Dallas Opts For HUD's RAD Program Concept: The Dallas, TX Housing Authority decides to adopt HUD's Rental Assistance Demonstration program concept and contract with private developers to redevelop its current public housing properties and develop new low-income housing in a public-private partnership. The DHA has selected 12 private developers as partners to immediately redevelop seven of its properties encompassing 650 public housing units on 146-acre of land and other low-income housing projects. Another project the DHA is redeveloping is the former Brooks manor site, a tract of land zoned for retirement housing. Brooks Manor originally housed 225 families in public housing for seniors and the disabled.
