members of the Court did not agree on a single rationale for the decision, we held that the city of Detroit's zoning ordinance, which prohibited locating an adult theater within 1,000 feet of any two other "regulated uses" or within 500 feet of any residential zone, did not violate the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Id., 427 U.S., at 72–73, 96 S.Ct., at 2453 (plurality opinion of STEVENS, J., joined by BURGER, C.J., and WHITE and REHNQUIST, JJ.); id., at 84, 96 S.Ct., at 2459 (POWELL, J., concurring). The Renton ordinance, like the one in American Mini Theatres, does not ban adult theaters altogether, but merely provides that such theaters may not be located within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, park, or school. The ordinance is therefore properly analyzed as a form of time, place, and manner regulation. Id., at 63, and n. 18, 96 S.Ct., at 2448 and n. 18; id., at 78–79, 96 S.Ct., at 2456 (POWELL, J., concurring).

[1] Describing the ordinance as a time, place, and manner regulation is, of course, only the first step in our inquiry. This Court has long held that regulations enacted for the 47 purpose of restraining speech on the basis of its content presumptively violate the First Amendment. See Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 462–463, and n. 7, 100 S.Ct. 2286, 2291, and n. 7, 65 L.Ed.2d 263 (1980); Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95, 98–99, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2289, 2291–2292, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972). On the other hand, so-called "content-neutral" time, place, and manner regulations are acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. See Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984); City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 807, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2130, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984); Heffron v. International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 647–648, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 2563–2564, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981).

*929 At first glance, the Renton ordinance, like the ordinance in American Mini Theatres, does not appear to fit neatly into either the "content-based" or the "content-neutral" category. To be sure, the ordinance treats theaters that specialize in adult films differently from other kinds of theaters. Nevertheless, as the District Court concluded, the Renton ordinance is aimed not at the content of the films shown at "adult motion picture theatres," but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community. The District Court found that the City Council's "predominate concerns" were with the secondary effects of adult theaters, and not with the content of adult films themselves. App. to Juris. Statement 31a (emphasis added). But the Court of Appeals, relying on its decision in Tovar v. Billmeyer, 721 F.2d 1260, 1266 (CA9 1983), held that this was not enough to sustain the ordinance. According to the Court of Appeals, if "a motivating factor " in enacting the ordinance was to restrict respondents' exercise of First Amendment rights the ordinance would be invalid, apparently no matter how small a part this motivating factor may have played in the City Council's decision. 748 F.2d, at 537 (emphasis in original). This view of the law was rejected in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S., at 382–386, 88 S.Ct., at 1681–1684, the very case that the Court of Appeals said it was applying:

> 48 "It is a familiar principle of constitutional law that this Court will not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive....
>
> "... What motivates one legislator to make a speech about a statute is not necessarily what motivates scores of others to enact it, and the stakes are sufficiently high for us to eschew guesswork." Id., at 383–384, 88 S.Ct., at 1683.

The District Court's finding as to "predominate" intent, left undisturbed by the Court of Appeals, is more than adequate to establish that the city's pursuit of its zoning interests here was unrelated to the suppression of free expression. The ordinance by its terms is designed to prevent crime, protect the city's retail trade, maintain property values, and generally "protec[t] and preserv[e] the quality of [the city's] neighborhoods, commercial districts, and the quality of urban life," not to suppress the expression of unpopular views. See App. to Juris. Statement 90a. As Justice POWELL observed in American Mini Theatres, "[i]f [the city] had been concerned with restricting the message purveyed by adult theaters, it would have tried to close them or restrict their number rather than circumscribe their choice as to location." 427 U.S., at 82, n. 4, 96 S.Ct., at 2458, n. 4.

In short, the Renton ordinance is completely consistent with our definition of "content-neutral" speech regulations as those that "are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech." Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 1830, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976) (emphasis added); Community for Creative Non-Violence, supra, 468 U.S., at 293, 104 S.Ct., at 3069; International Society for Krishna Consciousness, supra, 452 U.S., at 648, 101 S.Ct., at 2564. The ordinance does not contravene the fundamental principle that underlies our concern about "content-based" speech regulations: that "government may not grant the use of a forum to people whose views it finds acceptable, but deny use to those wishing to express 49 less favored or more controversial views." Mosley, supra, 408 U.S., at 95–96, 92 S.Ct., at 2289–2290.

It was with this understanding in mind that, in American Mini Theatres, a majority of this Court decided that, at least with respect to businesses that purvey sexually explicit materials,[2] zoning ordinances designed *930 to combat the undesirable secondary effects of such businesses are to be reviewed under the standards applicable to "content-neutral" time, place, and manner regulations. Justice STEVENS, writing for the plurality, concluded that the city of Detroit was entitled to draw a distinction between adult theaters and other kinds of theaters "without violating the government's paramount obligation of neutrality in its regulation of protected communication," 427 U.S., at 70, 96 S.Ct., at 2452, noting that "[i]t is th [e] secondary effect which these zoning ordinances attempt to avoid, not the dissemination of 'offensive' speech," id., at 71, n. 34, 96 S.Ct., at 2453, n. 34. Justice POWELL, in concurrence, elaborated:

> "[The] dissent misconceives the issue in this case by insisting that it involves an impermissible time, place, and manner restriction based on the content of expression. It involves nothing of the kind. We have here merely a decision by the city to treat certain movie theaters differently because they have markedly different effects upon their surroundings.... Moreover, even if this were a case involving a special governmental response to the content of one type of movie, it is possible that the result would be supported by a line of cases recognizing that the government can tailor its reaction to different types of speech according to the degree to which its special and overriding interests are implicated. 50 See, e.g., Tinker v. Des Moines School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 509–511 [89 S.Ct. 733, 737–739, 21 L.Ed.2d 731] (1969); Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 413–414 [94 S.Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L.Ed.2d 224] (1974); Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828, 842–844 [96 S.Ct. 1211, 1219–1220, 47 L.Ed.2d 505] (1976) (POWELL, J., concurring); cf. CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548 [93 S.Ct. 2880, 37 L.Ed.2d 796] (1973)." Id., at 82, n. 6, 96 S.Ct., at 2458, n. 6.

[2] The appropriate inquiry in this case, then, is whether the Renton ordinance is designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and allows for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. See Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S., at 293, 104 S.Ct., at 3069; International Society for Krishna Consciousness, 452 U.S., at 649, 654, 101 S.Ct., at 2564, 2567. It is clear that the ordinance meets such a standard. As a majority of this Court recognized in American Mini Theatres, a city's "interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect." 427 U.S., at 71, 96 S.Ct., at 2453 (plurality opinion); see id., at 80, 96 S.Ct., at 2457 (POWELL, J., concurring) ("Nor is there doubt that the interests furthered by this ordinance are both important and substantial"). Exactly the same vital governmental interests are at stake here.

The Court of Appeals ruled, however, that because the Renton ordinance was enacted without the benefit of studies specifically relating to "the particular problems or needs of Renton," the city's justifications for the ordinance were "conclusory and speculative." 748 F.2d, at 537. We think the Court of Appeals imposed on the city an unnecessarily rigid burden of proof. The record in this case reveals that Renton relied heavily on the experience of, and studies produced by, the city of Seattle. In Seattle, as in Renton, the adult theater zoning ordinance was aimed at preventing the secondary effects caused by the presence of even one such theater in a given neighborhood. See Northend Cinema, Inc. v. Seattle, 90 Wash.2d 709, 585 P.2d 1153 (1978). The opinion of the Supreme Court of Washington in Northend Cinema, which 51 was before the Renton City Council when it enacted the ordinance in question here, described Seattle's experience as follows:

> "The amendments to the City's zoning code which are at issue here are the *931 culmination of a long period of study and discussion of the problems of adult movie theaters in residential areas of the City.... [T]he City's Department of Community Development made a study of the need for zoning controls of adult theaters.... The study analyzed the City's zoning scheme, comprehensive plan, and land uses around existing adult motion picture theaters...." Id., at 711, 585 P.2d, at 1155.
>
> "[T]he [trial] court heard extensive testimony regarding the history and purpose of these ordinances. It heard expert testimony on the adverse effects of the presence of adult motion picture theaters on neighborhood children and community improvement efforts. The court's detailed findings, which include a finding that the location of adult theaters has a harmful effect on the area and contribute to neighborhood blight, are supported by substantial evidence in the record." Id., at 713, 585 P.2d, at 1156.
>
> "The record is replete with testimony regarding the effects of adult movie theater locations on residential neighborhoods." Id., at 719, 585 P.2d, at 1159.

[3] We hold that Renton was entitled to rely on the experiences of Seattle and other cities, and in particular on the "detailed findings" summarized in the Washington

2 See American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 70, 96 S.Ct., at 2452 (plurality opinion) ("[I]t is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate ...").

Supreme Court's Northend Cinema opinion, in enacting its adult theater zoning ordinance. The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the 52 problem that the city addresses. That was the case here. Nor is our holding affected by the fact that Seattle ultimately chose a different method of adult theater zoning than that chosen by Renton, since Seattle's choice of a different remedy to combat the secondary effects of adult theaters does not call into question either Seattle's identification of those secondary effects or the relevance of Seattle's experience to Renton.

[4] We also find no constitutional defect in the method chosen by Renton to further its substantial interests. Cities may regulate adult theaters by dispersing them, as in Detroit, or by effectively concentrating them, as in Renton. "It is not our function to appraise the wisdom of [the city's] decision to require adult theaters to be separated rather than concentrated in the same areas.... [T]he city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems." American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 71, 96 S.Ct., at 2453 (plurality opinion). Moreover, the Renton ordinance is "narrowly tailored" to affect only that category of theaters shown to produce the unwanted secondary effects, thus avoiding the flaw that proved fatal to the regulations in Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981), and Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975).

Respondents contend that the Renton ordinance is "under-inclusive," in that it fails to regulate other kinds of adult businesses that are likely to produce secondary effects similar to those produced by adult theaters. On this record the contention must fail. There is no evidence that, at the time the Renton ordinance was enacted, any other adult business was located in, or was contemplating moving into, Renton. In fact, Resolution No. 2368, enacted in October 1980, states that "the City of Renton does not, at the present time, have any business whose primary purpose is the sale, rental, or showing of sexually explicit materials." App. 42. That Renton chose first to address the potential problems created 53 by one particular kind of adult business in no way suggests that the city has "singled out" adult theaters for discriminatory treatment. We simply have no basis on *932 this record for assuming that Renton will not, in the future, amend its ordinance to include other kinds of adult businesses that have been shown to produce the same kinds of secondary effects as adult theaters. See Williamson v. Lee Optical Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 488–489, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464–465, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955).

Finally, turning to the question whether the Renton ordinance allows for reasonable alternative avenues of communication, we note that the ordinance leaves some 520 acres, or more than five percent of the entire land area of Renton, open to use as adult theater sites. The District Court found, and the Court of Appeals did not dispute the finding, that the 520 acres of land consists of "[a]mple, accessible real estate," including "acreage in all stages of development from raw land to developed, industrial, warehouse, office, and shopping space that is criss-crossed by freeways, highways, and roads." App. to Juris. Statement 28a.

Respondents argue, however, that some of the land in question is already occupied by existing businesses, that "practically none" of the undeveloped land is currently for sale or lease, and that in general there are no "commercially viable" adult theater sites within the 520 acres left open by the Renton ordinance. Brief for Appellees 34–37. The Court of Appeals accepted these arguments,[3] concluded that 54 the 520 acres was not truly "available" land, and therefore held that the Renton ordinance "would result in a substantial restriction" on speech. 748 F.2d, at 534.

3 The Court of Appeals' rejection of the District Court's findings on this issue may have stemmed in part from the belief, expressed elsewhere in the Court of Appeals' opinion, that, under Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States, Inc., 466 U.S. 485, 104 S.Ct. 1949, 80 L.Ed.2d 502 (1984), appellate courts have a duty to review de novo all mixed findings of law and fact relevant to the application of First Amendment principles. See 748 F.2d 527, 535 (1984). We need not review the correctness of the Court of Appeals' interpretation of Bose Corp., since we determine that, under any standard of review, the District Court's findings should not have been disturbed.

We disagree with both the reasoning and the conclusion of the Court of Appeals. That respondents must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation. And although we have cautioned against the enactment of zoning regulations that have "the effect of suppressing, or greatly restricting access to, lawful speech," American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S., at 71, n. 35, 96 S.Ct., at 2453, n. 35 (plurality opinion), we have never suggested that the First Amendment compels the Government to ensure that adult theaters, or any other kinds of speech-related businesses for that matter, will be able to obtain sites at bargain prices. See id., at 78, 96 S.Ct., at 2456 (POWELL, J., concurring) ("The inquiry for First Amendment purposes is not concerned with economic impact"). In our view, the First Amendment requires only that Renton refrain from effectively denying respondents a reasonable opportunity to open and operate an adult theater within the city, and the ordinance before us easily meets this requirement.

In sum, we find that the Renton ordinance represents a valid governmental response to the "admittedly serious problems" created by adult theaters. See id., at 71, 96 S.Ct., at 2453 (plurality opinion). Renton has not used "the power to zone as a pretext for suppressing expression," id., at 84, 96 S.Ct., at 2459 (POWELL, J., concurring), but rather has sought to make some areas available for adult theaters and their patrons, while at the same time preserving the quality of life in the community at large by preventing those theaters from locating in other areas. This, after all, is the essence of zoning. Here, as in American Mini Theatres, the city has enacted a zoning ordinance that meets these goals while also satisfying the dictates of the 55 *933 First Amendment.[4] The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore

Reversed.

Justice BLACKMUN concurs in the result.

Justice BRENNAN, with whom Justice MARSHALL joins, dissenting.

Renton's zoning ordinance selectively imposes limitations on the location of a movie theater based exclusively on the content of the films shown there. The constitutionality of the ordinance is therefore not correctly analyzed under standards applied to content-neutral time, place, and manner restrictions. But even assuming that the ordinance may fairly be characterized as content neutral, it is plainly unconstitutional under the standards established by the decisions of this Court. Although the Court's analysis is limited to 56 cases involving "businesses that purvey sexually explicit materials," ante, at 929, and n. 2, and thus does not affect our holdings in cases involving state regulation of other kinds of speech, I dissent.

I

"[A] constitutionally permissible time, place, or manner restriction may not be based upon either the content or subject matter of speech." Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n of N. Y., 447 U.S. 530, 536, 100

4 Respondents argue, as an "alternative basis" for affirming the decision of the Court of Appeals, that the Renton ordinance violates their rights under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. As should be apparent from our preceding discussion, respondents can fare no better under the Equal Protection Clause than under the First Amendment itself. See Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S., at 63–73, 96 S.Ct., at 2448–2454.

Respondents also argue that the Renton ordinance is unconstitutionally vague. More particularly, respondents challenge the ordinance's application to buildings "used" for presenting sexually explicit films, where the term "used" describes "a continuing course of conduct of exhibiting [sexually explicit films] in a manner which appeals to a prurient interest." App. to Juris. Statement 96a. We reject respondents' "vagueness" argument for the same reasons that led us to reject a similar challenge in American Mini Theatres, supra. There, the Detroit ordinance applied to theaters "used to present material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on [sexually explicit matter]." Id., at 53, 96 S.Ct., at 2444. We held that "even if there may be some uncertainty about the effect of the ordinances on other litigants, they are unquestionably applicable to these respondents." Id., at 58–59, 96 S.Ct., at 2446. We also held that the Detroit ordinance created no "significant deterrent effect" that might justify invocation of the First Amendment "overbreadth" doctrine. Id., at 59–61, 96 S.Ct., at 2446–2448.

S.Ct. 2326, 2332, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980). The Court asserts that the ordinance is "aimed not at the content of the films shown at 'adult motion picture theatres,' but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community," ante, at 929 (emphasis in original), and thus is simply a time, place, and manner regulation.[1] This analysis is misguided.

[1] The Court apparently finds comfort in the fact that the ordinance does not "deny use to those wishing to express less favored or more controversial views." Ante, at 929. However, content-based discrimination is not rendered "any less odious" because it distinguishes "among entire classes of ideas, rather than among points of view within a particular class." Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298, 316, 94 S.Ct. 2714, 2724, 41 L.Ed.2d 770 (1974) (BRENNAN, J., dissenting); see also Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n of N.Y., 447 U.S. 530, 537, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 2333, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980) ("The First Amendment's hostility to content-based regulation extends not only to restrictions on particular viewpoints, but also to prohibition of public discussion of an entire topic"). Moreover, the Court's conclusion that the restrictions imposed here were viewpoint neutral is patently flawed. "As a practical matter, the speech suppressed by restrictions such as those involved [here] will almost invariably carry an implicit, if not explicit, message in favor of more relaxed sexual mores. Such restrictions, in other words, have a potent viewpoint-differential impact.... To treat such restrictions as viewpoint-neutral seems simply to ignore reality." Stone, Restrictions of Speech Because of its Content: The Peculiar Case of Subject-Matter Restrictions, 46 U.Chi.L.Rev. 81, 111–112 (1978).

The fact that adult movie theaters may cause harmful "secondary" land-use effects may arguably give Renton a compelling *934 reason to regulate such establishments; it does not mean, however, that such regulations are content neutral. 57 Because the ordinance imposes special restrictions on certain kinds of speech on the basis of content, I cannot simply accept, as the Court does, Renton's claim that the ordinance was not designed to suppress the content of adult movies. "[W]hen regulation is based on the content of speech, governmental action must be scrutinized more carefully to ensure that communication has not been prohibited 'merely because public officials disapprove the speaker's views.' " Consolidated Edison Co., supra, at 536, 100 S.Ct., at 2332 (quoting Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 282, 71 S.Ct. 325, 333, 95 L.Ed. 267 (1951) (Frankfurter, J., concurring in result)). "[B]efore deferring to [Renton's] judgment, [we] must be convinced that the city is seriously and comprehensively addressing" secondary-land use effects associated with adult movie theaters. Metromedia, Inc. v. San Diego, 453 U.S. 490, 531, 101 S.Ct. 2882, 2904, 69 L.Ed.2d 800 (1981) (BRENNAN, J., concurring in judgment). In this case, both the language of the ordinance and its dubious legislative history belie the Court's conclusion that "the city's pursuit of its zoning interests here was unrelated to the suppression of free expression." Ante, at 929.

A

The ordinance discriminates on its face against certain forms of speech based on content. Movie theaters specializing in "adult motion pictures" may not be located within 1,000 feet of any residential zone, single- or multiple-family dwelling, church, park, or school. Other motion picture theaters, and other forms of "adult entertainment," such as bars, massage parlors, and adult bookstores, are not subject to the same restrictions. This selective treatment strongly suggests that Renton was interested not in controlling the "secondary effects" associated with adult businesses, but in discriminating against adult theaters based on the content of the films they exhibit. The Court ignores this discriminatory treatment, declaring that Renton is free "to address the potential problems created by one particular kind of adult business," ante, at 931, and to amend the ordinance in the 58 future to include other adult enterprises. Ante, at 932 (citing Williamson v. Lee Optical Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 488–489, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464–465, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955)).[2] However, because of the First Amendment interests at stake here, this one-step-at-a-time analysis is wholly inappropriate.

[2] The Court also explains that "[t]here is no evidence that, at the time the Renton ordinance was enacted, any other adult business was located in, or was contemplating moving into, Renton." Ante, at 931. However, at the time the ordinance was enacted, there was no evidence that any adult movie theaters were located in, or considering moving to, Renton. Thus, there was no legitimate reason for the city to treat adult movie theaters differently from other adult businesses.

"This Court frequently has upheld underinclusive classifications on the sound theory that a legislature may deal with one part of a problem without addressing all of it. See e.g., Williamson v. Lee Optical Inc., 348 U.S. 483, 488–489, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464–465, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955). This presumption of statutory validity, however, has less force when a classification turns on the subject matter of expression. '[A]bove all else, the First Amendment means that government has no power to restrict expression because of its message, its ideas, its subject matter, or its content.' Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S., at 95 [92 S.Ct., at 2290]." Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 215, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 2275, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975).

In this case, the city has not justified treating adult movie theaters differently from other adult entertainment businesses. The ordinance's underinclusiveness is cogent evidence that it was aimed at the content of the films shown in adult movie theaters.

*935 B

Shortly after this lawsuit commenced, the Renton City Council amended the ordinance, adding a provision explaining that its intention in adopting the ordinance had been "to promote the City of Renton's great interest in protecting and preserving the quality of its neighborhoods, commercial districts, and the quality of urban life through effective land 59 use planning." App. to Juris. Statement 81a. The amended ordinance also lists certain conclusory "findings" concerning adult entertainment land uses that the Council purportedly relied upon in adopting the ordinance. Id., at 81a–86 a. The city points to these provisions as evidence that the ordinance was designed to control the secondary effects associated with adult movie theaters, rather than to suppress the content of the films they exhibit. However, the "legislative history" of the ordinance strongly suggests otherwise.

Prior to the amendment, there was no indication that the ordinance was designed to address any "secondary effects" a single adult theater might create. In addition to the suspiciously coincidental timing of the amendment, many of the City Council's "findings" do not relate to legitimate land-use concerns. As the Court of Appeals observed, "[b]oth the magistrate and the district court recognized that many of the stated reasons for the ordinance were no more than expressions of dislike for the subject matter." 748 F.2d 527, 537 (CA9 1984). [3] That some residents may be offended by the content of the films shown at adult movie theaters cannot form the basis for state regulation of speech. See Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 69 S.Ct. 894, 93 L.Ed. 1131 (1949).

3 For example, "finding" number 2 states that
"[l]ocation of adult entertainment land uses on the main commercial thoroughfares of the City gives an impression of legitimacy to, and causes a loss of sensitivity to the adverse effect of pornography upon children, established family relations, respect for marital relationship and for the sanctity of marriage relations of others, and the concept of non-aggressive, consensual sexual relations." App. to Juris. Statement 86a.
"Finding" number 6 states that
"[l]ocation of adult land uses in close proximity to residential uses, churches, parks, and other public facilities, and schools, will cause a degradation of the community standard of morality. Pornographic material has a degrading effect upon the relationship between spouses." Ibid.

Some of the "findings" added by the City Council do relate to supposed "secondary effects" associated with adult movie 60 theaters. [4] However, the Court cannot, as it does, merely accept these post hoc statements at face value. "[T]he presumption of validity that traditionally attends a local government's exercise of its zoning powers carries little, if any, weight where the zoning regulation trenches on rights of expression protected under the First Amendment." Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 77, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 2187, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) (BLACKMUN, J., concurring). As the Court of Appeals concluded, "[t]he record presented by Renton to support its asserted interest in enacting the zoning ordinance is very thin." 748 F.2d, at 536.

4 For example, "finding" number 12 states that
"[l]ocation of adult entertainment land uses in proximity to residential uses, churches, parks and other public facilities, and schools, may lead to increased levels of criminal activities, including prostitution, rape, incest and assaults in the vicinity of such adult entertainment land uses." Id., at 83a.

The amended ordinance states that its "findings" summarize testimony received by the City Council at certain public hearings. While none of this testimony was ever recorded or preserved, a city official reported that residents had objected to having adult movie theaters located in their community. However, the official was unable to recount any testimony as to how adult movie theaters would specifically affect the schools, churches, parks, or residences "protected" by the ordinance. See App. 190–192. The City Council conducted no studies, and heard no expert testimony, on how the protected uses would be affected by the presence of an adult movie theater, and never considered whether residents' concerns could be met by "restrictions *936 that are less intrusive on protected forms of expression." Schad, supra, 452 U.S., at 74, 101 S.Ct., at 2186. As a result, any "findings" regarding "secondary effects" caused by adult movie theaters, or the need to adopt specific locational requirements to combat such effects, were not "findings" at all, but purely speculative conclusions. Such "findings" were not such as are required to justify the burdens 61 the ordinance imposed upon constitutionally protected expression.

The Court holds that Renton was entitled to rely on the experiences of cities like Detroit and Seattle, which had enacted special zoning regulations for adult entertainment businesses after studying the adverse effects caused by such establishments. However, even assuming that Renton was concerned with the same problems as Seattle and Detroit, it never actually reviewed any of the studies conducted by those cities. Renton had no basis for determining if any of the "findings" made by these cities were relevant to Renton's problems or needs. [5] Moreover, since Renton ultimately adopted zoning regulations different from either Detroit or Seattle, these "studies" provide no basis for assessing the effectiveness of the particular restrictions adopted under the ordinance. [6] Renton cannot merely rely on the general experiences 62 of Seattle or Detroit, for it must "justify its ordinance in the context of Renton's problems—not Seattle's or Detroit's problems." 748 F.2d, at 536 (emphasis in original).

5 As part of the amendment passed after this lawsuit commenced, the City Council added a statement that it had intended to rely on the Washington Supreme Court's opinion in Northend Cinema, Inc. v. Seattle, 90 Wash.2d 709, 585 P.2d 1153 (1978), cert. denied sub nom. Apple Theatre, Inc. v. Seattle, 441 U.S. 946, 99 S.Ct. 2166, 60 L.Ed.2d 1048 (1979), which upheld Seattle's zoning regulations against constitutional attack. Again, despite the suspicious coincidental timing of the amendment, the Court holds that "Renton was entitled to rely ... on the 'detailed findings' summarized in the ... Northend Cinema opinion." Ante, at 931. In Northend Cinema, the court noted that "[t]he record is replete with testimony regarding the effects of adult movie theater locations on residential neighborhoods." 90 Wash.2d, at 719, 585 P.2d, at 1159. The opinion however, does not explain the evidence it purports to summarize, and provides no basis for determining whether Seattle's experience is relevant to Renton's.

6 As the Court of Appeals observed:

> "Although the Renton ordinance purports to copy Detroit's and Seattle's, it does not solve the same problem in the same manner. The Detroit ordinance was intended to disperse adult theaters throughout the city so that no one district would deteriorate due to a concentration of such theaters. The Seattle ordinance, by contrast, was intended to concentrate the theaters in one place so that the whole city would not bear the effects of them. The Renton Ordinance is allegedly aimed at protecting certain uses—schools, parks, churches and residential areas—from the perceived unfavorable effects of an adult theater." 748 F.2d, at 536 (emphasis in original).

In sum, the circumstances here strongly suggest that the ordinance was designed to suppress expression, even that constitutionally protected, and thus was not to be analyzed as a content-neutral time, place, and manner restriction. The Court allows Renton to conceal its illicit motives, however, by reliance on the fact that other communities adopted similar restrictions. The Court's approach largely immunizes such measures from judicial scrutiny, since a municipality can readily find other municipal ordinances to rely upon, thus always retrospectively justifying special zoning regulations for adult theaters. [7] Rather than speculate about Renton's motives for adopting such measures, our cases require the conclusion that the ordinance, like any other content-based restriction on speech, is constitutional "only if the [city] can show *937 that [it] is a precisely drawn means of serving a compelling [governmental] interest." Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n of N. Y., 447 U.S., at 540, 100 S.Ct., at 2334; see also Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455, 461–462, 100 S.Ct. 2286, 2290–2291,

65 L.Ed.2d 263 (1980); Police Department of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 99, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2292, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972). Only this strict approach can insure that cities will not use their zoning powers as a pretext for suppressing constitutionally protected expression.

7 As one commentator has noted:

> "[A]nyone with any knowledge of human nature should naturally assume that the decision to adopt almost any content-based restriction might have been affected by an antipathy on the part of at least some legislators to the ideas or information being suppressed. The logical assumption, in other words, is not that there is not improper motivation but, rather, because legislators are only human, that there is a substantial risk that an impermissible consideration has in fact colored the deliberative process." Stone, supra n. 1, at 106.

63 Applying this standard to the facts of this case, the ordinance is patently unconstitutional. Renton has not shown that locating adult movie theaters in proximity to its churches, schools, parks, and residences will necessarily result in undesirable "secondary effects," or that these problems could not be effectively addressed by less intrusive restrictions.

II

Even assuming that the ordinance should be treated like a content-neutral time, place, and manner restriction, I would still find it unconstitutional. "[R]estrictions of this kind are valid provided ... that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information." Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3069, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984); Heffron v. International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 648, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 2564, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981). In applying this standard, the Court "fails to subject the alleged interests of the [city] to the degree of scrutiny required to ensure that expressive activity protected by the First Amendment remains free of unnecessary limitations." Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S., at 301, 104 S.Ct., at 3073 (MARSHALL, J., dissenting). The Court "evidently [and wrongly] assumes that the balance struck by [Renton] officials is deserving of deference so long as it does not appear to be tainted by content discrimination." Id., at 315, 104 S.Ct., at 3080. Under a proper application of the relevant standards, the ordinance is clearly unconstitutional.

A

The Court finds that the ordinance was designed to further Renton's substantial interest in "preserv[ing] the quality of urban life." Ante, at 930. As explained above, the record here is simply insufficient to support this assertion. The city made no showing as to how uses "protected" by the ordinance would be affected by the presence of an adult movie theater. Thus, the Renton ordinance is clearly distinguishable from 64 the Detroit zoning ordinance upheld in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976). The Detroit ordinance, which was designed to disperse adult theaters throughout the city, was supported by the testimony of urban planners and real estate experts regarding the adverse effects of locating several such businesses in the same neighborhood. Id., at 55, 96 S.Ct., at 2445; see also Northend Cinema, Inc. v. Seattle, 90 Wash.2d 709, 711, 585 P.2d 1153, 1154–1155 (1978), cert. denied sub nom. Apple Theatre, Inc. v. Seattle, 441 U.S. 946, 99 S.Ct. 2166, 60 L.Ed.2d 1048 (1979) (Seattle zoning ordinance was the "culmination of a long period of study and discussion"). Here, the Renton Council was aware only that some residents had complained about adult movie theaters, and that other localities had adopted special zoning restrictions for such establishments. These are not "facts" sufficient to justify the burdens the ordinance imposed upon constitutionally protected expression.

B

Finally, the ordinance is invalid because it does not provide for reasonable alternative avenues of communication. The District Court found that the ordinance left 520 acres in Renton available for adult theater sites, an area comprising about five *938 percent of the city. However, the Court of Appeals found that because much of this land was already occupied, "[l]imiting adult theater uses to these areas is a substantial restriction on speech." 748 F.2d, at 534. Many "available" sites are also largely unsuited for use by movie theaters. See App. 231, 241. Again, these facts serve to distinguish this case from American Mini Theaters, where there was no indication that the Detroit zoning ordinance seriously limited the locations available for adult businesses. See American Mini Theaters, supra, 427 U.S., at 71, n. 35, 96 S.Ct., at 2453 n. 35 (plurality opinion) ("The situation would be quite different if the ordinance had the effect of ... greatly restricting access to ... lawful speech"); see also Basiardanes v. City of Galveston, 682 F.2d 1203, 1214 (CA5 1982) (ordinance effectively banned adult theaters 65 by restricting them to " 'the most unattractive, inaccessible, and inconvenient areas of a city' "); Purple Onion, Inc. v. Jackson, 511 F.Supp. 1207, 1217 (ND Ga.1981) (proposed sites for adult entertainment uses were either "unavailable, unusable, or so inaccessible to the public that ... they amount to no locations").

Despite the evidence in the record, the Court reasons that the fact "[t]hat respondents must fend for themselves in the real estate market, on an equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, does not give rise to a First Amendment violation." Ante, at 932. However, respondents are not on equal footing with other prospective purchasers and lessees, but must conduct business under severe restrictions not imposed upon other establishments. The Court also argues that the First Amendment does not compel "the government to ensure that adult theaters, or any other kinds of speech-related businesses for that matter, will be able to obtain sites at bargain prices." Ibid. However, respondents do not ask Renton to guarantee low-price sites for their businesses, but seek only a reasonable opportunity to operate adult theaters in the city. By denying them this opportunity, Renton can effectively ban a form of protected speech from its borders. The ordinance "greatly restrict[s] access to ... lawful speech," American Mini Theatres, supra, 427 U.S., at 71, n. 35, 96 S.Ct., at 2453, n. 35 (plurality opinion), and is plainly unconstitutional.

All Citations

475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29, 54 USLW 4160, 12 Media L. Rep. 1721

96 S.Ct. 2440
Supreme Court of the United States

Coleman A. YOUNG, Mayor the City of Detroit, et al., Petitioners,
v.
AMERICAN MINI THEATRES, INC., et al.

No. 75-312.
|
Argued March 24, 1976.
|
Decided June 24, 1976.
|
Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1976.

See 429 U.S. 873, 97 S.Ct. 191.

The operator of an "adult" movie theater appealed from a ruling of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division, 373 F.Supp. 363, upholding the validity of Detroit ordinances prohibiting operation of any "adult" movie theater, bookstore and similar establishments within 1000 feet of any other such establishment, or within 500 feet of a residential area. The Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, reversed, 518 F.2d 1014. Following grant of certiorari, the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Stevens, held that where theaters proposed to offer adult fare on regular basis and alleged that they admitted only adult patrons, and neither indicated any plan to exhibit pictures even arguably outside coverage of the ordinances, so that theaters were not affected by alleged vagueness, their challenge to ordinances on ground of alleged vagueness resulting in inadequate notice of what was prohibited would not be considered though ordinances affected communication protected by First Amendment. The ordinances were not violative of First Amendment rights or of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Judgment of Court of Appeals reversed.

Mr. Justice Powell filed an opinion concurring in part.

Mr. Justice Stewart dissented and filed opinion in which Mr. Justice Brennan, Mr. Justice Marshall and Mr. Justice Blackmun joined.

Mr. Justice Blackmun dissented and filed opinion in which Mr. Justice Brennan, Mr. Justice Stewart and Mr. Justice Marshall joined.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Where theaters proposed to offer adult fare on regular basis and alleged that they admitted only adult patrons, and neither indicated any plan to exhibit pictures even arguably outside coverage of municipal ordinances, so that theaters were not affected by alleged vagueness, their challenge to ordinances on ground of alleged vagueness resulting in inadequate notice of what was prohibited would not be considered though ordinances affected communication protected by First Amendment. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

91 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Where very existence of statute may cause persons not before court to refrain from engaging in constitutionally protected speech or expression, exception, in allowing litigant to assert rights of third parties, is justified by overriding importance of maintaining free and open market for interchange of ideas, but if deterrent effect of statute on legitimate expression is not both real and substantial and if statute is readily subject to narrowing construction by state courts, litigant is not permitted to assert rights of third parties. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

125 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Hypothetical questions

There being less vital interest in uninhibited exhibition of material on borderline between pornography and artistic expression than in free dissemination of ideas of social and political significance, and where limited amount of uncertainty in ordinances was easily susceptible of narrowing construction, case was inappropriate one in which to adjudicate hypothetical claims of persons not before the court. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

29 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Zoning and Planning
Entertainment and recreation;theaters

Municipality may control location of theaters as well as location of other commercial establishments, either by confining them to certain specified commercial zones or by requiring that they be dispersed throughout the city. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

36 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Prior restraints

Constitutional Law
Zoning and Land Use

Mere fact that commercial exploitation of material protected by First Amendment was subjected to zoning and other licensing requirements was not sufficient reason for invalidating city ordinances as prior restraints on free speech. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

216 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Reasonableness

Reasonable regulations of time, place and manner of protected speech, where those regulations are necessary to further significant governmental interests, are permitted by First Amendment. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

111 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Question whether speech is, or is not, protected by First Amendment often depends on content of speech. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Even within area of protected speech, difference in content may require a different governmental response. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

General rule prohibits regulation based on content of protected communication, and essence of rule is need for absolute neutrality by government; its regulation of communication may not be affected by sympathy or hostility for point of view being expressed by communicator. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

26 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Difference in protection given to other speech

Measure of constitutional protection to be afforded commercial speech will surely be governed largely by content of communication; difference between commercial price and product advertising and ideological communication permits regulation of former that First Amendment would not tolerate with respect to latter. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

22 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law

Motion Pictures and Videos

First Amendment protects communication, in area of motion picture films of sexual activities, from total suppression, but state may legitimately use contents of these materials as basis for placing them in different classification from other motion pictures. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

105 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Municipal Corporations

Nature and scope of power of municipality

City must be allowed reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

22 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law

Adult uses

Zoning and Planning

Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

In view of serious problems to which city's ordinances were addressed, in view of district court's finding that burden on First Amendment rights from enforcement of ordinances would be slight, and in view of factual basis, disclosed by record, for common council's conclusion that restriction imposed would have desired effect, city's interest in present and future character of its neighborhoods supported its classification of motion pictures, and, accordingly, zoning ordinances providing that adult motion picture theaters not be located within 1000 feet of two other regulated uses or within 500 feet of a residential area did not violate equal protection clause of Fourteenth Amendment. (Per Mr. Justice Stevens with three Justices concurring.) U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

480 Cases that cite this headnote

2442 Syllabus []

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

50 Respondent operators of two adult motion picture theaters brought this action against petitioner city officials for injunctive relief and a declaratory judgment of unconstitutionality regarding two 1972 Detroit zoning ordinances that amended an "Anti-Skid Row Ordinance" adopted 10 years earlier. The 1972 ordinances provide that an adult theater may not (apart from a special waiver) be located within 1,000 feet of any two other "regulated uses" or within 500 feet of a residential area. The term "regulated uses" applies to 10 different kinds of establishments in addition to adult theaters, including adult book stores, cabarets, bars, taxi dance halls, and hotels. If the theater is used to present "material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting . . . 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas' " it is an "adult" establishment. The District Court upheld the ordinances, and granted petitioners' motion for summary judgment. The Court of Appeals *2443 reversed, holding that the ordinances constituted a prior restraint on constitutionally protected communication and violated equal protection. Respondents, in addition to asserting the correctness of that court's ruling with respect to those constitutional issues, contend that the ordinances are void for vagueness. While not attacking the specificity of the definitions of sexual activities or anatomical areas, respondents maintain (1) that they cannot determine how much of the described activity may be permissible before an exhibition is "characterized by an emphasis" on such matter, and (2) that the ordinances do not specify adequate procedures or standards for obtaining a waiver of the 1,000-foot restriction. Held:

1. The ordinances as applied to these respondents do not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment on the ground of vagueness. Pp. 2446-2448.

(a) Neither of the asserted elements of vagueness has affected these respondents, both of which propose to offer adult fare on a regular basis and allege no ground for claiming or anticipating any waiver of the 1,000-foot restriction. P. 2446.

51 (b) T ordinances will have no demonstrably significant effect on the exhibition of films protected by the First Amendment. To the extent that any area of doubt exists as to the amount of sexually explicit activity that may be portrayed before material can be said to be "characterized by an emphasis" on such matter, there is no reason why the ordinances are not "readily subject to a narrowing construction by the state courts." This would therefore be an inappropriate case to apply the principle urged by respondents that they be permitted to challenge the ordinances, not because their own rights of free expression are violated, but because of the assumption that the ordinances' very existence may cause others not before the court to refrain from constitutionally protected speech or expression. Pp. 2446-2448.

2. The ordinances are not invalid under the First Amendment as prior restraints on protected communication because of the licensing or zoning requirements. Though adult films may be exhibited commercially only in licensed theaters, that is also true of all films. That the place where films may be exhibited is regulated does not violate free expression, the city's interest in planning and regulating the use of property for commercial purposes being clearly adequate to support the locational restriction. P. 2448.

518 F.2d 1014, reversed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Maureen P. Reilly, Detroit, Mich., for petitioners.

Stephen M. Taylor, Detroit, Mich., and John H. Weston for respondents.

Opinion

52 Mr. Justice STEVENS delivered the opinion of the Court. **

 Part III of this opinion is joined by only THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice WHITE, and Mr. Justice REHNQUIST.

Zoning ordinances adopted by the city of Detroit differentiate between motion picture theaters which exhibit sexually explicit "adult" movies and those which do not. The principal question presented by this case is whether that statutory classification is unconstitutional because it is based on the content of communication protected by the First Amendment. [1]

1 "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press . . . ." This Amendment is made applicable to the States by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Edwards v. South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229, 83 S.Ct. 680, 9 L.Ed.2d 697.

Effective November 2, 1972, Detroit adopted the ordinances challenged in this litigation. Instead of concentrating "adult" theaters in limited zones, these ordinances require that such theaters be dispersed. Specifically, an adult theater may not be located within 1,000 feet of any two other *2444 "regulated uses" or within 500 feet of a residential area. [2] The term "regulated uses" includes 10 different kinds of establishments in addition to adult theaters. [3]

2 The District Court held that the original form of the 500-foot restriction was invalid because it was measured from "any building containing a residential, dwelling or rooming unit." The city did not appeal from that ruling, but adopted an amendment prohibiting the operation of an adult theater within 500 feet of any area zoned for residential use. The amended restriction is not directly challenged in this litigation.

3 In addition to adult motion picture theaters and "mini" theaters, which contain less than 50 seats, the regulated uses include adult bookstores; cabarets (group "D"); establishments for the sale of beer or intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises; hotels or motels; pawnshops; pool or billiard halls; public lodging houses; secondhand stores; shoeshine parlors; and taxi dance halls.

53 The classification of a theater as "adult" is expressly predicated on the character of the motion pictures which it exhibits. If the theater is used to present "material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas,' "[4] it is an adult establishment.[5]

4 These terms are defined as follows:
"For the purpose of this Section, 'Specified Sexual Activities' is defined as:
"1. Human Genitals in a state of sexual stimulation or arousal;
"2. Acts of human masturbation, sexual intercourse or sodomy;
"3. Fondling or other erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttock or female breast.
"And 'Specified Anatomical Areas' is defined as:
"1. Less than completely and opaquely covered: (a) human genitals, pubic region, (b) buttock, and (c) female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola; and
"2. Human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely and opaquely covered."

5 There are three types of adult establishments bookstores, motion picture theaters, and mini motion picture theaters defined respectively as follows:
"Adult Book Store
"An establishment having as a substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade, books, magazines, and other periodicals which are distinguished or characterized by their emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas,' (as defined below), or an establishment with a segment or section devoted to the sale or display of such material.
"Adult Motion Picture Theater
"An enclosed building with a capacity of 50 or more persons used for presenting material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas,' (as defined below) for observation by patrons therein.
"Adult Mini Motion Picture Theater
"An enclosed building with a capacity for less than 50 persons used for presenting material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas,' (as defined below), for observation by patrons therein."

54 The 1972 ordinances were amendments to an "Anti-Skid Row Ordinance" which had been adopted 10 years earlier. At that time the Detroit Common Council made a finding that some uses of property are especially injurious to a neighborhood when they are concentrated in limited areas.[6] The decision to add adult motion picture theaters and adult book stores to the list of businesses which, apart from a special waiver,[7] *2445 could not be located within 1,000 feet of two other "regulated uses," was, in part, a response to the significant growth in the number 55 of such establishments.[8] In the opinion of urban planners and real estate experts who supported the ordinances, the location of several such businesses in the same neighborhood tends to attract an undesirable quantity and quality of transients, adversely affects property values, causes an increase in crime, especially prostitution, and encourages residents and businesses to move elsewhere.

6 Section 66.000 of the Official Zoning Ordinance (1972) recited:
"In the development and execution of this Ordinance, it is recognized that there are some uses which, because of their very nature, are recognized as having serious objectionable operational characteristics, particularly when several of them are concentrated under certain circumstances thereby having a deleterious effect upon the adjacent areas. Special regulation of these uses is necessary to insure that these adverse effects will not contribute to the blighting or downgrading of the surrounding neighborhood. These special regulations are itemized in this section. The primary control or regulation is for the purpose of preventing a concentration of these uses in any one area (i. e. not more than two such uses within one thousand feet of each other which would create such adverse effects)."

7 The ordinance authorizes the Zoning Commission to waive the 1,000-foot restriction if it finds:
"a) That the proposed use will not be contrary to the public interest or injurious to nearby properties, and that the spirit and intent of this Ordinance will be observed.
"b) That the proposed use will not enlarge or encourage the development of a 'skid row' area.
"c) That the establishment of an additional regulated use in the area will not be contrary to any program of neigh(bor)hood conservation nor will it interfere with any program of urban renewal.

"d) That all applicable regulations of this Ordinance will be observed."

8 A police department memorandum addressed to the assistant corporation counsel stated that since 1967 there had been an increase in the number of adult theaters in Detroit from 2 to 25, and a comparable increase in the number of adult book stores and other "adult-type businesses."

Respondents are the operators of two adult motion picture theaters. One, the Nortown, was an established theater which began to exhibit adult films in March 1973. The other, the Pussy Cat, was a corner gas station which was converted into a "mini theater," but denied a certificate of occupancy because of its plan to exhibit adult films. Both theaters were located within 1,000 feet of two other regulated uses and the Pussy Cat was less than 500 feet from a residential area. The respondents brought two separate actions against appropriate city officials, seeking a declaratory judgment that the ordinances were unconstitutional and an injunction against their enforcement. Federal jurisdiction was properly invoked [9] and the two cases were consolidated for decision. [10]

9 Respondents alleged a claim for relief under 42 U.S.C. s 1983, invoking the jurisdiction of the federal court under 28 U.S.C. s 1343(3).

10 Both cases were decided in a single opinion filed jointly by Judge Kennedy and Judge Gubow. Nortown Theatre v. Gribbs, 373 F.Supp. 363 (ED Mich.1974).

The District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. 373 F.Supp. 363. On the basis of the reasons stated 56 by the city for adopting the ordinances, the court concluded that they represented a rational attempt to preserve the city's neighborhoods. [11] The court analyzed and rejected respondents' argument that the definition and waiver provisions in the ordinances were impermissibly vague; it held that the disparate treatment of adult theaters and other theaters was justified by a compelling state interest and therefore did not violate the Equal Protection Clause; [12] and finally it concluded that the *2446 regulation of the places where adult films could be shown did not violate the First Amendment. [13]

11 "When, as here, the City has stated a reason for adopting an ordinance which is a subject of legitimate concern, that statement of purpose is not subject to attack.
"Nor may the Court substitute its judgment for that of the Common Council of the City of Detroit as to the methods adopted to deal with the City's legitimate concern to preserve neighborhoods, so long as there is some rational relationship between the objective of the Ordinance and the methods adopted." Id., at 367.

12 "Because the Ordinances distinguish adult theatres and bookstores from ordinary theatres and bookstores on the basis of the content of their respective wares, the classification is one which restrains conduct protected by the First Amendment. See Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 20 L.Ed.2d 225 (1968). The appropriate standard for reviewing the classification, therefore, is a test of close scrutiny. Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 670, 86 S.Ct. 1079, 16 L.Ed.2d 169 (1966); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438, 83 S.Ct. 328, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963). Under this test, the validity of the classification depends on whether it is necessary to further a compelling State interest.
"The compelling State interest which the Defendants point to as justifying the restrictions on locations of adult theatres and bookstores is the preservation of neighborhoods, upon which adult establishments have been found to have a destructive impact. The affidavit of Dr. Mel Ravitz clearly establishes that the prohibition of more than one regulated use within 1000 feet is necessary to promote that interest. This provision therefore does not offend the equal protection clause." Id, at 369.

13 "Applying those standards to the instant case, the power to license and zone businesses and prohibit their location in certain areas is clearly within the constitutional power of the City. The government interest, i. e. the preservation and stabilization of neighborhoods in the City of Detroit, is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. First Amendment rights are indirectly related, but only in the sense that they cannot be freely exercised in specific locations. Plaintiffs would not contend that they are entitled to operate a theatre or bookstore, which are commercial businesses, in a residentially zoned area; nor could they claim the right to put on a performance for profit in a public street. Admittedly the regulation here is more restrictive, but it is of the same character." Id., at 371.

57 The Court of Appeals reversed. American Mini Theatres, Inc. v. Gribbs, 518 F.2d 1014 (CA6 1975). The majority opinion concluded that the ordinances imposed a prior restraint on constitutionally protected communication and therefore "merely establishing that they were designed to serve a compelling public interest" provided an insufficient justification for a classification of motion picture theaters on the basis of the content of the materials they purvey to the public.[14] Relying primarily on Police Department of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212, the court held the ordinance invalid under the Equal Protection Clause. Judge Celebrezze, in dissent, expressed 58 the opinion that the ordinance was a valid " 'time, place and manner' regulation," rather than a regulation of speech on the basis of its content.[15]

14 "The City did not discharge its heavy burden of justifying the prior restraint which these ordinances undoubtedly impose by merely establishing that they were designed to serve a compelling public interest. Since fundamental rights are involved, the City had the further burden of showing that the method which it chose to deal with the problem at hand was necessary and that its effect on protected rights was only incidental. The City could legally regulate movie theatres and bookstores under its police powers by providing that such establishments be operated only in particular areas. . . . However, this ordinance selects for special treatment particular business enterprises which fall within the general business classifications permissible under zoning laws and classifies them as regulated uses solely by reference to the content of the constitutionally protected materials which they purvey to the public." 518 F.2d, at 1019-1020.

15 He stated in part:
"I do not view the 1000-foot provision as a regulation of speech on the basis of its content. Rather, it is a regulation of the right to locate a business based on the side-effects of its location. The interest in preserving neighborhoods is not a subterfuge for censorship." Id., at 1023.

Because of the importance of the decision, we granted certiorari, 423 U.S. 911, 96 S.Ct. 214, 46 L.Ed.2d 139.

As they did in the District Court, respondents contend (1) that the ordinances are so vague that they violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment; (2) that they are invalid under the First Amendment as prior restraints on protected communication; and (3) that the classification of theaters on the basis of the content of their exhibitions violates the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. We consider their arguments in that order.

I

There are two parts to respondents' claim that the ordinances are too vague. They do not attack the specificity of the definition of "Specified Sexual Activities" or "Specified Anatomical Areas." They argue, however, that they cannot determine how much of the described activity may be permissible before the exhibition is "characterized by an emphasis" on such matter. In addition, they argue that the ordinances are vague because they do not specify adequate procedures or standards for obtaining a waiver of the 1,000-foot restriction.

[1] We find it unnecessary to consider the validity of either of these arguments in the abstract. For even if there may be some uncertainty about the effect of the 59 ordinances on other litigants, they are unquestionably applicable to these respondents. The record indicates that both theaters *2447 propose to offer adult fare on a regular basis.[16] Neither respondent has alleged any basis for claiming or anticipating any waiver of the restriction as applied to its theater. It is clear, therefore, that any element of vagueness in these ordinances has not affected these respondents. To the extent that their challenge is predicated on inadequate notice resulting in a denial of procedural due process under the Fourteenth Amendment, it must be rejected. Cf. Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 754-757, 94 S.Ct. 2547, 2560-2562, 41 L.Ed.2d 439.

16 Both complaints allege that only adults are admitted to these theaters. Nortown expressly alleges that it "desires to continue exhibiting adult-type motion picture films at said theater." Neither respondent has indicated any plan to exhibit pictures even arguably outside the coverage of the ordinances.

[2] Because the ordinances affect communication protected by the First Amendment, respondents argue that they may raise the vagueness issue even though there is no uncertainty about the impact of the ordinances on their own rights. On several occasions we have determined that a defendant whose own speech was unprotected had standing to challenge the constitutionality of a statute which purported to prohibit protected speech, or even speech arguably protected.[17] This exception 60 from traditional rules of standing to raise constitutional issues has reflected the Court's judgment that the very existence of some statutes may cause persons not before the Court to refrain from engaging in constitutionally protected speech or expression. See Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 611-614, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2915-2917, 37 L.Ed.2d 830. The exception is justified by the overriding importance of maintaining a free and open market for the interchange of ideas. Nevertheless, if the statute's deterrent effect on legitimate expression is not "both real and substantial," and if the statute is "readily subject to a narrowing construction by the state courts," see Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 216, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 2276, 45 L.Ed.2d 125, the litigant is not permitted to assert the rights of third parties.

17 "Such claims of facial overbreadth have been entertained in cases involving statutes which, by their terms, seek to regulate 'only spoken words.' Gooding v. Wilson, 405 U.S. 518, 520, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 1105, 31 L.Ed.2d 408 (1972). See Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (1971); Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 576, 89 S.Ct. 1354, 22 L.Ed.2d 572 (1969); Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430 (1969); Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 62 S.Ct. 766, 86 L.Ed. 1031 (1942). In such cases, it has been the judgment of this Court that the possible harm to society in permitting some unprotected speech to go unpunished is outweighed by the possibility that protected speech of others may be muted and perceived grievances left to fester because of the possible inhibitory effects of overly broad statutes. Overbreadth attacks have also been allowed where the Court thought rights of association were ensnared in statutes which, by their broad sweep, might result in burdening innocent associations. See Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629 (1967); United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 88 S.Ct. 419, 19 L.Ed.2d 508 (1967); Aptheker v. Secretary of State, 378 U.S. 500, 84 S.Ct. 1659, 12 L.Ed.2d 992 (1964); Shelton v. Tucker (364 U.S. 479, 81 S.Ct. 247, 5 L.Ed.2d 231 (1960)). Facial overbreadth claims have also been entertained where statutes, by their terms, purport to regulate the time, place, and manner of expressive or communicative conduct, see Grayned v. City of Rockford, supra, 408 U.S., at 114-121, 92 S.Ct., at 2302-2306; Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S., at 617-619, 88 S.Ct., at 1338, 1339; Zwickler v. Koota, 389 U.S. 241, 249-250, 88 S.Ct. 391, 396-397, 19 L.Ed.2d 444 (1967); Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093 (1940), and where such conduct has required official approval under laws that delegated standardless discretionary power to local functionaries, resulting in virtually unreviewable prior restraints on First Amendment rights. See Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 89 S.Ct. 935, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 553-558, 85 S.Ct. 453, 463-466, 13 L.Ed.2d 471 (1965); Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290, 71 S.Ct. 312, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951); Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949 (1938)." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612-613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2916, 37 L.Ed.2d 830.

[3] We are not persuaded that the Detroit zoning ordinances will have a significant deterrent effect on the exhibition of films protected by the First Amendment. 61 As already noted, the only vagueness in the *2448 ordinances relates to the amount of sexually explicit activity that may be portrayed before the material can be said to "characterized by an emphasis" on such matter. For most films the question will be readily answerable; to the extent that an area of doubt exists, we see no reason why the ordinances are not "readily subject to a narrowing construction by the state courts." Since there is surely a less vital interest in the uninhibited exhibition of material that is on the borderline between pornography and artistic expression than in the free dissemination of ideas of social and political significance, and since the limited amount of uncertainty in the ordinances is easily susceptible of a narrowing construction, we think this is an inappropriate case in which to adjudicate the hypothetical claims of persons not before the Court.

The only area of protected communication that may be deterred by these ordinances comprises films containing material falling within the specific definitions of "Specified Sexual Activities" or "Specified Anatomical Areas." The fact that the First Amendment protects some, though not necessarily all, of that material from total suppression does not warrant the further conclusion that an exhibitor's doubts as to whether a borderline film may be shown in his theater, as well as in theaters licensed for adult presentations, involves the kind of threat to the free market in ideas and expression that justifies the exceptional approach to constitutional adjudication recognized in cases like Dombrowski v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 14 L.Ed.2d 22.

The application of the ordinances to respondents is plain; even if there is some area of uncertainty about their application in other situations, we agree with the District Court that respondents' due process argument must be rejected.

*62 II

Petitioners acknowledge that the ordinances prohibit theaters which are not licensed as "adult motion picture theaters" from exhibiting films which are protected by the First Amendment. Respondents argue that the ordinances are therefore invalid as prior restraints on free speech.

The ordinances are not challenged on the ground that they impose a limit on the total number of adult theaters which may operate in the city of Detroit. There is no claim that distributors or exhibitors of adult films are denied access to the market or, conversely, that the viewing public is unable to satisfy its appetite for sexually explicit fare. Viewed as an entity, the market for this commodity is essentially unrestrained.

[4] [5] It is true, however, that adult films may only be exhibited commercially in licensed theaters. But that is also true of all motion pictures. The city's general zoning laws require all motion picture theaters to satisfy certain locational as well as other requirements; we have no doubt that the municipality may control the location of theaters as well as the location of other commercial establishments, either by confining them to certain specified commercial zones or by requiring that they be dispersed throughout the city. The mere fact that the commercial exploitation of material protected by the First Amendment is subject to zoning and other licensing requirements is not a sufficient reason for invalidating these ordinances.

[6] Putting to one side for the moment the fact that adult motion picture theaters must satisfy a locational restriction not applicable to other theaters, we are also persuaded that the 1,000-foot restriction does not, in itself, create an impermissible restraint on protected communication. The city's interest in planning and regulating the use of property for commercial purposes *63 is clearly adequate to support that kind of restriction applicable to all theaters within the city limits. In short, apart from the fact that the ordinances treat adult theaters differently from other theaters and the fact that the classification is predicated on the content of material shown in the respective theaters, the regulation of the place where such films may be exhibited does not 2449 offend the First Amendment. [18] We turn, therefore, to the question whether the classification is consistent with the Equal Protection Clause.

18 Reasonable regulations of the time, place, and manner of protected speech, where those regulations are necessary to further significant governmental interests, are permitted by the First Amendment. See, E. g., Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513 (limitation on use of sound trucks); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 559, 85 S.Ct. 476, 13 L.Ed.2d 487 (ban on demonstrations in or near a courthouse with the intent to obstruct justice); Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (ban on willful making, on grounds adjacent to a school, of any noise which disturbs the good order of the school session).

III

A remark attributed to Voltaire characterizes our zealous adherence to the principle that the government may not tell the citizen what he may or may not say. Referring to a suggestion that the violent overthrow of tyranny might be legitimate, he said: "I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." [19] The essence of that comment has been repeated time after time in our decisions invalidating attempts by the government to impose selective controls upon the dissemination of ideas.

19 S. Tallentrye, The Friends of Voltaire 199 (1907).

Thus, the use of streets and parks for the free expression of views on national affairs may not be conditioned upon the sovereign's agreement with what a speaker may intend to say. [20] Nor may speech be curtailed because it *64 invites dispute, creates dissatisfaction with conditions the way they are, or even stirs people to anger. [21] The sovereign's agreement or disagreement with the content of what a speaker has to say may not affect the regulation of the time, place, or manner of presenting the speech.

20 See Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 516, 59 S.Ct. 954, 964, 83 L.Ed. 1423 (opinion of Roberts, J.).

21 Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4, 69 S.Ct. 894, 895, 93 L.Ed. 1131.

If picketing in the vicinity of a school is to be allowed to express the point of view of labor, that means of expression in that place must be allowed for other points of view as well. As we said in Mosley :

"The central problem with Chicago's ordinance is that it describes permissible picketing in terms of its subject matter. Peaceful picketing on the subject of a school's labor-management dispute is permitted, but all other peaceful picketing is prohibited. The operative distinction is the message on a picket sign. But, above all else, the First Amendment means that government has no power to restrict expression because of its message, its ideas, its subject matter, or its content. Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 24, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 1787, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (1971); Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 576, 89 S.Ct. 1354, 22 L.Ed.2d 572 (1969); New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 269-270, 84 S.Ct. 710, 720-721, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), and cases cited; NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 445, 83 S.Ct. 328, 344, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963); Wood v. Georgia, 370 U.S. 375, 388-389, 82 S.Ct. 1364, 1371-1372, 8 L.Ed.2d 569 (1962); Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4, 69 S.Ct. 894, 895, 93 L.Ed. 1131 (1949); De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 365, 57 S.Ct. 255, 260, 81 L.Ed. 278 (1937). To permit the continued building of our politics and culture, and to assure self-fulfillment for each individual, our people are guaranteed the right to express any thought, free from government censorship. The essence of this forbidden censorship is content control. Any restriction on expressive activity because of its content 65 would completely undercut the 'profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open.' New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, supra, 376 U.S., at 270, 84 S.Ct., at 721.

*2450 "Necessarily, then, under the Equal Protection Clause, not to mention the First Amendment itself, government may not grant the use of a forum to people whose views it finds acceptable, but deny use to those wishing to express less favored or more controversial views. And it may not select which issues are worth discussing or debating in public facilities. There is an 'equality of status in the field of ideas,' and government must afford all points of view an equal opportunity to be heard. Once a forum is opened up to assembly or speaking by some groups, government may not prohibit others from assembling or speaking on the basis of what they intend to say. Selective exclusions from a public forum may not be based on content alone, and may not be justified by reference to content alone." 408 U.S., at 95-96, 92 S.Ct., at 2290. (Footnote omitted.)

This statement, and others to the same effect, read literally and without regard for the facts of the case in which it was made, would absolutely preclude any regulation of expressive activity predicated in whole or in part on the content of the communication. But we learned long ago that broad statements of principle, no matter how correct in the context in which they are made, are sometimes qualified by contrary decisions before the absolute limit of the stated principle is reached. [22] When we review this Court's actual adjudications in the First Amendment area, we find this to have been the case 66 with the stated principle that there may be no restriction whatever on expressive activity because of its content.

22 See E. g., Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 454-455, 92 S.Ct. 1653, 1661-1662, 32 L.Ed.2d 212; United Gas Imp. Co. v. Continental Oil Co., 381 U.S. 392, 404, 85 S.Ct. 1517, 1524, 14 L.Ed.2d 466.

[7] The question whether speech is, or is not, protected by the First Amendment often depends on the content of the speech. Thus, the line between permissible advocacy and impermissible incitation to crime or violence depends, not merely on the setting in which the speech occurs, but also on exactly what the speaker had to say. [23] Similarly, it is the content of the utterance that determines whether it is a protected epithet or an unprotected "fighting comment." [24] And in time of war "the publication of the sailing dates of transports or the number and location of troops" may unquestionably be restrained, see Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U.S. 697, 716, 51 S.Ct. 625, 631, 75 L.Ed. 1357, although publication of news stories with a different content would be protected.

23 See Bond v. Floyd, 385 U.S. 116, 133-134, 87 S.Ct. 339, 348, 17 L.Ed.2d 235; Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U.S. 580, 592, 72 S.Ct. 512, 520, 96 L.Ed. 586; Musser v. Utah, 333 U.S. 95, 99-101, 68 S.Ct. 397, 398-399, 92 L.Ed. 562.

24 In Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568, 574, 62 S.Ct. 766, 770, 86 L.Ed. 1031, we held that a statute punishing the use of "damned racketeer(s)" and "damned Fascist(s)" did not unduly impair liberty of expression.

[8] Even within the area of protected speech, a difference in content may require a different governmental response.

In New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S.Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686, we recognized that the First Amendment places limitations on the States' power to enforce their libel laws. We held that a public official may not recover damages from a critic of his official conduct without proof of "malice" as specially defined in that opinion. [25] Implicit in the opinion is the assumption that if the content of the newspaper article had been different that is, if its subject matter had not been a public official a lesser standard of proof would have been adequate.

25 "Actual malice" is shown by proof that a statement was made "with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." 376 U.S., at 280, 84 S.Ct., at 726.

[9] 67 In a series of later cases, in which separate individual views were frequently stated, the Court addressed the broad problem of when the New York Times standard *2451 of malice was required by the First Amendment. Despite a diversity of opinion on whether it was required only in cases involving public figures, or also in cases involving public issues, and on whether the character of the damages claim mattered, a common thread which ran through all the opinions was the assumption that the rule to be applied depended on the content of the communication. [26] But that assumption did not contradict the underlying reason for the rule which is generally described as a prohibition of regulation based on the content of protected communication. The essence of that rule is the need for absolute neutrality by the government; its regulation of communication may not be affected by sympathy or hostility for the point of view being expressed by the communicator. [27] Thus, although 68 the content of story must be examined to decide whether it involves a public figure or a public issue, the Court's application of the relevant rule may not depend on its favorable or unfavorable appraisal of that figure or that issue.

26 See, for example, the discussion of the " 'public or general interest' test" for determining the applicability of the New York Times standard in Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 346, 94 S.Ct. 2997, 3010, 41 L.Ed.2d 789, and the reference, Id., at 348, 94 S.Ct., at 3011, to a factual misstatement "whose content did not warn a reasonably prudent editor or broadcaster of its defamatory potential." The mere fact that an alleged defamatory statement is false does not, of course, place it completely beyond the protection of the First Amendment. "The First Amendment requires that we protect some falsehood in order to protect speech that matters." Id., at 341, 94 S.Ct. at 3007.

27 Thus, Professor Kalven wrote in The Concept of the Public Forum: Cox v. Louisiana, 1965 Sup.Ct.Rev. 1, 29:
"(The Equal Protection Clause) is likely to provide a second line of defense for vigorous users of the public forum. If some groups are exempted from a prohibition on parades and pickets, the rationale for regulation is fatally impeached. The objection can then no longer be keyed to interferences with other uses of the public places, but would appear to implicate the kind of message that the groups were transmitting. The regulation would thus slip from the neutrality of time, place, and circumstance into a concern about content. The result is that equal-protection analysis in the area of speech issues would merge with considerations of censorship. And this is precisely what Mr. Justice Black argued in Cox :
" 'But by specifically permitting picketing for the publication of labor union views, Louisiana is attempting to pick and choose among the views it is willing to have discussed on its streets. It is thus trying to prescribe by law what matters of public interest people it allows to assemble on its streets may and may not discuss. This seems to me to be censorship in a most odious form . . . ' (379 U.S., at 581, 85 S.Ct., at 453)."

[10] We have recently held that the First Amendment affords some protection to commercial speech. [28] We have also made it clear, however, that the content of a particular advertisement may determine the extent of its protection. A public rapid transit system may accept some advertisements and reject others. [29] A state statute may permit highway billboards to advertise businesses located in the neighborhood but not elsewhere, [30] and regulatory commissions may prohibit businessmen from making statements which, though literally true, are potentially deceptive. [31] The measure of *2452 constitutional protection 69 to be afforded commercial speech will surely be governed largely by the content of the communication. [32]

28 Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346.

29 Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298, 94 S.Ct. 2714, 41 L.Ed.2d 770 (product advertising accepted, while political cards rejected).

30 Markham Advertising Co. v. State, 73 Wash.2d 405, 439 P.2d 248 (1968), appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question, 393 U.S. 316, 89 S.Ct. 553, 21 L.Ed.2d 512.

31 In NLRB v. Gissel Packing Co., 395 U.S. 575, 617, 89 S.Ct. 1918, 1941, 23 L.Ed.2d 547, the Court upheld a federal statute which balanced an employer's free speech right to communicate with his employees against the employees' rights to associate freely by providing that the expression of " 'any views, argument, or opinion' " should not be " 'evidence of an unfair labor practice,' " So long as such expression contains " 'no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit' " which would involve interference, restraint, or coercion of employees in the exercise of their right to self-organization.
The power of the Federal Trade Commission to restrain misleading, as well as false, statements in labels and advertisements has long been recognized. See, E. g., Jacob Siegel Co. v. FTC, 327 U.S. 608, 66 S.Ct. 758, 90 L.Ed. 888; FTC v. National Comm'n on Egg Nutrition, 517 F.2d 485 (CA7 1975); E. F. Drew & Co. v. FTC, 235 F.2d 735, 740 (CA2 1956).

32 As Mr. Justice Stewart pointed out in Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Consumer Council, supra, 425 U.S., at 779, 96 S.Ct., at 1834 (concurring opinion), the "differences between commercial price and product advertising . . . and ideological communication" permits regulation of the former that the First Amendment would not tolerate with respect to the latter.

More directly in point are opinions dealing with the question whether the First Amendment prohibits the State and Federal Governments from wholly suppressing sexually oriented materials on the basis of their "obscene character." In Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195, the Court upheld a conviction for selling to a minor magazines which were concededly not "obscene" if shown to adults. Indeed, the Members of the Court who would accord the greatest protection to such materials have repeatedly indicated that the State could prohibit the distribution or exhibition of such materials to juveniles and unconsenting adults.[33] Surely the First Amendment does 70 not foreclose such a prohibition;yet it is equally clear that any such prohibition must rest squarely on an appraisal of the content of material otherwise within a constitutionally protected area.

33 In Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 73, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2665, 37 L.Ed.2d 446, Mr. Justice Brennan, in a dissent joined by Mr. Justice Stewart and Mr. Justice Marshall, explained his approach to the difficult problem of obscenity under the First Amendment:
"I would hold, therefore, that at least in the absence of distribution to juveniles or obtrusive exposure to unconsenting adults, the First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the State and Federal Governments from attempting wholly to suppress sexually oriented materials on the basis of their allegedly 'obscene' contents. Nothing in this approach precludes those governments from taking action to serve what may be strong and legitimate interests through regulation of the manner of distribution of sexually oriented material." Id., at 113, 93 S.Ct., at 2662.

Such a line may be drawn on the basis of content without violating the government's paramount obligation of neutrality in its regulation of protected communication. For the regulation of the places where sexually explicit films may be exhibited is unaffected by whatever social, political, or philosophical message a film may be intended to communicate; whether a motion picture ridicules or characterizes one point of view or another, the effect of the ordinances is exactly the same.

[11] Moreover, even though we recognize that the First Amendment will not tolerate the total suppression of erotic materials that have some arguably artistic value, it is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate that inspired Voltaire's immortal comment. Whether political oratory or philosophical discussion moves us to applaud or to despise what is said, every schoolchild can understand why our duty to defend the right to speak remains the same. But few of us would march our sons and daughters off to war to preserve the citizen's right to see "Specified Sexual Activities" exhibited in the theaters of our choice. Even though the First Amendment protects communication in this area from total suppression, we hold that the State may legitimately use the content of these materials as the basis 71 for placing them in a different classification from other motion pictures.

[12] [13] The remaining question is whether the line drawn by these ordinances is justified by the city's interest in preserving the character of its neighborhoods. On this question we agree with the views expressed by District Judges Kennedy and Gubow. The record disclosed a factual basis for the Common Council's conclusion that this kind of restriction will have the *2453 desired effect.[34] It is not our function to appraise the wisdom of its decision to require adult theaters to be separated rather than concentrated in the same areas. In either event, the city's interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect. Moreover, the city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems.

34 The Common Council's determination was that a concentration of "adult" movie theaters causes the area to deteriorate and become a focus of crime, effects which are not attributable to theaters showing other types of films. It is this secondary effect which these zoning ordinances attempt to avoid, not the dissemination of "offensive" speech. In contrast, in Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125, the justifications offered by the city rested primarily on the city's interest in protecting its citizens from exposure to unwanted, "offensive" speech. The only secondary effect relied on to support that ordinance was the impact on traffic an effect which might be caused by a distracting open-air movie even if it did not exhibit nudity.

Since what is ultimately at stake is nothing more than a limitation on the place where adult films may be exhibited,[35] even though the determination of whether a 72 particular film fits that characterization turns on the nature of its content, we conclude that the city's interest in the present and future character of its neighborhoods adequately supports its classification of motion pictures. We hold that the zoning ordinances requiring that adult 73 motion picture theaters not be located within 1,000 feet of two other regulated uses does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

35 The situation would be quite different if the ordinance had the effect of suppressing, or greatly restricting access to, lawful speech. Here, however, the District Court specifically found that "(t)he Ordinances do not affect the operation of existing establishments but only the location of new ones. There are myriad locations in the City of Detroit which must be over 1000 feet from existing regulated establishments. This burden on First Amendment rights is slight." 373 F.Supp., at 370.

It should also be noted that the definitions of "Specified Sexual Activities" and "Specified Anatomical Areas" in the zoning ordinances, which require an emphasis on such matter and primarily concern conduct, are much more limited than the terms of the public nuisance ordinance involved in Erznoznik, supra, which broadly prohibited scenes which could not be deemed inappropriate even for juveniles.

"The ordinance is not directed against sexually explicit nudity, nor is it otherwise limited. Rather, it sweepingly forbids display of all films containing Any uncovered buttocks or breasts, irrespective of context or pervasiveness. Thus it would bar a film containing a picture of a baby's buttocks, the nude body of a war victim, or scenes from a culture in which nudity is indigenous. The ordinance also might prohibit newsreel scenes of the opening of an art exhibit as well as shots of bathers on a beach. Clearly all nudity cannot be deemed obscene even as to minors. See Ginsberg v. New York, supra. Nor can such a broad restriction be justified by any other governmental interest pertaining to minors. Speech that is neither obscene as to youths nor subject to some other legitimate proscription cannot be suppressed solely to protect the young from ideas or images that a legislative body thinks unsuitable for them." 422 U.S., at 213-214, 95 S.Ct., at 2274.

Moreover, unlike the ordinances in this case, the Erznoznik ordinance singled out movies "containing even the most fleeting and innocent glimpses of nudity . . . ." Id., at 214, 95 S.Ct., at 2275.

The Court's opinion in Erznoznik presaged our holding today by noting that the presumption of statutory validity "has less force when a classification turns on the subject matter of expression." Id., at 215, 95 S.Ct., at 2275. Respondents' position is that the presumption has no force, or more precisely, that any classification based on subject matter is absolutely prohibited.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is Reversed.

Mr. Justice POWELL, concurring in the judgment and portions of the opinion.

Although I agree with much of what is said in the Court's opinion, and concur in Parts I and II, my approach to the resolution of this case is sufficiently different to prompt me to write separately. [1] I view the 2454 case as presenting an example of innovative land-use regulation, implicating First Amendment concerns only incidentally and to a limited extent.

[1] I do not think we need reach, nor am I inclined to agree with, the holding in Part III (and supporting discussion) that nonobscene, erotic materials may be treated differently under First Amendment principles from other forms of protected expression. I do not consider the conclusions in Part I of the opinion to depend on distinctions between protected speech.

I

One-half century ago this Court broadly sustained the power of local municipalities to utilize the then relatively novel concept of land-use regulation in order to meet effectively the increasing encroachments of urbanization upon the quality of life of their citizens. Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co., 272 U.S. 365, 47 S.Ct. 114, 71 L.Ed. 303 (1926). The Court there noted the very practical consideration underlying the necessity for such power: "(W)ith the great increase and concentration of population, problems have developed, and constantly are developing, which require, and will continue to require, additional restrictions in respect of the use and occupation of private lands in urban communities." Id., at 386-387, 47 S.Ct., at 118. The Court also *74 laid out the general boundaries within which the zoning power may operate: Restrictions upon the free use of private land must find their justifications in "some aspect of the police power, asserted for the public welfare"; the legitimacy of any particular restriction must be judged with reference to all of the surrounding circumstances and conditions; and the legislative judgment is to control in cases in which the validity of a particular zoning regulation is "fairly debatable." Id., at 387, 388, 47 S.Ct., at 118.

In the intervening years zoning has become an accepted necessity in our increasingly urbanized society, and the types of zoning restrictions have taken on forms far more complex and innovative than the ordinance involved in Euclid. In Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S. 1, 94 S.Ct. 1536, 39 L.Ed.2d 797 (1974), we considered an unusual regulation enacted by a small Long Island community in an apparent effort to avoid some of the unpleasantness of urban living. It restricted land use within the village to single-family dwellings and defined "family" in such a way that no more than two unrelated persons could inhabit the same house. We upheld this ordinance, noting that desires to avoid congestion and noise from both people and vehicles were "legitimate guidelines in a land-use project addressed to family needs" and that it was quite within the village's power to "make the area a sanctuary for people." Id., at 9, 94 S.Ct., at 1541.

II

Against this background of precedent, it is clear beyond question that the Detroit Common Council had broad regulatory power to deal with the problem that prompted enactment of the Anti-Skid Row Ordinance. As the Court notes, Ante, at 2444, and n. 6, the Council was motivated by its perception that the "regulated uses," when concentrated, worked a "deleterious effect upon the *75 adjacent areas" and could "contribute to the blighting or downgrading of the surrounding neighborhood." The purpose of preventing the deteriorationf commercial neighborhoods was certainly within the concept of the public welfare that defines the limits of the police power. See Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S. 26, 32-33, 75 S.Ct. 98, 102, 99 L.Ed. 27 (1954). Respondents apparently concede the legitimacy of the ordinance as passed in 1962, but challenge the amendments 10 years later that brought within its provisions adult theaters as well as adult bookstores and "topless" cabarets. Those amendments resulted directly from the Common Council's determination that the recent proliferation of these establishments and their tendency to cluster in certain parts of the city would have the adverse effect upon the surrounding areas that the ordinance was aimed at preventing.

Respondents' attack on the amended ordinance, insofar as it affects them, can be stated simply. Contending that it is the "character of the right, not of the limitation," which governs the standard of judicial review, see Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 530, 65 S.Ct. 315, 322, 89 L.Ed. 430 (1945), and that zoning regulations therefore have no talismanic immunity from constitutional 2455 challenge, cf. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 269, 84 S.Ct. 710, 720, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), they argue that the 1972 amendments abridge First Amendment rights by restricting the places at which an adult theater may locate on the basis of nothing more substantial than unproved fears and apprehensions about the effects of such a business upon the surrounding area. Cf., E. g., Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 69 S.Ct. 894, 93 L.Ed. 1131 (1949); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d 471 (1965). And, even if Detroit's interest in preventing the deterioration of business areas is sufficient to justify the impact upon freedom of expression, the ordinance is nevertheless invalid because it impermissibly 76 discriminates between types of theaters solely on the basis of their content. See Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972).

I reject respondents' argument for the following reasons.

III

This is the first case in this Court in which the interests in free expression protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments have been implicated by a municipality's commercial zoning ordinances. Respondents would have us mechanically apply the doctrines developed in other contexts. But this situation is not analogous to cases involving expression in public forums or to those involving individual expression or, indeed, to any other prior case. The unique situation presented by this ordinance calls, as cases in this area so often do, for a careful inquiry into the competing concerns of the State and the interests protected by the guarantee of free expression.

Because a substantial burden rests upon the State when it would limit in any way First Amendment rights, it is necessary to identify with specificity the nature of the infringement in each case. The primary concern of the free speech guarantee is that there be full opportunity for expression in all of its varied forms to convey a desired message. Vital to this concern is the corollary that there be full opportunity for everyone to receive the message. See, E. g., Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 377, 47 S.Ct. 641, 648, 71 L.Ed. 1095 (1927) (Brandeis, J., concurring); Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 24, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 1787, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (1971); Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 408-409, 94 S.Ct. 1800, 1808-1809, 40 L.Ed.2d 224 (1974); Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 762-765, 92 S.Ct. 2576, 2581-2582, 33 L.Ed.2d 683 (1972); Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 763-765, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 1826-1827, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976). Motion pictures, the medium of expression involved here, are fully within the protection of the First 77 Amendment. Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 501-503, 72 S.Ct. 777, 96 L.Ed. 1098 (1952). In the quarter century since Burstyn motion pictures and an analous medium, printed books, have been before this Court on many occasions, and the person asserting a First Amendment claim often has been a theater owner or a bookseller. Our cases reveal, however, that the central concern of the First Amendment in this area is that there be a free flow from creator to audience of whatever message a film or a book might convey. Mr. Justice Douglas stated the core idea succinctly: "In this Nation every writer, actor, or producer, no matter what medium of expression he may use, should be freed from the censor." Superior Films v. Department of Education, 346 U.S. 587, 589, 74 S.Ct. 286, 287, 98 L.Ed. 329 (1954) (concurring opinion). In many instances, for example with respect to certain criminal statutes or censorship or licensing schemes, it is only the theater owner or the bookseller who can protect this interest. But the central First Amendment concern remains the need to maintain free access of the public to the expression. See, E. g., Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 442, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469 (1957); Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 150, 153-154, 80 S.Ct. 215, 218-219, 4 L.Ed.2d 205 (1959); *2456 Interstate Circuit v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 683-684, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 1302-1303, 20 L.Ed.2d 225 (1968); compare Marcus v. Search Warrant, 367 U.S. 717, 736, 81 S.Ct. 1708, 1718, 6 L.Ed.2d 1127 (1961), and A Quantity of Books v. Kansas, 378 U.S. 205, 213, 84 S.Ct. 1723, 1727, 12 L.Ed.2d 809 (1964), with Heller v. New York, 413 U.S. 483, 491-492, 93 S.Ct. 2789, 2794, 37 L.Ed.2d 745 (1973); and cf. Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70-71, 83 S.Ct. 631, 639, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963).

In this case, there is no indication that the application of the Anti-Skid Row Ordinance to adult theaters has the effect of suppressing production of or, to any significant degree, restricting access to adult movies. The Nortown concededly will not be able to exhibit adult movies at its present location, and the ordinance limits the potential 78 location of the proposed Pussy Cat. The constraints of the ordinance with respect to location may indeed create economic loss for some who are engaged in this business. But in this respect they are affected no differently from any other commercial enterprise that suffers economic detriment as a result of land-use regulation. The cas are legion that sustained zoning against claims of serious economic damage. See, E. g.,

Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 274 U.S. 325, 47 S.Ct. 594, 71 L.Ed. 1074 (1927).

The inquiry for First Amendment purposes is not concerned with economic impact; rather, it looks only to the effect of this ordinance upon freedom of expression. This prompts essentially two inquiries: (i) Does the ordinance impose any content limitation on the creators of adult movies or their ability to make them available to whom they desire, and (ii) does it restrict in any significant way the viewing of these movies by those who desire to see them? On the record in this case, these inquiries must be answered in the negative. At most the impact of the ordinance on these interests is incidental and minimal. [2] Detroit has silenced no message, has invoked no censorship, and has imposed no limitation upon those who wish to view them. The ordinance is addressed only to the places at which this type of 79 expression may be presented, a restriction that does not interfere with content. Nor is there any significant overall curtailment of adult movie presentations, or the opportunity for a message reach an audience. On the basis of the District Court's finding, Ante, at 2453, n. 35, it appears that if a sufficient market exists to support them the number of adult movie theaters in Detroit will remain approximately the same, free to purvey the same message. To be sure some prospective patrons may be inconvenienced by this dispersal. [3] But other patrons, depending upon where they live or work, may find it more convenient to view an adult movie when adult theaters are not concentrated in a particular section of the city.

2 The communication involved here is not a kind in which the content or effectiveness of the message depends in some measure upon where or how it is conveyed. Cf. Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d 471 (1965); Brown v. Louisiana, 383 U.S. 131, 86 S.Ct. 719, 15 L.Ed.2d 637 (1966); Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, supra, 408 U.S. 92, 93, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2288, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972). There is no suggestion that the Nortown is, or that the Pussy Cat would be, anything more than a commercial purveyor. They do not profess to convey their own personal messages through the movies they show, so that the only communication involved is that contained in the movies themselves. Cf. United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1678, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968); Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 409-411, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 2729-2730, 41 L.Ed.2d 842 (1974).

3 The burden, it should be noted, is no different from that imposed by more common ordinances that restrict to commercial zones of a city movie theaters generally as well as other types of businesses presenting similar traffic, parking, safety, or noise problems. After a half century of sustaining traditional zoning of this kind, there is no reason to believe this Court would invalidate such an ordinance as violative of the First Amendment. The only difference between such an ordinance and the Detroit ordinance lies in the reasons for regulating the location of adult theaters. The special public interest that supports this ordinance is certainly as substantial as the interests that support the normal area zoning to which all movie theaters, like other commercial establishments, long have been subject.

*2457 In these circumstances, it is appropriate to analyze the permissibility of Detroit's action under the four-part test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1679, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Under that test, a governmental regulation is sufficiently justified, despite its incidental impact upon First Amendment interests, "if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free 80 expression; and if the incidental restriction on . . . First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." Ibid. The factual distinctions between a prosecution for destruction of a Selective Service registration certificate, as in O'Brien, and this case are substantial, but the essential weighing and balancing of competing interestare the same. Cf. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S., at 409-412, 94 S.Ct., at 1809-1810.

There is, as noted earlier, no question that the ordinance was within the power of the Detroit Common Council to enact. See Berman v. Parker, 348 U.S., at 32, 75 S.Ct., at 102. Nor is there doubt that the interests furthered by this ordinance are both important and substantial. Without stable neighborhoods, both residential and commercial, large sections of a modern city quickly can deteriorate into an urban jungle with tragic consequences to social, environmental, and economic values. While I agree with respondents that no aspect of the police power enjoys immunity from searching constitutional scrutiny, it also is undeniable that zoning, when used to preserve the character of specific areas of a city, is perhaps "the most essential function performed by local government, for it is one of the primary means by which we protect that sometimes difficult to define concept of quality of life." Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S., at 13, 94 S.Ct., at 1543 (Marshall, J., dissenting).

The third and fourth tests of O'Brien also are met on this record. It is clear both from the chronology and from the facts that Detroit has not embarked on an effort to suppress free expression. The ordinance was already in existence, and its purposes clearly set out, for a full decade before adult establishments were brought under it. When this occurred, it is clear indeed it is not seriously challenged that the governmental interest prompting the inclusion in the ordinance of adult establishments was wholly unrelated to any suppression of 81 free expression.[4] Nor is there reason to question *2458 that the degree of incidental encroachment upon such expression was the minimum necessary to further the purpose 82 of the ordinance. The evidence presented to the Common Council indicated that the urban deterioration was threatened, not by the concentration of all movie theaters with other "regulated uses," but only by a concentration of those that elected to specialize in adult movies.[5] The case would present a different situation had Detroit brought within the ordinance types of theaters that had not been shown to contribute to the deterioration of surrounding areas.[6]

4 Respondents attack the nature of the evidence upon which the Common Council acted in bringing adult entertainment establishments under the ordinance, and which petitioners submitted to the District Court in support of it. That evidence consisted of reports and affidavits from sociologists and urban planning experts, as well as some laymen, on the cycle of decay that had been started in areas of other cities, and that could be expected in Detroit, from the influx and concentration of such establishments. Respondents insist that a major part of that cycle is a kind of "self-fulfilling prophecy" in which a business establishment neighboring on several of the "regulated uses" perceives that the area is going downhill economically, and moves out, with the result that a less desirable establishment takes its place thus fulfilling the prophecy made by the more reputable business. As noted earlier, Supra, at 2454, respondents have tried to analogize these types of fears to the apprehension found insufficient in previous cases to justify stifling free expression. But cases like Cox and Terminiello, upon which respondents rely, involved individuals desiring to express Their own messages rather than commercial exhibitors of films or vendors of books. When an individual or a group of individuals is silenced, the message itself is silenced and free speech is stifled. In the context of movies and books, the more apt analogy to Cox or Terminiello would be the censorship cases, in which a State or a municipality attempted to suppress copies of particular works, or the licensing cases in which that danger was presented. But a zoning ordinance that merely specifies where a theater may locate, and that does not reduce significantly the number or accessibility of theaters presenting particular films, stifles no expression. Moreover, the Common Council did not inversely zone adult theaters in an effort to protect citizens against the Content of adult movies. If that had been its purpose, or the effect of the amendment to the ordinance, the case might be analogous to those cited by Mr. Justice STEWART's dissent, Post, at 2459. Moreover, an intent or purpose to restrict the communication itself because of its nature would make the O'Brien test inapplicable. See O'Brien, 391 U.S., at 382, 88 S.Ct., at 1681; Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S., at 414 n. 8, 94 S.Ct., at 2732; cf. Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 (1931). But the Common Council simply acted to protect the economic integrity of large areas of its city against the effects of a predictable interaction between a concentration of certain businesses and the responses of people in the area. If it had been concerned with restricting the message purveyed by adult theaters, it would have tried to close them or restrict their number rather than circumscribe their choice as to location.

5 Respondents have argued that the Common Council should have restricted adult theaters' hours of operation or their exterior advertising instead of refusing to allow their clustering with other "regulated uses." Most of the ill effects, however, appear to result from the clustering itself rather than the operational characteristics of individual theaters. Moreover, the ordinance permits an exception to its 1,000-foot restriction in appropriate cases. See Ante, at 2444 n. 7.

6 In my view Mr. Justice STEWART's dissent misconceives the issue in this case by insisting that it involves an impermissible time, place, and manner restriction based on the content of expression. It involves nothing of the kind. We have here merely a decision by the city to treat certain movie theaters differently because they have markedly different effects upon their surroundings. See n. 3, Supra. Moreover, even if this were a case involving a special governmental response to the content of one type of movie, it is possible that the result would be supported by a line of cases recognizing that the government can tailor its reaction to different types of speech according to the degree to which its special and overriding interests are implicated. See, E. g., Tinker v. Des Moines School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 509-511, 89 S.Ct. 733, 737-739, 21 L.Ed.2d 731 (1969); Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 413-414, 94 S.Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L.Ed.2d 224 (1974); Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828, 842-844, 96 S.Ct. 1211, 1219-1220, 47 L.Ed.2d 505 (1976) (Powell, J., concurring); cf. CSC v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 93 S.Ct. 2880, 37 L.Ed.2d 796 (1973). It is not analogous to Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972), in which no governmental interest justified a distinction between the types of messages permitted in the public forum there involved.

83 IV

The dissenting opinions perceive support for their position in Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975). I believe this perception is a clouded one. The Jacksonville and Detroit ordinances are quite dissimilar, and our analysis of the infirmities of the former is inapplicable to the latter. In Erznoznik, an ordinance purporting to prevent a nuisance, not a comprehensive zoning ordinance, prohibited the showing of films containing nudity by drive-in theaters when the screens were visible from a public street or place. The governmental interests advanced as justifying the ordinance were three: (i) to protect citizens from unwilling exposure to possibly offensive material; (ii) to protect children from such materials; and (iii) to prevent the slowing of passing traffic and the likelihood of resulting accidents. We found the Jacksonville ordinance on its face either overbroad or underinclusive with respect to each of these asserted purposes. As to the first purpose, the ordinance was overbroad because it proscribed the showing of any nudity, however innocent or educational. Moreover, potential viewers who deemed particular nudity to be offensive were not captives; they had only to look elsewhere. Id., at 210-212, 95 S.Ct., at 2273-2274; see Cohen v. California, 403 U.S., at 21, 91 S.Ct., at 1786. As to minors the Jacksonville ordinance was overbroad because it "might prohibit newsreel scenes of the opening of an art exhibit as well as shots of bathers on a beach." 422 U.S., at 213, 95 S.Ct., at 2275. Finally, the *2459 ordinance was not rationally tailored to support its asserted purpose as a traffic regulation. By proscribing "even the most fleeting and innocent glimpses of nudity," it was strikingly underinclusive omitting "a wide variety 84 of other scenes in the customary screen diet . . . (that) would be (no) less distracting to the passing motorist." Id., at 214-215, 95 S.Ct., at 2275.

In sum, the ordinance in Erznoznik was a misconceived attempt directly to regulate content of expression. The Detroit zoning ordinance, in contrast, affects expression only incidentally and in furtherance of governmental interests wholly unrelated to the regulation of expression. At least as applied to respondents, it does not offend the First Amendment. Although courts must be alert to the possibility of direct rather than incidental effect of zoning on expression, and especially to the possibility of using the power to zone as a pretext for suppressing expression, it is clear that this is not such a case.

Mr. Justice STEWART, with whom Mr. Justice BRENNAN, Mr. Justice MARSHALL, and Mr. Justice BLACKMUN join, dissenting.

The Court today holds that the First and Fourteenth Amendments do not prevent the city of Detroit from using a system of prior restraints and criminal sanctions to enforce content-based restrictions on the geographic location of motion picture theaters that exhibit nonobscene but sexually oriented films. I dissent from this drastic departure from established principles of First Amendment law.

This case does not involve a simple zoning ordinance, [1] or a content-neutral time, place, and manner restriction, [2] 85 or a regulation of obscene expression or other speech that is entitled to less than the full protection of the First Amendment. [3] The kind of expression at issue here is no doubt objectionable to some, but that fact does not diminish its protected status any more than did the particular content of the "offensive" expression in Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (display of nudity on a drive-in movie screen); Lewis v. City of New Orleans, 415 U.S. 130, 94 S.Ct. 970, 39 L.Ed.2d 214 (utterance of vulgar epithet); Hess v. Indiana, 414 U.S. 105, 94 S.Ct. 326, 38 L.Ed.2d 303 (utterance of vulgar remark); Papish v. University of Missouri Curators, 410 U.S. 667, 93

S.Ct. 1197, 35 L.Ed.2d 618 (indecent remarks in campus newspaper); Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (wearing of clothing inscribed with a vulgar remark); Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430 (utterance of racial slurs); or Kingsley Pictures Corp. v. Regents, 360 U.S. 684, 79 S.Ct. 1362, 3 L.Ed.2d 1512 (alluring portrayal of adultery as proper behavior).

[1] Contrast Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S. 1, 94 S.Ct. 1536, 39 L.Ed.2d 797, which upheld a zoning ordinance that restricted no substantive right guaranteed by the Constitution.

[2] Here, as in Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212, and Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125, the State seeks to impose a selective restraint on speech with a particular content. It is not all movie theaters which must comply with Ordinances No. 742-G and No. 743-G, but only those "used for presenting material distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on matter depicting, describing or relating to 'Specified Sexual Activities' or 'Specified Anatomical Areas' . . . ." The ordinances thus " 'sli(p) from the neutrality of time, place, and circumstance into a concern about content.' This is never permitted." Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, supra, 408 U.S., at 99, 92 S.Ct., at 2292 (citation omitted). See, E. g., Hudgens v. NLRB, 424 U.S. 507, 520, 96 S.Ct. 1029, 1037, 47 L.Ed.2d 196; Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 115, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 2302, 33 L.Ed.2d 222.

[3] The regulatory scheme contains no provision for a judicial determination of obscenity. As the Court of Appeals correctly held, the material displayed must therefore, be presumed to be fully protected by the First Amendment. 518 F.2d 1014, 1019.

What this case does involve is the constitutional permissibility of selective interference with protected speech whose content is thought to produce distasteful effects. It is *2460 elementary that a prime function of the First Amendment is to guard against just such interference.[4] By refusing to invalidate Detroit's ordinance the Court rides roughshod over cardinal principles of First Amendment 86 law, which require that time, place, and manner regulations that affect protected expression be content neutral except in the limited context of a captive or juvenile audience.[5] In place of these principles the Court invokes a concept wholly alien to the First Amendment. Since "few of us would march our sons and daughters off to war to preserve the citizen's right to see 'Specified Sexual Activities' exhibited in the theaters of our choice," Ante, at 2452, the Court implies that these films are not entitled to the full protection of the Constitution. This stands "Voltaire's immortal comment," Ibid., on its head. For if the guarantees of the First Amendment were reserved for expression that more than a "few of us" would take up arms to defend, then the right of free expression would be defined and circumscribed by current popular opinion. The guarantees of the Bill of Rights were designed to protect against precisely such majoritarian limitations on individual liberty.[6]

[4] See, E. g., Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 4-5, 69 S.Ct. 894, 895-896, 93 L.Ed. 1131.

[5] See, E. g., Hudgens v. NLRB, supra; Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, supra; Police Dept. of Chicago v. Mosley, supra. This case does not involve state regulation narrowly aimed at preventing objectionable communication from being thrust upon an unwilling audience. See Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, supra, 422 U.S., at 209, 95 S.Ct., at 2272. Contrast Lehman v. City of Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298, 94 S.Ct. 2714, 41 L.Ed.2d 770; Rowan v. Post Office Dept., 397 U.S. 728, 90 S.Ct. 1484, 25 L.Ed.2d 736. Nor is the Detroit ordinance narrowly aimed at protecting children from exposure to sexually oriented displays that would not be judged obscene by adult standards. Contrast Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195.

[6] See, E. g., Terminiello v. Chicago, supra, 337 U.S., at 4-5, 69 S.Ct., at 895-896. The Court stresses that Detroit's content-based regulatory system does not preclude altogether the display of sexually oriented films. But, as the Court noted in a similar context in Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448, this is constitutionally irrelevant, for " 'one is not to have the exercise of his liberty of expression in appropriate places abridged on the plea that it may be exercised in some other place.' " Id., at 556, 95 S.Ct., at 1245, quoting Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 163, 60 S.Ct. 146, 151, 84 L.Ed. 155. See also Interstate Circuit v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 20 L.Ed.2d 225; Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584.

87 The fact that the "offensive" speech here may not address "important" topics "ideas of social and political significance," in the Court's terminology, Ante, at 2447 does not mean that it is less worthy of constitutional protection. "Wholly neutral futilities . . . come under the protection of free speech as fully as do Keats' poems or Donne's sermons." Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 528, 68 S.Ct. 665, 676, 92 L.Ed. 840 (Frankfurter, J., dissenting); accord, Cohen v. California, supra, 403 U.S., at 25, 91 S.Ct., at 1788. Moreover, in the absence of a judicial determination of obscenity, it is by no means clear that the speech is not "important" even on the Court's terms. "(S)ex and obscenity are not synonymous. . . . The portrayal of sex, E. g., in art, literature and scientific works, is not itself sufficient reason to deny material the constitutional protection of freedom of speech and press. Sex, a great and mysterious motive force in human life, has indisputably been a subject of absorbing interest to mankind through the ages; it is one of the vital problems of human interest and public concern." Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 487, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1310, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (footnotes omitted). See also Kingsley Pictures Corp. v. Regents, supra, 360 U.S., at 688-689, 79 S.Ct., at 1365.

I can only interpret today's decision as an aberration. The Court is undoubtedly sympathetic, as am I, to the well-intentioned efforts of Detroit to "clean up" its streets and prevent the proliferation of "skid rows." But it is in those instances where protected speech grates most unpleasantly against the sensibilities that judicial vigilance must be at its height.

2461 Heretofore, the Court has not shied from its responsibility to protect "offensive" speech from governmental interference. Just last Term in Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, supra, the Court held that a city could not, consistently with the First and Fourteenth Amendments, make it a public nuisance for a drive-in movie theater to show films containing nudity if the screen were visible *88 from a public street or place. The factual parallels between that case and this one are striking. There, as here, the ordinance did not forbid altogether the "distasteful" expression but merely required alteration in the physical setting of the forum. There, as here, the city's principal asserted interest was in minimizing the "undesirable" effects of speech having a particular content. And, most significantly, the particular content of the restricted speech at issue in Erznoznik precisely parallels the content restriction embodied in s 1 of Detroit's definition of "Specified Anatomical Areas." Compare Jacksonville Municipal Code s 330.313 with Detroit Ordinance No. 742-G, s 32.0007. In short, Erznoznik is almost on "all fours" with this case.

The Court must never forget that the consequences of rigorously enforcing the guarantees of the First Amendment are frequently unpleasant. Much speech that seems to be of little or no value will enter the market place of ideas, threatening the quality of our social discourse and, more generally, the serenity of our lives. But that is the price to be paid for constitutional freedom.

Mr. Justice BLACKMUN, with whom Mr. Justice BRENNAN, Mr. Justice STEWART, and Mr. Justice MARSHALL join, dissenting.

I join Mr. Justice STEWART's dissent, and write separately to identify an independent ground on which, for me, the challenged ordinance is unconstitutional. That ground is vagueness.

I

We should put ourselves for a moment in the shoes of the motion picture exhibitor. Let us suppose that, having previously offered only a more innocuous fare, he *89 decides to vary it by exhibiting on certain days films from a series which occasionally deals explicitly with sex. The exhibitor must determine whether this places h theater into the "adult" class prescribed by the challenged ordinance. If the theater is within that class, it must be licensed, and it may be entirely prohibited, depending on its location.

"Adult" status Vel non depends on whether the theater is "used for presenting" films that are "distinguished or characterized by an emphasis on" certain specified activities, including sexual intercourse, or specified anatomical areas.[1] It will be simple enough, as the operator screens films, to tell when one of these areas or activities is being depicted, but if the depiction represents only a part of the films' subject matter, I am at a loss to know how he will tell whether they are "distinguished or characterized by an emphasis" on those areas and activities. The ordinance gives him no guidance. Neither does it instruct him on how to tell whether, assuming the films in question are thus "distinguished or characterized," his theater is being "used for presenting" such films. That phrase could mean Ever used, Often used, or Predominantly used, to name a few possibilities.

[1] See Ante, 2443-2445, and nn. 3-7. I reproduce, or cite specifically to, only those sections of the challenged ordinance that are not set out in the Court's opinion.

Let us assume the exhibitor concludes that the film series will render his showhouse an "adult" theater. He still must determine whether the operation of the theater is prohibited by virtue of there being two other "regulated uses" within 1,000 feet. His task of determining whether his own theater is "adult" is suddenly multiplied by however many neighbors he may have that arguably are within that same class. He must, in other 90 words, know and *2462 evaluate not only his own films, but those of any competitor within 1,000 feet. And neighboring theaters are not his only worry, since the list of regulated uses also includes "adult" bookstores, "Group 'D' Cabaret(s)," sellers of alcoholic beverages for consumption on the premises, hotels, motels, pawnshops, pool halls, public lodging houses, "secondhand stores," shoeshine parlors, and "taxi dance halls." The exhitor must master all these definitions. Some he will find very clear, of course; others less so. A neighboring bookstore is "adult," for example, if a "substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade" is "distinguished or characterized" in the same way as the films shown in an "adult" theater.

The exhibitor's compounded task of applying the statutory definitions to himself and his neighbors, furthermore, is an ongoing one. At any moment he could become a violator of the ordinance because some neighbor has slipped into a "regulated use" classification. He must know, for example, if the adjacent hotel has opened a bar or shoeshine "parlor" on the premises, though he may still be uncertain whether the hotel as a whole constitutes more than one "regulated use." He must also know the moment when the stock in trade of neighboring bookstores and theaters comes to be of such a character, and predominance, as to render them "adult." Lest he let down his guard, he should remember that if he miscalculates on any of these issues, he may pay a fine or go to jail. [2]

[2] Official Zoning Ordinance of Detroit s 69.000.

It would not be surprising if, under the circumstances, the exhibitor chose to forgo showing the film series altogether. Such deterrence of protected First Amendment activity in the "gray area" of a statute's possible 91 coverage is, of course, one of the vices of vagueness. A second is the tendency of vague statutory standards to grant excessive and effectively unreviewable discretion to the officials who enforce those standards. That vice is also present here. It is present because the vague standards already described are left to the interpretation and application of law enforcement authorities. [3] It is introduced even more dangerously by the indefinite standards under which city officials are empowered to grant or deny licenses for "adult" theaters, and also waivers of the 1,000-foot rule. [4]

[3] A special opportunity for arbitrary or discriminatory application of the ordinance is apparently supplied by the operation of the 1,000-foot rule. Presumably, only one of three "regulated uses" within a 1,000-foot area must be eliminated in order for the remaining two to become legal. For all that appears from the ordinance, the choice of which use to eliminate is left entirely to the enforcement authorities.

[4] These two features of the ordinance constitute prior restraints and are challengeable on that ground alone. Cf. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975). Since, for me, the most glaring defect in the operation of these restraints is the vagueness of the standards governing their applications, however, only the vagueness point is pursued here.

All "adult" theaters must be licensed, and licenses are dispensed by the mayor. The ordinance does not specify the criteria for licensing, except in one respect. The mayor is empowered to refuse an "adult" theater license, or revoke it at any time,
"upon proof submitted to him of the violation . . . , within the preceding two years, of any criminal statute . . . or (zoning) ordinance . . . which evidences a flagrant disregard for the safety or welfare of either the patrons, employees, or persons residing or doing business nearby." Code of Detroit s 5-2-3.

92 If the operation of an "adult" theater would violate the 1,000-foot rule, the exhibitor must obtain the approval not only of the mayor but of the City Planning Commission, which is empowered to waive the rule. It may grant a waiver if it finds that the operation of an "adult" theater, in addition to satisfying several more definite criteria, "will not be contrary to the public interest or injurious to nearby properties," or violative of "the spirit and intent" of the ordinance.

2463 II

Just the other day, in Hynes v. Mayor of Oradell, 425 U.S. 610, 96 S.Ct. 1755, 48 L.Ed.2d 243 (1976), we reaffirmed the principle that in the First Amendment area " 'government may regulate . . . only with narrow specificity,' " NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 433, 83 S.Ct. 328, 338, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963), avoiding the use of language that is so vague that "men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning." Connally v. General Constr. Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391, 46 S.Ct. 126, 127, 70 L.Ed. 322 (1926). In Hynes we invalidated for its vagueness an ordinance that required "Civic Groups and Organizations," and also anyone seeking to "call from house to house . . . for a recognized charitable . . . or . . . political campaign or cause," to register with the local police "for identification only." We found it intolerably unclear what "Groups and Organizations" were encompassed, what was meant by a "cause," and what was required by way of "identification." I fail to see how a statutory prohibition as difficult to understand and apply as the 1,000-foot rule for "adult" theaters can survive if the ordinance in Hynes could not.

The vagueness in the licensing and waiver standards of this ordinance is more pernicious still. The mayor's power to deny a license because of "flagrant disregard" for the "safety or welfare" of others is apparently exercisable only over those who have committed some *93 infraction within the previous two years, [5] but I do not see why even those persons should be subject to standardless licensing discretion of precisely the kind that this Court so many times has condemned. See Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 89 S.Ct. 935, 22.Ed.2d 162 (1969); Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 78 S.Ct. 277, 2 L.Ed.2d 302 (1958); Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290, 71 S.Ct. 312, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951); Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 325, 95 L.Ed. 267 (1951); Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 92 L.Ed. 1574 (1948); Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 163-164, 60 S.Ct. 146, 151-152, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939); Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 59 S.Ct. 954, 83 L.Ed. 1423 (1939); Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 58 S.Ct. 666, 82 L.Ed. 949 (1938). For the exhibitor who must obtain a waiver of the 1,000-foot rule, the City Planning Commission likewise functions effectively as a censor, constrained only by its perception of the "public interest" and the "spirit and intent" of the ordinance. This Court repeatedly has invalidated such vague standards for prior approval of film exhibitions. See Interstate Circuit v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 683, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 1302, 20 L.Ed.2d 225 (1968), and cases cited. [6] Indeed, a standard much like the waiver standardin *94 this case was the one found wanting in Gelling v. Texas, 343 U.S. 960, 72 S.Ct. 1002, 96 L.Ed. 1359 (1952) (censor could ban films "of such character as to be prejudicial to the best interests of the people of said City").

5 The ordinance empowers the mayor to act "upon proof submitted to him of (a) violation." It is possible that he may entertain evidence not only of convictions but also of violations themselves, even though these have not been otherwise adjudicated. Whether legal infractions must be otherwise adjudicated or not, the mayor clearly retains the power to revoke a license for "flagrant disregard," should infractions occur at any time after the license's issuance.

6 Interstate Circuit disposes of any argument that excessively vague standards may be permitted here because the film exhibitions are not banned entirely, but merely prohibited in a particular place. The ordinance invalidated in Interstate Circuit required exhibitors to submit films for official determination whether persons under 16 should be excluded from the film exhibitions. It thus threatened the exhibitor with a loss of only part of his audience. The effect of the present ordinance is more severe, since if the exhibitor has only one theater, he is completely foreclosed. See also Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S., at 556 n. 8, 95 S.Ct., at 1245.

It is true that the mayor and the Planning Commission review the applications of theaters, rather than individual films. It might also be argued that at least if they adhere to the "spirit and intent" of the ordinance, their principal concern will be 2464 with the blighting of the cityscape, rather than that of the minds of their constituents. But neither of these aspects of the case alters its basic and dispositive facts: persons seeking to exhibit "adult," but protected, films must secure, in many cases, the prior approval of the mayor and City Planning Commission; they inevitably will make their decisions by reference to the content of the proposed exhibitions; they are not constrained in doing so by "narrowly drawn, reasonable and definite standards." Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S., at 271, 71 S.Ct., at 327. This may be a permissible way to control pawnshops, pool halls, and the other "regulated uses" for which the ordinance was originally designed. It is not an acceptable way, in the light of the First Amendment's presence, to decide who will be permitted to exhibit what films in what places.

III

The Court today does not really question these settled principles, or raise any doubt that if they were applied in this case, the challenged ordinance would not survive. The Court reasons, instead, that these principles need not be applied in this case because the plaintiffs themselves are clearly within the ordinance's proscriptions, and thus not affected by its vagueness. Our usual practice, as the Court notes, is to entertain facial challenges based on vagueness and overbreadth by anyone subject to a statute's proscription. The reasons given for departing 95 from this practice are (1) that the ordinance will have no "significant deterrent effect on the exhibition of films protected by the First Amendment"; (2) that the ordinance is easily susceptible of "a narrowing construction"; and (3) that "there is surely a less vital interest in the uninhibited exhibition of material that is on the borderline between pornography and artistic expression than in the free dissemination of ideas of social and political significance." Ante, at 2447.

As to the first reason, I disagree on the facts, as is clear from the initial section of this opinion.[7] As to the second, no easy "narrowing construction" is proposed, and I doubt that one exists, particularly since (due to the operation of the 1,000-foot rule) not only the "used for presenting" and "characterized by an emphasis" language relating to "adult" theaters, and the "flagrant disregard" and "public interest" language of the licensing and waiver provisions, but also the definitions of Other regulated uses must all be reduced to specificity. See also Hynes v. Mayor of Oradell, 425 U.S., at 622, 96 S.Ct., at 1761. ("we are without power to remedy the (vagueness) defects by giving the ordinance constitutionally precise content").

[7] In Erznoznik v. City of Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 95 S.Ct. 2268, 45 L.Ed.2d 125 (1975), the case on which the Court relies for the proposition that only statutes having a "significant deterrent effect" may be facially challenged, such an effect in fact was found to exist. The ordinance there at issue prohibited drive-in theaters from exhibiting films in which nude parts of the human body would be "visible from any public street or public place." We perceived a "real and substantial" deterrent effect in the "unwelcome choice" to which the ordinance put exhibitors: "either (to) restrict their movie offerings or construct adequate protective fencing which may be extremely expensive or even physically impracticable." Id., at 217, 95 S.Ct., at 2277. In the present case the second horn of the dilemma is even sharper: the construction (or acquisition) of an entirely new theater.

96 As the third reason, that "adult" material is simply entitled to less protection, it certainly explains the lapse in applying settled vagueness principles, as indeed it explains this whole case. In joining Mr. Justice STEWART I have joined his forthright rejection of the notion that First Amendment protection is diminished for "erotic materials" that only a "few of us" see the need to protect.

We should not be swayed in this case by the characterization of the challenged ordinance as merely a "zoning" regulation, or by the "adult" nature of the affected material. By whatever name, this ordinance prohibits the showing of certain films in certain places, imposing criminal sanctions *2465 for violation of the ban. And however distasteful we may suspect the films to be, we cannot approve their suppression without any judicial finding that they are obscene under this Court's carefully delineated and considered standards.

All Citations

427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, 1 Media L. Rep. 1151

111 S.Ct. 2456
Supreme Court of the United States

Michael BARNES, Prosecuting Attorney of St. Joseph County, Indiana, et al.
v.
GLEN THEATRE, INC., et al.

No. 90–26.
|
Argued Jan. 8, 1991.
|
Decided June 21, 1991.

Establishments wishing to provide totally nude dancing as entertainment and individual dancers employed at establishments brought suit to enjoin enforcement of Indiana public indecency statute which required dancers to wear pasties and a G-string, asserting that statute violated the First Amendment. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, 726 F.Supp. 728, permanently enjoined enforcement. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, 802 F.2d 287, reversed and remanded. On remand, the District Court, 695 F.Supp. 414, found that nude dancing in question was not protected by the First Amendment. On appeal, the Court of Appeals, 887 F.2d 826, reversed and remanded. Opinion was vacated and rehearing en banc granted. The Court of Appeals, 904 F.2d 1081, reversed. After granting certiorari, the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Rehnquist, held that enforcement of public indecency statute to require that dancers at adult entertainment establishments wear pasties and a G-string did not violate the First Amendment.

Reversed.

Justices Scalia and Souter filed opinions concurring in the judgment.

Justice White filed dissenting opinion, in which Justices Marshall, Blackmun, and Stevens joined.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Constitutional Law
Bookstores
Constitutional Law
Cabarets, Discotheques, Dance Halls, and Nightclubs in General

Totally nude dancing as sought to be performed in lounge presenting "go-go dancing," and in adult "bookstore," was expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, although only marginally so. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with two Justices concurring, and two Justices concurring in the judgment.) U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

279 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Conduct, protection of
Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare
Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

Government regulation of expressive conduct is sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the government, if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest, if the governmental interest is unrelated to suppression of free expression, and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is not greater than is essential to furtherance of that interest. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with two Justices concurring, and two Justices concurring in the judgment.) U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

151 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing
Obscenity

Exhibitions and performances

Enforcement of Indiana's public indecency law to require nude dancers in adult entertainment establishments to wear pasties and any G-string did not violate the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression; statute was clearly within state's constitutional power, it furthered substantial governmental interest in protecting societal order and morality, governmental interest was unrelated to suppression of free expression, and incidental restriction on First Amendment freedom was no greater than was essential to furtherance of the governmental interest. (Per Chief Justice Rehnquist, with two Justices concurring, and two Justices concurring in the judgment.) West's A.I.C. 35–45–4–1; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

455 Cases that cite this headnote

2457 *560 Syllabus *

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Respondents, two Indiana establishments wishing to provide totally nude dancing as entertainment and individual dancers employed at those establishments, brought suit in the District Court to enjoin enforcement of the state public indecency law—which requires respondent dancers to wear pasties and G-strings—asserting that the law's prohibition against total nudity in public places violates the First Amendment. The court held that the nude dancing involved here was not expressive conduct. The Court of Appeals reversed, ruling that nonobscene nude dancing performed for entertainment is protected expression, and that the statute was an improper infringement of that activity because its purpose was to prevent the message of eroticism and sexuality conveyed by the dancers.

Held: The judgment is reversed.

904 F.2d 1081 (CA9 1990), reversed.

The Chief Justice, joined by Justice O'CONNOR and Justice KENNEDY, concluded that the enforcement of Indiana's public indecency law to prevent totally nude dancing does not violate the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression. Pp. 2460–2463.

(a) Nude dancing of the kind sought to be performed here is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, although only marginally so. See, e.g., Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 932, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 2568, 45 L.Ed.2d 648. P. 2460.

(b) Applying the four-part test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376–377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1678–1679, 20 L.Ed.2d 672—which rejected the contention that symbolic speech is entitled to full First Amendment protection—the statute is justified despite its incidental limitations on some expressive activity. The law is clearly within the State's constitutional power. And it furthers a substantial governmental interest in protecting societal order and morality. Public indecency statutes reflect moral disapproval of people appearing in the nude among strangers in public places, and this particular law follows a line of state laws, dating back to 1831, banning public nudity. The States' traditional police power is defined as the authority to provide for the public health, safety, and morals, and such a basis for legislation 561 has been upheld. See, e.g., Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 61, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2637, 37 L.Ed.2d 446. This governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, since public nudity is the evil the State seeks to prevent, whether or not it is combined with expressive activity. The law does not proscribe nudity in these establishments because the dancers are conveying an erotic message. To the contrary, an erotic performance may be presented without *2458 any state interference, so long as the performers wear a scant amount of clothing. Finally, the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedom is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the governmental interest. Since the statutory prohibition is not a means to some greater end, but an end itself, it is without cavil that the statute is narrowly tailored. Pp. 2460–2463.

Justice SCALIA concluded that the statute—as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, either in practice or on its face—is not subject to normal First Amendment scrutiny and should be upheld on the ground that moral opposition to nudity supplies a rational basis for its prohibition. Cf. Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876. There is no intermediate level of scrutiny requiring that an incidental restriction on expression, such as that involved here, be justified by an important or substantial governmental interest. Pp. 2463–2467.

Justice SOUTER, agreeing that the nude dancing at issue here is subject to a degree of First Amendment protection, and that the test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, is the appropriate analysis to determine the actual protection required, concluded that the State's interest in preventing the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments—prostitution, sexual assaults, and other criminal activity—is sufficient under O'Brien to justify the law's enforcement against nude dancing. The prevention of such effects clearly falls within the State's constitutional power. In addition, the asserted interest is plainly substantial, and the State could have concluded that it is furthered by a prohibition on nude dancing, even without localized proof of the harmful effects. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 50, 51, 106 S.Ct. 925, 930, 930, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. Moreover, the interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression, since the pernicious effects are merely associated with nude dancing establishments and are not the result of the expression inherent in nude dancing. Id., at 48, 106 S.Ct., at 929. Finally, the restriction is no greater than is essential to further the governmental interest, since pasties and a G-string moderate expression to a minor degree when measured against the dancer's remaining capacity and opportunity to express an erotic message. Pp. 2468–2471.

562 REHNQUIST, C.J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered an opinion, in which O'CONNOR and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., post, p. 2463, and SOUTER, J., post, p. 2468, filed opinions concurring in the judgment. WHITE, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined, post, p. 2471.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Wayne E. Uhl, Deputy Attorney General of Indiana, argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs was Linley E. Pearson, Attorney General.

Bruce J. Ennis, Jr., argued the cause for respondents. Lee J. Klein and Bradley J. Shafer filed a brief for respondents Glen Theatre, Inc., et al. Patrick Louis Baude and Charles A. Asher filed a brief for respondents Darlene Miller et al.*

*Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the State of Arizona et al. by Robert K. Corbin, Attorney General of Arizona, and Steven J. Twist, Chief Assistant Attorney General, Clarine Nardi Riddle, Attorney General of Connecticut, and John J. Kelly, Chief State's Attorney, William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, Lacy H. Thornburg, Attorney General of North Carolina, and Rosalie Simmonds Ballentine, Acting Attorney General of the Virgin Islands; for the American Family Association, Inc., et al. by Alan E. Sears, James Mueller, and Peggy M. Coleman; and for the National Governors' Association et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon and Peter Buscemi.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Civil Liberties Union et al. by Spencer Neth, Thomas D. Buckley, Jr., Steven R. Shapiro, and John A. Powell; for the Georgia on Premise & Lounge Association, Inc., by James A. Walrath; for People for the American Way et al. by Timothy B. Dyk, Robert H. Klonoff, Patricia A. Dunn, Elliot M. Mincberg, Stephen F. Rohde, and Mary D. Dorman.

James J. Clancy filed a brief pro se as amicus curiae.

Opinion

Chief Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

Respondents are two establishments in South Bend, Indiana, that wish to provide totally nude dancing as entertainment, and individual dancers who are employed at these 563 establishments. They claim that the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of expression prevents the State of Indiana from enforcing its public indecency law to prevent this form of dancing. We reject their claim.

The facts appear from the pleadings and findings of the District Court and are uncontested here. The Kitty Kat Lounge, Inc. (Kitty Kat), is located in the city of South Bend. It sells alcoholic beverages and presents "go-go dancing." Its proprietor desires to present "totally nude dancing," but an applicable Indiana statute regulating public nudity requires that the dancers wear "pasties" 2459 and "G-strings" when they dance. The dancers are not paid an hourly wage, but work on commission. They receive a 100 percent commission on the first $60 in drink sales during their performances. Darlene Miller, one of the respondents in the action, had worked at the Kitty Kat for about two years at the time this action was brought. Miller wishes to dance nude because she believes she would make more money doing so.

Respondent Glen Theatre, Inc., is an Indiana corporation with a place of business in South Bend. Its primary business is supplying so-called adult entertainment through written and printed materials, movie showings, and live entertainment at an enclosed "bookstore." The live entertainment at the "bookstore" consists of nude and seminude performances and showings of the female body through glass panels. Customers sit in a booth and insert coins into a timing mechanism that permits them to observe the live nude and seminude dancers for a period of time. One of Glen Theatre's dancers, Gayle Ann Marie Sutro, has danced, modeled, and acted professionally for more than 15 years, and in addition to her performances at the Glen Theatre, can be seen in a pornographic movie at a nearby theater. App. to Pet. for Cert. 131–133.

Respondents sued in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana to enjoin the enforcement of the Indiana public indecency statute, *564 Ind.Code § 35–45–4–1 (1988), asserting that its prohibition against complete nudity in public places violated the First Amendment. The District Court originally granted respondents' prayer for an injunction, finding that the statute was facially overbroad. The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed, deciding that previous litigation with respect to the statute in the Supreme Court of Indiana and this Court precluded the possibility of such a challenge,[1] and remanded to the District Court in order for the plaintiffs to pursue their claim that the statute violated the First Amendment as applied to their dancing. Glen Theatre, Inc. v. Pearson, 802 F.2d 287, 288–290 (1986). On remand, the District Court concluded that *565 "the type of dancing these plaintiffs wish to perform is not expressive activity protected by the Constitution of the United States," and rendered judgment in favor of the defendants. Glen Theatre, Inc. v. Civil City of South Bend, 695 F.Supp. 414, 419 (1988). The case was again appealed to the Seventh Circuit, and a panel of that court reversed the District Court, holding that the nude dancing involved here was expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. 2460 Miller v. Civil City of South Bend, 887 F.2d 826 (1989). The Court of Appeals then heard the case en banc, and the court rendered a series of comprehensive and thoughtful opinions. The majority concluded that nonobscene nude dancing performed for entertainment is expression protected by the First Amendment, and that the public indecency statute was an improper infringement of that expressive activity because its purpose was to prevent the message of eroticism and sexuality conveyed by the dancers. Miller v. Civil City of South Bend, 904 F.2d 1081 (1990). We granted certiorari, 498 U.S. 807, 111 S.Ct. 38, 112 L.Ed.2d 15 (1990), and now hold that the Indiana statutory requirement that the dancers in the establishments involved in this case must wear pasties and G-strings does not violate the First Amendment.

1 The Indiana Supreme Court appeared to give the public indecency statute a limiting construction to save it from a facial overbreadth attack:

> "There is no right to appear nude in public. Rather, it may be constitutionally required to tolerate or to allow some nudity as a part of some larger form of expression meriting protection, when the communication of ideas is involved." State v. Baysinger, 272 Ind. 236, 247, 397 N.E.2d 580, 587 (1979) (emphasis added), appeals dism'd sub nom. Clark v. Indiana, 446 U.S. 931, 100 S.Ct. 2146, 64 L.Ed.2d 783, and Dove v. Indiana, 449 U.S. 806, 101 S.Ct. 52, 66 L.Ed.2d 10 (1980).

Five years after Baysinger, however, the Indiana Supreme Court reversed a decision of the Indiana Court of Appeals holding that the statute did "not apply to activity such as the theatrical appearances involved herein, which may not be prohibited absent a finding of obscenity," in a case involving a partially nude dance in the "Miss Erotica of Fort Wayne" contest. Erhardt v. State, 468 N.E.2d 224 (Ind.1984). The Indiana Supreme Court did not discuss the constitutional issues beyond a cursory comment that the statute had been upheld against constitutional attack in Baysinger, and Erhardt's conduct fell within the statutory prohibition. Justice Hunter dissented, arguing that "a public indecency statute which prohibits nudity in any public place is unconstitutionally overbroad. My reasons for so concluding have already been articulated in State v. Baysinger, (1979) 272 Ind. 236, 397 N.E.2d 580 (Hunter and DeBruler, JJ., dissenting)." 468 N.E.2d at 225–226. Justice DeBruler expressed similar views in his dissent in Erhardt. Id., at 226. Therefore, the Indiana Supreme Court did not affirmatively limit the reach of the statute in Baysinger, but merely said that to the extent the First Amendment would require it, the statute might be unconstitutional as applied to some activities.

[1] Several of our cases contain language suggesting that nude dancing of the kind involved here is expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. In Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 932, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 2568, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975), we said: "[A]lthough the customary 'barroom' type of nude dancing may involve only the barest minimum of protected expression, we recognized in California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 118, 93 S.Ct. 390, 397, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), that this form of entertainment might be entitled to First and Fourteenth Amendment protection under some circumstances." In Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 2181, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981), we said that "[f]urthermore, as the state courts in this case recognized, nude dancing is not without its First Amendment protections from official regulation" (citations omitted). These statements support the conclusion of the Court of Appeals 566 that nude dancing of the kind sought to be performed here is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so. This, of course, does not end our inquiry. We must determine the level of protection to be afforded to the expressive conduct at issue, and must determine whether the Indiana statute is an impermissible infringement of that protected activity.

Indiana, of course, has not banned nude dancing as such, but has proscribed public nudity across the board. The Supreme Court of Indiana has construed the Indiana statute to preclude nudity in what are essentially places of public accommodation such as the Glen Theatre and the Kitty Kat Lounge. In such places, respondents point out, minors are excluded and there are no nonconsenting viewers. Respondents contend that while the State may license establishments such as the ones involved here, and limit the geographical area in which they do business, it may not in any way limit the performance of the dances within them without violating the First Amendment. The petitioners contend, on the other hand, that Indiana's restriction on nude dancing is a valid "time, place, or manner" restriction under cases such as Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984).

The "time, place, or manner" test was developed for evaluating restrictions on expression taking place on public property which had been dedicated as a "public forum," Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2753, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989), although we have on at least one occasion applied it to conduct occurring on private property. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). In Clark we observed that this test has been interpreted to embody much the same standards as those set forth in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), and we turn, therefore, to the rule enunciated in O'Brien.

[2] O'Brien burned his draft card on the steps of the South Boston Courthouse in the presence of a sizable crowd, and 567 was convicted *2461 of violating a statute that prohibited the knowing destruction or mutilation of such a card. He claimed that his conviction was contrary to the First Amendment because his act was "symbolic speech"—expressive conduct. The Court rejected his contention that symbolic speech is entitled to full First Amendment protection, saying:

"[E]ven on the assumption that the alleged communicative element in O'Brien's conduct is sufficient to bring into play the First Amendment, it does not necessarily follow that the destruction of a registration certificate is constitutionally protected activity. This Court has held that when 'speech' and 'nonspeech' elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms. To characterize the quality of the governmental interest which must appear, the Court has employed a variety of descriptive terms: compelling; substantial; subordinating; paramount; cogent; strong. Whatever imprecision inheres in these terms, we think it clear that a government regulation is sufficiently justified if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest." Id., at 376–377, 88 S.Ct., at 1678–1679 (footnotes omitted).

[3] Applying the four-part O'Brien test enunciated above, we find that Indiana's public indecency statute is justified despite its incidental limitations on some expressive activity. The public indecency statute is clearly within the constitutional power of the State and furthers substantial governmental interests. It is impossible to discern, other than from the text of the statute, exactly what governmental interest the Indiana legislators had in mind when they enacted 568 this statute, for Indiana does not record legislative history, and the State's highest court has not shed additional light on the statute's purpose. Nonetheless, the statute's purpose of protecting societal order and morality is clear from its text and history. Public indecency statutes of this sort are of ancient origin and presently exist in at least 47 States. Public indecency, including nudity, was a criminal offense at common law, and this Court recognized the common-law roots of the offense of "gross and open indecency" in Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 515, 68 S.Ct. 665, 670, 92 L.Ed. 840 (1948). Public nudity was considered an act malum in se. Le Roy v. Sidley, 1 Sid. 168, 82 Eng.Rep. 1036 (K.B.1664). Public indecency statutes such as the one before us reflect moral disapproval of people appearing in the nude among strangers in public places.

This public indecency statute follows a long line of earlier Indiana statutes banning all public nudity. The history of Indiana's public indecency statute shows that it predates barroom nude dancing and was enacted as a general prohibition. At least as early as 1831, Indiana had a statute punishing "open and notorious lewdness, or ... any grossly scandalous and public indecency." Rev.Laws of Ind., ch. 26, § 60 (1831); Ind.Rev.Stat., ch. 53, § 81 (1834). A gap during which no statute was in effect was filled by the Indiana Supreme Court in Ardery v. State, 56 Ind. 328 (1877), which held that the court could sustain a conviction for exhibition of "privates" in the presence of others. The court traced the offense to the Bible story of Adam and Eve. Id., at 329–330. In 1881, a statute was enacted that would remain essentially unchanged for nearly a century:

> "Whoever, being over fourteen years of age, makes an indecent exposure of his person in a public place, or in any place where there are other persons to be offended or annoyed thereby, ... is guilty of *2462 public indecency...." 1881 Ind.Acts, ch. 37, § 90.

569 The language quoted above remained unchanged until it was simultaneously repealed and replaced with the present statute in 1976. 1976 Ind.Acts, Pub.L. 148, Art. 45, ch. 4, § 1. [2]

2 Indiana Code § 35–45–4–1 (1988) provides:

> "Public indecency; indecent exposure
>
> "Sec. 1. (a) A person who knowingly or intentionally, in a public place:
>
> "(1) engages in sexual intercourse;
>
> "(2) engages in deviate sexual conduct;
>
> "(3) appears in a state of nudity; or
>
> "(4) fondles the genitals of himself or another person;
>
> commits public indecency, a Class A misdemeanor.
>
> "(b) 'Nudity' means the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, or buttocks with less than a fully opaque covering, the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple, or the showing of the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state."

This and other public indecency statutes were designed to protect morals and public order. The traditional police power of the States is defined as the authority to provide for the public health, safety, and morals, and we have upheld such a basis for legislation. In Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 61, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2637, 37 L.Ed.2d 446 (1973), we said:

> "In deciding Roth [v. United States, 354 U.S. 476 [77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498] (1957)], this Court implicitly accepted that a legislature could legitimately act on such a conclusion to protect 'the social interest in order and morality.' [Id.], at 485 [77 S.Ct., at 1309]." (Emphasis omitted.)

And in Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 196, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2846, 92 L.Ed.2d 140 (1986), we said:

> "The law, however, is constantly based on notions of morality, and if all laws representing essentially > moral choices are to be invalidated under the Due Process Clause, the courts will be very busy indeed."

Thus, the public indecency statute furthers a substantial government interest in protecting order and morality.

570 This interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. Some may view restricting nudity on moral grounds as necessarily related to expression. We disagree. It can be argued, of course, that almost limitless types of conduct—including appearing in the nude in public—are "expressive," and in one sense of the word this is true. People who go about in the nude in public may be expressing something about themselves by so doing. But the court rejected this expansive notion of "expressive conduct" in O'Brien, saying:

> "We cannot accept the view that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea." 391 U.S., at 376, 88 S.Ct., at 1678.

And in Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989), we further observed:

> "It is possible to find some kernel of expression in almost every activity a person undertakes—for example, walking down the street or meeting one's friends at a shopping mall—but such a kernel is not sufficient to bring the activity within the protection of the First Amendment. We think the activity of these dance-hall patrons coming together to engage in recreational dancing—is not protected by the First Amendment." Id., at 25, 109 S.Ct., at 1595.

Respondents contend that even though prohibiting nudity in public generally may not be related to suppressing expression, prohibiting the performance of nude dancing is related to expression because the State seeks to prevent its erotic message. Therefore, they reason that the application of the Indiana statute to the nude dancing in this case violates the First Amendment, because it fails the third part of the O'Brien test, viz: *2463 the governmental interest must be unrelated to the suppression of free expression.

But we do not think that when Indiana applies its statute to the nude dancing in these nightclubs it is proscribing nudity because of the erotic message conveyed by the dancers. 571 Presumably numerous other erotic performances are presented at these establishments and similar clubs without any interference from the State, so long as the performers wear a scant amount of clothing. Likewise, the requirement that the dancers don pasties and G-strings does not deprive the dance of whatever erotic message it conveys; it simply makes the message slightly less graphic. The perceived evil that Indiana seeks to address is not erotic dancing, but public nudity. The appearance of people of all shapes, sizes and ages in the nude at a beach, for example, would convey little if any erotic message, yet the State still seeks to prevent it. Public nudity is the evil the State seeks to prevent, whether or not it is combined with expressive activity.

This conclusion is buttressed by a reference to the facts of O'Brien. An Act of Congress provided that anyone who knowingly destroyed a Selective Service registration certificate committed an offense. O'Brien burned his certificate on the steps of the South Boston Courthouse to influence others to adopt his antiwar beliefs. This Court upheld his conviction, reasoning that the continued availability of issued certificates served a legitimate and substantial purpose in the administration of the Selective Service System. O'Brien's deliberate destruction of his certificate frustrated this purpose and "[f]or this noncommunicative impact of his conduct, and for nothing else, he was convicted." 391 U.S., at 382, 88 S.Ct., at 1682. It was assumed that O'Brien's act in burning the certificate had a communicative element in it sufficient to bring into play the First Amendment, id., at 376, 88 S.Ct., at 1682, but it was for the noncommunicative element that he was prosecuted. So here with the Indiana statute; while the dancing to which it was applied had a communicative element, it was not the dancing that was prohibited, but simply its being done in the nude.

The fourth part of the O'Brien test requires that the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedom be no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the governmental interest. As indicated in the discussion above, the 572 governmental interest served by the text of the prohibition is societal disapproval of nudity in public places and among strangers. The statutory prohibition is not a means to some greater end, but an end in itself. It is without cavil that the public indecency statute is "narrowly tailored"; Indiana's requirement that the dancers wear at least pasties and G-strings is modest, and the bare minimum necessary to achieve the State's purpose.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals accordingly is Reversed.

Justice SCALIA, concurring in the judgment.
I agree that the judgment of the Court of Appeals must be reversed. In my view, however, the challenged regulation must be upheld, not because it survives some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny, but because, as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all.

I

Indiana's public indecency statute provides:

> "(a) A person who knowingly or intentionally, in a public place:
>
> "(1) engages in sexual intercourse;
>
> "(2) engages in deviate sexual conduct;
>
> "(3) appears in a state of nudity; or
>
> "(4) fondles the genitals of himself or another person;
>
> commits public indecency, a Class A misdemeanor.
>
> *2464 "(b) 'Nudity' means the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, or buttocks with less than a fully opaque covering, the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple, or the showing of covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state." Ind.Code § 35–45–4–1 (1988).

On its face, this law is not directed at expression in particular. As Judge Easterbrook put it in his dissent below: "Indiana 573 does not regulate dancing. It regulates public nudity.... Almost the entire domain of Indiana's statute is unrelated to expression, unless we view nude beaches and topless hot dog vendors as speech." Miller v. Civil City of South Bend, 904 F.2d 1081, 1120 (CA7 1990). The intent to convey a "message of eroticism" (or any other message) is not a necessary element of the statutory offense of public indecency; nor does one commit that statutory offense by conveying the most explicit "message of eroticism," so long as he does not commit any of the four specified acts in the process. [1]

[1] Respondents assert that the statute cannot be characterized as a general regulation of conduct, unrelated to suppression of expression, because one defense put forward in oral argument below by the attorney general referred to the "message of eroticism" conveyed by respondents. But that argument seemed to go to whether the statute could constitutionally be applied to the present performances, rather than to what was the purpose of the legislation. Moreover, the State's argument below was in the alternative: (1) that the statute does not implicate the First Amendment because it is a neutral rule not directed at expression, and (2) that the statute in any event survives First Amendment scrutiny because of the State's interest in suppressing nude barroom dancing. The second argument can be claimed to contradict the first (though I think it does not); but it certainly does not waive or abandon it. In any case, the clear purpose shown by both the text and historical use of the statute cannot be refuted by a litigating statement in a single case.

Indiana's statute is in the line of a long tradition of laws against public nudity, which have never been thought to run afoul of traditional understanding of "the freedom of speech." Public indecency—including public nudity—has long been an offense at common law. See 50 Am.Jur.2d, Lewdness, Indecency, and Obscenity 449, 472–474 (1970); Annot., Criminal offense predicated on indecent exposure, 93 A.L.R. 996, 997–998 (1934); Winters v. New York, 333 U.S. 507, 515, 68 S.Ct. 665, 670, 92 L.Ed. 840 (1948). Indiana's first public nudity statute, Rev. Laws of Ind., ch. 26, § 60 (1831), predated by many years the appearance of nude barroom dancing. It was general in scope, directed at all public nudity, and not just at public nude expression; and all succeeding statutes, down to 574 the present one, have been the same. Were it the case that Indiana in practice targeted only expressive nudity, while turning a blind eye to nude beaches and unclothed purveyors of hot dogs and machine tools, see Miller, 904 F.2d, at 1120, 1121, it might be said that what posed as a regulation of conduct in general was in reality a regulation of only communicative conduct. Respondents have adduced no evidence of that. Indiana officials have brought many public indecency prosecutions for activities having no communicative element. See Bond v. State, 515 N.E.2d 856, 857 (Ind.1987); In re Levinson, 444 N.E.2d 1175, 1176 (Ind.1983); Preston v. State, 259 Ind. 353, 354–355, 287 N.E.2d 347, 348 (1972); Thomas v. State, 238 Ind. 658, 659–660, 154 N.E.2d 503, 504–505 (1958); Blanton v. State, 533 N.E.2d 190, 191 (Ind.App.1989); Sweeney v. State, 486 N.E.2d 651, 652 (Ind.App.1985); Thompson v. State, 482 N.E.2d 1372, 1373–1374 (Ind.App.1985); Adims v. State, 461 N.E.2d 740, 741–742 (Ind.App.1984); State v. Elliott, 435 N.E.2d 302, 304 (Ind.App.1982); Lasko v. State, 409 N.E.2d 1124, 1126 (Ind.App.1980). [2]

2 Respondents also contend that the statute, as interpreted, is not content neutral in the expressive conduct to which it applies, since it allegedly does not apply to nudity in theatrical productions. See State v. Baysinger, 272 Ind. 236, 247, 397 N.E.2d 580, 587 (1979). I am not sure that theater versus nontheater represents a distinction based on content rather than format, but assuming that it does, the argument nonetheless fails for the reason the plurality describes, ante, at 2459, n. 1.

2465 The dissent confidently asserts, post, at 2473, that the purpose of restricting nudity in public places in general is to protect nonconsenting parties from offense; and argues that since only consenting, admission-paying patrons see respondents dance, that purpose cannot apply and the only remaining purpose must relate to the communicative elements of the performance. Perhaps the dissenters believe that "offense to others" ought to be the only reason for restricting nudity in public places generally, but there is no *575 basis for thinking that our society has ever shared that Thoreauvian "you - may - do - what - you - like - so - long - as - it - does - not - injure - someone -else" beau ideal—much less for thinking that it was written into the Constitution. The purpose of Indiana's nudity law would be violated, I think, if 60,000 fully consenting adults crowded into the Hoosier Dome to display their genitals to one another, even if there were not an offended innocent in the crowd. Our society prohibits, and all human societies have prohibited, certain activities not because they harm others but because they are considered, in the traditional phrase, "contra bonos mores," i.e., immoral. In American society, such prohibitions have included, for example, sadomasochism, cockfighting, bestiality, suicide, drug use, prostitution, and sodomy. While there may be great diversity of view on whether various of these prohibitions should exist (though I have found few ready to abandon, in principle, all of them), there is no doubt that, absent specific constitutional protection for the conduct involved, the Constitution does not prohibit them simply because they regulate "morality." See Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 196, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 2846, 92 L.Ed.2d 140 (1986) (upholding prohibition of private homosexual sodomy enacted solely on "the presumed belief of a majority of the electorate in [the jurisdiction] that homosexual sodomy is immoral and unacceptable"). See also Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 68, n. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2641, n. 15, 37 L.Ed.2d 446 (1973); Dronenburg v. Zech, 239 U.S.App.D.C. 229, 238, and n. 6, 741 F.2d 1388, 1397, and n. 6 (1984) (opinion of Bork, J.). The purpose of the Indiana statute, as both its text and the manner of its enforcement demonstrate, is to enforce the traditional moral belief that people should not expose their private parts indiscriminately, regardless of whether those who see them are disedified. Since that is so, the dissent has no basis for positing that, where only thoroughly edified adults are present, the purpose must be repression of communication. [3]

3 The dissent, post, at 2472–2473, 2475–2476, also misunderstands what is meant by the term "general law." I do not mean that the law restricts the targeted conduct in all places at all times. A law is "general" for the present purposes if it regulates conduct without regard to whether that conduct is expressive. Concededly, Indiana bans nudity in public places, but not within the privacy of the home. (That is not surprising, since the common-law offense, and the traditional moral prohibition, runs against public nudity, not against all nudity. E.g., 50 Am.Jur.2d, Lewdness, Indecency, and Obscenity, § 17, pp. 472–474 (1970).) But that confirms, rather than refutes, the general nature of the law: One may not go nude in public, whether or not one intends thereby to convey a message, and similarly one may go nude in private, again whether or not that nudity is expressive.

576 II

Since the Indiana regulation is a general law not specifically targeted at expressive conduct, its application to such conduct does not in my view implicate the First Amendment.

The First Amendment explicitly protects "the freedom of speech [and] of the press"—oral and written speech—not "expressive conduct." When any law restricts speech, even for a purpose that has nothing to do with the suppression of communication (for instance, to reduce noise, see Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558, 561, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 1150, 92 L.Ed. 1574 (1948), to regulate election campaigns, see Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 16, 96 S.Ct. 612, 633, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976), or to prevent littering, see Schneider v. State (Town of Irvington), 308 U.S. 147, 163, 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939)), we insist that 2466 it meet the high, First–Amendment standard of justification. But virtually every law restricts conduct, and virtually any prohibited conduct can be performed for an expressive purpose—if only expressive of the fact that the actor disagrees with the prohibition. See, e.g., Florida Free Beaches, Inc. v. Miami, 734 F.2d 608, 609 (CA11 1984) (nude sunbathers challenging public indecency law claimed their "message" was that nudity is not indecent). It cannot reasonably be demanded, therefore, that every restriction of expression incidentally produced by a general law regulating conduct pass normal First Amendment scrutiny, or even—as some of our cases have suggested, see, e.g., United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1679, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968)—that it be justified by an "important or substantial" *577 government interest. Nor do our holdings require such justification: We have never invalidated the application of a general law simply because the conduct that it reached was being engaged in for expressive purposes and the government could not demonstrate a sufficiently important state interest.

This is not to say that the First Amendment affords no protection to expressive conduct. Where the government prohibits conduct precisely because of its communicative attributes, we hold the regulation unconstitutional. See, e.g., United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310, 110 S.Ct. 2404, 110 L.Ed.2d 287 (1990) (burning flag); Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989) (same); Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 41 L.Ed.2d 842 (1974) (defacing flag); Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731 (1969) (wearing black arm bands); Brown v. Louisiana, 383 U.S. 131, 86 S.Ct. 719, 15 L.Ed.2d 637 (1966) (participating in silent sit-in); Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 (1931) (flying a red flag).[4] In each of the foregoing cases, we explicitly found that suppressing communication was the object of the regulation of conduct. Where that has not been the case, however—where suppression of communicative use of the conduct was merely the incidental effect of forbidding the conduct for other reasons—we have allowed the regulation to stand. O'Brien, supra, 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct., at 1679 (law banning destruction of draft card upheld in application against card burning to protest *578 war); FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Assn., 493 U.S. 411, 110 S.Ct. 768, 107 L.Ed.2d 851 (1990) (Sherman Act upheld in application against restraint of trade to protest low pay); cf. United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 687–688, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 2905–2906, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985) (rule barring respondent from military base upheld in application against entrance on base to protest war); Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984) (rule barring sleeping in parks upheld in application against persons engaging in such conduct to dramatize plight of homeless). As we clearly expressed the point in Johnson:

> "The government generally has a freer hand in restricting expressive conduct than it has in restricting the written or spoken word. It may not, however, proscribe particular conduct because it has expressive elements. What might be termed the more generalized guarantee of freedom of expression makes the communicative nature of conduct an inadequate basis for 2467 singling out that conduct for proscription." 491 U.S., at 406, 109 S.Ct., at 2540–2541 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted; emphasis in original).

4 It is easy to conclude that conduct has been forbidden because of its communicative attributes when the conduct in question is what the Court has called "inherently expressive," and what I would prefer to call "conventionally expressive"—such as flying a red flag. I mean by that phrase (as I assume the Court means by "inherently expressive") conduct that is normally engaged in for the purpose of communicating an idea, or perhaps an emotion, to someone else. I am not sure whether dancing fits that description, see Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 24, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 1595, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989) (social dance group "do[es] not involve the sort of expressive association that the First Amendment has been held to protect"). But even if it does, this law is directed against nudity, not dancing. Nudity is not normally engaged in for the purpose of communicating an idea or an emotion.

All our holdings (though admittedly not some of our discussion) support the conclusion that "the only First Amendment analysis applicable to laws that do not directly or indirectly impede speech is the threshold inquiry of whether the purpose of the law is to suppress communication. If not, that is the end of the matter so far as First Amendment guarantees are concerned; if so, the court then proceeds to determine whether there is substantial justification for the proscription." Community for Creative Non–Violence v. Watt, 227 U.S.App.D.C. 19, 55–56, 703 F.2d 586, 622–623 (1983) (en banc) (Scalia, J., dissenting), (footnote omitted; emphasis omitted), rev'd sub nom. Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). Such a regime ensures that the government does not act to suppress communication, without requiring that all conduct-restricting regulation 579 which means in effect all regulation) survive an enhanced level of scrutiny.

We have explicitly adopted such a regime in another First Amendment context: that of free exercise. In Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990), we held that general laws not specifically targeted at religious practices did not require heightened First Amendment scrutiny even though they diminished some people's ability to practice their religion. "The government's ability to enforce generally applicable prohibitions of socially harmful conduct, like its ability to carry out other aspects of public policy, 'cannot depend on measuring the effects of a governmental action on a religious objector's spiritual development.' " Id., at 885 [110 S.Ct., at 1603], quoting Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Assn., 485 U.S. 439, 451, 108 S.Ct. 1319, 1326, 99 L.Ed.2d 534 (1988); see also Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 594–595, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 1012–1013, 84 L.Ed. 1375 (1940) (Frankfurter, J.) ("Conscientious scruples have not, in the course of the long struggle for religious toleration, relieved the individual from obedience to a general law not aimed at the promotion or restriction of religious beliefs"). There is even greater reason to apply this approach to the regulation of expressive conduct. Relatively few can plausibly assert that their illegal conduct is being engaged in for religious reasons; but almost anyone can violate almost any law as a means of expression. In the one case, as in the other, if the law is not directed against the protected value (religion or expression) the law must be obeyed.

III

While I do not think the plurality's conclusions differ greatly from my own, I cannot entirely endorse its reasoning. The plurality purports to apply to this general law, insofar as it regulates this allegedly expressive conduct, an intermediate level of First Amendment scrutiny: The government interest in the regulation must be " 'important or substantial,' " ante, at 2461, quoting O'Brien, supra, 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct., at 1679. As I have indicated, 580 I do not believe such a heightened standard exists. I think we should avoid wherever possible, moreover, a method of analysis that requires judicial assessment of the "importance" of government interests—and especially of government interests in various aspects of morality.

Neither of the cases that the plurality cites to support the "importance" of the State's interest here, see ante, at 2462, is in point. Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S., at 61, 93 S.Ct., at 2637 and Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S., at 196, 106 S.Ct., at 2846, did uphold laws prohibiting private conduct based on concerns of decency and morality; but neither opinion held that those concerns were particularly "important" or "substantial," or amounted to anything more than a rational basis for regulation. Slaton involved an exhibition which, since it was obscene *2468 and at least to some extent public, was unprotected by the First Amendment, see Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957); the State's prohibition could therefore be invalidated only if it had no rational basis. We found that the State's "right ... to maintain a decent society" provided a "legitimate" basis for regulation—even as to obscene material viewed by consenting adults. 413 U.S., at 59–60, 93 S.Ct., at 2636–2637. In Bowers, we held that since homosexual behavior is not a fundamental right, a Georgia law prohibiting private homosexual intercourse needed only a rational basis in order to comply with the Due Process Clause. Moral opposition to homosexuality, we said, provided that rational basis. 478 U.S., at 196, 106 S.Ct., at 2846. I would uphold the Indiana statute on precisely the same ground: Moral opposition to nudity supplies a rational basis for its prohibition, and since the First Amendment has no application to this case no more than that is needed.

* * *

Indiana may constitutionally enforce its prohibition of public nudity even against those who choose to use public nudity as a means of communication. The State is regulating conduct, not expression, and those who choose to employ conduct 581 as a means of expression must make sure that the conduct they select is not generally forbidden. For these reasons, I agree that the judgment should be reversed.

Justice SOUTER, concurring in the judgment.

Not all dancing is entitled to First Amendment protection as expressive activity. This Court has previously categorized ballroom dancing as beyond the Amendment's protection, Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 24–25, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 1594–1595, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989), and dancing as aerobic exercise would likewise be outside the First Amendment's concern. But dancing as a performance directed to an actual or hypothetical audience gives expression at least to generalized emotion or feeling, and where the dancer is nude or nearly so the feeling expressed, in the absence of some contrary clue, is eroticism, carrying an endorsement of erotic experience. Such is the expressive content of the dances described in the record.

Although such performance dancing is inherently expressive, nudity per se is not. It is a condition, not an activity, and the voluntary assumption of that condition, without more, apparently expresses nothing beyond the view that the condition is somehow appropriate to the circumstances. But every voluntary act implies some such idea, and the implication is thus so common and minimal that calling all voluntary activity expressive would reduce the concept of expression to the point of the meaningless. A search for some expression beyond the minimal in the choice to go nude will often yield nothing: a person may choose nudity, for example, for maximum sunbathing. But when nudity is combined with expressive activity, its stimulative and attractive value certainly can enhance the force of expression, and a dancer's acts in going from clothed to nude, as in a striptease, are integrated into the dance and its expressive function. Thus I agree with the plurality and the dissent that an interest in freely engaging in the nude dancing at issue here is subject to a degree of First Amendment protection.

582 I also agree with the plurality that the appropriate analysis to determine the actual protection required by the First Amendment is the four-part enquiry described in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), for judging the limits of appropriate state action burdening expressive acts as distinct from pure speech or representation. I nonetheless write separately to rest my concurrence in the judgment, not on the possible sufficiency of society's moral views to justify the limitations at issue, but on the State's substantial interest in combating the secondary effects of adult *2469 entertainment establishments of the sort typified by respondents' establishments.

It is, of course, true that this justification has not been articulated by Indiana's Legislature or by its courts. As the plurality observes, "Indiana does not record legislative history, and the State's highest court has not shed additional light on the statute's purpose," ante, at 2461. While it is certainly sound in such circumstances to infer general purposes "of protecting societal order and morality ... from [the statute's] text and history," ibid., I think that we need not so limit ourselves in identifying the justification for the legislation at issue here, and may legitimately consider petitioners' assertion that the statute is applied to nude dancing because such dancing "encourag[es] prostitution, increas[es] sexual assaults, and attract[s] other criminal activity." Brief for Petitioners 37.

This asserted justification for the statute may not be ignored merely because it is unclear to what extent this purpose motivated the Indiana Legislature in enacting the statute. Our appropriate focus is not an empirical enquiry into the actual intent of the enacting legislature, but rather the existence or not of a current governmental interest in the service of which the challenged application of the statute may be constitutional. Cf. 583 McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 1961). At least as to the regulation of expressive conduct, [1] "[w]e decline to void [a statute] essentially on the ground that it is unwise legislation which [the legislature] had the undoubted power to enact and which could be reenacted in its exact form if the same or another legislator made a 'wiser' speech about it." O'Brien, supra, 391 U.S., at 384, 88 S.Ct., at 1683. In my view, the interest asserted by petitioners in preventing prostitution, sexual assault, and other criminal activity, although presumably not a justification for all applications of the statute, is sufficient under O'Brien to justify the State's enforcement of the statute against the type of adult entertainment at issue here.

1 Cf., e.g., Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 107 S.Ct. 2573, 96 L.Ed.2d 510 (1987) (striking down state statute on Establishment Clause grounds due to impermissible legislative intent).

At the outset, it is clear that the prevention of such evils falls within the constitutional power of the State, which satisfies the first O'Brien criterion. See 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct., at 1679. The second O'Brien prong asks whether the regulation "furthers an important or substantial governmental interest." Ibid. The asserted state interest is plainly a substantial one; the only question is whether prohibiting nude dancing of the sort at issue here "furthers" that interest. I believe that our cases have addressed this question sufficiently to establish that it does.

In Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), we upheld a city's zoning ordinance designed to prevent the occurrence of harmful secondary effects, including the crime associated with adult entertainment, by protecting approximately 95% of the city's area from the placement of motion picture theaters emphasizing " 'matter depicting, describing or relating to "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas" ... for observation by patrons therein.' " Id., at 44, 106 S.Ct., at 927. Of particular importance to the present enquiry, we held that the city of Renton was not compelled to justify its restrictions by studies specifically relating to the problems 584 that would be caused by adult theaters in that city. Rather, "Renton was entitled to rely on the experiences of Seattle and other cities," id., at 51, 106 S.Ct., at 931, which demonstrated the harmful secondary effects correlated with the presence "of even one [adult] theater in a given neighborhood." Id., at 50, 106 S.Ct., at 930; cf. Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 71, n. 34, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2453, n. 34, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (legislative finding that "a concentration of 'adult' movie theaters causes the area to deteriorate and become a focus of crime"); California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 111, 93 S.Ct. 390, 393, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972) *2470 (administrative findings of criminal activity associated with adult entertainment).

The type of entertainment respondents seek to provide is plainly of the same character as that at issue in Renton, American Mini Theatres, and LaRue. It therefore is no leap to say that live nude dancing of the sort at issue here is likely to produce the same pernicious secondary effects as the adult films displaying "specified anatomical areas" at issue in Renton. Other reported cases from the Circuit in which this litigation arose confirm the conclusion. See, e.g., United States v. Marren, 890 F.2d 924, 926 (CA7 1989) (prostitution associated with nude dancing establishment); United States v. Doerr, 886 F.2d 944, 949 (CA7 1989) (same). In light of Renton's recognition that legislation seeking to combat the secondary effects of adult entertainment need not await localized proof of those effects, the State of Indiana could reasonably conclude that forbidding nude entertainment of the type offered at the Kitty Kat Lounge and the Glen Theatre's "bookstore" furthers its interest in preventing prostitution, sexual assault, and associated crimes. Given our recognition that "society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate," American Mini Theatres, supra, 427 U.S., at 70, 96 S.Ct., at 2452, I do not believe that a State is required affirmatively to undertake to litigate this issue repeatedly in every 585 case. The statute as applied to nudity of the sort at issue here therefore satisfies the second prong of O'Brien. [2]

2 Because there is no overbreadth challenge before us, we are not called upon to decide whether the application of the statute would be valid in other contexts. It is enough, then, to say that the secondary effects rationale on which I rely here would be open to question if the State were to seek to enforce the statute by barring expressive nudity in classes of productions that could not readily be analogized to the adult films at issue in Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). It is difficult to see, for example, how the enforcement of Indiana's statute against nudity in a production of "Hair" or "Equus" somewhere other than an "adult" theater would further the State's interest in avoiding harmful secondary effects, in the absence of evidence that expressive nudity outside the context of Renton-type adult entertainment was correlated with such secondary effects.

The third O'Brien condition is that the governmental interest be "unrelated to the suppression of free expression," 391 U.S., at 377, 88 S.Ct., at 1679, and, on its face, the governmental interest in combating prostitution and other criminal activity is not at all inherently related to expression. The dissent contends, however, that Indiana seeks to regulate nude dancing as its means of combating such secondary effects "because ... creating or emphasizing [the] thoughts and ideas [expressed by nude dancing] in the minds of the spectators may lead to increased prostitution," post, at 2474, and that regulation of expressive conduct because of the fear that the expression will prove persuasive is inherently related to the suppression of free expression. Ibid.

The major premise of the dissent's reasoning may be correct, but its minor premise describing the causal theory of Indiana's regulatory justification is not. To say that pernicious secondary effects are associated with nude dancing establishments is not necessarily to say that such effects result from the persuasive effect of the expression inherent in nude dancing. It is to say, rather, only that the effects are correlated with the existence of establishments offering such dancing, without deciding what the precise causes of the correlation 586 actually are. It is possible, for example, that the higher incidence of prostitution and sexual assault in the vicinity of adult entertainment locations results from the concentration of crowds of men predisposed to such activities, or from the simple viewing of nude bodies regardless of whether those bodies are engaged in expression or not. In neither case would the chain of causation run through the persuasive effect of the expressive component of nude dancing.

*2471 Because the State's interest in banning nude dancing results from a simple correlation of such dancing with other evils, rather than from a relationship between the other evils and the expressive component of the dancing, the interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression. Renton is again persuasive in support of this conclusion. In Renton, we held that an ordinance that regulated adult theaters because the presence of such theaters was correlated with secondary effects that the local government had an interest in regulating was content neutral (a determination similar to the "unrelated to the suppression of free expression" determination here, see Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298, and n. 8, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3071, and n. 8, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984)) because it was "justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech." 475 U.S., at 48, 106 S.Ct., at 929 (emphasis in original). We reached this conclusion without need to decide whether the cause of the correlation might have been the persuasive effect of the adult films that were being regulated. Similarly here, the "secondary effects" justification means that enforcement of the Indiana statute against nude dancing is "justified without reference to the content of the regulated [expression]," ibid. (emphasis omitted), which is sufficient, at least in the context of sexually explicit expression, [3] to satisfy the third prong of the O'Brien test.

3 I reach this conclusion again mindful, as was the Court in Renton, that the protection of sexually explicit expression may be of lesser societal importance than the protection of other forms of expression. See Renton, supra, at 49, and n. 2, 106 S.Ct., at 929, and n. 2, citing Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 2452, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976).

587 The fourth O'Brien condition, that the restriction be no greater than essential to further the governmental interest, requires little discussion. Pasties and a G-string moderate the expression to some degree, to be sure, but only to a degree. Dropping the final stitch is prohibited, but the limitation is minor when measured against the dancer's remaining capacity and opportunity to express the erotic message. Nor, so far as we are told, is the dancer or her employer limited by anything short of obscenity laws from expressing an erotic message by articulate speech or representational means; a pornographic movie featuring one of respondents, for example, was playing nearby without any interference from the authorities at the time these cases arose.

Accordingly, I find O'Brien satisfied and concur in the judgment.

Justice WHITE, with whom Justice MARSHALL, Justice BLACKMUN, and Justice STEVENS join, dissenting.
The first question presented to us in this case is whether nonobscene nude dancing performed as entertainment is expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. The Court of Appeals held that it is, observing that our prior decisions permit no other conclusion. Not surprisingly, then, the plurality now concedes that "nude dancing of the kind sought to be performed here is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment...." Ante, at 2460. This is no more than recognizing, as the Seventh Circuit observed, that dancing is an ancient art form and "inherently embodies the expression and communication of ideas and emotions." Miller v. Civil City of South Bend, 904 F.2d 1081, 1087 (1990) (en banc). [1]

1 Justice SCALIA suggests that performance dancing is not inherently expressive activity, see ante, at 2466, n. 4, but the Court of Appeals has the better view: "Dance has been defined as 'the art of moving the body in a rhythmical way, usually to music, to express an emotion or idea, to narrate a story, or simply to take delight in the movement itself.' 16 The New Encyclopedia Britannica 935 (1989). Inherently, it is the communication of emotion or ideas. At the root of all '[t]he varied manifestations of dancing ... lies the common impulse to resort to movement to externalise states which we cannot externalise by rational means. This is basic dance.' Martin, J. Introduction to the Dance (1939). Aristotle recognized in Poetics that the purpose of dance is 'to represent men's character as well as what they do and suffer.' The raw communicative power of dance was noted by the French poet Stéphane Mallarmé who declared that the dancer 'writing with her body ... suggests things which the written work could express only in several paragraphs of dialogue or descriptive prose.' " 904 F.2d, at 1085–1086. Justice SCALIA cites Dallas v. Stanglin, 490 U.S. 19, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 104 L.Ed.2d 18 (1989), but that decision dealt with social dancing, not performance dancing; and the submission in that case, which we rejected, was not that social dancing was an expressive activity but that plaintiff's associational rights were violated by restricting admission to dance halls on the basis of age. The Justice also asserts that even if dancing is inherently expressive, nudity is not. The statement may be true, but it tells us nothing about dancing in the nude.

2472 *588 Having arrived at the conclusion that nude dancing performed as entertainment enjoys First Amendment protection, the plurality states that it must "determine the level of protection to be afforded to the expressive conduct at issue, and must determine whether the Indiana statute is an impermissible infringement of that protected activity." Ante, at 2460. For guidance, the plurality turns to United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), which held that expressive conduct could be narrowly regulated or forbidden in pursuit of an important or substantial governmental interest that is unrelated to the content of the expression. The plurality finds that the Indiana statute satisfies the O'Brien test in all respects.

The plurality acknowledges that it is impossible to discern the exact state interests which the Indiana Legislature had in mind when it enacted the Indiana statute, but the plurality nonetheless concludes that it is clear from the statute's text and history that the law's purpose is to protect "societal order and morality." Ante, at 2461. The plurality goes on to *589 conclude that Indiana's statute "was enacted as a general prohibition," ante, at 2461 (emphasis added), on people appearing in the nude among strangers in public places. The plurality then points to cases in which we upheld legislation based on the State's police power, and ultimately concludes that the Indiana statute "furthers a substantial government interest in protecting order and morality." Ante, at 2462. The Court also holds that the basis for banning nude dancing is unrelated to free expression and that it is narrowly drawn to serve the State's interest.

The plurality's analysis is erroneous in several respects. Both the plurality and Justice SCALIA in his opinion concurring in the judgment overlook a fundamental and critical aspect of our cases upholding the States' exercise of their police powers. None of the cases they rely upon, including O'Brien and Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 106 S.Ct. 2841, 92 L.Ed.2d 140 (1986), involved anything less than truly general proscriptions on individual conduct. In O'Brien, for example, individuals were prohibited from destroying their draft cards at any time and in any place, even in completely private places such as the home. Likewise, in Bowers, the State prohibited sodomy, regardless of where the conduct might occur, including the home as was true in that case. The same is true of cases like Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990), which, though not applicable here because it did not involve any claim that the peyote users were engaged in expressive activity, recognized that the State's interest in preventing the use of illegal drugs extends even into the home. By contrast, in this case Indiana does not suggest that its statute applies to, or could be applied to, nudity wherever it occurs, including the home. We do not understand the plurality or Justice SCALIA to be suggesting that Indiana could constitutionally enact such an intrusive prohibition, nor do we think such a suggestion would be tenable in light of our decision in Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969), in which we held that States could not punish the *590 mere possession of obscenity in the privacy of one's own home.

2473 We are told by the attorney general of Indiana that, in State v. Baysinger, 272 Ind. 236, 397 N.E.2d 580

(1979), the Indiana Supreme Court held that the statute at issue here cannot and does not prohibit nudity as a part of some larger form of expression meriting protection when the communication of ideas is involved. Brief for Petitioners 25, 30–31; Reply Brief for Petitioners 9–11. Petitioners also state that the evils sought to be avoided by applying the statute in this case would not obtain in the case of theatrical productions, such as "Salome" or "Hair." Id., at 11–12. Neither is there any evidence that the State has attempted to apply the statute to nudity in performances such as plays, ballets, or operas. "No arrests have ever been made for nudity as part of a play or ballet." App. 19 (affidavit of Sgt. Timothy Corbett).

Thus, the Indiana statute is not a general prohibition of the type we have upheld in prior cases. As a result, the plurality and Justice SCALIA's simple references to the State's general interest in promoting societal order and morality are not sufficient justification for a statute which concededly reaches a significant amount of protected expressive activity. Instead, in applying the O'Brien test, we are obligated to carefully examine the reasons the State has chosen to regulate this expressive conduct in a less than general statute. In other words, when the State enacts a law which draws a line between expressive conduct which is regulated and nonexpressive conduct of the same type which is not regulated, O'Brien places the burden on the State to justify the distinctions it has made. Closer inquiry as to the purpose of the statute is surely appropriate.

Legislators do not just randomly select certain conduct for proscription; they have reasons for doing so and those reasons illuminate the purpose of the law that is passed. Indeed, a law may have multiple purposes. The purpose of 591 forbidding people to appear nude in parks, beaches, hot dog stands, and like public places is to protect others from offense. But that could not possibly be the purpose of preventing nude dancing in theaters and barrooms since the viewers are exclusively consenting adults who pay money to see these dances. The purpose of the proscription in these contexts is to protect the viewers from what the State believes is the harmful message that nude dancing communicates. This is why Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984), is of no help to the State: "In Clark ... the damage to the parks was the same whether the sleepers were camping out for fun, were in fact homeless, or wished by sleeping in the park to make a symbolic statement on behalf of the homeless." 904 F.2d, at 1103 (Posner, J., concurring). That cannot be said in this case: The perceived damage to the public interest caused by appearing nude on the streets or in the parks, as I have said, is not what the State seeks to avoid in preventing nude dancing in theaters and taverns. There the perceived harm is the communicative aspect of the erotic dance. As the State now tells us, and as Justice SOUTER agrees, the State's goal in applying what it describes as its "content neutral" statute to the nude dancing in this case is "deterrence of prostitution, sexual assaults, criminal activity, degradation of women, and other activities which break down family structure." Reply Brief for Petitioners 11. The attainment of these goals, however, depends on preventing an expressive activity.

The plurality nevertheless holds that the third requirement of the O'Brien test, that the governmental interest be unrelated to the suppression of free expression, is satisfied because in applying the statute to nude dancing, the State is not "proscribing nudity because of the erotic message conveyed by the dancers." Ante, at 2463. The plurality suggests that this is so because the State does not ban dancing that sends an erotic message; it is only nude erotic dancing that is forbidden. The perceived evil is not erotic dancing but public 592 nudity, which may be prohibited despite any incidental impact on *2474 expressive activity. This analysis is transparently erroneous.

In arriving at its conclusion, the plurality concedes that nude dancing conveys an erotic message and concedes that the message would be muted if the dancers wore pasties and G-strings. Indeed, the emotional or erotic impact of the dance is intensified by the nudity of the performers. As Judge Posner argued in his thoughtful concurring opinion in the Court of Appeals, the nudity of the dancer is an integral part of the emotions and thoughts that a nude dancing performance evokes. 904 F.2d at 1090–1098. The sight of a fully clothed, or even a partially clothed, dancer generally will have a far different impact on a spectator than that of a nude dancer, even if the same dance is performed. The nudity is itself an expressive component of the dance, not merely incidental "conduct." We have previously pointed out that " '[n]udity alone' does not place otherwise protected material outside the mantle of the First Amendment." Schad v. Mt. Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 66, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 2181, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981).

This being the case, it cannot be that the statutory prohibition is unrelated to expressive conduct. Since the State permits the dancers to perform if they wear pasties and G-strings but forbids nude dancing, it is precisely because of the distinctive, expressive content of the nude dancing performances at issue in this case that the State seeks to apply the statutory prohibition. It is only because nude dancing performances may generate emotions and feelings of eroticism and sensuality among the spectators that the State seeks to regulate such expressive activity, apparently on the assumption that creating or emphasizing such thoughts and ideas in the minds of the spectators may lead to increased prostitution and the degradation of women. But generating thoughts, ideas, and emotions is the essence of communication. The nudity element of nude dancing performances cannot 593 be neatly pigeonholed as mere "conduct" independent of any expressive component of the dance. [2]

2 Justice SOUTER agrees with the plurality that the third requirement of the O'Brien test is satisfied, but only because he is not certain that there is a causal connection between the message conveyed by nude dancing and the evils which the State is seeking to prevent. See ante, at 2470. Justice SOUTER's analysis is at least as flawed as that of the plurality. If Justice SOUTER is correct that there is no causal connection between the message conveyed by the nude dancing at issue here and the negative secondary effects that the State desires to regulate, the State does not have even a rational basis for its absolute prohibition on nude dancing that is admittedly expressive. Furthermore, if the real problem is the "concentration of crowds of men predisposed" to the designated evils, ante, at 2470, then the First Amendment requires that the State address that problem in a fashion that does not include banning an entire category of expressive activity. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986).

That fact dictates the level of First Amendment protection to be accorded the performances at issue here. In Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 411–412, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 2543–2544, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989), the Court observed: "Whether Johnson's treatment of the flag violated Texas law thus depended on the likely communicative impact of his expressive conduct.... We must therefore subject the State's asserted interest in preserving the special symbolic character of the flag to 'the most exacting scrutiny.' Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. [312], 321 [108 S.Ct. 1157, 1164, 99 L.Ed.2d 333] [(1988)]." Content based restrictions "will be upheld only if narrowly drawn to accomplish a compelling governmental interest." United States v. Grace, 461 U.S. 171, 177, 103 S.Ct. 1702, 1707, 75 L.Ed.2d 736 (1983); Sable Communications of Cal., Inc. v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 126, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 2836, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989). Nothing could be clearer from our cases.

That the performances in the Kitty Kat Lounge may not be high art, to say the least, and may not appeal to the Court, is hardly an excuse for distorting and ignoring settled doctrine. The Court's assessment of the artistic merits of nude dancing performances *2475 should not be the determining factor in deciding this case. In the words of Justice Harlan: "[I]t is largely because governmental officials cannot make principled decisions 594 in this area that the Constitution leaves matters of taste and style so largely to the individual." Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 25, 91 S.Ct. 1780, 1788, 29 L.Ed.2d 284 (1971). "[W]hile the entertainment afforded by a nude ballet at Lincoln Center to those who can pay the price may differ vastly in content (as viewed by judges) or in quality (as viewed by critics), it may not differ in substance from the dance viewed by the person who ... wants some 'entertainment' with his beer or shot of rye." Salem Inn, Inc. v. Frank, 501 F.2d 18, 21, n. 3 (CA2 1974), aff'd in part sub nom., Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975).

The plurality and Justice SOUTER do not go beyond saying that the state interests asserted here are important and substantial. But even if there were compelling interests, the Indiana statute is not narrowly drawn. If the State is genuinely concerned with prostitution and associated evils, as Justice SOUTER seems to think, or the type of conduct that was occurring in California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), it can adopt restrictions that do not interfere with the expressiveness of nonobscene nude dancing performances. For instance, the State could perhaps require that, while performing, nude performers remain at all times a certain minimum distance from spectators, that nude entertainment be limited to certain hours, or even that establishments providing such entertainment be dispersed throughout the city. Cf. Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). Likewise, the State clearly has the authority to criminalize prostitution and obscene behavior. Banning an entire category of expressive activity, however, generally does not satisfy the narrow tailoring requirement of strict First Amendment scrutiny. See Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 2503, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988). Furthermore, if nude dancing in barrooms, as compared with other establishments, is the most worrisome problem, the State could invoke its Twenty-first Amendment powers and impose appropriate regulation. New York State Liquor Authority v. Bellanca, 452 U.S. 714, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 (1981) (per curiam); California v. LaRue, supra.

595 As I see it, our cases require us to affirm absent a compelling state interest supporting the statute. Neither the plurality nor the State suggest that the statute could withstand scrutiny under that standard.

Justice SCALIA's views are similar to those of the plurality and suffer from the same defects. The Justice asserts that a general law barring specified conduct does not implicate the First Amendment unless the purpose of the law is to suppress the expressive quality of the forbidden conduct, and that, absent such purpose, First Amendment protections are not triggered simply because the incidental effect of the law is to proscribe conduct that is unquestionably expressive. Cf. Community for Creative Non–Violence v. Watt, 227 U.S.App.D.C. 19, 703 F.2d 586, 622–623 (1983) (Scalia, J., dissenting). The application of the Justice's proposition to this case is simple to state: The statute at issue is a general law banning nude appearances in public places, including barrooms and theaters. There is no showing that the purpose of this general law was to regulate expressive conduct; hence, the First Amendment is irrelevant and nude dancing in theaters and barrooms may be forbidden, irrespective of the expressiveness of the dancing.

As I have pointed out, however, the premise for the Justice's position—that the statute is a general law of the type our cases contemplate—is nonexistent in this case. Reference to Justice SCALIA's own hypothetical makes this clear. We agree with Justice SCALIA that the Indiana statute would not permit 60,000 consenting Hoosiers to expose themselves to each other in the Hoosier Dome. No one can doubt, however, that those same 60,000 Hoosiers would be perfectly *2476 free to drive to their respective homes all across Indiana and, once there, to parade around, cavort, and revel in the nude for hours in front of relatives and friends. It is difficult to see why the State's interest in morality is any less in that situation, especially if, as Justice SCALIA seems to suggest, nudity is inherently evil, but clearly the statute does 596 not reach such activity. As we pointed out earlier, the State's failure to enact a truly general proscription requires closer scrutiny of the reasons for the distinctions the State has drawn. See supra, at 2473.

As explained previously, the purpose of applying the law to the nude dancing performances in respondents' establishments is to prevent their customers from being exposed to the distinctive communicative aspects of nude dancing. That being the case, Justice SCALIA's observation is fully applicable here: "Where the government prohibits conduct precisely because of its communicative attributes, we hold the regulation unconstitutional." Ante, at 2466.

The O'Brien decision does not help Justice SCALIA. Indeed, his position, like the plurality's, would eviscerate the O'Brien test. Employment Div., Dept. of Human Resources of Ore. v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990), is likewise not on point. The Indiana law, as applied to nude dancing, targets the expressive activity itself; in Indiana nudity in a dancing performance is a crime because of the message such dancing communicates. In Smith, the use of drugs was not criminal because the use was part of or occurred within the course of an otherwise protected religious ceremony, but because a general law made it so and was supported by the same interests in the religious context as in others.

Accordingly, I would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and dissent from this Court's judgment.

All Citations

501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504, 59 USLW 4745

End of Document

93 S.Ct. 390
Supreme Court of the United States

CALIFORNIA et al., Appellants,
v.
Robert LaRUE et al.

No. 71—36.
|
Argued Oct. 10, 1972.
|
Decided Dec. 5, 1972.
|
Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1973.

See 410 U.S. 948, 93 S.Ct. 1351.

Actions were brought by various holders of California liquor licenses and dancers at licensed premises challenging constitutionality of state-wide rules adopted by Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control prohibiting explicitly sexual live entertainment and films and bars and other establishments licensed to dispense liquor by the drink. The United States District Court for the Central District of California, sitting as three-judge court, held certain of the regulations invalid, 326 F.Supp. 348, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, held that in context, not of censoring dramatic performances in theater, but of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink, California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control had broad latitude under Twenty-first Amendment to control the manner and circumstances under which liquor might be dispensed, and conclusion that sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked entertainment should not take place simultaneously in licensed establishments was not irrational nor unreasonable.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Stewart concurred and filed opinion.

Mr. Justice Douglas dissented and filed opinion.

Mr. Justice Brennan dissented and filed opinion.

Mr. Justice Marshall dissented and filed opinion.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Civil Rights
Theaters and places of exhibition or entertainment

Claim that regulations of California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control that regulate type of entertainment that might be presented in bars and nightclubs that it licensed exceed the constitutional authority of the Department as matter of state law was not cognizable in action under Civil Rights Act challenging the constitutionality of the regulations. West's Ann.Cal.Const. art. 20, § 22; 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Courts
Consent of Parties as to Jurisdiction

Federal Courts
Waiver, estoppel, and consent

Parties may not confer jurisdiction either upon the Supreme Court of the United States or a United States District Court by stipulation. U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 2, cl. 1; 28 U.S.C.A. § 2201.

80 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Federal Courts
Necessity of Objection;Power and Duty of Court

Request of licensees and of the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control that United States District Court adjudicate merits of constitutional claim concerning Department regulations governing entertainment in bars and nightclubs did not foreclose inquiry by Supreme Court into existence of "actual controversy." 28 U.S.C.A. § 2201;

U.S.C.A.Const. art. 3, § 1 et seq.; art. 3, § 2, cl. 1; Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Intoxicating Liquors
Legislative regulation

While the states, vested as they are with general police power, require no specific grant of authority in the Federal Constitution to legislate with respect to matters traditionally within the scope of the police power, the broad sweep of the Twenty-first Amendment confers something more than the normal state authority over public health, welfare, and morals. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21.

154 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Administrative Law and Procedure
Rules, Regulations, and Other Policymaking

In legislative rule making, administrative agency may reason from the particular to the general.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Intoxicating Liquors
Direct control by state agencies

Wide latitude as to the choice of means to accomplish a permissible end must be accorded to the state agency that is itself the repository of the state's power under the Twenty-first Amendment to regulate intoxicating liquors. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21.

27 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Choice by California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control of prohibition of nude dancing and certain other sexual activity within licensed premises instead of solution that would have required Department's own personnel to judge individual instances of inebriation was not an unreasonable one. West's Ann.Cal.Const. art. 20, § 22; U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14, 21.

180 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

In context, not of censoring dramatic performances in theater, but of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink, California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control had broad latitude under Twenty-first Amendment to control the manner and circumstances under which liquor might be dispensed, and conclusion that sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked entertainment should not take place simultaneously in licensed establishments was not irrational nor unreasonable. West's Ann.Cal.Const. art. 20, § 22; U.S.C.A.const. Amends. 1, 14, 21.

220 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Intoxicating Liquors
Validity and adoption

Although California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control regulations prohibiting explicitly sexual live entertainment and films in bars and other licensed establishments on their face would proscribe some forms of visual presentation that would not be found obscene under United States Supreme Court guidelines, the state regulatory authority was not limited to either dealing with the problem it confronted within the limits of decisions as to obscenity or in accordance with decisional limits prescribed for dealing with some forms of communicative conduct. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14, 21.

147 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Law Enforcement;Criminal Conduct

As mode of expression moves from the printed page to the commission of public acts that may themselves violate valid penal statutes, scope of permissible state regulations significantly increases. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

21 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Conduct, protection of

State may sometimes proscribe expression which is directed to the accomplishment of an end that the state has declared to be illegal when such expression consists, in part, of "conduct" or "action." U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Motor vehicles

States may validly limit the manner in which the First Amendment freedoms are exercised by forbidding sound trucks in residential neighborhoods and may enforce nondiscriminatory requirement that those who would parade on the public thoroughfare first obtain permit. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14.

16 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

There is presumption in favor of validity of state regulation in the area of licensing of the sale of alcoholic beverages by the drink. U.S.C.A.Const. Amends. 1, 14, 21.

28 Cases that cite this headnote

392 109 Syllabus []

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Following hearings, the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control issued regulations prohibiting explicitly sexual live entertainment and films in bars and other establishments licensed to dispense liquor by the drink. A three-judge District Court held the regulations invalid under the First and Fourteenth Amendments, concluding that under standards laid down by this Court some of the prescribed entertainment could not be classified as obscene or lacking a communicative element. Held: In the context, not of censoring dramatic performances in a theater, but of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink, the States have broad latitude under the Twenty-first Amendment to control the manner and circumstances under which liquor may be dispensed, and here the conclusion that sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked entertainment should not take place simultaneously in licensed establishments was not irrational nor was the prophylactic solution unreasonable. Pp. 394—397.

326 F.Supp. 348, reversed.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*393 L. Stephen Porter, San Francisco, Cal., for appellants.

Harrison W. Hertzberg, Los Angeles, Cal., and Kenneth Philip Scholtz, Gardena, Cal., for appellees.

Opinion

110 Mr. Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

[1] Appellant Kirby is the director of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, an administrative agency vested by the California Constitution with primary authority for the licensing of the sale of alcoholic beverages in that State, and with the authority to suspend or revoke any such license if it determines that its continuation would be contrary to public welfare or morals. Art. XX, s 22, California Constitution. Appellees include holders of various liquor licenses issued by appellant, and dancers at premises operated by such licensees. In 1970 the Department promulgated rules regulating the type of entertainment that might be presented in bars and nightclubs that it licensed. Appellees then brought this action in the United States District Court for the Central District of California under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. ss 1331, 1343, 2201, 2202, and 42 U.S.C. s 1983. A three-judge court was convened in accordance with 28 U.S.C. ss 2281 and 2284, and the majority of that court held that substantial portions of the regulations conflicted with the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. [1]

[1] Appellees in their brief here suggest that the regulations may exceed the authority conferred upon the Department as a matter of state law. As the District Court recognized, however, such a claim is not cognizable in the suit brought by these appellees under 42 U.S.C. s 1983.

Concerned with the progression in a few years' time from 'topless' dancers to 'bottomless' dancers and other forms of 'live entertainment' in bars and nightclubs that it licensed, the Department heard a number of witnesses on the subject at public hearings held prior to the promulgation of the rules. The majority opinion 111 of the District Court described the testimony in these words: 'Law enforcement agencies, counsel and owners of licensed premises and investigators for the Department testified. The story that unfolded was a sordid one, primarily relating to sexual conduct between dancers and customers. . . .' 326 F.Supp. 348, 352.

References to the transcript of the hearings submitted by the Department to the District Court indicated that in licensed establishments where 'topless' and 'bottomless' dancers, nude entertainers, and films displaying sexual acts were shown, numerous incidents of legitimate concern to the Department had occurred. Customers were found engaging in oral copulation with women entertainers; customers engaged in public masturbation; and customers placed rolled currency either directly into the vagina of a female entertainer, or on the bar in order that she might pick it up herself. Numerous other forms of contact between the mouths of male customers and the vaginal areas of female performers were reported to have occurred.

Prostitution occurred in and around such licensed premises, and involved some of the female dancers. Indecent exposure to young girls, attempted rape, rape itself, and assaults on police officers took place on or immediately adjacent to such premises.

At the conclusion of the evidence, the Department promulgated the regulations here challenged, imposing standards as to the type of entertainment that could be presented in bars and nightclubs that it licensed. Those portions of the regulations found to be unconstitutional by the majority of the District Court prohibited the following kinds of conduct on licensed premises:

(a) The performance of acts, or simulated acts, of 'sexual intercourse, *394 masturbation, sodomy, 112 bestiality, oral copulation, flagellation or any sexual acts which are prohibited by law';

(b) The actual or simulated 'touching, caressing or fondling on the breast, buttocks, anus or genitals';

(c) The actual or simulated 'displaying of the public hair, anus, vulva or genitals';

(d) The permitting by a licensee of 'any person to remain in or upon the licensed premises who exposes to public view any portion of his or her genitals or anus'; and, by a companion section,

(e) The displaying of films or pictures depicting acts a live performance of which was prohibited by the regulations quoted above. Rules 143.3 and 143.4. [2]

[2] In addition to the regulations held unconstitutional by the court below appellees originally challenged Rule 143.2 prohibiting topless waitresses, Rule 143.3(2) requiring certain entertainers to perform on a stage at a distance away from customers, and Rule 143.5 prohibiting any entertainment that violated local ordinances. At oral argument in that court they withdrew their objections to these rules, conceding 'that topless waitresses are not within the protection of the First Amendment; that local ordinances must be independently challenged depending upon their content; and that the requirement that certain entertainers must dance on a stage is not invalid.' 326 F.Supp. 348, 350—351.

[2] [3] Shortly before the effective date of the Department's regulations appellees unsuccessfully sought discretionary review of them in both the State Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of California. The Department then joined with appellees in requesting the three-judge District Court to decide the merits of appellees' claims that the regulations were invalid under the Federal Constitution. [3]

[3] Mr. Justice DOUGLAS in his dissenting opinion suggests that the District Court should have declined to adjudicate the merits of appellees' contention until the appellants had given the 'generalized provisions of the rules . . . particularized meaning.' Since parties may not confer jurisdiction either upon this Court or the District Court by stipulation, the request of both parties in this case that the court below adjudicate the merits of the constitutional claim does not foreclose our inquiry into the existence of an 'actual controversy' within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. s 2201 and Art. III, s 2, cl. 1, of the Constitution.

By pretrial stipulation, the appellees admitted they offered performances and depictions on their licensed premises that were proscribed by the challenged rules. Appellants stipulated they would take disciplinary action against the licenses of licensees violating such rules. In similar circumstances, this Court held that where a state commission had 'plainly indicated' an intent to enforce an act that would affect the rights of the United States, there was a 'present and concrete' controversy within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. s 2201 and of Art. III. Public Utilities Comm'n of California v. United States, 355 U.S. 534, 539, 78 S.Ct. 446, 450, 2 L.Ed.2d 470 (1958). The District Court therefore had jurisdiction of this action.

Whether this Court should develop a nonjurisdictional limitation on actions for declaratory judgments to invalidate statutes on their face is an issue not properly before us. Cf. Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 341, 56 S.Ct. 466, 480, 80 L.Ed. 688 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). Certainly a number of our cases have permitted attacks on First Amendment grounds similar to those advanced by the appellees, see, e.g., Zwickler v. Koota, 389 U.S. 241, 88 S.Ct. 391, 19 L.Ed.2d 444 (1967); Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629 (1967); Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 12 L.Ed.2d 377 (1964), and we are not inclined to reconsider the procedural holdings of those cases in the absence of a request by a party to do so.

113 The District Court majority upheld the appellees' claim that the regulations in question unconstitutionally abridged the freedom of expression guaranteed to them by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. It reasoned that the state regulations had to be justified either as a prohibition of obscenity in accordance with the Roth line of decisions in this Court (*395 Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957), or else as a regulation of 'conduct' having a communicative element in it under the standards 114 laid down by this Court in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Concluding that the regulations would bar some entertainment that could not be called obscene under the Roth line of cases, and that the governmental interest being furthered by the regulations did not meet the tests laid down in O'Brien, the court enjoined the enforcement of the regulations. 326 F.Supp. 348. We noted probable jurisdiction. 404 U.S. 999, 92 S.Ct. 559, 30 L.Ed.2d 551.

The state regulations here challenged come to us, not in the context of censoring a dramatic performance in a theater, but rather in a context of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink. In Joseph E. Seagram & Sons v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35, 41, 86 S.Ct. 1254, 1259, 16 L.Ed.2d 336 (1966), this Court said:

'Consideration of any state law regulating intoxicating beverages must begin with the Twenty-first Amendment, the second section of which provides that: 'The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.''

[4] While the States, vested as they are with general police power, require no specific grant of authority in the Federal Constitution to legislate with respect to matters traditionally within the scope of the police power, the broad sweep of the Twenty-first Amendment has been recognized as conferring something more than the normal state authority over public health, welfare, and morals. In Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 330, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 1297, 12 L.Ed.2d 350 (1964), the Court reaffirmed that by reason of the Twenty-first Amendment 'a State is totally unconfined by traditional Commerce Clause limitations when it restricts the importation of intoxicants destined for use, distribution, or consumption within its borders.' Still 115 earlier, the Court stated in State Board v. Young's Market Co., 299 U.S. 59, 64, 57 S.Ct. 77, 79, 81 L.Ed. 38 (1936):

> 'A classification recognized by the Twenty-First Amendment cannot be deemed forbidden by the Fourteenth.'

These decisions did not go so far as to hold or say that the Twenty-first Amendment supersedes all other provisions of the United States Constitution in the area of liquor regulations. In Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515 (1971), the fundamental notice and hearing requirement of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was held applicable to Wisconsin's statute providing for the public posting of names of persons who had engaged in excessive drinking. But the case for upholding state regulation in the area covered by the Twenty-first Amendment is undoubtedly strengthened by that enactment:

'Both the Twenty-first Amendment and the Commerce Clause are parts of the same Constitution. Like other provisions of the Constitution, each must be considered in the light of the other, and in the context of the issues and interests at stake in any concrete case.' Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., supra, at 332, 84 S.Ct., at 1298.

[5] A common element in the regulations struck down by the District Court appears to be the Department's conclusion that the sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked dancing and entertainment should not take place in bars and cocktail lounges for which it has licensing responsibility. Based on the evidence from the hearings that it cited to the District Court, and mindful of the principle that in legislative rulemaking the agency may reason from the particular to the general, Assigned Car Cases, 274 U.S. 564, 583, 47 S.Ct. 727, 733—734, 71 L.Ed. 1204 (1927), we do 116 not think it can be said *396 that the Department's conclusion in this respect was an irrational one.

[6] [7] [8] Appellees insist that the same results could have been accomplished by requiring that patrons already well on the way to intoxication be excluded from the licensed premises. But wide latitude as to choice of means to accomplish a permissible end must be accorded to the state agency that is itself the repository of the State's power under the Twenty-first Amendment. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons v. Hostetter, supra, 384 U.S. at 48, 86 S.Ct. at 1262. Nothing in the record before us or in common experience compels the conclusion that either self-discipline on the part of the customer or self-regulation on the part of the bartender could have been relied upon by the Department to secure compliance with such an alternative plan of regulation. The Department's choice of a prophylactic solution instead of one that would have required its own personnel to judge individual instances of inebriation cannot, therefore, be deemed an unreasonable one under the holdings of our prior cases. Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 487—488, 75 S.Ct. 461, 464—465, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955).

[9] We do not disagree with the District Court's determination that these regulations on their face would proscribe some forms of visual presentation that would not be found obscene under Roth and subsequent decisions of this Court. See, e.g., Sunshine Book Co. v. Summerfield, 355 U.S. 372, 78 S.Ct. 365, 2 L.Ed.2d 352 (1958), rev'g per curiam, 101 U.S.App.D.C. 358, 249 F.2d 114 (1957). But we do not believe that the state regulatory authority in this case was limited to either dealing with the problem it confronted within the limits of our decisions as to obscenity, or in accordance with the limits prescribed for dealing with some forms of communicative conduct in O'Brien, supra.

Our prior cases have held that both motion pictures and theatrical productions are within the protection of 117 the First and Fourteenth Amendments. In Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 72 S.Ct. 777, 96 L.Ed. 1098 (1952), it was held that motion pictures are 'included within the free speech and free press guaranty of the First and Fourteenth Amendments,' though not 'necessarily subject to the precise rules governing any other particular method of expression.' Id., at 502—503, 72 S.Ct., at 781. In Schacht v. United States, 398 U.S. 58, 63, 90 S.Ct. 1555, 26 L.Ed.2d 44 (1970), the Court said with respect to theatrical productions:

> 'An actor, like everyone else in our country, enjoys a constitutional right to freedom of speech, including the right openly to criticize the Government during a dramatic performance.'

[10] [11] [12] But as the mode of expression moves from the printed page to the commission of public acts that may themselves violate valid penal statutes, the scope of permissible state regulations significantly increases. States may sometimes proscribe expression that is directed to the accomplishment of an end that the State has declared to be illegal when such expression consists, in part, of 'conduct' or 'action,' Hughes v. Superior Court,

339 U.S. 460, 70 S.Ct. 718, 94 L.Ed. 985 (1950); Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U.S. 490, 69 S.Ct. 684, 93 L.Ed. 834 (1949). [4] In O'Brien, supra, the Court suggested that the extent to which 'conduct' was protected 397 by the First Amendment depended on the presence of a 'communicative element,' and stated:

4 Similarly, States may validly limit the manner in which the First Amendment freedoms are exercised, by forbidding sound trucks in residential neighborhoods, Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513 (1949), and may enforce a nondiscriminatory requirement that those who would parade on a public thoroughfare first obtain a permit. Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941). Other state limitations on the 'time, manner and place' of the exercise of First Amendment rights have been sustained. See, e.g., Cameron v. Johnson, 390 U.S. 611, 88 S.Ct. 1335, 20 L.Ed.2d 182 (1968), and Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 559, 85 S.Ct. 476, 13 L.Ed.2d 487 (1965).

'We cannot accept the view that an apparently *118 limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express in idea.' 391 U.S., at 376, 88 S.Ct., at 1678.

The substance of the regulations struck down prohibits licensed bars or nightclubs from displaying, either in the form of movies or live entertainment, 'performances' that partake more of gross sexuality than of communication. While we agree that at least some of the performances to which these regulations address themselves are within the limits of the constitutional protection of freedom of expression, the critical fact is that California has not forbidden these performances across the board. It has merely proscribed such performances in establishments that it licenses to sell liquor by the drink.

Viewed in this light, we conceive the State's authority in this area to be somewhat broader than did the District Court. This is not to say that all such conduct and performance are without the protection of the First and Fourteenth Amendments. But we would poorly serve both the interests for which the State may validly seek vindication and the interests protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments were we to insist that the sort of bacchanalian revelries that the Department sought to prevent by these liquor regulations were the constitutional equivalent of a performance by a scantily clad ballet troupe in a theater.

[13] The Department's conclusion, embodied in these regulations, that certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur at premises that have licenses was not an irrational one. Given the added presumption in favor of the validity of the state regulation in this area that the Twenty-first *119 Amendment requires, we cannot hold that the regulations on their face violate the Federal Constitution. [5]

5 Because of the posture of this case, we have necessarily dealt with the regulations on their face, and have found them to be valid. The admonition contained in the Court's opinion in Joseph E. Seagram & Sons v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35, 52, 86 S.Ct. 1254, 1264, 16 L.Ed.2d 336 (1966), is equally in point here: 'Although it is possible that specific future applications of (the statute) may engender concrete problems of constitutional dimension, it will be time enough to consider any such problems when they arise. We deal here only with the statute on its face. And we hold that so considered, the legislation is constitutionally valid.'

The contrary holding of the District Court is therefore reversed.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice STEWART, concurring.

A State has broad power under the Twenty-first Amendment to specify the times, places, and circumstances where liquor may be dispensed within its borders. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35, 86 S.Ct. 1254, 16 L.Ed.2d 336; Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 330, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 1297, 12 L.Ed.2d 350; Dept. of Revenue v. James B. Beam Distilling Co., 377 U.S. 341, 344, 346, 84 S.Ct. 1247, 1249, 1250, 12 L.Ed.2d 362; California v. Washington, 358 U.S. 64, 79 S.Ct. 116, 3 L.Ed.2d 106; Ziffrin, Inc. v. Reeves, 308 U.S. 132, 60 S.Ct. 163, 84 L.Ed. 128; Mahoney v. Joseph Triner, Corp., 304 U.S. 401, 58 S.Ct. 952, 82 L.Ed. 1424; State Board of Equalization v. Young's Market Co., 299 U.S. 59, 57 S.Ct. 77, 81 L.Ed. 38. I should suppose, therefore, that nobody would question the power of California to prevent the sale of liquor by the drink in places where food is not served, or where dancing is permitted, or where gasoline is sold.

But here California has provided that liquor by the drink shall not be sold in places where certain grossly sexual exhibitions are performed; and that action by the State, say the appellees, violates 398 the First and Fourteenth Amendments. I cannot agree.

Every State is prohibited by these same Amendments from invading the freedom of the press and from impinging *120 upon the free exercise of religion. But does this mean that a State cannot provide that liquor shall not be sold in bookstores, or within 200 feet of a church? I think not. For the State would not thereby be interfering with the First Amendment activities of the church or the First Amendment business of the bookstore. It would simply be controlling the distribution of liquor, as it has every right to do under the Twenty-first Amendment. On the same premise, I cannot see how the liquor regulations now before us can be held, on their face, to violate the First and Fourteenth Amendments. *

* This is not to say that the Twenty-first Amendment empowers a State to act with total irrationality or invidious discrimination in controlling the distribution and dispensation of liquor within its borders. And it most assuredly is not to say that the Twenty-first Amendment necessarily overrides in its allotted area any other relevant provision of the Constitution. See Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515; Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 329—334, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 1296—1299, 12 L.Ed.2d 350; Dept. of Revenue v. James B. Beam Distilling Co., 377 U.S. 341, 84 S.Ct. 1247, 12 L.Ed.2d 362.

It is upon this constitutional understanding that I join the opinion and judgment of the Court.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, dissenting.

This is an action for a declaratory judgment, challenging Rules and Regulations of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control of California. It is a challenge of the constitutionality of the rules on their face; no application of the rules has in fact been made to appellees by the institution of either civil or criminal proceedings. While the case meets the requirements of 'case or controversy' within the meaning of Art. III of the Constitution and therefore complies with Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 57 S.Ct. 461, 81 L.Ed. 617, the case does not mark the precise impact of these rules against licensees who sell alcoholic beverages in California. The opinion *121 of the Court can, therefore, only deal with the rules in the abstract.

The line which the Court draws between 'expression' and 'conduct' is generally accurate; and it also accurately describes in general the reach of the police power of a State when 'expression' and 'conduct' are closely brigaded. But we still do not know how broadly or how narrowly these rules will be applied.

It is conceivable that a licensee might produce in a garden served by him a play—shakespearean perhaps or one in a more modern setting—in which, for example, 'fondling' in the sense of the rules appears. I cannot imagine that any such performance could constitutionally be punished or restrained, even though the police power of a State is now buttressed by the Twenty-first Amendment. [1] For, as stated by the Court, that Amendment did not supersede all other constitutional provisions 'in the area of liquor regulations.' Certainly a play which passes muster under the First Amendment is not made illegal because it is performed in a beer garden.

1 Section 2 of the Twenty-first Amendment reads as follows:
'The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.'

Chief Justice Hughes stated the controlling principle in Electric Bond & Share Co. v. SEC, 303 U.S. 419, 443, 58 S.Ct. 678, 687, 82 L.Ed. 936:

> 'Defendants are not entitled to invoke the Federal Declaratory Judgment Act in order to obtain an advisory decree upon a hypothetical state of facts. . . . By the cross-bill, defendants seek a judgment that each 399 and every provision of the act is unconstitutional. It presents a variety of hypothetical controversies which may never become real. We are invited to enter into a speculative inquiry for the *122 purpose of condemning statutory provisions the effect of which in concrete situations, not yet developed, cannot now be definitely perceived. We must decline that invitation. . . .'

The same thought was expressed by Chief Justice Stone in Alabama State Federation of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 470—471, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 1393—1394, 89 L.Ed. 1725. Some provisions of an Alabama law regulating labor relations were challenged as too vague and uncertain to meet constitutional requirements. The Chief Justice noted that state courts often construe state statutes so that in their application they are not open to constitutional objections. Id., at 471, 65 S.Ct., at 1394. He said that for us to decide the constitutional question 'by anticipating such an authoritative construction' would be either 'to decide the question unnecessarily or rest our decision on the unstable foundation of our own construction of the state statute which the state court would not be bound to follow.'[2] Ibid. He added:

2 Even in cases on direct appeal from state court, when the decision below leaves unresolved questions of state law or procedure which bear on federal constitutional questions, we dismiss the appeal. Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 331 U.S. 549, 67 S.Ct. 1409, 91 L.Ed. 1666.

'In any event the parties are free to litigate in the state courts the validity of the statute when actually applied to any definite state of facts, with the right of appellate review in this Court. In the exercise of this Court's discretionary power to grant or withhold the declaratory judgment remedy it is of controlling significance that it is in the public interest to avoid the needless determination of constitutional questions and the needless obstruction to the domestic policy of the states by forestalling state action in construing and applying its own statutes.' Ibid.

Those precedents suggest to me that it would have been more provident for the District Court to have declined 123 to give a federal constitutional ruling, until and unless the generalized provisions of the rules were given particularized meaning.

Mr. Justice BRENNAN, dissenting.

I dissent. The California regulation at issue here clearly applies to some speech protected by the First Amendment, as applied to the States through the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and also, no doubt, to some speech and conduct which are unprotected under our prior decisions. See Memoirs v. Massachusetts, 383 U.S. 413, 86 S.Ct. 975, 16 L.Ed.2d 1 (1966); Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957). The State points out, however, that the regulation does not prohibit speech directly, but speaks only to the conditions under which a license to sell liquor by the drink can be granted and retained. But, as Mr. Justice MARSHALL carefully demonstrates in Part II of his dissenting opinion, by requiring the owner of a nightclub to forgo the exercise of certain rights guaranteed by the First Amendment, the State has imposed an unconstitutional condition on the grant of a license. See Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 92 S.Ct. 2694, 33 L.Ed.2d 570 (1972); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963); Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 78 S.Ct. 1332, 2 L.Ed.2d 1460 (1958). Nothing in the language or history of the Twenty-first Amendment authorizes the States to use their liquor licensing power as a means for the deliberate inhibition of protected, even if distasteful, forms of expression. For that reason, I would affirm the judgment of the District Court.

*400 Mr. Justice MARSHALL, dissenting.

In my opinion, the District Court's judgment should be affirmed. The record in this case is not a pretty one, and it is possible that the State could constitutionally punish some of the activities described therein 124 under a narrowly drawn scheme. But appellees challenge these regulations[1] on their face, rather than as applied to a specific course of conduct.[2] Cf. 125 Gooding v. Wilson, 405 U.S. 518, 92 S.Ct. 1103, 31 L.Ed.2d 408 (1972). When so viewed, I think it clear that the regulations are overbroad and therefore unconstitutional. See, e.g., Dombrowski v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 486, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 1120, 14 L.Ed.2d 22 (1965).[3] Although the State's broad power to regulate the distribution of liquor *401 and to enforce health and safety regulations is not to be doubted, that power may not be exercised in a manner that broadly stifles First Amendment freedoms. Cf. Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 488, 81 S.Ct. 247, 252, 5 L.Ed.2d 231 (1960). Rather, as this Court has made clear, '(p)recision of regulation 126 must be the touchstone' when First Amendment rights are implicated. NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438, 83 S.Ct. 328, 340, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963). Because I am convinced that these regulations lack the precision which our prior cases require, I must respectfully dissent.

1 Rule 143.3(1) provides in relevant part:
'No licensee shall permit any person to perform acts of or acts which simulate:

'(a) Sexual intercourse, masturbation, sodomy, bestiality, oral copulation, flagellation or any sexual acts which are prohibited by law.
'(b) The touching, caressing or fondling on the breasts, buttocks, anus or genitals.
'(c) The displaying of the pubic hair, anus, vulva or genitals.'
Rule 143.4 prohibits: 'The showing of film, still pictures, electronic reproduction, or other visual reproductions depicting:
'(1) Acts or simulated acts of sexual intercourse, masturbation, sodomy, bestiality, oral copulation, flagellation or any sexual acts which are prohibited by law.
'(2) Any person being touched, caressed or fondled on the breast, buttocks, anus or genitals.
'(3) Scenes wherein a person displays the vulva or the anus or the genitals.
'(4) Scenes wherein artificial devices or inanimate objects are employed to depict, or drawings are employed to portray, any of the prohibited activities described above.

2 This is not an appropriate case for application of the abstention doctrine. Since these regulations are challenged on their face for overbreadth, no purpose would be served by awaiting a state court construction of them unless the principles announced in Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746, 27 L.Ed.2d 669 (1971), govern. See Zwickler v. Koota, 389 U.S. 241, 248—250, 88 S.Ct. 391, 395—396, 19 L.Ed.2d 444 (1967). Thus far, however, we have limited the applicability of Younger to cases where the plaintiff has an adequate remedy in a pending criminal prosecution. See Younger v. Harris, supra, 401 U.S. at 43—44, 91 S.Ct. at 750. Cf. Douglas v. City of Jeannette, 319 U.S. 157, 63 S.Ct. 877, 87 L.Ed. 1324 (1943). But cf. Berryhill v. Gibson, 331 F.Supp. 122, 124 (MD Ala.1971), probable jurisdiction noted, 408 U.S. 920, 92 S.Ct. 2487, 33 L.Ed.2d 331 (1972). The California licensing provisions are, of course, civil in nature. Cf. Hearn v. Short, 327 F.Supp. 33 (SD Tex.1971). Moreover, the Younger doctrine has been held to 'have little force in the absence of a pending state proceeding.' Lake Carriers' Ass'n v. MacMullan, 406 U.S. 498, 509, 92 S.Ct. 1749, 1757, 32 L.Ed.2d 257 (1972) (emphasis added). There are at present no proceedings of any kind pending against these appellees. Finally, since the Younger doctrine rests heavily on federal deference to state administration of its own statutes, see Younger v. Harris, supra, 401 U.S. at 44—45, 91 S.Ct. at 750—751, it is waivable by the State. Cf. Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 329, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 1296, 12 L.Ed.2d 350 (1964). Appellants have nowhere mentioned the Younger doctrine in their brief before this Court, and when the case was brought to the attention of the attorney for the appellants during oral argument, he expressly eschewed reliance on it. In the court below, appellants specifically asked for a federal decision on the validity of California's regulations and stated that they did not think the court should abstain. See 326 F.Supp. 348, 351 (CD Cal.1971).

3 I am startled by the majority's suggestion that the regulations are constitutional on their face even though 'specific future applications of (the statute) may engender concrete problems of constitutional dimension.' (Quoting with approval Joseph E. Seagram & Sons v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35, 52, 86 S.Ct. 1254, 1265, 16 L.Ed.2d 336 (1966). Ante, at 397 n. 5.) Ever since Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093 (1940), it has been thought that statutes which trench upon First Amendment rights are facially void even if the conduct of the party challenging them could be prohibited under a more narrowly drawn scheme. See, e.g., Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 366, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 1319, 12 L.Ed.2d 377 (1964); Coates v. City of Cincinnati, 402 U.S. 611, 616, 91 S.Ct. 1686, 1689, 29 L.Ed.2d 214 (1971); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 432—433, 83 S.Ct. 328, 337—338, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963).
Nor is it relevant that the State here 'sought to prevent (bacchanalian revelries)' rather than performances by 'scantily clad ballet troupe(s).' Whatever the State 'sought' to do, the fact is that these regulations cover both these activities. And it should be clear that a praiseworthy legislative motive can no more rehabilitate an unconstitutional statute than an illicit motive can invalidate a proper statute.

I

It should be clear at the outset that California's regulatory scheme does not conform to the standards which we have previously enunciated for the control of obscenity. [4] Before this Court's decision in Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957), some American courts followed the rule of Regina v. Hicklin, L.R. 3 Q.B. 360 (1868), to the effect that the obscenity vel non of a piece of work could be judged by examining isolated aspects of it. See, e.g., United States v. Kennerley, 209 F. 119 (1913); Commonwealth v. Buckley, 200 Mass. 346, 86 N.E. 910 (1909). But in Roth we held that '(t)he Hicklin test, judging obscenity by the effect of isolated passages upon the most susceptible persons, might well encompass material legitimately treating with sex, and so it must be rejected as unconstitutionally restrictive of the freedoms of speech and press.' 354 U.S., at 489, 77 S.Ct., at 1311. Instead, we held that the material must 127 be 'taken as a whole,' Ibid., and, when so viewed, must appeal to a prurient interest in sex, patently offend community standards relating to the depiction of sexual matters, and be utterly without redeeming social value.[5] See *402 Memoirs v. Massachusetts, 383 U.S. 413, 418, 86 S.Ct. 975, 977, 16 L.Ed.2d 1 (1966).

4 Indeed, there are some indications in the legislative history that California adopted these regulations for the specific purpose of evading those standards. Thus, Captain Robert Devin of the Los Angeles Police Department testified that the Department favored adoption of the new regulations for the following reason: 'While statutory law has been available to us to regulate what was formerly considered as antisocial behavior, the federal and state judicial system has, through a series of similar decisions, effectively emasculated law enforcement in its effort to contain and to control the growth of pornography and of obscenity and of behavior that is associated with this kind of performance.' See also testimony of Roy E. June, City Attorney of the City of Costa Mesa; testimony of Richard C. Hirsch, Office of Los Angeles County District Attorney. App. 117.

5 I do not mean to suggest that this test need be rigidly applied in all situations. Different standards may be applicable when children are involved, see Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195 (1968); when a consenting adult possesses putatively obscene material in his own home, see Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969); or when the material by the nature of its presentation cannot be viewed as a whole, see Rabe v. Washington, 405 U.S. 313, 317 n. 2, 92 S.Ct. 993, 995, 31 L.Ed.2d 258 (1972) (Burger, C.J., concurring). Similarly, I do not mean to foreclose the possibility that even the Roth-Memoirs test will ultimately be found insufficient to protect First Amendment interests when consenting adults view putatively obscene material in private. Cf. Redrup v. New York, 386 U.S. 767, 87 S.Ct. 1414, 18 L.Ed.2d 515 (1967). But cf. United States v. Reidel, 402 U.S. 351, 91 S.Ct. 1410, 28 L.Ed.2d 813 (1971). But I do think that, at very least, Roth-Memoirs sets an absolute limit on the kinds of speech that can be altogether read out of the First Amendment for purposes of consenting adults.

Obviously, the California rules do not conform to these standards. They do not require the material to be judged as a whole and do not speak to the necessity of proving prurient interest, offensiveness to community standards, or lack of redeeming social value. Instead of the contextual test approved in Roth and Memoirs these regulations create a system of per se rules to be applied regardless of context: Certain acts simply may not be depicted and certain parts of the body may under no circumstances be revealed. The regulations thus treat on the same level a serious movie such as 'Ulysses' and a crudely made 'stag film.' They ban not only obviously pornographic photographs, but also great sculpture from antiquity.[6]

6 Cf. Fuller, Changing Society Puts Taste to the Test, The National Observer, June 10, 1972, p. 24: 'Context is the essence of esthetic judgment . . .. There is a world of difference between Playboy and less pretentious girly magazines on the one hand, and on the other, The Nude, a picture selection from the whole history of art, by that fine teacher and interpreter of civilization, Kenneth Clark. People may be just as naked in one or the other, the bodies inherently just as beautiful, but the context of the former is vulgar, of the latter, esthetic.
'The same words, the same actions, that are cheap and tawdry in one book or play may contribute to the sublimity, comic universality or tragic power of others. For a viable theory of taste, context is all.'

128 Roth held 15 years ago that the suppression of serious communication was too high a price to pay in order to vindicate the State's interest in controlling obscenity, and I see no reason to modify that judgment today. Indeed, even the appellants do not seriously contend that these regulations can be justified under the Roth-Memoirs test. Instead, appellants argue that California's regulations do not concern the control of pornography at all. These rules, they argue, deal with conduct rather than with speech and as such are not subject to the strict limitations of the First Amendment.

To support this proposition, appellants rely primarily on United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), which upheld the constitutionality of legislation punishing the destruction or mutilation of Selective Service certificates. O'Brien rejected the notion that 'an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea,' and held that Government regulation of speech-related conduct is permissible 'if it is within the constitutional power of the Government; if it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; if the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest.' Id., at 376—377, 88 S.Ct., at 1678—1679.

129 While I do not quarrel with these principles as stated in the abstract, their application in this case stretches them beyond the breaking point.[7] In O'Brien, the Court began its discussion by noting that the statute in question 'plainly does not abridge free speech on its face.' Indeed, even O'Brien himself conceded that facially the statute dealt 'with conduct having no connection with speech.'[8] Id., at 375, 88 S.Ct., at 1678. *403 Here, the situation is quite different. A long line of our cases makes clear that motion pictures, unlike draftcard burning, are a form of expression entitled to prima facie First Amendment protection. 'It cannot be doubted that motion pictures are a significant medium for the communication of ideas. They may affect public attitudes and behavior in a variety of ways, ranging from direct espousal of a political or social doctrine to the subtle shaping of thought which characterizes all artistic expression. The importance of motion pictures as an organ of public opinion is not lessened by the fact that they are designed to entertain as well as to inform.' Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495, 501, 72 S.Ct. 777, 780, 96 L.Ed. 1098 (1952) (footnote omitted). See also Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 88 S.Ct. 1298, 20 L.Ed.2d 225 (1968); 130 Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 84 S.Ct. 1676, 12 L.Ed.2d 793 (1964); Pinkus v. Pitchess, 429 F.2d 416 (CA9 1970), aff'd by equally divided court sub nom. California v. Pinkus, 400 U.S. 922, 91 S.Ct. 185, 27 L.Ed.2d 183 (1970). Similarly, live performances and dance have, in recent years, been afforded broad prima facie First Amendment protection. See, e.g., Schacht v. United States, 398 U.S. 58, 90 S.Ct. 1555, 26 L.Ed.2d 44 (1970); P.B.I.C., Inc. v. Byrne, 313 F.Supp. 757 (Mass.1970), vacated to consider mootness, 401 U.S. 987, 91 S.Ct. 1222, 28 L.Ed.2d 526 (1971); In re Giannini, 69 Cal.2d 563, 72 Cal.Rptr. 655, 446 P.2d 535 (1968), cert. denied sub nom. California v. Giannini, 395 U.S. 910, 89 S.Ct. 1743, 23 L.Ed.2d 223 (1969).

7 Moreover, even if the O'Brien test were here applicable, it is far from clear that it has been satisfied. For example, most of the evils that the State alleges are caused by appellees' performances are already punishable under California law. See n. 11, infra. Since the less drastic alternative of criminal prosecution is available to punish these violations, it is hard to see how 'the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential' to further the State's interest.

8 The Court pointed out that the statute 'does not distinguish between public and private destruction, and it does not punish only destruction engaged in for the purpose of expressing views . . . A law prohibiting destruction of Selective Service certificates no more abridges free speech on its face than a motor vehicle law prohibiting the destruction of drivers' licenses, or a tax law prohibiting the destruction of books and records.' 391 U.S., at 375, 88 S.Ct., at 1678.

If, as these many cases hold, movies, plays, and the dance enjoy constitutional protection, it follows, ineluctably I think, that their component parts are protected as well. It is senseless to say that a play is 'speech' within the meaning of the First Amendment, but that the individual gestures of the actors are 'conduct' which the State may prohibit. The State may no more allow movies while punishing the 'acts' of which they are composed than it may allow newspapers while punishing the 'conduct' of setting type.

Of course, I do not mean to suggest that anything which, occurs upon a stage is automatically immune from state regulation. No one seriously contends, for example, that an actual murder may be legally committed so long as it is called for in the script, or that an actor may inject real heroin into his veins while evading the drug laws that apply to everyone else. But once it is recognized that movies and plays enjoy prima facie First Amendment protection, the standard for reviewing state regulation of their component parts shifts dramatically. For while '(m)ere legislative preferences or beliefs respecting matters of public convenience may well support regulation directed at other personal activities, (they are) insufficient to justify such as diminishes the exercise of rights so vital' as freedom 131 of speech. Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 161, 60 S.Ct. 146, 151, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939). Rather, in order to restrict speech, the State must show that the speech is 'used in such circumstances and (is) of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that (it) will bring about the substantive evils that (the State) has a right to prevent.' Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470 (1919). Cf. Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 89 S.Ct. 1827, 23 L.Ed.2d 430 (1969); Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494, 71 S.Ct. 857, 95 L.Ed. 1137 (1951). [9]

9 Of course, the State need not meet the clear and present danger test if the material in question is obscene. See Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957). But, as argued above, the difficulty with California's rules is that they do not conform to the Roth test and therefore regulate material that is not obscene. See supra, at 401—402.

When the California regulations are measured against this stringent standard, 404 they prove woefully inadequate. Appellants defend the rules as necessary to prevent sex crimes, drug abuse, prostitution, and a wide variety of other evils. These are precisely the same interests that have been asserted time and again before this Court as justification for laws banning frank discussion of sex and that we have consistently rejected. In fact, the empirical link between sex-related entertainment and the criminal activity popularly associated with it has never been proved and, indeed, has now been largely discredited. See, e.g., Report of the Commission on Obscenity and Pornography 27 (1970); Cairns, Paul, & Wishner, Sex Censorship: The Assumptions of Anti-Obscenity Laws and the Empirical Evidence, 46 Minn.L.Rev. 1009 (1962). Yet even if one were to concede that such a link existed, it would hardly justify a broadscale attack on First Amendment freedoms. The only way to stop murders and drugs abuse is to punish them directly. But the State's interest in controlling material *132 dealing with sex is secondary in nature. [10] It can control rape and prostitution by punishing those acts, rather than by punishing the speech that is one step removed from the feared harm. [11] Moreover, because First Amendment rights are at stake, the State must adopt this 'less restrictive alternative' unless it can make a compelling demonstration that the protected activity and criminal conduct are so closely linked that only through regulation of one can the other be stopped. Cf. United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 268, 88 S.Ct. 419, 426, 19 L.Ed.2d 508 (1967). As we said in Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 566—567 89 S.Ct. 1243, 1249, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969), 'if the State is only concerned about printed or filmed materials inducing antisocial conduct, we believe that in the context of private consumption of ideas and information we should adhere to the view that '(a)mong free men, the deterrents ordinarily to be applied to prevent *133 crime are education and punishment for violations of the law . . ..' Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 378, 47 S.Ct. 641, 649, 71 L.Ed. 1095 (1927) (Brandeis, J., concurring). . . . Given the present state of knowledge, the State may no more prohibit mere possession of obscene matter on the ground that it may lead to antisocial conduct than it may prohibit possession of chemistry books on the ground that they may lead to the manufacture of homemade spirits.' [12]

10 This case might be different if the State asserted a primary interest in stopping the very acts performed by these dancers and actors. However, I have serious doubts whether the State may constitutionally assert an interest in regulating any sexual act between consenting adults. Cf. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965). Moreover, it is unnecessary to reach that question in this case since the State's regulations are plainly not designed to stop the acts themselves, most of which are in fact legal when done in private. Rather, the State punishes the acts only when done in public as part of a dramatic presentation. Cf. United States v. O'Brien, supra, 391 U.S. at 375, 88 S.Ct. at 1678. It must be, therefore, that the asserted state interest stems from the effect of the acts on the audience rather than from a desire to stop the acts themselves. It should also be emphasized that this case does not present problems of an unwilling audience or of an audience composed of minors.

11 Indeed, California already has statutes controlling virtually all of the misconduct said to flow from appellees' activities. See Calif.Penal Code s 647(b) (Supp.1972) (prostitution); Calif.Penal Code ss 261, 263 (1970) (rape); Calif.Bus. & Prof.Code s 25657 (Supp.1972) ('B-Girl' activity); Calif.Health & Safety Code ss 11500, 11501, 11721, 11910, 11912 (1964 and Supp.1972) (sale and use of narcotics).

12 Of course, it is true that Stanley does not govern this case, since Stanley dealt only with the private possession of obscene materials in one's own home. But in another sense, this case is stronger than Stanley. In Stanley, we held that the State's interest in the prevention of sex crimes did not justify laws restricting possession of certain materials, even though they were conceded to be obscene. It follows a fortiori that this interest is insufficient when the materials are not obscene and, indeed, are constitutionally protected.

405 II

It should thus be evident that, under the standards previously developed by this Court, the California regulations are overbroad: They would seem to suppress not only obscenity outside the scope of the First Amendment, but also speech that is clearly protected. But California contends that these regulations do not involve suppression at all. The State claims that its rules are not regulations of obscenity, but are rather merely regulations of the sale and consumption of liquor. Appellants point out that California does not punish establishments which provide the proscribed entertainment, but only requires that they not serve alcoholic beverages on their premises. Appellants vigorously argue that such regulation falls within the State's general police power as augmented, when alcoholic beverages are involved, by the Twenty-first Amendment. [13]

13 The Twenty-first Amendment, in addition to repealing the Eighteenth Amendment, provides: 'The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.'

*134 I must confess that I find this argument difficult to grasp. To some extent, it seems premised on the notion that the Twenty-first Amendment authorizes the States to regulate liquor in a fashion which would otherwise be constitutionally impermissible. But the Amendment by its terms speaks only to state control of the importation of alcohol, and its legislative history makes clear that it was intended only to permit 'dry' States to control the flow of liquor across their boundaries despite potential Commerce Clause objections. [14] See generally Joseph E. Seagram & Sons Inc. v. Hostetter, 384 U.S. 35, 86 S.Ct. 1254, 16 L.Ed.2d 336 (1966); Hostetter v. Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 12 L.Ed.2d 350 (1964). There is not a word in that history which indicates that Congress meant to tamper in any way with First Amendment rights. I submit that the framers of the Amendment would be astonished to *135 discover that they had inadvertently enacted a pro tanto repealer of the rest of the Constitution. Only last Term, we held that the State's conceded power to license the distribution of intoxicating beverages did not justify use of that power in a manner that conflicted with the Equal Protection Clause. See Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163, 178—179, 92 S.Ct. 1965, 1974—1975, 32 L.Ed.2d 627 (1972). Cf. 406 Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515 (1971); Hornsby v. Allen, 326 F.2d 605 (CA5 1964). I am at a loss to understand why the Twenty-first Amendment should be thought to override the First Amendment but not the Fourteenth.

14 The text of the Amendment is based on the Webb-Kenyon Act, 37 Stat. 699, which antedated prohibition. The Act was entitled 'An Act Divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character in certain cases,' and was designed to allow 'dry' States to regulate the flow of alcohol across their borders. See, e.g., McCormick & Co. v. Brown, 286 U.S. 131, 140—141, 52 S.Ct. 522, 526, 76 L.Ed. 1017 (1932); Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., 242 U.S. 311, 324, 37 S.Ct. 180, 184, 61 L.Ed. 326 (1917). The Twenty-first Amendment was intended to embed this principle permanently into the Constitution. As explained by its sponsor on the Senate floor 'to assure the so-called dry States against the importation of intoxicating liquor into those States, it is proposed to write permanently into the Constitution a prohibition along that line.
'(T)he pending proposal will give the States that guarantee. When our Government was organized and the Constitution of the United States adopted, the States surrendered control over and regulation of interstate commerce. This proposal is restoring to the States, in effect, the right to regulate commerce respecting a single commodity—namely, intoxicating liquor.' 76 Cong.Rec. 4141 (remarks of Sen. Blaine).

To be sure, state regulation of liquor is important, and it is deeply embedded in our history. See, e.g., Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, 397 U.S. 72, 77, 90 S.Ct. 774, 777, 25 L.Ed.2d 60 (1970). But First Amendment values are important as well. Indeed in the past they have been thought so important as to provide an independent restraint on every power of Government. 'Freedom of press, freedom of speech, freedom of religion are in a preferred position.' Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 115, 63 S.Ct. 870, 876, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943). Thus, when the Government attempted to justify a limitation on freedom of association by reference to the war power, we categorically rejected the attempt. '(The) concept of 'national defense" we held, 'cannot be deemed an end in itself, justifying any exercise of legislative power designed to promote such a goal. Implicit in the term 'national defense' is the notion of defending those values and ideals which set this Nation apart. For almost two centuries, our country has taken singular pride in the democratic ideals enshrined in its Constitution, and the most cherished of those ideals have found expression in the First Amendment. It would indeed, be ironic if, in the name of national defense, we would sanction the subversion of one of those liberties—the freedom of association—which 136 makes the defense of the Nation worthwhile.' United States v. Robel, 389 U.S., at 264, 88 S.Ct., at 423—424. Cf. New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713, 716—717, 91 S.Ct. 2140, 2142—2143, 29 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971) (Black, J., concurring); Home Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 426, 54 S.Ct. 231, 235, 78 L.Ed. 413 (1934). If the First Amendment limits the means by which our Government can ensure its very survival, then surely it must limit the State's power to control the sale of alcoholic beverages as well.

Of course, this analysis is relevant only to the extent that California has in fact encroached upon First Amendment rights. Appellants argue that no such encroachment has occurred, since appellees are free to continue providing any entertainment they choose without fear of criminal penalty. Appellants suggest that this case is somehow different because all that is at stake is the 'privilege' of serving liquor by the drink.

It should be clear, however, that the absence of criminal sanctions is insufficient to immunize state regulation from constitutional attack. On the contrary, 'this is only the beginning, not the end, of our inquiry.' Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 403—404, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1794, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963). For '(i)t is too late in the day to doubt that the liberties of religion and expression may be infringed by the denial of or placing of conditions upon a benefit or privilege.' Id., at 404, 84 S.Ct., at 1794. As we pointed out only last Term, '(f)or at least a quarter century, this Court has made clear that even though a person has no 'right' to a valuable governmental benefit and even thought the government may deny him the benefit for any number or reasons, there are some reasons upon which the government may not act. It may not deny a benefit to a person on a basis that infringes his constitutionally protected interests—especially, his interest in freedom of speech. For if the government could deny a benefit to a person because of his constitutionally protected 137 speech or associations, his exercise of those freedoms would in effect be penalized and inhibited.' Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597, 92 S.Ct. 2694, 2697, 33 L.Ed.2d 570 (1972).

Thus, unconstitutional conditions on welfare benefits,[15] unemployment compensation,[16] *407 tax exemptions,[17] public employment,[18] bar admissions,[19] and mailing privileges[20] have all been invalidated by this Court. In none of these cases were criminal penalties involved. In all of them, citizens were left free to exercise their constitutional rights so long as they were willing to give up a 'gratuity' that the State had no obligation to provide. Yet in all of them, we found that the discriminatory provision of a privilege placed too great a burden on constitutional freedoms. I therefore have some difficulty in understanding why California nightclub proprietors should be singled out and informed that they alone must sacrifice their constitutional rights before gaining the 'privilege' to serve liquor.

15 See Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600 (1969). But cf. Wyman v. James, 400 U.S. 309, 91 S.Ct. 381, 27 L.Ed.2d 408 (1971).

16 See Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963).

17 See Speiser v. Randall, 357 U.S. 513, 78 S.Ct. 1332, 2 L.Ed.2d 1460 (1958).

18 See, e.g., Pickering v. Board of Education, 391 U.S. 563, 88 S.Ct. 1731, 20 L.Ed.2d 811 (1968); Keyishian v. Board of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 87 S.Ct. 675, 17 L.Ed.2d 629 (1967); Baggett v. Bullitt, 377 U.S. 360, 84 S.Ct. 1316, 12 L.Ed.2d 377 (1964).

19 See, e.g., Baird v. State Bar of Arizona, 401 U.S. 1, 91 S.Ct. 702, 27 L.Ed.2d 639 (1971); Konigsberg v. State Bar, 353 U.S. 252, 77 S.Ct. 722, 1 L.Ed.2d 810 (1957); Schware v. Board of Bar Examiners, 353 U.S. 232, 77 S.Ct. 752, 1 L.Ed.2d 796 (1957). But cf. Law Students Civil Rights Research Council v. Wadmond, 401 U.S. 154, 91 S.Ct. 720, 27 L.Ed.2d 749 (1971); Konigsberg v. State Bar, 366 U.S. 36, 81 S.Ct. 997, 6 L.Ed.2d 105 (1961).

20 See, e.g., Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410, 91 S.Ct. 423, 27 L.Ed.2d 498 (1971); Hannegan v. Esquire Inc., 327 U.S. 146, 156, 66 S.Ct. 456, 461, 90 L.Ed. 586 (1946).

Of course, it is true that the State may in proper circumstances enact a broad regulatory scheme that incidentally restricts First Amendment rights. For example, if California prohibited the sale of alcohol altogether, I do not mean to suggest that the proprietors 138 of theaters and bookstores would be constitutionally entitled to a special dispensation. But in that event, the classification would not be speech related and, hence, could not be rationally perceived as penalizing speech. Classifications that discriminate against the exercise of constitutional rights per se stand on an altogether different footing. They must be supported by a 'compelling' governmental purpose and must be carefully examined to insure that the purpose is unrelated to mere hostility to the right being asserted. See, e.g., Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 634, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 1331, 22 L.Ed.2d 600 (1969).

Moreover, not only is this classification speech related; it also discriminates between otherwise indistinguishable parties on the basis of the content of their speech. Thus, California nightclub owners may present live shows and movies dealing with a wide variety of topics while maintaining their licenses. But if they choose to deal with sex, they are treated quite differently. Classifications based on the content of speech have long been disfavored and must be viewed with the gravest suspicion. See, e.g., Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 556—558, 85 S.Ct. 453, 465—466, 13 L.Ed.2d 471 (1965). Whether this test is thought to derive from equal protection analysis, see Police Department of City of Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 33 L.Ed.2d 212 (1972); Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 325, 95 L.Ed. 267, 280 (1951), or directly from the substantive constitutional provision involved, see Cox v. Louisiana, supra; Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939), the result is the same: any law that has 'no other purpose . . . than to chill the assertion of constitutional rights by penalizing those who choose to exercise them . . . (is) patently unconstitutional.' United States v. Jackson, 390 U.S. 570, 581, 88 S.Ct. 1209, 1216, 20 L.Ed.2d 138 (1968).

As argued above, the constitutionally permissible purposes asserted to justify *408 these regulations are too remote to satisfy the Government's burden, when First Amendment rights are at stake. See supra, at 403—405. 139 It may be that the Government has an interest in suppressing lewd or 'indecent' speech even when it occurs in private among consenting adults. Cf. United States v. Thirty-seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 376, 91 S.Ct. 1400, 1408, 28 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971). But cf. Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, 89 S.Ct. 1243, 22 L.Ed.2d 542 (1969). That interest, however, must be balanced against the overriding interest of our citizens in freedom of thought and expression. Our prior decisions on obscenity set such a balance and hold that the Government may suppress expression treating with sex only if it meets the three-pronged Roth-Memoirs test. We have said that '(t)he door barring federal and state intrusion into this area cannot be left ajar; it must be kept tightly closed and opened only the slightest crack necessary to prevent encroachment upon more important interests.' Roth v. United States, 354 U.S., at 488, 77 S.Ct., at 1311. Because I can see no reason why we should depart from that standard in this case, I must respectfully dissent.

All Citations

409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Abrogation Recognized by Hamilton's Bogarts, Inc. v. Michigan, 6th Cir.(Mich.), August 30, 2007

101 S.Ct. 2599
Supreme Court of the United States

NEW YORK STATE LIQUOR AUTHORITY
v.
Dennis BELLANCA, dba The Main Event, et al.

No. 80-813.
|
June 22, 1981.

Owners of nightclubs, bars and restaurants brought action in which they sought declaratory judgment that New York statute prohibiting topless dancing at licensed premises was unconstitutional and sought injunctive relief. The Supreme Court, Erie County, Special Term, John H. Doerr, J., granted plaintiffs summary judgment declaring statute unconstitutional, and State appealed. The Court of Appeals, 50 N.Y.2d 524, 429 N.Y.S.2d 616, 407 N.E.2d 460, Wachtler, J., affirmed, and certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court held that statute was constitutional.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Marshall concurred in the judgment.

Justice Brennan dissented from summary disposition.

Justice Stevens dissented and filed opinion.

Opinion on remand, 54 N.Y.2d 228, 445 N.Y.S.2d 87, 429 N.E.2d 765.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Intoxicating Liquors
Legislative Regulation

State has absolute power under Twenty-First Amendment to prohibit totally the sale of liquor within its boundaries. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21.

80 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Intoxicating Liquors
Legislative Regulation

State has broad power under Twenty-First Amendment to regulate time, places and circumstances under which liquor may be sold. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21.

91 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and Regulation

New York statute prohibiting topless dancing in establishment licensed by state to serve liquor was not unconstitutional. N.Y.Alcoholic Beverage Control Law § 106, subd. 6a; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21.

96 Cases that cite this headnote

Opinion

714 *2600 PER CURIAM.

The question presented in this case is the power of a State to prohibit topless dancing in an establishment licensed by the State to serve liquor. In 1977, the State of New York amended its Alcoholic Beverage Control Law to prohibit nude dancing in establishments licensed by the State to sell liquor for on-premises consumption. N.Y.Alco.Bev.Cont.Law, § 106, subd. 6-a (McKinney Supp.1980-1981).[1] The statute 715 does not provide for criminal penalties, but its violation may cause an establishment to lose its liquor license.

1 The statute provides:

> "No retail licensee for on premises consumption shall suffer or permit any person to appear on licensed premises in such manner or attire as to expose to view any portion of the pubic area, anus, vulva or genitals, or any simulation thereof, nor shall suffer or permit any female to appear on licensed premises in such manner or attire as to > expose to view any portion of the breast below the top of the areola, or any simulation thereof."

Respondents, owners of nightclubs, bars, and restaurants which had for a number of years offered topless dancing, brought a declaratory judgment action in state court, alleging that the statute violates the First Amendment of the United States Constitution insofar as it prohibits all topless dancing in all licensed premises. The New York Supreme Court, 50 N.Y.2d 524, 429 N.Y.S.2d 616, 407 N.E.2d 460, declared the statute unconstitutional, and the New York Court of Appeals affirmed by a divided vote. 50 N.Y.2d 524, 429 N.Y.S.2d 616, 407 N.E.2d 460. It reasoned that topless dancing was a form of protected expression under the First Amendment and that the State had not demonstrated a need for prohibiting "licensees from presenting nonobscene topless dancing performances to willing customers...." Id., at 529, 429 N.Y.S.2d, at 619, 407 N.E.2d, at 463. The dissent contended that the statute was well within the State's power, conferred by the Twenty-first Amendment, to regulate the sale of liquor within its boundaries.[2] We agree with the reasoning of the dissent and now reverse the decision of the New York Court of Appeals.

[2] The Twenty-first Amendment provides in relevant part that "[t]he transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited."

[1] [2] This Court has long recognized that a State has absolute power under the Twenty-first Amendment to prohibit totally the sale of liquor within its boundaries. Ziffrin, Inc. v. Reeves, 308 U.S. 132, 138, 60 S.Ct. 163, 167, 84 L.Ed. 128 (1939). It is equally well established that a State has broad power under the Twenty-first Amendment to regulate the times, places, and circumstances under which liquor may be sold. In California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), we upheld the facial constitutionality of a statute prohibiting acts of "gross sexuality," including the display of the genitals and live or filmed performances of sexual acts, in establishments licensed by the State to serve 716 liquor. Although we recognized that not all of the prohibited acts would be found obscene and were therefore entitled to some measure of First Amendment protection, we reasoned that the statute was within the State's broad power under the Twenty-first Amendment to regulate the sale of liquor.

*2601 In Doran v. Salem Inn, Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975), we considered a First Amendment challenge to a local ordinance which prohibited females from appearing topless not just in bars, but "any public place." Though we concluded that the District Court had not abused its discretion in granting a preliminary injunction against enforcement of the ordinance, that decision does not limit our holding in LaRue. First, because Doran arose in the context of a preliminary injunction, we limited our standard of review to whether the District Court abused its discretion in concluding that plaintiffs were likely to prevail on the merits of their claim, not whether the ordinance actually violated the First Amendment. Thus, the decision may not be considered a "final judicial decision based on the actual merits of the controversy." University of Texas v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 396, 101 S.Ct. 1830, 1834, 68 L.Ed.2d 175 (1981). Second, the ordinance was far broader than the ordinance involved either in LaRue or here, since it proscribed conduct at "any public place," a term that " 'could include the theater, town hall, opera place, as well as a public market place, street or any place of assembly, indoors or outdoors.' " 422 U.S., at 933, 95 S.Ct., at 2568 (quoting Salem Inn, Inc. v. Frank, 364 F.Supp. 478, 483 (EDNY 1973)). Here, in contrast, the State has not attempted to ban topless dancing in "any public place": As in LaRue, the statute's prohibition applies only to establishments which are licensed by the State to serve liquor. Indeed, we explicitly recognized in Doran that a more narrowly drawn statute would survive judicial scrutiny:

> "Although the customary 'barroom' type of nude dancing may involve only the barest minimum of protected expression, we recognized in 717 California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 118 [93 S.Ct. 390, 397, 34 L.Ed.2d 342] (1972), that this form of entertainment might be entitled to First and Fourteenth Amendment protection under some circumstances. In LaRue, however, we concluded that the broad powers of the States to regulate the sale of liquor, conferred by the Twenty-first Amendment, outweighed any First Amendment interest in nude dancing and that a State could therefore ban such dancing as part of its liquor license control program." 422 U.S., at 932-933, 95 S.Ct., at 2568-2569.

[3] Judged by the standards announced in LaRue and Doran, the statute at issue here is not unconstitutional. What the New York Legislature has done in this case is precisely what this Court in Doran has said a State may do. Pursuant to its power to regulate the sale of liquor within its boundaries, it has banned topless dancing in establishments granted a license to serve liquor. The State's power to ban the sale of alcoholic beverages entirely includes the lesser power to ban the sale of liquor on premises where topless dancing occurs.

Respondents nonetheless insist that LaRue is distinguishable from this case, since the statute there prohibited acts of "gross sexuality" and was well supported by legislative findings demonstrating a need for the rule. They argue that the statute here is unconstitutional as applied to topless dancing because there is no legislative finding that topless dancing poses anywhere near the problem posed by acts of "gross sexuality." But even if explicit legislative findings were required to uphold the constitutionality of this statute as applied to topless dancing, those findings exist in this case. The purposes of the statute have been set forth in an accompanying legislative memorandum, New York State Legislative Annual 150 (1977).

> "Nudity is the kind of conduct that is a proper subject for legislative action as well as regulation by the State Liquor Authority as a phase of liquor licensing. It has long been held that sexual acts and performances 718 may constitute disorderly behavior within the meaning of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Law ....
>
> "Common sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior. This legislation prohibiting nudity in public will once and for all, outlaw conduct which is now quite out of hand."

In short, the elected representatives of the State of New York have chosen to avoid *2602 the disturbances associated with mixing alcohol and nude dancing by means of a reasonable restriction upon establishments which sell liquor for on-premises consumption. Given the "added presumption in favor of the validity of the state regulation" conferred by the Twenty-first Amendment, California v. LaRue, 409 U.S., at 118, 93 S.Ct., at 397, we cannot agree with the New York Court of Appeals that the statute violates the United States Constitution. Whatever artistic or communicative value may attach to topless dancing is overcome by the State's exercise of its broad powers arising under the Twenty-first Amendment. Although some may quarrel with the wisdom of such legislation and may consider topless dancing a harmless diversion, the Twenty-first Amendment makes that a policy judgment for the state legislature, not the courts.

Accordingly, the petition for certiorari is granted, the judgment of the New York Court of Appeals is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Justice MARSHALL concurs in the judgment.

Justice BRENNAN dissents from the summary disposition and would set the case for oral argument.

Justice STEVENS, dissenting.

Although the Court has written several opinions implying that nude or partially nude dancing is a form of expressive 719 activity protected by the First Amendment, the Court has never directly confronted the question. [1] Today the Court construes the Twenty-first Amendment as a source of power permitting the State to prohibit such presumably protected activities in establishments which serve liquor. The Court relies on California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342, for that construction of the Twenty-first Amendment. The rationale of today's decision however, is not the same as the explanation the Court gave for its holding in that case. The syllogism supporting today's conclusion includes the premise that the State's Twenty-first Amendment power to ban the sale of alcoholic beverages entirely includes the lesser power to ban the sale of liquor on premises where activity assumed to be protected by the First Amendment occurs. [2] If that reasoning is sound, then a State may ban any protected activity on such premises, no matter how innocuous or, more importantly, how clearly protected. [3]

1 See Doran v. Salem, Inn., Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 45 L.Ed.2d 648; Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 557-558, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1245-1246, 43 L.Ed.2d 448; California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 118, 93 S.Ct. 390, 397, 34 L.Ed.2d 342;

Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671.

2 "The State's power to ban the sale of alcoholic beverages entirely includes the lesser power to ban the sale of liquor on premises where topless dancing occurs." Ante, at 2601.

3 Rejecting this reasoning, the New York Court of Appeals noted that "it would be most difficult to sustain a law prohibiting political discussions in places where alcohol is sold by the drink, even though the record may show, conclusively, that political discussions in bars often lead to disorderly behavior, assaults and even homicide." 50 N.Y.2d 524, 531, n. 7, 429 N.Y.S.2d 616, 620, n. 7, 407 N.E.2d 460, 464, n. 7.

In California v. LaRue, instead of relying on the simplistic reasoning employed by the Court today, the majority analyzed the issue by balancing the State's interests in preventing specifically identified social harms against the minimal interest in protected expression implicated by nude dancing. [4] 720 The opinion reflected the view that the degree of protection afforded by the *2603 First Amendment is a variable, and that the slight interest in free expression implicated by naked and lewd dancing was plainly outweighed by the State's interest-supported by explicit legislative findings-in maintaining order and decency. [5] The Twenty-first Amendment provided the Court with an "added presumption," 409 U.S., at 118, 93 S.Ct., at 397, to tip the scales in the direction of law and order, [6] but the opinion's 721 evaluation of the conflicting interests would surely have led to the same result without that makeweight. [7]

4 The Court's opinion in LaRue recounted in explicit detail the undesirable consequences-described in evidence adduced at public hearings-resulting from the performance of lewd or naked dancing and entertainment in bars and cocktail lounges. See 409 U.S., at 111-112, 93 S.Ct., at 393-394. After emphasizing the State's interests in eliminating those consequences the Court turned to a discussion of the First Amendment and stated that "as the mode of expression moves from the printed page to the commission of public acts that may themselves violate valid penal statutes, the scope of permissible state regulations significantly increases." Id., at 117, 93 S.Ct., at 396.

5 In minimizing the First Amendment interests in nude dancing and recognizing the State's interest in regulating such behavior, the Court stated:

"The substance of the regulations struck down prohibits licensed bars or nightclubs from displaying, either in the form of movies or live entertainment, 'performances' that partake more of gross sexuality than of communication....

"... [W]e conceive the State's authority in this area to be somewhat broader than did the District Court. This is not to say that all such conduct and performance are without the protection of the First and Fourteenth Amendments. But we would poorly serve both the interest for which the State may validly seek vindication and the interests protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments were we to insist that the sort of bacchanalian revelries that the Department sought to prevent by these liquor regulations were the constitutional equivalent of a performance by a scantily clad ballet troupe in a theater." Id., at 118, 93 S.Ct., at 397.

6 The Court recognized that the Twenty-first Amendment confers "something more than the normal state authority over public health, welfare, and morals." Id., at 114, 93 S.Ct., at 395. In discussing decisions construing the Twenty-first Amendment, however, the Court noted that, "[t]hese decisions did not go so far as to hold or say that the Twenty-first Amendment supersedes all other provisions of the United States Constitution in the area of liquor regulations." Id., at 115, 93 S.Ct., at 395.

7 In discussing the Twenty-first Amendment, the Court recognized that the States, "vested as they are with general police power, require no specific grant of authority in the Federal Constitution to legislate with respect to matters traditionally within the scope of the police power...." Id., at 114, 93 S.Ct., at 395. The Court held that the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control's "conclusion ... that certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur at premises that have licenses was not an irrational one. Given the added presumption in favor of the validity of the state regulation in this area that the Twenty-first Amendment requires, we cannot hold that the regulations on their face violate the Federal Constitution." Id., at 118-119, 93 S.Ct., at 397.

The explicit legislative findings on which the Court heavily relied in LaRue have no counterpart in this case. The 1977 amendment to the New York Alcoholic Beverage Control Law left in place the prohibition against nude dancing that had been in effect for some time. Prior to 1977, topless dancing had been permitted subject to regulation that required the performer to dance on a stage that was inaccessible to patrons. [8] The State has not indicated that the New York Legislature was presented with any evidence to the effect that this regulated form of entertainment had produced any undesirable consequences. A memorandum in the New York State Legislative Annual (1977), see ante, at 2601, notes that nudity had "long been held" to constitute disorderly behavior within the meaning of the law as it then existed, but that 722 memorandum sheds no light whatever on the decision to prohibit topless dancing as well as nudity. [9] The New York Court of *2604 Appeals stated that this law "was not prompted by hearings or any legislative awareness of deficiencies in the prior regulation permitting topless dancing subject to restrictions and the continued supervision of the State Liquor Authority." 50 N.Y.2d 524, 530, 429 N.Y.S.2d 616, 620, 407 N.E.2d 460, 464.

8 The pre-1977 regulation prohibited the licensee from permitting "any female to appear on licensed premises" so as "to expose to view any portion of the breast below the top of the areola" but contained an exception for "any female entertainer performing on a stage or platform which is at least 18 inches above the immediate floor level and which is removed by at least six feet from the nearest patron." See 50 N.Y.2d, at 526, n. 2, 429 N.Y.S.2d, at 617, n. 2, 407 N.E.2d, at 461-462, n. 2. The 1977 amendment incorporated the general prohibition of topless dancing but did not incorporate the exception. See N.Y.Alco.Bev.Cont.Law, § 106, subd. 6-a (McKinney Supp.1980-1981).

9 The New York Court of Appeals recognized the difference between nude and topless dancing and emphasized the limited nature of respondents' challenge:

> "In the case now before us the plaintiffs do not claim a right to offer performances of explicit sexual acts, live or filmed, real or simulated. Nor are we concerned with nude dancing. There is no contention that the plaintiffs should have a right to present their dancers entirely unclothed, and thus they do not challenge that portion of the statute which prohibits nudity. Nor do they contest the statute insofar as it would prohibit women other than dancers from appearing barebreasted on their premises. Similarly the plaintiffs do not contest the State's right to place some restriction on topless dancing performances as the Liquor Authority's regulations have done in the past. Finally, of course, the plaintiffs do not claim that they are exempted from the obscenity laws or that topless dancing should always be allowed no matter how, or where performed. The only question before us is whether the statute is constitutional to the extent that it absolutely prohibits liquor licensees from presenting nonobscene topless dancing performances to willing customers under all circumstances." 50 N.Y.2d, at 529, 429 N.Y.S.2d, at 619, 407 N.E.2d, at 463.

I therefore believe that we must assume that the pre-1977 regulation adequately avoided the kind of "gross sexuality" that gave rise to the regulation challenged in LaRue. Although the emphasis on the legislative findings in this Court's opinion in LaRue may have merely disguised the Court's real holding, the Court is quite wrong today when it implies that the factors that supported the holding in LaRue are also present in this case. This case does not involve "gross sexuality" or any legislative explanation for the 1977 change in the law to prohibit topless dancing.

Having said this, I must confess that if the question whether a State may prohibit nude or partially nude dancing 723 in commercial establishments were squarely confronted on its merits, I might well conclude that this is the sort of question that may be resolved by the elected representatives of a community. Sooner or later that issue will be briefed and argued on its own merits. [10] I dissent in this case because I believe the Court should not continue to obscure that issue with irrelevancies such as its mischievous suggestion that the Twenty-first Amendment gives States power to censor free expression in places where liquor is served. [11] Neither the language [12] nor the history of that Amendment provides any 724 support for that suggestion. [13] Nor does *2605 LaRue justify it. [14] Without any aid from the Twenty-first Amendment, the 725 State's ordinary police powers are adequate to support the prohibition of nuisances in taverns or elsewhere. Cf. Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310.

10 If topless dancing is entitled to First Amendment protection, it would seem to me that the places where it should most appropriately be conducted are places where alcoholic beverages are served. A holding that a state liquor board may prohibit its licensees from allowing such dancing on their premises may therefore be the practical equivalent of a holding that the activity is not protected by the First Amendment.

11 In Hostetter v. Idlewild Liquor Corp., 377 U.S. 324, 84 S.Ct. 1293, 12 L.Ed.2d 350, the Court recognized the effect of the Twenty-first Amendment on the Commerce Clause but included a reminder that is pertinent here:

> "Both the Twenty-first Amendment and the Commerce Clause are parts of the same Constitution. Like other provisions of the Constitution, each must be considered in the light of the other, and in the context of the issues and interests at stake in any concrete case." Id., at 332, 84 S.Ct., at 1298.
>
> That admonition is even more important in the context presented by the instant case, inasmuch as the drafters of the Twenty-first Amendment clearly intended the Amendment to have some impact on the Commerce Clause. That conclusion, contrary to the Court's reasoning, is totally unsupported with respect to the First Amendment.

12 In California Liquor Dealers Assn. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 106-107, 100 S.Ct. 937, 943-944, 63 L.Ed.2d 233, the Court rejected a claim that the Twenty-first Amendment prohibited the application of the Sherman Act to California's system of wine pricing and pointed out that in "determining state powers under the Twenty-first Amendment, the Court has focused primarily on the language of the provision ...." The difference between the Court's interpretation of the Twenty-first Amendment and its plain language is quite dramatic. The pertinent section of that Amendment provides:

> "The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited."

13 In Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 206, 97 S.Ct. 451, 461-462, 50 L.Ed.2d 397, the Court stated that "[t]his Court's decisions ... have confirmed that the Amendment primarily created an exception to the normal operation of the Commerce Clause." The Court then unequivocally rejected the Twenty-first Amendment as a basis for sustaining state liquor regulations that otherwise violated the Equal Protection Clause:

> "Once passing beyond consideration of the Commerce Clause, the relevance of the Twenty-first Amendment to other constitutional provisions becomes increasingly doubtful. As one commentator has remarked: 'Neither the text nor the history of the Twenty-first Amendment suggests that it qualifies individual rights protected by the Bill of Rights and the Fourteenth Amendment where the sale or use of liquor is concerned.' P. Brest, Processes of Constitutional Decisionmaking, Cases and Materials, 258 (1975). Any departures from this historical view have been limited and sporadic." Ibid.
>
> Cf. Wisconsin v. Constantineau, 400 U.S. 433, 91 S.Ct. 507, 27 L.Ed.2d 515. Surely the First Amendment is entitled to a status equal to the Fourteenth Amendment.

14 Ironically, today the Court adopts an argument that the appellant expressly disclaimed during the oral argument in LaRue :

> "QUESTION: Mr. Porter, in your argument here, is it based at all on the Twenty-First Amendment, dealing with the State authority over regulation of alcoholic beverages?
>
> "MR. PORTER: Based to the extent that if we are in the First Amendment area, then as far as balancing the State's interests, we submit that both the traditional power that a State has had over the conditions surrounding the sale of alcoholic beverages and the power given to the States under the Twenty-First Amendment must be considered in balancing the State interests, that these are substantial and important State interests, where we're talking about the conditions surrounding the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages.
>
> "We have never argued, nor would we ever argue, that the Twenty-First Amendment would automatically override the First Amendment, or any other part of the Constitution. We only urge that-
>
> "QUESTION: Well, it has been held that the Twenty-First Amendment overrode a great deal of the commerce clause, hasn't it?
>
> "MR. PORTER: Well,-
>
> "QUESTION: And it does, by its terms.
>
> "MR. PORTER: That's correct, but I-
>
> "QUESTION: And it has been held that the Twenty-First Amendment overrode a good deal of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, hasn't it? It was in the Younger case.

> "MR. PORTER: Yes, but I would submit that-or I would, myself, attempt to temper that somewhat, to the extent I think it shows an overriding State interest in weighing between the commerce clause and the Twenty-First Amendment, where you get up in equal protection, where you get up into the First Amendment or some so-called, alleged, preferred amendments of the Constitution.
> "As I said, we do not argue that it overrides the First Amendment. If we're dealing in a First Amendment area, that great weight should be given to the State's interest and power under the Twenty-First Amendment, in balancing and weighing, the State interest outweighs the State interest to be protected under the First Amendment." Tr. of Oral Arg. in California v. LaRue, O.T.1972, No. 71-36, pp. 10-12.

Although I voted to deny certiorari and allow the decision of the highest court of the State of New York to stand, certiorari having been granted. I dissent from the Court's disposition of the case on the basis of a blatantly incorrect reading of the Twenty-first Amendment.

All Citations

452 U.S. 714, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357, 7 Media L. Rep. 1500

End of Document

110 S.Ct. 596
Supreme Court of the United States

FW/PBS, INC., dba Paris Adult Bookstore II, et al., Petitioners
v.
CITY OF DALLAS et al.
M.J.R., INC., et al., Petitioners
v.
CITY OF DALLAS.
Calvin BERRY, III, et al., Petitioners
v.
CITY OF DALLAS et al.

Nos. 87–2012, 87–2051 and 88–49.
|
Argued Oct. 4, 1989.
|
Decided Jan. 9, 1990.

Petitioners involved with adult entertainment industry adversely affected by zoning and licensing ordinance, sued for declaratory and injunctive relief. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Jerry Buchmeyer, J., 648 F.Supp. 1061, held ordinance was not violative of First or Fourth Amendments, and petitioners appealed. The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, 837 F.2d 1298, affirmed, and certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that: (1) petitioners could challenge facial validity of ordinance, on First Amendment prior restraint grounds; (2) ordinance's failure to provide reasonable period during which decision whether to issue license must be made, and to provide avenue for prompt judicial review of adverse decision, rendered licensing requirements unconstitutional as enforced against petitioners engaged in First Amendment activity; (3) petitioners lacked standing to challenge ordinance provisions barring persons residing with individuals whose licenses to conduct sexually oriented businesses had been denied or revoked, or prohibiting applicants for such licenses who were convicted of specified offenses or whose spouses were so convicted, from obtaining such licenses; (4) petitioners lacked standing to challenge ordinance denying licenses to applicants who were convicted of enumerated crimes; (5) city council did not violate due process rights of motel owners by declaring that motels renting rooms for less than ten hours were "sexually oriented businesses" subject to ordinance; and (6) determination that such motels were "sexually oriented businesses" did not impinge upon the freedom of association rights of occupants of rooms.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, vacated in part, and remanded.

Justice Brennan concurred in judgment and filed opinion, in which Justices Marshall and Blackmun joined.

Justice White concurred in part and dissented in part and filed opinion, in which the Chief Justice joined.

Justice Stevens concurred in part and dissented in part and filed opinion.

Justice Scalia concurred in part and dissented in part and filed opinion.

Opinion on remand, 896 F.2d 864.

West Headnotes (13)

[1] Constitutional Law
Licenses

Petitioners associated with sexually oriented businesses could raise facial constitutional challenge to city licensing ordinance applicable to such businesses, on First Amendment prior restraint grounds; ordinance vested "unbridled discretion" in licensor, as required for facial challenge, as there was no time limit during which licensing authority was required to act. (Per Justice O'Connor, with two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

294 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Licenses

Petitioners associated with sexually oriented businesses had valid First Amendment interest in challenging ordinance requiring licensing of such businesses, even though ordinance applied to some businesses that apparently were not protected by First Amendment, such as escort agencies and sexual encounter centers; ordinance largely targeted businesses purveying sexual explicit speech, which were conceded to be protected by First Amendment. (Per Justice O'Connor, with two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

113 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law

Licenses and permits in general

Ordinance requiring license in connection with the operation of sexually oriented businesses, as enforced, was unconstitutional prior restraint on licensees' First Amendment rights; ordinance lacked necessary limitation on period of time during which licensor must make decision whether to issue license, during which status quo was maintained, and ordinance did not provide possibility for prompt judicial review in the event license was erroneously denied. (Per Justice O'Connor, with two Justices concurring and three Justices concurring in judgment). U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

368 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Federal Courts

Presentation of Questions Below or on Review;Record;Waiver

Although neither party had raised issue of standing, and courts below had not passed on it, Supreme Court was required to consider whether owners of sexually oriented businesses had standing to challenge city ordinance regulating their activities; federal courts are under an independent obligation to examine their own jurisdiction.

666 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Federal Civil Procedure

Pleading

Standing to sue cannot be inferred argumentatively from averments in pleadings but must affirmatively appear in record.

156 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Federal Civil Procedure

Pleading

Party seeking exercise of jurisdiction in its favor has burden to allege facts demonstrating it is proper party to invoke judicial resolution of dispute.

366 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Municipal Corporations

Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Petitioners involved with sexual oriented businesses lacked standing to challenge municipal ordinance prohibiting issuance of license to conduct such businesses to applicant who has resided with individual whose license application has been denied or revoked within preceding 12 months; record did not reveal any petitioner who was living with individual whose license was denied or revoked during applicable period.

16 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Municipal Corporations

Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Petitioners involved with sexually oriented businesses lacked standing to challenge city ordinance which barred applicants who had been convicted of certain enumerated crimes as well as those whose spouses had been convicted of same crimes from obtaining license to operate such businesses, as no petitioner was member of affected class; although one petitioner alleged he had been convicted for enumerated crime and also that his wife was interested in opening sexually oriented business, city council had deleted by amendment crime of which husband was convicted from those enumerated under ordinance.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Petitioners involved with sexually oriented businesses lacked standing to challenge provision of city ordinance prohibiting person convicted of any of certain enumerated crimes from obtaining license to conduct such business; record showed only one party with potentially disabling criminal record, and record failed to indicate that five-year period following last conviction or release from confinement, whichever was later, during which prohibition was in effect, had not elapsed.

31 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Requirement that evidence of standing to sue be contained in record was not satisfied when attorney for city in suit challenging ordinance denying persons convicted of crime license to operate sexually oriented businesses stated in oral argument that there were one or two petitioners that had their license denied based on criminal conviction.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Municipal Corporations
Proceedings to determine validity of ordinances

Standing to challenge city ordinance prohibiting persons convicted of certain crimes from obtaining license to conduct sexually oriented businesses could not be established by city's affidavit stating that two licenses were revoked on grounds of prior conviction; affidavit could not be relied on because it was first introduced in Supreme Court proceedings and was not part of record of proceedings below.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Hotels, motels, and other lodging

The due process rights of motel owners were not violated when city adopted ordinance declaring that motels renting rooms for less than ten hours were sexually oriented businesses subject to regulation under ordinance covering such businesses, based only upon 1977 study by another city which allegedly considered only cursorily the effect of "adult" motels on surrounding neighborhoods; reasonableness of legislative judgment that motels offering short room rental periods fostered prostitution and that such type of criminal activity was what ordinance sought to suppress, combined with the study, was adequate to support determination that motels in question should be included in licensing scheme. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

18 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Association

Assuming that motel owners had standing to claim that ordinance deeming motels permitting rental of rooms for less than ten hours as sexually oriented businesses and imposing ordinance regulations on such motels on grounds that ordinance violated their customers' constitutional right to freedom of association, such rights were limited to "traditional personal bonds" which have "played a critical role in the culture and traditions of the Nation by cultivating and transmitting shared ideals and beliefs," and ordinance would not have discernible effect on such rights. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

19 Cases that cite this headnote

598 *215 Syllabus *

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

Respondent city of Dallas adopted a comprehensive ordinance regulating "sexually oriented businesses," which are defined to include "adult" arcades, bookstores, video stores, cabarets, motels, and theaters, as well as escort agencies, nude model studios, and sexual encounter centers. Among other things, the ordinance requires that such businesses be licensed and includes civil disability provisions prohibiting certain individuals from obtaining licenses. Three groups of individuals and businesses involved in the adult entertainment industry filed separate suits challenging the ordinance on numerous grounds and seeking injunctive and declaratory relief. The District Court upheld the bulk of the ordinance but struck down several subsections, and the city subsequently amended the ordinance in conformity with the court's judgment. The Court of Appeals affirmed, holding, inter alia, that the ordinance's licensing scheme did not violate the First Amendment despite its failure to provide the procedural safeguards set forth in Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), and that its civil disability provisions and its provision requiring 599 licensing for "adult motel owners" renting rooms for fewer than 10 hours were constitutional.

Held: The judgment is affirmed in part, reversed in part, and vacated in part, and the cases are remanded.

837 F.2d 1298, (CA 5 1988), affirmed in part, reversed in part, vacated in part, and remanded.

Justice O'CONNOR delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts III and IV, concluding that:

1. No petitioner has shown standing to challenge (1) the ordinance's provision which prohibits the licensing of an applicant who has resided with an individual whose license application has been denied or revoked, or (2) the civil disability provisions, which disable for specified periods those who have been convicted of certain enumerated crimes, as well as those whose spouses have been so convicted. The record does not reveal *216 that any petitioner was living with an individual whose application was denied or whose license was revoked. Moreover, although the record reveals one individual who potentially could be disabled under the spousal conviction provision, that person is not herself a license applicant or a party to this action. Even if she did have standing, however, her claim would now be moot, since the city council deleted from the statutory list the crimes of which her husband was convicted after the District Court ruled that the inclusion of such convictions was unconstitutional. Furthermore, although one party stated in an affidavit that he had been convicted of three enumerated misdemeanors, he lacked standing, since he failed to state when he had been convicted of the last misdemeanor or the date of his release from confinement and, therefore, has not shown that he is still within the ordinance's disability period. This Court cannot rely on the city's representations at oral argument that one or two of the petitioners had been denied licenses based on convictions, since the necessary factual predicate must be gleaned from the record below. Similarly, the city's affidavit indicating that two licenses were revoked for convictions is unavailing, since the affidavit was first introduced in this Court and is not part of the record, and, in any event, fails to identify the individuals whose licenses were revoked. Because the courts below lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate petitioners' claims, the Court of Appeals' judgment with respect to the disability provisions is vacated, and the court is directed to dismiss that portion of the suit. Pp. 607–610.

2. The ordinance's provision requiring licensing for motels that rent rooms for fewer than 10 hours is not unconstitutional. The motel owner petitioners' contention that the city has violated the Due Process Clause by failing to produce adequate support for its supposition that renting rooms for fewer than 10 hours results in increased crime or other secondary effects is rejected. As the Court of Appeals recognized, it was reasonable to believe that shorter rental time periods indicate that the motels foster prostitution, and that this type of criminal activity is what the ordinance seeks to suppress. The reasonableness of the legislative judgment, along with the Los Angeles study of the effect of adult motels on surrounding neighborhoods that was before the city council when it passed the ordinance, provided sufficient support for the limitation. Also rejected is the assertion that the 10–hour limitation places an unconstitutional burden on the right to freedom of association recognized in Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 618, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 3249, 82 L.Ed.2d 462. Even assuming that the motel owners have standing to assert the associational rights of motel patrons, limiting rentals to 10 hours will not have any discernible effect on the sorts of traditional personal bonds considered in Roberts: those that play a critical role in the Nation's culture and traditions by cultivating and transmitting shared ideals and beliefs. This Court 217 will not consider the motel owners' privacy and commercial speech challenges, since those issues were *600 not pressed or passed upon below. Pp. 610–611.

Justice O'CONNOR, joined by Justice STEVENS and Justice KENNEDY, concluded in Part II that the ordinance's licensing scheme violates the First Amendment, since it constitutes a prior restraint upon protected expression that fails to provide adequate procedural safeguards as required by Freedman, supra. Pp. 603–607.

(a) Petitioners may raise a facial challenge to the licensing scheme. Such challenges are permitted in the First Amendment context where the scheme vests unbridled discretion in the decisionmaker and where the regulation is challenged as overbroad. Petitioners argue that the licensing scheme fails to set a time limit within which the licensing authority must act. Since Freedman, supra, 380 U.S. at 56–57, 85 S.Ct., at 737–38, held that such a failure is a species of unbridled discretion, every application of the ordinance creates an impermissible risk of suppression of ideas. Moreover, the businesses challenging the licensing scheme have a valid First Amendment interest. Although the ordinance applies to some businesses that apparently are not protected by the First Amendment—e.g., escort agencies and sexual encounter centers—it largely targets businesses purveying sexually explicit speech which the city concedes for purposes of this litigation are protected by the First Amendment. While the city has asserted that it requires every business—regardless of whether it engages in First Amendment-protected speech—to obtain a certificate of occupancy when it moves into a new location or the use of the structure changes, the challenged ordinance nevertheless is more onerous with respect to sexually oriented businesses, which are required to submit to inspections—for example, when their ownership changes or when they apply for the annual renewal of their permits—whether or not they have moved or the use of their structures has changed. Pp. 603–604.

(b) Freedman, supra, at 58–60, 85 S.Ct., at 738–40, determined that the following procedural safeguards were necessary to ensure expeditious decisionmaking by a motion picture censorship board: (1) any restraint prior to judicial review can be imposed only for a specified brief period during which the status quo must be maintained; (2) expeditious judicial review of that decision must be available; and (3) the censor must bear the burden of going to court to suppress the speech and must bear the burden of proof once in court. Like a censorship system, a licensing scheme creates the possibility that constitutionally protected speech will be suppressed where there are inadequate procedural safeguards to ensure prompt issuance of the license. Thus, the license for a First Amendment-protected business must be issued in a reasonable period of time, and, accordingly, the first two Freedman safeguards are essential. Here, although 218 the Dallas ordinance requires the chief of police to approve the issuance of a license within 30 days after receipt of an application, it also conditions such issuance upon approval by other municipal inspection agencies without setting forth time limits within which those inspections must occur. Since the ordinance therefore fails to provide an effective time limitation on the licensing decision, and since it also fails to provide an avenue for prompt judicial review so as to minimize suppression of speech in the event of a license denial, its licensing requirement is unconstitutional insofar as it is enforced against those businesses engaged in First Amendment activity, as determined by the court on remand. However, since the licensing scheme at issue is significantly different from the censorship system examined in Freedman, it does not present the grave dangers of such a system, and the First Amendment does not require that it contain the third Freedman safeguard. Unlike the Freedman censor, Dallas does not engage in presumptively invalid direct censorship of particular expressive material, but simply performs the ministerial action of reviewing the general qualifications of each license applicant. It therefore need not be required to carry the burden of going *601 to court or of there justifying a decision to suppress speech. Moreover, unlike the motion picture distributors considered in Freedman—who were likely to be deterred from challenging the decision to suppress a particular movie if the burdens of going to court and of proof were not placed on the censor—the license applicants under the Dallas scheme have every incentive to pursue a license denial through court, since the license is the key to their obtaining and maintaining a business. Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988), is not dispositive of this litigation, since, although it struck down a licensing scheme for failing to provide adequate procedural safeguards, it did not address the proper scope of procedural safeguards with respect to such a scheme. Since the Dallas ordinance summarily states that its terms and provisions are severable, the Court of Appeals must, on remand, determine to what extent the licensing requirement is severable. Pp. 604–607.

Justice BRENNAN, joined by Justice MARSHALL and Justice BLACKMUN, although agreeing that the ordinance's licensing scheme is invalid as to any First Amendment-protected business under the Freedman doctrine, concluded that Riley mandates application of all three of the Freedman procedural safeguards, not just two of them. Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 802, 108 S.Ct., at 2680, applied Freedman to invalidate a professional licensing scheme with respect to charity fundraisers who were engaged in First Amendment-protected activity, ruling that the scheme must require that the licensor—i.e., the State, not the would-be fundraiser—either issue a license within a specified brief period or go to court. The principal opinion's grounds for declining 219 to require the third Freedman safeguard—that the Dallas scheme does not require an administrator to engage in the presumptively invalid task of passing judgment on whether the content of particular speech is protected, and that it licenses entire businesses, not just individual films, so that applicants will not be inclined to abandon their interests—do not distinguish the present litigation from Riley, where the licensor was not required to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech, and where the fundraisers had their entire livelihoods at stake. Moreover, the danger posed by a license that prevents a speaker from speaking at all is not derived from the basis on which the license was purportedly denied, but is the unlawful stifling of speech that results. Thus, there are no relevant differences between the fundraisers in Riley and the petitioners here, and, in the interest of protecting speech, the burdens of initiating judicial proceedings and of proof must be borne by the city. Pp. 611–613.

O'CONNOR, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I and IV, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and WHITE, STEVENS, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined, the opinion of the Court with respect to Part III, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and WHITE, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined, and an opinion with respect to Part II, in which STEVENS and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which MARSHALL and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. 611. WHITE, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., joined, post, p. 614. STEVENS, J., post, p. 617, and SCALIA, J., post, p. 617, filed opinions concurring in part and dissenting in part.

Attorneys and Law Firms

John H. Weston argued the cause for petitioners in all cases. With him on the briefs for petitioners in No. 87-2051 were G. Randall Garrou, Cathy E. Crosson, and Richard L. Wilson. Arthur M. Schwartz filed briefs for petitioners in No. 87-2012. Frank P. Hernandez filed a brief for petitioners in No. 88-49.

Analeslie Muncy argued the cause for respondents in all cases. With her on the brief were Kenneth C. Dippel and Thomas P. Brandt.†

† Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the American Booksellers Association, Inc., et al. by Michael A. Bamberger; and for PHE, Inc., by Bruce J. Ennis, Jr., and Mark D. Schneider.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Family Association, Inc., by Peggy M. Coleman; for the Children's Legal Foundation by Alan E. Sears; for the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers by William I. Thornton, Jr., Frank B. Gummey III, and William H. Taube; and for the U. S. Conference of Mayors et al by Benna Ruth Solomon and Peter Buscemi.

Bruce A. Taylor filed a brief for Citizens for Decency Through Law, Inc., as amicus curiae.

Opinion

220 Justice O'CONNOR announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to Parts I, III, and IV, and an opinion with respect to Part II, in which Justice STEVENS and Justice KENNEDY join.

These cases call upon us to decide whether a licensing scheme in a comprehensive city *602 ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses is a prior restraint that fails to provide adequate procedural safeguards as required by Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965). We must also decide whether any petitioner has standing to address the ordinance's civil disability provisions, whether the city has sufficiently justified its requirement that motels renting rooms for fewer than 10 hours be covered by the ordinance, and whether the ordinance impermissibly infringes on the right to freedom of association. As this litigation comes to us, no issue is presented with respect to whether the books, videos, materials, or entertainment available through sexually oriented businesses are obscene pornographic materials.

I

On June 18, 1986, the city council of the city of Dallas unanimously adopted Ordinance No. 19196 regulating sexually oriented businesses, which was aimed at eradicating the secondary effects of crime and urban blight. The ordinance, as amended, defines a "sexually oriented business" as "an adult arcade, adult bookstore or adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motel, adult motion picture theater, adult theater, escort agency, nude model studio, or sexual encounter center." Dallas City Code, ch. 41A, Sexually Oriented Businesses § 41A–2(19) (1986). The ordinance regulates sexually oriented businesses through a scheme incorporating zoning, licensing, 221 and inspections. The ordinance also includes a civil disability provision, which prohibits individuals convicted of certain crimes from obtaining a license to operate a sexually oriented business for a specified period of years.

Three separate suits were filed challenging the ordinance on numerous grounds and seeking preliminary and permanent injunctive relief as well as declaratory relief. Suits were brought by the following groups of individuals and businesses: those involved in selling, exhibiting, or distributing publications or video or motion picture films; adult cabarets or establishments providing live nude dancing or films, motion pictures, videocassettes, slides, or other photographic reproductions depicting sexual activities and anatomy specified in the ordinance; and adult motel owners. Following expedited discovery, petitioners' constitutional claims were resolved through cross-motions for summary judgment. After a hearing, the District Court upheld the bulk of the ordinance, striking only four subsections. See Dumas v. Dallas, 648 F.Supp. 1061 (ND Tex.1986). The District Court struck two subsections, §§ 41A–5(a)(8) and 41A–5(c), on the ground that they vested overbroad discretion in the chief of police, contrary to our holding in Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 150–151, 89 S.Ct. 935, 938–939, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969). See 648 F.Supp., at 1072–1073. The District Court also struck the provision that imposed a civil disability merely on the basis of an indictment or information, reasoning that there were less restrictive alternatives to achieve the city's goals. See id., at 1075 (citing United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968)). Finally, the District Court held that five enumerated crimes from the list of those creating civil disability were unconstitutional because they were not sufficiently related to the purpose of the ordinance. See 648 F.Supp., at 1074 (striking bribery, robbery, kidnaping, organized criminal activity, and violations of controlled substances Acts). The city of Dallas subsequently 222 amended the ordinance in conformity with the District Court's judgment.

The Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit affirmed. 837 F.2d 1298 (1988). Viewing the ordinance as a content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation under Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), the Court of Appeals upheld the ordinance against petitioners' facial attack on the ground that it is " 'designed to serve a substantial government interest' " and allowed for " 'reasonable alternative avenues of communication.' " *603 837 F.2d, at 1303 (quoting Renton, supra, at 47, 106 S.Ct., at 928). The Court of Appeals further concluded that the licensing scheme's failure to provide the procedural safeguards set forth in Freedman v. Maryland, supra, withstood constitutional challenge, because such procedures are less important when regulating "the conduct of an ongoing commercial enterprise." 837 F.2d, at 1303.

Additionally, the Court of Appeals upheld the provision of the ordinance providing that motel owners renting rooms for fewer than 10 hours were "adult motel owners" and, as such, were required to obtain a license under the ordinance. See §§ 41A–2(4), 41A–18. The motel owners attacked the provision on the ground that the city had made no finding that adult motels engendered the evils the city was attempting to redress. The Court of Appeals concluded that the 10–hour limitation was based on the reasonable supposition that short rental periods facilitate prostitution, one of the secondary effects the city was attempting to remedy. See 837 F.2d, at 1304.

Finally, the Court of Appeals upheld the civil disability provisions, as modified by the District Court, on the ground that the relationship between "the offense and the evil to be regulated is direct and substantial." Id., at 1305.

We granted petitioners' application for a stay of the mandate except for the holding that the provisions of the ordinance regulating the location of sexually oriented businesses do not violate the 223 Federal Constitution, 485 U.S. 1042, 108 S.Ct. 1605, 99 L.Ed.2d 919 (1988), and granted certiorari, 489 U.S. 1051, 109 S.Ct. 1309, 103 L.Ed.2d 578 (1989). We now reverse in part and affirm in part.

II

We granted certiorari on the issue whether the licensing scheme is an unconstitutional prior restraint that fails to provide adequate procedural safeguards as required by Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965). Petitioners involved in the adult entertainment industry and adult cabarets argue that the licensing scheme fails to set a time limit within which the licensing authority must issue a license and, therefore, creates the likelihood of arbitrary denials and the concomitant suppression of speech. Because we conclude that the city's licensing scheme lacks adequate procedural safeguards, we do not reach the issue decided by the Court of Appeals whether the ordinance is properly viewed as a content-neutral time, place, and manner restriction aimed at secondary effects arising out of the sexually oriented businesses. Cf. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 562, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 1248, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975).

A

[1] [2] We note at the outset that petitioners raise a facial challenge to the licensing scheme. Although facial challenges to legislation are generally disfavored, they have been permitted in the First Amendment context where the licensing scheme vests unbridled discretion in the decisionmaker and where the regulation is challenged as overbroad. See City Council of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 798, and n. 15, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 2125 n. 15, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984). In Freedman, we held that the failure to place limitations on the time within which a censorship board decisionmaker must make a determination of obscenity is a species of unbridled discretion. See Freedman, supra, 380 U.S., at 56–57, 85 S.Ct., at 737–738 (failure to confine time within which censor must make decision "contains the same vice as a statute delegating excessive administrative discretion"). Thus, where a scheme creates a "[r]isk of delay," 380 U.S., at 55, 85 S.Ct., at 737, 224 such that "every application of the statute create[s] an impermissible risk of suppression of ideas," Taxpayers for Vincent, supra, 466 U.S., at 798, n. 15, 104 S.Ct. at 2125 n. *604 15, we have permitted parties to bring facial challenges.

The businesses regulated by the city's licensing scheme include adult arcades (defined as places in which motion pictures are shown to five or fewer individuals at a time, see § 41A–2(1)), adult bookstores or adult video stores, adult cabarets, adult motels, adult motion picture theaters, adult theaters, escort agencies, nude model studios, and sexual encounter centers, §§ 41A–2(19) and 41A–3. Although the ordinance applies to some businesses that apparently are not protected by the First Amendment, e.g., escort agencies and sexual encounter centers, it largely targets businesses purveying sexually explicit speech which the city concedes for purposes of these cases are protected by the First Amendment. Cf. Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 150, 80 S.Ct. 215, 217, 4 L.Ed.2d 205 (1959) (bookstores); Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, supra (live theater performances); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (motion picture theaters); Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) (nude dancing). As Justice SCALIA acknowledges, post, at 624, the city does not argue that the businesses targeted are engaged in purveying obscenity which is unprotected by the First Amendment. See Brief for Respondents 19, 20, and n. 8 ("[T]he city is not arguing that the ordinance does not raise First Amendment concerns.... [T]he right to sell this material is a constitutionally protected right ...”). See also Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 23–24, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973). Nor does the city rely upon Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31 (1966), or contend that those businesses governed by the ordinance are engaged in pandering. It is this Court's practice to decline to review those issues neither pressed nor passed upon below. See Youakim v. Miller, 425 U.S. 231, 234, 96 S.Ct. 1399, 1401–02, 47 L.Ed.2d 701 (1976) (per curiam).

225 The city asserted at oral argument that it requires every business—without regard to whether it engages in First Amendment-protected speech—to obtain a certificate of occupancy when it moves into a new location or the use of the structure changes. Tr. of Oral Arg. 49; see also App. 42, Dallas City Code § 51–1.104 (1988) (certificate of occupancy required where there is new construction or before occupancy if there is a change in use). Under the challenged ordinance, however, inspections are required for sexually oriented businesses whether or not the business has moved into a new structure and whether or not the use of the structure has changed. Therefore, even assuming the correctness of the city's representation of its “general” inspection scheme, the scheme involved here is more onerous with respect to sexually oriented businesses than with respect to the vast majority of other businesses. For example, inspections are required whenever ownership of a sexually oriented business changes, and when the business applies for the annual renewal of its permit. We, therefore, hold, as a threshold matter, that petitioners may raise a facial challenge to the licensing scheme, and that as the suit comes to us, the businesses challenging the scheme have a valid First Amendment interest.

B

[3] While “[p]rior restraints are not unconstitutional per se ... [a]ny system of prior restraint ... comes to this Court bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity.” Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, supra, 420 U.S., at 558, 95 S.Ct., at 1246. See, e.g., Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, 451–452, 58 S.Ct. 666, 668–669, 82 L.Ed. 949 (1938); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 306–307, 60 S.Ct. 900, 904–905, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940); Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 574–575, 61 S.Ct. 762, 765, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941); Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S., at 150–151, 89 S.Ct., at 938–939. Our cases addressing prior restraints have identified two evils that will not be tolerated *605 in such schemes. First, a scheme that places “unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency constitutes a prior restraint 226 and may result in censorship.” Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 757, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 2143, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988). See Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 92 L.Ed. 1574 (1948); Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 328, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951); Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290, 71 S.Ct. 312, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951); Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 78 S.Ct. 277, 2 L.Ed.2d 302 (1958); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 85 S.Ct. 453, 13 L.Ed.2d 471 (1965); Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, supra; Secretary of State of Maryland v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 81 L.Ed.2d 786 (1984). “ ‘It is settled by a long line of recent decisions of this Court that an ordinance which ... makes the peaceful enjoyment of freedoms which the Constitution guarantees contingent upon the uncontrolled will of an official—as by requiring a permit or license which may be granted or withheld in the discretion of such official—is an unconstitutional censorship or prior restraint upon the enjoyment of those freedoms.’ ” Shuttlesworth, supra, 394 U.S., at 151, 89 S.Ct., at 938–39 (quoting Staub, supra, 355 U.S., at 322, 78 S.Ct. at 282).

Second, a prior restraint that fails to place limits on the time within which the decisionmaker must issue the license is impermissible. Freedman, supra, 380 U.S., at 59, 85 S.Ct., at 739; Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 316, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 1161–62, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980) (striking statute on ground that it restrained speech for an “indefinite duration”). In Freedman, we addressed a motion picture censorship system that failed to provide for adequate procedural safeguards to ensure against unlimited suppression of constitutionally protected speech. 380 U.S., at 57, 85 S.Ct., at 738. Like a censorship system, a licensing scheme creates the possibility that constitutionally protected speech will be suppressed where there are inadequate procedural safeguards to ensure prompt issuance of the license. In Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988), this Court held that a licensing scheme failing to provide for definite limitations on the time within which the licensor must issue the license was constitutionally unsound, because the "delay compel[led] the speaker's silence." Id., at 802, 108 S.Ct., at 2680. The failure to confine the time within which the licensor must make a decision "contains the same vice as a statute delegating 227 excessive administrative discretion," Freedman, supra, 380 U.S., at 56–57, 85 S.Ct., at 737–738. Where the licensor has unlimited time within which to issue a license, the risk of arbitrary suppression is as great as the provision of unbridled discretion. A scheme that fails to set reasonable time limits on the decisionmaker creates the risk of indefinitely suppressing permissible speech.

Although the ordinance states that the "chief of police shall approve the issuance of a license by the assessor and collector of taxes to an applicant within 30 days after receipt of an application," the license may not issue if the "premises to be used for the sexually oriented business have not been approved by the health department, fire department, and the building official as being in compliance with applicable laws and ordinances." § 41A–5(a)(6). Moreover, the ordinance does not set a time limit within which the inspections must occur. The ordinance provides no means by which an applicant may ensure that the business is inspected within the 30–day time period within which the license is purportedly to be issued if approved. The city asserted at oral argument that when applicants apply for licenses, they are given the telephone numbers of the various inspection agencies so that they may contact them. Tr. of Oral Arg. 48. That measure, obviously, does not place any limits *606 on the time within which the city will inspect the business and thereby make the business eligible for the sexually oriented business license. Thus, the city's regulatory scheme allows indefinite postponement of the issuance of a license.

In Freedman, we determined that the following three procedural safeguards were necessary to ensure expeditious decisionmaking by the motion picture censorship board: (1) any restraint prior to judicial review can be imposed only for a specified brief period during which the status quo must be maintained; (2) expeditious judicial review of that decision must be available; and (3) the censor must bear the burden of going to court to suppress the speech and must bear the burden of proof once in court. Freedman, supra, at 58–60, 85 S.Ct., at 738–740. 228 Although we struck the licensing provision in Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N.C., Inc., supra, on the ground that it did not provide adequate procedural safeguards, we did not address the proper scope of procedural safeguards with respect to a licensing scheme. Because the licensing scheme at issue in these cases does not present the grave "dangers of a censorship system," Freedman, supra, at 58, 85 S.Ct., at 738–39, we conclude that the full procedural protections set forth in Freedman are not required.

The core policy underlying Freedman is that the license for a First Amendment-protected business must be issued within a reasonable period of time, because undue delay results in the unconstitutional suppression of protected speech. Thus, the first two safeguards are essential: the licensor must make the decision whether to issue the license within a specified and reasonable time period during which the status quo is maintained, and there must be the possibility of prompt judicial review in the event that the license is erroneously denied. See Freedman, supra, at 51, 85 S.Ct., at 734. See also Shuttlesworth, 394 U.S., at 155, n. 4, 89 S.Ct., at 941, n. 4 (content-neutral time, place, and manner regulation must provide for "expeditious judicial review"); National Socialist Party of America v. Skokie, 432 U.S. 43, 97 S.Ct. 2205, 53 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977).

The Court in Freedman also required the censor to go to court and to bear the burden in court of justifying the denial.

> "Without these safeguards, it may prove too burdensome to seek review of the censor's determination. Particularly in the case of motion pictures, it may take very little to deter exhibition in a given locality. The exhibitor's stake in any one picture may be insufficient to warrant a protracted and onerous course of litigation. The distributor, on the other hand, may be equally unwilling to accept the burdens and delays of litigation in a particular area when, without such difficulties, he can freely exhibit his film in most of the rest of the country...." 380 U.S., at 59, 85 S.Ct., at 739.

229 Moreover, a censorship system creates special concerns for the protection of speech, because "the risks of freewheeling censorship are formidable." Southeastern Promotions, 420 U.S., at 559, 95 S.Ct., at 1246–47.

As discussed supra, the Dallas scheme does not provide for an effective limitation on the time within which the licensor's decision must be made. It also fails to provide an avenue for prompt judicial review so as to minimize suppression of the speech in the event of a license denial. We therefore hold that the failure to provide these essential safeguards renders the ordinance's licensing requirement unconstitutional insofar as it is enforced against those businesses engaged in First Amendment activity, as determined by the court on remand.

The Court also required in Freedman that the censor bear the burden of going to court in order to suppress the speech and the burden of proof once in court. The licensing scheme we examine today is significantly different from the censorship scheme examined in Freedman. In Freedman, the censor engaged in direct censorship of particular expressive *607 material. Under our First Amendment jurisprudence, such regulation of speech is presumptively invalid and, therefore, the censor in Freedman was required to carry the burden of going to court if the speech was to be suppressed and of justifying its decision once in court. Under the Dallas ordinance, the city does not exercise discretion by passing judgment on the content of any protected speech. Rather, the city reviews the general qualifications of each license applicant, a ministerial action that is not presumptively invalid. The Court in Freedman also placed the burdens on the censor, because otherwise the motion picture distributor was likely to be deterred from challenging the decision to suppress the speech and, therefore, the censor's decision to suppress was tantamount to complete suppression of the speech. The license applicants under the Dallas scheme have much more at stake than did the motion picture distributor considered in Freedman, where only one film was censored. Because the 230 license is the key to the applicant's obtaining and maintaining a business, there is every incentive for the applicant to pursue a license denial through court. Because of these differences, we conclude that the First Amendment does not require that the city bear the burden of going to court to effect the denial of a license application or that it bear the burden of proof once in court. Limitation on the time within which the licensor must issue the license as well as the availability of prompt judicial review satisfy the "principle that the freedoms of expression must be ringed about with adequate bulwarks." Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 66, 83 S.Ct. 631, 637, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963).

Finally, we note that § 5 of Ordinance No. 19196 summarily states that "[t]he terms and provisions of this ordinance are severable, and are governed by Section 1–4 of CHAPTER 1 of the Dallas City Code, as amended." We therefore remand to the Court of Appeals for further determination whether and to what extent the licensing scheme is severable. Cf. Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S., at 772, 108 S.Ct., at 2152 (remanding for determination of severability).

III

[4] We do not reach the merits of the adult entertainment and adult cabaret petitioners' challenges to the civil disability provision, § 41A–5(a)(10), and the provision disabling individuals residing with those whose licenses have been denied or revoked, § 41A–5(a)(5), because petitioners have failed to show they have standing to challenge them. See Brief for Petitioners in No. 87–2051, pp. 22–40, 44; Brief for Petitioners in No. 87–2012, pp. 12–20. Neither the District Court nor the Court of Appeals determined whether petitioners had standing to challenge any particular provision of the ordinance. Although neither side raises the issue here, we are required to address the issue even if the courts below have not passed on it, see Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421, 89 S.Ct. 1843, 1848–49, 23 L.Ed.2d 404 (1969), and even if the parties fail to raise the issue before 231 us. The federal courts are under an independent obligation to examine their own jurisdiction, and standing "is perhaps the most important of [the jurisdictional] doctrines." Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750, 104 S.Ct. 3315, 3324, 82 L.Ed.2d 556 (1984).

> "[E]very federal appellate court has a special obligation to 'satisfy itself not only of its own jurisdiction, but also that of the lower courts in a cause under review,' even though the parties are prepared to concede it. Mitchell v. Maurer, 293 U.S. 237, 244 [55 S.Ct. 162, 165, 79 L.Ed. 338] (1934). See Juidice v. Vail, 430 U.S. 327, 331–332 [97 S.Ct. 1211, 1215–1216, 51 L.Ed.2d 376] (1977) (standing). 'And if the record discloses that the lower court was without jurisdiction this court will notice the defect, although the parties make no contention concerning it.' " *608 Bender v. Williamsport Area School Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 541, 106 S.Ct. 1326, 1331, 89 L.Ed.2d 501 (1986).

[5] [6] It is a long-settled principle that standing cannot be "inferred argumentatively from averments in the pleadings," Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 U.S. 278, 284, 3 S.Ct. 207, 210, 27 L.Ed. 932 (1883), but rather "must affirmatively appear in the record." Mansfield C. & L.M.R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 382, 4 S.Ct. 510, 511, 28 L.Ed. 462 (1884). See King Bridge Co. v. Otoe County, 120 U.S. 225, 226, 7 S.Ct. 552, 552, 30 L.Ed. 623 (1887) (facts supporting Article III jurisdiction must "appea[r] affirmatively from the record"). And it is the burden of the "party who seeks the exercise of jurisdiction in his favor," McNutt v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 298 U.S. 178, 189, 56 S.Ct. 780, 785, 80 L.Ed. 1135 (1936), "clearly to allege facts demonstrating that he is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 518, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2215, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975). Thus, petitioners in this case must "allege ... facts essential to show jurisdiction. If [they] fai[l] to make the necessary allegations, [they have] no standing." McNutt, supra, 298 U.S., at 189, 56 S.Ct., at 785.

The ordinance challenged here prohibits the issuance of a license to an applicant who has resided with an individual whose license application has been denied or revoked within 232 the preceding 12 months.[1] The ordinance also has a civil disability provision, which disables those who have been convicted of certain enumerated crimes as well as those whose spouses have been convicted of the same enumerated crimes. This civil disability lasts for two years in the case of misdemeanor convictions and five years in the case of conviction of a felony or of more than two misdemeanors within a 24–month period.[2] Thus, under the amended ordinance, *609 once the disability 233 period has elapsed, the applicant may not be denied a license on the ground of a former conviction.

1 Section 41A–5(a)(5) provides as follows: "The chief of police shall approve the issuance of a license ... unless he finds [that] ... [a]n applicant is residing with a person who has been denied a license by the city to operate a sexually oriented business within the preceding 12 months, or residing with a person whose license to operate a sexually oriented business has been revoked within the preceding 12 months."

2 Sections 41A–5(a)(10), (b), and (c), as amended, provide as follows:
"The chief of police shall approve the issuance of a license ... unless he finds [that] ...
"(10) An applicant or an applicant's spouse has been convicted of a crime:
"(A) involving:
"(i) any of the following offenses as described in Chapter 43 of the Texas Penal Code:
"(aa) prostitution;
"(bb) promotion of prostitution;
"(cc) aggravated promotion of prostitution;
"(dd) compelling prostitution;
"(ee) obscenity;
"(ff) sale, distribution, or display of harmful material to minor;
"(gg) sexual performance by a child;
"(hh) possession of child pornography;
"(ii) any of the following offenses as described in Chapter 21 of the Texas Penal Code:
"(aa) public lewdness;
"(bb) indecent exposure;
"(cc) indecency with a child;
"(iii) sexual assault or aggravated sexual assault as described in Chapter 22 of the Texas Penal Code;
"(iv) incest, solicitation of a child, or harboring a runaway child as described in Chapter 25 of the Texas Penal Code; or
"(v) criminal attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation to commit any of the foregoing offenses;
"(B) for which:
"(i) less than two years have elapsed since the date of conviction or the date of release from confinement imposed for the conviction, whichever is the later date, if the conviction is of a misdemeanor offense;
"(ii) less than five years have elapsed since the date of conviction or the date of release from confinement for the conviction, whichever is the later date, if the conviction is of a felony offense; or
"(iii) less than five years have elapsed since the date of the last conviction or the date of release from confinement for the last conviction, whichever is the later date, if the convictions are of two or more misdemeanor offenses or combination of misdemeanor offenses occurring within any 24–month period.
"(b) The fact that a conviction is being appealed shall have no effect on the disqualification of the applicant or applicant's spouse.
"(c) An applicant who has been convicted or whose spouse has been convicted of an offense listed in Subsection (a)(10) may qualify for a sexually oriented business license only when the time period required by Section 41A–5(a)(10)(B) has elapsed."

[7] [8] Examination of the record here reveals that no party has standing to challenge the provision involving those residing with individuals whose licenses were denied or revoked. Nor does any party have standing to challenge the civil disability provision disabling applicants who were either convicted of the specified offenses or whose spouses were convicted.

First, the record does not reveal that any party before us was living with an individual whose license application was denied or whose license was revoked. Therefore, no party has standing with respect to § 41A–5(a)(5). Second, § 41A–5(a)(10) applies to applicants whose spouses have been convicted of any of the enumerated crimes, but the record reveals only one individual who could be disabled under this provision. An individual, who had been convicted under the Texas Controlled Substances Act, asserts that his wife was interested in opening a sexually oriented business. But the wife, although an officer of petitioner Bi–Ti Enterprises, Inc., 234 is not an applicant for a license or a party to this action. See 12 Record, Evert Affidavit 3–6. Cf. Bender, 475 U.S., at 548, and n. 9, 106 S.Ct., at 1335, and n. 9.

Even if the wife did have standing, her claim would now be moot. Her husband's convictions under the Texas Controlled Substances Act would not now disable her from obtaining a license to operate a sexually oriented business, because the city council, following the District Court's decision, deleted the provision disabling those with convictions under the Texas Controlled Substances Act or Dangerous Drugs Act. App.H. to Pet. for Cert. in No. 87–2012, p. 107. See Hall v. Beals, 396 U.S. 45, 48, 90 S.Ct. 200, 201–02, 24 L.Ed.2d 214 (1969).

[9] Finally, the record does not reveal any party who has standing to challenge the provision disabling an applicant who was convicted of any of the enumerated crimes. To establish standing to challenge that provision the individual must show both (1) a conviction of one or more of the enumerated crimes, and (2) that the conviction or release from confinement occurred recently enough to disable the applicant under the ordinance. See §§ 41A–5(a)(10)(A), (B). If the disability period has elapsed, the applicant is not deprived of the possibility of obtaining a license and, therefore, cannot be injured by the provision.

The only party who could plausibly claim to have standing to challenge this provision is Bill Staten, who stated in an affidavit that he had been "convicted of three misdemeanor obscenity violations within a twenty-four month period." 7 Record, Staten Affidavit 2. That clearly satisfies the first requirement. Under the ordinance, any person convicted of two or more misdemeanors "within any 24–month period," must wait five years following the last conviction or release from confinement, whichever is later, before a license may be issued. See § 41A–5(a)(10)(B)(iii). But Staten failed to state when he had been convicted of the last misdemeanor or the date of release from confinement and, thus, has failed "clearly to allege facts demonstrating that he is a proper 235 party" to challenge the civil disability provisions. No other petitioner has alleged facts to establish standing, and the District Court made no factual findings that could support standing. Accordingly, we conclude that the petitioners lack standing to challenge the provisions. See Warth, 422 U.S., at 518, 95 S.Ct., at 2215.

[10] [11] At oral argument, the city's attorney responded as follows when asked whether there was standing to challenge the civil disability provisions: "I believe that there are one or two of the Petitioners that have had their licenses denied based on criminal conviction." Tr. of Oral Arg. 32. See also Foster Affidavit 1 (affidavit filed by the city in its Response to Petitioner's Application for Recall and Stay of the Mandate stating that two licenses were revoked on the *610 grounds of a prior conviction since the ordinance went into effect but failing to identify the licensees). We do not rely on the city's representations at argument as "the necessary factual predicate may not be gleaned from the briefs and arguments themselves," Bender, supra, 475 U.S., at 547, 106 S.Ct., at 1334. And we may not rely on the city's affidavit, because it is evidence first introduced to this Court and "is not in the record of the proceedings below," Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, n. 16, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 1608, n. 16, 26 L.Ed.2d 142 (1970). Even if we could take into account the facts as alleged in the city's affidavit, it fails to identify the individuals whose licenses were revoked and, therefore, falls short of establishing that any petitioner before this Court has had a license revoked under the civil disability provisions.

Because we conclude that no petitioner has shown standing to challenge either the civil disability provisions or the provisions involving those who live with individuals whose licenses have been denied or revoked, we conclude that the courts below lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate petitioners' claims with respect to those provisions. We accordingly vacate the judgment of the Court of Appeals with respect to those provisions with directions to dismiss that portion of the action. See Bender, supra, 475 U.S. at [3] Petitioners also raise a variety of other First Amendment challenges to the ordinance's licensing scheme. In light of our conclusion that the licensing requirement is unconstitutional because it lacks essential procedural safeguards and that no petitioner has standing to challenge the residency or civil disability provisions, we do not reach those questions.

549, 106 S.Ct., at 1335 (vacating judgment below on 236 ground of lack of standing); McNutt, 298 U.S., at 190, 56 S.Ct., at 785 (same). [3]

IV

The motel owner petitioners challenge two aspects of the ordinance's requirement that motels that rent rooms for fewer than 10 hours are sexually oriented businesses and are, therefore, regulated under the ordinance. See § 41A–18(a). First, they contend that the city had an insufficient factual basis on which to conclude that rental of motel rooms for fewer than 10 hours produced adverse impacts. Second, they contend that the ordinance violates privacy rights, especially the right to intimate association.

[12] With respect to the first contention, the motel owners assert that the city has violated the Due Process Clause by failing to produce adequate support for its supposition that renting rooms for less than 10 hours results in increased crime or other secondary effects. They contend that the council had before it only a 1977 study by the city of Los Angeles that considered cursorily the effect of adult motels on surrounding neighborhoods. See Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment, Vol. 2, Exh. 11. The Court of Appeals thought it reasonable to believe that shorter rental time periods indicate that the motels foster prostitution and that this type of criminal activity is what the ordinance seeks to suppress. See 837 F.2d, at 1304. Therefore, no more extensive studies were required than those already available. We agree with the Court of Appeals that the reasonableness of the legislative judgment, combined with the Los Angeles study, is adequate to support the city's determination that motels permitting room rentals for fewer than 10 hours should be included within the licensing scheme.

237 [13] The motel owners also assert that the 10–hour limitation on the rental of motel rooms places an unconstitutional burden on the right to freedom of association recognized in Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 618, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 3250, 82 L.Ed.2d 462 (1984) ("Bill of Rights ... must afford the formation and preservation of certain kinds of highly personal relationships"). The city does not challenge the motel owners' standing to raise the issue whether the associational rights of their motel patrons have been violated. There can be little question that the motel owners have "a live controversy *611 against enforcement of the statute" and, therefore, that they have Art. III standing. Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 192, 97 S.Ct. 451, 454, 50 L.Ed.2d 397 (1976). It is not clear, however, whether they have prudential, jus tertii standing to challenge the ordinance on the ground that the ordinance infringes the associational rights of their motel patrons. Id., at 193, 97 S.Ct., at 454–55. But even if the motel owners have such standing, we do not believe that limiting motel room rentals to 10 hours will have any discernible effect on the sorts of traditional personal bonds to which we referred in Roberts. Any "personal bonds" that are formed from the use of a motel room for fewer than 10 hours are not those that have "played a critical role in the culture and traditions of the Nation by cultivating and transmitting shared ideals and beliefs." 468 U.S., at 618–619, 104 S.Ct., at 3249–3250. We therefore reject the motel owners' challenge to the ordinance.

Finally, the motel owners challenge the regulations on the ground that they violate the constitutional right "to be let alone," Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478, 48 S.Ct. 564, 572, 72 L.Ed. 944 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting), and that the ordinance infringes the motel owners' commercial speech rights. Because these issues were not pressed or passed upon below, we decline to consider them. See, e.g., Rogers v. Lodge, 458 U.S. 613, 628, n. 10, 102 S.Ct. 3272, 3281, n. 10, 73 L.Ed.2d 1012 (1982); FTC v. Grolier Inc., 462 U.S. 19, 23, n. 6, 103 S.Ct. 2209, 2212, n. 6, 76 L.Ed.2d 387 (1983).

238 Accordingly, the judgment below is affirmed in part, reversed in part, and vacated in part, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Justice BRENNAN, with whom Justice MARSHALL and Justice BLACKMUN join, concurring in the judgment.

I concur in the judgment invalidating the Dallas licensing provisions, as applied to any First Amendment-protected business, because I agree that the licensing scheme does not provide the procedural safeguards required under our previous cases. [1] I also concur in the judgment upholding the provisions applicable to adult motels, because I agree that the motel owners' claims are meritless. I agree further that it is not necessary to reach petitioners' other First Amendment challenges. I write separately, however, because I believe that our decision two Terms ago in Riley v. National Federation 239 of Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988), mandates application of all three of the procedural safeguards specified in Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), not just two of them, and also to point out that Part III of Justice O'CONNOR's opinion reaches a question not necessary to the decision.

1 Justice SCALIA's opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, purportedly grounded in my opinion in Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31 (1966), does not persuade me otherwise. In Ginzburg, this Court held merely that, in determining whether a given publication was obscene, a court could consider as relevant evidence not only the material itself but also evidence showing the circumstances of its production, sale, and advertising. Id., at 465–466, 86 S.Ct., at 944–945. The opinion concluded: "It is important to stress that this analysis simply elaborates the test by which the obscenity vel non of the material must be judged." Id., at 475, 86 S.Ct., at 950. As Justice O'CONNOR's opinion makes clear, ante at 603–604, there is no "obscenity vel non" question in this case.

What Ginzburg did not do, and what this Court has never done, despite Justice SCALIA's claims, is to abrogate First Amendment protection for an entire category of speech-related businesses. We said in Ginzburg that we perceived "no threat to First Amendment guarantees in thus holding that in close cases evidence of pandering may be probative with respect to the nature of the material in question." 383 U.S., at 474, 86 S.Ct., at 949. History has proved us right, I think, that the decision itself left First Amendment guarantees secure. Justice SCALIA's transmogrification of Ginzburg, however, is far from innocuous.

*612 I

In Freedman v. Maryland, supra, as Justice O'CONNOR notes, we held that three procedural safeguards are needed to "obviate the dangers of a censorship system": (1) any prior restraint in advance of a final judicial determination on the merits must be no longer than that necessary to preserve the status quo pending judicial resolution; (2) a prompt judicial determination must be available; and (3) the would-be censor must bear both the burden of going to court and the burden of proof in court. 380 U.S., at 58–59, 85 S.Ct., at 738–739. Freedman struck down a statute that required motion picture houses to submit films for prior approval, without providing any of these protections. Similar cases followed, e.g., Teitel Film Corp. v. Cusack, 390 U.S. 139, 88 S.Ct. 754, 19 L.Ed.2d 966 (1968) (invalidating another motion picture censorship ordinance for failure to provide adequate Freedman procedures); Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410, 91 S.Ct. 423, 27 L.Ed.2d 498 (1971) (invalidating postal rules permitting restrictions on the use of the mails for allegedly obscene materials because the rules lacked Freedman safeguards); Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975) (finding unconstitutional a city's refusal to rent municipal facilities for a musical because of its content, absent Freedman procedures).

We have never suggested that our insistence on Freedman procedures might vary with the particular facts of the prior restraint before us. To the contrary, this Court has continued to require Freedman procedures in a wide variety of contexts. In National Socialist Party of America v. Skokie, 432 U.S. 43, 97 S.Ct. 2205, 53 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977), we held that even a court-ordered injunction must be stayed if appellate review is not expedited. 240 Id., at 44, 97 S.Ct., at 2206. And in Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980), we held that a general public nuisance statute could not be applied to enjoin a motion picture theater's future exhibition of films for a year, based on a presumption that such films would be obscene merely because prior films had been, when such a determination could be constitutionally made only in accordance with Freedman procedures. 445 U.S., at 317, 100 S.Ct., at 1162.

Two Terms ago, in Riley, this Court applied Freedman to a professional licensing scheme because the professionals involved, charity fundraisers, were engaged in First Amendment-protected activity. We held that, even if North Carolina's interest in licensing fundraisers was sufficient to justify such a regulation, it "must provide that the licensor 'will, within a specified brief period, either issue a license or go to court.' " 487 U.S., at 802, 108 S.Ct., at 2680, quoting and applying Freedman, supra, 380 U.S., at 59, 85 S.Ct., at 739. The North Carolina statute did not so provide, and we struck it down. 487 U.S., at 802, 108 S.Ct., at 2681.

In Riley, this Court, to be sure, discussed the failure of the North Carolina statute to set a time limit for actions on license applications, but it also held that the licensor must be required to go to court, not the would-be fundraiser. Because I see no relevant difference between the fundraisers in Riley and the bookstores and motion picture theaters in these cases, I would hold that the city of Dallas must bear the burden of going to court and proving its case before it may permissibly deny licenses to First Amendment-protected businesses.

Justice O'CONNOR bases her disinclination to require the third Freedman procedure on two grounds: the Dallas licensing scheme does not involve an administrator's passing judgment on whether the content of particular speech is protected or not; and the Dallas scheme licenses entire businesses, not just individual films. Justice O'CONNOR finds the first distinction significant on the theory that our jurisprudence holds only that suppression of speech on the ostensible ground of 241 content is presumptively invalid. She finds the second significant because it anticipates that applicants with an entire *613 business at stake will pursue their interests in court rather than abandon them.

While Justice O'CONNOR is certainly correct that these aspects distinguish the facts before us from those in Freedman, neither ground distinguishes these cases from Riley. The licensor in Riley was not required to distinguish between protected and unprotected speech. He was reviewing applications to practice a particular profession, just as the city of Dallas is acting on applications to operate particular businesses. Similarly, the fundraisers in Riley had their entire livelihoods at stake, just as the bookstores and others subject to the Dallas ordinance. Nonetheless, this Court placed the burden of going to court on the State, not the applicant.[2] 487 U.S., at 802, 108 S.Ct. at 2680.

2 Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980), also involved censorship that threatened proprietors' entire businesses, rather than single films. This Court, notwithstanding, affirmed the Court of Appeals which had held that the statute was unconstitutional because it lacked the procedural safeguards required under Freedman. 445 U.S., at 314, 317, 100 S.Ct., at 1162.

Moreover, I believe Riley was rightly decided for the same reasons that the limitation set forth in Justice O'CONNOR's opinion is wrong. The danger posed by a license that prevents a speaker from speaking at all is not derived from the basis on which that license was purportedly denied. The danger posed is the unlawful stifling of speech that results. As we said in Freedman, it is "the transcendent value of speech" that places the burden of persuasion on the State. 380 U.S., at 58, 85 S.Ct., at 738–739. The heavy presumption against prior restraints requires no less. Justice O'CONNOR does not, nor could she, contend that those administering this ordinance will always act according to their own law. Mistakes are inevitable; abuse is possible. In distributing the burdens of initiating judicial proceedings and proof, we are obliged 242 to place them such that we err, if we must, on the side of speech, not on the side of silence.

II

In Part III of the opinion, Justice O'CONNOR considers at some length whether petitioners have made an adequate showing of standing to bring their claims against the cohabitation and civil disability provisions of the licensing scheme. Were it of some precedential value, I would question this Court's reversal of the findings of both the District Court and the Court of Appeals[3] that petitioners had standing to bring their claims, where the basis for reversal is an affidavit that is at worst merely ambiguous. But because the discussion is wholly extraneous to the actual holding in this case, I write only to clarify that Part III is unnecessary to the decision and is pure dictum.

3 Both the District Court and the Fifth Circuit, after finding that plaintiffs had standing to challenge the ordinance, reached the civil disability question. See 837 F.2d 1298, 1301, 1304–1305 (1988); Dumas v. Dallas, 648 F.Supp. 1061 (ND Tex.1986).

The first claim for which the Court fails to find a petitioner with standing—an unspecified objection to the provision denying a license to any applicant residing with someone whose own application has been denied or revoked within the past year—is not directly presented by the parties, was not reached by the court below, and is not among the questions on which certiorari was granted. The second claim for which the Court fails to find a petitioner with standing—petitioners' objection to the ordinance's civil disability provisions—is clearly before this Court, but consideration of this claim is rendered redundant by Justice O'CONNOR's holding in Part II.

The civil disability claim is an objection to that part of the licensing scheme which provides for denial or revocation of a license because of prior criminal convictions, on the *614 ground 243 that these provisions "impose an impermissible prior restraint upon protected expression." Brief for Petitioners FW/PBS, Inc., et al. 12.[4] Because the challenge is based solely on the First Amendment, a victory on the merits would benefit only those otherwise regulated businesses which are protected by the First Amendment.

4 Petitioners M.J.R., Inc., et al. phrase the same objection slightly differently. They characterize license denial or revocation based on certain listed prior speech offenses as a "classic prior restraint of the type prohibited as facially unconstitutional under the rule of Near v. Minnesota [ex rel. Olson], 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357 (1931)," and they characterize license denial or revocation based on other listed prior offenses as "prior restraints which cannot withstand strict scrutiny and are therefore invalid under the first amendment." See Brief for Petitioners M.J.R., Inc., et al. 22, 33.

But since the Court invalidates the application of the entire Dallas licensing scheme to any First Amendment-protected business under the Freedman doctrine, it is unnecessary to decide whether some or all of the same provisions are also invalid, as to First Amendment-protected businesses, on other grounds. Justice O'CONNOR recognizes this and wisely declines to reach petitioners' challenge to various requirements under the licensing scheme, other than the civil disability and cohabitation provisions, on the First Amendment ground that the ordinance impermissibly singles out persons and businesses engaged in First Amendment-protected activities for regulation.[5]

5 See Brief for Petitioners FW/PBS, Inc., et al. 21–24.

For reasons unexplained and inexplicable, the opinion separates the prior restraint and singling out claims and accords them different treatment. Perhaps, if the inquiry had reached the merits of the prior restraint claim, one could infer a motive to take the opportunity to offer guidance in an area of the law badly in need of it. But because the inquiry proceeds no further than jurisdiction, no such explanation is available. Whatever the reason for including Part III, it is superfluous.

244 Justice WHITE, with whom the Chief Justice joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I join Parts I, III, and IV of the Court's opinion but do not agree with the conclusion in Part II that the Dallas ordinance must include two of the procedural safeguards set forth in Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), in order to defeat a facial challenge. I would affirm the Fifth Circuit's holding that Freedman is inapplicable to the Dallas scheme.

The Court has often held that when speech and nonspeech elements "are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 1678–79, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). See also Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298–299, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 3071–3072, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 559, 562–564, 85 S.Ct. 476, 479–481, 13 L.Ed.2d 487 (1965); Adderley v. Florida, 385 U.S. 39, 48, n. 7, 87 S.Ct. 242, 247, n. 7, 17 L.Ed.2d 149 (1966). Our cases upholding time, place, and manner restrictions on sexually oriented expressive activity are to the same effect. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976). Time, place, and manner restrictions are not subject to strict scrutiny and are sustainable if they are content neutral, are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest, and do not unreasonably limit alternative means of communication. Renton, supra, 475 U.S., at 47, 106 S.Ct., at 928. See also *615 Heffron v. International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 647–648, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 2563–2564, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981);

Virginia Pharmacy Board v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 771, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 1830, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976). Renton and Young also make clear that there is a substantial governmental interest in regulating sexually oriented businesses because of their likely deleterious effect on the areas surrounding them and that such regulation, although focusing on a limited class of businesses involved in expressive activity, is to be treated as content neutral.

245 Justice O'CONNOR does not suggest that the businesses involved here are immune from the kind of regulation sustained in Young and Renton. Neither is it suggested that the prerequisites for obtaining a license, such as certificates of occupancy and inspections, do not serve the same kind of a substantial governmental interest dealt with in those cases nor that the licensing system fails the test of content neutrality. The ordinance in no way is aimed at regulating what may be sold or offered in the covered businesses. With a license, operators can sell anything but obscene publications. Without one—without satisfying the licensing requirements—they can sell nothing because the city is justified in enforcing the ordinance to avoid the likely unfavorable consequences attending unregulated sexually oriented businesses.

Justice O'CONNOR nevertheless invalidates the licensing provisions for failure to provide some of the procedural requirements that Freedman v. Maryland, supra, imposed in connection with a Maryland law forbidding the exhibition of any film without the approval of a board of censors. There, the board was approving or disapproving every film based on its view of the film's content and its suitability for public viewing. Absent procedural safeguards, the law imposed an unconstitutional prior restraint on exhibitors. As I have said, however, nothing like that is involved here; the predicate identified in Freedman for imposing its procedural requirements is absent in these cases.

Nor is there any other good reason for invoking Freedman. The Dallas ordinance is in many respects analogous to regulations requiring parade or demonstration permits and imposing conditions on such permits. Such regulations have generally been treated as time, place, and manner restrictions and have been upheld if they are content neutral, serve a substantial governmental interest, and leave open alternative avenues of communication. Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 574–576, 61 S.Ct. 762, 765–766, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941); Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, supra, 468 U.S., at 293–298, 104 S.Ct., at 3068–3071. The Dallas scheme regulates 246 who may operate sexually oriented businesses, including those who sell materials entitled to First Amendment protection; but the ordinance does not regulate content and thus it is unlike the content-based prior restraints that this Court has typically scrutinized very closely. See, e.g., Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357 (1931); National Socialist Party of America v. Skokie, 432 U.S. 43, 97 S.Ct. 2205, 53 L.Ed.2d 96 (1977); Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980); Freedman v. Maryland, supra.

Licensing schemes subject to First Amendment scrutiny, however, even though purporting to be time, place, and manner restrictions, have been invalidated when undue discretion has been vested in the licensor. Unbridled discretion with respect to the criteria used in deciding whether or not to grant a license is deemed to convert an otherwise valid law into an unconstitutional prior restraint. Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 150–152, 89 S.Ct. 935, 938–939, 22 L.Ed.2d 162 (1969); Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 757, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 2143, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988); Staub v. City of Baxley, 355 U.S. 313, 78 S.Ct. 277, 2 L.Ed.2d 302 (1958); Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U.S. 268, 71 S.Ct. 328, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951); Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290, 71 S.Ct. 312, 95 L.Ed. 280 (1951);
*616 Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558, 68 S.Ct. 1148, 92 L.Ed. 1574 (1948). That rule reflects settled law with respect to licensing in the First Amendment context. But here there is no basis for invoking Freedman procedures to protect against arbitrary use of the discretion conferred by the ordinance before us. Here, the Court of Appeals specifically held that the ordinance did not vest undue discretion in the licensor because the ordinance provides sufficiently objective standards for the chief of police to apply. 837 F.2d 1298, 1305–1306 (CA5 1988). Justice O'CONNOR's opinion does not disturb this aspect of the Court of Appeals' decision, and because it does not, one arguably tenable reason for invoking Freedman disappears.

Additionally, petitioners' reliance on Riley v. National Federation of Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988), is misplaced. Riley invalidated a licensing requirement for professional fundraisers which prevented them from soliciting 247 prior to obtaining a license, but which permitted nonprofessionals to solicit while their license applications were pending. We there held that a professional fundraiser was a speaker entitled to First Amendment protection and that because "the State's asserted power to license professional fundraisers carries with it (unless properly constrained) the power directly and substantially to affect the speech they utter," id., at 801, 108 S.Ct., at 2670, the requirement was subject to First Amendment scrutiny to make sure that the licensor's discretion was suitably confined. Riley thus appears to be a straightforward application of the "undue-discretion" line of cases. The Court went on to say, however, that even assuming, as North Carolina urged, that the licensing requirement was a time, place, and manner restriction, Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965), required that there be provision for either acting on the license application or going to court within a specified brief period of time.

Contrary to the ordinance in these cases, the Riley licensing requirement was aimed directly at speech. The discretion given the licensors in Riley empowered them to affect the content of the fundraiser's speech, unless that discretion was suitably restrained. In that context, the Court invoked Freedman. That basis for applying Freedman is not present here, for, as I have said, the licensor is not vested with undue discretion.

Neither is there any basis for holding that businesses dealing in expressive materials have been singled out; all sexually oriented businesses—including those not involved in expressive activity such as escort agencies—are covered, and all other businesses must live up to the building codes, as well as fire and health regulations. Furthermore, the Court should not assume that the licensing process will be unduly prolonged or that inspections will be arbitrarily delayed. There is no evidence that this has been the case, or that inspections in other contexts have been delayed or neglected. Between the time of the District Court's judgment and that of the 248 Fifth Circuit, Dallas granted some 147 out of 165 license requests, and none of the petitioners in making this facial challenge to the ordinance asserts that its license application was not promptly dealt with, that it was unable to obtain the required inspections promptly, or that it was unable to secure reasonably prompt review of a denial. Clearly the licensing scheme neither imposes nor results in a ban of any type of adult business.

I see no basis for invalidating this ordinance because it fails to include some prophylactic measures that will guard against highly speculative injuries. As Justice O'CONNOR notes in the course of refusing to apply one of the Freedman procedural mandates, the licensing in these cases is required of sexually oriented businesses, enterprises that will have every incentive to pursue the license applications vigorously. Ante, at 606–607. The ordinance requires that an application be acted on within 30 *617 days. Licensing decisions suspending or revoking a license are immediately appealable to a permit and license appeal board and are stayed pending that appeal. In addition, no one suggests that licensing decisions are not subject to immediate appeal to the courts. As I see it, there is no realistic prospect that the requirement of a license will have anything more than an incidental effect on the sale of protected materials.

Perhaps Justice O'CONNOR is saying that those who deal in expressive materials are entitled to special procedures in the course of complying with otherwise valid, neutral regulations generally applicable to all businesses. I doubt, however, that bookstores or radio or television stations must be given special breaks in the enforcement of general health, building, and fire regulations. If they must, why would not a variety of other kinds of businesses, like supermarkets and convenience stores that sell books and magazines, also be so entitled? I question that there is authority to be found in our cases for such a special privilege.

249 For the foregoing reasons, I respectfully dissent from Part II of Justice O'CONNOR's opinion.

Justice STEVENS, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

As the Court explains in Part III of its opinion, it is not certain that any petitioner has standing to challenge the provisions of the licensing scheme that disqualify applicants who are themselves unqualified or who reside with, or are married to, unqualified persons. Given the breadth of those provisions, the assertions in the Staten and Foster affidavits, and the District Court's understanding of the relevant facts, however, I cannot join the decision to direct dismissal of this portion of the litigation. See ante, at 609–610. I would remand for an evidentiary hearing on the standing issues.

I join Parts I, II, and IV of Justice O'CONNOR's opinion. With respect to Justice SCALIA's proposed resurrection of Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31 (1966), I have this comment. As I explained in my dissenting opinion in Splawn v. California, 431 U.S. 595, 602, 97 S.Ct. 1987, 1991–92, 52 L.Ed.2d 606 (1977), Ginzburg was decided before the Court extended First Amendment protection to commercial speech and cannot withstand our decision in Virginia Pharmacy Bd. v. Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, Inc., 425 U.S. 748, 96 S.Ct. 1817, 48 L.Ed.2d 346 (1976). If conduct or communication is protected by the First Amendment, it cannot lose its protected status by being advertised in a truthful and inoffensive manner. Any other result would be perverse,

> "Signs which identify the 'adult' character of a motion picture theater or of a bookstore convey the message that sexually provocative entertainment is to be found within.... Such signs ... provide a warning to those who find erotic materials offensive that they should shop elsewhere for other kinds of books, magazines, or entertainment. Under any sensible regulatory scheme, truthful description of subject matter that is pleasing to 250 some and offensive to others ought to be encouraged, not punished." 431 U.S., at 604, 97 S.Ct., at 1992.

Justice SCALIA, concurring in part and dissenting in part. I join Part I of the Court's opinion, Part III, holding that there is no standing to challenge certain portions of the Dallas ordinance, and Part IV, sustaining on the merits certain other portions. I dissent from the judgment, however, because I would affirm the Fifth Circuit's holding that the ordinance is constitutional in all respects before us.

I

Since this Court first had occasion to apply the First Amendment to materials treating of sex, some three decades ago, we have been guided by the principle that "sex and obscenity are not synonymous," *618 Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 487, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1310, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957). The former, we have said, the Constitution permits to be described and discussed. The latter is entirely unprotected, and may be allowed or disallowed by States or communities, as the democratic majority desires.

Distinguishing the one from the other has been the problem. Obscenity, in common understanding, is material that "treat[s] sex in a manner appealing to prurient interest," id., at 488, 77 S.Ct., at 1311. But for constitutional purposes we have added other conditions to that definition, out of an abundance of concern that "the standards for judging obscenity safeguard the protection of freedom of speech and press for material which does not treat sex in a manner appealing to prurient interest." Ibid. To begin with, we rejected the approach previously adopted by some courts, which would permit the banning of an entire literary work on the basis of one or several passages that in isolation could be considered obscene. Instead, we said, "the dominant theme of the material taken as a whole " must appeal to prurient interest. Id., at 489, 77 S.Ct., at 1311 (emphasis added). We have gone on to add other conditions, which are reflected in the three-part test pronounced in Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 2615, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973):

> 251 "The basic guidelines for the trier of fact must be: (a) whether 'the average person, applying contemporary community standards' would find that the work, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest ...; (b) whether the work depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by the applicable state law; and (c) whether the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

These standards' immediate purpose and effect—which, it is fair to say, have met with general public acceptance—have been to guarantee the access of all adults to such works of literature, once banned or sought to be banned, as Dreiser's An American Tragedy,[1] Lawrence's Lady Chatterley's Lover,[2] Miller's Tropic of Cancer and Tropic of Capricorn,[3] and Joyce's Ulysses,[4] and to many stage and motion picture productions of genuine dramatic or entertainment value that contain some sexually explicit or even erotic material.

1 Held obscene in Commonwealth v. Friede, 271 Mass. 318, 171 N.E. 472 (1930).

2 Held obscene in People v. Dial Press, Inc., 182 Misc. 416, 48 N.Y.S.2d 480 (N.Y.Magis.Ct.1944).

3 Held obscene in United States v. Two Obscene Books, 99 F.Supp. 760 (ND Cal.1951), aff'd sub nom. Besig v. United States, 208 F.2d 142 (CA9 1953).

4 Unsuccessfully challenged as obscene in United States v. One Book Called "Ulysses," 5 F.Supp. 182 (SDNY 1933), aff'd, 72 F.2d 705 (CA2 1934).

Application of these standards (or, I should say, misapplication of them) has had another effect as well—unintended and most certainly not generally approved. The Dallas ordinance at issue in these cases is not an isolated phenomenon. It is one example of an increasing number of attempts throughout the country, by various means, not to withhold from the public any particular book or performance, but to prevent the erosion of public morality by the increasingly general appearance of what the Dallas ordinance delicately calls "sexually 252 oriented businesses." Such businesses flourish throughout the country as they never did before, not only in New York's Times Square, but in much smaller communities from coast to coast. Indeed, as a case we heard last Term demonstrates, they reach even the smallest of communities via telephonic "dial-a-porn." Sable Communications of California, Inc. v. FCC, 492 U.S. 115, 109 S.Ct. 2829, 106 L.Ed.2d 93 (1989).

While many communities do not object to such businesses, others do, and have sought to eliminate them. Attempts to do so by focusing upon the individual books, motion pictures, or performances that these businesses *619 market are doomed to failure by reason of the very stringency of our obscenity test, designed to avoid any risk of suppressing socially valuable expression. Communities cannot close down "porn-shops" by banning pornography (which, so long as it does not cross the distant line of obscenity, is protected), just as Congress cannot eliminate specialized "dial-a-porn" telephone services by prohibiting individual messages that are "indecent" but not quite obscene. Id., at 131, 109 S.Ct., at 2839. Consequently, communities have resorted to a number of other means, including stringent zoning laws, see e.g., Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (ordinance adopting unusual zoning technique of requiring sexually oriented businesses to be dispersed rather than concentrated); Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986) (ordinance restricting theaters that show "adult" films to locations comprising about 5% of the community's land area, where the Court of Appeals had found no "commercially viable" sites were available), Draconian sanctions for obscenity which make it unwise to flirt with the sale of pornography, see Fort Wayne Books, Inc. v. Indiana, 489 U.S. 46, 109 S.Ct. 916, 103 L.Ed.2d 34 (1989) (state Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) statute), and the ordinance we have before us today, a licensing scheme purportedly designed to assure that porn-shops are run by a better class of person. Not only are these oblique methods less than entirely effective in eliminating the 253 perceived evil at which they are directed (viz., the very existence of sexually oriented businesses anywhere in the community that does not want them), but they perversely render less effective our efforts, through a restrictive definition of obscenity, to prevent the "chilling" of socially valuable speech. State RICO penalties for obscenity, for example, intimidate not just the porn-shop owner, but also the general bookseller who has been the traditional seller of new books such as Ulysses.

It does not seem to me desirable to perpetuate such a regime of prohibition by indirection. I think the means of rendering it unnecessary is available under our precedents and should be applied in the present cases. That means consists of recognizing that a business devoted to the sale of highly explicit sexual material can be found to be engaged in the marketing of obscenity, even though each book or film it sells might, in isolation, be considered merely pornographic and not obscene. It is necessary, to be sure of protecting valuable speech, that we compel all communities to tolerate individual works that have only marginal communicative content beyond raw sexual appeal; it is not necessary that we compel them to tolerate businesses that hold themselves forth as specializing in such material. Because I think that Dallas could constitutionally have proscribed the commercial activities that it chose instead to license, I do not think the details of its licensing scheme had to comply with First Amendment standards.

II

The Dallas ordinance applies to any sexually oriented business, which is defined as "an adult arcade, adult bookstore or adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motel, adult motion picture theater, adult theater, escort agency, nude model studio, or sexual encounter center." Dallas City Code § 41A–2(19) (1986). Operators of escort agencies and sexual encounter centers are not before us.

254 "Adult bookstore or adult video store" is defined, inter alia, as a "commercial establishment which as one of its principal business purposes offers for sale or rental" books or other printed matter, or films or other visual representations, "which depict or describe 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' " § 41A–2(2)(A) (emphasis added).[5] "Adult motion picture theater" *620 is defined as a commercial establishment where films "are regularly shown" that depict specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas. § 41A–2(5) (emphasis added).[6] Other sexually oriented businesses are similarly defined as establishments that "regularly" depict or describe specified sexual activities or specified anatomical areas.[7] "Specified sexual activities" means

5 "Adult Bookstore or Adult Video Store means a commercial establishment which as one of its principal business purposes offers for sale or rental for any form of consideration any one or more of the following:
"(A) books, magazines, periodicals or other printed matter, or photographs, films, motion pictures, video cassettes or video reproductions, slides, or other visual representations which depict or describe 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas'; or
"(B) instruments, devices, or paraphernalia which are designed for use in connection with 'specified sexual activities.' " Dallas City Code §§ 41A–2(2)(A), (B) (1986).
The regulation of businesses that sell the items described in subsection (B) raises no First Amendment question.

6 "Adult Motion Picture Theater means a commercial establishment where, for any form of consideration, films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides, or similar photographic reproductions are regularly shown which are characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' " § 41A–2(5).

7 "(3) Adult Cabaret means a nightclub, bar, restaurant, or similar commercial establishment which regularly features:
"(A) persons who appear in a state of nudity; or
"(B) live performances which are characterized by the exposure of 'specified anatomical areas' or by 'specified sexual activities'; or
"(C) films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides, or other photographic reproductions which are characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' "
. . . . .
"(6) Adult Theater means a theater, concert hall, auditorium, or similar commercial establishment which regularly features persons who appear in a state of nudity or live performances which are characterized by the exposure of 'specified anatomical areas' or by 'specified sexual activities.'
. . . . .
"(12) Nude Model Studio means any place where a person who appears in a state of nudity or displays 'specified anatomical areas' is provided to be observed, sketched, drawn, painted, sculptured, photographed, or similarly depicted by other persons who pay money or any form of consideration.
"(13) Nudity or a State of Nudity means:
"(A) the appearance of a human bare buttock, anus, male genitals, female genitals, or female breast; or
"(B) a state of dress which fails to opaquely cover a human buttock, anus, male genitals, female genitals, or areola of the female breast." § 41A–2.
As to nude model studios, the ordinance further provides as a defense to prosecution that "a person appearing in a state of nudity did so in a modeling class operated:
"(1) by a proprietary school licensed by the state of Texas; a college, junior college, or university supported entirely or partly by taxation;
"(2) by a private college or university which maintains and operates educational programs in which credits are transferrable to a college, junior college, or university supported entirely or partly by taxation; or
"(3) in a structure:
"(A) which has no sign visible from the exterior of the structure and no other advertising that indicates a nude person is available for viewing; and
"(B) where in order to participate in a class a student must enroll at least three days in advance of the class; and
"(C) where no more than one nude model is on the premises at any one time." § 41A–21(d).

255 "(A) the fondling or other erotic touching of human genitals, pubic region, buttocks, anus, or female breasts;

"(B) sex acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including intercourse, oral copulation, or sodomy;

"(C) masturbation, actual or simulated; or

"(D) excretory functions as part of or in connection with any of the activities set forth in (A) through (C) above." § 41A–2(21).

Finally, "specified anatomical areas" means "human genitals in a state of sexual arousal." § 41A–2(20).

256 As I shall discuss in greater detail presently, this ordinance is unusual in that it does not apply "work by work." It can reasonably be interpreted to restrict not sales of (or businesses that sell) any particular book, film, or entertainment, but only businesses *621 that specialize in books, films, or entertainment of a particular type. That places the obscenity inquiry in a different, and broader, context. Our jurisprudence supports the proposition that even though a particular work of pornography is not obscene under Miller, a merchant who concentrates upon the sale of such works is engaged in the business of obscenity, which may be entirely prohibited and hence (a fortiori) licensed as required here.

The dispositive case is Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U.S. 463, 86 S.Ct. 942, 16 L.Ed.2d 31 (1966). There the defendant was convicted of violating the federal obscenity statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1461, by mailing three publications which our opinion assumed, see 383 U.S., at 465–466, 86 S.Ct., at 944–945, were in and of themselves not obscene. We nonetheless upheld the conviction, because the evidence showed "that each of the accused publications was originated or sold as stock in trade of the sordid business of pandering—'the business of purveying textual or graphic matter openly advertised to appeal to the erotic interest of their customers.' " Id., at 467, 86 S.Ct., at 945 (quoting Roth v. United States, 354 U.S., at 495–496, 77 S.Ct., at 1314–1315 (Warren, C.J., concurring)). Justice BRENNAN's opinion for the Court concluded that the advertising for the publications, which "stressed the [ir] sexual candor," 383 U.S., at 468, 86 S.Ct., at 946, "resolve[d] all ambiguity and doubt" as to the unprotected status of the defendants' activities. Id., at 470, 86 S.Ct., at 947.

"The deliberate representation of petitioners' publications as erotically arousing, for example, stimulated the reader to accept them as prurient; he looks for titillation, not for saving intellectual content.... And the circumstances of presentation and dissemination of material are equally relevant to determining whether social importance claimed for material in the courtroom was, in the 257 circumstances, pretense or reality—whether it was the basis upon which it was traded in the marketplace or a spurious claim for litigation purposes. Where the purveyor's sole emphasis is on the sexually provocative aspects of his publications, that fact may be decisive in the determination of obscenity. Certainly in a prosecution which, as here, does not necessarily imply suppression of the materials involved, the fact that they originate or are used as a subject of pandering is relevant to the application of the Roth test." Id., at 470–471, 86 S.Ct., at 947.

We held one of the three publications in question to be, in the circumstances of its sale, obscene, despite the trial court's finding that only 4 of the 15 articles it contained "predominantly appealed to prurient interest and substantially exceeded community standards of candor," id., at 471, 86 S.Ct., at 947; and another to be obscene despite the fact that it previously had been sold by its author to numerous psychiatrists, some of whom testified that they found it useful in their professional practice. We upheld the convictions because the petitioners had "deliberately emphasized the sexually provocative aspects of the work, in order to catch the salaciously disposed." Id., at 472, 86 S.Ct., at 948.

In Memoirs v. Attorney General of Massachusetts, 383 U.S. 413, 86 S.Ct. 975, 16 L.Ed.2d 1 (1966), decided the same day as Ginzburg, we overturned the judgment that a particular book was obscene, but, citing Ginzburg, made clear that this did not mean that all circumstances of its distribution would be constitutionally protected. We said:

"On the premise, which we have no occasion to assess, that Memoirs has the requisite prurient appeal and is patently offensive, but has only a minimum of social value, the circumstances of production, sale, and publicity are relevant in determining whether or not the publication or distribution of the book is constitutionally protected.... In this proceeding, however, the courts were asked to judge the obscenity of Memoirs in the abstract, and 258 the declaration of obscenity was neither *622 aided nor limited by a specific set of circumstances of production, sale, and publicity. All possible uses of the book must therefore be considered, and the mere risk that the book might be exploited by panderers because it so pervasively treats sexual matters cannot alter the fact ... that the book will have redeeming social importance in the hands of those who publish or distribute it on the basis of that value." 383 U.S., at 420–421, 86 S.Ct., at 978–979 (footnote omitted).

Ginzburg was decided before our landmark Miller decision, but we have consistently applied its holding post-Miller. See Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87, 130, 94 S.Ct. 2887, 2914, 41 L.Ed.2d 590 (1974); Splawn v. California, 431 U.S. 595, 597–599, 97 S.Ct. 1987, 1989–1990, 52 L.Ed.2d 606 (1977); Pinkus v. United States, 436 U.S. 293, 303–304, 98 S.Ct. 1808, 1814–1815, 56 L.Ed.2d 293 (1978). Although Ginzburg narrowly involved the question whether particular publications were obscene, the foundation for its holding is that "the sordid business of pandering," Ginzburg, supra, 383 U.S., at 467, 86 S.Ct., at 945, is constitutionally unprotected—that the sale of material "solely to produce sexual arousal ... does not escape regulation because [the material] has been dressed up as speech, or in other contexts might be recognized as speech." 383 U.S., at 474, n. 17, 86 S.Ct., at 949, n. 17. But just as Miller established some objective criteria concerning what particular publications can be regarded as "appealing to the prurient interest," it impliedly established some objective criteria as to what stock-in-trade can be the raw material (so to speak) of pandering. Giving this limitation full scope, it seems to me that Ginzburg, read together with Miller, establishes at least the following: The Constitution does not require a State or municipality to permit a business that intentionally specializes in, and holds itself forth to the public as specializing in, performance or portrayal of sex acts, sexual organs in a state of arousal, or live human nudity. In my view that suffices to sustain the Dallas ordinance.

259 III

In evaluating the Dallas ordinance under the principles I have described, we must of course give it the benefit of any "limiting construction [that] has been or could be placed" on its text. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 613, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2916, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). Moreover, we cannot sustain the present facial attack unless the ordinance is "substantially overbroad," id., at 615, 93 S.Ct., at 2918 (emphasis added), that is, "unless it reaches a substantial number of impermissible applications," New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 771, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 3362, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982), "judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep," Broadrick, supra, 413 U.S., at 615, 93 S.Ct., at 2918.

Favorably construed, the Dallas ordinance regulates only the business of pandering, as I have defined it above. It should be noted, to begin with, that the depictions, descriptions, and displays that cause any of the businesses before us to qualify as a "sexually oriented business" must be sexually explicit in more than a minor degree. What is at issue here is not the sort of nude photograph that might commonly appear on a so-called "pin-up calendar" or "men's magazine." The mere portrayal of the naked human body does not qualify unless (in the definition of adult cabaret, adult theater, and nude model studio) it is featured live. Qualifying depictions and descriptions do not include human genitals, but only human genitals in a state of sexual arousal, the fondling of erogenous zones, and normal or perverted sexual acts.

In addition, in order to qualify for regulation under the ordinance the business that provides such live nudity or such sexually explicit depictions or descriptions must do so "as one of its principal business purposes" (in the case of adult bookstores and adult video stores) or "regularly" (in the case of adult *623 motion picture theaters, adult cabarets, and adult theaters). The adverb "regularly" can mean "constantly, continually, steadily, sustainedly," Roget's International Thesaurus § 135.7, p. 77 (4th ed. 1977), and also "in a ... methodical way," Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1913 (1981). I think it can reasonably be interpreted 260 in the present context to mean a continuous presentation of the sexual material as one of the very objectives of the commercial enterprise. Similarly, the phrase "as one of its principal business purposes" can connote that the material containing the specified depictions and descriptions does not merely account for a substantial proportion of sales volume but is also intentionally marketed as material of that character.

All of the establishments at issue, therefore, share the characteristics that they offer (1) live nudity or hardcore sexual material, (2) as a constant, intentional objective of their business. But there is still more. With the single exception of "adult motion picture theater," the descriptions of all the establishments at issue contain some language that suggests a requirement that the business hold itself forth to the public precisely as a place where sexual stimulation of the described sort can be obtained. Surely it would be permissible to interpret the phrase "as one of its principal business purposes" in the definition of "adult bookstore or adult video store" to require such holding forth. A business can hardly have as a principal purpose a line of commerce it does not even promote. Likewise, the portion of the definitions of "adult cabaret" and "adult theater" which requires that they regularly "feature" the described sexual material suggests that it must not merely be there but must be promoted or marketed as such. The definition of nude model studio, while containing no such requirement, is subject to a defense which contains as one of its elements that the structure where the studio is located "has no sign visible from the exterior of the structure and no other advertising that indicates a nude person is available for viewing." Dallas City Code § 41A–21(d)(3)(A) (1986). Even the definitions of the two categories of enterprises not at issue in this case, "escort agencies" and "sexual encounter centers," contain language that arguably requires a "holding forth" (a "primary business purpose" requirement). Given these indications of the importance of "holding forth" contained 261 in all except one of the definitions, it seems to me very likely—especially if that should be thought necessary to sustain the constitutionality of the measure—that the Dallas ordinance in all its challenged applications would be interpreted to apply only to businesses that not only (1) offer live nudity or hardcore sexual material, (2) as a constant and intentional objective of their business, but also (3) seek to promote it as such. It seems to me that any business that meets these requirements can properly be described as engaged in "the sordid business of pandering," and is not protected by the First Amendment. Indeed, even the first two requirements alone would suffice to sustain the ordinance, since it is most implausible that any enterprise which has as its constant intentional objective the sale of such material does not advertise or promote it as such; if a few such enterprises bent upon commercial failure should exist, they would certainly not be numerous enough to render the ordinance substantially overbroad.

The Dallas ordinance's narrow focus distinguishes these cases from Schad v. Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981), in which we held unconstitutional a municipal ordinance that prohibited all businesses offering live entertainment, including but not limited to nude dancing. That ordinance was substantially overbroad because, on its face, it prohibited "a wide range of expression that has long been held to be within the protections of the First and Fourteenth Amendments." Id., at 65, 101 S.Ct., at 2181. The Dallas ordinance, however, targets only businesses engaged in unprotected activity.

*624 Even if it were possible to conceive of a business that could meet the above-described qualifications and yet be engaged in First Amendment activities rather than pandering, we do not invalidate statutes as overbroad on the basis of imagination alone. We have always held that we will not apply that "strong medicine" unless the overbreadth is both "real" and "substantial." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S., at 613, 615, 93 S.Ct., at 2916–17, 2917–18. I think we must sustain the current ordinance just as we sustained the statute at issue in New York v. Ferber, supra, 262 which forbade the distribution of materials depicting minors in a "sexual performance." The state court had applied overbreadth analysis because of its "understandabl[e] concer[n] that some protected expression, ranging from medical textbooks to pictorials in the National Geographic would fall prey to the statute." Id., at 773, 102 S.Ct., at 3363. We said:

> "[W]e seriously doubt, and it has not been suggested, that these arguably impermissible applications of the statute amount to more than a tiny fraction of the materials within the statute's reach. Nor will we assume that the New York courts will widen the possibly invalid reach of the statute by giving an expansive construction to the proscription on 'lewd exhibition[s] of the genitals.' Under these circumstances, § 263.15 is 'not substantially overbroad and ... whatever overbreadth may exist should be cured through a case-by-case analysis of the fact situations to which its sanctions, assertedly, may not be applied.' Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S., at 615–616 [93 S.Ct., at 2917–2918]." Id., 458 U.S., at 773–774, 102 S.Ct., at 3363.

The legitimate reach of the Dallas ordinance "dwarfs its arguably impermissible applications." Id., at 773, 102 S.Ct., at 3363.

To reject the present facial attack upon the ordinance is not, of course, to deprive someone who is not engaged in pandering and who is somehow caught within its provisions (if that could possibly occur) from asserting his First Amendment rights. But that eventuality is so improbable, it seems to me, that no substantial quantity of First Amendment activity is anticipatorily "chilled." The Constitution is adequately safeguarded by conducting further review of this reasonable ordinance as it is applied.

Justice O'CONNOR's opinion correctly notes that respondents conceded that the materials sold are protected by the First Amendment. Ante, at 603. But they did not concede that the activity of pandering at which the Dallas ordinance is directed is constitutionally protected. They did not, to be 263 sure, specifically argue Ginzburg, or suggest the complete proscribability of these businesses as a basis for sustaining their manner of licensing them. But we have often sustained judgments on grounds not argued—particularly in the area of obscenity law, where our jurisprudence has been, let us say, not entirely predictable. In Ginzburg itself, for example, the United States did not argue that the convictions could be upheld on the pandering theory the Court adopted, but only that the materials sold were obscene under Roth. Brief for United States in Ginzburg v. United States, O.T.1965, No. 42, p. 18. In Mishkin v. New York, 383 U.S. 502, 86 S.Ct. 958, 16 L.Ed.2d 56 (1966), one of the companion cases to Ginzburg, the State of New York defended the convictions under Roth and explicitly disagreed with those commentators who would determine obscenity by looking to the "intent of the disseminator," rather than "character of the material." Brief for Appellee in Mishkin v. New York, O.T.1965, No. 49, p. 45, and n. See also Brief for Appellee in Memoirs v. Attorney General of Massachusetts, O.T.1965, No. 368, p. 17 (defending convictions under Roth and Manual Enterprises, Inc. v. Day, 370 U.S. 478, 82 S.Ct. 1432, 8 L.Ed.2d 639 (1962)). Likewise in Roth, where we held that the test for obscenity was appeal to prurient interest, 354 U.S., at 489, 77 S.Ct., at 1311, the United States had argued that *625 obscenity was established if the material "constitutes a present threat to the morals of the average person in the community." Brief for United States in Roth v. United States, O.T.1956, No. 582, p. 100. And no one argued that the Miller Court should abandon the "utterly without redeeming social value" test of the Memoirs plurality, but the Court did so nevertheless. Compare 413 U.S., at 24–25, 93 S.Ct., at 2614–16, with Brief for Appellee in Miller v. California, O.T.1972, No. 70–73, pp. 26–27.

* * *

The mode of analysis I have suggested is different from the rigid test for obscenity that we apply to the determination whether a particular book, film, or performance can be banned. The regulation here is not directed to particular 264 works or performance, but to their concentration, and the constitutional analysis should be adjusted accordingly. What Justice STEVENS wrote for the plurality in American Mini Theatres is applicable here as well: "[W]e learned long ago that broad statements of principle, no matter how correct in the context in which they are made, are sometimes qualified by contrary decisions before the absolute limit of the stated principle is reached." 427 U.S., at 65, 96 S.Ct., at 2450. The prohibition of concentrated pornography here is analogous to the prohibition we sustained in American Mini Theatres. There we upheld ordinances that prohibited the concentration of sexually oriented businesses, each of which (we assumed) purveyed material that was not constitutionally proscribable. Here I would uphold an ordinance that regulates the concentration of sexually oriented material in a single business.

The basis of decision I have described seems to me the proper means, in Chief Justice Warren's words, "to reconcile the right of the Nation and of the States to maintain a decent society and, on the other hand, the right of individuals to express themselves freely in accordance with the guarantees of the First and Fourteenth Amendments." Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 199, 84 S.Ct. 1676, 1684, 12 L.Ed.2d 793 (1964) (dissenting opinion). It entails no risk of suppressing even a single work of science, literature, or art—or, for that matter, even a single work of pornography. Indeed, I fully believe that in the long run it will expand rather than constrict the scope of permitted expression, because it will eliminate the incentive to use, as a means of preventing commercial activity patently objectionable to large segments of our society, methods that constrict unobjectionable activity as well.

For the reasons stated, I respectfully dissent.

110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603, 58 USLW 4079

All Citations

493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603, 58 USLW 4079

109 S.Ct. 1591
Supreme Court of the United States

CITY OF DALLAS, et al., Petitioners
v.
Charles M. STANGLIN, Individually, and d/b/a Twilight Skating Rink.

No. 87–1848.
|
Argued March 1, 1989.
|
Decided April 3, 1989.

City filed petition for writ of certiorari after the Texas Court of Appeals, Fifth District, 744 S.W.2d 165 declared city's ordinance limiting use of dance halls to persons between ages of 14 and 18 violative of those persons' associational rights. After granting certiorari, the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Rehnquist, held that: (1) ordinance did not infringe on First Amendment right of association, and (2) ordinance was rationally related to legitimate purpose and did not violate equal protection clause.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Stevens, with whom Justice Blackmun joined, concurred in judgment.

West Headnotes (2)

[1] Constitutional Law
Expressive association
Constitutional Law
Intimate association;dating relationships in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Constitutional, Statutory and Regulatory Provisions

City ordinance restricting admission to certain dance halls to persons between ages of 14 and 18 did not infringe on First Amendment right of association; dance hall patrons were not engaged in any form of intimate or expressive association, and there was no generalized right of "social association" that included chance encounters in dance halls. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

236 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Juvenile justice
Infants
Prohibited hours and premises;curfew
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Constitutional, Statutory and Regulatory Provisions

City ordinance restricting admission to certain dance halls to persons between ages of 14 and 18 did not violate equal protection clause because it was rationally related to city's legitimate effort to protect teenagers within that age group from what could be corrupting influences of older teenagers and young adults. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

51 Cases that cite this headnote

1592 Syllabus [*]

[*] The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

19 For the express purpose of providing a place where teenagers can socialize with each other but not be subject to the potentially detrimental influences of older teenagers and adults, a Dallas ordinance authorizes the licensing of "Class E" dance halls, restricting admission thereto to persons between the ages of 14 and 18 and limiting their hours of operation. Respondent, whose roller-skating rink and Class E dance hall share a divided floorspace, filed suit in state court to enjoin the ordinance's age and hour restrictions, contending, inter alia, that they violated the First Amendment and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The trial court upheld the ordinance, but the Texas Court of Appeals struck down the ordinance's age restriction, holding that it violated the First Amendment associational rights of minors.

Held:

1. The ordinance does not infringe on the First Amendment right of association. Respondent's patrons, who may number as many as 1,000 per night, are not engaged in a form of "intimate association." Nor do the opportunities of adults and minors to dance with one another, which might be described as "associational" in common parlance, involve the sort of "expressive association" that the First Amendment has been held to protect. The teenagers who congregate are not members of any organized association, and most are strangers to one another. The dance hall admits all who pay the admission fee, and there is no suggestion that the patrons take positions on public questions or perform other similar activities. Moreover, the Constitution does not recognize a generalized right of "social association" that includes chance encounters in dance halls. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 483, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 1681, 14 L.Ed.2d 510, distinguished. Pp. 1594–1595.

2. The ordinance does not violate the Equal Protection Clause because there is a rational relationship between the age restriction for Class E dance halls and the city's interest in promoting the welfare of teenagers. Respondent's claims—that the ordinance does not meet the city's objectives because adults and teenagers can still associate with one another in places such as his skating rink and that there are other, less intrusive, alternatives to achieve the objectives—misapprehend the nature of 20 rational-basis scrutiny, the most relaxed and tolerant form of judicial scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause. Under this standard, a classification that has some reasonable basis does not offend the Constitution because it is imperfect. Here, the city could reasonably conclude that teenagers might be more susceptible to corrupting influences if permitted to frequent dance halls with older persons or that limiting dance-hall contacts between adults and teenagers would make less likely illicit or undesirable juvenile involvement with alcohol, illegal drugs, or promiscuous sex. While the city permits teenagers and adults to rollerskate together, skating involves less physical contact than dancing, a differentiation that need not be striking to survive rational-basis scrutiny. Pp. 1595–1597.

744 S.W.2d 165 (Tex.App.1987), reversed and remanded.

REHNQUIST, C.J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, O'CONNOR, SCALIA, and KENNEDY, JJ., joined. STEVENS, J., filed an opinion concurring in the judgment, in which BLACKMUN, J., joined, post, p. 1597.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Craig Hopkins argued the cause for petitioners. With him on the briefs were Analeslie Muncy and Kenneth C. Dippel.

Daniel J. Sheehan, Jr., argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.*

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the National Institute of Municipal Officers by William I. Thornton, Jr., Frank B. Gummey III, William H. Taube, Roy D. Bates, Robert J. Alfton, James K. Baker, Robert J. Mangler, Neal E. McNeill, Dante R. Pellegrini, Clifford D. Pierce, Jr., Benjamin L. Brown, and Charles S. Rhyne; and for the United States Conference of Mayors et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon.

Opinion

*1593 Chief Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner city of Dallas adopted an ordinance restricting admission to certain dance halls to persons between the ages of 14 and 18. Respondent, the owner of one of these "teenage" dance halls, sued to contest the constitutional validity of the ordinance. The Texas Court of Appeals held that the ordinance violated the First Amendment right of persons between the ages of 14 and 18 to associate with persons outside 21 that age group. We now reverse, holding that the First Amendment secures no such right.

In 1985, in response to requests for dance halls open only to teenagers, the city of Dallas authorized the licensing of "Class E" dance halls.[1] The purpose of the ordinance was to provide a place where teenagers could socialize with each other, but not be subject to the potentially detrimental influences of older teenagers and young adults. The provision of the ordinance at issue here, Dallas City Code § 14–8.1 (1985), restricts the ages of admission to Class E dance halls to persons between the ages of 14 and 18.[2] This provision, as 22 enacted, restricted admission to those between 14 and 17, but it was subsequently amended to include 18–year olds. Parents, guardians, law enforcement, and dance-hall personnel are excepted from the ordinance's age restriction. The ordinance also limits the hours of operation of Class E dance halls to between 1 p.m. and midnight daily when school is not in session. § 14–5(d)(2).

[1] Dallas also licenses Class A, B, and C dance halls, which differ in the number of days per week dancing is permitted; Class D is for dance instruction. Persons under 17 must be accompanied by a parent for admission to Class A, B, and C dance halls. Dallas City Code §§ 14–1, 14–8 (1985–1986). A dance-hall license is not needed if the dance is at any of the following locations: a private residence from which the general public is excluded; a place owned by the federal, state, or local government; a public or private elementary school, secondary school, college, or university; a place owned by a religious organization; or a private club. Ibid.

[2] Section 14–8.1 of the Dallas City Code provides:
"(a) No person under the age of 14 years or over the age of 18 years may enter a Class E dance hall.
"(b) A person commits an offense if he is over the age of 18 years and:
"(1) enters a Class E dance hall; or
"(2) for the purposes of gaining admittance into a Class E dance hall, he falsely represents himself to be:
"(A) of an age from 14 years through 18 years;
"(B) a licensee or an employee of the dance hall;
"(C) a parent or guardian of a person inside the dance hall;
"(D) a governmental employee in the performance of his duties.
"(c) A licensee or an employee of a Class E dance hall commits an offense if he knowingly allows a person to enter or remain on the premises of a dance hall who is:
"(1) under the age of 14 years; or
"(2) over the age of 18 years.
"(d) It is a defense to prosecution under Subsections (b)(1) and (c)(2) that the person is:
"(1) a licensee or employee of a dance hall;
"(2) a parent or guardian of a person inside the dance hall; or
"(3) a governmental employee in the performance of his duties."

Respondent operates the Twilight Skating Rink in Dallas and obtained a license for a Class E dance hall. He divided the floor of his roller-skating rink into two sections with moveable plastic cones or pylons. On one side of the pylons, persons between the ages of 14 and 18 dance, while on the other side, persons of all ages skate to the same music—usually soul and "funk" music played by a disc jockey. No age or hour restrictions are applicable to the skating rink. Respondent does not serve alcohol on the premises, and security personnel are present. The Twilight does not have a selective admissions policy. It charges between $3.50 and $5 per person for admission to the dance hall and between $2.50 and $5 per person for admission to the skating rink. Most of the patrons are strangers to each other, and the establishment serves as many as 1,000 customers per night.

Respondent sued in the District Court of Dallas County to enjoin enforcement of the *1594 age and hour restrictions of the ordinance. He contended that the ordinance violated substantive due process and equal protection under the United States and Texas Constitutions, and that it unconstitutionally infringed the rights of persons between the ages of 14 and 17 (now 18) to associate with persons outside that age bracket.[3] The trial court upheld the ordinance, finding that it was rationally 23 related to the city's legitimate interest in ensuring the safety and welfare of children.

[3] The Court of Appeals held that respondent had standing to assert the associational rights of the teenage patrons of his establishment. 744 S.W.2d 165, 168 (1987). That issue has not been raised before us.

The Texas Court of Appeals upheld the ordinance's time restriction, but it struck down the age restriction. 744 S.W.2d 165 (1987). The Court of Appeals held that the age restriction violated the First Amendment associational rights of minors. To support a restriction on the fundamental right of "social association," the court said that "the legislative body must show a compelling interest," and the regulation "must be accomplished by the least restrictive means." Id., at 168. The court recognized the city's interest in "protect[ing] minors from detrimental, corrupting influences," ibid., but held that the "City's stated purposes ... may be achieved in ways that are less intrusive on minors' freedom to associate," id., at 169.

The Court of Appeals stated that "[a] child's right of association may not be abridged simply on the premise that he 'might' associate with those who would persuade him into bad habits," and that "neither the activity of dancing per se, nor association of children aged fourteen through eighteen with persons of other ages in the context of dancing renders such children peculiarly vulnerable to the evils that defendant City seeks to prevent." Ibid. We granted certiorari, 488 U.S. 815, 109 S.Ct. 51, 102 L.Ed.2d 30 (1988), and now reverse.

[1] The dispositive question in this case is the level of judicial "scrutiny" to be applied to the city's ordinance. Unless laws "create suspect classifications or impinge upon constitutionally protected rights," San Antonio Independent School Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 40, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 1300, 36 L.Ed.2d 16 (1973), it need only be shown that they bear "some rational relationship to a legitimate state purpose" id., at 44, 93 S.Ct., at 1302. Respondent does not contend that dance-hall patrons are a "suspect classification," but he does urge that the ordinance in question interferes with associational rights of such patrons guaranteed by the First Amendment.

While the First Amendment does not in terms protect a "right of association," our cases have recognized that it embraces 24 such a right in certain circumstances. In Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 104 S.Ct. 3244, 82 L.Ed.2d 462 (1984), we noted two different sorts of "freedom of association" that are protected by the United States Constitution:

> "Our decisions have referred to constitutionally protected 'freedom of association' in two distinct senses. In one line of decisions, the Court has concluded that choices to enter into and maintain certain intimate human relationships must be secured against undue intrusion by the State because of the role of such relationships in safeguarding the individual freedom that is central to our constitutional scheme. In this respect, freedom of association receives protection as a fundamental element of personal liberty. In another set of decisions, the Court has recognized a right to associate for the purpose of engaging in those activities protected by the First Amendment—speech, assembly, petition for the redress of grievances, and the exercise of religion." Id., at 617–618, 104 S.Ct., at 3249.

It is clear beyond cavil that dance-hall patrons, who may number 1,000 on any given night, are not engaged in the sort of *1595 "intimate human relationships" referred to in Roberts. The Texas Court of Appeals, however, thought that such patrons were engaged in a form of expressive activity that was protected by the First Amendment. We disagree.

The Dallas ordinance restricts attendance at Class E dance halls to minors between the ages of 14 and 18 and certain excepted adults. It thus limits the minors' ability to dance with adults who may not attend, and it limits the opportunity of such adults to dance with minors. These opportunities might be described as "associational" in common parlance, but they simply do not involve the sort of expressive association that the First Amendment has been held to protect. The hundreds of teenagers who congregate each night at this particular dance hall are not members of any organized association; they are patrons of the same business establishment. 25 Most are strangers to one another, and the dance hall admits all who are willing to pay the admission fee. There is no suggestion that these patrons "take positions on public questions" or perform any of the other similar activities described in Board of Directors of Rotary International v. Rotary Club of Duarte, 481 U.S. 537, 548, 107 S.Ct. 1940, 1947, 95 L.Ed.2d 474 (1987).

The cases cited in Roberts recognize that "freedom of speech" means more than simply the right to talk and to write. It is possible to find some kernel of expression in almost every activity a person undertakes—for example, walking down the street or meeting one's friends at a shopping mall—but such a kernel is not sufficient to bring the activity within the protection of the First Amendment. We think the activity of these dance-hall patrons—coming together to engage in recreational dancing—is not protected by the First Amendment. Thus this activity qualifies neither as a form of "intimate association" nor as a form of "expressive association" as those terms were described in Roberts.

Unlike the Court of Appeals, we do not think the Constitution recognizes a generalized right of "social association" that includes chance encounters in dance halls. The Court of Appeals relied, mistakenly we think, on a statement from our opinion in Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 483, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 1681, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965), that "[t]he right to freely associate is not limited to 'political' assemblies, but includes those that 'pertain to the social, legal, and economic benefit' of our citizens." 744 S.W.2d, at 168, quoting Griswold v. Connecticut, supra, 381 U.S., at 483, 85 S.Ct., at 1681. But the quoted language from Griswold recognizes nothing more than that the right of expressive association extends to groups organized to engage in speech that does not pertain directly to politics.

[2] The Dallas ordinance, therefore, implicates no suspect class and impinges on no constitutionally protected right. The question remaining is whether the classification engaged in by the city survives "rational-basis" scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause. The city has chosen to impose a 26 rule that separates 14– to 18–year–olds from what may be the corrupting influences of older teenagers and young adults. Ray Couch, an urban planner for the city's Department of Planning and Development, testified:

> " '[O]lder kids [whom the ordinance prohibits from entering Class E dance halls] can access drugs and alcohol, and they have more mature sexual attitudes, more liberal sexual attitudes in general.... And we're concerned about mixing up these [older] individuals with youngsters that [sic] have not fully matured.' " 744 S.W.2d, at 168, n. 3.

A Dallas police officer, Wesley Michael, testified that the age restriction was intended to discourage juvenile crime.

Respondent claims that this restriction "has no real connection with the City's stated interests and objectives." Brief for Respondent 13. Except for saloons and teenage dance halls, respondent argues, teenagers and adults in Dallas may associate *1596 with each other, including at the skating area of the Twilight Skating Rink. Id., at 14. Respondent also states, as did the court below, that the city can achieve its objectives through increased supervision, education, and prosecution of those who corrupt minors. Id., at 15.

We think respondent's arguments misapprehend the nature of rational-basis scrutiny, which is the most relaxed and tolerant form of judicial scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause. In Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 90 S.Ct. 1153, 25 L.Ed.2d 491 (1970), in rejecting the claim that Maryland welfare legislation violated the Equal Protection Clause, the Court said:

> "[A] State does not violate the Equal Protection Clause merely because the classifications made by its laws are imperfect. If the classification has some 'reasonable basis,' it does not offend the Constitution simply because the classification 'is not made with mathematical nicety or because in practice it results in some inequality.' Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U.S. 61, 78 [31 S.Ct. 337, 340, 55 L.Ed. 369 (1911)]. 27 'The problems of government are practical ones and may justify, if they do not require, rough accommodations—illogical, it may be, and unscientific.' Metropolis Theatre Co. v. City of Chicago, 228 U.S. 61, 69–70 [33 S.Ct. 441, 443, 57 L.Ed. 730 (1913)]....
>
> "... [The rational-basis standard] is true to the principle that the Fourteenth Amendment gives the federal courts no power to impose upon the States their views of what constitutes wise economic or social policy." Id., 397 U.S., at 485–486, 90 S.Ct., at 1162 (footnote omitted).

We think that similar considerations support the age restriction at issue here. As we said in New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303–304, 96 S.Ct. 2513, 2517, 49 L.Ed.2d 511 (1976): "[I]n the local economic sphere, it is only the invidious discrimination, the wholly arbitrary act, which cannot stand consistently with the Fourteenth Amendment." See also United States Railroad Retirement Board v. Fritz, 449 U.S. 166, 177, 101 S.Ct. 453, 461, 66 L.Ed.2d 368 (1980). The city could reasonably conclude, as Couch stated, that teenagers might be susceptible to corrupting influences if permitted, unaccompanied by their parents, to frequent a dance hall with older persons. See 7 E. McQuillin, Law of Municipal Corporations § 24.210 (3d ed. 1981) ("Public dance halls have been regarded as being in that category of businesses and vocations having potential evil consequences"). The city could properly conclude that limiting dance-hall contacts between juveniles and adults would make less likely illicit or undesirable juvenile involvement with alcohol, illegal drugs, and promiscuous sex.[4] It is true that the city allows teenagers 28 and adults to roller-skate together, but skating involves less physical *1597 contact than dancing. The differences between the two activities may not be striking, but differentiation need not be striking in order to survive rational-basis scrutiny.

[4] The Court considered similar factors in Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944), where it upheld, over claims of infringement on religious freedom and equal protection, a statute prohibiting children under 12 from selling newspapers on the street. After noting that the statute would have been invalid if applied to adults, the Court said:

"The state's authority over children's activities is broader than over like actions of adults. This is peculiarly true of public activities and in matters of employment.... Among evils most appropriate for such action are the crippling effects of child employment, more especially in public places, and the possible harms arising from other activities subject to all the diverse influences of the street. It is too late now to doubt that legislation appropriately designed to reach such evils is within the state's police power." Id., at 168–169, 64 S.Ct., at 443 (footnotes omitted).

See also Bellotti v. Baird, 443 U.S. 622, 635, 99 S.Ct. 3035, 3044, 61 L.Ed.2d 797 (1979) (plurality opinion), quoting McKeiver v. Pennsylvania, 403 U.S. 528, 550, 91 S.Ct. 1976, 1989, 29 L.Ed.2d 647 (1971) (plurality opinion) ("State is entitled to adjust its legal system to account for children's vulnerability and their need for 'concern, ... sympathy, and ... paternal attention' "); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 20 L.Ed.2d 195 (1968) (upholding right of State to prohibit sale of "girlie" magazines to minors).

We hold that the Dallas ordinance does not infringe on any constitutionally protected right of association, and that a rational relationship exists between the age restriction for Class E dance halls and the city's interest in promoting the welfare of teenagers. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice BLACKMUN joins, concurring in the judgment.

In my opinion the opportunity to make friends and enjoy the company of other people—in a dance hall or elsewhere—is an aspect of liberty protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. For that reason, I believe the critical issue in this case involves substantive due process rather than the First Amendment right of association. Nonetheless, I agree with the Court that the city has adequately justified the ordinance's modest impairment of the liberty of teenagers. Indeed, I suspect that the ordinance actually gives teenagers 29 greater opportunity to associate than they would have if the Class E dance-hall provision were invalidated. [*] I therefore join the Court's judgment.

[*] I do not join the Court's assessment of this case under the Equal Protection Clause. Although the equal protection issue received nominal attention in the trial court, see Pet. for Cert. C–1 to C–7, it was neither reviewed by the Texas Court of Appeals nor briefed before us. See 744 S.W.2d 165 (1987); Pet. for Cert. 3; Brief for Petitioners 4.

All Citations

490 U.S. 19, 109 S.Ct. 1591, 104 L.Ed.2d 18, 57 USLW 4406

End of Document

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by Moustakas v. Margolis, N.D.Ill., January 5, 2016

251 F.3d 1121
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

BLUE CANARY CORPORATION,
Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CITY OF MILWAUKEE, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 00-3543.
|
Argued March 30, 2001.
|
Decided May 29, 2001.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied June 26, 2001.

Exotic dance club appealed city licensing board's refusal to renew club's liquor license. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, John W. Reynolds, J. granted summary judgment in favor of city. Club appealed. The Court of Appeals, Posner, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance which required club to apply for renewal of liquor license annually was not "prior restraint"; (2) licensing board's consideration of the type of entertainment provided by club in residential neighborhood did not violate free speech clause; and (3) failure to renew club's license did not violate free speech clause.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (5)

[1] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

The term "prior restraint" refers to requiring governmental permission to engage in specified expressive activity in violation of the free speech clause of the First Amendment, in contrast to punishing the activity after it has taken place. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

"Prior restraints" that do not limit content of speech or activity are reviewed under a more permissive standard applicable to restrictions merely on the time, place, or manner of expression to determine whether free speech rights are violated. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Intoxicating Liquors

Intoxicating Liquors
Municipal Ordinances

City ordinance which required exotic dance club to apply for renewal of liquor license annually was not "prior restraint" that violated free speech clause of First Amendment; sale of liquor was unexceptionably a licensed activity even when the licensed club provided entertainment for its customers. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Intoxicating Liquors

Intoxicating Liquors
Places

City licensing board's consideration of the type of entertainment provided by exotic dance club in residential neighborhood in determining whether to renew club's liquor license did not violate free speech clause of the First Amendment; any impairment of free speech rights was slight, and any expressive activity was not suppressed, but merely forced to relocate to another part of the city. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law

Intoxicating Liquors

Intoxicating Liquors

Places

City's failure to renew liquor license of exotic dance club in residential neighborhood, pursuant to city ordinance which prohibited renewal of liquor licenses to bars and restaurants when the "proposed activity was not compatible with the normal activity of the neighborhood" in which the bar or restaurant was located, did not violate free speech clause of First Amendment; neighbors testified that club's activities were incompatible with the residential character of the neighborhood, and club could have reopened in another part of the city. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1122 Jeff Scott Olson (argued), Madison, WI, for plaintiff-appellant.

Bruce Schrimpf (argued), Milwaukee City Attorney's Office, Milwaukee, WI, for defendant-appellee.

Before FLAUM, Chief Judge, and POSNER and EVANS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

POSNER, Circuit Judge.

The plaintiff, appealing from the grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant, the City of Milwaukee, argues that the City's refusal to renew the plaintiff's liquor license violated the free speech clause of the First Amendment. The plaintiff had bought a tavern in Milwaukee that entertained its patrons with polkas. It obtained a liquor license and shortly afterward changed the name of the tavern from Blue Canary to Runway 94 and applied for and received a "cabaret license," which permits a tavern to provide entertainment in the form of dancing by performers. On the application form the plaintiff's manager checked "floor shows" rather than "exotic dancers/male and/or female strippers," and at a hearing on the application she explained that she wanted to put on "Las Vegas style" nightclub acts. But instead, after receiving the cabaret license, the tavern put on shows in which the performers danced in only pasties and bikini bottoms, which the licensing authority believed constituted "exotic dancing" rather than "Las Vegas style" dancing even though the dancers did not strip on stage but merely appeared, as it were, fully unclothed down to the pasties and bikini bottoms. The plaintiff reluctantly applied for a supplementary license to permit "exotic dancing." This was denied, but the tavern continued to exhibit "exotic dancing" in the form described, with some weird touches, such as dancers who sucked on their breasts while hanging upside down. The erotic character of the entertainment was not concealed. One dancer allowed a customer to slip money between her breasts. Another acknowledged that she tried to "turn guys on" in order to get tips. Others simulated intercourse.

When the tavern's liquor license came up for renewal at the end of its one-year term, a hearing was held at which residents of the immediate neighborhood opposed renewal on grounds of noise, traffic, and litter, but also moral disapproval of the entertainment. One neighbor complained that a person had come out of the tavern and urinated in his mailbox. The license was not renewed, and this suit ensued.

The plaintiff complains primarily about the vagueness of the ordinance governing grants and renewals of liquor licenses-which so far as bears on this case requires merely a determination of "whether or not the applicant's proposed operations are basically compatible with the normal activity of the neighborhood in which the licensed premises is to be located," Milwaukee Code of Ordinances § 90-35-1-e-and of the category in the application form "exotic dancers/male and/or female strippers." The vagueness of the category is relevant, however, only if the City violated the plaintiff's rights by refusing to renew its liquor license. If it did, the next question would be whether the City committed a further violation by refusing to grant an "exotic dancers" supplement to the plaintiff's cabaret license. But if the City was entitled to conclude that the nature of the entertainment in the plaintiff's tavern, whatever one calls it, was so inappropriate to the neighborhood as to justify not renewing the liquor license (since the plaintiff was uninterested in switching to a form of entertainment that the neighbors would not have objected to), it is irrelevant whether the entertainment was or was not "exotic dancing."

1123 [1] The plaintiff repeats its complaint about vagueness under the rubric of "prior restraint." The term refers to requiring governmental permission to engage in specified expressive activity, in contrast to punishing the activity after it has taken place. Alexander v. United States, 509 U.S. 544, 550, 113 S.Ct. 2766, 125 L.Ed.2d 441 (1993); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 57, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965); Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963). In the England of Shakespeare's day and indeed for centuries afterwards, a play could not be exhibited in a theater without a license from the Lord Chamberlain. That was a classic prior restraint. Blackstone defined freedom of speech and the press as freedom from prior restraints, 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 151-53 (1769); see Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations, 413 U.S. 376, 389-90, 93 S.Ct. 2553, 37 L.Ed.2d 669 (1973); MacDonald v. City of Chicago, 243 F.3d 1021, 1031 (7th Cir.2001); Thomas v. Chicago Park District, 227 F.3d 921, 923-24 (7th Cir.2000); Hudson v. Chicago Teachers Union, 743 F.2d 1187, 1192 (7th Cir.1984); City of Paducah v. Investment Entertainment Inc., 791 F.2d 463, 466 (6th Cir.1986), and while the First Amendment has not been interpreted to be limited so, the idea that prior restraints are particularly harmful to expressive freedoms has lingered. Besides the cases that we have cited already, see Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 558-59, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975); Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 713-16, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357 (1931); Stokes v. City of Madison, 930 F.2d 1163, 1168 (7th Cir.1991); Auburn Police Union v. Carpenter, 8 F.3d 886, 903 (1st Cir.1993).

[2] [3] But the rationale for condemning prior restraints limits the scope of the concept. By "prior restraint" Blackstone and modern courts alike mean censorship-an effort by administrative methods to prevent the dissemination of ideas or opinions thought dangerous or offensive. The censor's concern is with the content of speech, and the ordinary judicial safeguards are lacking. "Prior restraints" that do not have this character are reviewed under the much more permissive standard applicable to restrictions merely on the time, place, or manner of expression. See, e.g., MacDonald v. City of Chicago, supra; Thomas v. Chicago Park District, supra. Permit requirements are routinely imposed on the use of public parks and other public spaces for expressive uses, including entertainment and political demonstrations; and the sale of liquor is unexceptionably a licensed activity even when the licensed restaurant or tavern provides entertainment for its customers, and even though the Twenty-First Amendment is no longer deemed a limitation on First Amendment rights. 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 515-16, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 134 L.Ed.2d 711 (1996). The prior-restraint issue that the plaintiff attempts to raise is thus a red herring. There was nothing amiss in the City's requiring the plaintiff to seek a renewal of its liquor license annually.

[4] Nor was there anything amiss in the City's taking into account, in deciding whether to renew the license, the character of the entertainment that the plaintiff served with its drinks. It is true that the "exotic dancing" was not, or at least is not contended to have been, obscene (despite the breast sucking-which was not nursing), and therefore illegal. Nor did it violate any state or city law-if there is one in Wisconsin or Milwaukee-against public nudity, compare City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000); 1124 Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), because the dancers were scantily clad, rather than nude. But this is not a case about banning exotic (or erotic) dance performances on the ground of their being obscene or violating the nudity laws. The City does not ban the kind of entertainment that Runway 94 offered. We are told without contradiction that there are 22 such establishments in Milwaukee. All the City is trying to do is to zone them out of areas in which neighbors object to the presence of a strip joint. The plaintiff is emphatic (this is the core of its objection to the "exotic dancers" category) that Runway 94 was not a strip joint, because the dancers stripped down to their pasties and bikini bottoms before appearing on stage, but the difference between stripping and having already stripped strikes us as minute, and so for want of a better term we'll call Runway 94 a strip joint. Countless cases allow municipalities to zone strip joints, adult book stores, and like erotic sites out of residential and the classier commercial areas of the city or town. City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 49-52, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality opinion); Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 845-46 (7th Cir.2000); North Avenue Novelties, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 88 F.3d 441 (7th Cir.1996); Boss Capital, Inc. v. City of Casselberry, 187 F.3d 1251, 1253 (11th Cir.1999); Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435 (6th Cir.1998); Walker v. City of Kansas City, 911 F.2d 80, 90 n. 13 (8th Cir.1990). Establishments that purvey erotica, live or pictorial, tend to be tawdry, to be offensive to many people, and to attract a dubious, sometimes a disorderly, clientele. Liquor and sex are an explosive combination, so strip joints that sell liquor are particularly unwelcome in respectable neighborhoods. The impairment of First Amendment values is slight to the point of being risible, since the expressive activity involved in the kind of striptease entertainment provided in a bar has at best a modest social value and is anyway not suppressed but merely shoved off to another part of town, where it remains easily accessible to anyone who wants to patronize that kind of establishment.

[5] Because the standard in the ordinance is compatibility with the "normal" activity of the neighborhood and the City relies heavily on testimony by neighbors to determine what that activity is, the plaintiff asks us to consider the possibility that a strait-laced community might exclude all erotic cultural expression on the ground that any public recognition of sex was abnormal activity in that community-and so Salome's "Dance of the Seven Veils" (in Wilde's play or Strauss's opera), the Afternoon of a Faun, and countless Balanchine ballets could not be performed. But we are dealing in this case with the ordinance not of a small town but of a major city, which is neither homogeneous nor entirely residential, and so the ordinance has not resulted in the exclusion of the erotic even from bars, but merely in the segregation of bars that present erotic entertainment from other land uses in the city. The ordinance is limited, moreover, to bars (and to restaurants that serve liquor). It is not a regulation of theaters or concert halls, but only of places where liquor is served. And the City has not delegated the zoning decision to the neighbors, but merely relies upon them to inform the City concerning the normal activity of their neighborhoods. The plaintiff was entitled to a hearing on its application to renew its license, Milwaukee Code of Ordinances § 90-11, and received one-at which much evidence was presented of the profound incompatibility of a strip joint with the normal activity of the immediate neighborhood, a residential neighborhood whose 1125 normal activity is raising kids in a tranquil environment rather than fending off the drunken patrons of a noisy strip joint. So far as appears, the plaintiff could have reopened Runway 94 a few blocks away. The First Amendment would not have been damaged by such a move.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

251 F.3d 1121

270 F.3d 1156
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

BLUE CANARY CORPORATION,
Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
CITY OF MILWAUKEE, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 01–2104.
|
Submitted Oct. 11, 2001.
|
Decided Nov. 7, 2001.

Burlesque theater sued city challenging city's denial of permit for nude dancing. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, John W. Reynolds, J., dismissed suit. Theater appealed. The Court of Appeals, Posner, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) denial of permit to operate theater in residential district did not violate First Amendment; (2) city's zoning ordinance did not grant impermissible degree of discretion to zoning commissioner; and (3) burlesque theater was "similar" to adult theater under ordinance.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Constitutional Law
Theaters in general
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

City's denial of application for permit for nude dancing at burlesque theater in residential district did not violate First Amendment; city did not prohibit operation of burlesque theater, but merely prohibited operation in proximity to residential neighborhood, leaving abundant convenient locations within city in which operation of such theater would not have violated zoning law. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Zoning and Land Use
Constitutional Law
Zoning, planning, and land use

City's zoning ordinance allowing zoning commissioner to determine whether unlisted use was "similar" to listed use did not inject impermissible degree of discretion into administration of zoning law in violation of First Amendment; some degree of discretion was unavoidable, since legislature was not omniscient and could not be expected to enumerate every possible land use that might present zoning issue. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Burlesque theater that exhibited nude dancing was "similar" to adult movie theater under city's zoning ordinance; both were theaters, both presented erotic entertainment, and if anything live sex show was more erotic than celluloid one.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1157 Jeff Scott Olson (submitted), Madison, WI, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Stuart S. Mukamal, Milwaukee City Attorney's Office, Milwaukee, WI, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before FLAUM, Chief Judge, and POSNER and EVANS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

POSNER, Circuit Judge.

Several months ago we upheld against a challenge based on the free speech clause of the First Amendment Milwaukee's refusal to renew the plaintiff's liquor license. 251 F.3d 1121 (7th Cir.2001). The plaintiff had bought a tavern in Milwaukee that entertained its patrons with polkas. The plaintiff obtained its own liquor license and shortly afterward changed the name of the tavern and applied for and received a "cabaret license," which permits a tavern to provide entertainment in the form of dancing by performers. On the application form the plaintiff's manager checked "floor shows" rather than "exotic dancers/male and/or female strippers," and at a hearing on the application she explained that she wanted to put on "Las Vegas style" nightclub acts. But instead, after receiving the cabaret license, the tavern put on shows in which the performers danced in only pasties and bikini bottoms, with some weird touches such as dancers who sucked on their breasts while hanging upside down. The erotic character of the entertainment was not concealed. One dancer allowed a customer to slip money between her breasts. Another acknowledged that she tried to "turn guys on" in order to get tips. Others simulated intercourse.

Fearing that the City's refusal to renew the tavern's liquor license would stand—as indeed it did, as a result of our previous decision—the plaintiff applied for a license to use the premises for a burlesque theater that would provide the same entertainment described in the preceding paragraph (and characterized by the plaintiff itself as "burlesque dancing which features dancers who are nude or semi-nude") but without sale of alcoholic beverages. The City denied the application on the basis of the provision of its zoning ordinance governing proposed land uses that are not listed in the ordinance. Such a use must conform to the rules applicable to a "similar" use that is listed. Milwaukee Code of Ordinances § 295–27. Burlesque theaters are not a listed use, but are similar, the City's zoning commissioner determined, to "adult motion picture theater[s]," which are a listed use—and a use that is banned in the part of Milwaukee in which the plaintiff's premises are located because it abuts a residential area. Milwaukee Code of Ordinances §§ 295–14–9, 295–322–10e. So the application was denied, precipitating this suit, which claims that the denial violated the plaintiff's right of free speech. The district court dismissed, precipitating this appeal.

[1] The City has not prohibited the plaintiff from operating a burlesque theater, with or without nudity. It has merely prohibited the operation of such a theater in proximity to a residential neighborhood. Milwaukee is a large city and the plaintiff does not deny that there are abundant convenient locations in which the operation of such a theater would not violate the City's zoning law. In these circumstances, as we said in our previous opinion, "the impairment of First Amendment values is slight to the point of being risible, since the expressive activity involved in the kind of striptease entertainment provided in a bar has at best a modest social value and is anyway not suppressed but merely shoved off to another part of town, where it remains easily accessible to anyone who wants to patronize that kind of establishment." 251 F.3d at 1124. True, a theater is not a bar; we remarked that "liquor and sex 1158 are an explosive combination, so strip joints that sell liquor are particularly unwelcome in respectable neighborhoods," id., and this concern is inapplicable to the proposed operation of the plaintiff's premises as a theater. But the impairment of free speech is still minimal and is outweighed by the legitimate social interest in segregating sex-oriented businesses from residential land uses. As we noted in our previous opinion, "countless cases allow municipalities to zone strip joints, adult book stores, and like erotic sites out of residential and the classier commercial areas of the city or town." Id. To the cases cited there we now add David Vincent, Inc. v. Broward County, 200 F.3d 1325, 1333–37 (11th Cir.2000); D.H.L. Associates, Inc. v. O'Gorman, 199 F.3d 50, 59–60 (1st Cir.1999); Buzzetti v. City of New York, 140 F.3d 134, 140–41 (2d Cir.1998); Z.J. Gifts D–2, L.L.C. v. City of Aurora, 136 F.3d 683 (10th Cir.1998), and Alexander v. City of Minneapolis, 928 F.2d 278, 282–84 (8th Cir.1991).

[2] [3] The plaintiff argues that allowing the zoning commissioner to determine whether an unlisted use is "similar" to a listed one injects an impermissible degree of discretion into the administration of the zoning law. And it is true that the case law expresses concern about arming public officials with discretion to deny expressive activities, lest that discretion be used to suppress unpopular speech. E.g., City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 757, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988); Heffron v. International Society for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S. 640, 649, 101 S.Ct. 2559, 69 L.Ed.2d 298 (1981); MacDonald v. City of Chicago, 243 F.3d 1021, 1026 (7th Cir.2001); Steele v. City of Bemidji, 257 F.3d 902, 907 (8th Cir.2001). But some degree of discretion is an unavoidable feature of law enforcement. Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491

U.S. 781, 794, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). Legislatures are not omniscient and cannot be expected to enumerate every possible land use that might present a zoning issue. The use of a term such as "similar" to stop up potential loopholes is not forbidden by the First Amendment, cf. Gold Coast Publications, Inc. v. Corrigan, 42 F.3d 1336, 1348–49 (11th Cir.1994) ("equivalent"), at least where no feasible alternative is suggested. And there is no reasonable doubt that a burlesque theater that exhibits nude dancing is similar to an adult movie theater. Both are theaters, both present erotic entertainment, and if anything a live sex show is more erotic than a celluloid one.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

270 F.3d 1156

477 F.3d 461
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

ILLINOIS ONE NEWS, INC., doing business as The Gift Spot, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CITY OF MARSHALL, ILLINOIS, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 06-1828.
|
Argued Oct. 17, 2006.
|
Decided Feb. 13, 2007.

Synopsis

Background: Operator of adult book and video store brought § 1983 First Amendment action against city, challenging zoning ordinance that restricted siting for such businesses. Following bench trial, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, 2006 WL 449018, J. Phil Gilbert, J., entered judgment for city, and operator appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Easterbrook, Circuit Judge, held that fact that challenged ordinance restricted adult-oriented businesses to approximately 94 acres, or four percent, of land within city limits, did not deprive operator of adequate siting opportunity.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (2)

[1] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment
Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

State and local governments may regulate adult businesses to curtail secondary effects of their operations, but not to restrict speech of which local residents disapprove. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use in general
Zoning and Planning
Sexually-oriented businesses;nudity

Fact that zoning ordinance prohibiting adult-oriented businesses' locating within 1,000 feet of schools and churches restricted such businesses to approximately 94 acres, or four percent, of land within city limits, did not deprive business owner, which wished to locate adult-oriented store within city, of adequate opportunity to do so, and thus did not infringe First Amendment; if owner chose to locate within city, it could, under city's nondiscretionary subdivision process, acquire intended amount of land, i.e. two acres, within available area. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 1, 14.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

462 Roger B. Webber (argued), Brett N. Olmstead, Beckett & Webber, Urbana, IL, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Ronald S. Cope (argued), Ungaretti & Harris, Chicago, IL, Richard J. Bernardoni, Meehling & Bernardoni, Marshall, IL, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before EASTERBROOK, Chief Judge, and BAUER and FLAUM, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

EASTERBROOK, Chief Judge.

The City of Marshall, Illinois, is a small municipality located near Interstate 70 about 18 miles southwest of Terre Haute, Indiana. It is small in both population (some 3,700 people call it home) and extent (3.2 square miles). It is the county seat of Clark County, an agricultural area of 505 square miles comprising about 17,000 persons.

Property owners face few restrictions on what they can build and operate in the County's unincorporated areas. Marshall, however, has an elaborate zoning code for its 3.2 square miles, and Illinois One News does not like that code one bit. For Illinois One News ("Illinois One" for short) operates "The Gift Spot," an adult book and video store that features 15 booths for private viewing, and Marshall's zoning code requires such establishments to be at least 1,000 feet from any school, church, daycare center, or public park. Because Marshall is so small, a 1,000-foot-distance rule puts most of the city off-limits to adult enterprises. Illinois One had an opportunity to seek a permit that would allow its outlet to continue operating what is now a non-conforming use; deeming such an application futile, Illinois One filed a federal suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and argues that the ordinance violates the first amendment (applied to the states by the fourteenth).

About 12% of the City's area is open to adult uses under the zoning code. The district court found that 94.1 acres, or 4.1% of the City's area, could be devoted to 463 adult uses if Illinois One were to keep 1,000 feet from any residential zone as well. 2006 WL 449018 at *11, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9570 at *28 (S.D.Ill. Feb. 22, 2006). (Illinois One fears, reasonably so given the City's stated objectives, that if it relocates The Gift Spot within 1,000 feet of a residence, the City will just amend its code to send it packing again.) The locations where Marshall allows adult businesses to operate are unattractive to Illinois One-not because they are garbage dumps or otherwise undesirable physically, but because they are on the south side of town and thus some distance from the nearest exit to Interstate 70. Highway traffic is the principal source of The Gift Spot's business.

[1] The Supreme Court has held that state and local governments may regulate adult businesses to curtail the secondary effects of their operations but not to restrict speech of which local residents disapprove. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986); Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002). See also, e.g., R.V.S., L.L.C. v. Rockford, 361 F.3d 402 (7th Cir.2004); Andy's Restaurant & Lounge, Inc. v. Gary, 466 F.3d 550 (7th Cir.2006). The district court concluded after a bench trial that (a) Marshall's zoning law is designed to address the business's secondary effects rather than the content of the materials it offers for sale, and (b) the secondary effects (such as higher crime rates near adult businesses) are real rather than imagined or pretextual. Illinois One does not contend that these findings of fact are clearly erroneous. (It does argue as if we could make an independent decision, but that's not an appellate court's job after a trial has been held. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 52(a).)

[2] Illinois One's principal contention is that 4% of the City is just not enough. Playtime Theatres and Alameda Books say that regulation justified by secondary effects is permissible only if adequate avenues of communication remain open. An inconveniently located 4% is not "adequate," Illinois One insists.

Although Playtime Theatres and Alameda Books conclude that an adult-oriented business is entitled to "adequate" opportunities to sell its wares, neither decision holds that those opportunities must be in the same jurisdiction. The fourteenth amendment directs its commands to the states; how any given state slices up responsibilities among subdivisions normally is of no federal concern. See Whalen v. United States, 445 U.S. 684, 689 n. 4, 100 S.Ct. 1432, 63 L.Ed.2d 715 (1980); Mayor of Philadelphia v. Educational Equality League, 415 U.S. 605, 615 n. 13, 94 S.Ct. 1323, 39 L.Ed.2d 630 (1974); Highland Farms Dairy, Inc. v. Agnew, 300 U.S. 608, 612, 57 S.Ct. 549, 81 L.Ed. 835 (1937); Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U.S. 210, 225, 29 S.Ct. 67, 53 L.Ed. 150 (1908); Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U.S. 71, 84, 23 S.Ct. 28, 47 L.Ed. 79 (1902); Chicago Observer, Inc. v. Chicago, 929 F.2d 325, 328 (7th Cir.1991).

If the State of Illinois were to designate Marshall as a bedroom community and surrounding land as the location for adult businesses, manufacturing plants, and grain silos, what would be the constitutional objection? Illinois would have satisfied its obligation to ensure that time, place, and manner regulations leave ample opportunities for speech. A constitutional doctrine expressed in terms of municipal rather than state boundaries could not have any long-term effect. If we were to hold that 4% of the land at the southern end of Marshall is too little, the City could annex some currently unincorporated land 464 on the north and offer that instead as a site for adult businesses. But if land to the north of the City's current border would supply a constitutionally adequate venue for speech if the City extended its border by half a mile or so, why is the same parcel a constitutionally inadequate venue when it is outside the City's border? The constitutional rule is that a person have adequate opportunity to speak, not that the land be in one polity (the City of Marshall) rather than another (Clark County).

When the municipal jurisdiction is large, a regulatory system that forces the speaker to go elsewhere may leave inadequate options to reach the intended audience. Chicago, for example, covers 234 square miles, and closing all of that territory to adult bookstores would not leave businesses with an adequate opportunity to reach the millions of people who work and play inside Chicago's city limits. Anchorage, Alaska, is substantially larger, at 1,961 square miles; relegating all adult businesses to areas where only moose and bears would be available as patrons could not satisfy the first amendment. A zoning system that excludes all adult businesses also could cause problems if other nearby jurisdictions adopted the same rule; when each points to the other as the "right" place for adult entertainment, the upshot may be that all locations are closed. The NIMBY syndrome ("not in my back yard") may end up meaning not in anyone's back yard. This may be why several Justices (and particularly Justice Blackmun in concurrence) expressed skepticism in Schad v. Mt. Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981), about an argument that a borough in New Jersey could treat Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, as the "adequate" venue for adult entertainment. In this case, however, the district court found that there is plenty of available land adjacent to the City of Marshall; we do not have a situation in which neighboring jurisdictions enact mirror-image rules in an effort by each to move adult businesses to the other.

Schad reserved judgment on this subject, however, and since then at least one court of appeals has expressed sympathy for the argument that a small community might insist that adult business remove to outside its borders. See Boss Capital, Inc. v. Casselberry, 187 F.3d 1251 (11th Cir.1999). Large cities such as Chicago can insist that adult businesses stay away from residential areas and schools, while leaving plenty of land for their operation. But if it is constitutional for Chicago to insist that these businesses move a mile or two to find a suitable spot, why can't Marshall insist that The Gift Spot move a few hundred yards? The answer "because Marshall is so small that even a short move will place us outside its borders" falls flat. Suppose all county seats in rural Illinois were two miles square (four square miles), while equivalent cities in Indiana were six miles square (36 square miles). Could it be that the Constitution would allow Indiana's cities to establish 2,000 foot (or 5,000 foot) buffer zones between residential areas and adult businesses, while Illinois's cities could not have more than 200 feet of separation? That's the gist of Illinois One's argument, and it makes little sense given that the same first amendment applies in both Illinois and Indiana.

Like the court in Boss Capital, however, we need not reach closure on this subject, for we agree with the district court's conclusion that land available in Marshall itself supplies an adequate alternative. No business has a constitutional right to be adjacent to the ramp of an Interstate highway. (Anyway, if proximity to Interstate 70 is Illinois One's prime objective, it can relocate without legal hindrance, and closer to the highway than it is now, on unincorporated 465 land north of the City.) Whether the available land is 25%, 12%, 4%, or even 1% of Marshall's surface area does not matter: all The Gift Spot wants is two acres (which provides space for parking as well as the store). That much land it can have, and to spare. The need to subdivide any parcel it buys-for Illinois One does not want to devote 20 or 40 acres to the store and so will sell what it does not use (or ask the seller to subdivide and keep all but two acres of the original parcel)-could be an obstacle if the City readily could block an effort to carve two acres out of a larger parcel. (The need to subdivide is reinforced by the zoning ordinance's application of the 1,000-foot separation rule to parcel boundaries rather than the building located on a given parcel.)

The City has demonstrated both a desire to kick The Gift Spot out of town and a willingness to take legal steps that raise its cost of doing business. A prospect that the City would stall or block subdivision through the use of discretionary powers would render that land unavailable as a practical matter. Yet at oral argument Illinois One conceded that the subdivision process is not discretionary, and our review of the City's ordinances confirms this assessment. Once a property owner has taken the prescribed steps, "the [city] council shall approve the final plat within 60 days". Marshall Ordinances § 74-57(a)(3). Illinois One must do what any developer of vacant land must do: put in (or pay someone else to install) utility connections, sidewalks, and the like. It would have to do the same if it built outside the City; so would the proprietor of a convenience store or filling station. The first amendment does not relieve bookstore owners of those expenses that business and residential owners alike must bear.

Remaining arguments are makeweights. Illinois One contends, for example, that the zoning ordinance is unconstitutionally vague because the definition of "adult bookstore" contains the word "substantial." ("[A]n establishment having a substantial or significant portion of its stock in trade" displaying or describing "specified anatomical areas" or "specified sexual activities"-themselves defined terms.) Illinois One sensibly concedes, however, that The Gift Spot is an "adult" establishment by any possible definition. The vagueness argument therefore is advanced on behalf of third parties, who might be confused even though Illinois One knows full well that it is covered. Arguments on behalf of third parties are permissible, however, only when they cannot fend for themselves, see Kowalski v. Tesmer, 543 U.S. 125, 125 S.Ct. 564, 160 L.Ed.2d 519 (2004), or the statute is so ambulatory that it really offers no notice at all and therefore is not susceptible to a more precise definition by a state court-for the state rather than the federal judiciary ultimately fleshes out the meaning of state and local enactments.

Adult establishments are not children and can take care of themselves; the "helpless stranger" category does not apply. Marshall's ordinance does not fit the latter category either; the law is full of descriptive material enabling most proprietors to classify most outlets accurately. It is all but impossible to write a law or regulation without some qualitative words such as "substantial," and these do not automatically prevent enforcement. See Thomas v. Chicago Park District, 534 U.S. 316, 122 S.Ct. 775, 151 L.Ed.2d 783 (2002); Second City Music, Inc. v. Chicago, 333 F.3d 846 (7th Cir.2003). If a law making it a crime to mail a firearm "capable of being concealed on the person" is clear enough to be enforced, even though people come in many sizes and wear clothing with different capacity to conceal, see 466 United States v. Powell, 423 U.S. 87, 96 S.Ct. 316, 46 L.Ed.2d 228 (1975), the use of "substantial" does not make a definition intolerably vague. Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 61, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), holds that the phrase "characterized by an emphasis"-certainly no more precise than "substantial"-supplies a core of meaning that the state judiciary may make more concrete. That knocks out any possibility of third-party standing. And we know from Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D-4, L.L.C., 541 U.S. 774, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004), that state and local laws cannot be condemned as prior restraints just because it may take a few weeks for state courts to interpret the ordinance.

Illinois One's other arguments have been considered but do not require discussion. The judgment is affirmed.

All Citations

477 F.3d 461

End of Document

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Declined to Extend by Annex Books, Inc. v. City of Indianapolis, Ind., 7th Cir.(Ind.), September 3, 2009

350 F.3d 631
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

G.M. ENTERPRISES, INC., Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
TOWN OF ST. JOSEPH,
WISCONSIN, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 03–1428.
|
Argued Sept. 16, 2003.
|
Decided Nov. 25, 2003.
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Feb. 09, 2004.

Owner of adult-oriented business sued town pursuant to § 1983, challenging constitutionality of town ordinances that regulated manner in which nude dancers performed in any "sexually oriented business" and prohibited establishments licensed to sell alcoholic beverages from permitting nude dancing on the premises. The United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, John C. Shabaz, J., granted summary judgment for town. Owner appealed. The Court of Appeals, Flaum, Chief Judge, held that: (1) challenged ordinances did not regulate constitutionally protected activity; (2) as an issue of first impression, ordinance prohibiting physical contact between nude dancers and patrons did not violate First Amendment; (3) challenged ordinances were subject to intermediate scrutiny under First Amendment; (4) business failed to undermine validity of town ordinances; and (5) town was not required to establish that studies upon which it relied in enacting ordinances were of sufficient methodological rigor to satisfy Daubert test.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (15)

[1] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Nude dancing is expressive conduct within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Town ordinances that barred establishment from selling alcoholic beverages if dancer performing on premises exposed any "specified anatomical area," and also required that such dancer perform on stage at least 18 inches above and five feet away from patrons, did not regulate activity protected under First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

In the First Amendment context, requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings has only a de minimis effect on the expression conveyed by nude dancing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

First Amendment does not entitle either dancers or patrons to have alcohol available during a presentation of nude or semi-nude dancing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law

Contact between performers and patrons

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Town ordinance prohibiting physical contact between nude dancers and their patrons did not violate First Amendment, inasmuch as physical contact was beyond the scope of protected expressive activity of nude dancing. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law

Nude or semi-nude dancing

Town ordinances that barred establishment from selling alcoholic beverages if dancer performing on premises exposed any "specified anatomical area," and required that such dancer perform on stage at least 18 inches above and five feet away from patrons, had incidental effect on protected expression and thus had to meet First Amendment standards to be valid. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law

Content neutrality

Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

In addressing First Amendment challenge to regulation of adult-oriented business, court must first verify that predominate concerns motivating regulation were with secondary effects of adult speech, rather than content of adult speech, and, if so, court then applies intermediate scrutiny to regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

To survive step of First Amendment analysis requiring that ordinance regulating adult-oriented business be targeted at secondary effects of adult speech to be subject to intermediate scrutiny, rationale of ordinance must be that it will suppress secondary effects, and will do so by means other than by suppressing speech. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law

Nude or semi-nude dancing

Town ordinances barring establishment from selling alcoholic beverages if dancer performing on premises exposed any "specified anatomical area," and requiring that such dancer perform on stage at least 18 inches above and five feet away from patrons, were motivated by interest in reducing secondary effects associated with adult speech, rather than interest in suppressing speech, and thus were subject to intermediate scrutiny under First Amendment, in that ordinances did not prohibit nude dancing, but rather sought to minimize factors that town board believed would heighten probability that adverse secondary effects would result from nude dancing, and restrictions were not triggered if all dancers chose to wear de minimis clothing necessary to cover all "specified anatomical parts." U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Zoning regulations of adult businesses aimed at suppressing secondary effects of adult speech are constitutional so long as they are designed to serve a substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law

Public nudity or indecency

Regulations of public nudity aimed at suppressing secondary effects of such speech are analyzed under O'Brien intermediate scrutiny test, which asks (1) whether regulating body had power to enact regulation, (2) whether regulation furthers important or substantial governmental interest, (3) whether that interest is unrelated to suppression of free expression, and (4) whether regulation's incidental impact on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Adult-oriented business failed to undermine validity, under First Amendment, of town ordinances barring establishment from selling alcoholic beverages if dancer performing on premises exposed any "specified anatomical area," and requiring that such dancer perform on stage at least 18 inches above and five feet away from patrons, despite offering evidence that arguably undermined town's inference of correlation between adult entertainment and adverse secondary effects, including study questioning methodology employed in numerous studies relied upon by town board, evidence of increased property values near business, and evidence that most police calls involving business did not occur when semi-nude dancing was being performed; such evidence showed only that board could have reached different and equally reasonable conclusion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

In reviewing regulation of adult-oriented business under intermediate scrutiny standard for First Amendment claims, court is not required to re-weigh the evidence considered by a legislative body, nor is it empowered to substitute its judgment as to whether a regulation will best serve a community, so long as regulatory body has satisfied requirement that it consider evidence reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem addressed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

To defeat First Amendment challenge to ordinances regulating adult-oriented businesses, town was not required to establish that studies upon which it relied in enacting ordinances were of sufficient methodological rigor to satisfy Daubert test for admissibility of specialized expert testimony, but rather only had to show that it relied on some evidence in reaching reasonable conclusion as to secondary effects of adult-oriented businesses targeted by ordinances. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Adult speech or use in general

For ordinance targeting secondary effects of adult-oriented speech to withstand intermediate scrutiny under First Amendment, municipality need not prove efficacy of its rationale for reducing secondary effects prior to implementation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

633 Randall D.B. Tigue (argued), Minneapolis, MN, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Richard M. Burnham (argued), Lafollette, Godfrey & Kahn, Madison, WI, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before FLAUM, Chief Judge, and DIANE P. WOOD and WILLIAMS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

FLAUM, Chief Judge.

G.M. Enterprises, Inc., owner of the Cajun Club of the Town of St. Joseph, Wisconsin, appeals the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the Town upholding the constitutionality of two town ordinances. G.M. argues that Ordinance 2001–02, which regulates the manner in which nude dancers perform in any "sexually oriented business," and Ordinance 2001–03, which prohibits establishments licensed to sell alcoholic beverages from permitting nude dancing on the premises, violate the First and Fourteenth Amendments. We conclude that the record supports the Town's claim that the ordinances are not an attempt to regulate the expressive content of nude dancing, but that the Town had a reasonable basis for believing that the ordinances will reduce the undesirable "secondary effects" associated with sexually oriented businesses, and therefore, we affirm.

I. Background

In 1999, the Town Board ("Board") of the Town of St. Joseph ("Town"), an unincorporated town in Wisconsin, began to consider whether to regulate sexually oriented businesses located within its borders. The Board collected sixteen studies regarding the relationships between sexually oriented businesses and property values, crime statistics, public health risks, illegal sexual activities such as prostitution, and organized crime. These studies, undertaken in various communities throughout the country, demonstrated a correlation between sexually oriented businesses 634 and negative secondary effects. The Board also consulted a number of judicial opinions from other jurisdictions that address adverse secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. Further, the Board considered police reports of calls made in regards to each licensed liquor establishment in St. Joseph for the period of 1989 through 1999, furnished by the St. Croix County Sheriff's Department. The sheriff informed the Board that the sheriff department had "received far more calls regarding the Cajun Club [the Town's sole sexually oriented business licensed to sell alcoholic beverages] than we have for the other liquor establishment in the Town of St. Joseph that do[es] not offer sexually oriented entertainment such as nude dancing." The studies, judicial opinions, and police reports were available to members of the Board for their consideration.

In June 2001, the Board adopted Ordinance 2001–02, which was codified under the town code, Chapter 153, entitled "Sexually Oriented Businesses." "Sexually oriented businesses," as defined by § 153–4, include "business[es] featuring adult entertainment." "Adult entertainment," as defined by § 153–4, is any "live performance, display or dance of any type which has as a significant or substantial portion ... characterized by an emphasis on ... viewing of specified anatomical areas." § 153–4. According to § 153–4, "[s]pecified anatomical areas" include:

A. The human male genitals in a discernible turgid state, even if fully and opaquely covered; or

B. Less than completely and opaquely covered human genitals, pubic region, anus, anal cleft or cleavage; or

C. Less than completely and opaquely covered nipples or areolas of the human female breast.

Ordinance 2001–02, published in Section 153–3(A), prohibits sexually oriented businesses from allowing any:

> person, employee, entertainer or patron ... to have any physical contact with any entertainer on the premises of a sexually oriented business during any performance ... all performances shall occur on a stage or table that is elevated at least 18 inches above the immediate floor level and shall not be less than 5 feet from any area occupied by any patron.

Further, § 153–5(B) prohibits the "sale, use or consumption of alcoholic beverages on the premises of a sexually oriented business."

The Board stated in § 153–1 that its motivation for passing this ordinance was that it:

> finds that sexually oriented businesses are frequently used for unlawful sexual activities ... and ... concern over sexually transmitted diseases is a legitimate health concern of the Town Board ... there is convincing documented evidence that sexually oriented businesses have a deleterious effect on both the existing businesses around them and the surrounding residential areas adjacent to them, causing increased crime and the downgrading of property values; and, whereas, the Town Board desires to minimize and control these adverse secondary effects... and, whereas it is not the intent of this chapter to suppress any speech activities protected by the First Amendment, but to ... address[ ] the negative secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses.

Concurrent with the adoption of Ordinance No.2001–02, the Board adopted Ordinance No.2001–03, codified under Chapter 114, Article VI of the town code, entitled "Nude Dancing in Licensed Establishments Prohibited." Ordinance 635 No.2001–03 applies to "[a]ny establishment licensed by the Town Board ... to sell alcohol beverages." § 114–19. Under Ordinance No.2001–03,

> [i]t is unlawful for any person to perform or engage in ... any live act, demonstration, dance or exhibition on the premises of a licensed establishment which:
>
> A. Shows his/her genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage with less than a fully opaque covering.
>
> B. Shows the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple and areola.
>
> C. Shows the human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if fully and opaquely covered.

§ 114–17. The Board expressed its intent in regards to Ordinance 2001–03 by stating in Section 114–16 that:

> the Town Board is aware, based on the experiences of other communities, that bars and taverns, in which live, totally nude, non-obscene, erotic dancing occurs may and do generate secondary effects which the Town Board believes are detrimental to the public health, safety and welfare ... the Town Board desires to minimize, prevent and control these adverse effects ... the Town Board has determined that the enactment of an ordinance prohibiting live, totally nude, non-obscene, erotic dancing in bars and taverns licensed to serve alcoholic beverages promotes the goal of minimizing, preventing and controlling the negative secondary effects associated with such activity.

The plaintiff in this action, G.M. Enterprises, operates the Cajun Club ("Club") of St. Joseph. The Club enjoys a St. Joseph liquor license and, for 16 years, has served alcohol and offered semi-nude, topless dance entertainment. It is uncontested that G.M. is a "sexually oriented business" subject to Ordinances Nos.2001–02 and 2001–03, as its dancers expose "specified anatomical areas." G.M. filed a complaint in the United States District Court, Western District of Wisconsin, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and alleging that the ordinances are unconstitutional. The complaint alleged that the Board did not rely on adequate evidence to demonstrate the necessity of the ordinances to combat adverse secondary effects; that the ordinances prohibit more expression than is necessary to combat any adverse secondary effects that might be caused by adult entertainment; and further that Ordinance No.2001–03 expressly conditions the grant of a liquor license, a government benefit, on the surrender of the constitutional right to freedom of expression.

The Town moved for summary judgment, arguing that the Board relied on an adequate evidentiary foundation to reasonably believe that the ordinances would reduce adverse secondary effects. In support of its motion, the Town submitted an affidavit by the city clerk attesting to the Board's access to the studies, cases, and police reports relied upon in its deliberations, and further that every member of the Board "spent time reviewing the materials." The Town also submitted an affidavit by the county sheriff attesting to the fact that more police calls were made in regards to the Club than any other liquor establishment in the Town.

In its opposition to the Town's motion, G.M. questioned the Board's conclusion that the ordinances would have the effect of minimizing adverse secondary effects. G.M. argued that the Board did not actually review or rely on the studies and cases that it gathered. G.M. presented a study by Bryant Paul, Daniel Linz & Bradley 636 Shafer that finds the majority of the studies the Board collected "fundamentally unsound," and methodologically flawed, and also submitted an affidavit of Daniel Linz that discusses the study. G.M. further argued that the Board's findings are contrary to the locality's actual experience, and, in support, referred to a 1993 study of the county where the Club is located that states that "St. Croix county has not experienced any major problems with adult entertainment establishments." In addition, G.M. submitted an affidavit stating that the property values near the Club have increased over time. G.M. contested the Town's inference that the Club's entertainment generates secondary effects by submitting an affidavit of the president of G.M. Enterprises which stated that the majority of calls to the police regarding incidents at the Club were generated during the hours when no nude or semi-nude dancing entertainment was offered. G.M. also submitted a statement by the sheriff that the volume of police calls generated by the Club were unrelated to nude dancing.

The district court entered judgment in favor of the Town, finding that the ordinances do not impermissibly infringe on G.M.'s constitutional rights, and further that G.M.'s challenge to the Town's secondary effects rationale did not raise an issue of material fact to allow the case to proceed to trial. G.M. now appeals.

II. Discussion

We review the District Court's grant of summary judgment de novo, construing the facts in the record in favor of G.M., the non-moving party. Ben's Bar v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 707 (7th Cir.2003).

[1] [2] Nude dancing is expressive conduct "within the outer ambit of the First Amendment's protection." City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000). The ordinances at issue regulate nude dancing in two ways. If a dancer exposes any "specified anatomical area," then the establishment where he or she performs must (1) not sell any alcoholic beverages, § 153–3(B), § 114–17, and (2) require that he or she perform on a stage at least eighteen inches above and five feet away from patrons, as required by § 153–3(A). However, neither requirement is implicated if dancers cover all "specified anatomical areas" during performances, and neither ordinance prohibits nude dancing outright.

[3] [4] [5] [6] Still, plaintiff argues that Ordinances Nos.2001–02 and 2001–03 regulate constitutionally protected activity. We disagree. The requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings has only a "de minimis " effect on the expression conveyed by nude dancing. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382; Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 708. Further, the "First Amendment does not entitle ... dancers, or ... patrons, to have alcohol available during a 'presentation' of nude or semi-nude dancing." Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 726. And, while the constitutionality of a restriction prohibiting physical contact between nude dancers and their patrons is an issue of first impression in this circuit, the Fifth Circuit has twice had the occasion to consider similar restrictions and has found them to be constitutional on the grounds that physical contact is beyond the scope of the protected expressive activity of nude dancing. Hang On, Inc. v. City of Arlington, 65 F.3d 1248, 1253 (5th Cir.1995); Baby Dolls Topless Saloons, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 295 F.3d 471, 484 (5th Cir.2002). Yet, as these regulations do have an incidental effect on protected expression, they must meet constitutional standards to be upheld.

The parties submit that, in order to determine the correct constitutional analysis 637 to apply to the ordinances at issue, this Court must first decide whether the ordinances intend to regulate the expressive element of nude dancing, or whether they are neutral as to content. In the Town's view, the ordinances seek to regulate only the adverse secondary effects associated with nude dancing, and are thus content neutral. In support, the Town cites City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). In Renton, the Supreme Court held that an adult entertainment zoning ordinance was a " 'content-neutral' regulation of speech because while 'the ordinance treats theaters that specialize in adult films differently from other kinds of theaters ....[it] is aimed not at the content of the films shown ... but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community.' " Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 716 (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925) (emphasis in original). In contrast, the plaintiff argues that the secondary effects rationale of Renton is no longer good law, and further that the ordinances are content based and therefore subject to strict scrutiny.

[7] In light of the Supreme Court's divided ruling in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), we need not decide whether the ordinances are content based or content neutral, so long as we first conclude that they target not "the activity, but ... its side effects," see Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 447, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment), and then apply intermediate scrutiny. In Alameda Books, the plurality upheld at summary judgment a Los Angeles ordinance that prohibited multiple adult entertainment businesses from operating in the same building. The plurality assumed the ordinance to be content neutral, but did not consider the issue directly due to the fact that the Ninth Circuit had not addressed it below. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728. However, the plurality reaffirmed that the first step of the Renton analysis is to verify that the "predominate concerns motivating the ordinance were with the secondary effects of adult speech, and not with the content of the adult speech." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440–41, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (internal quotations omitted). In his concurring opinion, Justice Kennedy agreed that the Renton test provided the appropriate level of scrutiny for a regulation that is "targeted not at the activity, but at its side effects." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 447, 122 S.Ct. 1728. And, employing an approach similar to the plurality's, Justice Kennedy insisted that a municipality first "advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact," before a court applies intermediate scrutiny. Id. at 449, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Although, unlike the plurality, Justice Kennedy wrote that zoning ordinances of adult businesses are "content based," see id., he agreed with the plurality that "[n]evertheless, ... the central holding of Renton is sound: A zoning ordinance that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny." Id. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728. As Justice Kennedy's concurrence is the narrowest opinion joining the judgment of the Court, it is the controlling authority under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977). Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 722.

[8] [9] Under the first step of the analysis set forth by both Justice Kennedy and the plurality, we must first determine whether the ordinances at issue are motivated by an interest in reducing the secondary 638 effects associated with the speech, rather than an interest in reducing the speech itself, before turning to Renton. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440–41, 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728. To survive this step of the analysis, "the rationale of the ordinance must be that it will suppress secondary effects—and not by suppressing speech." Id. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The Town has met this burden. Neither of the ordinances prohibit nude dancing; rather, they merely seek to minimize the factors that the Board believed would heighten the probability that adverse secondary effects would result from nude dancing: physical proximity between the dancers and patrons, and the consumption of alcohol by patrons. Requiring that adult entertainment establishments maintain a minimal physical buffer between patrons and dancers does not reduce the availability of nude dance entertainment. And, "alcohol prohibition is, as a practical matter, the least restrictive means of furthering the ... interest in combating the secondary effects resulting from the combination of adult entertainment and alcohol consumption." Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 725. Further, if all dancers choose to wear the de minimus clothing necessary to cover all "specified anatomical parts," then neither the physical proximity nor alcohol prohibition requirements are implicated. Thus, as the ordinances will leave the availability of nude dance entertainment substantially the same, under Justice Kennedy's test of "how speech will fare under the city's ordinance[s]," Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 450, 122 S.Ct. 1728, the Town has demonstrated that its goal is to minimize secondary effects, rather than the speech itself.

[10] [11] Therefore, we move to the second step of the Renton analysis. In Renton, the Court set forth the intermediate scrutiny test for zoning regulations of adult businesses aimed at suppressing secondary effects. Such regulations are constitutional "so long as they are designed to serve a substantial government interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, reaffirmed in Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Regulations of public nudity, however, are analyzed under the intermediate scrutiny test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382. The O'Brien test asks (1) whether the regulating body had the power to enact the regulation; (2) whether the regulation furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; (3) whether that interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and (4) whether the regulation's incidental impact on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

Ordinances Nos. 2001–02 and 2001–03 are neither public indecency nor zoning regulations. They regulate the manner in which patrons view nude dancing; specifically, the patron's physical proximity to the nude dancer and the patron's access to alcoholic beverages in establishments where nude dancing is provided. Because this case concerns only the "substantial government interest" prong that is found in both the O'Brien and Renton tests, we need not decide which test of intermediate scrutiny provides the correct analytical framework for these ordinances. Indeed, this Court has held that the constitutional standard for "evaluating adult entertainment regulations, be they zoning ordinances or public indecency statutes, are virtually indistinguishable." Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 714.

[12] The issue before this Court is what quality and quantum of evidence a 639 regulating body must consider in order to demonstrate that it has a reasonable basis for believing that the regulated activity generates adverse secondary effects, the reduction of which is a "substantial government interest" under the Renton or O'Brien tests. This issue was most recently before the Supreme Court in Alameda Books; in the plurality's words, the case required the court to "clarify the standard for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 433, 122 S.Ct. 1728. In Alameda Books, the plurality reaffirmed that "a municipality may rely on any evidence that is 'reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Alameda Books at 438, 122 S.Ct. 1728, (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925). The plurality upheld an ordinance that prohibited the operation of multiple adult entertainment business in the same building, even though the regulating body did not rely upon a study that specifically addressed whether the concentration of such establishments in a single building would result in a higher incidence of adverse secondary effects. Id. at 437, 122 S.Ct. 1728. According to the plurality, it was reasonable for the regulating body to infer—from a somewhat dated study that concluded that the concentrated growth of adult entertainment establishments in a particular neighborhood led to increased crime there—that the concentration of adult establishments in a single building would lead to a similar increase in crime. Id. at 435–38, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The plurality did not require that a regulating body rely on research that targeted the exact activity it wished to regulate, so long as the research it relied upon reasonably linked the regulated activity to adverse secondary effects.

However, the plurality cautioned that:

> a municipality's evidence must fairly support the municipality's rationale .... If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standards set forth in Renton. If plaintiffs succeed in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance.

Id. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Plaintiff argues that it has "substantially challenged the validity of the town's determination that its regulation was justified by the need to combat adverse secondary effects of adult entertainment," and has therefore precluded summary judgment by shifting the burden back to the Town to supplement the record. We disagree. Plaintiff submitted some evidence that might arguably undermine the Town's inference of the correlation of adult entertainment and adverse secondary effects, including a study that questions the methodology employed in the numerous studies relied upon by the Board; evidence of an increase of property values near the Club; and evidence that the majority of police calls in regards to the Club originated during periods of time when no semi-nude dancing occurred. Although this evidence shows that the Board might have reached a different and equally reasonable conclusion regarding the relationship between adverse secondary effects and sexually oriented businesses, it is not sufficient to vitiate the result reached in the Board's legislative process.

[13] Alameda Books does not require a court to re-weigh the evidence considered by a legislative body, nor does it empower 640 a court to substitute its judgment in regards to whether a regulation will best serve a community, so long as the regulatory body has satisfied the Renton requirement that it consider evidence "reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem" addressed. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 445, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment) ("in my view, the plurality's application of Renton might constitute a subtle expansion, with which I do not concur."). Wrote Justice Kennedy, "as a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners ... the Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728. The plurality expressed similar support for judicial deference to local lawmakers: "we must acknowledge that the Los Angeles City Council is in a better position than the Judiciary to gather and evaluate data on local problems." Id. at 440, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

[14] [15] Plaintiff argues that its complaint must survive summary judgment because the evidence relied upon by the Board does not meet the standards of Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786, 125 L.Ed.2d 469 (1993). Under the plaintiff's view, the Town cannot demonstrate a reasonable belief in a causal relationship between the activity regulated and secondary effects, as required by Alameda Books and Renton, unless the studies it relied upon are of sufficient methodological rigor to be admissible under Daubert. This argument is completely unfounded. The plurality in Alameda Books bluntly rejected Justice Souter's suggestion that the municipality be required to present empirical data in support of its contention: "such a requirement would go too far in undermining our settled position that municipalities must be given a 'reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions' to address the secondary effects of protected speech." Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 439, 122 S.Ct. 1728. Further, the purpose of the evidentiary requirement of Alameda Books is to require municipalities to demonstrate reliance on some evidence in reaching a reasonable conclusion about the secondary effects. The municipality need not "prove the efficacy of its rationale for reducing secondary effects prior to implementation." Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 720. A requirement of Daubert-quality evidence would impose an unreasonable burden on the legislative process, and further would be logical only if Alameda Books required a regulating body to prove that its regulation would—undeniably—reduce adverse secondary effects. Alameda Books clearly did not impose such a requirement.

III. Conclusion

For the reasons discussed, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

350 F.3d 631, 62 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. 1656

End of Document

466 F.3d 550
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

ANDY'S RESTAURANT & LOUNGE, INC., and Rusben Corp. d/b/a/ Trucker's World Book & Video Store, Plaintiffs–Appellants, Pandora's Showclub, K.K.S., Inc. d/b/a Variety Video, J.A. Sales, Inc. d/b/a Video Heaven, Terrence L. Crossley d/b/a/ Jokers Club, Players Club, and Corvette Club, Plaintiffs–Intervenors/Appellants,
v.
CITY OF GARY, Defendant–Appellee.

Nos. 05–2225, 05–2287, 05–2288.
|
Argued Feb. 21, 2006.
|
Decided Oct. 11, 2006.

Synopsis

Background: Businesses brought action challenging constitutionality of city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, Andrew P. Rodovich, United States Magistrate Judge, granted summary judgment in favor of city and plaintiffs appealed.

[Holding:] The Court of Appeals, Kanne, Circuit Judge, held that city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses was reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate undesirable secondary effects.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (7)

[1] Constitutional Law
Zoning and Land Use

Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Intermediate scrutiny under the First Amendment is applied if a challenged zoning ordinance or public indecency statute is found to be either content neutral or for the purpose of decreasing secondary effects of speech, rather than speech itself. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

City ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, by establishing operating hours, prohibiting physical contact, requiring open-booths, and containing sanitation provisions, was reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate undesirable secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses, in lawsuit challenging constitutionality of ordinance in light of free speech clause of First Amendment; ordinance emphasized its purpose was to control adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses, reports before city council primarily addressed secondary effects, and hour regulations and open-booth requirements similar to those in ordinance had previously been upheld as narrowly tailored. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Federal courts evaluating the predominant concerns behind the enactment of a city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses may do so by examining a wide variety of materials including, but not limited to, the text of the ordinance, any preamble or express legislative findings associated with it, and studies and information of which legislators were clearly aware.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Laws regulating sexually oriented businesses pass intermediate scrutiny under the First Amendment so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

On judicial review of ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, laws are designed to serve a substantial government interest when the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Sexually oriented businesses

The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting an ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Federal Courts
In general;necessity

Arguments not raised in the district court are waived on appeal.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

551 Edward J. Wartman, McHie, Myers, McHie & Enslen, Hammond, IN, Richard P. Busse, Valparaiso, IN, for Plaintiffs–Appellants.

Scott D. Bergthold (argued), Chattanooga, TN, for Defendant–Appellee.

Deidre Baumann (argued), Baumann, Shuldiner, Chicago, IL, Intervenors/Appellants.

Donald W. Wruck, III, Giorgi & Associates, Crown Point, IN, for Intervenor–Appellant.

Before BAUER, KANNE, and ROVNER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

KANNE, Circuit Judge.

This appeal concerns the constitutionality of an ordinance enacted by the City of Gary ("City") affecting "sexually oriented businesses." In a thorough and well reasoned opinion, Magistrate Judge Rodovich granted summary judgment for the City on the declaratory judgment action filed by some of the businesses affected by the ordinance. We affirm.

I. HISTORY

The City adopted the challenged Ordinance No.2000–83 ("the Ordinance") on December 19, 2000. Its preamble states the City's concern that "sexually oriented businesses," among other things, "have a deleterious effect on both the existing businesses around them and the surrounding residential areas adjacent to them." By enacting the Ordinance, the City "desire[d] to minimize and control these adverse effects and thereby protect the health, safety, and welfare of the citizenry ... and deter the spread of urban blight." The intent of the Ordinance, the preamble states, is "to enact a content neutral ordinance 552 which address the secondary effects of sexually oriented business" while not "suppress[ing] any speech activities protected by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution." In support of its findings, the Ordinance cites a number of federal cases dealing with similar laws affecting sexually oriented businesses and eighteen reports detailing the secondary effects of these businesses.

The Ordinance defines "sexually oriented business" broadly, including a number of businesses separately defined by the Ordinance, which, generally speaking, means all manner of adult bookstores, arcades, novelty stores, theaters, and dancing establishments. It includes operating hours of 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m., seven days a week, and a prohibition on any physical contact between employees appearing in a semi-nude condition (i.e., dancers) and customers. It also has an open-booth requirement, which prohibits the placement of doors, curtains or other materials on viewing booths so that an employee of the business is able to look into it at all times. The Ordinance also contains numerous sanitation provisions, including a prohibition on rugs or carpet, a requirement of "non-porous, easily cleanable surfaces," and waste disposal procedures, as well as other obligations for employees, such as ensuring that no sexual activity occurs on the premises.

All sexually oriented businesses covered by the Ordinance are required to obtain a license. Once an application is filed, "the City Comptroller shall immediately issue a Temporary License to the applicant," which only "expire[s] upon the final decision of the City to deny or grant the license." The Ordinance requires that a permanent license be issued, unless (1) the applicant is below the age of 18, (2) the applicant fails to provide, or provides false information on the application, (3) the fee is not paid, (4) the applicant has committed certain violations of the Ordinance within the last year, or (5) the physical premises of the business do not comply with the Ordinance's requirements. A license can be suspended on the basis of a knowing violation of the Ordinance, and revoked if a knowing violation occurs within twelve months of a suspension.

Denial, suspension, or revocation of a license only occurs after a hearing at which the aggrieved party has the opportunity to be heard. If any adverse action is taken, the party must be notified of the right to appeal to a court of competent jurisdiction. During the pendency of any such appeal, the City must issue the aggrieved party a provisional license, which allows the business to stay open until final judgment is rendered by a court.

II. ANALYSIS

We review the district court's summary judgment ruling de novo, viewing all material disputes of fact in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Moser v. Ind. Dep't of Corr., 406 F.3d 895, 900 (7th Cir.2005). The plaintiffs' arguments on appeal rely upon the First Amendment, Fourth Amendment, and Indiana law.

A. First Amendment

The plaintiffs' argument can be organized as follows: the Ordinance discriminates on the basis of content, and, therefore, should be analyzed under strict scrutiny; even when analyzed under lesser, intermediate scrutiny, the City has not met its burden of justifying the Ordinance; and that the Ordinance acts as an impermissible prior restraint on speech.

To assess whether the Ordinance violates the First Amendment, both parties echo the district court's analysis by relying on the analytical framework set forth by City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, 553 Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), and City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 47–50, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). The Alameda Books/Renton line of cases deal with zoning ordinances aimed at dispersing adult entertainment businesses throughout a community, which are considered time, place, and manner restrictions. Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion). Another line of Supreme Court cases, however, uses the intermediate scrutiny test of United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), to review public indecency statutes, which are considered laws affecting expressive conduct. See City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion); Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 565–66, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality opinion).

[1] There is some confusion about which line of cases should be used in evaluating laws like the Ordinance, which do not fall neatly into either category. See Ben's Bar, Inc. v. Village of Somerset, 316 F.3d 702, 714 (7th Cir.2003) (expressing uncertainty as whether to analyze an adult entertainment liquor regulation "as a time, place, and manner restriction [under Alameda Books/Renton] or as a regulation of expressive conduct under [Pap's A.M./ Barnes]") (citing LLEH, Inc. v. Wichita County, Texas, 289 F.3d 358, 365 (5th Cir.2002)). And for most cases, it may not matter which test is employed. Id. (noting that the analysis between the two lines of cases may be "entirely interchangeable"). The crucial analytical step of both tests is the same; which is to say, that under both lines of cases, intermediate scrutiny is applied if the challenged law is found to be either content neutral or for the purpose of decreasing secondary effects. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J. concurring) ("A zoning restriction that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny."); R.V.S., L.L.C. v. City of Rockford, 361 F.3d 402, 408 (7th Cir.2004) ("[O]nly after confirming that a zoning ordinance's purpose is to combat the secondary effects of speech do we employ Renton's intermediate scrutiny test."). Cf. Pap's A.M. 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) ("We now clarify that government restrictions on public nudity such as the ordinance at issue here should be evaluated under the framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech.").

We need not choose between either line of cases (nor need we rule that the differences between them are immaterial) because both parties proceed under the general framework of Alameda Books/Renton, which we will employ, while referring to other case law as appropriate, as the parties do.[1] Moreover, all of the issues raised by plaintiffs are clearly controlled by the Court's precedents or ours, and, therefore, our resolution of the issues would be same under either line of cases.

1 Without any elaboration, the plaintiffs do state in the middle of their brief, "Moreover, the District Court has completely ignored the fact that [the Ordinance] is not a 'land use' regulation, as was the regulation in Renton." We do not, and cannot, read this mere sentence as an argument that it is improper to apply, as the district court did, the Alameda Books/Renton line of cases to the Ordinance. Kramer v. Banc of Am. Sec., LLC, 355 F.3d 961, 964 n. 1 (7th Cir.2004) ("We have repeatedly made clear that perfunctory and undeveloped arguments that are unsupported by pertinent authority, are waived (even where those arguments raise constitutional issues).") (quoting United States v. Berkowitz, 927 F.2d 1376, 1384 (7th Cir.1991)).

554 1. Secondary Effects/Content Neutrality

[2] The plaintiffs argue that the Ordinance does not regulate the secondary effects of speech, but, rather, directly regulates speech.[2] This determination is crucial, because if the Ordinance only combats secondary effects of otherwise protected speech, then it is considered the equivalent of content neutral, and, therefore, need only survive intermediate scrutiny. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 448, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J. concurring); R. V.S., 361 F.3d at 408. Cf. Pap's A.M. 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (explaining that restrictions on public nudity are content neutral and should be analyzed under O'Brien intermediate scrutiny).

2 The plaintiffs concede that the Ordinance passes the first step of the Alameda Books/Renton analysis in that it does not ban all speech. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434–35, 122 S.Ct. 1728.

[3] Our inquiry in this regard "is best conceived as [one] into the purpose behind an ordinance." R.V.S., 361 F.3d at 407–08 (citations omitted). Our task is "to verify that the 'predominant concerns' motivating the ordinance 'were with the secondary effects of the adult [speech], and not with the content of adult [speech].' " Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 440–41, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925). "Federal courts evaluating the 'predominant concerns' behind the enactment of a [n] ... ordinance ... may do so by examining a wide variety of materials including, but not limited to, the text of the ... ordinance ..., any preamble or express legislative findings associated with it, and studies and information of which legislators were clearly aware." R.V.S., 361 F.3d at 409 n. 5 (citing Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d 702, 723 n. 28).

A review of those materials makes clear that the Ordinance is directed toward secondary effects. The Ordinance emphasizes that its purpose is to control the "adverse effects" of sexually oriented businesses and the reports before the council primarily addressed secondary effects. Plaintiffs provide nothing of relevance in response. One argument they do make is that the Ordinance contains a shocking admission that it is not concerned with secondary effects—the City's belief that sexually oriented businesses, because of their very nature, downgrade the quality of life. There is no such admission in the Ordinance; plaintiffs merely infer that this must be the City's thought process. More importantly, plaintiffs fail to grasp that the concept of "secondary effects," as developed in Renton and Alameda Books, assumes that the properly regulated externalities are caused by protected speech. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 445–48, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J. concurring) (explaining that an ordinance is content neutral and addresses secondary effects "even if [it] identifies the [secondary effects] by reference to the speech ... that is, even if the measure is in that sense content based").

Plaintiffs also posit that a city council cannot rely on reports and studies when creating an ordinance because such things are hearsay, or, it might be that the argument is a city council can rely on these documents in creating an ordinance, but cannot later use the fact of its reliance on such reports in warding off a constitutional challenge in court because such reports are hearsay. Plaintiffs finish this argument by telling us we cannot look to the preamble of the ordinance because it is hearsay. Nevertheless, we feel comfortable relying on the findings and preamble of the statute and the reports cited therein to 555 determine that the Ordinance is content neutral. See, e.g., Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (explaining that the city could "reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in Renton," as well as examining the findings and preamble of the city's ordinance to determine content neutrality); Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 723–24 (examining the preamble and findings of the challenged statute to determine whether the challenged statute should be analyzed under intermediate scrutiny).

2. Intermediate Scrutiny

[4] Laws pass this lower level of scrutiny "so long as they are designed to serve a substantial government[al] interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." R.V.S., 361 F.3d at 408 (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925, citing Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728); see also Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 301–02, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (explaining that under O'Brien, a content-neutral restriction must "further[ ] an important or substantial government interest" and be "no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest").

[5] [6] Laws are designed to serve a substantial government interest when the "municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance." R.V.S., 361 F.3d at 408 (quoting Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 724). "In evaluating the sufficiency of this connection, courts must 'examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects.' " Id. (quoting Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 441, 122 S.Ct. 1728). "The First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925; see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 451, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (Kennedy, J. concurring) ("[W]e have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required."). A city may rely upon previous judicial opinions evaluating secondary effects the city desires to regulate. Pap's A.M. 529 U.S. at 297, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (explaining that the city could "reasonably rely on the evidentiary foundation set forth in Renton and American Mini Theatres to the effect that secondary effects are caused by the presence of even one adult entertainment establishment in a given neighborhood").

The evidence relied upon by the City is more than adequate to establish the secondary effects regulated by the Ordinance. The record contains numerous studies evidencing the secondary effects of sexually oriented businesses. Moreover, we have previously affirmed the only two portions of the Ordinance plaintiffs specifically attack—the hour regulation and open-booth requirement. In Schultz v. City of Cumberland, an hour regulation similar to that imposed by the Ordinance was upheld by this court against a First Amendment challenge. 228 F.3d 831, 846 (7th Cir.2000) (upholding a portion of an ordinance "limiting the business hours for sexually oriented businesses to between 10 a.m. and midnight, Monday through Saturday."). And we have also upheld open-booth requirements similar to the one in the Ordinance. See Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 1003–04 (7th Cir.2002) (explaining that the open-booth requirement was a valid time, place, and manner restriction); Matney v. County of 556 Kenosha, 86 F.3d 692 (7th Cir.1996) (same).

To counter these decisions the plaintiffs simply nitpick at the relevance and reliability of the City's studies, claiming that they are either too old or inapplicable because they discuss problems in other cities and not Gary. All of these arguments are without merit. Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925; G.M. Enterprises, Inc. v. Town of St. Joseph, 350 F.3d 631, 639–40 (7th Cir.2003); Ben's Bar, 316 F.3d at 725.

Faced with our precedent and the City's substantial evidentiary record, the plaintiffs present nothing of relevance. "Instead, [they] have simply asserted that the council's evidentiary proof is lacking. In the absence of any reason to doubt it, the city's expert judgment should be credited." Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 298, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion); see also Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 438–39, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) ("If plaintiffs fail to cast direct doubt on [the city's] rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings, the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton.").

We also reject plaintiffs' argument that the Ordinance is not sufficiently narrow. See Alameda Books, 535 U.S. at 434, 122 S.Ct. 1728 (plurality opinion) (explaining that a content neutral ordinance designed to serve a substantial government interest must still leave "reasonable alternative avenues of communication."); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301–02, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (noting that the fourth factor of the O'Brien test is "that the restriction is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the government interest"). We have previously held that similar hour restrictions and open-booth requirements are narrowly tailored, and we stick to those rulings here. Pleasureland Museum, Inc., 288 F.3d at 1004 ("[W]e have repeatedly held that regulations like the Open Booth Restrictions leave open ample alternative channels of communication.") (citations omitted); Schultz, 228 F.3d at 846 (explaining that an hour restriction similar to that of this case was "not 'substantially broader than necessary,' even if more restrictive than absolutely necessary") (quoting Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989)).

3. Prior Restraint/Prompt Judicial Review

Plaintiffs argue that the Ordinance is invalid because it does not demand prompt judicial review of a decision to deny, suspend, or revoke a license. Plaintiffs also concede that this argument is foreclosed by our decision in Graff v. City of Chicago, but nevertheless ask us to reconsider. 9 F.3d 1309 (7th Cir.1993) (en banc) (holding that common law review of a licensing decision was sufficient). We see no reason to reconsider Graff on this record, especially where the Ordinance requires continuous operation under a provisional license until the culmination of judicial review. See also City of Littleton v. Z.J. Gifts D–4, L.L.C., 541 U.S. 774, 781–84, 124 S.Ct. 2219, 159 L.Ed.2d 84 (2004) (explaining that ordinary judicial review of a licensing decision was sufficient where the ordinance was content neutral and only conditioned operation on neutral, nondiscriminatory criteria).

B. Fourth Amendment and Indiana Law

[7] Plaintiffs argue that the Ordinance allows for searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment and that the Ordinance is preempted by Indiana Law. Both of these arguments are waived because the 557 plaintiff failed to raise them before the district court. See Estremera v. United States, 442 F.3d 580, 587 (7th Cir.2006) ("arguments not raised in the district court are waived on appeal") (quoting Belom v. National Futures Ass'n, 284 F.3d 795, 799 (7th Cir.2002)). When moving for summary judgment, the City defended an inspection provision in the Ordinance against a possible Fourth Amendment challenge by arguing first, that sexually oriented businesses have no reasonable expectation of privacy in the public areas of their premises during business hours; and, second, that if plaintiffs were able to establish a privacy interest implicating the Fourth Amendment that the businesses were "closely-regulated industries" for which no warrant is necessary. [3] See New York v. Burger, 482 U.S. 691, 702–03, 107 S.Ct. 2636, 96 L.Ed.2d 601 (1987) (applying the "closely-regulated industry" exception to the Fourth Amendment). In response, the plaintiffs simply assumed that the inspection provision implicated the Fourth Amendment, and only argued that sexually oriented businesses are not closely-regulated industries—despite the fact that the Ordinance only allows inspections in areas open to the public during business hours.

3 The inspection provision states:

> (A) Sexually oriented business operators and sexually oriented business employees shall permit officers or agents of the City of Gary who are performing functions connected with the enforcement of this Chapter to inspect the portions of the sexually oriented business premises where patrons are permitted, for the purpose of ensuring compliance with this Chapter, at any time the sexually oriented > business is occupied by patrons or open for business.

> (B) The provisions of this Section do not apply to areas of an adult motel which are currently being rented by a customer for use as a permanent or temporary habitation.

As the district court explained, plaintiffs "simply ignore[d] the law's clear mandate" that the inspection provision did not implicate a privacy interest. Finding persuasive the City's unrebutted argument on this point, the district court did not address the plaintiffs' argument that adult businesses were not "closely-regulated industries." Plaintiffs' failure to argue the existence of a privacy interest implicated by the Ordinance below waives the issue on appeal. In any event any concerns about privacy violations are abated by the language of the statute that limits inspection to assuring compliance with the specific requirements of the Ordinance—that is the open booth requirement, the hours of operation restrictions, the prohibition of physical contact, and other requirements as specifically listed in the Ordinance. Ordinance at § 7(A). In other words, as counsel assured the panel at oral argument, officers or agents of the City cannot enter non-public areas of the premises, cannot enter when the business is closed to the public, cannot remove anything from the premises, cannot take pictures or videos, cannot ask patrons to disclose their names, or do anything other than check for compliance with the requirements of the Ordinance. (Oral argument at 25–30 min). Accordingly, we will not disturb the district court's ruling that the Ordinance does not violate the Fourth Amendment.

Plaintiffs also attempt to raise a preemption argument relying on Indiana law. Before the plaintiffs filed their brief in the district court, the Indiana Attorney General asked for permission, which was granted, to file an amicus brief with the district court addressing the issue "that state alcoholic beverage statutes preempt local regulation of adult entertainment establishments." See Ind.Code § 7.1–3–9–6 (prohibiting certain local interference with liquor licenses provided by the state).

558 The plaintiffs then filed their brief opposing summary judgment without raising this issue. The very next day the Indiana Attorney General informed the district court that no amicus brief would be filed because no state law issues had been raised by the briefing.

Plaintiffs now attempt to argue that the Ordinance is preempted by Indiana law. But their earlier approach in the district court has deprived us of an analysis by the magistrate judge (and the views of the Indiana Attorney General), and, therefore, plaintiffs have waived the issue. See Estremera, 442 F.3d at 587.

III. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the grant of summary judgment in favor of the City of Gary is AFFIRMED.

All Citations

466 F.3d 550

End of Document

316 F.3d 702
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

BEN'S BAR, INC., Plaintiff–Appellant,
v.
VILLAGE OF SOMERSET, Defendant–Appellee.

No. 01–4351.
|
Argued May 30, 2002.
|
Decided Jan. 17, 2003.

Tavern and two of its nude dancers brought § 1983 action against city, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against enforcement of ordinance that prohibited sale, use, or consumption of alcohol on premises of "Sexually Oriented Businesses," alleging violation of their right to freedom of expression under First and Fourteenth Amendments. The United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, Barbara B. Crabb, Chief Judge, granted judgment for city. Plaintiffs appealed. The Court of Appeals, Manion, Circuit Judge, held that municipal ordinance was reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate undesirable "secondary effects" associated with barroom adult entertainment.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (12)

[1] Constitutional Law
Conduct, protection of

Constitutional Law
Exercise of police power;relationship to governmental interest or public welfare

Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

A governmental regulation is sufficiently justified, despite its incidental impact upon expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment, if: (1) it is within the constitutional power of the government; (2) it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; (3) the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free speech; and (4) the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

A time, place, and manner regulation of adult entertainment will be upheld under the First Amendment if it is designed to serve a substantial government interest and reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain available; additionally, a time, place, and manner regulation must be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech and narrowly tailored to serve the government's interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

14 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Sexually Oriented Businesses;Adult Businesses or Entertainment

Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use in general

The analytical frameworks and standards utilized in evaluating adult entertainment regulations under the First Amendment, be they zoning ordinances or public indecency statutes, are virtually indistinguishable. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

A liquor regulation prohibiting the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments does not violate the First Amendment if: (1) the state is regulating pursuant to a legitimate governmental power; (2) the regulation does not completely prohibit adult entertainment; (3) the regulation is aimed not at the suppression of expression, but rather at combating the negative secondary effects caused by adult entertainment establishments; and (4) the regulation is designed to serve a substantial government interest, narrowly tailored, and reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain available, or, alternatively, the regulation furthers an important or substantial government interest and the restriction on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential in furtherance of that interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

23 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Prohibition against intoxicating liquors in adult establishments

Intoxicating Liquors
Licensing and regulation

Municipal ordinance, that restricted sale or consumption of alcohol on premises of businesses that served as venues for adult entertainment, was reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate undesirable "secondary effects" associated with barroom adult entertainment, in § 1983 lawsuit under free speech clause of First Amendment; regulation of alcohol was within city's general police powers, regulation did not have any impact on tavern's ability to offer nude or semi-nude dancing to its patrons, and liquor prohibition was no greater than was essential to further city's substantial interest in combating secondary effects resulting from combination of nude and semi-nude dancing and alcohol. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983.

33 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality

The level of First Amendment scrutiny a court uses to determine whether a regulation of adult entertainment is constitutional depends on the purpose for which the regulation was adopted; if the regulation was enacted to restrict certain viewpoints or modes of expression, it is presumptively invalid and subject to strict scrutiny, if, on the other hand, the regulation was adopted for a purpose unrelated to the suppression of expression, e.g., to regulate nonexpressive conduct or the time, place, and manner of expressive conduct, a court must apply a less demanding intermediate scrutiny. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Administrative Law and Procedure
Construction

Municipal Corporations
Construction and operation

Statutes
Language and intent, will, purpose, or policy

Federal courts evaluating the "predominant concerns" behind the enactment of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or the like, may do so by examining a wide variety of materials including, but not limited to, the text of the regulation or ordinance, any preamble or express legislative findings associated with it, and studies and information of which legislators were clearly aware.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Regulations of adult entertainment receive intermediate scrutiny under the First Amendment if they are designed not to suppress the "content" of erotic expression, but rather to address the negative secondary effects caused by such expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

Regulations that prohibit nude dancing where alcohol is served or consumed are independent of expressive or communicative elements of conduct, and, therefore, are treated as if they were content-neutral under the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Intoxicating Liquors

In the context of the First Amendment, whether an adult entertainment liquor regulation is treated as a time, place, and manner regulation, or as a regulation of expressive conduct, a court is required to ask whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

13 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

In order to justify a content-based time, place, and manner restriction under the First Amendment, or a content-based regulation of expressive conduct, a municipality must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact; the regulation may identify the speech based on content, but only as a shorthand for identifying the secondary effects outside, and, furthermore, a municipality may not assert that it will reduce secondary effects by reducing speech in the same proportion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

The First Amendment does not entitle a tavern, its dancers, or its patrons, to have alcohol available during a "presentation" of nude or semi-nude dancing; even though the First Amendment does require that such establishments be given a reasonable opportunity to disseminate the speech at issue, a "reasonable opportunity" does not include a concern for economic considerations. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

704 Matthew A. Biegert (argued), Doar, Drill & Skow, New Richmond, WI, for Plaintiff-Appellant.

Ted Waskowski, Meg Vergeront (argued), Stafford Rosenbaum, Madison, WI, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before FLAUM, Chief Judge, and WOOD, Jr. and MANION, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

MANION, Circuit Judge.

Ben's Bar, Inc. operates a tavern in the Village of Somerset, Wisconsin, that formerly served as a venue for nude and semi-nude dancing. After the Village enacted an ordinance that, in part, prohibited the sale, use, or consumption of alcohol on the premises of "Sexually Oriented Businesses," Ben's Bar and two of its dancers filed suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the enforcement of the ordinance. The plaintiffs' complaint alleged, among other things, that the ordinance's alcohol prohibition violated their right to freedom of expression under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Shortly thereafter, plaintiffs filed a motion for a preliminary injunction, which the district court denied. The Village then filed a motion for summary judgment, which the district court granted. Ben's Bar appeals this decision. Because we conclude that the record sufficiently supports the Village's claim that the liquor prohibition is a reasonable attempt to reduce or eliminate the undesirable "secondary effects" associated with barroom adult entertainment, rather than an attempt to regulate the expressive content of nude dancing, we affirm the district court's judgment.

I.

On October 24, 2000, the Village of Somerset, a municipal corporation located in St. Croix County, Wisconsin ("Village"), enacted Ordinance A–472, entitled "Sexually 705 Oriented Business Ordinance" ("Ordinance"), for the purpose of regulating "Sexually Oriented Businesses and related activities to promote the health, safety, and general welfare of the citizens of the Village of Somerset, and to establish reasonable and uniform regulations to prevent the deleterious location and concentration of Sexually Oriented Businesses within the Village of Somerset." The Ordinance regulates hours of operation, location, distance between patrons and performers, and other aspects concerning the operations of Sexually Oriented Businesses.

In the legislative findings section of the Ordinance, the Village noted that:

> Based on evidence concerning the adverse secondary effects of Sexually Oriented Businesses on the community in reports made available to the Village Board, and on the holdings and findings in [numerous Supreme Court, federal appellate, and state appellate judicial decisions], as well as studies and summaries of studies conducted in other cities ... and findings reported in the Regulation of Adult Entertainment Establishments in St. Croix County, Wisconsin; and the Report of the Attorney General's Working Group of Sexually Oriented Businesses ... the Village Board finds that:
>
> (a) Crime statistics show that all types of crimes, especially sex-related crimes, occur with more frequency in neighborhoods where sexually oriented businesses are located.
>
> (b) Studies of the relationship between sexually oriented businesses and neighborhood property values have found a negative impact on both residential and commercial property values.
>
> (c) Sexually oriented businesses may contribute to an increased public health risk through the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.
>
> (d) There is an increase in the potential for infiltration by organized crime for the purpose of unlawful conduct.
>
> (e) The consumption of alcoholic beverages on the premises of a Sexually Oriented Business exacerbates the deleterious secondary effects of such businesses on the community.

(Emphasis added.)

On February 2, 2001, two months before the Ordinance's effective date of April 1, 2001, Ben's Bar, Inc. ("Ben's Bar"), a tavern in the Village featuring nude and semi-nude barroom dance,[1] and two of its dancers, Shannen Richards and Jamie Sleight, filed a four-count complaint against the Village, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and Wis. Stat. § 806.04 (the State's "Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act"), in the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin. The plaintiffs' complaint alleged that portions of the Ordinance were unconstitutional and preempted by Wisconsin law, sought a declaratory judgment resolving those issues, and requested permanent injunctive relief. Specifically, the plaintiffs argued that the Ordinance: (1) violated their right of free expression under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution and Article I, § 3 of the Wisconsin Constitution;[2] (2) violated their right to 706 equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article 1, § 1 of the Wisconsin Constitution;[3] (3) was an illegal "policy or custom" of the Village within the meaning of Monell v. New York City Dep't of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 98 S.Ct. 2018, 56 L.Ed.2d 611 (1978), and Owen v. City of Independence, Missouri, 445 U.S. 622, 100 S.Ct. 1398, 63 L.Ed.2d 673 (1980); and (4) was an ultra vires legislative act in violation of Wis. Stat. § 66.0107(3).[4]

1 Ben's Bar holds a liquor license issued by the Village.

2 Article 1, § 3 of the Wisconsin Constitution provides, inter alia, that "[e]very person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no laws shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." Wis. Const., art. I, § 3.

3 Article 1, § 1 of the Wisconsin Constitution provides that "[a]ll people are born equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights; among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; to secure these rights, governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Wis. Const., art. I, § 1.

4 Wis. Stat. § 66.0107(3) provides that "[t]he board or council of a city, village or town may not, by ordinance, prohibit conduct which is the same as or similar to conduct prohibited by § 944.21 [i.e., the state's obscenity statute]."

On March 19, 2001, the plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of Sections 5(a) and (b) of the Ordinance. Section 5(a) provides that "[i]t shall be a violation of this ordinance for any Person to knowingly and intentionally appear in a state of Nudity in a Sexually Oriented Business."[5] Section 5(b) of the Ordinance provides that "[t]he sale, use, or consumption of alcoholic beverages on the Premises of a Sexually Oriented Business is prohibited." Plaintiffs argued that under § 66.0107(3) the Village was prohibited from enacting these regulations of adult entertainment because such conduct is already covered by the state's obscenity statute—i.e., Wis. Stat. § 944.21. They also contended that, notwithstanding § 66.0107, Sections 5(a) and (b) violated their right to free expression under the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

5 Under Section 3(o) of the Ordinance, "Nudity" or "state of nudity" is defined as "the appearance of the human bare anus, anal cleft or cleavage, pubic area, male genitals, female genitals, or the nipple or areola of the female breast, with less than a fully opaque covering; or showing of the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state."

On April 17, 2001, the district court denied plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunctive relief, holding that they did not have a reasonable chance of succeeding on the merits of their complaint. The district court, utilizing the test established by this circuit in Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831 (7th Cir.2000), held that Section 5(a)'s complete prohibition of full nudity in Sexually Oriented Businesses was constitutional under the First Amendment because " 'limiting erotic dancing to semi-nudity [i.e., pasties and G-strings] represents a de minimis restriction that does not unconstitutionally abridge expression.' " (quoting Schultz, 228 F.3d at 847). The district court also concluded that Section 5(b) passed constitutional muster under Schultz because it: (1) was justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) was narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest in curbing adverse secondary effects; and (3) left open ample alternative channels for communication. Finally, the district court ruled that the Ordinance was not subject to preemption under Wis. Stat. § 66.0107(3) because the plaintiffs had conceded that: (1) the Ordinance only regulates non-obscene conduct; and (2) they were seeking only to provide non-obscene barroom dancing.

Following unsuccessful attempts at settlement, on August 20, 2001, the Village moved for summary judgment of plaintiffs' complaint. On November 23, 2001, the district court granted the Village's motion, concluding that the Ordinance was constitutional for the reasons expressed in its 707 April 17, 2001 order. The court also addressed plaintiffs' equal protection claim, noting that they had waived the argument by failing to develop it in their briefs. A judgment in conformity with that order was entered on November 26, 2001. Ben's Bar appeals the district court's decision granting summary judgment,[6] arguing that the court erred in concluding that Section 5(b) does not constitute an unconstitutional restriction on nude dancing under the First Amendment. See DiMa Corp. v. Town of Hallie, 185 F.3d 823, 827 n. 2 (7th Cir.1999) (holding that corporations may assert First Amendment challenges). We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo, construing all facts in favor of Ben's Bar, the non-moving party. Commercial Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Aires Envtl. Services, Ltd., 259 F.3d 792, 795 (7th Cir.2001).

6 Plaintiffs Shannen Richards and Jamie Sleight did not appeal the district court's judgment.

II.

The First Amendment provides, in part, that "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech ...." U.S. Const. amend. I. The First Amendment's Free Speech Clause has been held by the Supreme Court to apply to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 69 L.Ed. 1138 (1925); DiMa Corp., 185 F.3d at 826 (acknowledging the applicability of the Supreme Court's "incorporation doctrine" in the First Amendment context). The Supreme Court has further held that "nude dancing ... is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so." Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality opinion) (emphasis added). See also Blue Canary Corp. v. City of Milwaukee, 251 F.3d 1121, 1124 (7th Cir.2001) (noting that "[t]he impairment of First Amendment values is slight to the point of being risible since the expressive activity involved in the kind of striptease entertainment provided in a bar has at best a modest social value ...."). Thus, while few would argue "that erotic dancing ... represents high artistic expression," Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 228 F.3d 831, 839 (7th Cir.2000), the Supreme Court has, nevertheless, afforded such expression a diminished form of protection under the First Amendment. City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 294, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000) (plurality opinion) (holding that " 'even though we recognize that the First Amendment will not tolerate the total suppression of erotic materials that have some arguably artistic value, it is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate ....' ") (citation omitted) (emphasis added).

This case requires us to determine whether a municipality may restrict the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises of businesses that serve as venues for adult entertainment without violating the First Amendment. On appeal, Ben's Bar's primary argument is that Section 5(b) is unconstitutional because the regulation has the "effect" of requiring its dancers to wear more attire than simply pasties and G-strings. [7] This argument 708 may be summed up as follows: (1) Section 5(b) prohibits the sale, use, or consumption of alcohol on the premises of Sexually Oriented Businesses; [8] (2) Ben's Bar is an "Adult cabaret," a sub-category of a Sexually Oriented Business under the Ordinance, [9] if it features nude or semi-nude dancers; (3) Section 3(o) of the Ordinance defines "seminude or semi-nudity" as "the exposure of a bare male or female buttocks or the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola at its highest point with less than a complete and opaque covering"; and (4) Ben's Bar's dancers must wear more attire than that required by the Ordinance's definition of "semi-nude or semi-nudity" in order for the tavern to be able to sell alcohol during their performances and comply with Section 5(b)—i.e., more than pasties and G-strings. Ben's Bar contends that Section 5(b) significantly impairs the conveyance of an erotic message by the tavern's dancers [10] and is not narrowly tailored to meet the Village's stated goal of reducing the adverse secondary effects associated with adult entertainment. [11]

7 The Supreme Court has, on two separate occasions, held that requiring nude dancers to wear pasties and G-strings does not violate the First Amendment. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion), id. at 307–10, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Scalia, J., concurring); Barnes, 501 U.S. at 571–72, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion), id. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring).

8 Section 3(w) of the Ordinance defines "Sexually Oriented Business" as "an adult arcade, adult bookstore or adult video store, adult cabaret, adult motel, adult motion picture theater, adult theater, escort agency or sexual encounter center."

9 Section 3(c) of the Ordinance is the definition for "Adult cabaret," which "means a nightclub, dance hall, bar, restaurant, or similar commercial establishment that regularly features: (1) persons who appear in a state of Nudity or Semi-nudity; or (2) live performances that are characterized by 'specified sexual activities'; or (3) films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides, or other photographic reproductions that are characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or Nudity or 'specified anatomical areas.' " (Emphasis added.)

10 According to Ben's Bar, Section 5(b) goes far beyond the pasties and G-strings regulation upheld by the Supreme Court in Barnes and Pap's A.M., prohibiting "any display of the buttocks or of breast below the top of the areola"—i.e., "conservative two piece swimsuits, moderately low-cut blouses, short shorts, sheer fabrics and many other types of clothing that are regularly worn in the community and are in mainstream fashion."

11 It is not entirely clear whether Ben's Bar is arguing that Section 5(b) is facially unconstitutional or merely unconstitutional as applied. To the extent Ben's Bar seeks to bring a facial challenge, it faces an uphill battle. Ben's Bar does not argue that the regulation is vague or overbroad, and therefore may only prevail if it can demonstrate "that no set of circumstances exists under which the [regulation] would be valid."

United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 95 L.Ed.2d 697 (1987). See also Horton v. City of St. Augustine, Florida, 272 F.3d 1318, 1331 (11th Cir.2001) (noting exception to the Salerno rule; that, in the limited context of the First Amendment, a plaintiff may also bring a facial challenge for overbreadth and/or vagueness).

The central fallacy in Ben's Bar's argument, however, is that Section 5(b) restricts the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages in establishments that serve as venues for adult entertainment, not the attire of nude dancers. In the absence of alcohol, Ben's Bar's dancers are free to express themselves all the way down to their pasties and G-strings. The question then is not whether the Village can require nude dancers to wear more attire than pasties and G-strings, but whether it can prohibit Sexually Oriented Businesses like Ben's Bar from selling alcoholic beverages in order to prevent the deleterious secondary effects arising from the explosive combination of nude dancing and alcohol consumption.

While the question presented is rather straightforward, the issue is significantly complicated by a long series of Supreme Court decisions involving the application of the First Amendment in the adult entertainment 709 context. Because these decisions establish the analytical framework under which we must operate, our analysis necessarily begins with a comprehensive summary of the Supreme Court's jurisprudence in this area.

A. California v. LaRue

Initially, we note that the Supreme Court addressed the precise issue before us in California v. LaRue, 409 U.S. 109, 93 S.Ct. 390, 34 L.Ed.2d 342 (1972), when it considered the constitutionality of regulations promulgated by California's Department of Alcoholic Beverages ("Department") that prohibited bars and nightclubs from featuring varying degrees of adult entertainment.[12] The Department enacted the regulations, after holding public hearings, because it concluded that the consumption of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments resulted in a number of adverse secondary effects—e.g., acts of public indecency and sex-related crimes. As in this case, adult entertainment businesses filed suit alleging that the regulations violated the First Amendment. Id. at 110, 93 S.Ct. 390.

12 The regulations at issue in LaRue prohibited:

> (a) The performance of acts, or simulated acts, of sexual intercourse, masturbation, sodomy, bestiality, oral copulation, flagellation or any sexual acts which are prohibited by law;
> (b) The actual or simulated touching, caressing or fondling on the breast, buttocks, anus or genitals;
> (c) The actual or simulated displaying of the pubic hair, anus, vulva or genitals;
> (d) The permitting by a licensee of any person to remain in or upon the licensed premises who exposes to public view any portion of his or her genitals or anus; and, by a companion section;
> (e) The displaying of films or pictures depicting acts a live performance of which was prohibited by the regulations quoted above.
>
> 409 U.S. at 411–12.

The Supreme Court began its analysis in LaRue by stressing that "[t]he state regulations here challenged come to us, not in the context of a dramatic performance in a theater, but rather in a context of licensing bars and nightclubs to sell liquor by the drink." 409 U.S. at 114, 93 S.Ct. 390. For this reason, the vast majority of the Court's opinion addressed the States' power to regulate "intoxicating liquors" under the Twenty-first Amendment.[13] See generally id. at 115–19, 93 S.Ct. 390. Specifically, the LaRue Court concluded that:

13 The second section of the Twenty-first Amendment provides that "[t]he transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited." U.S. Const. amend. XXI, § 2.

> While the States, vested as they are with general police power, require no specific grant of authority in the Federal Constitution to legislate with respect to matters traditionally within the scope of the police power, the broad sweep of the Twenty-first Amendment has been recognized as conferring something more than the normal state authority over public health, welfare, and morals.
>
> 409 U.S. at 114, 93 S.Ct. 390.

In doing so, the LaRue Court rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the state's regulatory authority over "intoxicating beverages" was limited, as applied to adult entertainment establishments, to "either dealing with the problem it confronted within the limits of our decisions as to obscenity [i.e., Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957) and its progeny] or in accordance with the limits prescribed for dealing with some forms of communicative conduct in [United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968)]," 409 U.S. at 116, 93 S.Ct. 390, reasoning " '[w]e 710 cannot accept the view that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea.' " Id. at 117–18, 93 S.Ct. 390 (citation omitted). The Court found that "the substance of the regulations struck down prohibits licensed bars or nightclubs from displaying, either in the form of movies or live entertainment, 'performances' that partake more of gross sexuality than of communication." Id. at 118, 93 S.Ct. 390. The Court also concluded that although "at least some of the performances to which these regulations address themselves are within the limits of the constitutional protection of freedom of expression, the critical fact is that California has not forbidden these performances across the board ... [but] has merely proscribed such performances in establishments that it licenses to sell liquor by the drink." Id. The LaRue Court ended its analysis by noting that "[t]he Department's conclusion, embodied in these regulations, that certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur at premises that have licenses was not an irrational one," and that "[g]iven the added presumption in favor of the validity of the state regulation in this area that the Twenty-first Amendment requires, we cannot hold that the regulations on their face violate the Federal Constitution." Id. at 118–19, 93 S.Ct. 390. [14]

14 See also City of Newport v. Iacobucci, 479 U.S. 92, 95, 107 S.Ct. 383, 93 L.Ed.2d 334 (1986) (upholding the constitutionality of a city ordinance prohibiting nude or nearly nude dancing in local establishments licensed to sell liquor for consumption on the premises); New York State Liquor Auth. v. Bellanca, 452 U.S. 714, 717, 101 S.Ct. 2599, 69 L.Ed.2d 357 (1981) (holding that "[t]he State's power to ban the sale of alcoholic beverages entirely includes the lesser power to ban the sale of liquor on premises where topless dancing occurs"); Doran v. Salem Inn. Inc., 422 U.S. 922, 932–33, 95 S.Ct. 2561, 45 L.Ed.2d 648 (1975) (noting that under LaRue states may ban nude dancing as part of their liquor licensing programs); City of Kenosha v. Bruno, 412 U.S. 507, 515, 93 S.Ct. 2222, 37 L.Ed.2d 109 (1973) (noting that "regulations prohibiting the sale of liquor by the drink on premises where there were nude but not necessarily obscene performances [are] facially constitutional").

B. 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island

After the Supreme Court's decision in 44 Liquormart, Inc. v. Rhode Island, 517 U.S. 484, 116 S.Ct. 1495, 134 L.Ed.2d 711 (1996), however, the precedential value of the reasoning anchoring the Court's holding in LaRue was severely diminished. In 44 Liquormart, the Court held that Rhode Island's statutory prohibition against advertisements providing the public with accurate information about retail prices of alcoholic beverages was "an abridgement of speech protected by the First Amendment and that is not shielded from constitutional scrutiny by the Twenty-first Amendment." Id. at 489, 116 S.Ct. 1495. In reaching this conclusion, the Court noted:

> Rhode Island argues, and the Court of Appeals agreed, that in this case the Twenty-first Amendment tilts the First Amendment analysis in the State's favor [of the advertising ban] .... [T]he Court of Appeals relied on our decision in California v. LaRue ... [where] five Members of the Court relied on the Twenty-first Amendment to buttress the conclusion that the First Amendment did not invalidate California's prohibition of certain grossly sexual exhibitions in premises licensed to serve alcoholic beverages. Specifically, the opinion stated that the Twenty-first Amendment required that the prohibition be given an added presumption in favor of its validity. 711 We are now persuaded that the Court's analysis in LaRue would have led to precisely the same result if it had placed no reliance on the Twenty-first Amendment. Entirely apart from the Twenty-first Amendment, the State has ample power to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages in inappropriate locations. Moreover, in subsequent cases, the Court has recognized that the States' inherent police powers provide ample authority to restrict the kind of "bacchanalian revelries" described in the LaRue opinion regardless of whether alcoholic beverages are involved.... See, e.g., Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976); Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991). As we recently noted: "LaRue did not involve commercial speech about alcohol, but instead concerned the regulation of nude dancing in places where alcohol was served." Rubin v. Coors Brewing Co., 514 U.S., at 483, n. 2, 115 S.Ct. 1585. Without questioning the holding of LaRue, we now disavow its reasoning insofar as it relied on the Twenty-first Amendment.

Id. at 515–16, 116 S.Ct. 1495 (emphasis added).

The foregoing makes clear that LaRue's holding remains valid after 44 Liquormart, but for a different reason. The 44 Liquormart Court concluded that "the Court's analysis in LaRue would have led to precisely the same result if it had placed no reliance on the Twenty-first Amendment," 517 U.S. at 515, 116 S.Ct. 1495 because "[e]ntirely apart from the Twenty-first Amendment, the State has ample power to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages in inappropriate locations." Id. In making this assertion, the 44 Liquormart Court relied on the LaRue Court's conclusion that: "the States, vested as they are with general police power, require no specific grant of authority in the Federal Constitution to legislate with respect to matters traditionally within the scope of the police power ... [i.e.,] the normal state authority over public health, welfare, and morals." 409 U.S. at 114, 93 S.Ct. 390. But in recent years, the Supreme Court has held, on a number of occasions, that "non-obscene" adult entertainment is entitled to a minimal degree of protection under the First Amendment, even in relation to laws enacted pursuant to a State's general police powers. City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 1739, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (noting that "if a city can decrease the crime and blight associated with [adult entertainment] speech by the traditional exercise of its zoning power, and at the same time leave the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially undiminished, there is no First Amendment objection"); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (holding that city's public indecency ordinance, enacted to "protect public health and safety," must be analyzed as a content-neutral regulation of expressive conduct); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Given the foregoing, it is difficult to ascertain exactly what "analysis" the 44 Liquormart Court was referring to as having persuaded it that the LaRue Court would have reached the same result even without the "added presumption" of the Twenty-first Amendment. We find noteworthy, however, the 44 Liquormart Court's citation of the post-LaRue decisions of Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), in support of its assertion that "the States' inherent police powers provide ample authority to restrict the kind of 'bacchanalian revelries' 712 described in the LaRue opinion regardless of whether alcoholic beverages are involved." 44 Liquormart, 517 U.S. at 515, 116 S.Ct. 1495. In American Mini Theatres and Barnes, the Supreme Court held that the adult entertainment regulations at issue were subject to intermediate scrutiny for purposes of determining their constitutionality under the First Amendment. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring) ("it is appropriate to analyze the permissibility of Detroit's action [zoning ordinance separating adult theaters from residential neighborhoods and churches] under the four-part test of United States v. O'Brien ...."); Barnes, 501 U.S. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring) ("I also agree with the plurality that the appropriate analysis to determine the actual protection required by the First Amendment is the four-part enquiry described in United States v. O'Brien ....").

Like the Fourth and Eleventh Circuits, we conclude that after 44 Liquormart state regulations prohibiting the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments must be analyzed in light of American Mini Theatres and Barnes, as modified by their respective progeny. See Giovani Carandola Ltd. v. Bason, 303 F.3d 507, 513 n. 2 & 519 (4th Cir.2002) (noting the 44 Liquormart Court's reliance on American Mini Theatres and Barnes and holding that "the result reached in LaRue remains sound not because a state enjoys any special authority when it burdens speech by restricting the sale of alcohol, but rather because the regulation in LaRue complied with the First Amendment"); Sammy's of Mobile, Ltd. v. City of Mobile, 140 F.3d 993, 996 (11th Cir.1998) (holding that "the Supreme Court [in 44 Liquormart] ... reaffirmed the precedential value of LaRue and the Barnes–O'Brien test .... [and] reaffirmed that the Barnes–O'Brien intermediate level of review applies to [adult entertainment liquor regulations]"). But see BZAPS, Inc. v. City of Mankato, 268 F.3d 603, 608 (8th Cir.2001) (upholding the constitutionality of an adult entertainment liquor regulation solely on the basis of LaRue's holding).

We reach this conclusion notwithstanding the fact that in LaRue the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the adult entertainment liquor regulations using the rational basis test, see 409 U.S. at 115–16, 93 S.Ct.

390, and explicitly refused to subject the regulations to O'Brien's intermediate scrutiny test. Id. at 116, 93 S.Ct. 390 ("We do not believe that the state regulatory authority in this case was limited to ... dealing with the problem it confronted ... in accordance with the limits prescribed for dealing with some forms of communicative conduct in [O'Brien]"). We do so because the 44 Liquormart Court's reference to American Mini Theatres and Barnes makes clear that the Court is of the opinion that adult entertainment liquor regulations, like the ones at issue in LaRue, will pass constitutional muster even under the heightened intermediate scrutiny tests outlined in those cases.

In making this determination, we are by no means suggesting that the Supreme Court's decisions in American Mini Theatres and Barnes are of greater precedential value than LaRue. On the contrary, as noted infra, our decision in this case is largely dictated by LaRue's holding. At the time LaRue was decided, however, the Supreme Court had not yet established a framework for analyzing the constitutionality of adult entertainment regulations. This changed with the Court's subsequent decisions in American Mini Theatres and Barnes, cases that serve as a point of origin for two distinct, yet overlapping, lines of jurisprudence that address the degree of First Amendment 713 protection afforded to adult entertainment. Given the significant development of the law in this area since LaRue, as well as the Court's refashioning of LaRue's reasoning in 44 Liquormart, we conclude that it is necessary to apply LaRue's holding in the context of this precedent.

C. The 44 Liquormart "road map"

The 44 Liquormart decision established a road map of sorts for analyzing the constitutionality of adult entertainment liquor regulations, i.e., the Supreme Court's decisions in Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), providing two separate but similar routes. [15] First, the American Mini Theatres decision, as modified by the Court's subsequent decisions in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), and City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), delineates the standards for evaluating the constitutionality of adult entertainment zoning ordinances. Second, the Barnes decision, as modified by the Court's recent decision in City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000), provides guidelines for analyzing the constitutionality of public indecency statutes.

15 See J & B Social Club No. 1, Inc. v. City of Mobile, 966 F.Supp. 1131, 1136 (S.D.Ala.1996) (Hand, J.).

[1] The analytical frameworks utilized in both lines of jurisprudence can be traced back to the four-part test enunciated by the Supreme Court in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968), where the Court held that a statute prohibiting the destruction or mutilation of draft cards was a content-neutral regulation of expressive conduct. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring) (applying O'Brien test); Barnes, 501 U.S. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring) (same). Under the O'Brien test, a governmental regulation is sufficiently justified, despite its incidental impact upon expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment, if: (1) it is within the constitutional power of the government; (2) it furthers an important or substantial governmental interest; (3) the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free speech; and (4) the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest. O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

[2] While the O'Brien test is still utilized by the Supreme Court in analyzing the constitutionality of public indecency statutes, see Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part), the Court currently evaluates adult entertainment zoning ordinances as time, place, and manner regulations. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1733 (plurality opinion); id. at 1741 (Kennedy, J., concurring); Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–47, 106 S.Ct. 925. A time, place, and manner regulation of adult entertainment will be upheld if it is "designed to serve a substantial government interest and ... reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain[ ] available." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1734. Additionally, a time, place, and manner regulation must be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech and narrowly tailored to serve the government's 714 interest. Schultz, 228 F.3d at 845. [16]

16 In Renton, the Supreme Court created some confusion as to the appropriate test for analyzing time, place, and manner regulations by asserting that "time, place, and manner regulations are acceptable so long as they are designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and do not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. However, as we emphasized in City of Watseka v. Illinois Public Action Council, 796 F.2d 1547 (7th Cir.1986), "[t]he Supreme Court does not always spell out the 'narrowly tailored' step as part of its standard for evaluating time, place, and manner restrictions." Id. at 1553. Moreover, a close examination of Renton reveals that the Court did consider whether the zoning ordinance at issue was narrowly tailored. 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("[t]he Renton ordinance is 'narrowly tailored' to affect only that category of theaters shown to produce the unwanted secondary effects ...."). In any event, both the Supreme Court and this circuit have continued to apply the "narrowly tailored" step to time, place, and manner regulations. See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 796, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989); Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 481, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988); Pleasureland Museum, Inc. v. Beutter, 288 F.3d 988, 1000 (7th Cir.2002).

[3] In this case, however, we are not dealing with a zoning ordinance or a public indecency statute. Instead, we are called upon to evaluate the constitutionality of an adult entertainment liquor regulation. Therefore, it is not entirely clear whether Section 5(b) should be analyzed as a time, place, and manner restriction or as a regulation of expressive conduct under O'Brien's four-part test; or for that matter whether the tests are entirely interchangeable. See LLEH, Inc. v. Wichita County, Texas, 289 F.3d 358, 365 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1045, 123 S.Ct. 621, 154 L.Ed.2d 517 (2002) (noting uncertainty as to which test courts should use in analyzing the constitutionality of adult entertainment regulations: "the test for time, place, or manner regulations, described in Renton ... or the four-part test for incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms, established in O'Brien ...."). For all practical purposes, however, the distinction is irrelevant because the Supreme Court has held that the time, place, and manner test embodies much of the same standards as those set forth in United States v. O'Brien. Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion) (relying on Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 298–99, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984)); LLEH, 289 F.3d at 365–66 (same).[17] Moreover, as explained infra, two of the Supreme Court's post-44 Liquormart decisions—Pap's A.M. and Alameda Books—make it abundantly clear that the analytical frameworks and standards utilized by the Court in evaluating adult entertainment regulations, be they zoning ordinances or public indecency statutes, are virtually indistinguishable. We, therefore, conclude that it is appropriate to analyze the constitutionality of Section 5(b) using the standards articulated by the Supreme Court in the five decisions comprising the American Mini Theatres and Barnes lines of jurisprudence. Thus, before proceeding to the merits of Ben's Bar's argument, we begin our analysis by summarizing the reasoning and holdings of these decisions.

17 But see Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct at 1745 n. 2 (Souter, J., dissenting) (joined by Stevens, J. and Ginsburg, J.) (noting that "[b]ecause Renton called its secondary-effects ordinance a mere, time, place, or manner restriction and thereby glossed over the role of content in secondary-effects zoning ... I believe the soft focus of its statement of the middle-tier test should be rejected in favor of the ... [O'Brien] formulation ... a closer relative of secondary effects zoning than mere time, place, and manner regulations, as the Court ... implicitly recognized [in Pap's A.M.].").

715 (1) *Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc.

In Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), the Supreme Court addressed, inter alia, whether a zoning ordinance enacted by the City of Detroit violated the First Amendment.[18] Id. at 58, 96 S.Ct. 2440. The "dispersal" ordinance at issue prohibited the operation of any adult entertainment movie theater within 1,000 feet of any two other "regulated uses" (e.g., adult bookstores, bars, hotels, pawnshops), or within 500 feet of a residential area. Id. at 52, 96 S.Ct. 2440. A majority of the Court upheld the constitutionality of the ordinance, but in doing so did not agree on a single rationale for the decision. Id. at 62–63, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (plurality opinion); id. at 84, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J. concurring). The plurality concluded that "apart from the fact that the ordinance treats adult theaters differently from other theaters and the fact that the classification is predicated on the content of material shown in respective theaters, the regulation of the place where such films may be exhibited does not offend the First Amendment." Id. at 63, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (emphasis added).

In reaching this conclusion, the plurality emphasized that "even though we recognize that the First Amendment will not tolerate the total suppression of erotic materials that have some arguably artistic value, it is manifest that society's interest in protecting this type of expression is of a wholly different, and lesser, magnitude than the interest in untrammeled political debate." Id. at 70, 96 S.Ct. 2440. The plurality also found that the city's zoning ordinance was justified by its interest in "preserving the character of its neighborhoods," id. at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, and therefore "the city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems." Id. The plurality concluded its analysis by noting that "what is ultimately at stake is nothing more than a limitation on the place where adult films may be exhibited ...." Id. [19]

18 The Court also concluded that the zoning ordinance did not violate the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 61, 72–73, 96 S.Ct. 2440; see generally id. at 73–84, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring), issues that are not before us on appeal.

19 The American Mini Theatres plurality also noted, in a footnote, that the city had enacted the zoning ordinance because of its determination that "a concentration of 'adult' movie theaters causes the area to deteriorate and become a focus of crime, effects which are not attributable to theaters showing other types of films," 427 U.S. at 71 n. 34, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (emphasis added), noting "[i]t is this secondary effect which these zoning ordinances attempt to avoid, not the dissemination of 'offensive' speech." Id. (emphasis added).

Justice Powell concurred in the judgment of the Court, agreeing with the plurality that the zoning ordinance "is addressed only to the places at which this type of expression may be presented, a restriction that does not interfere with content." Id. at 78–79, 96 S.Ct. 2440. He disagreed, however, with the plurality's determination that "nonobscene, erotic materials may be treated differently under First Amendment principles from other forms of protected expression." Id. at 73 n. 1, 96 S.Ct. 2440. Instead, Justice Powell concluded that it was appropriate to analyze and uphold the constitutionality of the zoning ordinance under the four-part test enunciated in United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). Id. at 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440. [20]

20 Under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977), Justice Powell's concurrence is the controlling opinion in American Mini Theatres, as the most narrow opinion joining four other Justices in the judgment of the Court. Entertainment Concepts, Inc., III v. Maciejewski, 631 F.2d 497, 504 (7th Cir.1980).

716 (2) *City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc.

The Supreme Court's decision in American Mini Theatres laid the groundwork for the Court's decision in City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). [21] In Renton, the Court considered the validity of an adult entertainment zoning ordinance virtually indistinguishable from the one at issue in American Mini Theatres. Id. at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925. Unlike the American Mini Theatres plurality, however, the Renton Court outlined an analytical framework for evaluating the constitutionality of these ordinances. The Court's analysis proceeded in three steps. First, the Court found that the ordinance did not ban adult theaters altogether, but merely required that they be distanced from certain sensitive locations. Id. Next, the Court considered whether the ordinance was content-neutral or content-based. If an ordinance is content-based, it is presumptively invalid and subject to strict scrutiny. Id. at 46–47, 106 S.Ct. 925. On the other hand, if an ordinance is aimed not at the content of the films shown at adult theaters, but rather at combating the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community (e.g., increased crime rates, diminished property values), it will be treated as a content-neutral regulation. Id. In Renton, the Court held that the zoning ordinance was a "content neutral" regulation of speech because while "the ordinance treats theaters that specialize in adult films differently from other kinds of theaters .... [it] is aimed not at the content of the films shown ... but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community." 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Finally, given this finding, the Renton Court found that the zoning ordinance would be upheld as a valid time, place and manner regulation, id. at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925, if it "was designed to serve a substantial governmental interest and [did] not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication." Id. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. The Court concluded that the zoning ordinance met this test, noting that a " 'city's interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect.' " id. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440), [22] and that the ordinance allowed for reasonable alternative avenues of communication because there was "ample, accessible real estate" open for use as adult theater sites. Id. at 53, 96 S.Ct. 2440.

21 Falling in between American Mini Theatres and Renton is the Supreme Court's decision in Schad v. Borough Mount Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981), where the Court struck down, on First Amendment grounds, a zoning ordinance that did not—like the ordinance in American Mini Theatres—require the dispersal of adult theaters, but instead prohibited them altogether. Id. at 71–72, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (plurality opinion); id. at 77, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Blackmun, J., concurring); id. at 79, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring). The only significance of Schad, for purpose of our analysis, is that the holding of that case serves as the basis for the first step in the Renton framework—i.e., does the ordinance completely prohibit the expressive conduct at issue? See Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1733 (noting that the first step in the Renton framework was the Court's determination that "the ordinance did not ban adult theaters altogether, but merely required that they be distanced from certain sensitive locations"); Renton, 475 U.S. at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925.

22 See also American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 80, 96 S.Ct. 2440 (Powell, J., concurring) ("Nor is there doubt that the interests furthered by this ordinance are both important and substantial").

The Supreme Court's decision in Renton is also notable because in addition to upholding the constitutionality of the zoning ordinance, the Court also held that the 717 First Amendment did not require municipalities, before enacting such ordinances, to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities (whether summarized in judicial decisions or not), Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, so long as "whatever evidence [a] city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Id.

(3) Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc.

In Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), the Supreme Court was called upon to address the constitutionality of Indiana's public indecency statute. In a splintered decision, a narrow majority of the Court held that the statute —which prohibited nudity in public places—could be enforced against establishments featuring nude dancing, i.e., by requiring dancers to wear pasties and G-strings during their performances, without violating the First Amendment's right of free expression. Id. at 565, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality opinion); id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J. concurring); id. at 582, 585, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J. concurring). Of that majority, however, only three Justices agreed on a single rationale.

The plurality—Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices O'Connor and Kennedy—began its analysis by emphasizing that while "nude dancing ... is expressive conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment .... [w]e must [still] determine the level of protection to be afforded to the expressive conduct at issue, and ... whether the Indiana statute is an impermissible infringement of that protected activity." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456. The plurality noted that the public indecency statute did not "ban [ ] nude dancing, as such, but ... proscribed public nudity across the board," id., and that "the Supreme Court of Indiana has construed the Indiana statute to preclude nudity in what are essentially places of public accommodation." Id. Next, the plurality concluded that the public indecency statute should be analyzed under O'Brien's four-part test for evaluating regulations of expressive conduct protected by the First Amendment. [23] Applying this test, the plurality found "that Indiana's public indecency statute [was] justified despite its incidental limitations on some expressive activity," id. at 567, 111 S.Ct. 2456, because: (1) the statute was "clearly within the constitutional power of the State and furthers substantial governmental interests [i.e., protecting societal order and morality]," id. at 568, 111 S.Ct. 2456; (2) the state's interest in protecting societal order and morality by enforcing the statute to prohibit nude dancing was "unrelated to the suppression of free expression" because "the requirement that the dancers don pasties and G-strings does not deprive the dance of whatever erotic message it conveys; it simply makes the message slightly less graphic [and] [t]he perceived evil that Indiana seeks to address is not erotic dancing, but public nudity," id. at 570–71, 111 S.Ct. 2456; (3) the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedom placed on nude dancing by the statute was no greater than essential to the furtherance of the governmental interest because "[t]he statutory prohibition is not a means to some greater end, but an end in itself," id. at 571–72, 111 S.Ct. 2456; and (4) the public indecency statute was narrowly tailored because "Indiana's requirement that the dancers wear pasties and G-strings is modest, and the bare minimum necessary 718 to achieve the State's purpose." Id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (emphasis added).

23 In doing so, the Barnes plurality noted that the O'Brien test and the time, place, and manner test utilized by the Court in Renton have "been interpreted to embody much the same standards ...." 501 U.S. at 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456.

Justice Scalia concurred in the judgment of the Court, but in doing so expressed his opinion that "the challenged regulation must be upheld not because it survives some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny, but because, as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Id. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Justice Souter also concurred in the judgment of the Court, agreeing with the plurality that "the appropriate analysis to determine the actual protection required by the First Amendment is the four-part inquiry described in United States v. O'Brien." Id. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456. He wrote separately, however, to rest his concurrence in the judgment, "not on the possible sufficiency of society's moral views to justify the limitations at issue, but on the State's substantial interest in combating the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments ...." Id. [24] In doing so, Justice Souter relied heavily on the Court's decision in Renton. Id. at 583–87, 111 S.Ct. 2456.

24 Under Marks, 430 U.S. at 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, Justice Souter's concurrence is the controlling opinion in Barnes, as the most narrow opinion joining the judgment of the Court. Schultz, 228 F.3d at 842 n. 2; DiMa Corp., 185 F.3d at 830.

(4) City of Erie v. Pap's A.M.

The Supreme Court revisited the Barnes holding in City of Erie v. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. 277, 120 S.Ct. 1382, 146 L.Ed.2d 265 (2000), where a majority of the Court upheld the constitutionality of a public indecency ordinance "strikingly similar" to the one at issue in Barnes. Id. at 283, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Unlike Barnes, however, in Pap's A.M. five justices agreed that the proper framework for analyzing public indecency statutes was O'Brien's four-part test. Id. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) ("We now clarify that government restrictions on public nudity ... should be evaluated under the framework set forth in O'Brien for content-neutral restrictions on symbolic speech"); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (agreeing with the "analytical approach that the plurality employs in deciding this case [i.e., the O'Brien test]"). See also Ranch House, Inc. v. Amerson, 238 F.3d 1273, 1278 (11th Cir.2001) (holding that "[a]lthough no opinion in [Pap's A.M.] was joined by more than four Justices, a majority of the Court basically agreed on how these kinds of statutes should be analyzed [i.e., O'Brien's four-part test]"). A majority of the Justices also agreed that combating the adverse secondary effects of nude dancing was within the city's constitutional powers and unrelated to the suppression of free expression, Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) ("Erie's efforts to protect public health and safety are clearly within the city's police powers .... [and] [t]he ordinance is unrelated to the suppression of free expression ...."); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("Erie's stated interest in combating the secondary effects associated with nude dancing establishments is an interest unrelated to the suppression of expression ...."), thus satisfying the first and third prongs of the O'Brien test.

A majority of the Justices in Pap's A.M. could not, however, agree on whether the public indecency statute furthered an important or substantial interest of the city (second prong of O'Brien), and if so whether the incidental restriction on nude dancing was no greater than that essential to the furtherance of this interest (fourth prong). The plurality—Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices O'Connor, Kennedy, 719 and Breyer—concluded that Erie's public indecency ordinance furthered an important or substantial government interest under O'Brien because "[t]he asserted interests of regulating conduct through a public nudity ban and of combating the harmful secondary effects associated with nude dancing [e.g., the increased crime generated by such establishments] are undeniably important." Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382. [25] The Pap's A.M. plurality also found that Erie's public indecency statute was no greater than that essential to furthering the city's interest in combating the harmful secondary effects of nude dancing because:

25 The Pap's A.M. plurality's reliance on Renton's secondary effects doctrine is significant because it marks a departure from the Barnes plurality's determination that a public indecency ordinance may be justified by a State's interest in protecting societal order and morality, Barnes, 501 U.S. at 568, 111 S.Ct.

> 2456, and an adoption of the approach advocated by Justice Souter in his concurrence in that case. Id. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456.
>
> The ordinance regulates conduct, and any incidental impact on the expressive element of nude dancing is de minimis. The requirement that dancers wear pasties and G-strings is a minimal restriction in furtherance of the asserted government interests, and the restriction leaves ample capacity to convey the dancer's erotic message. 529 U.S. at 301, 120 S.Ct. 1382.

Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, agreed with the plurality that the ordinance should be upheld, but wrote separately to emphasize that " 'as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, [the city's public indecency ordinance] is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all,' " Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 307–08, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (quoting Barnes, 501 U.S. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring)), and that "[t]he traditional power of government to foster good morals (bonos mores), and the acceptability of the traditional judgment (if Erie wishes to endorse it) that nude public dancing itself is immoral, have not been repealed by the First Amendment." Id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Justice Souter concurred in part and dissented in part, stressing his belief that "the current record [does not] allow us to say that the city has made a sufficient evidentiary showing to sustain its regulation ...." Id. at 310–11, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Justice Stevens, joined by Justice Ginsburg, dissented, asserting that the ordinance was a "patently invalid" content-based ban on nude dancing that censored protected speech. Id. at 331–32, 120 S.Ct. 1382. Because the plurality's decision offers the narrowest ground for the Supreme Court's holding in Pap's A.M., we find the reasoning of that opinion to be controlling. Marks, 430 U.S. at 193, 97 S.Ct. 990.

(5) City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc.

This past term in City of Los Angeles v. Alameda Books, Inc., 535 U.S. 425, 122 S.Ct. 1728, 152 L.Ed.2d 670 (2002), the Supreme Court upheld, at the summary judgment stage, an ordinance prohibiting multiple adult entertainment businesses from operating in the same building. Id. at 1733. The Court reached this conclusion despite the fact that the city had not, prior to the enactment of the ordinance, conducted or relied upon studies (or other evidence) specifically demonstrating that forbidding multiple adult entertainment businesses from operating under one roof reduces secondary effects. Id. at 1736 (plurality opinion); id. at 1744 (Kennedy, J., concurring). Once again, however, a majority of the Court could not agree on a single rationale for this decision.

720 The primary issue in Alameda Books was the appropriate standard "for determining whether an ordinance serves a substantial government interest under Renton." 122 S.Ct. at 1733. The plurality—written by Justice O'Connor and joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas—concluded that whether a municipal ordinance is " 'designed to serve a substantial government interest and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication' ... requires [courts to] ... ask[ ] whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance." Id. at 1737. According to the plurality, this requirement is met if the evidence upon which the municipality enacted the regulation " 'is reasonably believed to be relevant' for demonstrating a connection between [secondary effects producing] speech and a substantial, independent government interest." Id. at 1736. The plurality stressed that once a municipality presents a rational basis for addressing the secondary effects of adult entertainment through evidence that "fairly support[s] the municipality's rationale for its ordinance," id., the plaintiff challenging the constitutionality of the ordinance must "cast direct doubt on this rationale, either by demonstrating that the municipality's evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the municipality's factual findings." Id. If a plaintiff fails to cast doubt on the municipality's rationale, the inquiry is over and "the municipality meets the standard set forth in Renton." Id. If, however, a plaintiff succeeds "in casting doubt on a municipality's rationale in either manner, the burden shifts back to the municipality to supplement the record with evidence renewing support for a theory that justifies its ordinance." Id. Because the plurality concluded that the city, for purposes of summary judgment, had complied with the evidentiary requirement outlined in Renton, id., it remanded the case for further proceedings. Id. at 1738.

Justice Scalia, in addition to joining the plurality opinion, wrote separately to emphasize that while the plurality's opinion "represents a correct application of our jurisprudence concerning the regulation of the 'secondary effects' of pornographic speech .... our First Amendment traditions make 'secondary effects' analysis quite unnecessary. The Constitution does not prevent those communities that wish to do so from regulating, or indeed entirely suppressing, the business of pandering sex." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1738–39.

Justice Kennedy concurred in the judgment of the Court, but writing separately because he concluded, inter alia, that "the plurality's application of Renton might constitute a subtle expansion, with which I do not concur." Id. at 1739. He began, however, by expressing his agreement with the plurality that the secondary effects resulting from "high concentrations of adult businesses can damage the value and integrity of a neighborhood," id., stressing "[t]he damage is measurable; it is all too real." Id. He also agreed with the plurality that "[t]he law does not require a city to ignore these consequences if it uses its zoning power in a reasonable way to ameliorate them without suppressing speech," id., emphasizing that "[a] city's 'interest in attempting to preserve the quality of urban life is one that must be accorded high respect.' " Id. (quoting American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440). In Justice Kennedy's opinion, if a municipality ameliorates the secondary effects of adult entertainment through "the traditional exercise of its zoning power, and at the same time leaves the quantity and accessibility of the speech 721 substantially undiminished, there is no First Amendment objection .... even if the measure identifies the problem outside by reference to the speech inside—that is, even if the measure is in that sense content based." [26] Id. Like the plurality, he concluded that "[a] zoning law need not be blind to the secondary effects of adult speech, so long as the purpose of the law is not to suppress it." Id. at 1740. He also expressed his belief that zoning regulations "do not automatically raise the specter of impermissible content discrimination, even if they are content based, because they have a prima facie legitimate purpose: to limit the negative externalities of land use ... [and that] [t]he zoning context provides a built-in legitimate rationale, which rebuts the usual presumption that content-based restrictions are unconstitutional." Id. at 1741.

26 The plurality in Alameda Books characterized the second step of the Renton framework as follows: "[w]e next consider[ ] whether the ordinance [is] content neutral or content based." 122 S.Ct. at 1734. In his concurrence, Justice Kennedy joined the four dissenters, id. at 1744–45, in jettisoning the "content neutral" label, noting that the "fiction" of adult entertainment zoning ordinances being "content neutral ... is perhaps more confusing than helpful .... These ordinances are content based and we should call them so." Id. at 1741. In reaching this conclusion, Justice Kennedy emphasized that "whether a statute is content neutral or content based is something that can be determined on the face of it; if the statute describes speech by content then it is content based." Id. Justice Kennedy concluded, however, that an adult entertainment zoning ordinance is not subject to strict scrutiny simply because it "identifies the problem outside by reference to the speech inside," id. at 1740, and, as such, "the central holding of Renton is sound: A zoning restriction that is designed to decrease secondary effects and not speech should be subject to intermediate rather than strict scrutiny." Id. at 1741. Thus, while the label has changed, the substance of Renton's second step remains the same.

Based on the foregoing principles, Justice Kennedy believes that two questions must be asked by a court seeking to determine whether a zoning ordinance regulating adult entertainment is designed to meet a substantial government interest: (1) "what proposition does a city need to advance in order to sustain a secondary-effects ordinance?", Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct at 1741; and (2) "how much evidence is required to support the proposition?" Id. According to Justice Kennedy, the plurality skipped the second question, giving the correct answer, but neglected to give sufficient "attention" to the first question, id., i.e., "the claim a city must make to justify a content-based ordinance." Id. at 1742. In his view, "a city must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects, while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact," id., and "[t]he rationale of the ordinance must be that it will suppress secondary effects ... not ... speech." Id. Justice Kennedy's primary area of disagreement with the plurality's analysis was that, in his opinion, it failed to "address how speech [would] fare under the city's ordinance." Id.

The differences between Justice Kennedy's concurrence and the plurality's opinion are, however, quite subtle. Justice Kennedy's position is not that a municipality must prove the efficacy of its rationale for reducing secondary effects prior to implementation, as Justice Souter and the other dissenters would require, see generally Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1744–51; but that a municipality's rationale must be premised on the theory that it "may reduce the costs of secondary effects without substantially reducing speech." Id. at 1742 (emphasis added). Significantly, while Justice Kennedy believed that the plurality did not adequately address this aspect of the city's rationale, he agreed 722 with the plurality's overall conclusion that a municipality's initial burden of demonstrating a substantial government interest in regulating the adverse secondary effects associated with adult entertainment is slight, noting:

> As to this, we have consistently held that a city must have latitude to experiment, at least at the outset, and that very little evidence is required .... As a general matter, courts should not be in the business of second-guessing fact-bound empirical assessments of city planners. The Los Angeles City Council knows the streets of Los Angeles better than we do. It is entitled to rely on that knowledge; and if its inferences appear reasonable, we should not say there is no basis for its conclusion.

Id. at 1742–43 (emphasis added).

The dissenting opinion of Justice Souter, joined by Justices Stevens and Ginsburg in full and by Justice Breyer with respect to part II, asserted that the Court should have struck down the ordinance. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1747 (Souter, J., dissenting).

Because Justice Kennedy's concurrence is the narrowest opinion joining the judgment of the Court in Alameda Books, we conclude that it is the controlling opinion. Marks, 430 U.S. at 193, 97 S.Ct. 990.

D. Does Section 5(b)'s prohibition of alcohol on the premises of Sexually Oriented Businesses violate the First Amendment?

[4] Based on the road map provided by the Supreme Court in 44 Liquormart, as described supra, we conclude that a liquor regulation prohibiting the sale or consumption of alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments is constitutional if: (1) the State is regulating pursuant to a legitimate governmental power, O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673; (2) the regulation does not completely prohibit adult entertainment, Renton, 475 U.S. at 46, 106 S.Ct. 925; (3) the regulation is aimed not at the suppression of expression, but rather at combating the negative secondary effects caused by adult entertainment establishments, Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289–91, 120 S.Ct. 1382;[27] and (4) the regulation is designed to serve a substantial government interest, narrowly tailored, and reasonable alternative avenues of communication remain available, see Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1734 (plurality opinion); id. at 1739–44 (Kennedy, J. concurring); or, alternatively, the regulation furthers an important or substantial government interest and the restriction on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential in furtherance of that interest. Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 301 (plurality opinion); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

27 This prong is, for all practical purposes, identical to the Alameda Books plurality's inquiry into whether the zoning ordinance "was content neutral or content based." 122 S.Ct. at 1733–34. Although a majority of the Justices no longer employ the content neutral label when evaluating the constitutionality of a "secondary effects" ordinance, the ultimate inquiry remains the same. See supra n. 26.

[5] Applying the foregoing analytical framework here, we conclude that Section 5(b) does not violate the First Amendment. To begin with, the Village's regulation of alcohol sales and consumption in "inappropriate locations" is clearly within its general police powers. 44 Liquormart, 517 U.S. at 515, 116 S.Ct. 1495; LaRue, 409 U.S. at 114, 93 S.Ct. 390. As such, the Village enacted Section 5(b) "within the constitutional power of the Government." Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (holding that a municipality's efforts to protect the public's health and safety through its 723 general police powers satisfies this requirement); O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673 (same).

[6] The next two prongs of our test concern the level of constitutional scrutiny that must be applied to Section 5(b). The level of First Amendment scrutiny a court uses to determine whether a regulation of adult entertainment is constitutional depends on the purpose for which the regulation was adopted. If the regulation was enacted to restrict certain viewpoints or modes of expression, it is presumptively invalid and subject to strict scrutiny. Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 403, 411–12, 109 S.Ct. 2533, 105 L.Ed.2d 342 (1989); Renton, 475 U.S. at 46–47, 106 S.Ct. 925. If, on the other hand, the regulation was adopted for a purpose unrelated to the suppression of expression—e.g., to regulate nonexpressive conduct or the time, place, and manner of expressive conduct—a court must apply a less demanding intermediate scrutiny. 491 U.S. at 406–07, 109 S.Ct. 2533; Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 289, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion); id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

[7] [8] The Supreme Court has held that regulations of adult entertainment receive intermediate scrutiny if they are designed not to suppress the "content" of erotic expression, but rather to address the negative secondary effects caused by such expression. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1733–34 (plurality opinion), id. at 1741 (Kennedy, J., concurring); Renton, 475 U.S. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925. Here, Section 5(b), like the liquor regulations at issue in LaRue, 409 U.S. at 118, 93 S.Ct. 390, does not completely prohibit Ben's Bar's dancers from conveying an erotic message; it merely prohibits alcohol from being sold or consumed on the premises of adult entertainment establishments. See, e.g., Wise Enterprises, Inc. v. Unified Gov't of Athens–Clarke County, Georgia, 217 F.3d 1360, 1365 (11th Cir.2000) (holding that "[t]he ordinance does not prohibit all nude dancing, but only restricts nude dancing in those locations where the unwanted secondary effects arise"); Sammy's of Mobile, Ltd. v. City of Mobile, 140 F.3d 993, 998 (11th Cir.1998) (holding that ordinance prohibiting alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments did not ban nude dancing, but merely restricted "the place or manner of nude dancing without regulating any particular message it might convey"). Moreover, it is clear that the "predominant concerns" motivating the Village's enactment of Section 5(b) " 'were with the secondary effects of adult [speech], and not with the content of adult [speech].' " Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1737 (plurality opinion) (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925); id. at 1739–41 (Kennedy, J., concurring). [28] The Village enacted the Ordinance because it believed "there is convincing documented evidence that Sexually Oriented Businesses have a deleterious effect on both existing businesses around them and the surrounding residential areas adjacent to them, causing increased crime and the downgrading of property values." Specifically, the Village concluded that "the consumption of alcoholic beverages on the premises of a Sexually Oriented Business exacerbates the deleterious secondary effects of such businesses on the community." Additionally, in passing the Ordinance, the Village emphasized (in the text of the Ordinance) that its intention was not 724 "to suppress any speech activities protected by the First Amendment, but to enact a[n] ... ordinance which addresses the secondary effects of Sexually Oriented Businesses," and that it was not attempting to "restrict or deny access by adults to sexually oriented-materials protected by the First Amendment ...."

28 Federal courts evaluating the "predominant concerns" behind the enactment of a statute, ordinance, regulation, or the like, may do so by examining a wide variety of materials including, but not limited to, the text of the regulation or ordinance, any preamble or express legislative findings associated with it, and studies and information of which legislators were clearly aware. Ranch House, 238 F.3d at 1280.

[9] For all of the foregoing reasons, Section 5(b) is properly analyzed as a content-based time, place, and manner restriction, or as a content-based regulation of expressive conduct, and therefore is subject only to intermediate scrutiny. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1733–36 (plurality opinion), id. at 1741 (Kennedy, J. concurring); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 294–96, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion), id. at 310, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). [29] See also Artistic Entm't, Inc. v. City of Warner Robins, 223 F.3d 1306, 1308–09 (11th Cir.2000) (holding that "a prohibition on the sale of alcohol at adult entertainment venues ... [is] content-neutral and subject to the O'Brien test"); Wise Enterprises, 217 F.3d at 1364 (holding that "[i]t is clear from these [legislative] statements the County's ordinance is aimed at the secondary effects of nude dancing combined with the consumption of alcoholic beverages, not at the message conveyed by nude dancing .... [T]he district court was [therefore] correct in [applying] ... intermediate scrutiny ...."). Regulations that prohibit nude dancing where alcohol is served or consumed are independent of expressive or communicative elements of conduct, and therefore are treated as if they were content-neutral. Wise Enterprises, 217 F.3d at 1363.

29 Compare G.Q. Gentlemen's Quarters, Inc. v. City of Lake Ozark, Missouri, 83 S.W.3d 98, 103 (2002) (holding that because the city presented no evidence that its purpose in enacting an ordinance restricting nudity in establishments where alcoholic beverages are sold "was to prevent the negative secondary effects associated with erotic dancing establishments, and, thus, that the ordinance was unrelated to the suppression of expression, the City had the heavy burden of justifying the ordinance under the strict scrutiny standard").

[10] This brings us to the heart of our analysis: whether Section 5(b) is designed to serve a substantial government interest, narrowly tailored, and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication, or, alternatively, furthers an important or substantial government interest and the restriction on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential in furtherance of that interest. As previously noted, it is not entirely clear whether an adult entertainment liquor regulation is to be treated as a time, place, and manner regulation, or instead as a regulation of expressive conduct under O'Brien. See, e.g., LLEH, Inc., 289 F.3d at 365. But in either case, we are required to ask "whether the municipality can demonstrate a connection between the speech regulated by the ordinance and the secondary effects that motivated the adoption of the ordinance." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1737 (plurality opinion). At this stage, courts must "examine evidence concerning regulated speech and secondary effects." Id. In conducting this inquiry, we are required, as previously noted, to answer two questions: (1) "what proposition does a city need to advance in order to sustain a secondary-effects ordinance?"; and (2) "how much evidence is required to support the proposition?" Id. at 1741 (Kennedy, J. concurring). [30]

30 As noted supra, under Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977), Justice Kennedy's concurrence is the controlling opinion, as the most narrow opinion joining the judgment of the Court.

725 [11] At the outset, we note that in order to justify a content-based time, place, and manner restriction or a content-based regulation of expressive conduct, a municipality "must advance some basis to show that its regulation has the purpose and effect of suppressing secondary effects [i.e., is designed to serve, or furthers, a substantial or important governmental interest], while leaving the quantity and accessibility of speech substantially intact [i.e., that the regulation is narrowly tailored and does not unreasonably limit alternative avenues of communication, or, alternatively, that the restriction on expressive conduct is no greater than is essential in furtherance of that interest]." [31] Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1741 (Kennedy, J. concurring). The regulation may identify the speech based on content, "but only as a shorthand for identifying the secondary effects outside." Id. A municipality "may not assert that it will reduce secondary effects by reducing speech in the same proportion." Id. Thus, the rationale behind the enactment of Section 5(b) must be that it will suppress secondary effects, not speech. Id.

31 In this case, it is unnecessary to conclusively resolve which of these two standards is applicable. As explained infra, Section 5(b)' s alcohol prohibition is, as a practical matter, the least restrictive means of furthering the Village's interest in combating the secondary effects resulting from the combination of adult entertainment and alcohol consumption, and therefore satisfies either standard.

The Village's rationale in support of Section 5(b) is that the liquor prohibition will significantly reduce the secondary effects that naturally result from combining adult entertainment with the consumption of alcoholic beverages without substantially diminishing the availability of adult entertainment, in this case nude and semi-nude dancing. In enacting the Ordinance, the Village Board relied on numerous judicial decisions, studies from 11 different cities, and "findings reported in the Regulation of Adult Entertainment Establishments of St. Croix, Wisconsin; and the Report of the Attorney General's Working Group of Sexually Oriented Businesses (June 6, 1989, State of Minnesota)," to support its conclusion that adult entertainment produces adverse secondary effects.

Ben's Bar argues that the Village may not rely on prior judicial decisions or the experiences of other municipalities, but must instead conduct its own studies, at the local level, to determine whether adverse secondary effects result when liquor is served on the premises of adult entertainment establishments. This view, however, has been expressly (and repeatedly) rejected by the Supreme Court. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1743 (Kennedy, J. concurring) (holding that " '[t]he First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting ... an [adult entertainment secondary effects] ordinance to conduct new studies or produce evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses.' ") (quoting Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925);

Barnes, 501 U.S. at 584, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J. concurring) (same).

Ben's Bar also contends that the Village failed to meet its burden of demonstrating the constitutionality of Section 5(b) because "the Village's evidentiary record did not include any written reports relating specifically to the effects of serving alcohol in establishments offering nude and semi-nude dancing." In LaRue, however, the Supreme Court explicitly held that a State's conclusion that "certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur at premises that have licenses was not an irrational 726 one." 409 U.S. at 118, 93 S.Ct. 390. Because the adult entertainment at issue in this case is of the same character as that at issue in LaRue, it was entirely reasonable for the Village to conclude that barroom nude dancing was likely to produce adverse secondary effects at the local level, even in the absence of specific studies on the matter. Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1736–37 (plurality opinion) (adopting view of plurality in Pap's A.M. as to the evidentiary requirement for adult entertainment cases), id. at 1741 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (agreeing with the plurality on this point, as a fifth vote); Pap's A.M., 529 U.S. at 296–97, 120 S.Ct. 1382 (plurality opinion) (same); Giovani, 303 F.3d at 516 (same). In fact, the Supreme Court has gone so far as to assert that "[c]ommon sense indicates that any form of nudity coupled with alcohol in a public place begets undesirable behavior." Bellanca, 452 U.S. at 718, 101 S.Ct. 2599. See also Blue Canary, 251 F.3d at 1124 (noting that "[l]iquor and sex are an explosive combination"); Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd. of California, 99 Cal.App.4th 880, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 729, 737 (2002) (same). For these reasons, we conclude that the evidentiary record fairly supports the Village's proffered rationale for Section 5(b), and that Ben's Bar has failed "to cast direct doubt on this rationale either by demonstrating the [Village's] evidence does not support its rationale or by furnishing evidence that disputes the [Village's] factual findings ...." Alameda Books, 122 S.Ct. at 1736.

Ben's Bar also contends that Section 5(b) is not narrowly tailored because the Village offered no evidence that "the incidental restrictions placed on Ben's [Bar], over and above the pasties and G-strings requirement, ameliorate any purported negative secondary effects." This argument, however, is problematic for several reasons, two of which we will address briefly.

[12] First, as previously noted, Section 5(b) does not impose any restrictions whatsoever on a dancer's ability to convey an erotic message. Instead, the regulation prohibits Sexually Oriented Businesses like Ben's Bar from serving alcoholic beverages to its patrons during a dancer's performance. This is not a restriction on erotic expression, but a prohibition of nonexpressive conduct (i.e., serving and consuming alcohol) during the presentation of expressive conduct. The First Amendment does not entitle Ben's Bar, its dancers, or its patrons, to have alcohol available during a "presentation" of nude or semi-nude dancing. See Gary v. City of Warner Robins, Georgia, 311 F.3d 1334, 1340 (11th Cir.2002) (holding that ordinance prohibiting persons under the age of 21 from entering or working at "any establishment ... which sells alcohol by the drink for consumption on premises" did not violate an underage nude dancer's First Amendment right to free expression because she "remains free to observe and engage in nude dancing, but she simply cannot do so ... in establishments that primarily derive their sales from alcoholic beverages consumed on the premises"); Sammy's of Mobile, 140 F.3d at 999 (holding that while nude dancing is entitled to a degree of protection under the Supreme Court's First Amendment jurisprudence, "we are unaware of any constitutional right to drink while watching nude dancing"); Dept. of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 99 Cal.App.4th at 895, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 729 (noting that "[t]he State ... has not prohibited dancers from performing with the utmost level of erotic expression. They are simply forbidden to do so in establishments which serve alcohol, and the Constitution is thereby not offended"). What the First Amendment does require is that establishments like Ben's Bar be given "a 727 'reasonable opportunity' to disseminate the speech at issue." North Ave. Novelties, Inc. v. City of Chicago, 88 F.3d 441, 445 (7th Cir.1996). A "reasonable opportunity," however, does not include a concern for economic considerations. Renton, 475 U.S. at 54, 106 S.Ct. 925. [32]

32 In an affidavit filed with the district court, Barry Breault, part-owner of Ben's Bar, stated that:

> The bulk of Ben's Bar's revenues are derived from beverage sales and associated food sales. Revenues from adult entertainment ... account for only about one-third of Ben's revenues. Ben's Bar cannot operate at a profit without the revenue from the sale of alcoholic beverages, and the business such sales bring in.

(Emphasis added.)

Second, Section 5(b)'s alcohol prohibition, like the one in LaRue, is limited to adult entertainment establishments, and does not apply to:

> [T]heaters, performing arts centers, civic centers, and dinner theaters where live dance, ballet, music, and dramatic performances of serious artistic merit are offered on a regular basis; and in which the predominant business or attraction is not the offering of entertainment which is intended for the sexual interests or titillation of customers; and where the establishment is not distinguished by an emphasis on or the advertising or promotion of nude or semi-nude performances. [33]

33 This section of the Ordinance also emphasizes that "[w]hile expressive live nudity may occur within these establishments [those noted in section (6)], this ordinance seeks only to minimize and prevent the secondary effects of Sexually Oriented Businesses on the community. Negative secondary effects have not been associated with these establishments."

Ordinance A–472(6). Compare Giovani, 303 F.3d at 515 (noting that lack of evidentiary support for adult entertainment liquor regulations "might not pose a problem if the challenged restrictions applied only to bars and clubs that present nude or topless dancing").

Finally, we note that Section 5(b)'s liquor prohibition is no greater than is essential to further the Village's substantial interest in combating the secondary effects resulting from the combination of nude and semi-nude dancing and alcohol consumption because, as a practical matter, a complete ban of alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments is the only way the Village can advance that interest. As the Supreme Court recognized in LaRue,

> Nothing in the record before us or in common experience compels the conclusion that either self-discipline on the part of the customer or self-regulation on the part of the bartender could have been relied upon by the Department to secure compliance with ... [the] regulation[s]. The Department's choice of a prophylactic solution instead of one that would have required its own personnel to judge individual instances of inebriation cannot, therefore, be deemed an unreasonable one ....

409 U.S. at 116, 93 S.Ct. 390. See also Wise Enterprises, Inc. v. Unified Government of Athens–Clarke County, Georgia, 217 F.3d 1360, 1364–65 (11th Cir.2000) (holding that ordinance prohibiting alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments satisfied O'Brien's requirement that restriction on First Amendment rights be no greater than necessary to the furtherance of the government's interest because "[t]here is no less restrictive alternative"). Indeed, unlike the zoning ordinance at issue in Alameda Books, there is no need to speculate as to whether Section 5(b) will achieve its stated purpose. Prohibiting alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments will unquestionably reduce the enhanced secondary 728 effects resulting from the explosive combination of alcohol consumption and nude or semi-nude dancing.

Given the foregoing, we conclude that Section 5(b) does not violate the First Amendment. The regulation has no impact whatsoever on the tavern's ability to offer nude or semi-nude dancing to its patrons; it seeks to regulate alcohol and nude or semi-nude dancing without prohibiting either. The citizens of the Village of Somerset may still buy a drink and watch nude or semi-nude dancing. They are not, however, constitutionally entitled to do both at the same time and in the same place. Gary, 311 F.3d at 1338 (holding that there is no generalized right to associate with other adults in alcohol-purveying establishments with other adults). The deprivation of alcohol does not prevent the observer from witnessing nude or semi-nude dancing, or the dancer from conveying an erotic message. Perhaps a sober patron will find the performance less tantalizing, and the dancer might therefore feel less appreciated (not necessarily from the reduction in ogling and cat calls, but certainly from any decrease in the amount of tips she might otherwise receive). And we do not doubt Ben's Bar's assertion that its profit margin will suffer if it is unable to serve alcohol to its patrons. But the First Amendment rights of each are not offended when the show goes on without liquor.

III.

For the reasons expressed in this opinion, Section 5(b)'s prohibition of alcohol on the premises of adult entertainment establishments does not violate the First Amendment. We, therefore, affirm the district court's decision granting the Village's motion for summary judgment.

All Citations

316 F.3d 702

26 F.Supp.2d 1128
United States District Court,
W.D. Wisconsin.

Joseph SCHULTZ, d/b/a Island Bar, and Tonya Norwood, Plaintiffs,
v.
THE CITY OF CUMBERLAND, Defendant.

No. 98–C–0107–C.
|
Nov. 5, 1998.

Nude dancer and owner of bar at which she performed brought action for declaratory and injunctive relief, challenging a city ordinance establishing a comprehensive licensing and regulatory scheme for "sexually oriented businesses." On plaintiffs' motions to strike affidavits and for summary judgment, the District Court, Crabb, J., held that: (1) city would be allowed to supplement enumerated findings in a ordinance with evidence in form of affidavits from members of subcommittee which drafted ordinance; (2) prohibition against depicting specified sexual acts and appearing in a state of nudity satisfied secondary effects test as to bar, but was facially overbroad; (3) ordinance section regulating hours of operation did not violate First Amendment or equal protection; (4) three of nine challenged licensing provisions were unconstitutional prior restraints; and (5) unconstitutional provisions were not severable from remainder of ordinance.

Motion to strike denied, motion for summary judgment granted.

West Headnotes (41)

[1] Constitutional Law
Zoning and land use

Local government may not force adult movie theaters to be located in a particular area of the city on the ground that the government finds the content of films displayed by such theaters distasteful, as that would be viewpoint discrimination prohibited by the First Amendment, but the same government could enact a similar regulation to control urban blight and related problems associated with adult theaters. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

Constitutional Law
Nude dancing in general

Public nudity by itself is not protected speech, but nonobscene nude dancing does have some status under the First Amendment, because it is expressive conduct that conveys an erotic message. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Conduct, protection of

Constitutional Law
Flag desecration or disrespect

Governments may ban or restrict nonverbal expressive activity because of the action it entails, but not because of the ideas it expresses; thus, burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against outdoor fires could be punishable, whereas burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against dishonoring the flag is not. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Time, Place, or Manner Restrictions

Constitutional Law
Governmental disagreement with message conveyed

For purposes of First Amendment analysis, laws that regulate protected speech fall into one of two categories: content-based or content-neutral; "content-based law" regulates speech or conduct on the basis of hostility or favoritism towards the underlying message expressed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Courts
Number of judges concurring in opinion, and opinion by divided court

When courts are confronted with fractured Supreme Court opinions, the holding of the Supreme Court may be viewed as that position taken by those members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds; courts should attempt to find the common denominator upon which a majority of justices agree, but where no such common denominator exists, courts are not required to create one.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Courts
Number of judges concurring in opinion, and opinion by divided court

In cases in which at least five justices of the Supreme Court do not agree implicitly on a single rationale, no particular standard constitutes the law of the land, because no single approach can be said to have the support of a majority of the court.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions
Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring requirement; relationship to governmental interest
Constitutional Law
Existence of other channels of expression

Time, place or manner restriction designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects associated with certain businesses is reviewed under the First Amendment standards applicable to "content-neutral" laws; such a restriction does not amount to illegal viewpoint discrimination if it is (1) justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) narrowly tailored to serve a substantial governmental interest; and (3) preserves ample alternative means of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality
Municipal Corporations
Public morals

Ordinance establishing a licensing and regulatory scheme for sexually oriented businesses was content-neutral for purposes of First Amendment analysis, despite claim that, because it targeted only sexually oriented businesses, it discriminated on its face against a particular viewpoint, namely, a sexual or erotic viewpoint; language of ordinance revealed that it was justified by reference to certain harmful secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses, not by reference to the erotic content of the message expressed by such businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Operative consideration in determining whether law is "content-neutral," for purposes of First Amendment analysis, is whether the law is justified without reference to the content of regulated speech, not whether it focuses on some businesses but not on others. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Motive

Court can not strike down an otherwise constitutional statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive.

Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

For purposes of First Amendment analysis, court does not ask why municipality actually enacted challenged ordinance, but whether it has offered evidence that it could have enacted it for a content-neutral reason; when answering this question, the court is guided primarily by the text of the law in question. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

To justify a regulation challenged on First Amendment grounds, a city government need not conduct its own studies, but may rely upon the experiences of other cities, as well as studies conducted by them, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem addressed by the regulation; this evidence may be nothing more than a reference to detailed findings summarized in a legal opinion involving a similar regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
First Amendment in General

To show that substantial governmental interests are served by a regulation challenged on First Amendment grounds, a government is not required to establish conclusively that the regulated activity actually causes the secondary effects, only that it reasonably believes that the effects are correlated with the existence of such establishments. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Narrowing, requirement of Regulation is narrowly tailored, for purposes of First Amendment analysis, so long as the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest; put another way, the means chosen are narrowly tailored if a less restrictive alternative would promote the governmental interest less effectively. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Municipal Corporations
Construction and operation

City would be allowed to supplement the enumerated findings in an ordinance challenged on First Amendment grounds with evidence that provided a more detailed explanation of the basis of those findings, and thus, affidavits submitted by various individuals who served on the subcommittee that drafted the ordinance would not be stricken; supplemental evidence contained in the affidavits did not contradict any of the ordinance's existing provisions and did not create new findings or justifications. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Statutes
Motives, Opinions, and Statements of Legislators

Wisconsin rule that a court may not rely upon the testimony of members of a legislative body for the purpose of determining what that body intended when it enacted a particular piece of legislation is inapplicable in a case governed by federal law.

Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law

Nude or semi-nude dancing

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

Ordinance section prohibiting employees of sexually oriented businesses from appearing totally nude, and prohibiting the depiction of specified sexual activities in such businesses, was a valid time, place and manner restriction, for purposes of First Amendment analysis, as applied to a bar featuring nude dancing; there were legislative findings regarding crime and health concerns associated with such businesses, and objective lawmaker could have concluded that a ban on total nudity in adult cabarets was likely to reduce illicit activity cataloged in the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law

Nude or semi-nude dancing

Intoxicating Liquors

Licensing and regulation

Findings as to the incidence of crime associated with a bar featuring nude dancing did not have to be measured against law enforcement problems associated with nonsexually oriented businesses in city for such findings to support ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, challenged on First Amendment grounds. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law

First Amendment in General

Overbreadth doctrine allows a person who has engaged in conduct not protected by the First Amendment to challenge the constitutionality of a law that might be used against individuals who do engage in protected conduct, but such persons may do so only when the threat presented by a statute is real and substantial, and then only as a last resort. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law

Nude or semi-nude dancing

Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment

Dancing and other performances

Ordinance section prohibiting employees of sexually oriented businesses from appearing totally nude, and prohibiting the depiction of specified sexual activities in such businesses, was unconstitutionally overbroad under First Amendment analysis, as it made no exceptions for live performances with serious artistic, social, and political value; those and other similar forms of unclothed entertainment were not correlated with the type of harmful secondary effects identified by city, but could conceivably fall within the sweep of the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law

Secondary effects

Municipal Corporations

Public safety and welfare

Ordinance section permitting sexually oriented businesses to be open only from 10:00 a.m. to midnight, Monday through Saturday, satisfied the secondary effects test for validity under First Amendment analysis; legislators could conclude that restricting the number of hours of operation would promote public safety by permitting local law enforcement to focus its limited resources on matters unrelated to the illicit activity associated with such businesses, some of which was more likely to occur during the hours between midnight and dawn. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law

Narrow tailoring

Regulation challenged on First Amendment grounds will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative; the relevant inquiry is whether the provision is substantially broader than necessary, not whether the statute is need of fine-tuning. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law

Other particular occupations and businesses

Municipal Corporations

Public safety and welfare

Ordinance section permitting sexually oriented businesses to be open only from 10:00 a.m. to midnight, Monday through Saturday, satisfied the rational basis test for validity under equal protection analysis; city had a legitimate interest in reducing illicit activity associated with sexually oriented businesses, and ordinance forced those businesses to remain closed when this activity was most likely to happen and when law enforcement was least capable of responding to it. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law

Prior restraints

In general, a law that requires an individual to obtain a license before engaging in some form of protected speech is a "prior restraint," against which a facial First Amendment challenge may be brought if the law gives a government official or agency substantial power to discriminate based on the content or viewpoint of speech by suppressing disfavored speech or disliked speakers. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law

Presumption of invalidity

Prior restraints bear a heavy presumption against constitutionality because a free society prefers to punish the few who abuse rights of speech after they break the law than throttle them and all others beforehand. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law

Prior restraints

To avoid running afoul of the First Amendment, a prior restraint must not place unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency, and must place some limits on the time within which a government decisionmaker must issue or deny the license. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Constitutional Law

Licenses

Sole proprietor of bar featuring nude dancing lacked standing to assert First Amendment challenge to section of ordinance imposing licensing requirements on corporate entity or partnership applying for a license to operate a sexually oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law

Disclosure and recordkeeping requirements

Municipal Corporations

Permits

Licensing requirement of ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, mandating applicants to disclose specified prior criminal convictions, was not an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; there was evidence from which a legislator could conclude that refusing to license a sexually oriented business run by an individual with a prior conviction for a sex-related crime would reduce the amount of illicit activity correlated with such businesses, ordinance did not require disclosure of older offenses, and it drew a distinction between misdemeanor and felony offenses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing requirement of ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, mandating applicants to disclose past licenses and whether past licenses had been denied, suspended or revoked, was not an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; requirement was narrowly tailored to require disclosure only of licenses to operate sexually oriented businesses and limited disqualification only to those applicants who had had a license denied or revoked within the past year. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing requirement of ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, mandating applicants for an operator's license to disclose any aliases and provide city with a passport-size photograph, was not an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; without photographs and aliases, city would not be able to conduct background checks necessary to the purpose of deterring crime associated with sexually oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[31] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing requirement of city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, mandating approval of the premises by health department, fire department, and building official, was an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; city presented no evidence and cited no opinion containing findings showing that sexually oriented businesses tended to present a greater fire hazard than other businesses or were not as sound structurally. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[32] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Licensing requirement of city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, disqualifying applicants who were overdue in payment to city of taxes, fees, fines, or penalties, was an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; city presented no findings showing that the owners of adult cabarets are more likely than other business owners not to pay their taxes, and adduced no evidence establishing a correlation between tax delinquency and the undesirable secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[33] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing requirement of ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, prohibiting such businesses from employing anyone who did not hold a valid employee license, was not an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; employee licensing would help insure that individuals with a demonstrated propensity to engage in the type of illicit activity associated with sexually oriented businesses worked elsewhere. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[34] Constitutional Law
Disclosure and recordkeeping requirements
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing requirement of city ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, mandating disclosure of information regarding employees, including their home telephone numbers and their fingerprints, was an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech; city failed to show that the employee disclosure provisions were narrowly tailored to serve crime prevention, absent adequate safeguards to insure the confidentiality of information disclosed. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[35] Constitutional Law
Narrow tailoring

Regulation is narrowly tailored, for purposes of First Amendment analysis, so long as the interest it seeks to promote would be achieved less effectively without the regulation; however, this does not mean that a regulation may burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government's legitimate interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[36] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Municipal Corporations
Permits

Licensing fees imposed by ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, a $100 nonrefundable application fee, an additional $400 licensing fee, and a $25 nonrefundable business employee licensing application fee, were reasonably related to the costs of administering the licensing system and did not constitute a tax prohibited by the First Amendment; in establishing the licensing fees, city considered costs associated with processing and investigating an application, ongoing records maintenance, licensing fees imposed on other establishments, and the estimated cost of enforcing the ordinance. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[37] Constitutional Law
Particular Issues and Applications

Government may not levy a tax on the exercise of First Amendment rights, but may impose a fee that is incidental to a valid licensing scheme; fee must be a nominal fee imposed as a regulatory measure to defray the expenses of policing the activities in question. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[38] Constitutional Law
Particular Issues and Applications

If a government seeks to impose a fee for the operation of a business protected by the First Amendment, it has the burden of demonstrating that the fees are reasonably related to costs of administering the licensing system. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[39] Municipal Corporations
Effect of partial invalidity

Unconstitutional provisions in city ordinance regulating "sexually oriented businesses," specifically a facially overbroad prohibition against depicting specified sexual acts and appearing in a state of nudity and three licensing provisions which were prior restraints on speech, could not be severed from the ordinance as a whole; without a workable definition of "sexually oriented business," city had no way of identifying those establishments that it could legitimately regulate and license. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[40] Statutes

Effect of Partial Invalidity;Severability

Unconstitutionally overbroad statute should be invalidated only to the extent that it reaches too far, but otherwise left intact.

Cases that cite this headnote

[41] Municipal Corporations

Effect of partial invalidity

Even in the face of a strong severability clause, courts are not authorized to completely reconstruct a local ordinance when nothing short of rewriting could save it.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

1133 Randall D.B. Tigue, Minneapolis MN, for Plaintiffs.

Brady C. Williamson, Lafollette & Sinykin, Madison WI, for Defendant.

OPINION AND ORDER

CRABB, District Judge.

In this civil action for declaratory and injunctive relief, plaintiffs challenge a municipal ordinance enacted by defendant City of Cumberland that establishes a comprehensive licensing and regulatory scheme for all "sexually oriented businesses." Among other things, the ordinance prohibits the depiction of "specified sexual activities" in a sexually oriented business and it bars anyone from appearing in a state of nudity in such a business. Also, the ordinance limits the hours that sexually oriented businesses may operate and prohibits anyone from operating or working in such a business without a valid license. Plaintiff Joseph Schultz is the sole proprietor of the Island Bar, an establishment located in the City of Cumberland that features live dancers, including plaintiff Tonya Norwood, who perform in a state of total nudity. Plaintiffs contend that numerous aspects of the ordinance violate their right to free speech or are unconstitutionally overbroad. Plaintiffs ask the court to declare the ordinance invalid and to enjoin defendant permanently from enforcing it. Defendant maintains that the ordinance is a content-neutral time, place and manner restriction designed to further defendant's substantial interest in reducing undesirable secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses.

The case is before this court on plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and plaintiffs' motion to strike certain affidavits submitted by defendant. I conclude that by prohibiting the depiction of specified sexual activities and by prohibiting anyone from appearing in a state of nudity, the ordinance is unconstitutionally overbroad. These prohibitions could be applied just as easily to the Island Bar as they could to a commercial establishment featuring mainstream motion pictures or plays of unquestioned artistic merit in which there is a naked female breast or the depiction of two individuals engaging in sexual intercourse. Despite this potential, defendant has presented no evidence suggesting that prostitution, urban blight or other harmful secondary effects are associated with non-adult cinemas and theaters. I find 1134 also that the disclosure requirements for individuals applying for a license to work in a sexually oriented business are unconstitutional. These requirements are not narrowly tailored to serve defendant's interest in insuring that employees of sexually oriented businesses refrain from engaging in criminal activity; the ordinance does not contain adequate measures to protect the confidentiality of personal information disclosed by applicants. Finally, provisions in the ordinance that make obtaining a license to operate a sexually oriented business contingent upon passing a building inspection and being current on all taxes are not justified by any evidence. In all other respects, the ordinance withstands scrutiny. However, because the unconstitutionally overbroad provision cannot be severed from the ordinance or rewritten by the court, the ordinance as a whole will be declared unenforceable. Plaintiffs are entitled to summary judgment. Plaintiffs' motion to strike will be denied.

On a motion for summary judgment, the moving party must show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that it is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986); Oates v. Discovery Zone, 116 F.3d 1161, 1165 (7th Cir.1997). For the purpose of deciding this motion for summary judgment, I find from the parties' proposed findings of fact that there is no genuine dispute with respect to the following material facts.

UNDISPUTED FACTS

Plaintiff Joseph Schultz is proprietor of the Island Bar, located in Cumberland, Wisconsin. Plaintiff Tonya Norwood is employed at the Island Bar as an exotic dancer. Defendant City of Cumberland is a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the state of Wisconsin.

In 1994, defendant enacted an ordinance regulating nude dancing in establishments that serve alcohol on their premises. Plaintiff Schultz challenged the ordinance unsuccessfully. On October 12, 1994, the city revoked the Island Bar's liquor license after determining that improper sexual activity had occurred on the premises. Presently, the Island Bar features the sale of non-alcoholic beverages and live nude entertainment.

In 1997, the mayor of Cumberland, Lawrence Samlaska, learned about communities that were enacting ordinances to regulate sexually oriented businesses. In May 1997, the mayor directed the city planning commission to consider zoning aspects of such ordinances and to establish a subcommittee to coordinate the process of accumulating, disseminating and analyzing data relevant for drafting such an ordinance. The subcommittee convened its first meeting on July 2, 1997; it met ten times between July 1997 and January 1998. The subcommittee delegated specific areas of research and inquiry to individual committee members.

From the outset, the subcommittee relied on a model ordinance created by the National Family Legal Foundation. According to its mission statement, the foundation is dedicated to providing legal assistance and educational resources to communities interested in combating negative secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. Also, subcommittee members reviewed similar ordinances enacted by other communities in Wisconsin and Minnesota. Some of these ordinances dealt solely with zoning, others only with licensing and still others incorporated both zoning and licensing characteristics. Subcommittee member Carolyn Burns spoke with the city attorneys in these communities and, in some instances, with others familiar with the problems associated with sexually oriented businesses. Burns told the rest of the subcommittee what she had learned from these conversations and from her review of two books: Local Regulation of Adult Businesses, by Jules Gerard, a professor of law at Washington University; and Protecting Communities from Sexually Oriented Businesses, by Len Munsil, a lawyer.

Mayor Samlaska provided information to the planning commission and subcommittee. He told these bodies about undercover police surveillance that had taken place at the Island Bar and had resulted in arrests and convictions for prostitution, underage drinking, disorderly conduct and theft. Surveillance films depicted employees having intimate 1135 physical contact and sexual relations with patrons.

Subcommittee member Jeffrey Streeter researched zoning and licensing issues. With respect to establishing an appropriate license fee, he considered estimated costs associated with processing an application and conducting background checks, ongoing records maintenance, estimated enforcement costs and license fees applicable to other types of businesses. For example, the fee for a liquor license is $500. Streeter and the subcommittee determined that a $100 application fee was necessary, in part, to cover investigation costs. On the basis of defendant's experiences with establishments licensed to sell liquor, the subcommittee determined that $400 was necessary to defray enforcement costs. The $25 fee for employee licenses was necessary to cover administration costs, records maintenance and issuing identification cards.

Subcommittee member Richard Nerbun researched health-related findings listed in the ordinance. He did so by culling statistics from publications issued by the Centers for Disease Control. For the most part, Nerbun focused on statistics related to sexually transmitted diseases. In addition, Nerbun researched the ordinance's hours of operation provision. He considered matters related to sexual assault and molestation of children and law enforcement response time on weekends. On several occasions, the subcommittee discussed police staffing concerns and how these concerns should play into the hours of operation provision. Specifically, subcommittee members recognized that there is only one police officer on duty Sunday through Thursday. During this period, citizens must rely on the county sheriff's office for law enforcement, which can result in a longer response time.

On December 10, 1997, the subcommittee sent a draft of the ordinance to the planning commission. Following a public hearing, all seven members of the planning commission voted unanimously to recommend adoption of the ordinance by the city council. On January 6, 1998, the city council conducted a public hearing. Following review and discussion, the city council voted unanimously, with all members present, to enact the ordinance. No other licensed businesses in the City of Cumberland are subject to the licensing, inspection, disclosure and disqualification requirements that apply to sexually oriented businesses.

Plaintiff Norwood and other dancers at the Island Bar perform in a state of nudity, as defined in the ordinance. She uses a stage name to prevent customers from learning her true name or her home address. Plaintiff Norwood is afraid that a customer would be able to obtain personal information about her from licensing records kept by defendant pursuant to the ordinance. In the event that the ordinance is enforced, Norwood will not apply for a license in order to continue working for the Island Bar. Instead, she will practice her profession as an exotic dancer elsewhere.

OPINION

I. THE ORDINANCE

Defendant's ordinance regulates so-called "sexually oriented businesses" and is divided into twenty-four sections, three of which are the subject of this lawsuit: 1) the prohibition against depicting "specified sexual acts" and appearing in a "state of nudity"; 2) the hours of operation provision; and 3) various licensing requirements imposed on owners and employees of sexually oriented businesses. Key to an understanding of these provisions and the constitutionality of the ordinance are two sections containing extensive findings and definitions of important terms.

The preamble and first section of the ordinance set forth several declarations and findings. Among the declarations provided are the following:

> WHEREAS, sexually oriented businesses require special supervision from the public safety agencies of the City in order to protect and preserve the health, safety and welfare of the patrons of such businesses as well as the citizens of the City;
>
> WHEREAS, the City Council finds that sexually oriented businesses are frequently used for unlawful sexual activities, including prostitution and sexual liaisons of a casual nature; and
>
> WHEREAS, the concern over sexually transmitted diseases is a legitimate health 1136 concern of the City which demands reasonable regulation of sexually oriented businesses in order to protect the health and well-being of the citizens; and
>
> WHEREAS, licensing is a legitimate and reasonable means of accountability to ensure that operators of sexually oriented businesses comply with reasonable regulations and to ensure that operators do not knowingly allow their establishments to be used as places of illegal sexual activity or solicitation; and

* * * * * *

WHEREAS, the City Council has determined that location criteria alone do not adequately protect the health, safety, and general welfare of the people of this City;

* * * * * *

City of Cumberland, Wis., Municipal Code, § 12.15. In addition to these and other declarations, the ordinance contains a number of findings based on "evidence" in "studies" from several cities. Included among such findings are several statements regarding the connection between sexually oriented businesses and the spread of crime, urban blight and sexually transmitted diseases. For example, one finding contained in the ordinance declares:

> It is desirable in the prevention of the spread of communicable diseases to obtain a limited amount of information regarding certain employees who may engaged in the conduct which this ordinance is designed to prevent or who are likely to be witnesses to such activity.

§ 1(B)(22).

Section 8(A) of the ordinance prohibits anyone in a sexually oriented business from appearing in a "state of nudity," defined as > the showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage with less than a fully opaque covering, the showing of the female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple, or the showing of the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state.

§ 2(15). An employee of a sexually oriented business may appear in a state of semi-nudity, provided the employee is at least ten feet from patrons and perched on a stage elevated at least two feet off the floor. § 8(B). The ordinance contains the following definition of "semi-nude":

> [T]he showing of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola at its highest point or the showing of the male or female buttocks. This definition shall include the entire lower portion of the human female breast, but shall not include any portion of the cleavage of the human female breast, exhibited by a dress, skirt, leotard, bathing suit, or other wearing apparel provided the areola is not exposed in whole or in part.

§ 2(19). In addition to prohibiting total nudity, section 8(A) also bars the depiction of "specified sexual acts," a term that encompasses "sex acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including intercourse, oral copulation, masturbation, or sodomy." § 2(24).

Included among the definition of "sexual oriented businesses" are adult cabarets, theaters and motion picture theaters. § 2(21). "Adult cabaret" is defined as "nightclub, bar, restaurant, or similar commercial establishment which regularly features: (a) persons who appear in a state of nudity or semi-nude; or ... (c) films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides or other photographic reproductions which are characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' " § 2(3). The ordinance does not define "regularly feature" but states that "specified anatomical areas" include "(a) the human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely and opaquely covered; or (b) less than completely and opaquely covered human genitals, pubic region, buttocks or a female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola." § 2(22).

Sexually oriented businesses may operate only within certain times set by the ordinance. They must remain closed on Sundays and may operate only between 10 a.m. to 12 midnight, Monday through Saturday. These restrictions apply to all sexually oriented businesses except for adult motels. § 10.

Under the ordinance, it is illegal to operate a sexually oriented business or work in such a business without a license from defendant. § 11. These licenses are issued subject to certain disclosure, inspection and disqualification 1137 provisions. To obtain an operator's license, an applicant must provide his or her name, age, mailing and residential addresses, aliases, a recent photograph and must divulge whether he or she has been convicted of "specified criminal activity." § 11(E). An individual applying for an employee license must provide this same information as well as his or her date and place of birth, height, weight, hair and eye color, home and business telephone numbers and fingerprints. § 11(F) and (G). If the prospective operator of a sexually oriented business is a corporate entity, as opposed to an individual, each person with an ownership interest in the business greater than 20% must sign the license application and comply with the disclosure provisions set forth in subsection (E). § 11(D).

The ordinance establishes certain standards with which defendant must comply when investigating applications and issuing licenses. Upon receiving an employee license application, defendant must issue a temporary license to the applicant. § 12(A). Defendant must complete the licensing process within thirty days after receiving an application, whereupon defendant must issue a license unless review of the application reveals one or more of five enumerated "findings," including a determination that the applicant has been convicted of specified criminal activity. Id. With respect to applications for an operator's license, defendant must act within the same 30–day time frame and may deny a license if it finds, among other things, that the applicant owes overdue taxes, fees, fines or penalties, that the applicant has been convicted of specified criminal activity or that "the premises to be used for the sexually oriented business have not been approved by the health department, fire department, and the building official as being in compliance with applicable laws and ordinances." § 12(C). In addition, defendant not issue a license if the applicant has not paid his or her application fee, $25 for an employee license and $400 for an operator's license. § 14.

II. INTRODUCTION

[1] The constitutionality of many of the provisions from defendant's ordinance turns on whether these provisions are designed to combat secondary effects associated with nude dancing or whether they target the content of the message conveyed by such dancing. For example, a local government may not force adult movie theaters to be located in a particular area of the city because the government finds the content of films displayed by such theaters distasteful; this would be viewpoint discrimination, which is prohibited by the First Amendment. However, the same government could enact a similar regulation in order to control urban blight and related problems associated with adult theaters. See Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986). As already indicated, the constitutionally significant distinction between these approaches to regulating adult theaters is that the first ordinance is justified by reference to content while the second ordinance is justified by reference to "undesirable secondary effects of such businesses." Id. at 49, 106 S.Ct. 925. An analysis of defendant's ordinance must be guided by two Supreme Court opinions. See Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991); Renton, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29.

A. Barnes and Renton

[2] The First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit governments from abridging "the freedom of speech." Although the term "speech," as used in the Constitution, encompasses nonverbal communication and expressive conduct, the Supreme Court has long since rejected the notion "that an apparently limitless variety of conduct can be labeled 'speech' whenever the person engaging in the conduct intends thereby to express an idea." United States v. O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672 (1968). For example, public nudity by itself is not protected speech, see Barnes, 501 U.S. at 571, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality) (little if any message conveyed by appearance of individuals at nude beach), id. at 573–574, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring) (same), id. at 581, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring) (same), but non-obscene nude dancing does have some status under the First Amendment because it is expressive conduct that conveys an erotic message. See Barnes, at 565–566, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality) (nude dancing is "expressive 1138 conduct within the outer perimeters of the First Amendment, though we view it as only marginally so"); Schad v. Borough of Mt. Ephraim, 452 U.S. 61, 65, 101 S.Ct. 2176, 68 L.Ed.2d 671 (1981) (an entertainment program may not be prohibited solely because it displays the nude human figure); Jenkins v. Georgia, 418 U.S. 153, 161, 94 S.Ct. 2750, 41 L.Ed.2d 642 (1974) (nudity alone does not place otherwise protected material outside mantle of First Amendment).

[3] [4] Governments may ban or restrict nonverbal expressive activity "because of the action it entails, but not because of the ideas it expresses—so that burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against outdoor fires could be punishable, whereas burning a flag in violation of an ordinance against dishonoring the flag is not." R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 386, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992) (citations omitted). In other words, laws that regulate protected speech fall into one of two categories: content-based or content-neutral. A content-based law regulates speech or conduct on the basis of "hostility or favoritism towards the underlying message expressed." Id. at 386, 112 S.Ct. 2538.

At first glance, many laws that regulate expressive conduct do not fit neatly into either of these categories. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925 (zoning restrictions for adult movie theaters). To distinguish between content-neutral and content-based laws, the Supreme Court has applied two different analytical frameworks, one of which is derived from O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, the other from Clark v. Community for Creative Non–Violence, 468 U.S. 288, 104 S.Ct. 3065, 82 L.Ed.2d 221 (1984). Although these frameworks are not formulated alike, the Court has acknowledged that there is little, if any, substantive difference between them. See Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 566, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991) (plurality) (O'Brien and Clark tests "embody much the same standards...."); Clark, 468 U.S. at 298, 104 S.Ct. 3065 (same). See also International Eateries of America, Inc. v. Broward County, 941 F.2d 1157, 1161 n. 2 (11th Cir.1991) (same substantive outcome under either standard).

O'Brien and Clark each involved laws that restricted or banned expressive activity. In O'Brien, 391 U.S. 367, 88 S.Ct. 1673, 20 L.Ed.2d 672, an individual protesting the Vietnam War was arrested for burning his draft card in violation of federal law. The Court held that the type of "symbolic speech" engaged in by the protester is entitled only to qualified protection under the First Amendment, concluding that "when 'speech' and nonspeech' elements are combined in the same course of conduct, a sufficiently important governmental interest in regulating the nonspeech element can justify incidental limitations on First Amendment freedoms." Id. at 376, 88 S.Ct. 1673. In these situations, courts are directed to gauge the sufficiency of a governmental interest by inquiring whether: 1) the regulation is within the constitutional power of the government; 2) the regulation furthers an important or Substantial governmental interest; 3) the governmental interest is unrelated to the suppression of free expression; and 4) whether the incidental restriction on First Amendment freedoms is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of the governmental interest. Id. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673.

In Clark, 468 U.S. at 289, 104 S.Ct. 3065, the Court held that a National Park Service regulation prohibiting camping in certain parks did not violate the First Amendment when applied to prohibit demonstrators from sleeping in such parks as a part of their demonstration. After acknowledging that all manner of expression is subject to reasonable time, place and manner restrictions, the Court noted that such restrictions "are valid provided that they are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech, that they are narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and that they leave open ample alternative channels for communication of the information." Id. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065 (citations omitted).

The Court has applied the O'Brien and Clark tests in two cases involving laws that regulate erotic speech. See Barnes, 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504; Renton, 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29. Renton stands for two propositions: 1) 1139 time, place and manner restrictions enacted to combat secondary effects associated with some form of erotic speech are content-neutral; and 2) governments need not conduct independent studies in order to justify the existence of a causal link between the restricted activity and the secondary effects so long as they rely upon the experiences of other cities. Renton involved a zoning restriction prohibiting any adult movie theater from locating within 1,000 feet of a residential zone, family dwelling, church or park and within one mile of a school. The Court concluded that "the Renton ordinance is aimed not at the content of the films shown at [adult theaters], but rather at the secondary effects of such theaters on the surrounding community." Renton, 475 U.S. at 47, 106 S.Ct. 925. Secondary effects identified by the Renton city council included unspecified "harmful effects on the area and ... neighborhood blight." Id. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925. Addressing the first part of the Clark test, the Court labeled the ordinance "content-neutral" because Renton "justified [it] without reference to the content of the regulated speech." Id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (citations and quotation marks omitted). For this reason, Renton could draw a distinction between adult theaters and other theaters without running afoul of the First Amendment. In addition, the Court dismissed an objection regarding the evidence used by the Renton city council to justify the need for such an ordinance. Rather than compiling a study documenting the harmful secondary effects brought about by adult theaters located in Renton, the city council "relied heavily on the experience of, and studies produced by, the city of Seattle." Id. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. Despite this shortcut, the Court held that the "First Amendment does not require a city, before enacting such an ordinance, to conduct new studies or produce new evidence independent of that already generated by other cities, so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem that the city addresses." Id. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925.

[5] [6] Barnes is the Court's latest exegesis on the subject of erotic speech. It presents a vexing interpretive problem. Although five justices voted to uphold Indiana's public indecency law requiring exotic dancers to wear G-strings and adhesive patches covering their nipples (known in the business as "pasties"), the case produced three divergent opinions, neither of which commanded a majority of the Court. Chief Justice Rehnquist announced the judgment of the Court, in which Justices O'Connor and Kennedy joined. Justices Souter and Scalia filed separate concurrences. When courts are confronted with such fractured Supreme Court opinions, "the holding of the Court may be viewed as that position taken by those Members who concurred in the judgments on the narrowest grounds." Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193, 97 S.Ct. 990, 51 L.Ed.2d 260 (1977). Put another way, courts confronted with such opinions should attempt to find the common denominator upon which a majority of justices agree. See Village of Bolingbrook v. Citizens Utilities Company of Illinois, 864 F.2d 481, 483 (7th Cir.1988). However, where no such common denominator exists, courts are not required to create one. See Schindler v. Clerk of Circuit Court, 715 F.2d 341, 345 n. 5 (7th Cir.1983). Expanding on this concept, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has emphasized that > it is not always possible to discover a single standard that legitimately constitutes the narrowest ground for the decision.... "Marks is workable—one opinion can be meaningfully regarded as 'narrower' than another —only when one opinion is a logical subset of other, broader opinions. In essence, the narrowest opinion must represent a common denominator of the Court's reasoning; it must embody a position implicitly approved by at least five Justices who support the judgment."

Rappa v. New Castle County, 18 F.3d 1043, 1057 (3d Cir.1994) (quoting King v. Palmer, 950 F.2d 771, 781 (D.C.Cir.1991) (en banc)). In cases in which at least five justices do not agree implicitly on a single rationale, "no particular standard constitutes the law of the land, because no single approach can be said to have the support of a majority of the court." Rappa, 18 F.3d at 1058. In a case such as Barnes where "the majority votes to uphold a law as constitutional, the 'narrowest grounds' principle will identify as authoritative the standard articulated by a Justice or 1140 Justices that would uphold the fewest laws as constitutional." Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 947 F.2d 682, 694 (3d Cir.1991), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674 (1992). This formulation of the standard suggests that the purpose behind Marks is two-fold: "to promote predictability in the law by ensuring lower court adherence to Supreme Court precedent," id. at 693, and, at the same time, to limit the precedential reach of cases in which a majority of justices do not join in a single opinion.

In Barnes, the plurality and Justice Souter agreed that the statute furthered a substantial interest but parted ways over what that interest was. The Court could not forge a consensus on this issue, in part, because the text of the statute contained no indication why the Indiana legislature enacted it. The Chief Justice surmised that the legislature did so to protect "order and morality" and concluded that this constituted a substantial governmental interest under the second step of the O'Brien test. See Barnes, 501 U.S. at 569, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Justice Souter identified a different governmental interest, the eradication of secondary effects associated with nude dancing, such as prostitution, sexual assault and other criminal activity. See Barnes, 501 U.S. at 582–583, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 44, 106 S.Ct. 925).

The disagreement in Barnes between Justice Souter and the plurality has broad implications for the ability of governments to regulate erotic speech. For example, defendant has justified its ordinance, in part, to promote the "morals" of its citizenry. Governments interested in enacting regulations like the one promulgated by defendant would enjoy considerably more latitude to do so if such regulations could be justified by nothing more than a vague reference to "morals" and "order." Adoption of this proposition by the Court would virtually eliminate the requirement imposed in Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925, that a city rely on some evidence—however tenuous—establishing a link between the form of expression and the governmental interest asserted. In contrast to Justice Souter, the opinion of the Chief Justice reveals no indication that such evidence would be necessary in order to sustain morality-based justifications. For these reasons, most courts that have applied the Marks rule to Barnes have concluded that Justice Souter's opinion represents the controlling holding because it is "narrower" than the rationale to which the plurality subscribed. See, e.g., J & B Entertainment, Inc. v. City of Jackson, 152 F.3d 362 (5th Cir.1998); Triplett Grille, Inc. v. City of Akron, 40 F.3d 129 (6th Cir.1994); International Eateries of America, Inc. v. Broward County, 941 F.2d 1157 (11th Cir.1991); Lounge Management v. Town of Trenton, 219 Wis.2d 13, 580 N.W.2d 156, 160 (1998). To the extent that these cases stand for the proposition that the standard articulated by Justice Souter is narrower because it would uphold the fewest laws as constitutional, see Planned Parenthood, 947 F.2d at 694, I agree.

However, I believe that these cases fail to take into account that the fifth member of the Court who voted in favor of upholding the Indiana statute, Justice Scalia, arrived at this conclusion by a route entirely different from his colleagues. Justice Scalia concluded that the Indiana law should be upheld, "not because it survives some lower level of First Amendment scrutiny, but because, as a general law regulating conduct and not specifically directed at expression, it is not subject to First Amendment scrutiny at all." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 572, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring). Justice Scalia did not agree implicitly or explicitly that the First Amendment is implicated by a statute such as the one in this lawsuit that is targeted at nude dancing, as opposed to public nudity in general. Indeed, he reached the opposite conclusion, maintaining that expressive conduct is entitled to First Amendment protection only "[w]here the government prohibits conduct precisely because of its communicative attributes.... " Id. at 577, 111 S.Ct. 2456. Examples of such laws, according to Justice Scalia, include statutes that ban flag burning, see United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310, 110 S.Ct. 2404, 110 L.Ed.2d 287 (1990); defacing the flag, see Spence v. Washington, 418 U.S. 405, 94 S.Ct. 2727, 41 L.Ed.2d 842 (1974); wearing a black arm band, see Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731 (1969); participating 1141 in a silent sit-in, see Brown v. Louisiana, 383 U.S. 131, 86 S.Ct. 719, 15 L.Ed.2d 637 (1966); and flying a red flag, see Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 51 S.Ct. 532, 75 L.Ed. 1117 (1931). Laws that suppress expressive conduct "as an incidental side effect of forbidding the conduct for other reasons," Barnes, 501 U.S. at 577, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Scalia, J., concurring), fall outside the category delineated by Justice Scalia and should be subject to a rational basis standard, not the type of intermediate level First Amendment scrutiny endorsed by the plurality and Justice Souter. See id. at 579–580, 111 S.Ct. 2456. "Moral opposition to nudity supplies a rational basis for its prohibition, and since the First Amendment has no application to this case no more than that is needed." Id. at 580, 111 S.Ct. 2456. From this discussion, it is evident that Justice Scalia would likely classify defendant's ordinance as a content-neutral law that suppresses expressive conduct for reasons other than the communicative attributes inherent in nude dancing. Cf. Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 133 ("Justice Scalia ... concluded that nude dancing is not inherently expressive activity entitled to First Amendment protection").

These observations notwithstanding, it is possible to say that all five justices in the Barnes majority agreed on one issue: the Indiana statute did not violate the Constitution. Though these justices disagreed what threshold standard governments must meet in order to justify the constitutionality of laws regulating public nudity, all believed that Indiana had surpassed this threshold; some would simply set the bar higher than others. It is difficult to say whether this is enough of a consensus to conclude, as other courts have, that Justice Souter's opinion represents the authoritative holding in Barnes. The answer depends upon the extent to which Marks permits a court to "associate Justices with propositions they expressly rejected." Mark Alan Thurmon, Note, When The Court Divides: Reconsidering The Precedential Value Of Supreme Court Plurality Decisions, 42 Duke Law Journal 419, 429–430 (1992).

Fortunately, these questions need not be resolved here. The Court's earlier holding in Renton is substantially consistent with Justice Souter's concurrence in Barnes; both require evidence of secondary effects to justify content-neutral regulation. To the extent that there are any differences between the two, these differences do not affect any substantive issues in this case. Therefore, I refer to Justice Souter's concurrence in Barnes for the persuasive guidance it offers in interpreting Renton, not to anoint it as "authoritative" under the Marks rule.

B. Secondary Effects

[7] A time, place or manner restriction designed to combat the undesirable secondary effects associated with certain businesses is reviewed under the standards applicable to "content-neutral" laws. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 49, 106 S.Ct. 925. Such a restriction does not amount to illegal viewpoint discrimination if it is 1) justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; 2) narrowly tailored to serve a substantial governmental interest; and 3) preserves ample alternative means of communication. See Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989); Clark, 468 U.S. at 293, 104 S.Ct. 3065. See also TK's Video, Inc. v. Denton County, 24 F.3d 705, 707 (5th Cir.1994) (citing Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925); International Eateries, 941 F.2d at 1161–1162.

[8] [9] [10] [11] Plaintiffs argue unpersuasively that this analytical framework is inapplicable because the ordinance is not content-neutral. They maintain that a law such as this one that targets only sexually oriented businesses discriminates on its face against a particular viewpoint, namely, a sexual or erotic viewpoint. The Supreme Court has held otherwise. Like defendant's law, the zoning ordinance upheld in Renton applied only to adult theaters but not to theaters that featured non-pornographic fare. Nevertheless, the Court characterized Renton's ordinance as content-neutral. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 47–48, 106 S.Ct. 925. The operative consideration is whether a law is justified without reference to the content of regulated speech, not whether it focuses on some businesses but not on others. See id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925. Plaintiffs' evidence regarding the shadowy influence of a nefarious right-wing organization is irrelevant to this inquiry. The court can "not strike down an otherwise constitutional 1142 statute on the basis of an alleged illicit legislative motive." Id. at 48, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 383, 88 S.Ct. 1673). In other words, the court does not ask why defendant actually enacted its ordinance; it asks whether defendant has offered evidence that it could have enacted it for a content-neutral reason. See J & B Entertainment, 152 F.3d at 373 ("We do not ask whether the regulator subjectively believed or was motivated by other concerns, but whether an objective lawmaker could have so concluded, supported by an actual basis for the conclusion"). When answering this question, the court is guided primarily by the text of the law in question. The language of the defendant's ordinance reveals that it is justified by reference to certain harmful secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses, not by reference to the erotic content of the message expressed by such businesses. The secondary effects identified in the ordinance include the prevention of crime, urban blight and the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. These are substantial governmental interests. See, e.g., Renton, 475 U.S. at 50, 106 S.Ct. 925. Thus, the ordinance fits comfortably within the content-neutral category.

[12] [13] [14] The first two parts of the secondary effects test actually embrace three important precepts. First, to justify a regulation, a government need not conduct its own studies; it may rely upon the experiences of other cities, as well as studies conducted by them, "so long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem" addressed by the regulation. Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. This evidence may be nothing more than a reference to "detailed findings" summarized in a legal opinion involving a similar regulation. See id. at 51, 106 S.Ct. 925. Second, to show that substantial governmental interests are served by a regulation, a government is not required to establish conclusively that the regulated activity actually causes the secondary effects, only that it reasonably believes that "the effects are correlated with the existence of such establishments." Barnes, 501 U.S. 560, 585, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (Souter, J., concurring). For example, the Supreme Court did not force the city of Renton to prove that urban blight is affirmatively associated with adult theaters in Renton or that such blight would move with the theaters. Instead, the Court allowed some latitude for Renton to "experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems." Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 (quoting Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 71, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976) (plurality)). Finally, a regulation is narrowly tailored "[s]o long as the means chosen are not substantially broader than necessary to achieve the government's interest." Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989). Put another way, the means chosen are narrowly tailored if a less restrictive alternative would promote the governmental interest less effectively. See id. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746 (quoting United States v. Albertini, 472 U.S. 675, 689, 105 S.Ct. 2897, 86 L.Ed.2d 536 (1985)).

To summarize, a government satisfies the first two elements of the Clark/ Ward test by showing that 1) it has evidence upon which to base a reasonable belief that there is a correlation between the activity regulated and the alleged secondary; effect of that activity and 2) it reasonably believes the regulation enacted ameliorates the correlated secondary effect and the regulation is not substantially broader than necessary to achieve that goal.

III. MOTION TO STRIKE

[15] Many of defendant's proposed findings of fact are based on affidavits submitted by various individuals who served on the subcommittee formed by the city planning commission. This subcommittee drafted defendant's ordinance. Plaintiff maintains that these affidavits should be stricken from the record because they violate the rule in Wisconsin that "a court may not rely upon the testimony of members of a legislative body for the purpose of determining what that body intended when it enacted a particular piece of legislation." See La Crosse County v. Gershman, Brickner & Bratton, 982 F.2d 1171, 1174 (7th Cir.1993) (citing Labor and Farm Party v. Elections Bd., 117 Wis.2d 351, 344 N.W.2d 177, 180 (1984)). In La Crosse, the court of appeals reviewed a decision by the district court allowing seven members of a county board to testify about their motivations 1143 for voting for a particular resolution. The court held that the district court acted within its discretion in admitting testimony that supplemented language in the resolution but did not impeach it. Id. at 1174. However, the district court should not have allowed board members to explain their motivations for voting in favor of the resolution. The jury could have interpreted this testimony as the board's collective intent behind the resolution just as easily it could have attributed these views to the individuals who expressed them. Id.

[16] The Wisconsin rule relied upon by plaintiff is inapplicable in a case such as this one governed by federal law. Once again, Barnes and Renton provide guidance. As this court noted recently in a similar case:

> [A]s "long as whatever evidence the city relies upon is reasonably believed to be relevant to the problem," it is evidence enough. Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Moreover, it appears from Justice Souter's opinion in Barnes, 501 U.S. at 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456, that this evidence can be developed prior to enactment of the regulation or adduced at trial (or, presumably, as in this case, on a motion for summary judgment). Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 582, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (Souter, J., concurring). Certainly nothing in the Barnes plurality opinion would prevent the town from adducing evidence of secondary effects post-enactment, since the plurality (unlike Justice Souter) would not require the town to produce any evidence at all. See Barnes, 501 U.S. at 568, 111 S.Ct. 2456 ("It is impossible to discern, other than from the text of the statute, what governmental interest the Indiana legislators had in mind when they enacted this statute").

DiMa Corporation v. Town of Hallie, No. 98–C–240–C at 11–12 (W.D.Wis.1998). This passage expands upon a principle established earlier in this opinion: governments enjoy broad latitude in developing the evidence necessary to justify a content-neutral time, place or manner restriction that targets expressive conduct. Thus, defendant may supplement the enumerated findings in its ordinance with evidence that provides a more detailed explanation of the basis of these findings. The supplemental evidence contained in the affidavits submitted by defendant do not contradict any of the ordinance's existing provisions and do not create new findings or justifications.

Plaintiffs' motion will be denied.

IV. MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A. Section 8(A)

Section 8(A) of the ordinance prohibits employees of sexually oriented businesses from appearing in a state of total nudity and it prohibits the depiction of specified sexual activities in a sexually oriented business. Plaintiffs argue that this provision is unconstitutional for two reasons: 1) defendant enacted it for the purpose of restraining the content of protected speech; and 2) it is facially overbroad.

1. Secondary effects

[17] [18] Section 8(A) satisfies the minimal evidentiary burden established by the Supreme Court. As in Renton, defendant has justified this provision by reference to "findings" in certain judicial opinions and in studies conducted by several other governments, including something called the "Report of the Attorney General's Working Group On the Regulation of Sexually Oriented Businesses." See § 1(B). Collectively, this forms the basis of twenty-five specific findings articulated in the ordinance. See §§ 1(B)(1) –1(B)(25). Defendant has supplemented these findings from the ordinance with evidence regarding the incidence of crime associated with the Island Bar. Contrary to plaintiffs' assertion, these findings need not be measured against the law enforcement problems associated with non-sexually oriented businesses in Cumberland. Nothing in Renton or any of the three opinions written by the Barnes majority would require defendant to engage in this type of rigorous, comparative analysis. As underwhelming as defendant's "evidence" may be, it passes muster because it is reasonably relevant to the problems identified by defendant. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 51–52, 106 S.Ct. 925. For example, two provisions from the ordinance assert that employees of sexually oriented businesses "engage 1144 in higher incidence of certain types of illicit sexual behavior than employees of other establishments" and that "[p]ersons frequent ... sexually oriented businesses for the purpose of engaging in sex within the premises" of these businesses. §§ 1(B)(2) and 1(B)(5). These findings are relevant to defendant's interest in preventing criminal activity, such as prostitution, and the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.

Whether these interests are furthered by requiring dancers to wear G-strings and pasties is, at first blush, a dubious proposition. It is not inherently obvious how covering a dancer's nipples with adhesive patches would reduce criminal activity associated with adult cabarets. Nevertheless, Justice Souter saw some logic to this notion, see Barnes, 501 U.S. at 584–586, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring), and I find the correlation sufficiently plausible to agree. One can assume reasonably that an establishment featuring completely naked women gyrating on a stage is less likely to draw clientele of both sexes than an establishment featuring more modestly clad dancers. Further, one can assume that there is greater potential for trouble in an establishment in which the entertainment is all female and all naked and in which the clientele is all male. With these concerns in mind, an objective lawmaker reviewing the evidence of secondary effects described above could have concluded that there is a correlation between adult businesses and the illicit activity cataloged in the ordinance and that a ban on total nudity in adult cabarets is likely to reduce such activity.

The restrictions imposed on erotic dancing by section 8(A) of the ordinance are narrowly tailored and they preserve ample alternative means for communication. The only alternative less restrictive than pasties and G-strings would be total nudity—not an effective option. Dancers at establishments such as the Island Bar may still engage in expressive conduct that conveys an erotic message provided they do so in a semi-nude state. See § 12.15(8)(b). To convey their message effectively, they must simply rely more on technique and less on simple exposure.

In conclusion, section 8(A) is a valid time, place and manner restriction because it is justified without reference to the content of the expressive conduct that it regulates, because it is narrowly tailored to further defendant's substantial interest in reducing secondary effects associated with adult cabarets and because the ordinance leaves ample alternative means for erotic expression.

2. Overbreadth

[19] Plaintiffs argue that even if section 8(A) of the ordinance is constitutional as applied to plaintiffs, it is facially overbroad because it applies to conduct defendant cannot legitimately regulate. An overbroad law burdens protected as well as unprotected speech. In doing so, such a law chills the First Amendment rights of third parties by encouraging them to remain silent for fear of prosecution in the face of a law of uncertain scope. See Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 612, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 432–33, 83 S.Ct. 328, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963). For this reason, the overbreadth doctrine allows a person who has engaged in conduct not protected by the Constitution to challenge the constitutionality of a law that might be used against individuals who do engage in protected conduct, see Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 503, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 86 L.Ed.2d 394 (1985), but such persons may do so only when the threat presented by a statute is real and substantial, and "then only as a last resort." Broadrick, 413 U.S. at 615, 93 S.Ct. 2908.

[20] Under this framework, even if section 8(A) is constitutional as applied to the Island Bar, it is overbroad because it makes no exceptions for "live performances with serious artistic, social and political value." Triplett Grille, 40 F.3d at 136; see also Lounge Management Ltd. v. Town of Trenton, 219 Wis.2d 13, 580 N.W.2d 156 (1998); Fond Du Lac County v. Mentzel, 195 Wis.2d 313, 536 N.W.2d 160 (Ct.App.1995). These and other similar forms of unclothed entertainment are not correlated with the type of harmful secondary effects identified by defendant but could conceivably fall within the sweep of the ordinance.

Defendant contends that the ordinance is not susceptible to limitless application because a business does not qualify as an "adult 1145 theater" or "adult cabaret" unless it "regularly features" nudity or semi-nudity. See § B(3) and (7). Similar qualifications apply to the definition of "adult motion picture theaters." See §§ 2(5) and (6) ("establishment ... where ... motion pictures ... are regularly shown which are characterized by the depiction ... of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas' "). The operative terms from these provisions, "regularly feature" and "regularly shown," are not defined in the ordinance. This is a problem. With no limitation on the scope of interpretation, the ordinance could apply to many businesses not connected with the harmful secondary effects identified in the ordinance. High brow artistic productions such as Equus and Diaghilev's L'apres midi d'un faun all feature nude performers who expose a "specified anatomical area" of their bodies. Many popular motion pictures such as Titanic have scenes which, in the stilted parlance of the ordinance, feature "the showing of [a] female breast with less than a fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple...." § 2(15). Numerous other commercial films like The Godfather include depictions of "specified sexual activities," as defined in section 2(24) of the ordinance ("sex acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including intercourse ..."). Titanic and The Godfather have run for many weeks, even months, in movie theaters across the country. Such a theater located in the City of Cumberland could easily be classified as a sexually oriented business and become subject to the licensing requirements of the ordinance. Worse yet, even a licensed theater would be prohibited from showing mainstream, non-pornographic fare in which naked female breasts are depicted. As a result, films of unquestioned artistic merit, from Last Tango in Paris to Schindler's List, would be prohibited under the ordinance.

Defendant's reliance on Barnes is misplaced for two reasons. First, the Court explicitly refused to examine the Indiana statute under the overbreadth doctrine. As observed by the Chief Justice, "The Indiana Supreme Court appeared to give the ... statute a limiting construction to save it from a facial overbreadth attack." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 564 n. 1, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (plurality). Specifically, the Indiana high court held that the statute applied only to nude dancing that takes place outside the context "of some larger form of expression." State v. Baysinger, 272 Ind. 236, 397 N.E.2d 580, 587. Unlike the Indiana statute, defendant's ordinance has not been so "limited" by a Wisconsin court. Second, Justice Souter expressed some skepticism whether the statute could survive an overbreadth challenge if it barred "expressive nudity in classes of productions that could not readily be analogized to the adult films at issue in Renton [ ]." Barnes, 501 U.S. at 585 n. 2, 111 S.Ct. 2456 (Souter, J., concurring).

B. Hours of Operation

Section 10 of the ordinance permits sexually oriented business to be open from 10:00 a.m. to midnight, Monday through Saturday; businesses must remain closed all day Sunday. Plaintiffs argue that this provision is unconstitutional because it does not satisfy the secondary effects test and because it violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. There is no merit to either of these claims.

1. Secondary effects

[21] Defendant has satisfied its threshold burdens with respect to the hours of operation provision. It has pointed to studies and experiences from other towns that show a correlation between sexually oriented businesses and the secondary effects it seeks to regulate. This evidence consists of general findings from the ordinance regarding the effect of adult entertainment on surrounding neighborhoods, crime and public health. Defendant has supplemented these findings with affidavits from those responsible for drafting the ordinance, providing a more detailed explanation of the rationale and studies relied upon by defendant. Specifically, these affidavits reveal that defendant has only one police officer on duty Sunday through Thursday. From this evidence, a legislator could conclude that restricting the number of hours of operation of sexually oriented businesses would promote public safety by permitting local law enforcement to focus its limited resources on matters unrelated to the problems associated with such businesses, some of which are more likely to occur during the 1146 hours between midnight and dawn. Other courts have upheld similar ordinances on the basis of similar reasoning and evidence. See, e.g., Richland Bookmart, Inc. v. Nichols, 137 F.3d 435 (6th Cir.1998); Mitchell v. Commission on Adult Entertainment Establishments, 10 F.3d 123 (3d Cir.1993); Tee & Bee, Inc. v. City of West Allis, 936 F.Supp. 1479 (E.D.Wis.1996).

I agree with plaintiffs that the evidence presented by defendant in support of this provision does not explain in an entirely satisfactory way why sexually oriented businesses may not open until 10 a.m. Monday through Saturday and must remain closed entirely on Sunday. For example, defendant maintains that it cannot adequately protect school children from the dangers posed by sexually oriented businesses if those businesses are open as children are making their way to school each morning. Although this reasoning would seem to apply with equal force to children returning home from school, the ordinance allows sexually oriented businesses to be open during the after-school period. The justifications offered by defendant regarding the Sunday closure requirement are also problematic. According to defendant, this restriction is necessary because there is only one police officer on duty on Sunday. For some reason, however, the ordinance permits sexually oriented businesses to remain open other days of the week when only one officer is working. This leaves defendant's second justification, that Sunday closure is necessary to protect the morals of the community. As explained already, the plurality in Barnes agreed that preservation of morality could serve as a legitimate governmental interest but Justice Souter explicitly rejected this notion.

These issues are serious but not fatal to section 10 of the ordinance. Had defendant justified the entire provision or the entire ordinance by reference solely to morality, this would be a problem of constitutional magnitude. Defendant has not done so, however. In light of the generous standard to which governments are held on these threshold issues, it is sufficient that the evidence and rationale presented by defendant supports the ordinance generally. The rigorous, searching inquiry suggested by plaintiffs is inconsistent with this standard. If the questions raised by plaintiffs belong anywhere in the secondary effects test, it is within a discussion of the remaining considerations: whether the provision is narrowly tailored and whether it preserves ample alternative means of communication.

[22] The hours of operation provision satisfies these elements. Like other parts of the ordinance, the provision is narrowly tailored to affect only the category of businesses shown to produce the unwanted secondary effects. See Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925. Although the problems identified by plaintiffs suggest that the provision is over-inclusive, I am loathe to question the methods chosen by defendant too vigorously. Doing so would exceed the Supreme Court's mandate that "a regulation will not be invalid simply because a court concludes that the government's interest could be adequately served by some less-speech-restrictive alternative." Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746; see also Renton, 475 U.S. at 52, 106 S.Ct. 925 ("city must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to experiment with solutions to admittedly serious problems"). The relevant inquiry is whether the provision is "substantially broader than necessary," Ward, 491 U.S. at 800, 109 S.Ct. 2746, not whether the statute is need of fine-tuning. Arguably, defendant could achieve its objectives effectively by allowing sexually oriented businesses to open at 8 a.m. rather than 10 a.m. but this is the type of judicial second-guessing the Court sought to prevent in Ward. Finally, despite the restrictions imposed by section 10, sexually oriented businesses enjoy ample alternative means to communicate their sexually explicit messages. Plaintiff Schultz may operate the Island Bar fourteen hours a day, six days a week.

2. Equal protection

[23] In analyzing an equal protection claim, the court must determine initially whether the claim involves a suspect class or a fundamental right. See Pryor v. Brennan, 914 F.2d 921, 923 (7th Cir.1990). Plaintiffs are not a members of a suspect class, see City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center, 473 U.S. 432, 105 S.Ct. 3249, 87 L.Ed.2d 313 (1985), and nude dancing is not a fundamental right. In light of these findings, plaintiffs' equal protection claim must be evaluated 1147 pursuant to the "rational basis test." See Pryor, 914 F.2d at 923. Under this test, the ordinance is presumed valid and will be upheld if it is "rationally related" to a "legitimate state interest." See id. I have decided these issues previously in the context of the discussion of the secondary effects test. To summarize: defendant has a legitimate interest in reducing illicit activity associated with sexually oriented businesses; section 10 of the ordinance is rationally related to this interest because it forces these businesses to remain closed when this activity is most likely to happen and when law enforcement is least capable of responding to it.

C. Licensing Provisions

Plaintiffs argue that several licensing requirements contained in the ordinance are unconstitutional prior restraints on their right to free speech. Plaintiffs concede that defendant may require owners and operators of sexually oriented businesses to comply with a licensing scheme but maintain that this one is invalid in many respects. Further, plaintiffs contend that there is no constitutionally permissible justification for requiring employees of sexually oriented businesses to obtain a license. Beyond this general challenge, plaintiffs object to the disclosure requirements applicable to employees. [1]

[1] Defendant has agreed to amend sections 11(E)(10) and 11(F)(7) insofar as they require employee and operator applicants to disclose their social security numbers.

The constitutionality of these provisions turns on two separate inquires: whether adequate procedural safeguards are built into the ordinance to limit the discretion of those administering it and whether the provisions are valid content-neutral time, place and manner restrictions aimed at secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. See FW/PBS, Inc. v. Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 223, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603 (1990). Before proceeding, one qualification must be made. Even though the Supreme Court has indicated that application of the secondary effects test is appropriate when evaluating a licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses, see id., it is doubtful whether the third part of this test fits logically into an analysis of a prior restraint. Specifically, it does not make sense to ask whether someone denied an application to work as an exotic dancer still has ample alternative means to engage in this type of erotic expression under the licensing scheme. Without a license, such an individual has no alternatives. Perhaps in response to this problem, the Fifth Circuit has applied a hybrid of the secondary effects test that essentially lops off the third step. See TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 709–10 (citing Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 64, 96 S.Ct. 612, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976) (per curiam)). This seems to be a suitable way to adapt the secondary effects test to the licensing provisions in defendant's ordinance.

[24] In general, a law that requires an individual to obtain a license before engaging in some form of protected speech is a prior restraint. See Stokes v. City of Madison, 930 F.2d 1163, 1168 (7th Cir.1991). Because nude dancing is a form of speech protected under the First Amendment, the licensing requirements imposed by defendant's ordinance on operators and employees of sexually oriented businesses are a prior restraint. A facial challenge may be brought against this type of law if it "gives a government official or agency substantial power to discriminate based on the content or viewpoint of speech by suppressing disfavored speech or disliked speakers." Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publishing Co., 486 U.S. 750, 759, 108 S.Ct. 2138, 100 L.Ed.2d 771 (1988). There are two reasons why defendant's ordinance confers such authority on those administering the licensing scheme. First, under § 13(B) of the ordinance, licenses are subject to annual review. See id. at 760, 108 S.Ct. 2138 ("periodic licensing requirement is sufficiently threatening to invite judicial review"). Second, the licensing system implemented by defendant's ordinance is directed "narrowly and specifically" at conduct associated with expression: nude dancing. See id.

[25] [26] Prior restraints bear a heavy presumption against constitutionality because "a free society prefers to punish the few who abuse rights of speech after they break the law than throttle them and all others beforehand." See Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 559, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975). To avoid running 1148 afoul of the First Amendment, a prior restraint must not place unbridled discretion in the hands of a government official or agency, see Lakewood, 486 U.S. at 757, 108 S.Ct. 2138, and must place some limits on the time within which a government decisionmaker must issue or deny the license. See Vance v. Universal Amusement Co., 445 U.S. 308, 316, 100 S.Ct. 1156, 63 L.Ed.2d 413 (1980).

The ordinance has these two procedural safeguards. First, officials in charge of administering the ordinance are constrained by reasonably detailed, content-neutral standards. The ordinance requires defendant to issue temporary licenses pending the outcome of an initial determination or an appeal and it provides for prompt judicial review. Second, the ordinance sets appropriate time limits within which defendant must review applications. It requires defendant to make the initial licensing decision within 30 days of the application. Fire, health and building certifications must be completed within 20 days of the application.

Before analyzing the validity of the licensing provisions under the secondary effects test, a preliminary matter must be addressed. In support of their contention that the ordinance's licensing provisions are unconstitutional, plaintiffs rely heavily on Genusa v. Peoria, 619 F.2d 1203 (7th Cir.1980), which involved a municipal ordinance that imposed similar licensing requirements on the owners and employees of adult bookstores. Peoria passed this ordinance to prevent adult bookstores and other sexually oriented businesses from concentrating in a single area of the city or locating in close proximity to places of worship, schools and residential neighborhoods. See id. at 1209. The Seventh Circuit characterized three of the licensing requirements in Peoria's ordinance as content-based prior restraints. One such requirement provided that an adult bookstore could not obtain a license unless it passed certain building and fire code inspections not imposed on other businesses. The city maintained that this provision helped retard urban blight. The court found no evidence to support this justification, observing that "there is nothing in the record to indicate that adult bookstores, as a class, contain more faulty light switches or other violations than regular bookstores, as a class." Id. at 1214. In the absence of a proper evidentiary basis, Peoria could not "single[ ] out [adult bookstores] for special regulation" without violating the standards applicable to time, place and manner restrictions established by the Supreme Court in O'Brien, 391 U.S. at 377, 88 S.Ct. 1673, and Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. at 79–80. The two other provisions of the Peoria ordinance struck down by the Seventh Circuit made obtaining an employer license contingent upon passing a criminal background check and made working for an adult store contingent upon obtaining a special employee permit. The court of appeals concluded that these provisions had nothing to do with the city's interest in scattering sexually oriented businesses. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1218–19 and 1221.

Genusa no longer carries much persuasive weight because it predates what are now the leading cases on the regulation of sexually oriented businesses, Renton and Barnes. As discussed at great length elsewhere in this opinion, the standards applied by the Supreme Court in Renton and Barnes are considerably more generous and deferential to governments than those that existed at the time the Seventh Circuit decided Genusa. However, defendant's ordinance is much more ambitious than the Peoria law, encompassing a broad array of sweeping goals that go beyond the lone governmental interest recognized by the Seventh Circuit in Genusa: preventing sexually oriented businesses from clustering in one location. See TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710 (Denton County ordinance outlines more ambitious objective than ordinance in Genusa). The court doubted that Peoria's ordinance could be interpreted to include the prevention of urban blight. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1214. Renton and Barnes do not mean that defendant enjoys a free ride. In particular, defendant still must produce some evidence to justify its regulations. See J & B Entertainment, 152 F.3d at 372 (Justice Souter's concurrence in Barnes did not eliminate government's evidentiary burden).

1. Operator disclosure: corporate affiliation

[27] Under section 11(D) of the ordinance, if a corporate entity or partnership 1149 applies for a license to operate a sexually oriented business, every shareholder with an ownership interest of 20 percent or more must comply with all of the disclosure and disqualification provisions applicable to individual applicants. Plaintiff Schultz does not have standing to challenge this provision. See J.F. Shea Co. v. City of Chicago, 992 F.2d 745, 749 (7th Cir.1993) (to establish standing, plaintiff "must be able to allege an injury that affects his own legal rights," not those of third party). The undisputed facts reveal that plaintiff Schultz is the sole proprietor of the Island Bar. Thus, he has no stake in the outcome of a challenge to section 11(D). See Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 732, 92 S.Ct. 1361, 31 L.Ed.2d 636 (1972).

2. Operator disclosure and disqualification: prior criminal history

[28] Under section 11(E)(3), applicants for an operator license must indicate whether they or anyone with whom they reside have been convicted of "specified criminal activity," a term defined as:

> prostitution or promotion of prostitution; dissemination of obscenity; sale, distribution or display of harmful material to a minor; sexual performance by a child; possession or distribution of child pornography; public lewdness;

> indecent exposure; indecency with a child; engaging in organized criminal activity; sexual assault; molestation of a child; gambling; or distribution of a controlled substance; or any similar offenses to those described above under the criminal or penal code of other states or countries.

§ 2(23)(a). An applicant need not disclose a prior conviction for specified criminal activity if the conviction was a misdemeanor and it is over two years old. In the case of a felony conviction, disclosure is not required if the offense is over five years old. § 2(23)(b). Applicants who have been convicted of specified criminal activity cannot receive a license. § 13(A)(3). In Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1219, the Seventh Circuit struck down similar requirements. The court found no evidence supporting Peoria's contention that "one of the deleterious effects caused by adult uses is an increase in crime." Id. More important, the Seventh Circuit concluded that the leading Supreme Court case at the time regarding the regulation of sexually oriented businesses, Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310, did not authorize such a requirement. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1219.

By contrast, defendant has submitted evidence that shows a correlation between sexually oriented businesses and criminal activity. Indeed, defendant has gone one step further by proving that crime is associated with plaintiffs' establishment. Given this evidence, a legislator could conclude that refusing to license a sexually oriented business run by an individual with a prior conviction for a sex-related crime would reduce the amount of illicit activity correlated with such businesses. This objective cannot be accomplished without the information necessary to conduct such a background check. Under the more forgiving standard applied by the Supreme Court in Renton and Barnes, courts have upheld provisions similar to those enacted by defendant, provided they are narrowly tailored to require disclosure only of those offenses that bear some relationship to the type of criminal activity associated with sexually oriented businesses. See, e.g., TK's Video, 24 F.3d at 710; FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 837 F.2d 1298, 1304–05 (5th Cir.1988), rev'd on other grounds, 493 U.S. 215, 110 S.Ct. 596, 107 L.Ed.2d 603; Tee & Bee, Inc., 936 F.Supp. at 1488–91; Ellwest Stereo Theater, Inc. v. Boner, 718 F.Supp. 1553, 1571 (M.D.Tenn.1989). With few exceptions, defendant's ordinance applies exclusively to sex-related crimes such as prostitution, solicitation, child pornography and sexual assault. Defendant has narrowed its ordinance even further by not requiring disclosure of older offenses and by drawing a distinction between misdemeanor and felony offenses. [2]

[2] Section 11(E)(3) requires applicants to disclose not only their own criminal history, but the criminal history of persons with whom they reside. Similarly, an applicant may not receive a license if someone with whom the applicant lives has been convicted of specified criminal activity. § 13(C)(5). There are other disclosure and disqualification provisions in the ordinance that pertain to third parties. Plaintiffs have not challenged these provisions and it does not appear that they have standing to do so. Third party disclosure requirements were not a feature of the ordinances at issue in TK's Video, FW/PBS, Tee & Bee or Ellwest. I have grave doubts whether such requirements would withstand scrutiny. Nevertheless, this issue is not before the court.

1150 3. Operator disclosure and disqualification: past licenses

[29] The ordinance requires operator-applicants to disclose whether they have ever applied for or held a license under the ordinance or a similar law; if so, applicants must state whether past licenses have been denied, suspended or revoked. § 11(E)(4). Applicants must also disclose whether they currently hold a sexually oriented businesses license. § 11(E)(5). An applicant is disqualified from receiving a license if defendant has revoked or denied a sexually oriented business license previously held by the applicant within the past year or if the applicant has had a similar license revoked or denied by another government within the past year. § 13(C)(4). Like the provisions providing for disclosure of an applicant's criminal history, these requirements will further defendant's interest in insuring that sexually oriented businesses are not run by persons inclined to encourage illicit activity. A legislator could conclude that an individual with a checkered licensing record presents more of a risk to the governmental interests identified in the ordinance. These provisions are narrowly tailored to require disclosure only of licenses to operate sexually oriented businesses and limit disqualification only to those applicants who have had a license denied or revoked within the past year.

4. Operator disclosure: photographs and aliases

[30] Applicants for an operator's license must disclose any aliases and provide defendant with a passport-size photograph. § 11(E)(1)(a) and (9). Without photographs and aliases, defendant would not be able to conduct background checks necessary to the purpose of deterring crime associated with sexually oriented businesses.

5. Operator disqualification: building inspection

[31] Under the ordinance, defendant will not issue a sexually oriented business license until the premises to be used for the business have "been approved by the health department, fire department, and the building official as being in compliance with applicable laws and ordinances." § 13(C)(6). Defendant must complete such inspections within twenty days after receiving an application. § 13(E). According to defendant, this provision "furthers substantial governmental interests in avoiding urban blight, preventing criminal activity and promoting the health and safety of its citizens." Def.'s Br., dkt. # 21, at 39. Undoubtedly, these are substantial governmental interests. However, defendant has presented no evidence and cited no opinion containing findings showing that sexually oriented businesses tend to present a greater fire hazard than other businesses or are not as sound structurally. In the absence of such evidence, defendant cannot single out sexually oriented businesses for special regulation. See Genusa, 619 F.2d at 1214. By doing so, defendant has created a content-based law that burdens plaintiffs' ability to engage in constitutionally protected speech. Like every other business in the City of Cumberland, the Island Bar must comply with applicable health, fire and building regulations. If defendant is truly concerned about code violations at sexually oriented business such as the one run by plaintiff Schultz, defendant is free to enforce these regulations at any time.

6. Employer disqualification: taxes

[32] Section 13(C)(2) of the ordinance disqualifies applicants who are "overdue in payment to the City of taxes, fees, fines or penalties assessed against or imposed upon him/her in relation to any business." This requirement is without any evidentiary foundation. Specifically, defendant has presented no findings showing that the owners of adult cabarets are more likely than other business owners not to pay their taxes and it has adduced no evidence establishing a correlation between tax delinquency and the undesirable secondary effects associated with sexually oriented businesses. Defendant points to a similar provision in an ordinance governing the issuance of liquor licenses but fails to explain how selling alcohol can be characterized as constitutionally protected speech.

7. Employee licensing

[33] Under section 11(A)(2) of the ordinance, sexually oriented businesses are prohibited 1151 from employing anyone who does not hold a valid employee license. This requirement is constitutional for the same reasons that defendant can require owners and operators to obtain a license. In other words, employee licensing will help insure that individuals with a demonstrated propensity to engage in the type of illicit activity associated with sexually oriented businesses work elsewhere. This purpose could not be accomplished by simply relying on laws that outlaw prostitution.

8. Employee disclosure

[34] Section 11(F) of the ordinance requires an individual applying for a sexually oriented business employee license to disclose substantially the same information that operators must provide. Unlike operators, however, employees must disclose their home telephone numbers and submit a form displaying their fingerprints. § 11(F)(4) and (G)(1). Defendant has satisfied the threshold requirement of presenting some evidence demonstrating a correlation between disclosure of this information and defendant's interest in reducing crime associated with sexually oriented businesses. To effectively investigate the backgrounds of applicants and verify information submitted by applicants, defendant must rely on detailed personal information.

This conclusion notwithstanding, defendant has failed to show that the employee disclosure provisions are narrowly tailored to serve crime prevention. Plaintiff Norwood has submitted an affidavit indicating that she would not perform as an exotic dancer in Cumberland if forced to reveal her real name, home address and telephone number. Norwood fears that a stalker could use Wisconsin's public records law, see Wis.Stat. §§ 19.31—19.39, to obtain this information. Ordinarily, Norwood prefers to conceal her true identity by using a stage name, lest any customer get the wrong idea. In response, defendant asserts that disclosure under the state open records law is not automatic; custodians of public records must perform a balancing test, weighing the general policy in favor of public access against any risk of harm to someone such as Norwood. See Morke v. Record Custodian, 159 Wis.2d 722, 725, 465 N.W.2d 235, 236 (Ct.App.1990). Even if these protections are inadequate, defendant asserts that plaintiff Norwood's concerns are of no relevance to whether the disclosure provisions are narrowly tailored. Defendant is wrong.

[35] A regulation is narrowly tailored so long as the interest it seeks to promote would be achieved less effectively without the regulation. See Ward, 491 U.S. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746. This does not mean, as defendant suggests, that a regulation "may burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government's legitimate interest." Id. at 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746. Plaintiff Norwood has averred that the disclosure requirements in the ordinance will not merely burden her willingness to engage in protected speech but squelch it entirely. In the absence of adequate safeguards built into the ordinance that will insure the confidentiality of information disclosed by employee applicants, sections 11(F) and (G) are not narrowly tailored because they "target[ ] ... more than the exact source of the 'evil' [they] seeks to remedy." Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 485, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988).

9. License fees

[36] All applications for a license to operate a sexually oriented business must be accompanied by a $100 non-refundable fee. § 14(A). In the event that defendant issues such a license, an applicant must pay an additional $400 licensing fee. § 14(B). Individuals applying for a sexually oriented business employee license must pay a $25 non-refundable licensing fee. § 14(C). Licenses must be renewed after one year.

[37] [38] It is well-established that the government may not levy a tax on the exercise of First Amendment rights. See Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943). However, the government may impose a fee that is incidental to a valid licensing scheme. The fee must be a "nominal fee imposed as a regulatory measure to defray the expenses of policing the activities in question." Id. at 113–14, 63 S.Ct. 870. If a government seeks to impose a fee for the operation of a business protected by the First Amendment, it has the burden of demonstrating that the fees are reasonably related to costs of administering the licensing system. See South–Suburban Housing Center v. Greater Suburban Board of Realtors, 935 F.2d 868, 898 (7th Cir.1991).

1152 Defendant has met this burden. In establishing licensing fees imposed by the ordinance, defendant considered costs associated with processing and investigating an application, ongoing records maintenance, licensing fees imposed on other establishments, such as liquor stores, and the estimated cost of enforcing the ordinance. Plaintiffs have offered no evidence that casts doubt on the accuracy of these estimates.

D. Severability

[39] [40] [41] The prohibition against depicting specified sexual acts and appearing in a state of nudity is facially overbroad. In addition, three other aspects of the ordinance's licensing scheme are unconstitutional. The invalidity of these provisions raises the question whether the rest of the ordinance can he salvaged. An unconstitutionally overbroad statute should be invalidated only "to the extent that it reaches too far, but otherwise left intact." Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. 491, 504, 105 S.Ct. 2794, 86 L.Ed.2d 394 (1985). A statute may be amenable to a limiting construction if it contains a severability clause. See id. at 506, 105 S.Ct. 2794. However, partial invalidation may not be possible if the legislature would not have adopted the statute without the unconstitutional element. See id. Section 22 of the ordinance has this to say about severability:

> In the event any section, subsection, clause, phrase or portion of this ordinance is for any reason held illegal invalid or unconstitutional by any court of competent jurisdiction, such portion shall be deemed a separate, distinct and independent provision, and such holding shall not affect the validity of the remainder of this ordinance. It is the legislative intent of the Common Council that this ordinance would have been adopted if such illegal provision had not been included or > any illegal application had not been made.

Even in the face of a strong severability clause such as this one, courts are not authorized to "completely reconstruct a local ordinance ... [when] nothing short of rewriting could save [it]." See American Booksellers Ass'n, Inc. v. Hudnut, 771 F.2d 323, 332 (7th Cir.1985). Severance is improper if the unconstitutional provisions in defendant's ordinance are an integral part of the ordinance. See Ragsdale v. Turnock, 841 F.2d 1358, 1375 (7th Cir.1988).

In Ragsdale, the Seventh Circuit invalidated portions of a statutory scheme regulating the ability of physicians to perform abortions in privately-run clinics. The statute contained provisions forcing clinics to counsel and test patients as well as a comprehensive licensing system that imposed a variety of staffing and physical plant requirements which, if implemented, would have made clinics "the functional equivalent of small hospitals." Id. at 1374. The court found that these aspects of the statute violated the right to privacy as established by the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973). Addressing the issue of severability, the Seventh Circuit concluded that the statute did not represent a coherent regulatory scheme without the unconstitutional provisions—a troubling observation in light of the stiff penalties faced by physicians who violated the law. See Ragsdale, 841 F.2d at 1375. No useful purpose would be served by rewriting minor provisions of the law in an attempt to make the entire statutory framework constitutional. See id.

The unconstitutional provisions in defendant's ordinance cannot be severed from the ordinance as a whole. Doing so would produce an unclear statutory scheme that most likely would represent a greater problem than an unabridged version of the ordinance. Without a workable definition of "sexually oriented business," defendant has no way of identifying those establishments that it may legitimately regulate and license. In essence, what the ordinance needs is not redaction but revision.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that:

1. The motion of plaintiffs Joseph Schultz and Tonya Norwood to strike certain affidavits submitted by defendant City of Cumberland is DENIED;

2. The motion of plaintiffs for summary judgment is GRANTED;

3. Section 8(A) of City of Cumberland Ordinance Section 12.15 is unconstitutionally overbroad.

4. Sections 11(F) and (G), 13(C)(6) and 13(C)(2) of the ordinance violate the First Amendment of the United States Constitution.

1153 5. Defendant City of Cumberland is enjoined permanently from enforcing the ordinance as it is presently drafted.

6. The clerk of the court is directed to enter judgment for plaintiffs and close this case.

All Citations

26 F.Supp.2d 1128

End of Document

228 F.3d 831
United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Joseph SCHULTZ, doing business as Island Bar, and Tonya Norwood, Plaintiffs–Appellees/Cross–Appellants,
v.
CITY OF CUMBERLAND, Defendant–Appellant/Cross–Appellee.

Nos. 98–4126, 98–4209.
|
Argued Sept. 9, 1999
|
Decided Sept. 26, 2000
|
Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc Denied Dec. 1, 2000

Nude dancer and owner of bar at which she performed brought action for declaratory and injunctive relief, challenging a city ordinance establishing a comprehensive licensing and regulatory scheme for "sexually oriented businesses." The United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, Barbara B. Crabb, J., 26 F.Supp.2d 1128, permanently enjoined enforcement of ordinance, and city appealed. The Court of Appeals, Kanne, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) ordinance was content-based, but would be analyzed as content-neutral time, place or manner regulation; (2) limitation on hours of sexually oriented business was valid time, place or manner restriction; (3) ban on full nudity was valid, but ban on performance of specified sexually explicit movements was unconstitutional; (4) ban on full nudity was not facially overbroad; (5) licensing scheme was valid in part but improperly requested certain information from applicants; and (6) unconstitutional provisions would be severed from valid provisions of ordinance.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

West Headnotes (30)

[1] Constitutional Law
Indecency in general

Sexual expression which is indecent but not obscene is protected by the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Entertainment may not be prohibited solely because it displays the nude human figure; nudity alone does not place otherwise protected material outside the mantle of the First Amendment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality

Municipal ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses was content-based, since it banned nudity with reference to certain expressive conduct, but ordinance would be analyzed as content-neutral time, place or manner regulation and subjected to intermediate scrutiny, under which regulations of time, place or manner of adult entertainment are reasonable if they do not remove alternative channels of communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

26 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Constitutional Law
Content-Based Regulations or Restrictions

Content-based regulations by their terms distinguish favored speech from disfavored speech on the basis of the ideas or views expressed; since it is the content of the speech that determines whether it is within or without the regulation, they single out certain viewpoints or subject matter for differential treatment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Constitutional Law
Strict or exacting scrutiny;compelling interest test

Content-based regulations draw strict scrutiny because their purpose is typically related to the suppression of free expression and thus contrary to the First Amendment imperative against government discrimination based on viewpoint or subject matter. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Constitutional Law
Viewpoint or idea discrimination

Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

The government cannot favor one viewpoint over another, nor can the government suppress an entire category of speech, even if the regulation is viewpoint-neutral within that category of speech, because the First Amendment bars prohibition of public discussion of an entire topic. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Content-neutral regulations are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech and do not raise the specter of government discrimination. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

"Time, place or manner regulations" control the surrounding circumstances of speech without obstructing discussion of a particular viewpoint or subject matter. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law
Conduct, protection of Government may generally regulate conduct without regard to the First Amendment because most conduct carries no expressive meaning of First Amendment significance; however, broad regulations of conduct implicate First Amendment concerns when they apply to specific instances of expressive conduct. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

When the government enacts a content-neutral regulation on a class of conduct, citing the harmful secondary effects related to that conduct, that is, the subsidiary effects or noncommunicative impact of the speech, courts presume that the government did not intend to censor speech, even if the regulation incidentally burdens particular instances of expressive conduct. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law
Public nudity or indecency

A general prohibition on all public nudity receives intermediate scrutiny, rather than strict scrutiny, under the First Amendment, when the government offers as its legislative justification the suppression of public nudity's negative secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

The mere assertion of a content-neutral purpose does not save a law which, on its face, discriminates based on content, and a secondary-effects rationale by itself does not bestow upon the government free license to suppress specific content or a specific message because such a regime would permit the government to single out a message expressly, formulate a regulation that prohibits it, then draw content-neutral treatment nonetheless simply by producing a secondary-effects rationale as pretextual justification. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Constitutional Law
Content-Neutral Regulations or Restrictions

Some time, place or manner regulations are treated as content-neutral, even though they are content-based on their faces. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law
Content neutrality

Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

In the domain of adult entertainment, discriminatory time, place or manner restrictions can be upheld as content-neutral restrictions on adult entertainment if they (1) are justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech; (2) are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest in curbing adverse secondary effects; and (3) still leave open ample alternative channels for communication. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Constitutional Law
Hours of operation

Constitutional Law
Secondary effects

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Municipal ordinance provision limiting hours of operation for sexually oriented businesses to between 10 a.m. and midnight, Monday through Saturday, was valid time, place or manner restriction, under First Amendment, as provision furthered city's significant government interest in combating harmful secondary effects of adult entertainment and was not substantially broader than necessary. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law
Nudity in general

Constitutional Law
Nude or semi-nude dancing

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Municipal ordinance provision that proscribed appearing in a state of nudity or depicting specified sexual activities in a sexually oriented business was valid to extent that it banned full nudity, but restriction on performance of specified sexually explicit movements unconstitutionally burdened protected expression, in violation of First Amendment, since it prevented erotic dancers from practicing their protected form of expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

21 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law
Strict or exacting scrutiny;compelling interest test

To survive strict scrutiny, a content-based provision must be necessary to serve a compelling state interest and be narrowly drawn to achieve that end. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law
Theaters in general

Constitutional Law
Cabarets, Discotheques, Dance Halls, and Nightclubs in General

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Dancing and other performances

Municipal ordinance provision prohibiting full nudity in sexually oriented businesses was not facially overbroad, despite claim that ordinance could apply to venues that presented theatrical and artistic performances featuring nudity or sexual content, as ordinance was readily susceptible to narrowing construction by which venue would fall within ordinance's definitions for adult theater and adult cabaret only if it featured nudity, semi-nudity, or specified sexual content as the permanent focus of its business and gave special prominence to such content on a permanent basis. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

14 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law
Freedom of Speech, Expression, and Press

Constitutional Law
Invalidation of all enforcement

The "overbreadth doctrine" prevents the government from casting a net so wide that its regulation impermissibly burdens speech, and to avoid chilling the speech of third parties who may be unwilling or unlikely to raise a challenge in their own stead, the overbreadth doctrine in certain circumstances permits litigants already before the court to challenge a regulation on its face and raise the rights of third parties whose protected expression is prohibited or substantially burdened by the regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Constitutional Law
Prohibition of substantial amount of speech

A facial overbreadth challenge to a regulation affecting speech is successful when it establishes a realistic danger that the statute itself will significantly compromise recognized First Amendment protections of parties not before the court. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Constitutional Law
Limiting construction

A facial overbreadth challenge to a regulation affecting speech fails when the regulation's plain language is readily susceptible to a narrowing construction that would make it constitutional. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general

Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Municipal ordinance's licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses was valid time, place and manner regulation to extent that it required disclosure of applicant's name and age, type of license sought, proposed location and description of business premises, identifying personal data, and proof of employees' ages, and to extent that it required application fee and required compliance with other extant health and safety laws applicable to all city businesses. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Constitutional Law
Presumption of invalidity

Any system of prior restraint comes bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Constitutional Law
Prior Restraints

The proponent of a prior restraint carries a heavy burden of showing justification for the imposition of such a restraint; however, prior restraints are not per se unconstitutional because the state may sometimes curtail speech when necessary to advance a significant and legitimate state interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General
Constitutional Law
Time limits for grant or denial

Licensing, though functioning as a prior restraint, is constitutionally legitimate when it complies with the standard for time, place or manner requirements. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Constitutional Law
Licenses and permits in general
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Municipal licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses was unconstitutional regulation of expression to extent that applicants were required to produce their residential address, recent color photograph, Social Security number, fingerprints, tax-identification number, and driver's license information, since such information was redundant, with respect to other required information, and was unnecessary for city's stated purposes. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Constitutional Law
Licenses and Permits in General

The First Amendment does not allow licensing provisions based on criminal history that totally prohibit certain classes of persons from First Amendment expression. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Constitutional Law
Secondary effects
Public Amusement and Entertainment
Sexually Oriented Entertainment

Disqualification provisions of municipal licensing scheme for sexually oriented businesses, which prevented certain classes of people from obtaining licenses, were unconstitutional under First Amendment, since provisions produced complete ban on certain expression for a disqualified group of applicants who, by definition, wished to speak, and provisions could not be justified as narrowly tailored to resist noisome secondary effects. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Municipal Corporations
Effect of partial invalidity

A municipal ordinance's severability clause can save the constitutionally viable remainder, after invalidation of portions of the ordinance, only if the invalidated elements were not an integral part of the statutory enactment viewed in its entirety.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Municipal Corporations
Effect of partial invalidity

Unconstitutional portions of municipal ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses, including ban on certain sexually explicit movements and disqualification provisions preventing certain classes of persons from obtaining a license, would be severed from portions of ordinance that were constitutional, including restrictions on full nudity and hours of operation for such businesses, which could stand separately from unconstitutional provisions. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

835 Randall D.B. Tigue (argued), Minneapolis, MN, for Plaintiffs-Appellees.

Richard M. Burnham (argued), Brady C. Williamson, LaFollette & Sinykin, Madison, WI, for Defendant-Appellant.

Before COFFEY, KANNE and EVANS, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

KANNE, Circuit Judge.

The City of Cumberland had sought for years to close the Island Bar, a strip club within the small Wisconsin town, when it enacted a municipal ordinance regulating "sexually oriented businesses." The ordinance imposed comprehensive regulations on the operation of adult-entertainment establishments in Cumberland. In response, Joseph Schultz, the Island Bar's owner, and Tonya Norwood, an Island Bar exotic dancer, sued in district court challenging the ordinance's constitutionality under the First Amendment. We uphold the portions of the ordinance that serve as reasonable time, place or manner restrictions and strike the portions of the ordinance that ban sexually explicit dance movements and disqualify certain persons from holding adult-entertainment licenses.

I. HISTORY

In Cumberland, Wisconsin, the Island Bar is the lone sexually oriented business located in the small town of 2,200 residents. The Island Bar opened in 1993 and quickly attracted notoriety when Schultz converted the bar into a strip club featuring nude female dancers, including co-plaintiff Norwood. After assiduous undercover investigation by Barron County law enforcement, Cumberland authorities discovered prostitution and sexual contact between nude dancers and bar patrons, and revoked the Island Bar's liquor license on October 12, 1994. The Island Bar later reopened as a non-alcoholic bar, still featuring nude female dancing, but two convictions of Island Bar patrons for prostitution in March 1997 led to its closing for one year under Wis. Stat. § 823.13 as a public nuisance. See State v. Schultz, 218 Wis.2d 798, 582 N.W.2d 113 (1998).

Unsatisfied with the one-year closure, the Cumberland city council established a municipal planning subcommittee dedicated to exploring more restrictive methods of regulating nude dancing. Happy to offer assistance were conservative interest groups devoted to fighting "sexually oriented businesses" (wittily abbreviated as "SOBs"). For example, the National Family Legal Foundation ("NFLF") provided a comprehensive handbook entitled Protecting Communities From Sexually Oriented Businesses. The handbook explains that it "is not meant to be a neutral overview of current methods of regulating 'adult' businesses. This is a 'how-to' manual for those who are serious about protecting their communities and doing battle with the incredibly powerful and profitable sex club industry." Copying virtually verbatim the NFLF's model regulation, Cumberland received comments on its new draft ordinance from the NFLF and Morality in Media, Inc., among others.

Following the NFLF's instructions on "Making the Legislative Record," Cumberland set about constructing legislative findings to support the NFLF ordinance in their community. The Cumberland committee in charge of drafting the ordinance divided research duties among its members. Mayor Lawrence Samlaska reviewed police reports and spoke to the Cumberland police about its investigation of crime at the Island Bar. Committee member Jeffrey Streeter researched the appropriate zoning location for sexually oriented businesses to minimize depreciation of real estate values and disturbances of the peace. Committee member Richard Nerbun obtained current health statistics from the Centers for Disease Control on sexually transmitted diseases and included them in the ordinance findings.

Nerbun also considered the appropriate hours of operation for sexually oriented businesses, taking into account the proximity of the 836 Island Bar to schools and school bus stops, citizen safety issues, the school schedule and hours-of-operation provisions in the ordinances of other cities. Committee member Carolyn Burns examined past cases involving municipal regulation of adult entertainment and reviewed studies published by other communities concerning the negative effects of adult businesses on surrounding neighborhoods. Based ostensibly on this research, supplemented heavily by NFLF assistance, the subcommittee drafted a legislative preamble lifted from the NFLF model ordinance. It expressed Cumberland's concern about the adverse effects of sexually oriented businesses on "the health, safety and welfare of the patrons of such businesses as well as the citizens of the City," including "prostitution and sexual liaisons of a casual nature," "sexually transmitted diseases," the "deleterious effect on both the existing businesses around them and the surrounding residential areas adjacent to them" and "objectionable operational characteristics, particularly when they are located in close proximity to each other, thereby contributing to urban blight and downgrading the quality of life in the adjacent area."

After a public hearing, the Cumberland planning commission voted to recommend the ordinance to the city council, and on January 6, 1998, the city council unanimously adopted City of Cumberland Ordinance 12.15 ("Ordinance"), establishing a licensing and regulatory system for all "sexually oriented businesses." First, the Purpose and Findings Section explains that the Ordinance has "neither the purpose nor effect of imposing a limitation or restriction on the content of any communicative materials." Instead, the purpose of the Ordinance is "to regulate sexually oriented businesses in order to promote the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of the citizens of the City" based on "the adverse secondary effects of adult uses on the community presented in hearings and in reports made available to the Council, and on findings incorporated in the cases of City of Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., 475 U.S. 41, 106 S.Ct. 925, 89 L.Ed.2d 29 (1986), Young v. American Mini Theatres, 427 U.S. 50, 96 S.Ct. 2440, 49 L.Ed.2d 310 (1976), and Barnes v. Glen Theatre, Inc., 501 U.S. 560, 111 S.Ct. 2456, 115 L.Ed.2d 504 (1991), and on studies in other communities."

Second, Section II defines the different types of sexually oriented businesses subject to the Ordinance. Cumberland and the plaintiffs agree that the Island Bar is covered by the definitions for two categories of sexually oriented business: "adult theater" and "adult cabaret." Section II(3) defines "Adult Cabaret":

> a nightclub, bar, restaurant, or similar commercial establishment which regularly features:
>
> (a) persons who appear in a state of nudity or semi-nude; or
>
> (b) live performances which are characterized by the exposure of "specified anatomical areas" or by "specified sexual activities"; or
>
> (c) films, motion pictures, video cassettes, slides or other photographic reproductions which are characterized by the depiction or description of "specified sexual activities" or "specified anatomical areas."

Section II(7) defines "Adult Theater":

> a theater, concert hall, auditorium, or similar commercial establishment which regularly features persons who appear in a state of nudity or semi–nude, or live performances which are characterized by the exposure of "specified anatomical areas" or by "specified sexual activities."

In addition, the definitions for "adult arcade," "adult bookstore, novelty store or video store," "adult motel," "adult motion picture theater" and "adult mini-motion picture theater" all incorporate the phrase "characterized by the depiction or description of 'specified sexual activities' or 'specified anatomical areas.' " Specified sexual activities include "the fondling or other erotic touching of human genitals, pubic 837 region, buttocks, anus, or female breasts"; "sex acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including intercourse, oral copulation, masturbation, or sodomy"; and "excretory functions" in connection with sexual activity. Cumberland Municipal Code Section 12.15, at § II(24). Specified anatomical areas include "(a) the human male genitals in a discernibly turgid state, even if completely and opaquely covered; or (b) less than completely and opaquely covered human genitals, pubic region, buttocks or a female breast below a point immediately above the top of the areola." Id. at § II(22).

Third, Section VIII(A) declares the following: "It shall be a violation for a person who knowingly and intentionally, in a sexually oriented business, appears in a state of nudity or depicts specified sexual activities." The Ordinance defines "a state of nudity" as the following:

> [T]he showing of the human male or female genitals, pubic area, vulva, anus, anal cleft or cleavage with less than a fully opaque covering, the showing of the female breast with less than fully opaque covering of any part of the nipple, or the showing of the covered male genitals in a discernibly turgid state.

Section VIII(B) makes it a "violation" for an employee of a sexually oriented business to appear even semi-nude, unless the employee does not receive any pay or gratuity from customers and remains on a stage at least two feet off the floor and at least ten feet from any customer. The Ordinance defines "semi-nude condition" as the following:

> [T]he showing of the female breast below a horizontal line across the top of the areola at its highest point or the showing of the male or female buttocks. This definition shall include the entire lower portion of the human female breast, but shall not include any portion of the cleavage of the human female breast, exhibited by a dress, blouse, skirt, leotard, bathing suit, or other wearing apparel provided the areola is not exposed in whole or in part.

Fourth, the Ordinance imposes operating restrictions and licensing requirements on sexually oriented businesses. Section X limits sexually oriented businesses (except adult motels) to business hours of 10 a.m. to midnight Monday through Saturday, closed on Sunday. Sections XI and XIII require operators of sexually oriented businesses and their employees to obtain licenses from Cumberland. Section XIII(A) explains that Cumberland must issue an employee license within thirty days of application unless it finds any of the enumerated reasons for denial, including overdue payment of Cumberland taxes, fees or fines; recent denial or revocation of a license or recent conviction for a sex-related crime by the applicant or a cohabitant of the applicant; and non-approval of the premises of the sexually oriented business by Cumberland inspectors under applicable laws and ordinances. [1] Applicants 838 must provide a legal name and any aliases, proof of age, residential and business addresses, a recent photograph, a physical description, fingerprints, driver's license information, a Social Security number and the specified sex-related criminal history and sexually oriented business license history for both the applicant and the applicant's cohabitants. See id. at § XI(D)-(G). Applicants for operators' licenses must divulge all this information in addition to the identities of any partners, directors and principal stockholders, and diagrams of both the business's interior and the 750–square–foot area surrounding the business's exterior. See id. Section XIII(C) provides that Cumberland will issue an operator's license within thirty days of receipt of a completed application, unless it finds any of eight enumerated reasons by a preponderance of the evidence.

[1] Section XIII provides in pertinent part:

> (A) Upon the filing of said application for a sexually oriented business employee license, the city shall issue a temporary license to said applicant. The application shall then be referred to the appropriate city departments for an investigation to be made on such information as is contained on the application. The application process shall be completed within thirty (30) days from the date the completed application is filed. After the investigation, the City shall issue a license, unless it is determined by a preponderance of the evidence that one or more of the following findings is true:
>
> (1) The applicant has failed to provide information reasonably necessary for issuance of the license or has falsely answered a question or request for information on the application form;
>
> (2) The applicant is under the age of eighteen (18) years;
>
> (3) The applicant has been convicted of a "specified criminal activity" as defined in this ordinance;
>
> (4) The sexually oriented business employee license is to be used for employment in a business prohibited by local or state law, statute, rule or regulation, or prohibited by a particular provision of this ordinance; or

(5) The applicant has had a sexually oriented business employee license revoked by the City within two (2) years of the date of the current application. If the sexually oriented business employee license is denied, the temporary license previously issued is immediately deemed null and void....

(B) A license granted pursuant to this section shall be subject to annual renewal upon the written application of the applicant and a finding by the City that the applicant has not been convicted of any specified criminal activity as defined in the ordinance or committed any act during the existence of the previous license which would be grounds to deny the initial license application. The renewal of the license shall be subject to the payment of the fee as set forth in Section XIV.

(C) Within 30 days after receipt of a completed sexually oriented business application, the City shall approve or deny the issuance of a license to an applicant. The City shall approve the issuance of a license to an applicant unless it is determined by a preponderance of the evidence that one or more of the following findings is true:

(1) An applicant is under eighteen (18) years of age.

(2) An applicant or a person with whom applicant is residing is overdue in payment to the City of taxes, fees, fines, or penalties assessed against or imposed upon him/her in relation to any business.

(3) An applicant has failed to provide information reasonably necessary for issuance of the license or has falsely answered a question or request for information on the application form.

(4) An applicant or a person with whom the applicant is residing has been denied a license by the City to operate a sexually oriented business within the preceding twelve (12) months or whose license to operate a sexually oriented business has been revoked within the preceding twelve (12) months.

(5) An applicant or a person with whom the applicant is residing has been convicted of a specified criminal activity defined in this ordinance.

(6) The premises to be used for the sexually oriented business have not been approved by the health department, fire department, and the building officials as being in compliance with applicable laws and ordinances.

(7) The license fee required by this ordinance has not been paid.

(8) An applicant of the proposed establishment is in violation of or is not in compliance with any of the provisions of this ordinance.

Section XIII(E) guarantees that the health department, fire department and building official shall complete their inspection of an applicant's premises, necessary for licensing, within twenty days of the application. Each application for a sexually oriented business license requires a $100 application and investigation fee. See id. at § XIV(A). Section XVIII promises that judicial review of denial, refusal to renew or suspension of a license will be "promptly reviewed" by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Fifth, Section XXII contains a sweeping severability provision:

> In the event any section, subsection, clause, phrase or portion of this ordinance is for any reason held illegal, invalid or unconstitutional by any court of competent jurisdiction, such portion shall be deemed a separate, distinct and independent provision, and such holding shall not affect the validity of the remainder of this ordinance. It is the legislative intent of the Common Council that this ordinance would have been adopted if such illegal provision had not 839 been included or any illegal application had not been made.

On February 8, 1998, the plaintiffs sued Cumberland in district court seeking a permanent injunction against enforcement of the Ordinance, alleging under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 that the Ordinance violates their First Amendment rights to present nude dancing at the Island Bar. Cumberland agreed not to enforce the Ordinance until the district court reached decision on summary judgment. On November 5, 1998, the district court held that the Ordinance imposed content-neutral restrictions on expressive conduct and upheld the Ordinance's operating regulations. See Schultz v. City of Cumberland, 26 F.Supp.2d 1128, 1144 (W.D.Wis.1998). However, the court also found that the Section VIII(A) nudity ban is unconstitutionally overbroad and that the employee-disclosure provisions and several operator-license requirements lacked rational connection in the record to be deemed narrowly tailored to the Ordinance's purposes. See id. at 1150–51. After finding the defective sections of the Ordinance non-severable from the valid provisions, the court granted summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and permanently enjoined enforcement of the Ordinance. See id. at 1152.

II. ANALYSIS

