On May 8th, 2013, I was traveling southbound on N. Alois Street, roughly in the 1300 block (Alois Street is basically a street that serves as a throughway and off/on-ramp for highway 41). Douglas Kolander, driving "city" vehicle number 22205, was traveling northbound on Alois Street*. We were in effect traveling towards one another, approaching the on-ramp. I was at the intersection of the on-ramp, waiting for the traffic coming towards me to clear, so I could turn left, across traffic. As traffic cleared, the city vehicle was approaching as I waited. The vehicle slowed, and turned on his right turn signal, merging into on-ramp lane, which is governed by a yield sign. Seeing this, I began to make my turn towards the on-ramp specified for traffic traveling southbound. At this time, the city vehicle changed course (assumedly changing his mind on entering the freeway, or possibly realizing that it was the on-ramp for 41 south and not north, I'm not exactly sure of his reasoning) and veered back into the traffic lane as I was turning. Noticing this (as it was not a quick, bang-bang type accident), I sped up on my turn, to at least avoid a T-bone type of collision. The city truck never slowed, stopped, or swerved to avoid me, and still ended up hitting my rear, passenger side. After the collision, my car was barely drivable do to suspension and wheel damage. But I was able to circle out of the on-ramp and park in the right, northbound lane of Alois Street, where we waited for the authorities to arrive.

A hand-draw diagram is included in this mailing, to give some visual representation of the collision

I definitely feel that the city driver was negligent for several reasons. First, the indecisiveness and change of directions was a very unsafe maneuver. Aside from that, like I said, it was not exactly a split second, no time to react type of collision. I was coming from a complete stop, so it's not like I darted out in front of him or anything, regardless of his last second swerve out of the on-ramp lane. I had time to see his dangerous maneuver, as well as speed up to avoid a T-bone collision. No other traffic was around, and the city driver made no attempt to stop, slow, or even slightly swerve into the other northbound lane, or anything of that nature which would have avoided the collision all together. This leads me to believe that he was not paying full attention, driving at an unsafe rate of speed, distracted in some manner or all of the above; as he plowed into me full-speed.
